MODERN AMERICAN POETRY

A Foreword

TO THE SIXTH REVISED EDITION

THIS sixth revision of Modern American Poetry continues the plan as well as the direction of the preceding editions. It goes even further than the fifth edition in placing its emphasis on the more important poets by enlarging their groups of poems and emphasizing their contribution to the period. The notes which introduce each group of poems and the amplified preface have been brought sharply up to date. The volume begins with Walt Whitman, with whom modern American poetry may be said to have begun, but it includes a representation of the latest and most experimental poets of the last decade.

It is impossible, in any but a book of encyclopedic proportions, to include all the interesting figures of the times. Though this collection indicates the range of recent American poetry, many poets have been omitted from these pages. The editor regrets the cruel stringency of space, and apologizes to those (many of them his friends) whom it was impossible to include. The table of contents must speak for itself. Some of the poets included have been hailed as pioneers; some have provoked controversy and have changed the direction of contemporary art; some have maintained their quiet utterance with no regard whatsoever to warring movements. But each has established his individuality by a unique command of his medium and a strongly pronounced personal idiom.

It has already been implied that one of the aims of this collection is to express not only the national range but the diversity of recent American poetry. Yet, although the compilation is fairly inclusive, it is (as the title page indicates) critical. No group or "school" has been favored at the expense of another; the pages presume to record the best in convention as well as the most provocative in revolt. The object, in short, is to present a panorama in which outstanding figures assume logical prominence, but in which the valuable lesser personalities are not lost.

It is here that debate begins and choice is likely to be arbitrary. Never before have so many poets distinguished themselves in America; never before has even the lesser verse been on such a level of competence. In the quarter of a century following the first appearance of Poetry: A Magazine of Verse in 1912 more than one hundred magazines have devoted themselves exclusively to the printing and appraisal of verse. The rapid multiplication of magazines barely suggests the amount of verse produced in the forty-eight states. Every major city has its Poetry Society feverishly competing for prizes; every county has its local laureate. A rough calculation indicates that, in the twenty years covering the "renascence" of American poetry, no fewer than four thousand poets had volumes of their poetry offered for public sale. This figure does not include privately printed books or pamphlets which could not be catalogued. But, though an array of four thousand poets in any one period may be sufficiently imposing, this number gives no idea of the armies of writers who have whipped up their emotions, girded up their lines, and battled for the crucial adjective. It is safe to say that for every poet fortunate enough to emerge from the struggle with a volume or two to his credit, there were ten (the number is probably nearer fifty) who were not so victorious and had to content themselves with publication in magazines, in trade journals, and in the poetry corner of the local newspaper. Forty thousand poets then. But wait. It is fair to assume that there must be still ten times as many who have chewed pencils, crumpled paper, cursed the inadequacy of the Rhyming Dictionary, and, somehow, got their lines to fit without the final gratification of seeing them in printer's type. Four hundred thousand—a thorough search would probably double the figure—four hundred thousand poets plying their difficult trade with desperate hope and small chance of reward.

Selection of the fifteen or twenty "leading" poets is not so difficult. Almost everyone will agree on the poets whose appearance is imperative in a collection of this type. It is when one goes further and attempts to suggest the flux and fecundity of the period, or presumes to indicate the shape of things to come, that differences of opinion are sure to arise. Controversy and even enmity are likely to follow. In the end every editor is driven back upon that mixture of preference, prejudice, and intuition known as personal taste—and it is only rarely that he can escape the limitations imposed by his temperament and training.

That inescapable personal factor explains the method of editing as well as the manner of selection. That a poem has appeared in various anthologies is no proof that it is a good poem. Nor (in spite of those opposed to anthologies) is such publication anything against it. A good poem remains a good poem, no matter how often it is reprinted. On the other hand, it should be admitted that where there has been a choice between a much-quoted poem and one which has not been handed on from one anthologist to another, the editor has—where both poems seemed equally worthy—favored the less familiar example.

Although humorous verse demands an omnibus of its own, its presence must be felt in any collection which presumes to reflect a period of growth. If the full extent of American humorous verse, from wit to burlesque, cannot be shown in this compilation, its changing form is suggested here by the light verse of Bret Harte, Eugene Field, T. A. Daly, Paul Laurence Dunbar, Guy Wetmore Carryl, Franklin P. Adams, Ogden Nash, and (immodest addendum) the editor's own parodies.

One thing remains to be said. Although the notes as well as the number of poems selected make the editor's preference obvious, it should be added that he has attempted to make each poet's group rounded and representative. To accomplish this, not only the early but the most recent writing of the contemporaries appears here—some of it for the first time between covers. Wherever possible, the selections as well as the authors have been chronologically arranged; as a rule the earlier work is placed at the beginning of each group, and the later work follows in approximately the order in which it was written. The editor is greatly indebted to most of the living poets, not only for invaluable data, but for their collaborative assistance; many of the following pages embody their choice of their own poems as well as the editor's preferences.

Finally, the compiler is grateful to the many publishers who have, in every instance, displayed a generosity and coöperation without which the successive editions of this volume would not have been possible. MODERN AMERICAN POETRY

Walt Whitman

WALT (ORIGINALLY WALTER) WHITMAN was born at West Hills, near Huntington, Long Island, May 31, 1819. His mother's people were hard-working Dutch Quakers, his maternal grandfather having been a Long Island horse-breeder. On his father's side he was descended from English Puritans who had farmed American soil for a century and a half.

Whitman's father was a less successful agrarian than his ancestors and, since he was a better carpenter than farmer, the elder Whitman moved his family to the then provincial suburb of Brooklyn. Here the country child grew into the town boy, was lifted up for a moment by Lafayette when the hero revisited America, was equally fascinated by his father's wood-smelling shop and the city streets, received his first sight of "fish-shaped Paumanok" which was to become his beloved Manhattan, learned at least the rudiments of the three R's, and left school before his teens. At eleven he was already at work as an errand-boy. At twelve he became a "printer's devil." By the time he was fourteen he had learned the various fonts and began to set type in the composing-room of The Long Island Star. At seventeen, taking up residence in the more profitable metropolis, he was well on the road to being an itinerant printer-journalist. But New York was no Golconda for an uneducated, self-conscious youth and, after a few months, Whitman went back to Long Island.

There he remained until his twenty-second year, living with his numerous relations, intermittently teaching school, delivering papers, contributing "pieces" to The Long Island Democrat. In 1841 Whitman returned to Brooklyn and New York, writing sentimental fillers, novelettes, rhetorical and flabby verses, hack-work editorials for journals now forgotten. In 1842 he wrote a temperance tract, Franklin Evans, or The Inebriate, a mixture of campaign material and fourth-rate Dickens, a volume which Whitman later claimed was written for cash in three days. Blossoming out in frock coat and high hat, debonair, his beard smartly trimmed, Whitman at twenty-three was editor of The Daily Aurora. In the capacity of reporter-about-town, he promenaded lower Broadway, spent much time in the theaters, cultivated the opera, flirted impartially with street-corner politics and the haut monde. He was still Walter Whitman when, at the age of twenty-seven, he joined the Brooklyn Eagle.

Various biographers—Emory Holloway, in particular—have ferreted out Whitman's sketches and editorials of this period and, while there are occasional suggestions of the poet to come, most of them betray him as a fluent, even a prolific, journalist and nothing more. The style is alternately chatty and highfalutin; the ideas are undistinguished. At the end of two years, either because of his politics or his unsatisfactory articles, Whitman suddenly lost his editorial position and, with equal abruptness, received an offer from a stranger who was about to start an independent paper in New Orleans. Thereupon he left New York early in 1848 to become a special writer on the staff of the daily Crescent.

Whitman's few months in the South have led to much speculation. Emory Holloway concludes that New Orleans was the background for the poet's first love-affair and implies that his inamorata was one of the demimonde, probably a quadroon beauty. But this is sheer guess-work, barely supported by Whitman's later poetry where the wish often substitutes for the action. This much is evident: He and his younger brother Jeff enjoyed the more languorous tempo of the Creole culture; the "Paris of America" made him less priggish; his quickened perceptions took in the whole alphabet of sights and sounds, "not missing a letter from A to Izzard." His literary style, however, had not improved and, after three months, he was dismissed from the Crescent, possibly because of his careless, even puerile writing.

Returning to New York, Whitman immediately plunged into editing another paper. His failures as a journalist had not yet convinced him he was mistaking his career and in his thirtieth year he was in charge of the Brooklyn Freeman. This free-soil journal soon shifted its political course; Whitman was not agile enough to turn with it; and in September, 1849, he withdrew, "taking his flag with him." As a free-lance, he wrote for the New York Evening Post and the Advertiser, his contributions being chiefly articles—and badly over-written ones—on music. He "took up" art, gushed about Donizetti's "Favorita," became a metropolitan Bohemian. Meanwhile, finding he could not live by the pen alone, he helped his father and brothers build houses in Brooklyn. Meanwhile, also, he began to write the book which was to be his life-work.

It was at this time that Walter Whitman, the dandified journalist, disappeared and the Walt Whitman of tradition suddenly emerged. He was, one suspects, not unconscious of the tradition and, from the outset, used every means to foster it.

Whitman was now thirty-one; an entirely different apparition from the man who, in his late twenties, frequented the more fashionable lobbies. The once trim beard, streaked with premature gray, was now worn loose and prophetic; the well-tailored coat and spruce cane were discarded in favor of rough workman's clothes, high boots, a large felt hat and a red shirt with the collar nonchalantly—or carefully—opened wide enough to show red flannel underneath. He prepared several lectures on the democracy of art and delivered one at the Brooklyn Art Union in 1851, but found lecturing too tame. He consorted with ferry-men, bus-drivers and other "powerful, uneducated persons." The legend persists that, when one of the drivers was ill, Whitman took his route and drove the omnibus, shouting passages of Shakespeare up and down Broadway. Another legend—repeated by Holloway as a fact—pictures Whitman reading Epictetus to one of the boatmen and, afterwards, "cramming his own volume into the pocket of the sailor's monkey-jacket." These are Homeric gestures and one would like to believe them uncalculated. But even the most confirmed Whitman-worshiper must have his doubts. Subsequent actions add to the admirer's misgivings.

The first edition of Leaves of Grass was published in 1855. This epochal volume made its initial appearance as a poorly printed pamphlet of twelve poems brought out anonymously and bearing, instead of a signature, a portrait of the author with one hand in his pocket, one on his hip, the characteristic open shirt and a slouch hat rakishly tilted. One of the first copies of the pamphlet was sent to Ralph Waldo

Emerson, which—considering Whitman's indebtedness in spirit if not in form—was no more than proper. Within a fortnight, Emerson, overlooking the questionable taste of the frontispiece, and with something of the master's gratification on being hailed by an unknown but fervent disciple, wrote the famous letter of July 21, 1855, in which he hailed the young writer, concluding, "I give you joy of your free and brave thought. I have great joy in it. . . . I find the courage of treatment which so delights us, and which large perception only can inspire. I greet you at the beginning of a great career."

But Emerson's lavish praise (which Whitman, without waiting for permission, blazoned on the cover of his second edition) was not loud enough. Nor, was Whitman, despite the convictions contained in the lengthy prose preface, confident enough of his work; he sought to force public approval. In direct opposition to Emersonian standards and the spiritual ideals implied in his foreword, Whitman set about to cause a controversy, to inflame opinion by inflating himself. The task—considering the howls which greeted Leaves of Grass—was not difficult. It was—so defenders have insisted—the day of the anonymous review and "self-puffery" was not uncommon. But Whitman's offenses in this regard (and there were many of them) are inexcusable in view of the principles he professed. Two months after the first printing of Leaves of Grass, he caused one of a series of anonymous articles to be printed in the Brooklyn Times (September 29, 1855). In it—and the idiom is unmistakable—he wrote: "Very devilish to some, and very divine to some, will appear the poet of these new poems, these Leaves of Grass: an attempt, as they are, of a naive, masculine, affectionate, contemplative, sensual, imperious person to cast into literature not only his own grit and arrogance, but his own flesh and form, undraped, regardless of models, regardless of modesty or law." There was much more in the same self-laudatory vein, stressing Whitman's unkempt virility, his firm attachment for loungers and the "free rasping talk of men," his refusal to associate with literary people or (forgetting his lecture programs) to appear on platforms, his lusty physiology "corroborating a rugged phrenology," not even forgetting to mention the fact that he "is always dressed freshly and clean in strong clothes—neck open, shirt-collar flat and broad." Other anonymous salutations announced that the author was "a fine brute," "the most masculine of beings," "one of the roughs, large, proud, affectionate, eating, drinking and breeding."

It requires little psychology to analyze what is so obvious an over-compensation. In these anonymous tributes to himself, Whitman revealed far more than he intended. None but a blinded devotee can fail to suspect a softness beneath the bluster; a psychic impotence poorly shielded by all the talk about fine brutishness, drinking and breeding, flinging his arms right and left, "drawing men and women to his close embrace, loving the clasp of their hands, the touch of their necks and breasts." The poet protests his maleness too vociferously.

Meanwhile, the second edition of Leaves of Grass, containing thirty-two instead of the original twelve poems (as well as the press notices written by himself) appeared in 1856. In the third edition (1860) the number of poems leaped to one hundred and fifty-seven. Then the Civil War made all other controversies negligible.

Whitman did not go to war, although his married brother George was one of the first to enlist. Holloway implies an idealistic motive; Harvey O'Higgins charges a cowardly Narcissism. In any case, Whitman refused to join the conflict and, only when George was reported missing, did he see at first hand what he had begun to sketch in "Drum-Taps." Finding his brother wounded in a camp on the Rappahannock, Whitman nursed him and remained in Washington, serving in the hospitals. He acted not only as wound-dresser but as good angel—"a bearded fairy godmother"—for the disabled men; he wrote their letters, brought them tobacco and ice-cream, read tales and poems, made life livelier and death easier for the sufferers. These ministrations, so freely given, gave him much in return: an intimacy with life in the raw which, for all his assertions, he had never seen so closely. No longer a spectator, he was a participant, and purgation as well as passion are manifest in the series of war-echoes, "Drum-Taps," and the uplifted "Memories of President Lincoln" with its immortal elegy "When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd." The end of the Civil War defined a new spirit in Whitman: the man and his poetry became one.

In 1864, through the pressure of friends, a minor clerkship in the Indian Bureau of the Interior Department was found for Whitman. But, though he was promoted, he did not hold the position long. His chief, Secretary James Harlan, once a Methodist preacher, had heard rumors of his subordinate's "immorality." Without stopping to consider the ethics of the situation, Harlan purloined Whitman's private copy of Leaves of Grass after closing-time, and fell afoul of the "Children of Adam" section. Nothing more was needed to prove the truth of the rumors and, without an hour's notice, Whitman was dismissed. A few friends rushed to his defense but Harlan, a sincere bigot, stuck to his resolve. William Douglas O'Connor, an Abolitionist author who was one of Whitman's staunchest admirers, issued a pamphlet not merely defending but glorifying Whitman, coining, for his title, the phrase "The Good Gray Poet"—a sobriquet which has outlasted all of O'Connor's works.

Affairs were at a low ebb. As a person, Whitman was stranded with no livelihood and little influence; as a poet he was repudiated by all but a small coterie at home and abroad. Eight years later, and seventeen years after the first edition of Leaves of Grass (in January, 1872), Whitman complained to Dowden, who had praised him unreservedly in England, "If you write again for publication about my books . . . I think it would be proper and even essential to include the important facts (for facts they are) that the Leaves of Grass and their author are contemptuously ignored by the recognized literary organs here in the United States, rejected by the publishing houses, the author turned out of a government clerkship and deprived of his means of support . . . solely on account of having written the book."

Transferred to the office of the Attorney General after his dismissal, Whitman remained there until 1873 when, on the night of February twenty-second, he was struck by paralysis. Whitman's mother, lying ill in his brother George's house, was spared the news of his attack. She died the following May and Whitman somehow rallied sufficiently to be at her bedside. For months after he could not use his limbs and—let the psychoanalysts make what they will of it—it is doubtful if he ever recovered from the effect of her death. Two years later, while arranging his prose writings for publication, he confided, "I occupy myself . . . still enveloped in thoughts of my dear Mother, the most perfect and magnetic character, the rarest combination of practical, moral and spiritual, and the least selfish, of all and any I have ever known—and by me O so much the most deeply loved."

At fifty-five Whitman was almost completely incapacitated. He did not suffer the daily agonies of Heine on his mattress grave, but confinement in Camden, where his mother had died and where his brother lived, was grueling enough. His solitude was alleviated by letters from abroad and the beginnings of recognition at home. Although he got out of doors a little, he could not walk any distance, and Edward Carpenter, John Burroughs, Richard Maurice Bucke (later one of Whitman's executors) and others made pilgrimages to his room in Mickle Street, near the railroad yards. There were intervals when his health improved sufficiently to permit small visits to New York and Boston, but by 1877, he was enfeebled and, in spite of friends, poverty-stricken. He was reduced to peddling his books from a basket in the streets of Philadelphia and Camden, and, although his brother George offered him a special place in the house he was building in Burlington, New Jersey, Whitman chose to stay where he was.

Whitman grew old with dignity and not without honor. In June, 1888, after a longer drive than usual, Whitman took cold. A new and more severe paralytic shock followed. For a time Whitman lost the power of speech. In 1890 he bought ground for his grave and planned an appropriately massive tomb. The following March he was wheeled over to Philadelphia—a move that meant much discomfort and actual suffering—to deliver a tribute to Lincoln. He was failing, but not rapidly. In 1891 a birthday dinner tendered by friends was served in his own rooms, a festive occasion, to judge from his own letter, at which Whitman drank champagne, speaking "a few words of honor and reverence for our Emerson, Bryant, Longfellow—dead—and then for Whittier and Tennyson, the boss of us all." That December Whitman contracted pneumonia "with complications" and knew he would not recover. Aided by Horace Traubel, the young Jewish Quaker who became the Boswell of his later days, he prefaced a final "deathbed edition" of Leaves of Grass. Death came toward the end of his seventy-third year, on March 26, 1892.

Analysis of Whitman's poetry is the more difficult because it presents a paradox—a paradox of which Whitman was not unaware. He knew his "barbaric yawp" was untranslatable, unconforming, impossible to transfix with a phrase or a theory. "I depart as air . . . If you want me again look for me under your boot-soles." The same contradictions which marked his personality are evident in his rhapsodies. Leaves of Grass sets out to be the manifesto of the ordinary man, "the divine average," yet it is doubtful if the ordinary man understands its rhetoric or, understanding, responds to it. No great common audience has rallied to Whitman's philosophy, no army of poets has followed his form. Few of the "powerful uneducated persons" for whom Whitman believed his book would be a "democratic Gospel" can appreciate, and fewer still can admire, his extraordinary mixture of self-adulation and impotence, abnormality and mysticism. The same contradictions which mark his personality are evident in his style. His work aims toward a simplification of speech—an American language experiment—yet its homeliness is not always racy. Sometimes it is mere flat statement, sometimes it is a grotesque combination of the colloquial and the grandiose. Sometimes, indeed, it is corrupted by linguistic bad taste and polyglot phrasing as naively absurd as "the tangl'd long-deferr'd éclaircissement of human life" . . . "See my cantabile—you Libertad!" "Exalté . . . the mighty earth-eidolon" . . . "These from me, O Democracy, to serve you, ma femme!" "No dainty dolce affetuoso I!"

Only Whitman's lack of ease and certainty in rhyme made him sacrifice its counterpoint for the looser cadence. Nor was his form as revolutionary as it seemed. Heine's "North Sea" cycles had been composed in "free," unrhymed rhythms and the sonorous strophes of the Old Testament were Whitman's avowed model. Whitman was the first to object to the charge that his work had "the freedom of formlessness." He did not even admit its irregularity. In one of the unsigned reviews of Leaves of Grass he explained, "His rhythm and uniformity he will conceal in the roots of his verses, not to be seen of themselves, but to break forth loosely as lilacs on a bush or take shapes compact as the shapes of melons." None can deny the music in this poetry which is capable of the widest orchestral effects. It is a music accomplished in a dozen ways—by the Hebraic "balance" brought to perfection in Job and the Psalms, by the long and extraordinarily flexible line suddenly whipped taut, by repetitions at the beginnings of lines and reiterations within the lines, by following his recitatives with a soaring aria. Thus, in the midst of the elaborate piling up in "Song of Myself" there are such sheer lyrical outbursts as the passages beginning "Press close, bare-bosomed night," "Smile, O voluptuous cool-breath'd earth," "The last scud of the day holds back for me," "A'child said 'What is the grass?'" . . . "No counting of syllables," wrote Anne Gilchrist, "will reveal the mechanism of this music." But the music is there, now rising in gathering choirs of brasses, now falling to the rumor of a flute.

Mass and magnitude are the result. And rightly, for mass was the material. Unlike the cameo-cutting Aldrich and the polished Stedman, both of whom belittled him, Whitman was no lapidary. His aim was not to remodel or brighten a few high facets of existence; he sought to embody a universe in the rough. For him no aspect of life was trivial; every common, superficial cover was a cavern of rich and inexhaustible depths. A leaf of grass, with its tendrils twined about the core of earth, was no less than the journey-work of the stars; the cow, "crunching with depressed head," put Phidias to shame; the roadside running blackberry, seen with the eye of vision, was "fit to adorn the parlors of heaven." Nothing was mean; nothing was rejected. Whitman had read Blake, Dante, Shakespeare, Shelley; besides knowing his Bible, he was acquainted with the sacred books of the East and their reexpression in Emerson. His transcendentalism was not a new thing; but the fusion of identity and impersonality, the union of the ego-driven self and the impartially moving universe was newly synthesized in his rhapsodies. His aim was inclusive—the lack of exclusiveness may be Whitman's chief defect—for though he celebrated the person in all his separateness, he added "the word democratic, the word En-masse." All was included in "the procreant urge of the world." Opposites merge into one: the unseen is proved by the seen; all goes onward and outward, nothing collapses. Light and dark, good and evil, body and soul do not merely emphasize but complete each other.

Whitman's insistence that the body was holy in all its manifestations caused a great deal of contemporary misunderstanding and developed into mysterious whisperings. His early commentators—Burroughs (whose estimates were dictated by Whitman), Carpenter, Bucke, Traubel—magnified his maleness, insisted too much on his normality, and generally misinterpreted him. As late as 1926 Emory Holloway made no effort to resolve the contradictions and, apart from an obscure hint or two, scarcely suggested that there was a split between Whitman's pronouncements and his nature. The split was actually a gulf. Whitman's preoccupation with the details of clothes—he was as fastidious about the way a workman's shirt should be worn as he once was about the set of a high hat—his rôle as nurse during the Civil War, his pathetic insistence that he was the father of six children, none of which ever appeared, and his avoidance of women make it clear that this "fine brute," this "most masculine of beings," was really an invert. Whitman's brother told Traubel that "Walt never fell in love. . . . He did not seem to affect the girls," and even Edward Carpenter concluded "there can be no doubt that his intimacies with men were much more numerous than with women." Not the least of his inconsistencies is Whitman's delusion that an "adhesive" love, the love of "comrades," was the basis on which a broader democracy would be built.

Whitman's "all-inclusive love" springs not only from his own pathological eccentricities, but from an undefined Pantheism. His very eagerness to express the whole cosmos often results in a chaotic pouring forth of prophecy and claptrap. For this reason Whitman should be read, not as one reads a book of lyrics, weighing and appraising individual stanzas, but as one reads an epic, letting the movement, the swelling volume, carry the lines along. It is only in the rare instances that we stop to remark the particularities—the extraordinarily graphic description of an old-time sea-fight in "Song of Myself," or images as breath-taking as "the indolent, sinking sun, burning, expanding the air" and "The hands of the sisters Death and Night incessantly softly wash again, and ever again, this soil'd world" and "Out of the cradle endlessly rocking; out of the mocking bird's throat, the musical shuttle . . .".

Here, framed in firm syllables, are large convictions, strong wants. Tenderness, not pretty sentiment, rises to new heights in the Lincoln elegies, in "Out of the Cradle Endlessly Rocking," in the superbly quiet "On the Beach at Night." There is, it is true, a degree of affectation here—affection of nationalism and simplicity (referring to Six-month rather than to May, to Mannahatta rather than to New York); affection of hybrid terms ("Me imperturbé!" "Camerado!" "I exposé," "Deliriate, thus preluding," "Allons! from all formules!" "How plenteous! how spiritual! how résumé!" etc.); affectations, always, of too insistent a strength. It is also true that we read Whitman in youth—as we read Swinburne—for intoxication, uncritically, contemptuous of reservations which maturity compels.

The contradictions resist complete synthesis. It is impossible to analyze Whitman's final significance to American social and cultural development; we can only record the greatness of his contribution. His windy optimism remains an emotional rather than a rational influence. His whole-heartedness, his large yea-saying, coming at a time of cautious skepticism, hesitancy and insecurity, is Whitman's gift not only to his period but to posterity.

Whitman's inconsistency, especially his paradox of democracy, continues to baffle the literary historians. In 1930, in the third volume of his monumental Main Currents in American Thought (the uncompleted volume entitled The Beginnings of Critical Realism in America) the late Vernon L. Parrington concludes that Whitman is the complete embodiment of Enlightenment—"the poet and prophet of a democracy that the America of the Gilded Age was daily betraying." Yet Parrington himself, though he sees Whitman as "the most deeply religious soul that American literature knows," sees also Whitman's failure as a prophet. "The great hopes on which he [Whitman] fed have been belied by after events—so his critics say; as the great hopes of the Enlightenment have been belied. Certainly in this welter of today, with science become the drab and slut of war and industrialism, with sterile money-slaves instead of men, Whitman's expansive hopes seem grotesque enough. Democracy may indeed be only a euphemism for the rulership of fools."

Yet the paradox must be grasped—or, at least, admitted—if one is to understand Whitman at all. Somehow the contradictions are resolved; somehow the prophet, the pamphleteer, and the poet achieve a unity if only through an intensification of the inner life: a liberal humanism. That Whitman was self-confounded is fairly obvious; he seems to have confused an ideal culture founded on quality with a merely quantitative conception of life. But his faith, romantic as it was resurgent, triumphed over his contradictions, actually imposed a sort of harmony upon them.

Thus Whitman rises above his defects. The reader forgets the lesser flaws, the lumbering failures. The illumined phrases burn clear; the pictures, once etched upon the imagination, are there to stay. Above all, the effect remains, an effect not reducible to phrases; a sense of released power, irresistible and benevolent, immense in affirmation. Beyond what Symonds called "delicate and evanescent moods of sensibility" is the communication of amplitudes. It expands the air.

Such poetry, whatever its lapses, has the stuff of permanence. It will persist not only because of its rebellious and compelling power, but because the poet has transcended his material. The personal contact is achieved, as Whitman knew it would be. "Who touches this book touches a man." Lascelles Abercrombie, a poet of an entirely different persuasion, said that Whitman created "out of the wealth of his experience that vividly personal figure which is surely one of the few supremely great things in modern poetry—the figure of himself." But his work was larger than the man. Whitman was not dilating his value when he claimed to contain multitudes. His book projects and creates them in a sphere nobler than our own. Employing words, he harnessed elements.

I HEAR AMERICA SINGING

I hear America singing, the varied carols I hear,
 Those of mechanics, each one singing his as it should be blithe and strong,
 The carpenter singing his as he measures his plank or beam,
 The mason singing his as he makes ready for work, or leaves off work,
 The boatman singing what belongs to him in his boat, the deckhand singing on the steamboat deck,
 The shoemaker singing as he sits on his bench, the hatter singing as he stands,
 The wood-cutter's song, the plowboy's on his way in the morning, or at noon intermission or at sundown,
 The delicious singing of the mother, or of the young wife at work, or of the girl sewing or washing,
 Each singing what belongs to him or her and to none else,
 The day what belongs to the day—at night the party of young fellows, robust, friendly,
 Singing with open mouths their strong melodious songs.

THE MUSE IN THE NEW WORLD

(from "Song of the Exposition")

Come, Muse, migrate from Greece and Ionia,
 Cross out please those immensely overpaid accounts,
 That matter of Troy and Achilles' wrath, and Aeneas', Odysseus' wanderings,
 Placard "Removed" and "To Let" on the rocks of your snowy Parnassus,
 Repeat at Jerusalem, place the notice high on Jaffa's gate and on Mount Moriah,
 The same on the walls of your German, French and Spanish castles, and Italian collections,
 For know a better, fresher, busier sphere, a wide, untried domain awaits, demands you.

Responsive to our summons,
 Or rather to her long-nurs'd inclination,
 Join'd with an irresistible, natural gravitation,
 She comes! I hear the rustling of her gown,
 I scent the odor of her breath's delicious fragrance,
 I mark her step divine, her curious eyes a-turning, rolling,
 Upon this very scene.

I say I see, my friends, if you do not, the illustrious émigré, (having it is true in her day, although the same, changed, journey'd considerable,) Making directly for this rendezvous, vigorously clearing a path for herself, striding through the confusion,
 By thud of machinery and shrill steam-whistle undismay'd,
 Bluff'd not a bit by drain-pipe, gasometers, artificial fertilizers;
 Smiling and pleas'd with palpable intent to stay,
 She's here, install'd amid the kitchen-ware!

RECORDERS AGES HENCE

Recorders ages hence,
 Come, I will take you down underneath this impassive exterior, I will tell you what to say of me,
 Publish my name and hang up my picture as that of the tenderest lover,
 The friend the lover's portrait, of whom his friend his lover was fondest,
 Who was not proud of his songs, but of the measureless ocean of love within him,
 and freely pour'd it forth, -
 Who often walk'd lonesome walks thinking of his dear friends, his lovers,
 Who pensive away from one he lov'd often lay sleepless and dissatisfied at night,
 Who knew too well the sick, sick dread lest the one he lov'd might secretly be indifferent to him,
 Whose happiest days were far away through fields, in woods, on hills, he and another wandering hand in hand, they twain apart from other men,
 Who oft as he saunter'd the streets curv'd with his arm the shoulder of his friend, while the arm of his friend rested upon him also.

THE COMMONPLACE

The commonplace I sing;
 How cheap is health! how cheap nobility!
 Abstinence, no falsehood, no gluttony, lust;
 The open air I sing, freedom, toleration,
 (Take here the mainest lesson—less from books—less from the schools,) The common day and night—the common earth and waters,
 Your farm—your work, trade, occupation,
 The democratic wisdom underneath, like solid ground for all.

A NOISELESS PATIENT SPIDER

A noiseless patient spider,
 I mark'd where on a little promontory it stood isolated,
 Mark'd how to explore the vacant vast surrounding,
 It launch'd forth filament, filament, filament, out of itself.
 Ever unreeling them, ever tirelessly speeding them.

And you O my soul where you stand,
 Surrounded, detached, in measureless oceans of space,
 Ceaselessly musing, venturing, throwing, seeking the spheres to connect them.
 Till the bridge you will need be form'd, till the ductile anchor hold,
 Till the gossamer thread you fling catch somewhere, O my soul.

TO A COMMON PROSTITUTE

Be composed—be at ease with me—I am Walt Whitman, liberal and lusty as Nature,
 Not till the sun excludes you do I exclude you,
 Not till the waters refuse to glisten for you and the leaves to rustle for you, do my words refuse to glisten and rustle for you.
 My girl I appoint with you an appointment, and I charge you that you make preparation to be worthy to meet me,
 And I charge you that you be patient and perfect till I come.
 Till then I salute you with a significant look that you do not forget me.

WHEN I HEARD THE LEARN'D ASTRONOMER

When I heard the learn'd astronomer,
 When the proofs, the figures, were ranged in columns before me,
 When I was shown the charts and diagrams, to add, divide, and measure them,
 When I sitting heard the astronomer where he lectured with much applause in the lecture-room,
 How soon unaccountable I became tired and sick,
 Till rising and gliding out I wander'd off by myself,
 In the mystical moist night-air, and from time to time,
 Look'd up in perfect silence at the stars.

RECONCILIATION

Word over all, beautiful as the sky,
 Beautiful that war and all its deeds of carnage must in time be utterly lost,
 That the hands of the sisters Death and Night incessantly softly wash again, and ever again, this so'l'd world;
 For my enemy is dead, a man divine as myself is dead,
 I look where he lies white-faced and still in the coffin—I draw near,
 Bend down and touch lightly with my lips the white face in the coffin.

I HEAR IT WAS CHARGED AGAINST ME

I hear it was charged against me that I sought to destroy institutions,
 But really I am neither for or against institutions,
 (What indeed have I in common with them? or what with the destruction of them?)
 Only I will establish in the Mannahatta and in every city of these States inland and seaboard,
 And in the fields and woods, and above every keel little or large that dents the water,
 Without edifices or rules or trustees or any argument,
 The institution of the dear love of comrades.

MANNAHATTA

I was asking for something specific and perfect for my city,
 Whereupon lo! upsprang the aboriginal name.

Now I see what there is in a name, a word, liquid, sane, unruly, musical, self-sufficient,
 I see that the word of my city is that word from of old,
 Because I see that word nested in nests of water-bays, superb,
 Rich, hemm'd thick all around with sailships and steamships, an island sixteen miles long, solid-founded,
 Numberless crowded streets, high growths of iron, slender, strong, light, splendidly uprising toward clear skies,
 Tides swift and ample, well-loved by me, toward sundown,
 The flowing sea-currents, the little islands, larger adjoining islands, the heights, the villas,
 The countless masts, the white shore-steamers, the lighters, the ferry-boats, the black sea-steamers well model'd,
 The down-town streets, the jobbers' houses of business, the houses of business of the ship-merchants and money-brokers, the river-streets,
 Immigrants arriving, fifteen thousand in a week,
 The carts hauling goods, the manly race of drivers of horses, the brown-faced sailors,
 The summer air, the bright sun shining, and the sailing clouds aloft,
 The winter snows, the sleigh-bells, the broken ice in the river, passing along up or down with the flood-tide or ebb-tide,
 The mechanics of the city, the masters, well-form'd, beautiful-faced, looking you straight in the eyes,
 Trottoirs throng'd, vehicles, Broadway, the women, the shops and shows,

A million people—manners free and superb—open voices—hospitality—the most courageous and friendly young men,
 City of hurried and sparkling waters! city of spires and masts!
 City nested in bays! my city!

SONG OF MYSELF

I

I celebrate myself, and sing myself,
 And what I assume you shall assume,
 For every atom belonging to me as good belongs to you.

I loaf and invite my soul,
 I lean and loaf at my ease observing a spear of summer grass.

My tongue, every atom of my blood, form'd from this soil, this air,
 Born here of parents born here from parents the same, and their parents the same,
 I, now thirty-seven years old in perfect health begin,
 Hoping to cease not till death.
 Creeds and schools in abeyance,
 Retiring back a while sufficed at what they are, but never forgotten,
 I harbor for good or bad, I permit to speak at every hazard,
 Nature without check with original energy.

2

Houses and rooms are full of perfumes, the shelves are crowded with perfumes,
 I breathe the fragrance myself and know it and like it,
 The distillation would intoxicate me also, but I shall not let it.

The atmosphere is not a perfume, it has no taste of the distillation, it is odorless,
 It is for my mouth forever, I am in love with it,
 I will go to the bank by the wood and become undisguised and naked,
 I am mad for it to be in contact with me.

The smoke of my own breath,
 Echoes, ripples, buzz'd whispers, love-root, silk-thread, crotch and vine,
 My respiration and inspiration, the beating of my heart, the passing of blood and air through my lungs,
 The sniff of green leaves and dry leaves, and of the shore and dark-color'd sea-rocks,
 and of hay in the barn,
 The sound of the belch'd words of my voice loos'd to the eddies of the wind,
 A few light kisses, a few embraces, a reaching around of arms,
 The play of shine and shade on the trees as the supple boughs wag,
 The delight alone or in the rush of the streets, or along the fields and hill-sides,
 The feeling of health, the full-noon trill, the song of me rising from bed and meeting the sun.
 Have you reckon'd a thousand acres much? have you reckon'd the earth much?
 Have you practic'd so long to learn to read?
 Have you felt so proud to get at the meaning of poems?

Stop this day and night with me and you shall possess the origin of all poems,
 You shall possess the good of the earth and sun, (there are millions of suns left,)
 You shall no longer take things at second or third hand, nor look through the eyes of the dead, nor feed on the specters in books,
 You shall not look through my eyes either, nor take things from me,
 You shall listen to all sides and filter them from your self.

3

I have heard what the talkers were talking, the talk of the beginning and the end,
 But I do not talk of the beginning or the end.

There was never any more inception than there is now,
 Nor any more youth or age than there is now,
 And will never be any more perfection than there is now,
 Nor any more heaven or hell than there is now.

Urge and urge and urge,
 Always the procreant urge of the world.
 Out of the dimness opposite equals advance, always substance and increase, always sex,
 Always a knit of identity, always distinction, always a breed of life.

To elaborate is no avail, learn'd and unlearn'd feel that it is so.

Sure as the most certain sure, plumb in the uprights, well center-tied, braced in the beams,
 Stout as a horse, affectionate, haughty, electrical,
 I and this mystery here we stand.
 Clear and sweet is my soul, and clear and sweet is all that is not my soul.

Lack one lacks both, and the unseen is proved by the seen,
 Till that becomes unseen and receives proof in its turn.

Showing the best and dividing it from the worst age vexes age,
 Knowing the perfect fitness and equanimity of things, while they discuss I am silent, and go bathe and admire myself.

Welcome is every organ and attribute of me, and of any man hearty and clean,
 Not an inch nor a particle of an inch is vile, and none shall be less familiar than the rest.

I am satisfied—I see, dance, laugh, sing;
 As the hugging and loving bed-fellow sleeps at my side through the night, and withdraws at the peep of the day with stealthy tread,
 Leaving me baskets cover'd with white towels swelling the house with their plenty,
 Shall I postpone my acceptance and realization and scream at my eyes,
 That they turn from gazing after and down the road,
 And forthwith cipher and show to me a cent,
 Exactly the value of one and exactly the value of two, and which is ahead?

4

Trippers and askers surround me,
 People I meet, the effect upon me of my early life or the ward and city I live in,
 or the nation,
 The latest dates, discoveries, inventions, societies, authors old and new,
 My dinner, dress, associates, looks, compliments, dues,
 The real or fancied indifference of some man or woman I love,
 The sickness of one of my folks or of myself, or ill-doing or loss or lack of money,
 or depressions or exaltations,
 Battles, the horrors of fratricidal war, the fever of doubtful news, the fitful events;
 These come to me days and nights and go from me again,
 But they are not the Me myself.

Apart from the pulling and hauling stands what I am,
 Stands amused, complacent, compassionating, idle, unitary,
 Looks down, is erect, or bends an arm on an impalpable certain rest,
 Looking with side-curved head curious what will come next,
 Both in and out of the game and watching and wondering at it.

Backward I see in my own days where I sweated through fog with linguists and contenders,
 I have no mockings or arguments, I witness and wait.

5

I believe in you my soul, the other I am must not abase itself to you,
 And you must not be abased to the other.

Loafe with me on the grass, loose the stop from your throat,
 Not words, not music or rhyme I want, not custom or lecture, not even the best.
 Only the lull I like, the hum of your valvèd voice.

Swiftly arose and spread around me the peace and knowledge that pass all the argument of the earth,
 And I know that the hand of God is the promise of my own,
 And I know that the spirit of God is the brother of my own,
 And that all the men ever born are also my brothers, and the women my sisters and lovers, . . .
 And that a kelson of the creation is love,
 And limitless are leaves stiff or drooping in the fields,
 And brown ants in the little wells beneath them,
 And mossy scabs of the worm fence, heap'd stones, elder, mullein and poke-weed.

6

A child said, What is the grass? fetching it to me with full hands;
 How could I answer the child? I do not know what it is any more than he.

I guess it must be the flag of my disposition, out of hopeful green stuff woven.

Or I guess it is the handkerchief of the Lord,
 A scented gift and remembrancer designedly dropt,
 Bearing the owner's name someway in the corner, that we may see and remark, and say Whose?

Or I guess the grass is itself a child, the produced babe of the vegetation.
 Or I guess it is a uniform hieroglyphic,
 And it means, Sprouting alike in broad zones and narrow zones,
 Growing among black folks as among white,
 Kanuck, Tuckahoe, Congressman, Cuff, I give them the same, I receive them the same.

And now it seems to me the beautiful uncut hair of graves,

Tenderly will I use you curling grass,
 It may be you transpire from the breasts of young men,
 It may be if I had known them I would have loved them,
 It may be you are from old people, or from offspring taken soon out of their mothers'
 laps,
 And here you are the mothers' laps.

This grass is very dark to be from the white heads of old mothers,
 Darker than the colorless beards of old men,
 Dark to come from under the faint red roofs of mouths.
 O I perceive after all so many uttering tongues,
 And I perceive they do not come from the roofs of mouths for nothing.
 I wish I could translate the hints about the dead young men and women,
 And the hints about old men and mothers, and the offspring taken soon out of their laps.

What do you think has become of the young and old men?
 And what do you think has become of the women and children?

They are alive and well somewhere,
 The smallest sprout shows there is really no death,
 And if ever there was it led forward life, and does not wait at the end to arrest it,
 And ceas'd the moment life appear'd.

All goes onward and outward, nothing collapses,
 And to die is different from what anyone supposed, and luckier.

7

Has anyone supposed it lucky to be born?
 I hasten to inform him or her it is just as lucky to die, and I know it.

I pass death with the dying and birth with the new-wash'd babe, and am not contain'd between my hat and boots,
 And peruse manifold objects, no two alike and every one good,
 The earth good and the stars good, and their adjuncts all good.

I am not an earth nor an adjunct of an earth,
 I am the mate and companion of people, all just as immortal and fathomless as myself,
 (They do not know how immortal, but I know.)
 Every kind for itself and its own, for me mine male and female,
 For me those that have been boys and that love women,
 For me the man that is proud and feels how it stings to be slighted,
 For me the sweet-heart and the old maid, for me mothers and the mothers of mothers,
 For me lips that have smiled, eyes that have shed tears,
 For me children and the begetters of children.

Undrape! you are not guilty to me, nor stale nor discarded,
 I see through the broadcloth and gingham whether or no,
 And am around, tenacious, acquisitive, tireless, and cannot be shaken away.

8

The little one sleeps in its cradle,
 I lift the gauze and look a long time, and silently brush away flies with my hand.
 The youngster and the red-laced girl turn aside up the bushy hill,
 I peeringly view them from the top.

The suicide sprawls on the bloody floor of the bedroom,
 I witness the corpse with its dabbled hair, I note where the pistol has fallen.

The blab of the pave, tires of carts, sluff of boot-soles, talk of the promenaders,
 The heavy omnibus, the driver with his interrogating thumb, the clank of the shod horses on the granite floor,
 The snow-sleighs, clinking, shouted jokes, pelts of snow-balls,
 The hurrahs for popular favorites, the fury of rous'd mobs,
 The flap of the curtain'd litter, a sick man inside borne to the hospital,
 The meeting of enemies, the sudden oath, the blows and fall,
 The excited crowd, the policeman with his star quickly working his passage to the center of the crowd,
 The impassive stones that receive and return so many echoes,
 What groans of over-fed or half-starv'd who fall sunstruck or in fits,
 What exclamations of women taken suddenly who hurry home and give birth to babes,
 What living and buried speech is always vibrating here, what howls restrain'd by decorum,
 Arrests of criminals, slights, adulterous offers made, acceptances, rejections with convex lips,
 I mind them or the show or resonance of them—I come and I depart.

9

The big doors of the country barn stand open and ready,
 The dried grass of the harvest-time loads the slow-drawn wagon,
 The clear light plays on the brown gray and green tinted,
 The armfuls are pack'd to the sagging mow.

I am there, I help, I came stretch'd atop of the load,
 I felt its soft jolts, one leg reclined on the other,
 I jump from the cross-beams and seize the clover and timothy,
 And roll head over heels and tangle my hair full of wisps.

IO

Alone far in the wilds and mountains I hunt,
 Wandering amazed at my own lightness and glee,
 In the late afternoon choosing a safe spot to pass the night,
 Kindling a fire and broiling the fresh-kill'd game,
 Falling asleep on the gather'd leaves with my dog and gun by my side.

The Yankee clipper is under her sky-sails, she cuts the sparkle and scud,
 My eyes settle the land, I bend at her prow or shout joyously from the deck.

The boatmen and clam-diggers arose early and stopt for me,
 I tuck'd my trowser-ends in my boots and went and had a good time;
 You should have been with us that day round the chowder-kettle.

I saw the marriage of the trapper in the open air in the far west, the bride was a red girl,
 Her father and his friends sat near cross-legged and dumbly smoking, they had moccasins to their feet and large thick blankets hanging from their shoulders, On a bank lounged the trapper, he was drest mostly in skins, his luxuriant beard and curls protected his neck, he held his bride by the hand, She had long eyelashes, her head was bare, her coarse straight locks descended upon her voluptuous limbs and reach'd to her feet.

The runaway slave came to my house and stopt outside, I heard his motions crackling the twigs of the woodpile, Through the swung half-door of the kitchen I saw him limpsy and weak, And went where he sat on a log and led him in and assured him, And brought water and fill'd a tub for his sweated body and bruis'd feet, And gave him a room that enter'd from my own, and gave him some coarse clean clothes, And remember perfectly well his revolving eyes and his awkwardness, And remember putting plasters on the galls of his neck and ankles; He staid with me a week before he was recuperated and pass'd north, I had him sit next me at table, my fire-lock lean'd in the corner.

II

Twenty-eight young men bathe by the shore.
 Twenty-eight young men and all so friendly;
 Twenty-eight years of womanly life and all so lonesome.
 She owns the fine house by the rise of the bank,
 She hides handsome and richly drest aft the blinds of the window.

Which of the young men does she like the best?
 Ah the homeliest of them is beautiful to her.

Where are you off to, lady? for I see you,
You splash in the water there, yet stay stock still in your room.

Dancing and laughing along the beach came the twenty-ninth bather,
The rest did not see her, but she saw them and loved them.

The beards of the young men glisten'd with wet, it ran from their long hair,
Little streams pass'd all over their bodies.

An unseen hand also pass'd over their bodies,
It descended tremblingly from their temples and ribs.

The young men float on their backs, their white bellies bulge to the sun, they do not ask who seizes fast to them,
They do not know who puffs and declines with pendant and bending arch,
They do not think whom they souse with spray.

14

The wild gander leads his flock through the cool night,
Ya-honk he says, and sounds it down to me like an invitation,
The pert may suppose it meaningless, but I listening close,
Find its purpose and place up there toward the wintry sky.

The sharp-hoof'd moose of the north, the cat on the house-sill, the chickadee, the prairie-dog,
The litter of the grunting sow as they tug at her teats,
The brood of the turkey-hen and she with her half-spread wings,
I see in them and myself the same old law.

The press of my foot to the earth springs a hundred affections,
They scorn the best I can do to relate them.

I am enamour'd of growing out-doors,
Of men that live among cattle or taste of the ocean or woods,
Of the builders and steerers of ships and the wielders of axes and mauls, and the drivers of horses,
I can eat and sleep with them week in and week out.

What is commonest, cheapest, nearest, easiest, is Me,
Me going in for my chances, spending for vast returns,
Adorning myself to bestow myself on the first that will take me,
Not asking the sky to come down to my good will,
Scattering it freely forever.

15

The pure contralto sings in the organ loft,
The carpenter dresses his plank, the tongue of his foreplane whistles its wild ascending lisp,
The married and unmarried children ride home to their Thanksgiving dinner,
The pilot seizes the king-pin, he heaves down with a strong arm,
The mate stands braced in the whale-boat, lance and harpoon are ready,

The duck-shooter walks by silent and cautious stretches,
The deacons are ordain'd with cross'd hands at the altar,
The spinning-girl retreats and advances to the hum of the big wheel,
The farmer stops by the bars as he walks on a First-day loaf and looks at the oats and rye,
The lunatic is carried at last to the asylum a confirm'd case,
(He will never sleep any more as he did in the cot in his mother's bedroom;) The jour printer with gray head and gaunt jaws works at his case,
He turns his quid of tobacco while his eyes blur with the manuscript;
The malform'd limbs are tied to the surgeon's table,
What is removed drops horribly in a pail;
The quadroon girl is sold at the auction-stand, the drunkard nods by the barroom stove,
The machinist rolls up his sleeves, the policeman travels his beat, the gate-keeper marks who pass,
The young fellow drives the express-wagon, (I love him, though I do not know him;) The halt-breed straps on his light boots to compete in the race,
The western turkey-shooting draws old and young, some lean on their rifles, some sit on logs,
Out from the crowd steps the marksman, takes his position, levels his piece;
The groups of newly-come immigrants cover the wharf or levee,
As the woolly-pates hoe in the sugar-field, the overseer views them from his saddle,
The bugle calls in the ball-room, the gentlemen run for their partners, the dancers bow to each other,
The youth lies awake in the cedar-roof'd garret and harks to the musical rain,
The Wolverine sets traps on the creek that helps fill the Huron,
The squaw wrapt in her yellow-hemm'd cloth is offering moccasins and bead-bags for sale,
The connoisseur peers along the exhibition-gallery with half-shut eys bent sideways,
As the deck-hands make fast the steamboat the plank is thrown for the shore-going passengers,
The young sister holds out the skein while the elder sister winds it off in a ball, and stops now and then for the knots,
The one-year wife is recovering and happy having a week ago borne her first child,
The clean-hair'd Yankee girl works with her sewing machine or in the factory or mill,
The paving-man leans on his two-handed rammer, the reporter's lead flies swiftly over the note-book, the sign-painter is lettering with blue and gold,
The canal boy trots on the tow-path, the book-keeper counts at his desk, the shoemaker waxes his thread,
The conductor beats time for the band and all the performers follow him,
The child is baptized, the convert is making his first profession,
The regatta is spread on the bay, the race is begun, (how the white sails sparkle!)
The drover watching his drove sings out to them that would stray,
The peddler sweats with his pack on his back, (the purchaser higgling about the odd cent;) .
The bride unrumpled her white dress, the minute-hand of the clock moves slowly,
The opium-eater reclines with rigid head and just-open'd lips,
The prostitute draggles her shawl, her bonnet bobs on her tipsy and pimpled neck,

The crowd laugh at her blackguard oaths, the men jeer and wink to each other,
 (Miserable! I do not laugh at your oaths nor jeer you;) The President holding a cabinet council is surrounded by the great Secretaries,
 On the piazza walk three matrons stately and friendly with twined arms,
 The crew of the fish-smack pack repeated layers of halibut in the hold,
 Coon-seekers go through the regions of the Red river or through those drain'd by the Tennessee, or through those of the Arkansas,
 Torches shine in the dark that hangs on the Chattahooche or Altamahaw,
 Patriarchs sit at supper with sons and grandsons and great grandsons around them,
 In walls of adobie, in canvas tents, rest hunters and trappers after their day's sport
 The city sleeps and the country sleeps,
 The living sleep for their time, the dead sleep for their time,
 The old husband sleeps by his wife and the young husband sleeps by his wife;
 And these tend inward to me, and I tend outward to them,
 And such as it is to be of these more or less I am,
 And of these one and all I weave the song of myself.

18

With music strong I come, with my cornets and my drums,
 I play not marches for accepted victors only, I play marches for conquer'd and slain persons. .

Have you heard that it was good to gain the day?
 I also say it is good to fall, battles are lost in the same spirit in which they are won.

I beat and pound for the dead,
 I blow through my embouchures my loudest and gayest for them.

Vivas to those who have fail'd!
 And to those whose war-vessels sank in the sea!
 And to those themselves who sank in the sea!
 And to all generals that lost engagements, and all overcome heroes!
 And the numberless unknown heroes equal to the greatest heroes known!

This is the meal equal'y set, this the meat for natural hunger,
 It is for the wicked just the same as the righteous, I make appointments with all,
 I will not have a single person slighted or left away,
 The kept-woman, sponger, thief, are hereby invited,
 There shall be no difference between them and the rest.

This is the press of a bashful hand, this the float and odor of hair,
 This the touch of my lips to yours, this the murmur of yearning,
 This the far-off depth and height reflecting my own face,
 This the thoughtful merge of myself, and the outlet again.
 Do you guess I have some intricate purpose?
 Well I have, for the Fourth-month showers have, and the mica on the side of the rock has.

Do you take it I would astonish?
 Does the daylight astonish? does the early redstart twittering through the woods?
 Do I astonish more than they?

This hour I tell things in confidence,
I might not tell everybody, but I will tell you.

Who goes there? hankering, gross, mystical, nude;
How is it I extract strength from the beef I eat?

What is a man anyhow? what am I? what are you?

All I mark as my own you shall offset it with your own,
Else it were time lost listening to me.

I do not snivel that snivel the world over,
That months are vacuums and the ground but wallow and filth.

Whimpering and truckling fold with powders for invalids, conformity goes to the fourth-remov'd,
I wear my hat as I please indoors or out.

Why should I pray? why should I venerate and be ceremonious?

Having pried through the strata, analyzed to a hair, counsel'd with doctors and calculated close,
I find no sweeter fat than sticks to my own bones.

In all people I see myself, none more and not one a barleycorn less,
And the good or bad I say of myself I say of them.
I know I am solid and sound,
To me the converging objects of the universe perpetually flow,
All are written to me, and I must get what the writing means.

I know I am deathless,
I know this orbit of mine cannot be swept by a carpenter's compass,
I know I shall not pass like a child's carlaue cut with a burnt stick at night.

I know I am august,
I do not trouble my spirit to vindicate itself or be understood,
I see that the elementary laws never apologize,
(I reckon I behave no prouder than the level I plant my house by, after all.)

I exist as I am, that is enough,
If no other in the world be aware I sit content,
And if each and all be aware I sit content.

One world is aware and by far the largest to me, and that is myself,
'And whether I come to my own today or in ten thousand or ten million years,
I can cheerfully take it now, or with equal cheerfulness I can wait.

My foothold is tenon'd and mortis'd in granite,
I laugh at what you call dissolution,
And I know the amplitude of time.

21

I am the poet of the Body and I am the poet of the Soul,
 The pleasures of heaven are with me and the pains of hell are with me,
 The first I graft and increase upon myself, the latter I translate into a new tongue.
 I am the poet of the woman the same as the man,
 And I say it is as great to be a woman as to be a man,
 And I say there is nothing greater than the mother of men.

I chant the chant of dilation or pride,
 We have had ducking and deprecating about enough,
 I show that size is only development.

Have you outstript the rest? are you the President?
 It is a trifle, they will more than arrive there every one, and still pass on.

I am he that walks with the tender and growing night,
 I call to the earth and sea half-held by the night.

Press close bare-bosom'd night—press close magnetic nourishing night!
 Night of south winds—night of the large few stars!
 Still nodding night—mad naked summer night.

Smile O voluptuous cool-breath'd earth!
 Earth of the slumbering and liquid trees!
 Earth of departed sunset—earth of the mountains misty-topt!
 Earth of the vitreous pour of the full moon just tinged with blue!
 Earth of shine and dark mottling the tide of the river!
 Earth of the limpid gray of clouds brighter and clearer for my sake!
 Far-swooping elbow'd earth—rich apple-blossom'd earth!
 Smile, for your lover comes.

Prodigal, you have given me love—therefore I to you give love!
 O unspeakable passionate love.

22

You sea! I resign myself to you also—I guess what you mean,
 I behold from the beach your crooked inviting fingers,
 I believe you refuse to go back without feeling of me,
 We must have a turn together, I undress, hurry me out of sight of the land,
 Cushion me soft, rock me in billowy drowse,
 Dash me with amorous wet, I can repay you.

Sea of stretch'd ground-swells,
 Sea breathing broad and convulsive breaths,
 Sea of the brine of life and of unshovel'd yet always-ready graves,
 Howler and scooper of storms, capricious and dainty sea,
 I am integral with you, I too am of one phase and of all phases.

Partaker of influx and efflux I, extoller of hate and conciliation,
 Extoller of amies<sup>1</sup> and those that sleep in each other's arms.

I am he attesting sympathy,
 (Shall I make my list of things in the house and skip the house that supports them?)

I am not the poet of goodness only, I do not decline to be the poet of wickedness also

What blurt is this about virtue and about vice?
 Evil propels me and reform of evil propels me, I stand indifferent,
 My gait is no fault-finder's or rejecter's gait,
 I moisten the roots of all that has grown.

Did you fear some scrofula out of the unflagging pregnancy?
 Did you guess the celestial laws are yet to be work'd over and rectified?

I find one side a balance and the antipodal side a balance,
 Soft doctrine as steady help as stable doctrine,
 Thoughts and deeds of the present our rouse and early start.

This minute that comes to me over the past decillions,
 There is no better than it and now.

What behaved well in the past or behaves well today is not such a wonder,
 The wonder is always and always how there can be a mean man or an infidel.

25

Dazzling and tremendous how quick the sunrise would kill me,
 If I could not now and always send sun-rise out of me.

We also ascend dazzling and tremendous as the sun,
 We found our own O my soul in the calm and cool of the daybreak.

My voice goes after what my eyes cannot reach,
 With the twirl of my tongue I encompass worlds and volumes of worlds.

Speech is the twin of my vision, it is unequal to measure itself,
 It provokes me forever, it says sarcastically,
Walt you contain enough, why don't you let it out then?

Come now I will not be tantalized, you conceive too much of articulation,
 Do you not know O speech how the buds beneath you are folded?
 Waiting in gloom, protected by frost,
 The dirt receding before my prophetical screams,
 I underlying causes to balance them at last,
 My knowledge my live parts, it keeping tally with the meaning of all things,
 Happiness, (which whoever hears me let him or her set out in search of this day.)

My final merit I refuse you, I refuse putting from me what I really am,
 Encompass worlds, but never try to encompass me,
 I crowd your sleekest and best by simply looking toward you.

Writing and talking do not prove me,
 I carry the plenum of proof and every thing else in my face,
 With the hush of my lips I wholly confound the skeptic.

30

All truths wait in all things,
 They neither hasten their own delivery nor resist it,
 They do not need the obstetric forceps of the surgeon,
 The insignificant is as big to me as any,
 (What is less or more than a touch?)

Logic and sermons never convince,
 The damp of the night drives deeper into my soul.

(Only what proves itself to every man and woman is so,
 Only what nobody denies is so.)

A minute and a drop of me settle my brain,
 I believe the soggy clods shall become lovers and lamps,
 And a compend of compends is the meat of a man or woman,
 And a summit and flower there is the feeling they have for each other,
 And they are to branch boundlessly out of that lesson until it becomes omnific,
 And until one and all shall delight us, and we them.

31

I believe a leaf of grass is no less than the journeywork of the stars,
 And the pismire is equally perfect, and a grain of sand, and the egg of the wren,
 And the tree-toad is a chef-d'œuvre for the highest,
 And the running blackberry would adorn the parlors of heaven,
 And the narrowest hinge in my hand puts to scorn all machinery,
 And the cow crunching with depress'd head surpasses any statue,
 And a mouse is miracle enough to stagger sextillions of infidels.

I find I incorporate gneiss, coal, long-threaded moss, fruits, grains, esculent roots,
 And am stucco'd with quadrupeds and birds all over,
 And have distanced what is behind me for good reasons,
 But call any thing back again when I desire it.

In vain the speeding or shyness,
 In vain the plutonic rocks send their old heat against my approach,
 In vain the mastodon retreats beneath its own powder'd bones,
 In vain objects stand leagues off and assume manifold shapes,
 In vain the ocean settling in hollows and the great monsters lying low,
 In vain the buzzard houses herself with the sky,
 In vain the snake slides through the creepers and logs,
 In vain the elk takes to the inner passes of the woods,
 In vain the razor-bill'd auk sails far north to Labrador,
 I follow quickly, I ascend to the nest in the fissure of the cliff.

32

I think I could turn and live with animals, they are so placid and self-contain'd,
 I stand and look at them long and long.

They do not sweat and whine about their condition,
 They do not lie awake in the dark and weep for their sins,

They do not make me sick discussing their duty to God,
 Not one is dissatisfied, not one is demented with the mania of owning things,
 Not one kneels to another, nor to his kind that lived thousands of years ago,
 Not one is respectable or unhappy over the whole earth.

So they show their relations to me and I accept them,
 They bring me tokens of myself, they evince them plainly in their possession.

I wonder where they get those tokens,
 Did I pass that way huge times ago and negligently drop them?

Myself moving forward then and now and forever,
 Gathering and showing more always and with velocity,
 Infinite and omnigenous, and the like of these among them,
 Not too exclusive toward the reachers of my remembrancers,
 Picking out here one that I love, and now go with him on brotherly terms.

A gigantic beauty of a stallion, fresh and responsive to my caresses,
 Head high in the forehead, wide between the ears,
 Limbs glossy and supple, tail dusting the ground,
 Eyes full of sparkling wickedness, ears finely cut, flexibly moving.
 His nostrils dilate as my heels embrace him,
 His well-built limbs tremble with pleasure as we race around and return.

I but use you a minute, then I resign you, stallion,
 Why do I need your paces when I myself out-gallop them?
 Even as I stand or sit passing faster than you.

35

Would you hear of an old-time sea-fight?
 Would you learn who won by the light of the moon and stars?
 List to the yarn, as my grandmother's father the sailor told it to me.

Our foe was no skulk in his ship I tell you, (said he,)
 His was the surly English pluck, and there is no tougher or truer, and never was,
 and never will be;
 Along the lower'd eve he came horribly raking us.

We closed with him, the yards entangled, the cannon touch'd,
 My captain lash'd fast with his own hands.

We had receiv'd some eighteen pound shots under the water,
 On our lower-gun-deck two large pieces had burst at the first fire, killing all around and blowing up overhead.

Fighting at sun-down, fighting at dark,
 Ten o'clock at night, the full moon well up, our leaks on the gain, and five feet of water reported,
 The master-at-arms loosing the prisoners confined in the afterhold to give them a chance for themselves.
 The transit to and from the magazine is now stopt by the sentinels,
 They see so many strange faces they do not know whom to trust.

Our frigate takes fire,
The other asks if we demand quarter?
If our colors are struck and the fighting done?

Now I laugh content, for I hear the voice of my little captain,
We have not struck, he composedly cries, we have just begun our part of the fighting.

Only three guns are in use,
One is directed by the captain himself against the enemy's mainmast,
Two well serv'd with grape and canister silence his musketry and clear his decks.

The tops alone second the fire of this little battery, especially the main-top,
They hold out bravely during the whole of the action.

Not a moment's cease.
The leaks gain fast on the pumps, the fire eats toward the powder-magazine.

One of the pumps has been shot away, it is generally thought we are sinking.

Jerene stands the little captain,
He is not hurried, his voice is neither high nor low,
His eyes give more light to us than our battle-lanterns.

Toward twelve there in the beams of the moon they surrender to us.

36

Stretch'd and still lies the midnight,
Two great hulls motionless on the breast of the darkness,
Our vessel riddled and slowly sinking, preparations to pass to the one we have conquer'd,
The captain on the quarter-deck coldly giving his orders through a countenance white as a sheet,
Near by the corpse of the child that serv'd in the cabin,
The dead face of an old salt with long white hair and carefully curl'd whiskers,
The flames spite of all that can be done flickering aloft and below,
The husky voices of the two or three officers yet fit for duty, Formless stacks of bodies and bodies by themselves, dabs of flesh upon the masts and spars,
Cut of cordage, dangle of rigging, slight shock of the soothe of waves,
Black and impassive guns, litter of powder-parcels, strong scent,
A few large stars overhead, silent and mournful shining,
Delicate sniffs of sea-breeze, smells of sedgy grass and fields by the shore, death-messages given in charge to survivors,
The hiss of the surgeon's knife, the gnawing teeth of his saw,
Wheeze, cluck, swash of falling blood, short wild scream, and long, dull, tapering groan,
These so, these irretrievable.

37

You laggards there on guard! look to your arms!
In at the conquer'd doors they crowd! I am possess'd!
Embody all presences outlaw'd or suffering,

See myself in prison shaped like another man,
And feel the dull intermitted pain.

For me the keepers of convicts shoulder their carbines and keep watch,
It is I let out in the morning and barr'd at night.
Not a mutineer walks handcuff'd to jail but I am handcuff'd to him and walk by his side,
(I am less the jolly one there, and more the silent one with sweat on my twitching lips.)

Not a youngster is taken for larceny but I go up too, and am tried and sentenced.

Not a cholera patient lies at the last gasp but I also lie at the last gasp,
My face is ash-color'd, my sinews gnarl, away from me people retreat.

Askers embody themselves in me and I am embodied in them,
I project my hat, sit shame-faced, and beg.

38

Enough! enough! enough!
Somehow I have been stunn'd. Stand back!
Give me a little time beyond my cuff'd head, slumbers, dreams, gaping,
I discover myself on the verge of a usual mistake.

That I could forget the mockers and insults!
That I could forget the trickling tears and the-blows of the bludgeons and hammers!
That I could look with a separate look on my own crucifixion and bloody crowning!

I remember now,
I resume the overstaid fraction,
The grave of rock multiplies what has been confided to it, or to any graves,
Corpses rise, gashes heal, fastenings roll from me.

I troop forth replenish'd with supreme power, one of an average unending procession,
Inland and sea-coast we go, and pass all boundary lines,
Our swift ordinances on their way over the whole earth,
The blossoms we wear in our hats the growth of thousands of years.

40

Flaunt of the sunshine I need not your bask—lie over!
You light surfaces only, I force surfaces and depths also.

Earth! you seem to look for something at my hands,
Say, old top-knot, what do you want?

Behold, I do not give lectures or a little charity,
When I give I give myself.

You there, impotent, loose in the knees,
Open your scarf'd chops till I blow grit within you

Spread your palms and lift the flaps of your pockets,
 I am not to be denied, I compel, I have stores plenty and to spare,
 And any thing I have I bestow.

I do not ask who you are, that is not important to me,
 You can do nothing and be nothing but what I will infold you.

To cotton-field drudge or cleaner of privies I lean,
 On his right cheek I put the family kiss,
 And in my soul I swear I never will deny him.

To anyone dying, thither I speed and twist the knob of the door,
 Turn the bed-clothes toward the foot of the bed,
 Let the physician and the priest go home.

I seize the descending man and raise him with resistless will,
 O despoiler, here is my neck,
 By God, you shall not go down! hang your whole weight upon me.

44

It is time to explain myself—let us stand up.

What is known I strip away,
 I launch all men and women forward with me into the Unknown.

The clock indicates the moment—but what does eternity indicate?

We have thus far exhausted trillions of winters and summers,
 There are trillions ahead, and trillions ahead of them.

Rise after rise bow the phantoms behind me,
 Afar down I see the huge first Nothing, I know I was even there,
 I waited unseen and always, and slept through the lethargic mist,
 And took my time, and took no hurt from the fetid carbon.

Long I was hugg'd close—long and long.
 Immense have been the preparations for me,
 Faithful and friendly the arms that have help'd me.

Cycles ferried my cradle, rowing and rowing like cheerful boatmen,
 For room to me stars kept aside in their own rings,
 They sent influences to look after what was to hold me.

Before I was born out of my mother generations guided me,
 My embryo has never been torpid, nothing could overlay it.

For it the nebula cohered to an orb,
 The long slow strata piled to rest it on,
 Vast vegetables gave it sustenance.
 Monstrous sauroids transported it in their mouths and deposited it with care.

All forces have been steadily employ'd to complete and delight me,
Now on this spot I stand with my robust soul.

48

I have said that the soul is not more than the body,
And I have said that the body is not more than the soul,
And nothing, not God, is greater to one than one's self is,
And whoever walks a furlong without sympathy walks to his own funeral drest
in his shroud,
And I or you pocketless of a dime may purchase the pick of the earth,
And to glance with an eye or show a bean in its pod confounds the learning of all times,
And there is no trade or employment but the young man following it may become a hero,
And there is no object so soft but it makes a hub for the wheel'd universe,
And I say to any man or woman, Let your soul stand cool and composed before a million universes.

And I say to mankind, Be not curious about God,
For I who am curious about each am not curious about God,
(No array of terms can say how much I am at peace about God and about death.)

I hear and behold God in every object, yet understand God not in the least,
Nor do I understand who there can be more wonderful than myself.

Why should I wish to see God better than this day?
I see something of God each hour of the twenty-four, and each moment then,
In the faces of men and women I see God, and in my own face in the glass,
I find letters from God dropt in the street, and every one is sign'd by God's name,
And I leave them where they are, for I know that wheresoe'er I go,
Others will punctually come for ever and ever.

49

And as to you Death, and you bitter hug of mortality, it is idle to try to alarm me.

To his work without flinching the accoucheur comes,
I see the elder-hand pressing receiving supporting,
I recline by the sills of the exquisite flexible doors,
And mark the outlet, and mark the relief and escape.
And as to you Corpse I think you are good manure, but that does not offend me,
I smell the white roses sweet-scented and growing,
I reach to the leafy lips, I reach to the polish'd breasts of melons.

And as to you Life I reckon you are the leavings of many deaths,
(No doubt I have died myself ten thousand times before.)

I hear you whispering there O stars of heaven,
O suns—O grass of graves—O perpetual transfers and promotions,
If you do not say any thing how can I say any thing?

Of the turbid pool that lies in the autumn forest,
 Of the moon that descends the steeps of the southing twilight,
 Toss, sparkles of day and dusk—toss on the black stems that decay in the muck,
 Toss to the moaning gibberish of the dry limbs.

I ascend from the moon, I ascend from the night,
 I perceive that the ghastly glimmer is noonday sunbeams reflected,
 And debouch to the steady and central from the offspring great or small.

50

There is that in me—I do not know what it is—but I know it is in me.

Wrench'd and sweaty—calm and cool then my body becomes,
 I sleep—I sleep long.

I do not know it—it is without name—it is a word unsaid,
 It is not in any dictionary, utterance, symbol.

Something it swings on more than the earth I swing on,
 To it the creation is the friend whose embracing awakes me.
 Perhaps I might tell more. Outlines! I plead for my brothers and sisters.
 Do you see O my brothers and sisters?
 It is not chaos or death—it is form, union, plan—it is eternal life—it is Happiness.

51

The past and present wilt—I have fill'd them, emptied them,
 And proceed to fill my next fold of the future.

Listener up there! what have you to confide to me?
 Look in my face while I snuff the siddle of evening,
 (Talk honestly, no one else hears you, and I stay only a minute longer.)

Do I contradict myself?
 Very well then I contradict myself,
 (I am large, I contain multitudes.)

I concentrate toward them that are nigh, I wait on the door-slab.

Who has done his day's work? who will soonest be through with his supper?
 Who wishes to walk with me?

Will you speak before I am gone? will you prove already too late?

52

The spotted hawk swoops by and accuses me, he complains of my gab and my loitering.

I too am not a bit tamed, I too am untranslatable,
 I sound my barbaric yawp over the roofs of the world.

The last scud of day holds back for me,
 It flings my likeness after the rest and true as any on the shadow'd wilds,
 It coaxes me to the vapor and the dusk.
 I depart as air, I shake my white locks at the runaway sun,
 I effuse my flesh in eddies, and drift it in lacy jags.

I bequeath myself to the dirt to grow from the grass I love,
 If you want me again look for me under your boot-soles.

You will hardly know who I am or what I mean,
 But I shall be good health to you nevertheless,
 And filter and fiber your blood.

Failing to fetch me at first keep encouraged,
 Missing me one place search another,
 I stop somewhere waiting for you.

SONG OF THE OPEN ROAD

(Condensed)

Afoot and light-hearted I take to the open road,
 Healthy, free, the world before me,
 The long brown path before me leading wherever I choose.

Henceforth I ask not good-fortune, I myself am good-fortune,
 Henceforth I whimper no more, postpone no more, need nothing,
 Done with indoor complaints, libraries, querulous criticisms,
 Strong and content I travel the open road.

The earth, that is sufficient,
 I do not want the constellations any nearer,
 I know they are very well where they are,
 I know they suffice for those who belong to them

(Still here I carry my old delicious burdens,
 I carry them, men and women, I carry them with me wherever I go,
 I swear it is impossible for me to get rid of them,
 I am fill'd with them, and I will fill them in return.)

You road I enter upon and look around, I believe you are not all that is here,
 I believe that much unseen is also here.
 Here the profound lesson of reception, nor preference nor denial,
 The black with his woolly head, the felon, the diseas'd, the illiterate person, are not denied;
 The birth, the hasting after the physician, the beggar's tramp, the drunkard's stag-ger, the laughing party of mechanics,
 The escaped youth, the rich person's carriage, the fop, the eloping couple,
 The early market-man, the hearse, the moving of furniture into the town, the return back from the town,

They pass, I also pass, any thing passes, none can be interdicted,
None but are accepted, none but shall be dear to me.

You air that serves me with breath to speak!
You objects that call from diffusion my meanings and give them shape!
You light that wraps me and all things in delicate equable showers!
You paths worn in the irregular hollows by the roadsides!
I believe you are latent with unseen existences, you are so dear to me.

I inhale great draughts of space,
The east and the west are mine, and the north and the south are mine.

I am larger, better than I thought,
I did not know I held so much goodness.

All seems beautiful to me,
I can repeat over to men and women, You have done such good to me I would do the same to you,
I will recruit for myself and you as I go,
I will scatter myself among men and women as I go,
I will toss a new gladness and roughness among them,
Whoever denies me it shall not trouble me,
Whoever accepts me he or she shall be blessed and shall bless me.

Allons! whoever you are come travel with me!
Traveling with me you find what never tires.

The earth never tires,
The earth is rude, silent, incomprehensible at first, Nature is rude and incomprehensible at first,
Be not discouraged, keep on, there are divine things well envelop'd,
I swear to you there are divine things more beautiful than words can tell.

Allons! we must not stop here,
However sweet these laid-up stores, however convenient this dwelling we cannot remain here,
However shelter'd this port and however calm these waters we must not anchor here,
However welcome the hospitality that surrounds us we are permitted to receive it but a little while.

Allons! the inducements shall be greater,
We will sail pathless and wild seas,
We will go where winds blow, waves dash, and the Yankee clipper speeds by under full sail.

Allons! with power, liberty, the earth, the elements,
Health, defiance, gayety, self-esteem, curiosity;
Allons! from all formules!
From your formules, O bat-eyed and materialistic priests.

Allons! through struggles and wars!
The goal that was named cannot be countermanded.

Have the past struggles succeeded?
What has succeeded? yourself? your nation? Nature?
Now understand me well—it is provided in the essence of things that from any fruition of success, no matter what, shall come forth something to make a greater struggle necessary.

My call is the call of battle, I nourish active rebellion,
He going with me must go well arm'd,
He going with me goes often with spare diet, poverty, angry enemies, desertions.

Allons! the road is before us!
It is safe—I have tried it—my own feet have tried it well—be not detain'd!
Let the paper remain on the desk unwritten, and the book on the shelf unopen'd!
Let the tools remain in the workshop! let the money remain unearn'd!
Let the school stand! mind not the cry of the teacher!
Let the preacher preach in his pulpit! let the lawyer plead in the court, and the judge expound the law.

Camerado, I give you my hand!
I give you my love more precious than money,
I give you myself before preaching or law;
Will you give me yourself? will you come travel with me?
Shall we stick by each other as long as we live?

THE BROAD-AX

(from "Song of the Broad-Ax")

Weapon shapely, naked, wan,
Head from the mother's bowels drawn,
Wooded flesh and metal bone, limb only one and lip only one,
Gray-blue leaf by red-heat grown, helve produced from a little seed sown,
Resting the grass amid and upon,
To be lean'd and to lean on.

ON THE BEACH AT NIGHT

On the beach at night,
Stands a child with her father,
Watching the east, the autumn sky.

Up through the darkness,
While ravening clouds, the burial clouds, in black masses spreading,
Lower sullen and fast athwart and down the sky,
Amid a transparent clear belt of ether yet left in the east,
Ascends large and calm the lord-star Jupiter,
And nigh at hand, only a very little above,
Swim the delicate sisters the Pleiades.

From the beach the child holding the hand of her father,
 Those burial clouds that lower victorious soon to devour all,
 Watching, silently weeps.

Weep not, child,
 Weep not, my darling,
 With these kisses let me remove your tears,
 The ravening clouds shall not long be victorious;
 They shall not long possess the sky, they devour the stars only in apparition, Jupiter shall emerge, be patient, watch again another night, the Pleiades shall emerge,
 They are immortal, all those stars both silvery and golden shall shine out again,
 The great stars and the little ones shall shine out again, they endure,
 The vast immortal suns and the long-enduring pensive moons shall again shine.

Then dearest child mournest thou only for Jupiter?
 Considerest thou alone the burial of the stars?

Something there is,
 (With my lips soothing thee, adding I whisper,
 I give thee the first suggestion, the problem and indirection,)
 Something there is more immortal even than the stars,
 (Many the burials, many the days and nights, passing away,)
 Something that shall endure longer even than lustrous Jupiter,
 Longer than sun or any revolving satellite,
 Or the radiant sisters the Pleiades.

OUT OF THE CRADLE ENDLESSLY ROCKING

Out of the cradle endlessly rocking,
 Out of the mocking-bird's throat, the musical shuttle,
 Out of the Ninth-month midnight,
 Over the sterile sands and the fields beyond where the child leaving his bed wander'd alone, bareheaded, barefoot,
 Down from the shower'd halo,
 Up from the mystic play of shadows twining and twisting as if they were alive,
 Out from the patches of briars and blackberries,
 From the memories of the bird that chanted to me,
 From your memories sad brother, from the fitful risings and fallings I heard,
 From under that yellow half-moon late-risen and swollen as if with tears,
 From those beginning notes of yearning and love there in the mist,
 From the thousand responses of my heart never to cease,
 From the myriad thence-arous'd words,
 From the word stronger and more delicious than any,
 From such as now they start the scene revisiting,
 As a flock, twittering, rising, or overhead passing,
 Borne hither, e'er all eludes me, hurriedly,
 A man, yet by these tears a little boy again,
 Throwing myself on the sand, confronting the waves,
 I, chanter of pains and joys, uniter of here and hereafter,
 Taking all hints to use them, but swiftly leaping beyond them,
 A reminiscence sing.

Once Paumanok,

When the lilac-scent was in the air and Fifth-month grass was growing,
Up this seashore in some briars,
Two feather'd guests from Alabama, two together,
And their nest, and four light-green eggs spotted with brown,
And every day the he-bird to and fro near at hand,
And every day the she-bird crouch'd on her nest, silent, with bright eyes,
And every day I, a curious boy, never too close, never disturbing them,
Cautiously peering, absorbing, translating.

Pour down your warmth, great sun!
While we bask, we two together,

Two together!

Winds blow south, or winds blow north,
Day come white, or night come black,
I home, or rivers and mountains from home,
Singing all time, minding no time,
While we-two keep together.

Till of a sudden,

May-be kill'd, unknown to her mate,
One forenoon the she-bird crouch'd not on the nest,
Nor return'd that afternoon, nor the next,
Nor ever appear'd again.

And thenceforward all summer in the sound of the sea,
And at night under the full of the moon in calmer weather,
Over the hoarse surging of the sea,
Or flitting from brier to brier by day,
I saw, I heard at intervals the remaining one, the he-bird,
The solitary guest from Alabama.

Blow! blow! blow!

Blow up sea-winds along Paumanok's shore;
I wait and I wait till you blow my mate to me.

Yes, when the stars glisten'd,

All night long on the prong of a moss-scallop'd stake,
Down almost amid the slapping waves,
Sat the lone singer wonderful causing tears.

He call'd on his mate,

He pour'd forth the meanings which I of all men know.

Yes my brother I know,

The rest might not, but I have treasur'd every note,
For more than once dimly down to the beach gliding,
Silent, avoiding the moonbeams, blending myself with the shadows,
Recalling now the obscure shapes, the echoes, the sounds and sights after their sorts,

The white arms out in the breakers tirelessly tossing,
I, with bare feet, a child, the wind wasting my hair,
Listen'd long and long.

Listen'd to keep, to sing, now translating the notes,
Following you my brother.

Soothe! soothe! soothe!
Close on its wave soothes the wave behind,
And again another behind embracing and lapping, every one close,
But my love soothes not me, not me.
Low hangs the moon, it rose late,
It is lagging—O I think it is heavy with love, with love.

O madly the sea pushes upon the land,
With love, with love.

O night! do I not see my love fluttering out among the breakers?
What is that little black thing I see there in the white?

Loud! loud! loud!
Loud I call to you, my love!
High and clear I shoot my voice over the waves,
Surely you must know who is here, is here,
You must know who I am, my love.

Low-hanging moon!
What is that dusky spot in your brown yellow?
O it is the shape, the shape of my mate!
O moon do not keep her from me any longer.

Land! land! O land!
Whichever way I turn, O I think you could give me my mate back again if you only would,
For I am almost sure I see her dimly whichever way I look.

O rising stars!
Perhaps the one I want so much will rise, will rise with some of you.

O throat! O trembling throat!
Sound clearer through the atmosphere!
Pierce the woods, the earth,
Somewhere listening to catch you must be the one I want.

Shake out carols!
Solitary here, the night's carols!
Carols of lonesome love! death's carols!
Carols under that lagging, yellow, waning moon!
O under that moon where she droops almost down into the sea!
O reckless despising carols.

*But soft! sink low!
Soft, let me just murmur,
And do you wait a moment you husky-nois'd sea,
For somewhere I believe I heard my mate responding to me,
So faint, I must be still, be still to listen,
But not altogether still, for then she might not come immediately to me.*

*Hither my love!
Here I am! here!
With this just-sustain'd note I announce myself to you,
This gentle call is for you my love, for you.*

*Do not be decoy'd elsewhere,
That is the whistle of the wind, it is not my voice,
That is the fluttering, the fluttering of the spray,
Those are the shadows of leaves.
O darkness! O in vain!
O I am very sick and sorrowful.*

*O brown halo in the sky near the moon, drooping upon the seal
O troubled reflection in the seal
O throat! O throbbing heart!
And I singing uselessly, uselessly all the night.*

*O past! O happy life! O songs of joy!
In the air, in the woods, over fields,
Loved! loved! loved! loved! loved!
But my mate no more, no more with me!
We two together no more.*

The aria sinking,
All else continuing, the stars shining,
The winds blowing, the notes of the bird continuous echoing,
With angry moans the fierce old mother incessantly moaning,
On the sands of Paumanok's shore gray and rustling,
The yellow half-moon enlarged, sagging down, drooping, the face of the sea almost touching,
The boy ecstatic, with his bare feet the waves, with his hair the atmosphere dallying,
The love in the heart long pent, now loose, now at last tumultuously bursting,
The aria's meaning, the ears, the soul, swiftly depositing,
The strange tears down the cheeks coursing,
The colloquy there, the trio, each uttering,
The undertone, the savage old mother incessantly crying,
To the boy's soul's questions sullenly timing, some drown'd secret hissing,
To the outsetting bard.

*Demon or bird! (said the boy's soul)
Is it indeed toward your mate you sing? or is it really to me?
For I, that was a child, my tongue's use sleeping, now I have heard you,*

Now in a moment I know what I am for, I awake,
 And already a thousand singers, a thousand songs, clearer, louder and more sorrowful than yours,
 A thousand warbling echoes have started to life within me, never to die.

O you singer solitary, singing by yourself, projecting me,
 O solitary me listening, never more shall I cease perpetuating you,
 Never more shall I escape, never more the reverberations,
 Never more the cries of unsatisfied love be absent from me,
 Never again leave me to be the peaceful child I was before what there in the night,
 By the sea under the yellow and sagging moon,
 The messenger there arous'd, the fire, the sweet hell within,
 The unknown want, the destiny of me.

O give me the clue! (it lurks in the night here somewhere,)
 O if I am to have so much, let me have more!

A word then, (for I will conquer it,)
 The word final, superior to all,
 Subtle, sent up—what is it?—I listen;
 Are you whispering it, and have been all the time, you sea-waves?
 Is that it from your liquid rims and wet sands?

Whereto answering, the sea,
 Delaying not, hurrying not,
 Whisper'd me through the night, and very plainly before daybreak,
 Lisp'd to me the low and delicious word death,
 And again death, death, death,
 Hissing melodious, neither like the bird nor like my arous'd child's heart,
 But edging near as privately for me rustling at my feet,
 Creeping thence steadily up to my ears and laving me softly all over,
 Death, death, death, death.

Which I do not forget,
 But fuse the song of my dusky demon and brother,
 That he sang to me in the moonlight on Paumonok's gray beach,
 With the thousand responsive songs at random,
 My own songs awaked from that hour,
 And with them the key, the word up from the waves,
 The word of the sweetest song and all songs,
 That strong and delicious word which, creeping to my feet,
 (Or like some old crone rocking the cradle, swathed in sweet garments, bending aside,)
 The sea whisper'd me.

FACING WEST FROM CALIFORNIA'S SHORES

Facing west from California's shores,
 Inquiring, tireless, seeking what is yet unfound,
 I, a child, very old, over waves, towards the house of maternity, the land of migrations, look afar,

Look off the shores of my Western sea, the circle almost circled;
 For starting westward from Hindustan, from the vales of Kashmire,
 From Asia, from the north, from the God, the sage, and the hero,
 From the south, from the flowery peninsulas and the spice islands,
 Long having wander'd since, round the earth having wander'd,
 Now I face home again, very pleas'd and joyous,
 (But where is what I started for so long ago?
 And why is it yet unfound?)

WHEN LILACS LAST IN THE DOORYARD BLOOM'D<sup>1</sup>

I

When lilacs last in the dooryard bloom'd,
 And the great star early droop'd in the western sky in the night,
 I mourn'd, and yet shall mourn with ever-returning spring.

Ever-returning spring, trinity sure to me you bring,
 Lilac blooming perennial and drooping star in the west,
 And thought of him I love.

2

O powerful western fallen star!
 O shades of night—O moody, tearful night!
 O great star disappear'd—O the black murk that hides the star!
 O cruel hands that hold me powerless—O helpless soul of me!
 O harsh surrounding cloud that will not free my soul.

3

In the dooryard fronting an old farm-house near the whitewash'd palings,
 Stands the lilac-bush tall-growing with heart-shaped leaves of rich green,
 With many a pointed blossom rising delicate, with the perfume strong I love,
 With every leaf a miracle—and from this bush in the dooryard,
 With delicate-color'd blossoms and heart-shaped leaves of rich green,
 A sprig with its flower I break.

4

In the swamp in secluded recesses,
 A shy and hidden bird is warbling a song.

Solitary the thrush,
 The hermit withdrawn to himself, avoiding the settlements,
 Sings by himself a song.

Song of the bleeding throat,
 Death's outlet song of life, (for well dear brother I know,
 If thou wast not granted to sing thou wouldst surely die.)

5

Over the breast of the spring, the land, amid cities,
 Amid lanes and through old woods, where lately the violets peep'd from the ground,
 spotting the gray débris,

Amid the grass in the fields each side of the lanes, passing the endless grass,
 Passing the yellow-spear'd wheat, every grain from its shroud in the dark-brown fields uprisen,
 Passing the apple-tree blows of white and pink in the orchards,
 Carrying a corpse to where it shall rest in the grave,
 Night and day journeys a coffin.

Coffin that passes through lanes and streets,
 Through day and night with the great cloud darkening the land,
 With the pomp of the inloop'd flags with the cities draped in black,
 With the show of the States themselves as of crape-veil'd women standing,
 With processions long and winding and the flambeaus of the night,
 With the countless torches lit, with the silent sea of faces and the unbared heads,
 With the waiting depot, the arriving coffin, and the somber faces,
 With dirges through the night, with the thousand voices rising strong and solemn,
 With all the mournful voices of the dirges pour'd around the coffin,
 The dim-lit churches and the shuddering organs—where amid these you journey,
 With the tolling tolling bells' perpetual clang,
 Here, coffin that slowly passes,
 I give you my sprig of lilac.

(Nor for you, for one alone,
 Blossoms and branches green to coffins all I bring,
 For fresh as the morning, thus would I chant a song for you O sane and sacred death.

All over bouquets of roses,
 O death, I cover you over with roses and early lilies,
 But mostly and now the lilac that blooms the first,
 Copious I break, I break the sprigs from the bushes,
 With loaded arms I come, pouring for you,
 For you and the coffins all of you O death.)

8

O western orb sailing the heaven,
 Now I know what you must have meant as a month since I walk'd,
 As I walk'd in silence the transparent shadowy night,
 As I saw you had something to tell as you bent to me night after night,
 As you droop'd from the sky low down as if to my side, (while the other stars all look'd on,)
 As we wander'd together the solemn night, (for something I know not what kept me from sleep,)
 As the night advanced, and I saw on the rim of the west how full you were of woe,
 As I stood on the rising ground in the breeze in the cool transparent night,
 As I watch'd where you pass'd and was lost in the netherward black of the night,
 As my soul in its trouble dissatisfied sank, as where you sad orb,
 Concluded, dropt in the night, and was gone.

Sing on there in the swamp,
 O singer bashful and tender, I hear your notes, I hear your call,
 I hear, I come presently, I understand you,

But a moment I linger, for the lustrous star has detain'd me,
The star my departing comrade holds and detains me.

10

O how shall I warble myself for the dead one there I loved?
And how shall I deck my song for the large sweet soul that has gone?
And what shall my perfume be for the grave of him I love?

Sea-winds blown from east and west,
Blown from the Eastern sea and blown from the Western sea, till there on the prairies meeting,
These and with these and the breath of my chant,
I'll perfume the grave of him I love.

11

O what shall I hang on the chamber walls?
And what shall the pictures be that I hang on the walls,
To adorn the burial-house of him I love?
Pictures of growing spring and farms and homes,
With the Fourth-month eve at sundown, and the gray smoke lucid and bright,
With floods of the yellow gold of the gorgeous, indolent, sinking sun, burning, expanding the air,
With the fresh sweet herbage under foot, and the pale green leaves of the trees prolific,
In the distance the flowing glaze, the breast of the river, with a wind-dapple here and there,
With ranging hills on the banks, with many a line against the sky, and shadows,
And the city at hand, with dwellings so dense, and stacks of chimneys,
And all the scenes of life and the workshops, and the workmen homeward returning.

12

Lo, body and soul—this land,
My own Manhattan with spires, and the sparkling and hurrying tides, and the ships,
The varied and ample land, the South and the North in the light, Ohio's shores and flashing Missouri,
And ever the far-spreading prairies cover'd with grass and corn.

Lo, the most excellent sun so calm and haughty,
The violet and purple morn with just-felt breezes,
The gentle soft-born measureless light,
The miracle spreading bathing all, the fulfill'd noon,
The coming eve delicious, the welcome night and the stars,
Over my cities shining all, enveloping man and land.

13

Sing on, sing on you gray-brown bird,
Sing from the swamps, the recesses, pour your chant from the bushes,
Limitless out of the dusk, out of the cedars and pines.
Sing on dearest brother, warble your reedy song,
Loud human song, with voice of uttermost woe.

O liquid and free and tender!
 O wild and loose to my soul—O wondrous singer!
 You only I hear—yet the star holds me, (but will soon depart,)
 Yet the lilac with mastering odor holds me.

14

Now while I sat in the day and look'd forth,
 In the close of the day with its light and the fields of spring, and the farmers preparing their crops,
 In the large unconscious scenery of my land with its lakes and forests,
 In the heavenly aerial beauty, (after the perturb'd winds and the storms,) Under the arching heavens of the afternoon swift passing, and the voices of children and women,
 The many-moving sea-tides, and I saw the ships how they sail'd,
 And the summer approaching with richness, and the fields all busy with labor,
 And the infinite separate houses, how they all went on, each with its meals and minutia of daily usages,
 And the streets how their throbings throb'd, and the cities pent—lo, then and there,
 Falling upon them all and among them all, enveloping me with the rest,
 Appear'd the cloud, appear'd the long black trail,
 And I knew death, its thought, and the sacred knowledge of death.

Then with the knowledge of death as walking one side of me,
 And the thought of death close-walking the other side of me,
 And I in the middle as with companions, and as holding the hands of companions,
 I fled forth to the hiding receiving night that talks not,
 Down to the shores of the water, the path by the swamp in the dimness,
 To the solemn shadowy cedars and ghostly pines so still.

And the singer so shy to the rest receiv'd me,
 The gray-brown bird I know receiv'd us comrades three,
 And he sang the carol of death, and a verse for him I love.

From deep secluded recesses,
 From the fragrant cedars and the ghostly pines so still,
 Came the carol of the bird.

And the charm of the carol rapt me
 As I held as if by their hands my comrades in the night,
 And the voice of my spirit tallied the song of the bird.

*Come lovely and soothing death,
 Undulate round the world, serenely arriving, arriving,
 In the day, in the night, to all, to each,
 Sooner or later delicate death.*

*Prais'd be the fathomless universe,
 For life and joy, and for objects and knowledge curious,
 And for love, sweet love—but praise! praise! praise!
 For the sure-enwinding arms of cool-enfolding death.*

*Dark mother always gliding near with soft feet,
Have none chanted for thee a chant of fullest welcome?
Then I chant it for thee, I glorify thee above all,
I bring thee a song that when thou must indeed come, come unfalteringly.*

*Approach strong deliveress,
When it is so, when thou hast taken them I joyously sing the dead,
Lost in the loving floating ocean of thee,
Laved in the flood of thy bliss O death.*

*From me to thee glad serenades,
Dances for thee I propose saluting thee, adornments and feastings for thee,
And the sights of the open landscape and the high-spread sky we fitting,
And life and the fields, and the huge and thoughtful night.*

*The night in silence under many a star,
The ocean shore and the husky whispering wave whose voice I know,
And the soul turning to thee O vast and well-veil'd death,
And the body gratefully nestling close to thee.*

*Over the tree-tops I float thee a song,
Over the rising and sinking waves, over the myriad fields and the prairies wide
Over the dense-pack'd cities all and the teeming wharves and ways,
I float this carol with joy, with joy to thee O death.*

To the tally of my soul, 15
Loud and strong kept up the gray-brown bird,
With pure deliberate notes spreading filling the night.

Loud in the pines and cedars dim,
Clear in the freshness moist and the swamp-perfume,
And I with my comrades there in the night

While my sight that was bound in my eyes unclosed,
As to long panoramas of visions.

And I saw askant the armies,
I saw as in noiseless dreams hundreds of battle-flags,
Borne through the smoke of the battles and pierc'd with missiles I saw them,
And carried hither and yon through the smoke, and torn and bloody,
And at last but a few shreds left on the staffs, (and all in silence,)
And the staffs all splinter'd and broken.

I saw battle-corpses, myriads of them,
And the white skeletons of young men, I saw them,
I saw the débris and débris of all the slain soldiers of the war,
But I saw they were not as was thought,
They themselves were fully at rest, they suffer'd not,
The living remain'd and suffer'd, the mother suffer'd,
And the wife and the child and the musing comrade suffer'd,
And the armies that remain'd suffer'd.

16

Passing the visions, passing the night,
Passing, unloosing the hold of my comrades' hands,

Passing the song of the hermit bird and the tallying song of my soul,
 Victorious song, death's outlet song, yet varying ever-altering song,
 As low and wailing, yet clear the notes, rising and falling, flooding the night,
 Sadly sinking and fainting, as warning and warning, and yet again bursting with joy,

Covering the earth and filling the spread of the heaven,
 As that powerful psalm in the night I heard from recesses,
 Passing, I leave thee lilac with heart-shaped leaves,
 I leave thee there in the dooryard, blooming, returning with spring.

I cease from my song for thee,
 From my gaze on thee in the west, fronting the west, communing with thee,
 O comrade lustrous with silver face in the night.

Yet each to keep and all, retrievements out of the night,
 The song, the wondrous chant of the gray-brown bird,
 And the tallying chant, the echo arous'd in my soul,
 With the lustrous and drooping star with the countenance full of woe,
 With the holders holding my hand nearing the call of the bird,
 Comrades mine and I in the midst, and their memory ever to keep, for the dead I loved so well,
 For the sweetest, wisest soul of all my days and lands—and this for his dear sake,
 Lilac and star and bird twined with the chant of my soul,
 There in the fragrant pines and the cedars dusk and dim.

O CAPTAIN! MY CAPTAIN!

O Captain! my Captain! our fearful trip is done,
 The ship has weather'd every rack, the prize we sought is won,
 The port is near, the bells I hear, the people all exulting,
 While follow eyes the steady keel, the vessel grim and daring;

But O heart! heart! heart!

O the bleeding drops of red,
 Where on the deck my Captain lies,
 Fallen cold and dead.

O Captain! my Captain! rise up and hear the bells;
 Rise up—for you the flag is flung—for you the bugle trills,
 For you bouquets and ribbon'd wreaths—for you the shores a-crowding,
 For you they call, the swaying mass, their eager faces turning;

Here Captain! dear father!

The arm beneath your head!
 It is some dream that on the deck,
 You've fallen cold and dead.

My Captain does not answer, his lips are pale and still,
 My father does not feel my arm, he has no pulse nor will,
 The ship is anchor'd safe and sound, its voyage closed and done,
 From fearful trip the victor ship comes in with object won;

Exult O shores, and ring O bells!

But I with mournful tread,
 Walk the deck my Captain lies,
 Fallen cold and dead.

AFTER THE SUPPER AND TALK

After the supper and talk—after the day is done,
 As a friend from friends his final withdrawal prolonging,
 Good-by and Good-by with emotional lips repeating,
 (So hard for his hand to release those hands—no more will they meet,
 No more for communion of sorrow and joy, of old and young,
 A far-stretching journey awaits him, to return no more,)
 Shunning, postponing severance—seeking to ward off the last word ever so little,
 E'en at the exit-door turning—charges superfluous calling back—e'en as he descends the steps,
 Something to eke out a minute additional—shadows of nightfall deepening,
 Farewells, messages lessening—dimmer the forthgoer's visage and form,
 Soon to be lost for aye in the darkness—loth, O so loth to depart!
 Garrulous to the very last.

THE LAST INVOCATION

At the last, tenderly,
 From the walls of the powerful fortress'd house,
 From the clasp of the knitted locks, from the keep of the well-closed doors,
 Let me be wafted.

Let me glide noiselessly forth;
 With the key of softness unlock the locks—with a whisper,
 Set ope the doors O soul.

Tenderly—be not impatient,
 (Strong is your hold O mortal flesh, Strong is your hold O love.)

Emily Dickinson

EMILY (ELIZABETH<sup>1</sup>) DICKINSON was born in Amherst, Massachusetts, December 10, 1830. Her life was, except for a circumstance which has caused much speculation and a controversy among her biographers, bare of outward event. She died in the house in which she was born; after she was twenty-six she rarely left it. Her childhood had the ordinary uneventful events common to other children in Amherst which at that time was so remote that, only a few years before, her mother's dower had been brought to the town by a team of oxen. Her family was not quite like other families; it was a distillation of all that was New England, a synthesis and refinement of its reticence and high thinking. A contemporary, Samuel G. Ward, commented shrewdly, "We came to this country to think our own thoughts with nobody to binder. We conversed with our own souls till we lost the art of communicating with other people. . . . It was awfully high but awfully lonesome. . . . If the gift of articulateness was not denied, you had Channing, Emerson, Hawthorne, a stupendous example, and many others. Mostly, it was denied, and became a family fate. This is where Emily Dickinson comes in. She was the articulate inarticulate."

Emily Dickinson's father, Edward Dickinson, was a lawyer who was nominated for the office of Lieutenant Governor (which he declined) and one of the town's most influential men. Emily adored him. In the Life and Letters of Emily Dickinson Martha Dickinson Bianchi, Emily's niece, quotes her as saying, "If father is asleep on the sofa the house is full." At sixteen she formed a close friendship with a girl who visited Amherst and later married her brother Austin (the "sister Sue" of The Single Hound) and who disputed with Lavinia the belated honor of being Emily's confidante. At seventeen Emily entered South Hadley Female Seminary, disliked it intensely, grew homesick, rebelled at the extremities of its Puritanism and, on one occasion, packed her bags and took the stage home. From eighteen to twenty-three she was, according to her first biographer, "a social creature in the highest sense."

When she was twenty-three she spent some weeks in Washington with her father who was in Congress for two terms. On the return to Amherst Emily visited in Philadelphia and met the Reverend Charles Wadsworth—a meeting which, according to one of her biographers, determined not only the course of her life but the character of her poetry. As late as 1929 Mme. Bianchi (Sue's daughter) wrote, "Even now, after the many slow years she has been removed from us in the body, her spirit hinders the baring of that chapter which has been so universally misunderstood." Nothing could have done more to further the misunderstanding; it provoked speculation, inspired the very gossip it purported to evade, and placed the emphasis on a puzzle rather than on the poetry.

But this was part of a posthumous wrangle from which Emily Dickinson was mercifully spared. The known facts are these: After 1856 she immured herself in the family mansion. She was rarely seen even in the house except as a figure vanishing ghostly down a corridor; she loved music, but refused to come in the parlor where it was played, and remained seated, out of view, in the hall. She developed certain idiosyncrasies: was an indefatigable letter-writer but had a congenital prejudice against addressing her notes and got others to do this for her; invariably dressed in white, but refused to be "fitted," her sister performing this task for her; sent perennial roots and cookies with cryptic lines to neighbors and even to children, and became, in short, the village oddity. She died of Bright's disease, May 15, 1886, in her fifty-sixth year.

Thus the flat physical data of the woman. The poet made her appearance only after her death. During her lifetime four of her poems had been published—through no desire of her own. She never cared to see her emotions in print; "she habitually concealed her mind, like her person, from all but a very few friends," wrote Higginson. Even more deeply than Heine she might have cried, "Aus meinen grossen Schmerzen mach ich die kleinen Lieder"—and these brief, almost telegraphic revelations tucked away in boxes and hidden in bureau drawers have outlasted the more pretentious writing of a century. After Emily's death her executors were amazed at the amount of material which she had left. More than twelve hundred poems were unearthed, of which many are still unpublished. "Sister Sue" had written a tribute to Emily in the town paper, but it was upon Lavinia that the burden fell. Lavinia assumed it. She knew her limitations, but she knew, or at least surmised, the greatness of which she was guardian. She called upon her friends Mabel Loomis Todd and Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Mrs. Todd began to copy the poems, and not only to copy but to edit them, for Emily usually appended a list of alternative words and it was Mrs. Todd who had to decide which word should appear as Emily's choice. In November, 1890, the first volume of the Poems of Emily Dickinson appeared with an introduction by Thomas Wentworth Higginson. It has been supposed that these spontaneous illuminations, so different from the politely prepared verse of the day, fell on barren ground. The opposite is true. Though there were many scoffers and parodists, critics were not slow to see the essential quality—a Blake-like purity combined with a most un-Puritan pertness—readers responded, and six editions were printed in as many weeks. A year later Poems of Emily Dickinson—Second Series (1891) appeared, again edited by Mabel Loomis Todd and Thomas Wentworth Higginson. In 1893 the first Letters of Emily Dickinson was edited by Mrs. Todd, incorporated by Mme. Bianchi in her later volume, and revised and enlarged in 1931, the original two volumes being an invaluable mine of source material. In 1896 Mrs. Todd alone was responsible for Poems—Third Series.

The public taste changed; for thirty years little was heard of Emily Dickinson; her Letters went out of print, the publishers thought so little of them that they did not even renew the copyright. The "authorities" contained only slighting references to her or none at all. One of the encyclopedias (The New International) decided that her lyrics were "striking, but deficient in form"; the Britannica, as late as 1926, failed to mention her name except as a cross-reference, omitting her entirely in the Index.

In 1914 Mme. Bianchi prepared a further volume, The Single Household, but, though the reception was cordial, it was by no means overwhelming. An occasional article appeared, showing the poet's "lack of control" or, beneath a cover of condescension, ridiculing her "hit-or-miss grammar, sterile rhythms, and appalling rhymes." A devotee here and there defended the quaint charm of her use of assonance and half-rhyming vowels. Her audience grew, but gradually. Suddenly, in 1924, Emily Dickinson became a figure of international importance. Almost forty years after her death her name became a poetic shibboleth when in one year there were published Martha Dickinson Bianchi's The Life and Letters of Emily Dickinson, the first collected Complete Poems (a misnomer as it turned out to be), and the first English compilation, Selected Poems of Emily Dickinson, edited with a penetrating preface by Conrad Aiken.

The enthusiasm attending the triple appearance was unprecedented. Martin Armstrong, the English poet, said, "Mr. Aiken calls Emily Dickinson's poetry 'perhaps the finest by a woman in the English language.' I quarrel only with his 'perhaps.'" Nor were other plaudits less vociferous. "A feminine Blake," "an epigrammatic Walt Whitman," "a New England mystic," were a few of the characterizations fastened upon her. Other appraisals sought to "interpret" her involved but seldom obscure verses in the light of the "mystery" of her life. But "The Amherst Nun" would have repudiated the amateur psychoanalysts as vigorously as she, whose verses and letters brim with mischievous fancy, would have laughed at their epithets.

In 1929 there was published another generous collection of "undiscovered" or "withheld" poems, Further Poems of Emily Dickinson, edited by Martha Dickinson

Bianchi and Alfred Leete Hampson. There were one hundred and seventy-six hitherto unpublished pieces, and their clear beauty as well as mysterious appearance, all too vaguely explained, caused something of a furore. The excitement increased in 1930, the centenary of Emily Dickinson's birth. A new volume, Unpublished Poems by Emily Dickinson, appeared toward the end of 1935.

In the centenary year three new biographies appeared: Emily Dickinson: The Human Background by Josephine Pollitt, The Life and Mind of Emily Dickinson by Genevieve Taggard, and Emily Dickinson: Friend and Neighbor by Macgregor Jenkins. Jenkins' little book concerned itself chiefly with his boyhood memories; it was amiable and undistinguished. It was with the two other full-size volumes that interpretation grew fabulous and legend-making ran amok. Had someone written a dispassionate authoritative life immediately after Emily Dickinson's death this could not have happened; had Mme. Bianchi been more explicit it could have been avoided. But Mme. Bianchi chose to tell a vague story vaguely and helped swell the growing flood of conjecture. She spread the now familiar tale of Emily's "lover" in her chapter "The End of Peace." Mme. Bianchi told of the "fateful" visit to Philadelphia, of an encounter with a man already married—rumor had not scrupled to repeat the name of the Reverend Charles Wadsworth—of Emily's refusal to deviate from "her high sense of duty" and be "the inevitable destruction of another woman's life," of a precipitate flight back to Amherst, of a pursuit by the reckless lover, of a last agonized abnegation, denying herself not only to her lover but to the world. In Emily Dickinson Face to Face (1932) Mme. Bianchi amplified the account, became more specific, and supplied further valuable details, proving among other things that Emily's "dissonant" rhymes were not accidental but calculated.

The other two biographies betrayed far wilder attempts to supply "the missing chapter" and identify the man who prompted the love poems. Josephine Pollitt seized upon a scrap of a letter written by Higginson, and concluded that Emily's secret lover was Edward Bissell Hunt, the husband of the talented author Helen Hunt (Jackson), who happened to be Emily's closest friend. This theory was used as the basis of a drama, Brittle Heaven, by Frederick J. Pohl and Vincent York, produced in 1934, a more theatrical if less literary structure than Susan Glaspell's earlier Alison's House, a play based on the posthumous publication of the poems, which won the Pulitzer Prize for 1932.

Genevieve Taggard in her sensitive though over-written study discovered an undergraduate who "conditioned" Emily and her work. He was George Gould, one of the Indicator staff at Amherst College, and Miss Taggard believes Emily was engaged to him but that her father, a fire-breathing patriarch, opposed the union in true Old Testament New England style; whereupon Emily refused the young man, dressed in white, and dismissed him from her life—except for a prolonged secret correspondence, which has never been discovered—forever.

All the theories are possible. But there are others equally plausible. It might be suggested that there was no love story at all—none, that is, in the sense of a mutual rapproit. It was an age of rhetoric. Male friends wrote effusively to each other; Emily herself used the word "love" indiscriminately. Whoever it was that captured Emily's regard may have been quite unconscious of it. He may have been impressed—and a bit puzzled—by the girl's crisp rejoinders, but he probably soon forgot the plain girl with her fancy phrases. It may have been nothing to him; to Emily it was All.

This, too, is conjecture. And all of it tends to belittle the poetry by a probing of the person; so lengthy a concern about the "mystery" in Emily's life obscures the mastery of her work. For mastery it is. The seal of genius, that unmistakable insignia, is on everything she wrote. Here is that inimitable idiom, playful yet profound; here are the rapid ascent of images and the sudden swoop of immensities, the keen epithet that cuts to the deepest layer of consciousness, and the paradox on whose point innumerable angels dance. She is Blake one moment, Vaughan the next, then Jonathan Edwards, and herself all the time. Emotion, idea, and words are not marshaled in their usual order; they spring simultaneously, inevitably, one including the other. Here is the effect—never the affectation—of emotion and its enveloping phrase.

More fully than her biographers Emily Dickinson told the secret of her love, her first rebellious impulse, her inner denial, her resignation, her assured waiting for reunion in Eternity. There is little to add except meaningless names and irrelevant street numbers.

I took one draught of life,
I'll tell you what I paid,
Precisely an existence—
The market-price, they said.

They weighed me dust by dust,
They balanced film with film,
Then handed me my being's worth—
A single dram of Heaven.

The poetry of Emily Dickinson courts criticism and defies it. (An interesting discussion of her syntactical peculiarities, A Study of Unusual Verb Constructions in the Poems of Emily Dickinson by Grace B. Sherrer, may be found in the quarterly American Literature for March, 1935.) That her verses were sometimes erratic, half-done, and thrown off in the heat of creation is self-evident. But, in the great majority of her poems, the leap of thought is so daring, the idea so provocative, that passages which, in a smaller spirit, would be merely pretty or audacious conceits become snatches of revelation. Is it a flippancy or an anguished cry when, robbed by Life, she stands "a beggar before the door of God," and confronts Him with "Burglar, barker, father?" Is it anything less than Olympian satire when, asking God to accept "the supreme iniquity," she declares:

We apologize to Thee
For Thine own duplicity.

Beauty, Love, Justice—these were no abstractions to her, but entities, weights and measures, which the architect had failed to use perfectly. She sought the Builder not to commend but to question Him. Emily argued, upbraided, accused Creation; she recognized an angel only when she wrestled with him. Paradox was her native element.

Her gnomic imagery was tremendous in implication, and her range is far greater than a first reading reveals. Although the poet often indulged herself by retreating into a style cryptic and wayward, her tiny quatrains are lavish with huge ideas and almost overpowering figures. She speaks of music as "the silver strife"; she sees the railway train "lap the miles and lick the valleys up"; she speaks ironically of splitting the lark to find the music "bulb after bulb in silver rolled"; she pictures the thunder crumbling "like a stuff" while the lightning "skipped like mice"; she glimpses evening as "the house-wife in the west" sweeping the sunset "with many colored brooms"; she asks "who laid the rainbow piers." Pondering on the power of words, she meditates:

Could mortal lip divine
The undeveloped freight
Of a delivered syllable,
'Twould crumble with the weight.

Her lightest phrases bear the accent of finality. Without striving to be clever she achieves one startling epigram after another; no poet ever existed with a more aphoristic mind. "Denial is the only fact received by the denied." "At leisure is the soul that gets a staggering blow." "Renunciation is the choosing against itself." "Longing is like the seed that wrestles in the ground."

Her letters, sometimes marred with affectations, have an unpredictable way of turning about their subject; they combine the impish with the mystical; they announce tremendous things in an offhand tone of voice. Few definitions of poetry give us the sense of poetry as sharply as her informal:

"If I read a book and it makes my whole body so cold no fire can ever warm me, I know it is poetry. If I feel physically as if the top of my head were taken off, I know this is poetry. These are the only ways I know it."

Are there no reservations? In the midst of her telegraphic concisions—all sparks and flashes—does one never miss the long line, the sustained breath? She lived in metaphor, and the terse luxuriance of her figures—the impulse to point every adjective—has had an unhappy effect on most of her admirers, an effect of pretty artifice. Worse still is her habit of acting coy among the immensities. She is overfond of playing the spoiled, "old-fashioned, naughty child"—a little girl who sits in the lap of Deity and tweaks His beard and asks God coyly to lift her over the stile, an imperious child for whose success guns should be fired at sea, for a glimpse of whom saints should run to windows and seraphs swing their snowy hats. The impulse to pirouette before the mirror of her soul has already had its result in hundreds of young "female poets" (Griswold's phrase) who, lacking their model's intensities, have succeeded only in being verbally arresting and "cute."

A critical appraisal does not have to be a condemnatory one, but it must steer a course between the early ridicule and the present unreserved adulation. The undoubted charm does not necessarily extend to errors in grammar, nor does the taut, uncanny rightness of her epithets disguise her frequent failure to differentiate between inspiration and whim. Can one, need one, applaud all the eccentricities, the familiarities, the pertnesses? Banter may be refreshing, but is archness with God always delightful? And what is one to say of that more reprehensible spinsterly failing, archness to children?

And yet it is a tough and poetry-resisting soul which does not eventually succumb to her rhetoric, irregularities and all. Her vivacity covers self-consciousness and carries off her contradictions. Her swift condensations—surpassed by no writer of any age—win the most reluctant. One gasps at the way she packs huge ideas into an explosive quatrain (a living poet has called her verse "uncombusted meteors") fascinated by an utterance so paradoxical, so seemingly naive, so actually metaphysical. She may annoy us with her self-indulgent waywardness, but illumination is never far off; out of a smooth, even sentimental sky, comes a crackling telegram from God and, tucked in a phrase, the "imperial thunderbolt that scalps your naked soul."

The obvious defects and quaint irregularities have been accepted; they even have a charm of their own. The brilliance of her imagery blinds us to her overfrequent coyness and the overstressed self-pity which could allow the poet to call herself "Empress of Calvary." The consistency of her imperfections is, in itself, a kind of perfection. Her personal magic—a kind of super-observation—lives in such phrases as a dog's "belated feet, like intermittent plush," a humming bird whose flight is "a route of evanescence, a resonance of emerald," an engine "neighing like Boanerges," a mushroom whose whole career "is shorter than a snake's delay," the wind "tapping like a tired man."

What else, then, matters? Whatever the provocation, all that remains is the poetry. The much-sought but still unknown inspirer of the love poems may have been Wadsworth or Gould or Hunt—or Legion—but it is not he who is immortalized in her book; it is Emily. Though there are evocations of the vanished lover, we are never made to see him, hear him, realize his being, whereas we have (in the same poems) a complete projection of Emily, her heart, soul, and housekeeping, her books, birds, and influences, her bodily postures, tricks of thought, even her way of crossing the room and reading a letter.

Denied a public, even of one, Emily perfected her imperfections in secret. Lacking the partner, she played her game with herself. Yet, when all the biographies are considered and contrasted, possibly the most successful game was the one she played on the world. A solitary recluse who had the world in her garden; an escapist who summoned infinity with the trick of a forefinger and the crook of her mind. It is doubtful if, in spite of her geographical isolation, there was ever a less lonely woman. She who contained a universe did not need the world. Everything, whether seen or imagined, lived for her in full immediacy; all, she knew, existed only in thought. "Captivity's consciousness," she said, "so's liberty." In that rich and nimble consciousness she was always at home—and always free.

taste a liquor never brewed,
From tankards scooped in pearl;
Not all the vats upon the Rhine
Yield such an alcohol!

nebriate of air am I,
And debauchee of dew,
Reeling, through endless summer days,
From inns of molten blue.

When landlords turn the drunken bee
Out of the foxglove's door,
When butterflies renounce their drams,
shall but drink the more!

Till seraphs swing their snowy hats,
And saints to windows run,
To see the little tippler
Leaning against the sun!

A B I R D C A M E D O W N T H E W A L K

A bird came down the walk:
He did not know I saw;
He bit an angle-worm in halves
And ate the fellow, raw.

And then he drank a dew
From a convenient grass,
And then hopped sidewise to the wall
To let a beetle pass.

He glanced with rapid eyes
That hurried all abroad,—
They looked like frightened beads, I thought
He stirred his velvet head

Like one in danger; cautious,
I offered him a crumb,
And he unrolled his feathers
And rowed him softer home

Than oars divide the ocean,
Too silver for a seam,
Or butterflies, off banks of noon,
Leap, splashless, as they swim.

ELYSIUM IS AS FAR

Elysium is as far as to
The very nearest room,
If in that room a friend await
Felicity or doom.

What fortitude the soul contains,
That it can so endure
The accent of a coming foot,
The opening of a door.

I NEVER SAW A MOOR

I never saw a moor,
I never saw the sea;
Yet know I how the heather looks,
And what a wave must be.

I never spoke with God,
Nor visited in Heaven;
Yet certain am I of the spot
As if the chart were given.

I NEVER LOST AS MUCH

I never lost as much but twice,
And that was in the sod;
Twice have I stood a beggar
Before the door of God!

Angels, twice descending,
Reimbursed my store.
Burglar, banker, father,
I am poor once more!

INDIAN SUMMER

These are the days when birds come back,
A very few, a bird or two,
To take a backward look.

These are the days when skies put on
The old, old sophistries of June,—
A blue and gold mistake.

Oh, fraud that cannot cheat the bee,
Almost thy plausibility
Induces my belief,

Till ranks of seeds their witness bear,
And softly through the altered air
Hurries a timid leaf!

Oh, sacrament of summer days,
Oh, last communion in the haze,
Permit a child to join,

Thy sacred emblems to partake,
Thy consecrated bread to break,
Taste thine immortal wine!

I DIED FOR BEAUTY

I died for beauty, but was scarce
Adjusted in the tomb,
When one who died for truth was lain
In an adjoining room.

He questioned softly why I failed?
“For beauty,” I replied.
“And I for truth,—the two are one;
We brethren are,” he said.

And so, as kinsmen met a night,
We talked between the rooms,
Until the moss had reached our lips
And covered up our names.

THE SKY IS LOW

The sky is low, the clouds are mean,
A traveling flake of snow
Across a barn or through a rut
Debates if it will go.

A narrow wind complains all day
How someone treated him.
Nature, like us, is sometimes caught
Without her diadem.

MYSTERIES

The murmur of a bee
A witchcraft yieldeth me.
If any ask me why,
'Twere easier to die
Than tell.

The red upon the hill
Taketh away my will;
If anybody sneer,
Take care, for God is here,
That's all.

The breaking of the day
Addeth to my degree;
If any ask me how,
Artist, who drew me so,
Must tell!

I LIKE TO SEE IT LAP
THE MILES

I like to see it lap the miles,
And lick the valleys up,
And stop to feed itself at tanks;
And then, prodigious, step

Around a pile of mountains,
And, supercilious, peer
In shanties by the sides of roads;
And then a quarry pare

To fit its sides, and crawl between,
Complaining all the while
In horrid, hooting stanza;
Then chase itself down hill

And neigh like Boanerges; .
Then, punctual as a star,
Stop—docile and omnipotent—
At its own stable door.

THE SOUL SELECTS

The soul selects her own society,
Then shuts the door;

On her divine majority
Obtrude no more.

Unmoved, she notes the chariots pausing
At her low gate;
Unmoved, an emperor is kneeling
Upon her mat.

I've known her from an ample nation
Choose one;
Then close the valves of her attention
Like stone.

MY LIFE CLOSED TWICE BEFORE ITS CLOSE

My life closed twice before its close;
It yet remains to see
If Immortality unveil
A third event to me,

So huge, so hopeless to conceive,
As these that twice befell,
Parting is all we know of heaven,
And all we need of hell.

THE HEART ASKS PLEASURE
FIRST

The heart asks pleasure first;
And then, excuse from pain;
And then, those little anodynes
That deaden suffering;

And then, to go to sleep;
And then, if it should be
The will of its Inquisitor,
The liberty to die.

I CANNOT LIVE WITH YOU

I cannot live with you.
It would be life,
And life is over there
Behind the shelf

The sexton keeps the key to,
Putting up
Our life, his porcelain,
Like a cup

Discarded of the housewife,
Quaint or broken;
A newer Sèvres pleases,
Old ones crack.

I could not die with you,
For one must wait
To shut the other's gaze down,
You could not.

And I, could I stand by
And see you freeze,
Without my right of frost,
Death's privilege?

Nor could I rise with you,
Because your face
Would put out Jesus',
That new grace

Grow plain and foreign
On my homesick eye,
Except that you, than he Shone closer by.

They'd judge us—how?
For you served Heaven, you know,
Or sought to;
I could not,

Because you saturated sight,
And I had no more eyes
For sordid excellence
As Paradise.

And were you lost, I would be,
Though my name
Rang loudest
On the heavenly fame.

And were you saved,
And I condemned to be
Where you were not,
That self were hell to me.

So we must keep apart,
You there, I here,
With just the door ajar
That oceans are,
And prayer,
And that pale sustenance,
Despair!

OF COURSE I PRAYED

Of course I prayed—
And did God care?
He cared as much as
On the air
A bird had stamped her foot
And cried "Give me!"

My reason, life,
I had not had, but for yourself.
'Twere better charity
To leave me in the atom's tomb,
Merry and nought and gay and numb,
Than this smart misery.

THERE IS NO FRIGATE LIKE
A BOOK

There is no frigate like a book
To take us lands away,
Nor any coursers like a page
Of prancing poetry.
This traverse may the poorest take
Without oppress of toll;
How frugal is the chariot
That bears a human soul!

I HAD BEEN HUNGRY ALL
THE YEARS

I had been hungry all the years;
My noon had come to dine;
I, trembling, drew the table near,
And touched the curious wine.

'Twas this on tables I had seen,
When turning, hungry, lone,
I looked in windows, for the wealth
I could not hope to own.

I did not know the ample bread;
'Twas so unlike the crumb
The birds and I had often shared
In Nature's dining-room.

The plenty hurt me, 'twas so new,—
Myself felt ill and odd,
As berry of a mountain bush
Transplanted to the road.

Nor was I hungry; so I found
That hunger was a way
Of persons outside windows,
The entering takes away.

I HEARD A FLY BUZZ WHEN I DIED

I heard a fly buzz when I died;
The stillness round my form
Was like the stillness in the air
Between the heaves of storm.

The eyes beside had wrung them dry,
And breaths were gathering sure
For that last onset, when the king
Be witnessed in his power.

I willed my keepsakes, signed away
What portion of me I
Could make assignable,—and then
There interposed a fly,

With blue, uncertain, stumbling buzz,
Between the light and me;
And then the windows failed, and then
I could not see to see.

THERE'S A CERTAIN SLANT
OF LIGHT

There's a certain slant of light,
On winter afternoons,
That oppresses, like the weight
Of cathedral tunes.

Heavenly hurt it gives us;
We can find no scar,
But internal difference
Where the meanings are.

None may teach it anything,
'Tis the seal, despair,—
An imperial affliction
Sent us of the air.

When it comes, the landscape listens,
Shadows hold their breath;
When it goes, 'tis like the distance
On the look of death.

I MEASURE EVERY GRIEF I MEET

I measure every grief I meet
With analytic eyes;
I wonder if it weighs like mine,
Or has an easier size.

I wonder if they bore it long,
Or did it just begin?
I could not tell the date of mine,
It feels so old a pain.

I wonder if it hurts to live,
And if they have to try,
And whether, could they choose between,
They would not rather die.

I wonder if when years have piled—
Some thousands—on the cause
Of early hurt, if such a lapse
Could give them any pause;

Or would they go on aching still
Through centuries above,
Enlightened to a larger pain
By contrast with the love.

The grieved are many, I am told;
The reason deeper lies,—
Death is but one and comes but once,
And only nails the eyes.

There's grief of want, and grief of cold,—
A sort they call "despair";
There's banishment from native eyes,
In sight of native air.

And though I may not guess the kind
Correctly, yet to me
A piercing comfort it affords
In passing Calvary,

To note the fashions of the cross,
Of those that stand alone,
Still fascinated to presume
That some are like my own.

THE BRAIN IS WIDER THAN
THE SKY

The brain is wider than the sky,
For, put them side by side,

The one the other will include
With ease, and you beside.

The brain is deeper than the sea,
For, hold them, blue to blue,
The one the other will absorb,
As sponges, buckets do.

The brain is just the weight of God,
For, lift them, pound for pound,
And they will differ, if they do,
As syllable from sound.

BRING ME THE SUNSET IN A CUP

Bring me the sunset in a cup,
Reckon the morning's flagons up,
And say how many dew;
Tell me how far the morning leaps,
Tell me what time the weaver sleeps
Who spun the breadths of blue!

Write me how many notes there be
In the new robin's ecstasy
Among astonished boughs;
How many trips the tortoise makes,
How many cups the bee partakes,—
The debauchee of dews!

Also, who laid the rainbow's piers,
Also, who leads the docile spheres
By withes of supple blue?
Whose fingers string the stalactite,
Who counts the wampum of the night,
To see that none is due?

Who built this little Alban house
And shut the windows down so close
My spirit cannot see?
Who'll let me out some gala day,
With implements to fly away,
Passing pomposity?

THE TINT I CANNOT TAKE IS BEST

The tint I cannot take is best,
The color too remote
That I could show it in bazaar
A guinea at a sight—

EMILY DICKINSON

The fine impalpable array
That swaggers on the eye
Like Cleopatra's company
Repeated in the sky—

The moments of dominion
That happen on the Soul
And leave it with a discontent
Too exquisite to tell—

The eager look on landscapes
As if they just repressed
Some secret that was pushing,
Like chariots, in the breast—

The pleading of the Summer,
That other prank of snow
That covers mystery with tulle
For fear the squirrels know—

Their graspless manners mock us,
Until the cheated eye
Shuts arrogantly in the grave,
Another way to see.

I DREADED THAT FIRST ROBIN SO

I dreaded that first robin so,
But he is mastered now,
And I'm accustomed to him grown,—
He hurts a little, though.

I thought if I could only live
Till that first shout got by,
Not all pianos in the woods
Had power to mangle me.

I dared not meet the daffodils,
For fear their yellow gown
Would pierce me with a fashion
So foreign to my own.

I wished the grass would hurry,
So when 'twas time to see,
He'd be too tall, the tallest one
Could stretch to look at me.

I could not bear the bees should come,
I wished they'd stay away
In those dim countries where they go:
What word had they for me?

They're here, though; not a creature failed,
No blossom stayed away
In gentle deference to me,
A Queen of Calvary.

Each one salutes me as he goes,
And I my childish plumes
Lift, in bereaved acknowledgment
Of their unthinking drums. .

AFTER GREAT PAIN A FORMAL FEELING COMES

After great pain a formal feeling comes—
The nerves sit ceremonious like tombs;
The stiff heart questions—was it He that bore?
And yesterday—or centuries before?

The feet mechanical go round
A wooden way,
Of ground or air of Ought,
Regardless grown;
A quartz contentment like a stone.

This is the hour of lead
Remembered if outlived
As freezing persons recollect
The snow—
First chill, then stupor, then
The letting go.

A CEMETERY

This quiet Dust was Gentlemen and Ladies,
And Lads and Girls;
Was laughter and ability and sighing,
And frocks and curls.

This passive place a Summer's nimble mansion,
Where Bloom and Bees
Fulfilled their Oriental Circuit,
Then ceased like these.

AMPLE MAKE THIS BED

Ample make this bed,
Make this bed with awe;
In it wait till judgment break
Excellent and fair.

Be its mattress straight,
Be its pillow round;
Let no sunrise' yellow noise
Interrupt this ground.

ALTHOUGH I PUT AWAY HIS LIFE

Although I put away his life,
An ornament too grand
For forehead low as mine to wear,
This might have been the hand

That sowed the flowers he preferred,
Or smoothed a homely pain,
Or pushed a pebble from his path,
Or played his chosen tune

On lute the least, the latest,
But just his ear could know
That whatsoe'er delighted it
I never would let go.

The foot to bear his errand
A little boot I know
Would leap abroad like antelope
With just the grant to do.

His weariest commandment
A sweeter to obey
Than "Hide and Seek," or skip to flutes,
Or all day chase the bee.

Your servant, Sir, will weary,
The surgeon will not come,
The world will have its own to do,
The dust will vex your fame

The cold will force your tightest door
Some February day,
But say my apron bring the sticks
To make your cottage gay,

That I may take that promise
To Paradise with me—
To teach the angels avarice
Your kiss first taught to me!

THE WORLD FEELS DUSTY

The world feels dusty
When we stop to die;
We want the dew then,
Honors taste dry.

Flags vex a dying face,
But the least fan
Stirred by a friend's hand
Cools like the rain.

Mine be the ministry
When thy thirst comes,
Dews of thyself to fetch
And holy balms.

LIGHTLY STEPPED A YELLOW STAR

Lightly stepped a yellow star
To its lofty place,
Loosed the Moon her silver hat
From her lustral face.

All of evening softly lit
As an astral hall—
“Father,” I observed to Heaven,
“You are punctual!”

GO NOT TOO NEAR A HOUSE
OF ROSE

Go not too near a house of rose,
The depredation of a breeze
Or inundation of a dew
Alarm its walls away;
Nor try to tie the butterfly;
Nor climb the bars of ecstasy.
In insecurity to lie
Is joy's insuring quality.

I RECKON, WHEN I COUNT AT ALL

I reckon, when I count at all,
First Poets—then the Sun—
Then Summer—then the Heaven of God—
And then the list is done.
But looking back—the first so seems
To comprehend the whole—
The others look a needless show,
So I write Poets—All.
Their summer lasts a solid year,
They can afford a sun
The East would deem extravagant,
And if the final Heaven
Be beautiful as they disclose
To those who trust in them,
It is too difficult a grace
To justify the dream.

BECAUSE THAT YOU ARE GOING

Because that you are going
And never coming back
And I, however absolute
May overlook your track

Because that breath is final,
However first it be
This instant be suspended
Above Mortality.

Significance that each has lived
The other to detect
Discovery not God himself
Could now annihilate.

Eternity, Presumption
The instant I perceive
That you, who were existence
Yourself forgot to live.

The “Life that is” will then have been
A thing I never knew,
As Paradise fictitious
Until the Realm of you.

The “Life that is to be,” to me
A Residence too plain
Unless in my Redeemer’s Face
I recognize your own.

Of Immortality who doubts
He may exchange with me
Curtailed by your obscuring Face
Of Everything but He.

Of Heaven and Hell I also yield
The Right to reprehend
To whoso would commute this Face
For his less priceless Friend.

If "God is Love" as he admits
We think that he must be
Because he is a "jealous God"
He tells as certainly.

If "all is possible with him"
As he besides concedes,
He will refund as finally
Our confiscated Gods.

WHAT SOFT, CHERUBIC CREATURES

What soft, cherubic creatures
These gentlewomen are!
One would as soon assault a plush
Or violate a star.

Such dimity convictions,
A horror so refined
Of freckled human nature,
Of Deity ashamed,—

It's such a common glory,
A fisherman's degree!
Redemption, brittle lady,
Be so ashamed of thee.

BECAUSE I COULD NOT STOP FOR DEATH

Because I could not stop for Death,
He kindly stopped for me;
The carriage held but just ourselves
And Immortality.

We slowly drove, he knew no haste,
And I had put away
My labor, and my leisure too,
For his civility.

We passed the school where children played,
Their lessons scarcely done;
We passed the fields of gazing grain,
We passed the setting sun.

We paused before a house that seemed
A swelling on the ground;
The roof was scarcely visible,
The cornice but a mound.

Since then 'tis centuries; but each
Feels shorter than the day
I first surmised the horses' heads
Were toward eternity.

THE MOUNTAINS GROW UNNOTICED

The mountains grow unnoticed,
 Their purple figures rise
 Without attempt, exhaustion,
 Assistance or applause.

In their eternal faces
 The sun with broad delight
 Looks long—and last—and golden
 For fellowship at night.

TRUTH IS AS OLD AS GOD

Truth is as old as God,
 His twin identity—
 And will endure as long as He,
 A co-eternity,
 And perish on the day
 That He is borne away
 From mansion of the universe,
 A lifeless Deity.

John Hay

JOHN HAY was born October 8, 1838, in Salem, Indiana, graduated from Brown University in 1858 and was admitted to the Illinois bar a few years later. At nineteen, when he went back to Warsaw, the little Mississippi town where he had lived as a boy, he dreamed only of being a poet—a poet, it must be added, of the pleasantly conventional, transition type. But the Civil War was to disturb his mild fantasies. He went to the front and saw active service under General Hunter. He became private secretary to Lincoln, then major and assistant adjutant-general under General Gilmore, then a colonel by brevet, then secretary of the Legation at Paris, chargé d'affaires at Vienna and Secretary of Legation at Madrid.

His few vivid Pike County Ballads came more as a happy accident than as a deliberate creative effort. When Hay returned from Spain in 1870, bringing with him his Castilian Days, he still had visions of becoming an orthodox lyric poet. But he found everyone reading Bret Harte's short stories and the new expression of the rude West. He speculated upon the possibility of doing something similar, translating the characters into poetry. The result was the six racy ballads in a vein utterly different from everything Hay wrote before or after. The poet-politician seems to have regarded this series somewhat in the nature of light, extempore verse, belonging to a far lower plane than his serious publications; he talked about them reluctantly; he even hoped that these "diversions" would be forgotten. It is difficult to say whether this regret grew because Hay, loving the refinements of culture, at heart hated any suggestion of vulgarity, or because of a basic lack of courage—Hay having published his novel of labor unrest in the early 80's (The Breadwinners) anonymously.

The fact remains, his rhymes of Pike County have survived all his more "classical" lines. They served for a time as a fresh influence; they remain a creative accomplishment. "Banty Tim" is quoted not only for its own sake, but as an interesting anticipation of Kipling's "Gunga Din"; "Jim Bludso" was the first of a long line of dramatic "recitations."

Hay was in politics all the later part of his life, ranking as one of the most brilliant Secretaries of State the country has ever had. Under President Hayes he was ambassador to Great Britain. In collaboration with J. G. Nicolay he wrote a most authoritative and vivid life of Lincoln, a biography which was unequaled until Carl Sandburg's volumes. He died in 1905.

JIM BLUDSO OF THE PRAIRIE BELLE

Wall, no! I can't tell whar he lives,
    Be cause he don't live, you see;
Leastways, he's got out of the habit
    Of livin' like you and me.
Whar have you been for the last three year
    That you haven't heard folks tell
How Jimmy Bludso passed in his checks
    The night of the Prairie Belle?

He warn't no saint,—them engineers
    Is all pretty much alike,—
One wife in Natchez-under-the-Hill
    And another one here, in Pike;
A keerless man in his talk was Jim,
    And an awkward hand in a row,
But he never flunked, and he never lied,—
    I reckon he never knowed how.

And this was all the religion he had:
    To treat his engine well;
Never be passed on the river;
    To mind the pilot's bell;
And if ever the Prairie Belle took fire,
    A thousand times he swore,
He'd hold her nozzle agin the bank
    Till the last soul got ashore.

All boats has their day on the Mississip,
    And her day come at last,—
The Movastar was a better boat,
    But the Belle she wouldn't be passed.
And so she came tearin' along that night—
    The oldest craft on the line—
With a nigger squat on her safety-valve,
    And her furnace crammed, rosin and pine.

The fire bust out as she clar'd the bar,
    And burnt a hole in the night,
And quick as a flash she turned and made
    For that willer-bank on the right.
Thar was runnin' and cussin', but Jim yelled out,
    Over all the infernal roar,
"I'll hold her nozzle agin the bank
    Till the last galoot's ashore."

Through the hot, black breath of the burnin' boat
    Jim Bludso's voice was heard,
And they all had trust in his cussedness,
    And knowed he would keep his word.
And, sure's you're born, they all got off
    Afore the smokestacks fell,—
And Bludso's ghost went up alone
    In the smoke of the Prairie Belle.

He warn't no saint,—but at judgement
    I'd run my chance with Jim,
'Longside of some pious gentlemen
    That wouldn't shook hands with him.
He seen his duty, a dead-sure thing,—
    And went for it thar and then;
And Christ ain't a-goin' to be too hard
    On a man that died for men.

BANTY TIM

(Remarks of Sergeant Tulmon Joy to the White Man's Committee of Spunk Point, Illinois)

I reckon I git your drift, gents,—
    You 'low the boy sha'n't stay;

This is a white man's country;
 You're Democrats, you say;
 And whereas, and seein', and wherefore,
   The times bein' all out o' j'int,
 The nigger has got to mosey
   From the limits o' Spunkey P'int!

Let's reason the thing a minute:
 I'm an old-fashioned Democrat too,
 Though I laid my politics out o' the way
   For to keep till the war was through.
 But I come back here, allowin'
   To vote as I used to do,
 Though it gravels me like the devil to train
   Along o' sich fools as you.

Now dog my cats ef I kin see,
 In all the light of the day,
 What you've got to do with the question
   Ef Tim shill go or stay.
 And furder than that I give notice,
   Ef one of you tetches the boy,
 He kin check his trunks to a warmer clime
   Than he'll find in Illanoy.

' Why, blame your hearts, jest hear me!
   You know that ungodly day
 When our left struck Vicksburg Heights, how ripped
   And torn and tattered we lay.
 When the rest retreated I stayed behind,
   Fur reasons sufficient to me,—

With a rib caved in, and a leg on a strike,
   I sprawled on that damned glacee.

Lord! how the hot sun went for us,
   And br'iled and blistered and burned!
 How the Rebel bullets whizzed round us
   When a cuss in his death-grip turned!
 Till along toward dusk I seen a thing
   I couldn't believe for a spell:
 That nigger—that Tim—was a-crawlin' to me
   Through that fire-proof, gilt-edged hell!

The Rebels seen him as quick as me,
   And the bullets buzzed like bees;
 But he jumped for me, and shouldered me,
   Though a shot brought him once to his knees;
 But he staggered up, and packed me off,
   With a dozen stumbles and falls,
 Till safe in our lines he drapped us both,
   His black hide riddled with balls.

So, my gentle gazelles, thar's my answer,
   And here stays Banty Tim:
 He trumped Death's ace for me that day,
   And I'm not goin' back on him!
 You may rezoloot till the cows come home,
   But ef one of you tetches the boy,
 He'll wrastle his hash tonight in hell,
   Or my name's not Tilmon Joy!

Bret Harte

FRANCIS BRET HARTE was born August 25, 1839, at Albany, New York. (In certain quarters doubt is thrown on the date of his birth. One or two sources maintain that a compositor, upsetting a 6, made the "correct" date, 1836, "wrongly" 1839. However, practically all the encyclopedias and biographies agree upon 1839 as authentic.) His childhood was spent in various cities of the East. Late in 1853 his widowed mother went to California with a party of relatives, and two months later, when he was fifteen, Bret Harte and his sister followed. During the next few years he was engaged in school-teaching, typesetting, politics, mining and journalism, becoming editor of The Overland Monthly in San Francisco in 1868.

Harte's fame came suddenly. Late in the Sixties he had written a burlesque in rhyme of two Western gamblers trying to fleece a guileless Chinaman who claimed to know nothing about cards, but who, it turned out, was scarcely as innocent as he appeared. Harte, in the midst of writing serious poetry, had put the verses aside as too crude and trifling for publication. Some time later, just as The Overland Monthly was going to press, it was discovered that the form was one page short. Having nothing else on hand, Harte had these rhymes set up. Instead of passing unnoticed, the poem was quoted everywhere; it swept the West and captivated the East. When The Luck of Roaring Camp followed, Harte became not only a national but an international figure. England acclaimed him and The Atlantic Monthly paid him $10,000 to write for a year in his Pike County vein.

East and West Poems appeared in 1871; in 1872 Harte published an enlarged Poetical Works including many earlier pieces. His scores of short stories represent Harte at his best; "M'liss," "Tennessee's Partner," "The Outcast of Poker Flat"—these are the work of a lesser, transplanted Dickens. His novels are of minor importance; they are carelessly constructed, theatrically conceived.

His serious poetry has many of the faults of his prose. A melodramatic crudeness alternates with an equally exaggerated sentimentalism; even those verses not in dialect (like "What the Bullet Sang") suffer from defects of emphasis. But the occasional verse will remain to delight readers who rarely glance at Harte's other work except for documentation.

In 1872 Harte, encouraged by his success, returned to his native East; in 1878 he went to Germany as consul at Crefeld. Two years later he was transferred to Scotland and, after five years there, went to London, where he remained the rest of his life. Harte's later period remains mysteriously shrouded. He never came back to America, not even for a visit; he ceased to correspond with his family; he separated himself from all the most intimate associations of his early life. He died, suddenly, at Camberley, England, May 6, 1902.

"JIM"

Say there! P'raps
Some on you chaps
Might know Jim Wild?
Well,—no offense:
That ain't no sense
In gittin' riled!

Jim was my chum
Up on the Bar:
That's why I come
Down from up yar,
Lookin' for Jim.
Thank ye, sir! You
Ain't of that crew,—
Blest if you are!

Money? Not much:
That ain't my kind;
I ain't no such.
Rum? I don't mind,
Seein' it's you.

Well, this yer Jim,—
Did you know him?
Jes' 'bout your size;
Same kind of eyes;
Well, that is strange:
Why, it's two year
Since he came here,
Sick, for a change.

Well, here's to us:
Eh?
The h—— you say!
Dead?
That little cuss?

What makes you star',
You over thar?
Can't a man drop
's glass in yer shop
But you must r'ar?
It wouldn't take
D—d much to break
You and your bar.

Dead!
Poor—little—Jim!
Why, thar was me,
Jones, and Bob Lee,
Harry and Ben,—
No-account men:
Then to take him

Well, thar—Good-by.
No more, sir—I—
Eh?
What's that you say?
Why, dern it!—sho'—
No? Ycs! By Joe!
Sold!
Sold! Why, you limb.
You ornery,
Derned, old,
Long-legged Jim.

PLAIN LANGUAGE FROM TRUTHFUL JAMES
(Table Mountain, 1870)

Which I wish to remark,
And my language is plain,
That for ways that are dark
And for tricks that are vain,
The heathen Chinee is peculiar,
Which the same I would rise to explain.

Ah Sin was his name;
And I shall not deny,
In regard to the same,
What that name might imply;
But his smile it was pensive and childlike,
As I frequent remarked to Bill Nye.

It was August the third,
And quite soft was the skies;
Which it might be inferred
That Ah Sin was likewise;
Yet he played it that day upon William
And me in a way I despise.

Which we had a small game,
And Ah Sin took a hand:
It was Euchre. The same
He did not understand;
But he smiled as he sat by the table,
With a smile that was childlike and bland.

Yet the cards they were stocked
In a way that I grieve,
And my feelings were shocked
At the state of Nye's sleeve,
Which was stuffed full of aces and bowers,
And the same with intent to deceive.

But the hands that were played
By that heathen Chinee,
And the points that he made,
Were quite frightful to see,—
Till at last he put down a right bower,
Which the same Nye had dealt unto me!

Then I looked up at Nye,
And he gazed upon me;
And he rose with a sigh,
And said, "Can this be?
We are ruined by Chinese cheap labor,"—
And he went for that heathen Chinee.

In the scene that ensued
I did not take a hand,
But the floor it was strewed
Like the leaves on the strand
With the cards that Ah Sin had been hiding,
In the game "he did not understand."

In his sleeves, which were long,
He has twenty-four packs,—
Which was coming it strong,
Yet I state but the facts;
And we found on his nails, which were taper,
What is frequent in tapers,—that's wax.

Which is why I remark,
And my language is plain,
That for ways that are dark
And for tricks that are vain,
The heathen Chinee is peculiar,—
Which the same I am free to maintain.

WHAT THE BULLET SANG

O joy of creation,
To be!
O rapture, to fly
And be free!
Be the battle lost or won,
Though the smoke shall hide the sun,
I shall find my love, the one
Born for me!

I shall know him where he stands
 All alone,
 With the power in his hands
 Not o'erthrown;
 I shall know him by his face,
 By his godlike front and grace;
 I shall hold him for a space
 All my own!

It is he—O my love!
 So bold!
 It is I—all thy love
 Foretold!
 It is I—O love, what bliss!
 Dost thou answer to my kiss?
 O sweetheart! what is this
 Lieth there so cold?

THE AGED STRANGER

(An Incident of the Civil War)

"I was with Grant"—the stranger said;
 Said the farmer, "Say no more,
 But rest thee here at my cottage porch,
 For thy feet are weary and sore."

"I was with Grant"—the stranger said;
 Said the farmer, "Nay, no more.

I prithee sit at my frugal board,
 And eat of my humble store.

"How fares my boy,—my soldier boy,
 Of the old Ninth Army Corps?
 I warrant he bore him gallantly
 In the smoke and the battle's roar!"

"I know him not," said the aged man,
 "And, as I remarked before,
 I was with Grant"—"Nay, nay, I know,"
 Said the farmer, "say no more.

"He fell in battle,—I see, alas!
 Thou'dst smooth these tidings o'er.
 Nay, speak the truth, whatever it be,
 Though it rend my bosom's core."

"I cannot tell," said the aged man,
 "And should have remarked before,
 That I was with Grant,—in Illinois,—
 Three years before the war."

Then the farmer spake him never a word,
 But beat with his fist full sore
 That aged man, who had worked for Grant
 Three years before the war.

Joaquin Miller

JOAQUIN MILLER was, as he desired to be, a mysterious figure. The date of his birth is conjectural; even his name is a matter of doubt. However, from recent evidence—particularly the researches of Frank R. Reade—it seems safe to say that his name was originally Cincinnatus Hiner Miller: Cincinnatus, according to his brother, "for a certain Roman General (!) and mother named him Hiner for Dr. Hiner, who brought him into the world." Although Joaquin Miller claimed that his middle name was "Heine" and that his mother named him Heine because of her love for the German poet, there is proof that Miller adopted the Heine after he had heard of the author of Buch der Lieder. The date of his birth is also disputed. March tenth seems to be the favored day assigned to his entry into the world and, although 1839 has been advanced as the latest "definite" date, most biographers choose 1841 as the year in which Miller was born.

A few facts are indisputable. Miller was of mixed Dutch and Scotch stock, his father's father having been killed at Fort Meigs in the War of 1812. As Miller himself wrote (and this particular bit of biography has stood the scrutiny of his more exact commentators), "My cradle was a covered wagon, pointed west. I was born in a covered wagon, I am told, at or about the time it crossed the line dividing Indiana from Ohio." When Miller was twelve, his family left the mid-West with "two big heavily laden wagons, with eight yoke of oxen to each, a carriage and two horses for mother and baby sister, and a single horse for the three boys to ride." The distance covered in their cross-country exodus (they took a roundabout route to Oregon) was nearly three thousand miles and the time consumed was more than seven months.

At fifteen we find Miller living with the Indians as one of them; in 1859 (at the age of eighteen) he attends a mission-school "college" in Eugene, Oregon; between 1860 and 1865 he is express-messenger, editor of a pacifist newspaper that is suppressed for opposing the Civil War, lawyer and, occasionally, a poet. He holds a minor judgeship from 1866 to 1870.

His first book (Specimens) appears in 1868, his second (Joaquin et al., from which he took his name) in 1869. No response—not even from "the bards of San Francisco Bay" to whom he had dedicated the latter volume. He is chagrined, discouraged, angry. He resolves to quit America, to go to the land that has always been the nursing-ground of poets. "Three months later, September 1, 1870, I was kneeling at the grave of Burns. I really expected to die there in the land of my fathers." He arrives in London, unheralded, unknown. He takes his manuscripts to one publisher after another with the same negative result. Finally, with a pioneer desperation, he prints privately one hundred copies of his Pacific Poems, sending them out for review. The result is a sensation; the reversal of Miller's fortunes is one of the most startling in all literature. The reviews are a series of superlatives, the personal tributes still more fervid. Miller becomes famous overnight. He is feted, lauded, lionized; he is ranked as an equal of Browning, given a dinner by the Pre-Raphaelites, acclaimed as "the great interpreter of America," "the Byron of Oregon!"

His dramatic success in England is easily explained. He brought to the calm air of literary London a breath of the great winds of the plain. The more he exaggerated his crashing effects, the louder he roared, the better the English public liked it. When he entered Victorian parlors in his velvet jacket, hip-boots and flowing hair, childhood visions of the "wild and woolly Westerner" were realized and the very bombast of his work was glorified as "typically American."

And yet, for all his overstressed muscularity, Miller is strangely lacking in creative energy. His whipped-up rhetoric cannot disguise the essential weakness of his verse. It is, in spite of a certain breeziness and a few magnificent descriptions of cañons and mountain-chains, feeble, full of cheap heroics, atrocious taste, impossible men and women. One or two individual poems, like "Crossing the Plains," "The Yukon," and parts of his apostrophes to the Sierras, the Pacific Ocean and the Missouri River may live; the rest seem doomed to extinction.

From 1872 to 1876 Miller traveled in Europe and the Holy Land, and, although he speaks of being in Egypt in 1879, there is good ground for believing this to be another romantic exaggeration. At all events, he built a log cabin in Washington in 1883, after spending some time in Boston and New York. After being married for the third time, he returned to California in 1885. In 1886 he bought "The Hights" and tried to found an experimental Greek Academy for aspiring writers. He died there, after a determinedly picturesque life, in sight of the Golden Gate in 1913.

BY THE PACIFIC OCEAN

Here room and kingly silence keep Companionship in state austere;
The dignity of death is here,
The large, lone vastness of the deep.
Here toil has pitched his camp to rest:
The west is banked against the west.

Above yon gleaming skies of gold
One lone imperial peak is seen;
While gathered at his feet in green
Ten thousand foresters are told.
And all so still! so still the air
That duty drops the web of care.

Beneath the sunset's golden sheaves
The awful deep walks with the deep,
Where silent sea-doves slip and sweep,
And commerce keeps her loom and weaves.
The dead red men refuse to rest;
Their ghosts illume my lurid West.

CROSSING THE PLAINS

What great yoked brutes with briskets low,
With wrinkled necks like buffalo,
With round, brown, liquid, pleading eyes,
That turn'd so slow and sad to you.
That shone like love's eyes soft with tears,
That seem'd to plead, and make replies,
The while they bow'd their necks and drew
The creaking load; and looked at you.
Their sable briskets swept the ground,
Their cloven feet kept solemn sound.

Two sullen bullocks led the line,
Their great eyes shining bright like wine;
Two sullen captive kings were they,
That had in time held herds at bay,
And even now they crush'd the sod
With stolid sense of majesty,
And stately stepp'd and stately trod,
As if 'twere something still to be
Kings even in captivity.

FROM "BYRON"

In men whom men condemn as ill
I find so much of goodness still,
In men whom men pronounce divine
I find so much of sin and blot,
I do not dare to draw a line
Between the two, where God has not.

THE ARCTIC MOON

(from "The Yukon")

The moon resumed all heaven now,
She shepherded the stars below
Along her wide, white steeps of snow,
Nor stooped nor rested, where or how.
She bared her full white breast, she dared
The sun to show his face again,
She seemed to know no change, she kept
Carousal constantly, nor slept,
Nor turned aside a breath, nor spared
The fearful meaning, the mad pain,
The weary eyes, the poor dazed brain,
That canie at last to feel, to see
The dread, dead touch of lunacy.

How loud the silence! Oh, how loud!
How more than beautiful the shroud
Of dead Light in the moon-mad north
When great torch-tipping stars stand forth
Above the black, slow-moving pall
As at some fearful funeral!

The moon blares as mad trumpets blare
To marshaled warriors long and loud;
The cobalt blue knows not a cloud,
But, oh, beware that moon, beware
Her ghostly, graveyard, moon-mad stare!
Beware white silence more than whitel
Beware the five-horned starry rune;
Beware the groaning gorge below;
Beware the wide, white world of snow,
Where trees hang white as hooded nun—
No thing not white, not one, not one!
But most beware that mad white moon.

Edward Rowland Sill

EDWARD ROWLAND SILL was born at Windsor, Connecticut, in 1841. In 1861 he was graduated from Yale and shortly thereafter his poor health compelled him to go West. After various unsuccessful experiments, he drifted into teaching, first in the high schools in Ohio, later in the English department of the University of California. His uncertain physical condition added to his mental insecurity. Unable to ally himself either with the conservative forces whom he hated or with the radicals whom he distrusted, Sill became an uncomfortable solitary; half rebellious, half resigned. During the last decade of his life, his brooding seriousness was less pronounced, a lighter irony took the place of dark reflections. Although Sill remains among the minor poets both in scope and style, a few of his poems (such as "The Fool's Prayer" and "Opportunity") have established themselves securely.

The Hermitage, his first volume, was published in 1867, a later edition (including later poems) appearing in 1889. His two posthumous books are Poems (1887) and Hermione and Other Poems (1899). A volume of his prose "essays in literature and education" was published in 1900. His later and little known work deserved—and deserves—a wider audience. It established a serenity that was not without flashes of spirit, a gravity compounded with quiet wit.

Sill died, after bringing something of the Eastern culture and "finish" to the West, in 1887.

OPPORTUNITY

This I beheld, or dreamed it in a dream:—
 There spread a cloud of dust along a plain;
 And underneath the cloud, or in it, raged
 A furious battle, and men yelled, and swords
 Shocked upon swords and shields. A prince's banner
 Wavered, then staggered backward, hemmed by foes.
 A craven hung along the battle's edge,
 And thought, "Had I a sword of keener steel—
 That blue blade that the king's son bears,—but this Blunt thing!" he snapt, and flung it from his hand,
 And lowering crept away and left the field.
 Then came the king's son, wounded, sore bestead,
 And weaponless, and saw the broken sword,
 Hilt-buried in the dry and trodden sand,
 And ran and snatched it, and with battle-shout
 Lifted afresh he hewed his enemy down,
 And saved a great cause that heroic day.

THE FOOL'S PRAYER

The royal feast was done; the King
 Sought some new sport to banish care,
 And to his jester cried: "Sir Fool,
 Kneel now, and make for us a prayer!"

The jester doffed his cap and bells,
 And stood the mocking court before;
 They could not see the bitter smile
 Behind the painted grin he wore.

He bowed his head, and bent his knee
 Upon the monarch's silken stool;
 His pleading voice arose: "O Lord,
 Be merciful to me, a fool!"

" 'Tis not by guilt the onward sweep
 Of truth and right, O Lord, we stay;
 'Tis by our follies that so long
 We hold the earth from heaven away.

"These clumsy feet, still in the mire,
 Go crushing blossoms without end;
 These hard, well-meaning hands we thrust
 Among the heart-strings of a friend.

"The ill-timed truth we might have kept—
 Who knows how sharp it pierced and stung?
 The word we had not sense to say—
 Who knows how grandly it had rung?

"Our faults no tenderness should ask,
 The chastening stripes must cleanse them all;
 But for our blunders—oh, in shame
 Before the eyes of heaven we fall.

"Earth bears no balsam for mistakes;
 Men crown the knave, and scourge the tool
 That did his will; but Thou, O Lord,
 Be merciful to me, a fool!"

The room was hushed; in silence rose
 The King, and sought his gardens cool,
 And walked apart, and murmured low,
 "Be merciful to me, a fool!"

Sidney Lanier

SIDNEY LANIER was born at Macon, Georgia, February 3, 1842. His was a family of musicians (Lanier himself was a skillful performer on various instruments), and it is not surprising that his verse emphasizes—even overstresses—the influence of music on poetry. He attended Oglethorpe College, graduating at the age of eighteen (1860), and, a year later, volunteered as a private in the Confederate army. After several months' imprisonment (he had been captured while acting as signal officer on a blockade-runner), Lanier was released in February, 1865, returning from Point Lookout to Georgia on foot, accompanied only by his flute. His physical health, never the most robust, had been further impaired by his incarceration, and he was already suffering from tuberculosis. The rest of his life was spent in an unequal struggle against it.

He was now only twenty-three years old and the problem of choosing a vocation was complicated by his marriage in 1867. He spent five years in the study and practice of law, during which time he wrote comparatively little verse. But the law could not hold him; he felt premonitions of death and realized he must devote his talents to art before it was too late. He was fortunate enough to obtain a position as flautist with the Peabody Symphony Orchestra in 1873 in Baltimore, where he had free access to the music and literature he craved. Here he wrote all his best poetry. In 1879, he was made lecturer on English in Johns Hopkins University, and it was for his courses there that he wrote his chief prose work, a brilliant if inconclusive study, The Science of English Verse. Besides his poetry, he wrote several books for boys, the two most popular being The Boys' Froissart (1878) and The Boys' King Arthur (1880).

Lanier's poetry suffers from his all too frequent theorizing, his too-conscious effort to bring verse over into the province of pure music. He thought almost entirely in terms of musical form. His main theory that English verse has for its essential basis not accent but a strict musical quantity is a wholly erroneous conclusion, possible only to one who could write "whatever turn I have for art is purely musical—poetry being with me a mere tangent into which I shoot." Lanier is at his best in his ballads, although a few of his lyrics have a similar spontaneity. In spite of novel schemes of rhythm and stanza-structure, much of his work is marred by strained effects, literary conceits (especially his use of pseudo-Shakespearean images) and a kind of verse that approaches mere pattern-making. But such a ballad as the "Song of the Chattahoochee," lyrics like "Night and Day," and parts of the symphonic "Hymns of the Marshes" have won a place in American literature. His triumphs over the exigencies of disease and his accomplishments in two arts were the result of undefeated spirit, a bravery that dazzled his commentators, who confused the attainments of courage with those of creation.

A comprehensive collection of Lanier's verse was first issued in 1906: Collected Poems of Sidney Lanier, edited by his wife, with a memorial by William Hayes Ward. It includes not only the poet's well-known musical experiments, but the rarely printed dialect verses and all that remains of "The Jacquerie."

Lanier died, a victim of his disease, in the mountains of North Carolina, September 7, 1881.

SONG OF THE CHATTAHOOCHEE

Out of the hills of Habersham,
Down the valleys of Hall,
I hurry amain to reach the plain,
Run the rapid and leap the fall,
Split at the rock and together again,
Accept my bed, or narrow or wide,
And flee from folly on every side

With a lover's pain to attain the plain
Far from the hills of Habersham,
Far from the valleys of Hall.

All down the hills of Habersham,
All through the valleys of Hall,
The rushes cried Abide, abide,
The willful waterweeds held me thrall,
The laving laurel turned my tide,

The ferns and the fondling grass said Stay,
 The dewberry dipped for to work delay,
 And the little reeds sighed Abide, abide,
Here in the hills of Habersham,
Here in the valleys of Hall.

High o'er the hills of Habersham,
 Veiling the valleys of Hall,
 The hickory told me manifold
 Fair tales of shade, the poplar tall
 Wrought me her shadowy self to hold,
 The chestnut, the oak, the walnut, the pine,
 Overleaning, with flickering meaning and sign,
 Said, Pass not, so cold, these manifold
Deep shades of the hills of Habersham,
These glades in the valleys of Hall.

And oft in the hills of Habersham,
 And oft in the valleys of Hall,
 The white quartz shone, and the smooth brook-stone
 Did bar me of passage with friendly brawl,
 And many a luminous jewel lone
 —Crystals clear or acloud with mist,
 Ruby, garnet and amethyst—
 Made lures with the lights of streaming stone
 In the clefts of the hills of Habersham,
 In the beds of the valleys of Hall.

But oh, not the hills of Habersham,
 And oh, not the valleys of Hall

Avail: I am fain for to water the plain.
 Downward the voices of Duty call—Downward, to toil and be mixed with the main,
 The dry fields burn, and the mills are to turn,
 And a myriad flowers mortally yearn,
 And the lordly main from beyond the plain
 Calls o'er the hills of Habersham,
 Calls through the valleys of Hall.

NIGHT AND DAY

The innocent, sweet Day is dead.
 Dark Night hath slain her in her bed.
 O, Moors are as fierce to kill as to wed!
 —Put out the light, said he.

A sweeter light than ever rayed
 From star of heaven or eye of maid
 Has vanished in the unknown Shade
 —She's dead, she's dead, said he.

Now, in a wild, sad after-mood
 The tawny Night sits still to brood
 Upon the dawn-time when he wooed
 —I would she lived, said he.

Star-memories of happier times,
 Of loving deeds and lovers' rhymes,
 Throng forth in silvery pantomimes.
 —Come back, O Day! said he.

FROM "THE MARSHES OF GLYNN"

Inward and outward to northward and southward the beach-lines linger and curl
 As a silver-wrought garment clings to and follows the firm sweet limbs of a girl.
 Vanishing, swerving, evermore curving again into sight,
 Softly the sand-beach wavers away to a dim gray looping of light.
 And what if behind me to westward the wall of the woods stands high?
 The world lies east: how ample, the marsh and the sea and the sky!

A league and a league of marsh-grass, waist-high, broad in the blade,
 Green, and all of a height, and unflecked with a light or a shade,
 Stretch leisurely off, in a pleasant plain,
 To the terminal blue of the main.

Ye marshes, how candid and simple and nothing-withholding and free
 Ye publish yourselves to the sky and offer yourselves to the sea!
 Tolerant plains, that suffer the sea and the rains and the sun,
 Ye spread and span like the catholic man who hath mightily won

God out of knowledge and good out of infinite pain
And sight out of blindness and purity out of a stain.

As the marsh-hen secretly builds on the watery sod,
Behold I will build me a nest on the greatness of God:
I will fly in the greatness of God as the marsh-hen flies
In the freedom that fills all the space 'twixt the marsh and the skies:
By so many roots as the marsh-grass sends in the sod
I will heartily lay me a-hold on the greatness of God:
Oh, like to the greatness of God is the greatness within
The range of the marshes, the liberal marshes of Glynn.

And the sea lends large, as the marsh: lo, out of his plenty the sea
Pours fast; full soon the time of the flood-tide must be:
Look how the grace of the sea doth go
About and about through the intricate channels that flow

Here and there,

Everywhere,

Till his waters have flooded the uttermost creeks and the low-lying lanes,
And the marsh is meshed with a million veins,
That like as with rosy and silvery essences flow
In the rose-and-silver evening glow.

Farewell, my lord Sun!

The creeks overflow: a thousand rivulets run
'Twixt the roots of the sod; the blades of the marsh-grass stir;
Passeth a hurrying sound of wings that westward whirr;
Passeth, and all is still; and the currents cease to run;
And the sea and the marsh are one.
How still the plains of the waters be!
The tide in his ecstasy.
The tide is at his highest height:
And it is night.

And now from the Vast of the Lord will the waters of sleep
Roll in on the souls of men,
But who will reveal to our waking ken
The forms that swim and the shapes that creep
Under the waters of sleep?

And I would I could know what swimmeth below when the tide comes in
On the length and breadth of the marvelous marshes of Glynn.

SONG FOR "THE JACQUERIE"

The hound was cuffed, the hound was kicked,
O' the ears was cropped, o' the tail was nicked,

(All.) Oo-hoo-o, howled the hound.

The hound into his kennel crept;
He rarely wept, he never slept.

His mouth he always open kept

Licking his bitter wound,

The hound,

(All.) U-lu-lo, howled the hound.

A star upon his kennel shone
That showed the hound a meat-bare bone.

(All.) O hungry was the hound!
The hound had but a churlish wit.
He seized the bone, he crunched, he bit.
“An thou wert Master, I had slit
Thy throat with a huge wound,”
Quo’ hound.
(All.) O, angry was the hound.

The star in castle-window shone,
The Master lay abed, alone.

(All.) Oh ho, why not? quo’ hound.
He leapt, he seized the throat, he tore
The Master, head from neck, to floor,
And rolled the head i’ the kennel door,
And fled and salved his wound,
Good hound!
(All.) U-lu-lo, howled the hound.

. A BALLAD OF THE TREES AND THE MASTER

Into the woods my Master went,
Clean forspent, forspent.
Into the woods my Master came,
Forspent with love and shame.
But the olives they were not blind to Him,
The little gray leaves were kind to Him:
The thorn-tree had a mind to Him
When into the woods He came.

Out of the woods my Master went,
And He was well content.
Out of the woods my Master came,
Content with death and shame.
When Death and Shame would woo Him last,
From under the trees they drew Him last:
”Twas on a tree they slew Him—last
When out of the woods He came.

James Whitcomb Riley

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, possibly the most widely read native poet of his day, was born October 7, 1849, in Greenfield, Indiana, a small town twenty miles from Indianapolis, where he spent his later years. Contrary to popular belief, Riley was not, as many have gathered from his bucolic poems, a struggling child of the soil; his father was a lawyer in comfortable circumstances, and Riley was given not only a good education, but was prepared for the law. His temperament, however, craved something more adventurous. At eighteen he shut the pages of Blackstone, slipped out of the office and joined a traveling troupe of actors who sold patent medicines during the intermissions. Riley's functions were varied: he beat the bass-drum, painted their flaring banners, wrote local versions of old songs, coached the actors and, when occasion arose, took part in the performance himself.

Even before this time, Riley had begun to send verses to the newspapers, young experiments, bits of homely sentiment, simple snatches and elaborate hoaxes—the poem "Leonainie," published over the initials "E. A. P." being accepted in many quarters as a newly discovered poem by Poe. In 1882, when he was on the staff of the Indianapolis Journal, he began printing the series of dialect poems which he claimed were by a rude and unlettered farmer, one "Benj. F. Johnson, of Boone, the Hoosier poet." A collection of these rustic verses appeared, in 1883, as The Ole Swimmin' Hole, and Riley leaped into widespread popularity.

Other collections followed rapidly: Afterwhiles (1887), Old-Fashioned Roses (1888), Pipes o' Pan at Zekesbury (1889), Rhymes of Childhood (1890). All met an instant response; Riley endeared himself, by his homely idiom and his ingenuity, to a countryful of readers, adolescent and adult.

But Riley's simplicity is seldom as artless as it seems. Time and again, one can watch him trading wantonly on the emotions of his unsophisticated readers. He sees them about to smile—and broadens the point of his joke; he observes them on the point of tears—and pulls out the sobbing tremolo stop. In many respects he is patiently the most artificial of those poets who claim to give us the stuff of the soil. He is the poet of obtrusive sentiment rather than of quiet convictions, the poet of lulling assurance, of philosophies that never disturb his readers, of sweet truisms rather than searching truths. His influence has given rise to an entire school of "cheerful philosophy" versifiers; its lowest ebb may be seen in the newspaper columns of the "A Smile a Day" variety and the syndicated syrup of Edgar A. Guest.

That work of his which may endure will survive because of the personal flavor that Riley often gave it. Such poems as "When the Frost Is on the Punkin," and "The Raggedy Man," seem part of American folk-literature; "Little Orphant Annie" was read wherever there was a schoolhouse or, for that matter, a nursery.

Riley died in his little house in Lockerbie Street, Indianapolis, July 22, 1916.

WHEN THE FROST IS ON THE PUNKIN

When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock,
 And you hear the kyouck and gobble of the struttin' turkey-cock,
 And the clackin' of the guineys, and the cluckin' of the hens,
 And the rooster's hallylooyer as he tiptoes on the fence;
 O, it's then the time a feller is a-feelin' at his best,
 With the risin' sun to greet him from a night of peaceful rest,
 As he leaves the house, bareheaded, and goes out to feed the stock,
 When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

They's something kindo' harty-like about the atmosfere
 When the heat of summer's over and the coolin' fall is here—
 Of course we miss the flowers, and the blossoms on the trees,
 And the mumble of the hummin'-birds and buzzin' of the bees;

But the air's so appetizin'; and the landscape through the haze
 Of a crisp and sunny morning of the arly autumn days
 Is a pictur' that no painter has the colorin' to mock—
 When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

The husky, rusty russel of the tossels of the corn,
 And the raspin' of the tangled leaves as golden as the morn;
 The stubble in the furries—kindo' lonesome-like, but still
 A-preachin' sermons to us of the barns they growed to fill;
 The strawstack in the medder, and the reaper in the shed;
 The hosses in theyr stalls below—the clover overhead!—
 O, it sets my hart a-clickin' like the tickin' of a clock,
 When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

Then your apples all is gethered, and the ones a feller keeps
 Is poured around the cellar-floor in red and yaller heaps;
 And your cider-makin's over, and your wimmern-folks is through
 With theyr mince and apple-butter, and theyr souse and sausage too! .
 I don't know how to tell it—but et such a thing could be
 As the angels wantin' boardin', and they'd call around on me—
 I'd want to 'commode 'em—all the whole-indurin' flock—
 When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

A PARTING GUEST

What delightful hosts are they—
 Life and Love!
 Lingeringly I turn away,
 This late hour, yet glad enough
 They have not withheld from me
 Their high hospitality.
 So, with face lit with delight
 And all gratitude, I stay
 Yet to press their hands and say,
 "Thanks.—So fine a time! Good night."

Eugene Field

ALTHOUGH Eugene Field was born September 2, 1850, in St. Louis, Missouri, his work belongs to the literature of the West. Colorado and the Rocky Mountain region claimed him as their own and Field never repudiated the allegiance; he even called most of his poetry "Western Verse."

Field's area of education embraced New England, Missouri, and what European territory he could cover in six months. At twenty-three he became a reporter on the St. Louis Evening Journal; the rest of his life was given, with a dogged devotion, to journalism. Driven by the demands of his unique daily columns (those on the Denver Tribune [1881-1883] and the Chicago Daily News [1883-1895] were widely copied), Field first capitalized and then standardized his high spirits, his erudition, his whimsicality, his fondness for children. He wrote so often with his tongue in his cheek that it is difficult to say where true sentiment stops and where exaggerated sentimentality begins. "Field," says Fred Lewis Pattee, in his detailed study of American Literature Since 1870, "more than any other writer of the period, illustrates the way the old type of literary scholar was to be modified and changed by the newspaper. Every scrap of Field's voluminous product was written for immediate newspaper consumption. . . . He was a pioneer in a peculiar province: he stands for the journalization of literature, a process that, if carried to its logical extreme, will make of the man of letters a mere newspaper reporter."

Though Field was overrated by his confrères, some of his child lyrics, his homely philosophic ballads (in the vein which Harte and Riley popularized) and his burlesques won him, for the time, a conspicuous place. Readers of all tastes found much to delight them in A Little Book of Western Verse (1889), With Trumpet and Drum (1892), A Second Book of Verse (1893) and those remarkable versions (and perversions) of Horace, Echoes from the Sabine Farm (1893), written in collaboration with his equally adroit though practically unknown brother, Roswell M Field. A complete one-volume edition of his verse was issued in 1910.

Field died in Chicago, Illinois, November 4, 1895.

OUR TWO OPINIONS

Us two wuz boys when we fell out,—
Nigh to the age uv my youngest now;
Don't rec'lect what 'twuz about,
Some small deess'rence, I'll allow.
Lived next neighbors twenty years,
A-hatin' each other, me 'nd Jim,—
He havin' his opinyin uv me,
'Nd I havin' my opinyin uv him.

Grew up together 'nd wouldn't speak,
Courted sisters, 'nd marr'd 'em, too;
Tended same meetin'-house oncen a week,
A-hatin' each other through 'nd through!
But when Abe Linkern asked the West
F'r soldiers, we answered,—me 'nd Jim,—
He havin' his opinyin uv me,
'Nd I havin' my opinyin uv him.

But down in Tennessee one night
Ther' wuz sound uv firin' fur away,
'Nd the sergeant allowed ther'd be a fight
With the Johnnie Rebs some time nex' day;
'Nd as I wuz thinkin' uv Lizzie 'nd home
Jim stood afore me, long 'nd slim,—
He havin' his opinyin uv me,
'Nd I havin' my opinyin uv him.

Seemed like we knew there wuz goin' to be Serious trouble f'r me 'nd him;
Us two shuck hands, did Jim 'nd me,
But never a word from me or Jim!
He went his way 'nd I went mine,
'Nd into the battle's roar went we,—
I havin' my opinyin uv Jim,
'Nd he havin' his opinyin uv me.

Jim never came back from the war again,
But I hain't forgot that last, last night
When, waitin' f'r orders, us two men
Made up 'nd shuck hands, afore the fight.
'Nd after it all, it's soothin' to know
That here I be 'nd younder's Jim,—
He havin' his opinyin uv me,
'Nd I havin' my opinyin uv him.

LITTLE BOY BLUE

The little toy dog is covered with dust,
But sturdy and staunch he stands;
The little toy soldier is red with rust,
And his musket molds in his hands.
Time was when the little toy dog was new,
And the soldier was passing fair;
And that was the time when our Little Boy
Blue
Kissed them and put them there.

"Now don't you go till I come," he said,
 "And don't you make any noise!"
 So, toddling off to his trundle bed,
 He dreamt of the pretty toys;
 And, as he was dreaming, an angel song
 Awakened our Little Boy Blue—
 Oh! the years are many, the years are long,
 But the little toy friends are true!

Aye, faithful to Little Boy Blue they stand,
 Each in the same old place,
 Awaiting the touch of a little hand,
 The smile of a little face;
 And they wonder, as waiting the long years
 through
 In the dust of that little chair,
 What has become of our Little Boy Blue,
 Since he kissed them and put them there.

SEEIN' THINGS

I ain't afraid uv snakes or toads, or bugs or worms or mice,
 An' things 'at girls are skeered uv I think are awful nice!
 I'm pretty brave I guess; an' yet I hate to go to bed,
 For, when I'm tucked up warm an' snug an' when my prayers are said,
 Mother tells me "Happy Dreams" an' takes away the light,
 An' leaves me lyin' all alone an' seein' things at night!

Sometimes they're in the corner, sometimes they're by the door,
 Sometimes they're all a-standin' in the middle uv the floor;
 Sometimes they are a-sittin' down, sometimes they're walkin' round
 So softly and so creepy-like they never make a sound!
 Sometimes they are as black as ink, an' other times they're white—
 But color ain't no difference when you see things at night!

Once, when I licked a feller 'at had just moved on our street,
 An' father sent me up to bed without a bite to eat,
 I woke up in the dark an' saw things standin' in a row,
 A-lookin' at me cross-eyed an' p'intin' at me—so!
 Oh, my! I wuz so skeered 'at time I never slep' a mite—
 It's almost alluz when I'm bad I see things at night!

Lucky thing I ain't a girl or I'd be skeered to death!
 Bein' I'm a boy, I duck my head an' hold my breath.
 An' I am, oh so sorry I'm a naughty boy, an' then
 I promise to be better an' I say my prayers again!
 Gran'ma tells me that's the only way to make it right
 When a feller has been wicked an' sees things at night!

An' so when other naughty boys would coax me into sin,
 I try to skwush the Tempter's voice 'at urges me within;
 An' when they's pie for supper, or cakes 'at's big an' nice,
 I want to—but I do not pass my plate f'r them things twice!
 No, ruther let Starvation wipe me slowly out o' sight
 Than I should keep a-livin' on an' seein' things at night!

Edwin Markham

EDWIN MARKHAM was born in Oregon City, Oregon, April 23, 1852, the youngest son of pioneer parents. His father died before he reached his fifth year and in 1857 he was taken by his mother to a wild valley in the Suisun Hills in central California. Here he grew to young manhood: farming, broncho-riding, laboring on a cattle ranch, educating himself in the primitive country schools. At eighteen he determined to be a teacher and entered the State Normal School at San José.

Since childhood, Markham had been writing verses of no extraordinary merit, one of his earliest pieces being a Byronic echo (A Dream of Chaos) full of the high-sounding fustian of the period. Several years before he uttered his famous challenge, Markham was writing poems of protest, insurrectionary in theme but conventional in effect. Suddenly, in 1899, a sense of outrage at the inequality of human struggle voiced itself in the sonorous poem, "The Man with the Hoe." Inspired by Millet's painting, Markham made the bowed, broken French peasant a symbol of the poverty-stricken toiler in all lands—his was a protest not against toil but the exploitation of labor. "The Yeoman is the landed and well-to-do farmer," says Markham, "you need shed no tears for him. But here in the Millet picture is his opposite—the Hoeman; the landless workman of the world."

The success of the poem upon its appearance in the San Francisco Examiner (January 15, 1899) was instantaneous. The lines appeared in every part of the globe; they were quoted and copied in every walk of life, in the literary and the labor world. The same year of its publication, it was incorporated in Markham's first volume, The Man with the Hoe and Other Poems (1899). Two years later, his almost equally well known poem was published. The same passion that fired Markham to champion the great common workers equipped him to write of the great Commoner in Lincoln, and Other Poems (1901). His later volumes are a descent, melodious but scarcely remarkable. They have the rhetoric without the resonance of the forerunners. Never reaching the heights, there are, nevertheless, moments of dignity in The Shoes of Happiness (1914), The Gates of Paradise (1920), and New Poems: Eighty Songs at Eighty (1932), published with a nice appropriateness on the poet's eightieth birthday. Many of the quatrains are memorable epigrams.

Markham came East in 1901 and made his home on Staten Island, New York, until death in his eighty-eighth year. His life spanned the continent; born near one ocean, he died facing the other on March 7, 1940.

O U T W I T T E D

He drew a circle that shut me out—
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout.
But Love and I had the wit to win:
We drew a circle that took him in!

THE MAN WITH THE HOE<sup>1</sup>

(Written after seeing Millet's world-famous painting)

Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
 Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
 The emptiness of ages in his face,
 And on his back the burden of the world.
 Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
 A thing that grieves not and that never hopes,
 Stolid and stunned, a brother to the ox?
 Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?
 Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
 Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?

Is this the Thing the Lord God made and gave
 To have dominion over sea and land;
 To trace the stars and search the heavens for power;
 To feel the passion of Eternity?
 Is this the dream He dreamed who shaped the suns
 And marked their ways upon the ancient deep?
 Down all the caverns of Hell to their last gulf
 There is no shape more terrible than this—
 More tongued with censure of the world's blind greed—
 More filled with signs and portents for the soul—
 More packt with danger to the universe.

What gulfs between him and the seraphim!
 Slave of the wheel of labor, what to him
 Are Plato and the swing of Pleiades?
 What the long reaches of the peaks of song,
 The rift of dawn, the reddening of the rose?
 Through this dread shape the suffering ages look;
 Time's tragedy is in that aching stoop;
 Through this dread shape humanity betrayed,
 Plundered, profaned, and disinherited,
 Cries protest to the Judges of the World,
 A protest that is also prophecy.

O masters, lords and rulers in all lands,
 Is this the handiwork you give to God,
 This monstrous thing distorted and soul-quenched?
 How will you ever straighten up this shape;
 Touch it again with immortality;
 Give back the upward looking and the light;
 Rebuild in it the music and the dream;
 Make right the immemorial infamies,
 Perfidious wrongs, immedicable woes?

O masters, lords and rulers in all lands,
 How will the Future reckon with this man?

<sup>1</sup> Revised version, 1920. Copyright by Edwin Markham.

How answer his brute question in that hour
 When whirlwinds of rebellion shake all shores?
 How will it be with kingdoms and with kings—
 With those who shaped him to the thing he is—
 When this dumb terror shall rise to judge the world,
 After the silence of the centuries?

THE AVENGERS

The laws are the secret avengers,
 And they rule above all lands;
 They come on wool-soft sandals,
 But they strike with iron hands.

P R E P A R E D N E S S

For all your days prepare,
 And meet them ever alike:
 When you are the anvil, bear—
 When you are the hammer, strike.

LINCOLN, THE MAN OF THE PEOPLE

When the Norn Mother saw the Whirlwind Hour
 Greatening and darkening as it hurried on,
 She left the Heaven of Heroes and came down
 To make a man to meet the mortal need.
 She took the tried clay of the common road—
 Clay warm yet with the genial heat of earth,
 Dasht through it all a strain of prophecy;
 Tempered the heap with thrill of human tears;
 Then mixt a laughter with the serious stuff.
 Into the shape she breathed a flame to light
 That tender, tragic, ever-changing face;
 And laid on him a sense of the Mystic Powers,
 Moving—all husht—behind the mortal veil.
 Here was a man to hold against the world,
 A man to match the mountains and the sea.

The color of the ground was in him, the red earth;
 The smack and tang of elemental things:
 The rectitude and patience of the cliff;
 The good-will of the rain that loves all leaves;
 The friendly welcome of the wayside well;
 The courage of the bird that dares the sea;
 The gladness of the wind that shakes the corn;
 The pity of the snow that hides all scars;
 The secrecy of streams that make their way
 Under the mountain to the rifted rock;
 The tolerance and equity of light
 That gives as freely to the shrinking flower
 As to the great oak flaring to the wind—
 To the grave's low hill as to the Matterhorn
 That shoulders out the sky. Sprung from the West,
 He drank the valorous youth of a new world.
 The strength of virgin forests braced his mind,
 The hush of spacious prairies stilled his soul.

His words were oaks in acorns; and his thoughts
Were roots that firmly gript the granite truth.

Up from log cabin to the Capitol,
One fire was on his spirit, one resolve—
To send the keen ax to the root of wrong,
Clearing a free way for the feet of God,
The eyes of conscience testing every stroke,
To make his deed the measure of a man.
He built the rail-pile as he built the State,
Pouring his splendid strength through every blow:
The grip that swung the ax in Illinois
Was on the pen that set a people free.

So came the Captain with the mighty heart.
And when the judgment thunders split the house,
Wrenching the rafters from their ancient rest,
He held the ridgepole up, and spiked again
The rafters of the Home. He held his place—
Held the long purpose like a growing tree—
Held on through blame and faltered not at praise.
And when he fell in whirlwind, he went down
As when a lordly cedar, green with boughs,
Goes down with a great shout upon the hills,
And leaves a lonesome place against the sky.

Lizette Woodworth Reese

LIZETTE WOODWORTH REESE was born January 9, 1856, in Waverly, Baltimore County, Maryland, of mixed English and German stock. After receiving an education chiefly in private schools she taught English at the Western High School in Baltimore, where she lived. After many years of service, she retired in 1921. In 1923, the alumni of the High School where she had taught for a score of years, together with the teachers and pupils, presented the school with a bronze tablet inscribed with her poem, "Tears," one of the most famous sonnets written by an American.

At first glance, Miss Reese's work seems merely a continuation of the traditional strain; some of her critics decried her poetry as being English rather than American. But it was natural that her verse should sound a note which has been the dominant one in English pastoral poetry from Wordsworth to Housman. Nor was Miss Reese's inheritance alone responsible for this. The country around Baltimore, every tree and path of which Miss Reese knew intimately, was settled by the English and had the shape and color of counties like Sussex and Buckinghamshire.

Miss Reese's first book, A Branch of May (1887), had an undercurrent of intensity beneath its quiet contours. Few of its readers in the Nineties would have dreamed that this straightforward undidactic speech would pave the way for the direct songs of Sara Teasdale and Edna St. Vincent Millay. In a period of sugared sentiment and lace valentine lyrics, Miss Reese's crisp lines were a generation ahead of the times and were consequently appreciated only for their pictorial if somewhat prim felicities. A Handful of Lavender (1891), A Quiet Road (1896), and A Wayside Lute (1909) established an artistry which, for all its seemingly old-fashioned elegance, is as spontaneous as it is skillful. Here are no verbal tricks, no false postures; here is a simple record which is, somehow, never banal. "This poetry of hers," writes Mary Colum, "will persist, not because the author was cleverer or more original than other writers, but because in some way her nerves were more subtle in response to the kinds of life and experiences that came her way."

From 1909 to 1920 there was a silence. During these ten years, Miss Reese wrote little, and published less. Suddenly her work appeared again, more concise than ever. Spicewood was published in 1920; Wild Cherry in 1923; a generous Selected Poems in 1926; Little Henrietta in 1927, the poet's seventy-second year; A Victorian Village, her reminiscences of a changing world, in 1929.

White April (1930) and Pastures (1933), published in the poet's seventy-eighth year, are as fresh as anything she wrote in her youth. The limitations are obvious, but they are the limitations which marked her from the beginning: a preoccupation with the surprise of spring, the inevitable changes of love, the unchanging heart of nature. Individual poems make romance out of the commonplace, juxtaposing the minute with the momentous, and, while the poems lack singularity, the verve is unmistakable.

These volumes, like the earlier ones, reveal the qualities which influenced a generation of women poets. In her late seventies, writing like a young girl, the poet sings of lilacs in Old York Lane, of thorn trees and blackberry rain, of Judas-blossoms and daffodils, of spring ecstasy and lost love, of a dead lady in her garden, and Mary at the manger. But there is always something personal, always something which makes the very repetitions take on a light which is fresh and clear. At least a dozen of her brief songs and lyrical sonnets have found a niche in American literature. Hers is a singing that is not dependent on a fashion.

Lizette Reese died, after a brief illness a few weeks before her eightieth birthday, December 17, 1935.

TEARS

When I consider Life and its few years—
 A wisp of fog betwixt us and the sun;
 A call to battle, and the battle done
 Ere the last echo dies within our ears;
 A rose choked in the grass; an hour of fears;
 The gusts that past a darkening shore do beat;
 The burst of music down an unlistening street,—
 I wonder at the idleness of tears.

Ye old, old dead, and ye of yesternight,
 Chieftains, and bards, and keepers of the sheep,
 By every cup of sorrow that you had,
 Loose me from tears, and make me see aright
 How each hath back what once he stayed to weep:
 Homer his sight, David his little lad!

SPICEWOOD

The spicewood burns along the gray, spent sky,
 In moist unchimneyed places, in a wind,
 That whips it all before, and all behind,
 Into one thick, rude flame, now low, now high.
 It is the first, the homeliest thing of all—
 At sight of it, that lad that by it fares,
 Whistles afresh his foolish, town-caught airs—
 A thing so honey-colored and so tall!

It is as though the young Year, ere he pass
 To the white riot of the cherry tree,
 Would fain accustom us, or here, or there,
 To his new sudden ways with bough and grass,
 So starts with what is humble, plain to see,
 And all familiar as a cup, a chair.

SPRING ECSTASY

Oh, let me run and hide,
 Let me run straight to God;
 The weather is so mad with white
 From sky down to the clod!

If but one thing were so,
 Lilac, or thorn out there,
 It would not be, indeed,
 So hard to bear.

The weather has gone mad with white;
 The cloud, the highway touch.
 White lilac is enough;
 White thorn too much!

OWNERSHIP

Love not a loveliness too much,
 For it may turn and clutch you so,
 That you be less than any serf,
 And at its nodding go.

Be master; otherwise you grow
 Too small, too humble, like to one
 Long dispossessed, who stares through tears
 At his lost house across the sun.

Wild carrot in an old field here,
 Or steeple choked with music there,
 Possess, as part of what is yours;
 Thus prove yourself the heir.

Your barony is sky and land,
 From morning's start to the night's close
 Bend to your need Orion's hounds,
 Or the small fagot of a rose.

A PURITAN LADY

Wild Carthage held her, Rome,
 Sidon. She started to tears
 Tall, golden Helen, wearying
 Behind the Trojan spears.

Towered Antwerp knew her well;
 She wore her quiet gown
 In some hushed house in Oxford grass,
 Or lane in Salem town.

Humble and high in one,
 Cool, certain, different,
 She lasts; scarce saint, yet half a child,
 As hard, as innocent.

What grave, long afternoons,
 What caged airs round her blown,
 Stripped her of humor, left her bare
 As cloud, or wayside stone?

Made her as clear a thing,
 In this slack world as plain
 As a white flower on a grave,
 Or sleet sharp at a pane?

A FLOWER OF MULLEIN

I am too near, too clear a thing for you,
 A flower of mullein in a crack of wall,
 The villagers half-see, or not at all;
 Part of the weather, like the wind or dew.
 You love to pluck the different, and find
 Stuff for your joy in cloudy loveliness;
 You love to fumble at a door, and guess
 At some strange happening that may wait behind.
 Yet life is full of tricks, and it is plain,
 That men drift back to some worn field or roof,
 To grip at comfort in a room, a stair;
 To warm themselves at some flower down a lane:
 You, too, may long, grown tired of the aloof,
 For the sweet surety of the common air.

MIRACLE

Who is in love with loveliness,
 Need not shake with cold;
 For he may tear a star in two,
 And frock himself in gold.

Who holds her first within his heart,
 In certain favor goes;
 If his roof tumbles, he may find
 Harbor in a rose.

WILD CHERRY

Why make your lodging here in this spent lane,
 Where but an old man, with his sheep each day,
 Twice through the forgotten grass goes by your way,
 Half sees you there, and not once looks again?
 For you are of the very ribs of spring,
 And should have many lovers, who have none.
 In silver cloaks, in hushed troops down the sun
 Should they draw near, oh, strange and lovely thing!
 Beauty has no set weather, no sure place;
 Her careful pageantries are here as there,
 With nothing lost. And soon, some lad may start—
 A strayed Mayer in this unremembered space—
 At your tall white, and know you very fair,
 Let all else go to roof within your heart.

OLD SAUL

I cannot think of any word
 To make it plain to you,
 How white a thing the hawthorn bush
 That delicately blew

Within a crook of Tinges Lane;
 Each May Day there it stood;
 And lit a flame of loveliness
 For the small neighborhood.

So fragile-white a thing it was,
 I cannot make it plain.
 Or the sweet fumbling of the bees,
 Like the break in a rain.

Old Saul lived near. And this his life:—
 To cobble for his bread;
 To mourn a tall son lost at sea;
 A daughter worse than dead.

And so, in place of all his lack,
 He set the hawthorn-tree;
 Made it his wealth, his mirth, his god,
 His Zion to touch and see.

Born English he. Down Tinges Lane
 His lad's years came and went,
 He saw out there behind his thorn,
 A hundred thorns of Kent.

At lovers slipping through the dusk,
 He shook a lover's head;
 Grudged them each flower. It was too white
 For any but the dead.

Once on a blurred, wet, silver day,
 He said to two or three:
 "Folks, when I go, pluck yonder bloom,
 That I may take with me."

But it was winter when he went,
 The road wind-wrenched and torn;
 They laid upon his coffin lid
 A wreath made all of thorn.

W O M E N

Some women herd such little things—a box
 Oval and glossy, in its gilt and red,
 Or squares of satin, or a high, dark bed—
 But when love comes, they drive to it all their flocks;
 Yield up their crooks; take little; gain for fold
 And pasture each a small, forgotten grave.
 When they are gone, then lesser women crave
 And squander their sad hoards; their shepherds' gold.

Some gather life like faggots in a wood,
 And crouch its blaze, without a thought at all
 Past warming their pinched selves to the last spark.
 And women as a whole are swift and good,
 In humor scarce, their measure being small;
 They plunge and leap, yet somehow miss the dark.

S U R E T Y

How do I know that you will come again?
 I judge you by imperishable things
 Like crab-trees rosy as the cloaks of kings,
 That twice a year blow down the same tall lane.
 I dare the silence in the house, each place
 Without you, as a stalk of leaf, the wrong
 The neighbors do you in their talk, the song
 Beaten out of bells, and dusk, and a great space.
 Nothing can tear the spring from out the year,
 Or love from out the heart. Both hands have I
 Filled with crab-bloom November as in May.
 Is bloom to bough than you to me more dear?
 Has the old trick of flowering been put by?
 You will come back, you will come back and stay.

C R O W S

Earth is raw with this one note,
 This tattered making of a song,
 Narrowed down to a crow's throat,
 Above the willow-trees that throng
 The crooking field from end to end.
 Fixed as the sun, the grave, this sound;
 Of what the weather has to spend
 As much a part as sky or ground.
 The primal yellow of that flower,
 The tansy making August plain;

And the stored wildness of this hour
 It sucks up like a bitter rain.

Miss it we would, were it not here,
 Simple as water, rough as spring,
 It hurls us at the point of spear,
 Back to some naked, early thing.

Listen now. As with a hoof
 It stamps an image on the gust;
 Chimney by chimney a lost roof
 Starts for a moment from its dust.

Louise Imogen Guiney

LOUISE IMOGEN GUINEY was born in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1861. Although she attended Elmhurst Academy in Providence, most of her studying was with private tutors. In 1901 she went to England, where she lived until her death.

Traditional in form and feeling, Miss Guiney's work has a distinctly personal vigor; even her earliest collections, Songs at the Start (1884) and The White Sail and Other Poems (1887), are not without individuality. Her two most characteristic volumes are A Roadside Harp (1893) and Patrins (1897). Happy Ending appeared in 1909, and was reissued with additional poems in 1927.

Though much of her work is poeticizing rather than poetry, there is no mistaking the high seriousness of her aim. Responding to the influence of the Cavalier poets whom she greatly admired, her best lines beat with a galloping courage. Aware of the poet's mission, she held her pen "in trust to Art, not serving shame or lust"; a militant faith was the very keynote of her writing. Contemporary life affected her but little; even her peasant songs ("In Leinster" for example) have a remoteness which escapes the impact of the present. Still, she was not a literary escapist; a mystic with vitality, her verse was vigorous even when she was most spiritual. "The Kings" and "The Wild Ride" are assured of a place as long as American anthologies are made.

Miss Guiney died at Chipping-Campden, near Oxford, England, November 3, 1920.

THE KINGS

A man said unto his Angel:

"My spirits are fallen low,
And I cannot carry this battle:
O brother! where might I go?"

"The terrible Kings are on me
With spears that are deadly bright;
Against me so from the cradle
Do fate and my fathers fight."

Then said to the man his Angel:
"Thou wavering, witless soul,
Back to the ranks! What matter
To win or lose the whole,"

"As judged by the little judges
Who hearken not well, nor see?
Not thus, by the outer issue,
The Wise shall interpret thee."

"Thy will is the sovereign measure
And only event of things:

The puniest heart, defying,
Were stronger than all these Kings.

"Though out of the past they gather,
Mind's Doubt, and Bodily Pain,
And pallid Thirst of the Spirit
That is kin to the other twain.

"And Grief, in a cloud of banners,
And ringleted Vain Desires,
And Vice, with the spoils upon him
Of thée and thy beaten sires,—

"While Kings of eternal evil
Yet darken the hills about,
Thy part is with broken saber
To rise on the last redoubt;

"To fear not sensible failure,
Nor covet the game at all,
But fighting, fighting, fighting,
Die, driven against the wall!"

THE WILD RIDE

*I hear in my heart, I hear in its ominous pulses,
All day, on the road, the hoofs of invisible horses,
All night, from their stalls, the importunate pawing and neighing.*

Let cowards and laggards fall back! But alert to the saddle
Weatherworn and abreast, go men of our galloping legion,
With a stirrup-cup each to the lily of women that loves him.

The trail is through dolor and dread, over crags and morasses;
 There are shapes by the way, there are things that appal or entice us;
 What odds? We are Knights of the Grail, we are vowed to the riding.

Thought's self is a vanishing wing, and joy is a cobweb,
 And friendship a flower in the dust, and glory a sunbeam:
 Not here is our prize, nor, alas! after these our pursuing.

A dipping of plumes, a tear, a shake of the bridle,
 A passing salute to this world and her pitiful beauty;
 We hurry with never a word in the track of our fathers.

*I hear in my heart, I hear in its ominous pulses,
 All day, on the road, the hoofs of invisible horses,
 All night, from their stalls, the importunate pawing and neighing.*

We spur to a land of no name, outracing the storm-wind;
 We leap to the infinite dark like sparks from the anvil.
 Thou leadest, O God! All's well with Thy troopers that follow.

Bliss Carman

(William) Bliss Carman was born in Fredericton, New Brunswick, Canada, April 15, 1861, of a long line of United Empire Loyalists who withdrew from Connecticut at the time of the Revolutionary War. Carman was educated at the University of New Brunswick (1879-81), at Edinburgh (1882-3), and Harvard (1886-8). He took up his residence in the United States about 1889.

In 1893, Carman issued his first book, Low Tide on Grand Prié: A Book of Lyrics. From the outset, it was evident that Carman possessed lyrical power: the ability to interpret the external world through personal intensity. A buoyancy, new to American literature, made his camaraderie with Nature frankly pagan in contrast to the moralizing tributes of his contemporaries. This freshness and whimsy made Carman the natural collaborator for Richard Hovey, and when their first joint Songs from Vagabondia appeared in 1894 Carman's fame was established. Even so devout a poet as Francis Thompson was enthusiastic about the book's irresponsibility: "These snatches," wrote Thompson, "have the spirit of a gypsy Omar Khayyám. They have always careless verve and often careless felicity; they are masculine and rough as roving songs should be."

Although the three Vagabondia collections contain Carman's best poems, several of his other volumes (he published over twenty of them) vibrate with something of the same pulse. A physical gayety rises from Ballads of Lost Haven (1897), From the Book of Myths (1902) and Songs of the Sea Children (1904), songs for the open road, the windy beach, the mountaintop.

Carman also wrote several volumes of essays and, in conjunction with Mary Perry King, devised poem-dances (Daughters of Dawn, 1913), suggesting Vachel Lindsay's later poem-games. Although the strength is diluted and the music thinned in the later collections, such as April Airs (1916) and Wild Garden (1929), some of the old magic persists; the spell is over-familiar but it is not quite powerless.

Carman died in June, 1929, at New Canaan, Connecticut, and was buried in his native province of New Brunswick.

A VAGABOND SONG

There is something in the autumn that is native to my blood—
Touch of manner, hint of mood;
And my heart is like a rhyme,
With the yellow and the purple and the crimson keeping time.

The scarlet of the maples can shake me like a cry
Of bugles going by.
And my lonely spirit thrills
To see the frosty asters like a smoke upon the hills.

There is something in October sets the gypsy blood astir;
We must rise and follow her,
When from every hill of flame
She calls and calls each vagabond by name.

THE GRAVEDIGGER

Oh, the shambling sea is a sexton old,
And well his work is done.
With an equal grave for lord and knave,
He buries them every one.

Then hoy and rip, with a rolling hip,
He makes for the nearest shore;
And God, who sent him a thousand ship,
Will send him a thousand more;

But some he'll save for a bleaching grave,
And shoulder them in to shore,—
Shoulder them in, shoulder them in,
Shoulder them in to shore.

Oh, the ships of Greece and the ships of Tyre
Went out, and where are they?
In the port they made, they are delayed
With the ships of yesterday.

He followed the ships of England far,
As the ships of long ago;
And the ships of France they led him a dance,
But he laid them all arow.

Oh, a loafing, idle lubber to him
Is the sexton of the town;

For sure and swift, with a guiding lift,
He shovels the dead men down.

But though he delves so fierce and grim,
His honest graves are wide,
As well they know who sleep below
The dredge of the deepest tide.

Oh, he works with a rollicking stave at lip
And loud is the chorus skirled;
With the burly rote of his rumbling throat
He batters it down the world.

He learned it once in his father's house,
Where the ballads of old were sung;
And merry enough is the burden rough,
But no man knows the tongue.

Oh, fair, they say, was his bride to see,
And willful she must have been,
That she could bide at his gruesome side
When the first red dawn came in.

And sweet, they say, is her kiss to those
She greets to his border home;
And softer than sleep her hand's first sweep
That beckons, and they come.

Oh, crooked is he, but strong enough
To handle the tallest mast;
From the royal barque to the slaver dark,
He buries them all at last.

*Then hoy and rip, with a rolling hip,
He makes for the nearest shore;
And God, who sent him a thousand ship,
Will send him a thousand more;
But some he'll save for a bleaching grave,
And shoulder them in to shore,—
Shoulder them in, shoulder them in,
Shoulder them in to shore.*

HEM AND HAW

Hem and Haw were the sons of sin,
Created to shally and shirk;
Hem lay 'round and Haw looked on
While God did all the work.

Hem was foggy, and Haw was a prig,
For both had the dull, dull mind;
And whenever they found a thing to do,
They yammered and went it blind.

Hem was the father of bigots and bores;
As the sands of the sea were they.
And Haw was the father of all the tribe
Who criticize today.

But God was an artist from the first,
And knew what he was about;

While over his shoulder sneered these two,
And advised him to rub it out.

They prophesied ruin ere man was made;
"Such folly must surely fail!"
And when he was done, "Do you think, my Lord,
He's better without a tail?"

And still in the honest working world,
With posture and hint and smirk,
These sons of the devil are standing by
While man does all the work.

They balk endeavor and baffle reform,
In the sacred name of law;
And over the quavering voice of Hem
Is the droning voice of Haw.

DAISIES

Over the shoulders and slopes of the dune,
I saw the white daisies go down to the sea,
A host in the sunshine, an army in June,
The people God sends us to set our hearts free.

The bobolinks rallied them up from the dell,
The orioles whistled them out of the wood;
And all of their singing was, "Earth, it is well!"
And all of their dancing was, "Life, thou art good!"

George Santayana

GEORGE SANTAYANA was born in Madrid, Spain, December 16, 1863, came to the United States at the age of nine, and was educated at Harvard, where later he became instructor of philosophy the same year he received his Ph.D. This was in 1889. From 1889 to 1912 he remained at Harvard, becoming not merely one of the most noted professors in the history of the University, but one of the most notable minds in America. In 1914, he went abroad; since then he has been living in France, in England and in Italy.

Santayana's first work was in verse, Sonnets and Poems (1894). It is a wise seriousness which is here proclaimed, although the idiom is as traditional as the figures are orthodox. The Sense of Beauty (1896), and The Life of Reason (1905), a study of the phases of human progress in five volumes, received far more attention than Santayana's verse. In the interval he achieved fame as a philosopher, and it was with an almost apologetic air that Santayana prefaced his collected Poems which, after a process of revision, appeared in 1923. "Of impassioned tenderness or Dionysiac frenzy I have nothing, nor even of that magic and pregnancy of phrase—really the creation of a fresh idiom—which marks the high lights of poetry. Even if my temperament had been naturally warmer, the fact that the English language (and I can write no other with assurance) was not my mother-tongue would of itself preclude any inspired use of it on my part; its roots do not quite reach to my center. I never drank in in childhood the homely cadences and ditties which in pure spontaneous poetry set the essential key."

Yet, as Santayana himself maintained later on, the thoughts which prompted his verses could not have been transcribed in any other form. If the prosody is worn somewhat thin, it is because the poet-philosopher chose the classic mold in the belief that the innate freedom of poets to hazard new forms does not abolish the freedom to attempt the old ones. The moralizing is personal, even the rhetoric is justified. "Here is the hand of an apprentice, but of an apprentice in a great school."

The tradition has, even in these experimental days, its defenders. One of the most persuasive of them, Robert Hillyer, writes, "In the shrewd, though perhaps too deprecatory, preface to his Collected Poems, George Santayana builds up the case for what is sometimes called the rhetorical style. He affirms the validity of the traditional, even the conventional, mode—not to the exclusion of more experimental patterns but as equally defensible with the newer forms. Such is his statement; his implication is clearly in favor of tradition. 'To say that what was good once is good no longer is to give too much importance to chronology. Esthetic fashions may change, losing as much beauty at one end as they gain at the other, but innate taste continues to recognize its affinities, however remote, and need never change.' His poetry shows both the virtues and the defects inherent in such standards. Some of the sonnets are among the finest in the language; the 'Athletic Ode,' on the other hand, is a set piece wherein half-backs and Greek deities quite naturally eye each other askance.

"Mr. Santayana's output in verse has not been large. Besides the sonnets and odes, he composed an epic drama, Lucifer, which deserves study for the frequent magnificence of its style and the intricacy of its thought. But for the common reader, the sonnets will be most easily acceptable. Many modern readers are as dogmatic in their rejection of the traditional style as professors are supposed to be in their rejection of the new. But if our ears and minds are not wholly closed to dignity and sumptuousness of phrasing, we shall not hesitate to place Mr. Santayana's sequence among the greatest in our literature. Had he composed it two or three hundred years ago no one would quibble; but that a contemporary should insist on Parnassus is almost as shocking as a preference for old Bohemia over new Czechoslovakia. Mr. Santayana is definitely behind the times. Perhaps he is also ahead of them."

Not even the most casual appraisal of Santayana's contribution to the period can be complete without a tribute to his prose. At seventy-two he made his débüt as novelist with The Last Puritan (1936). The quality of Santayana's thinking is heightened by his style, a style which is both firm and flexible, the gift of one of the unquestionable masters of English prose.

AS IN THE MIDST OF BATTLE THERE IS ROOM

As in the midst of battle there is room
 For thoughts of love, and in foul sin for mirth;
 As gossips whisper of a trinket's worth
 Spied by the death-bed's flickering candle-gloom;
 As in the crevices of Caesar's tomb
 The sweet herbs flourish on a little earth:
 So in this great disaster of our birth
 We can be happy, and forget our doom.
 For morning, with a ray of tenderest joy
 Gilding the iron heaven, hides the truth,
 And evening gently woos us to employ
 Our grief in idle catches. Such is youth;
 Till from that summer's trance we wake, to find
 Despair before us, vanity behind.

AFTER GRAY VIGILS, SUNSHINE IN THE HEART

After gray vigils, sunshine in the heart;
 After long fasting on the journey, food;
 After sharp thirst, a draught of perfect good
 To flood the soul, and heal her ancient smart.
 Joy of my sorrow, never can we part;
 Thou broodest o'er me in the haunted wood,
 And with new music fill'st the solitude
 By but so sweetly being what thou art.
 He who hath made thee perfect, makes me blest.
 O fiery minister, on mighty wings
 Bear me, great love, to mine eternal rest.
 Heaven it is to be at peace with things;
 Come chaos now, and in a whirlwind's rings
 Engulf the planets. I have seen the best.

ON THE DEATH OF A METAPHYSICIAN

Unhappy dreamer, who outwinged in flight
 The pleasant region of the things I love,
 And soared beyond the sunshine, and above
 The golden cornfields and the dear and bright
 Warmth of the hearth,—blasphemer of delight,
 Was your proud bosom not at peace with Jove,
 That you sought, thankless for his guarded grove
 The empty horror of abysmal night?

Ah, the thin air is cold above the moon!
 I stood and saw you fall, befooled in death,
 As, in your numbèd spirit's fatal swoon,
 You cried you were a god, or were to be;
 I heard with feeble moan your boastful breath
 Bubble from depths of the Icarian sea.

THE RUSTIC AT THE PLAY

Our youth is like a rustic at the play
 That cries aloud in simple-hearted fear,
 Curses the villain, shudders at the fray,
 And weeps before the maiden's wreathèd bier.
 Yet once familiar with the changeful show,
 He starts no longer at a brandished knife,
 But, his heart chastened at the sight of woe,
 Ponders the mirrored sorrows of his life.
 So tutored too, I watch the moving art
 Of all this magic and impassioned pain
 That tells the story of the human heart
 In a false instance, such as poets feign;
 I smile, and keep within the parchment furled
 That prompts the passions of this strutting world.

O WORLD, THOU CHOOSEST NOT THE BETTER PART

O world, thou choosest not the better part!
 It is not wisdom to be only wise,
 And on the inward vision close the eyes,
 But it is wisdom to believe the heart.
 Columbus found a world, and had no chart
 Save one that faith deciphered in the skies;
 To trust the soul's invincible surmise
 Was all his science and his only art.
 Our knowledge is a torch of smoky pine
 That lights the pathway but one step ahead
 Across a void of mystery and dread.
 Bid, then, the tender light of faith to shine
 By which alone the mortal heart is led
 Unto the thinking of the thought divine.

Richard Hovey

RICHARD HOVEY was born May 4, 1864, at Normal, Illinois, and graduated from Dartmouth in 1885. After leaving college, he became, in rapid succession, theologian, actor, journalist, lecturer, professor of English literature at Barnard, poet and dramatist.

His first volume, The Laurel. An Ode (1889), betrayed the over-musical influence of Lanier but gave promise of that extraordinary facility which often brought Hovey perilously close to mere technique. His exuberant virility found its outlet in the series of poems published in collaboration with Bliss Carman: the three volumes of Songs from Vagabondia (1894, 1896, 1900). Here he let himself go completely; nothing remained sober or static. His lines flung themselves across the page; danced with intoxicating abandon; shouted, laughed, and carried off the reader in a gale of high spirits. The famous Stein Song is an interlude in the midst of a far finer poem that, with its flavor of Whitman, begins:

I said in my heart, "I am sick of four walls and a ceiling.
 I have need of the sky.
 I have business with the grass.
 I will up and get me away where the hawk is wheeling,
 Lone and high,
 And the slow clouds go by.
 I will get me away to the waters that glass
 The clouds as they pass. . . ."

Hovey's attitude to his art was expressed in his own words concerning the poet: "It is not his mission," wrote Hovey in the Dartmouth Magazine, "to write elegant canzonettas for the delectation of the dilettanti, but to comfort the sorrowful and hearten the despairing, to champion the oppressed and declare to humanity its inalienable rights, to lay open to the world the heart of man—all its heights and depths, all its glooms and glories, to reveal the beauty in things and breathe into his fellows a love of it." This too conscious awareness of the poet's "mission" marred Hovey's work; responding to a program, he frequently overstressed his ringing enthusiasm, and strained his muscularity. But his power was as unflagging as his energy was persuasive.

Some of Hovey's best work was accomplished without shouting. The little known "Contemporaries" showed how well he could handle double portraiture, antedating the psycho-philosophical delineations of E. A. Robinson. As he grew older, Hovey became dissatisfied with the wanderlusty motif and its panacea of open roads and youthful comradeship. His subjects grew larger, his symbols were less obvious and not confined to "something potent brimming through the earth." The work on which he was engaged at the time of his death is significant; Launcelot and Guenevere: A Poem in Five Dramas, exemplary in its restrained force.

Although the varied lyrics in Songs from Vagabondia are the heartiest examples of Hovey, a representative collection of his riper work may be found in Along the Trail (1898). Hovey was slow to mature; this volume, in conjunction with the uncompleted Tales in A Masque, shows his later, more intensive power. The mood reflected is spiritual rather than physical; the note is high but never shrill. Besides the later work, Along the Trail contains "Spring" and the stirring "Comrades" in full.

Hovey died, during his thirty-sixth year, in New York, February 24, 1900.

AT THE CROSSROADS

You to the left and I to the right,
 For the ways of men must sever—
 And it well may be for a day and a night,
 And it well may be forever.
 But whether we meet or whether we part
 (For our ways are past our knowing),
 A pledge from the heart to its fellow heart
 On the ways we all are going!

Here's luck!
 For we know not where we are going.

Whether we win or whether we lose
 With the hands that life is dealing,
 It is not we nor the ways we choose
 But the fall of the cards that's sealing.
 There's a fate in love and a fate in fight,
 And the best of us all go under—
 And whether we're wrong or whether we're right,

We win, sometimes, to our wonder.
Here's luck!
That we may not yet go under!

With a steady swing and an open brow
We have tramped the ways together,
But we're clasping hands at the crossroads
now

In the Fiend's own night for weather;
And whether we bleed or whether we smile
In the leagues that lie before us
The ways of life are many a mile
And the dark of Fate is o'er us.
Here's luck!
And a cheer for the dark before us!

You to the left and I to the right,
For the ways of men must sever,
And it well may be for a day and a night
And it well may be forever!
But whether we live or whether we die
(For the end is past our knowing),
Here's two frank hearts and the open sky,
Be a fair or an ill wind blowing!
Here's luck!
In the teeth of all winds blowing.

UNMANIFEST DESTINY<sup>1</sup>

To what new fates, my country, far
And unforeseen of foe or friend,

Beneath what unexpected star
Compelled to what unchosen end,

Across the sea that knows no beach,
The Admiral of Nations guides
Thy blind obedient keels to reach
The harbor where thy future rides!

The guns that spoke at Lexington
Knew not that God was planning then
The trumpet word of Jefferson
To bugle forth the rights of men.

To them that wept and cursed Bull Run,
What was it but despair and shame?
Who saw behind the cloud the sun?
Who knew that God was in the flame?

Had not defeat upon defeat,
Disaster on disaster come,
The slave's emancipated feet
Had never marched behind the drum.

There is a Hand that bends our deeds
To mightier issues than we planned;
Each son that triumphs, each that bleeds,
My country, serves Its dark command.

I do not know beneath what sky
Nor on what seas shall be thy fate;
I only know it shall be high,
I only know it shall be great.

LOVE IN THE WINDS

When I am standing on a mountain crest,
Or hold the tiller in the dashing spray,
My love of you leaps foaming in my breast,
Shouts with the winds and sweeps to their foray.
My heart bounds with the horses of the sea
And plunges in the wild ride of the night,
Flaunts in the teeth of tempest the large glee
That rides out Fate and welcomes gods to fight.

Ho, love, I laugh aloud for love of you,
Glad that our love is fellow to rough weather,—
No fretful orchid hothoused from the dew,
But hale and hardy as the highland heather,
Rejoicing in the wind that stings and thrills,
Comrade of ocean, playmate of the hills.

<sup>1</sup> The phrase "manifest destiny," which came into usage during the Spanish-American War, was meant to indicate America's paternal (or, as the opposing faction claimed, imperialistic) mission. Hovey was one who denied any but unselfish motives to the conduct of his country.

C O M R A D E S

Comrades, pour the wine tonight,
 For the parting is with dawn.
 Oh, the clink of cups together,
 With the daylight coming on!
     Greet the morn
     With a double horn,
 When strong men drink together!

Comrades, gird your swords tonight,
 For the battle is with dawn.
 Oh, the clash of shields together,
 With the triumph coming on!
     Greet the foe
     And lay him low,
 When strong men fight together.

Comrades, watch the tides tonight,
 For the sailing is with dawn.
 Oh, to face the spray together,
 With the tempest coming on!
     Greet the Sea
     With a shout of glee,
 When strong men roam together.

Comrades, give a cheer tonight,
 For the dying is with dawn.
 Oh, to meet the stars together,
 With the silence coming on!
     Greet the end
     As a friend a friend,
 When strong men die together.

C O N T E M P O R A R I E S

"A barbered woman's man,"—yes, so
 He seemed to me a twelvemonth since;
 And so he may be—let it go—
 Admit his flaws—we need not wince
 To find our noblest not all great.
 What of it? He is still the prince,
 And we the pages of his state.

The world applauds his words; his fame
 Is noised wherever knowledge be;
 Even the trader hears his name,
 As one far inland hears the sea;
 The lady quotes him to the beau
 Across the cup of Russian tea;
 They know him and they do not know.

I know him. In the nascent years
 Men's eyes shall see him as one crowned;
 His voice shall gather in their ears
 With each new age prophetic sound;
 And you and I and all the rest,
 Whose brows today are laurel-bound,
 Shall be but plumes upon his crest.

A year ago this man was poor,—
 This Alfred whom the nations praise;
 He stood a beggar at my door
 For one mere word to help him raise
 From fainting limbs and shoulders bent
 The burden of the weary days;
 And I withheld it—and he went.

I knew him then, as I know now,
 Our largest heart, our loftiest mind;
 Yet for the curls upon his brow
 And for his lisp, I could not find
 The helping word, the cheering touch.
 Ah, to be just, as well as kind,—
 It costs so little and so much!

It seemed unmanly in my sight
 That he, whose spirit was so strong
 To lead the blind world to the light,
 Should look so like the mincing throng
 Who advertise the tailor's art.
 It angered me—I did him wrong—
 I grudged my groat and shut my heart.

I might have been the prophet's friend,
 Helped him who is to help the world!
 Now, when the striving is at end,
 The reek-stained battle-banners furled,
 And the age hears its muster-call,
 Then I, because his hair was curled,
 I shall have lost my chance—that's all.

A S T E I N S O N G

(from "Spring")

Give a rouse, then, in the Maytime
 For a life that knows no fear!
 Turn night-time into daytime
 With the sunlight of good cheer!
     For it's always fair weather
     When good fellows get together,
 With a stein on the table and a good song ringing clear.

When the wind comes up from Cuba,
 And the birds are on the wing,
 And our hearts are patting juba
 To the banjo of the spring,
 Then it's no wonder whether
 The boys will get together,
 With a stein on the table and a cheer for everything.

For we're all frank-and-twenty
 When the spring is in the air;
 And we've faith and hope a-plenty,
 And we've life and love to spare:

And it's birds of a feather
 When we all get together,
 With a stem on the table and a heart without a care.
 For we know the world is glorious,
 And the goal a golden thing,
 And that God is not censorious
 When his children have their fling;
 And life slips its tether
 When the boys get together,
 With a stein on the table in the fellowship of spring.

William Vaughn Moody

WILLIAM VAUGHN MOODY was born in Spencer, Indiana, July 8, 1869, and was educated at Harvard. After graduation, he spent the remaining eighteen years of his life in travel and intensive study—he taught, for eight years, at the University of Chicago—his death coming at the very height of his creative power.

The Masque of Judgment, his first work, was published in 1900. A richer and more representative collection appeared the year following; in Poems (1901) Moody effected that mingling of challenging lyricism and spiritual philosophy which became more and more insistent. Throughout his career, and particularly in such lines as the hotly expostulating “On a Soldier Fallen in the Philippines” and the uncompleted “The Death of Eve,” Moody successfully achieved the union of poet and preacher. “Gloucester Moors” was an outcry against the few exploiting the many; “The Quarry” and “An Ode in Time of Hesitation” were impassioned and prophetic. His last extended works were little read; their too crowded details and difficult diction prevented them from becoming popular. Further, Moody did not offer a happy solution of life as was attempted by the vague socialism of Markham or the reckless optimism of Hovey; he maintained, rather, that men’s spirits were “plagued, impatient things, all dream and unaccountable desire.” Creation, he felt, was moving toward some far end, but he never presumed to know the goal, he would not even declare of our destiny: “I only know it shall be great.” Man, to Moody, must make himself greater before he could claim to be the object of great purposes.

Moody’s prose play The Great Divide (1907) was extremely successful when produced by Henry Miller. The Faith Healer (1909), another play in prose, because of its more exalted tone, did not win the favor of the theater-going public. A complete edition of The Poems and Poetic Dramas of William Vaughn Moody was published in 1912 in two volumes.

In the summer of 1909 Moody was stricken with the illness from which he never recovered. Had he lived he might well have become one of the major poets of his country. He died in October, 1910.

PANDORA'S SONG

(from "The Fire-Bringer")

I stood within the heart of God;
It seemed a place that I had known:
(I was blood-sister to the clod,
Blood-brother to the stone.)

I found my love and labor there,
My house, my raiment, meat and wine,
My ancient rage, my old despair,—
Yea, all things that were mine.

I saw the spring and summer pass,
The trees grow bare, and winter come;
All was the same as once it was
Upon my hills at home.

Then suddenly in my own heart
I felt God walk and gaze about;
He spoke; his words seemed held apart
With gladness and with doubt.

"Here is my meat and wine," He said,
"My love, my toil, my ancient care;
Here is my cloak, my book, my bed,
And here my old despair.

"Here are my seasons: winter, spring,
Summer the same, and autumn spills
The fruits I look for; everything
As on my heavenly hills."

GLOUCESTER MOORS

A mile behind is Gloucester town
Where the fishing fleets put in,
A mile ahead the land dips down
And the woods and farms begin.
Here where the moors stretch free
In the high blue afternoon,
Are the marching sun and talking sea,
And the racing winds that wheel and flee
On the flying heels of June.

Jill-o'er-the-ground is purple blue,
Blue is the quaker-maid,

The wild geranium holds its dew
Long in the boulder's shade.
Wax-red hangs the cup
From the huckleberry boughs,
In barberry bells the gray moths sup,
Or where the choke-cherry lifts high up
Sweet bowls for their carouse.

Over the shelf of the sandy cove
Beach-peas blossom late.
By copse and cliff the swallows rove
Each calling to his mate.
Seaward the sea-gulls go,
And the land-birds all are here:
That green-gold flash was a vireo,
And yonder flame where the marsh-flags grow
Was a scarlet tanager.

This earth is not the steadfast place
We landsmen build upon;
From deep to deep she varies pace,
And while she comes is gone.
Beneath my feet I feel
Her smooth bulk heave and dip;
With velvet plunge and soft upreel
She swings and steadies to her keel
Like a gallant, gallant ship.

These summer clouds she sets for sail,
The sun is her masthead light,
She tows the moon like a pinnace frail
Where her phosphor wake churns bright.
Now hid, now looming clear,
On the face of the dangerous blue
The star fleets tack and wheel and veer,
But on, but on does the old earth steer
As if her port she knew.

God, dear God! Does she know her port,
Though she goes so far about?
Or blind astray, does she make her sport
To brazen and chance it out?
I watched when her captains passed:
She were better captainless.
Men in the cabin, before the mast,
But some were reckless and some aghast,
And some sat gorged at mess.

By her battened hatch I leaned and caught
 Sounds from the noisome hold,— Cursing and sighing of souls distraught
 And cries too sad to be told.
 Then I strove to go down and see;
 But they said, "Thou art not of us!"
 I turned to those on the deck with me
 And cried, "Give help!" But they said, "Let be:
 Our ship sails faster thus."

Jill-o'er-the-ground is purple blue,
 Blue is the quaker-maid,
 The alder-clump where the brook comes through
 Breeds cresses in its shade.
 To be out of the moiling street
 With its swelter and its sin!
 Who has given to me this sweet, . . .
 And given my brother dust to eat?
 And when will his wage come in?

Scattering wide or blown in ranks,
 Yellow and white and brown,
 Boats and boats from the fishing banks
 Come home to Gloucester town.
 There is cash to purse and spend,
 There are wives to be embraced,
 Hearts to borrow and hearts to lend,
 And hearts to take and keep to the end,—
 O little sails, make haste!

But thou, vast outbound ship of souls,
 What harbor town for thee?
 What shapes, when thy arriving tolls,
 Shall crowd the banks to see?
 Shall all the happy shipmates then
 Stand singing brotherly?
 Or shall a haggard ruthless few
 Warp her over and bring her to,
 While the many broken souls of men
 Fester down in the slaver's pen,
 And nothing to say or do?

ROAD-HYMN FOR THE START

Leave the early bells at chime,
 Leave the kindled hearth to blaze,
 Leave the trellised panes where children linger out the waking-time,
 Leave the forms of sons and fathers trudging through the misty ways,
 Leave the sounds of mothers taking up their sweet, laborious days.

Pass them by! even while our soul
 Yearns to them with keen distress.
 Unto them a part is given; we will strive to see the whole.
 Dear shall be the banquet table where their singing spirits press;
 Dearer be our sacred hunger, and our pilgrim loneliness.

We have felt the ancient swaying
 Of the earth before the sun,
 On the darkened marge of midnight heard sidereal rivers playing;
 Rash it was to bathe our souls there, but we plunged and all was done.
 That is lives and lives behind us—lo, our journey is begun!

Careless where our face is set,
 Let us take the open way,
 • What we are no tongue has told us: Errand-goers who forget?
 Soldiers heedless of their harry? Pilgrim people gone astray?
 We have heard a voice cry "Wander!" That was all we heard it say.

Ask no more: 'Tis much, 'tis much!
 Down the road the day-star calls;
 Touched with change in the wide heavens, like a leaf the frost winds touch,

Flames the failing moon a moment, ere it shrivels white and falls;
Hid aloft, a wild throat holdeth sweet and sweeter intervals.

Leave him still to ease in song
Half his little heart's unrest:
Speech is his, but we may journey toward the life for which we long.
God, who gives the bird its anguish, maketh nothing manifest,
But upon our lifted foreheads pours the boon of endless quest.

FROM "JETSAM"

Once at a simple turning of the way
I met God walking; and although the dawn
Was large behind Him, and the morning stars
Circled and sang about his face as birds
About the fieldward morning cottager,
My coward heart said faintly, "Let us haste!
Day grows and it is far to market-town."
Once where I lay in darkness after fight,
Sore smitten, thrilled a little thread of song
Searching and searching all my muffled sense
Until it shook sweet pangs through all my blood,
And I beheld one globed in ghostly fire
Singing, star-strong, her golden canticle;
And her mouth sang, "The hosts of Hate roll past,
A dance of dust-motes in the sliding sun;
Love's battle comes on the wide wings of storm,
From east to west one legion! Wilt thou strive?"
Then, since the splendor of her sword-bright gaze
Was heavy on me with yearning and with scorn,
My sick heart muttered, "Yea, the little strife,
Yet see, the grievous wounds! I fain would sleep."

O heart, shalt thou not once be strong to go
Where all sweet throats are calling, once be brave
To slake with deed thy dumbness? Let us go
The path her singing face looms low to point,
Pendulous, blanched with longing, shedding flames
Of silver on the brown grope of the flood;
For all my spirit's soulure is put by
And all my body's soulure, lacking now
But the last lustral sacrament of death
To make me clean for those near-searching eyes
That question yonder whether all be well,
And pause a little ere they dare rejoice.

Question and be thou answered, passionate face!
For I am worthy, worthy now at last
After so long unwoith; strong now at last
To give myself to beauty and be saved.

ON A SOLDIER FALLEN IN THE PHILIPPINES<sup>1</sup>

Streets of the roaring town,
 Hush for him; hush, be still!
 He comes, who was stricken down
 Doing the word of our will.
 Hush! Let him have his state.
 Give him his soldier's crown,
 The grists of trade can wait
 Their grinding at the mill.

But he cannot wait for his honor, now the trumpet has been blown.
 Wreathe pride now for his granite brow, lay love on his breast of stone.

Toll! Let the great bells toll
 Till the clashing air is dim,
 Did we wrong this parted soul?
 We will make it up to him.
 Toll! Let him never guess
 What work we sent him to.
 Laurel, laurel, yes.
 He did what we bade him do.

Praise, and never a whispered hint but the fight he fought was good;
 Never a word that the blood on his sword was his country's own heart's-blood.

A flag for a soldier's bier
 Who dies that his land may live;
 O banners, banners here,
 That he doubt not nor misgive!
 That he heed not from the tomb
 The evil days draw near
 When the nation robed in gloom
 With its faithless past shall strive.

Let him never dream that his bullet's scream went wide of its island mark,
 Home to the heart of his darling land where she stumbled and sinned in the dark.

George Sterling

GEORGE STERLING was born at Sag Harbor, New York, December 1, 1869, and educated at various private schools in the Eastern States. He moved to the Far West about 1895 and lived in California until, discouraged and dipsomaniac, he met death by his own hand in 1926.

Of Sterling's ten volumes of poetry, The Testimony of the Suns (1903), A Wine of Wizardry (1908) and The House of Orchids and Other Poems (1911) are the most characteristic. Ambrose Bierce was the first to hail Sterling with what now seems extravagant praise; he declared that A Wine of Wizardry contained some of the greatest lines in English poetry.

As the titles of Sterling's volumes indicate, this is poetry of a flamboyant and rhetorical type, of luxuriant sentences and emotions declared in "the grand manner." Yet Sterling added vigor to his ornate tropes. He was not always hurling suns about, sweeping the skies with orchids, strange gods and exotic stars. His extravagances, partly temperamental, partly climatic, are Californian—as he intended them to be. He was not at ease when attempting to curb his grandiose periods; but a few of his simpler verses, though not in his most familiar vein, show what Sterling might have accomplished with more discipline. The least memorable poems are not without a redeeming line.

A comprehensive Selected Poems was published in 1923.

THE BLACK VULTURE

Aloof upon the day's immeasured dome,
    He holds unshared the silence of the sky.
    Far down his bleak, relentless eyes descry
The eagle's empire and the falcon's home—
    Far down, the galleons of sunset roam;
    His hazards on the sea of morning lie;
    Serene, he hears the broken tempest sigh
Where cold sierras gleam like scattered foam.

And least of all he holds the human swarm—
    Unwitting now that envious men prepare
    To make their dream and its fulfillment one,
When, poised above the caldrons of the storm,
    Their hearts, contemptuous of death, shall dare
    His roads between the thunder and the sun.

THE MASTER MARINER

My grandsire sailed three years from home
    And slew unmoved the sounding whale:
Here on a windless beach I roam
    And watch far out the hardy sail.

The lions of the surf that cry
    Upon this lion-colored shore
On reefs of midnight met his eye:
    He knew their fangs as I their roar.

My grandsire sailed uncharted seas,
    And toll of all their leagues he took:
I scan the shallow bays at ease,
    And tell their colors in a book.

The anchor-chains his music made
    And wind in shrouds and running-gear:

The thrush at dawn beguiles my glade,
    And once, 'tis said, I woke to hear.

My grandsire in his ample fist
    The long harpoon upheld to men:
Behold obedient to my wrist
    A gray gull's-feather for my pen!

Upon my grandsire's leathern cheek
    Five zones their bitter bronze had set:
Some day their hazards I will seek,
    I promise me at times. Not yet.

I think my grandsire now would turn
    A mild but speculative eye
On me, my pen and its concern,
    Then gaze again to sea—and sigh.

THE NIGHT OF GODS

Their mouths have drunken the eternal wine—
 The draught that Baal in oblivion sips.
 Unseen about their courts the adder slips,
 Unheard the sucklings of the leopard whine;
 The toad has found a resting-place divine,
 And bloats in stupor between Ammon's lips.
 O Carthage and the unreturning ships,
 The fallen pinnacle, the shifting Sign!

Lo! when I hear from voiceless court and fane
 Time's adoration of eternity,—
 The cry of kingdoms past and gods undone,—
 I stand as one whose feet at noontide gain
 A lonely shore; who feels his soul set free,
 And hears the blind sea chanting to the sun.

Edwin Arlington Robinson

EDWIN ARLINGTON ROBINSON was born December 22, 1869, in the village of Head Tide, Maine. When he was still a child, the Robinson family moved to the near-by town of Gardiner, which figures in Robinson's poetry as "Tilbury Town." In 1891 he entered Harvard College, but left in 1893. A little collection of verse (The Torrent and the Night Before) was privately printed in 1896 and the following year much of it was incorporated with other work in The Children of the Night (1897), a first volume which contains some of Robinson's most quoted verse.

Somewhat later, Robinson was struggling in various capacities to make a living in New York, five years passing before the publication of Captain Craig (1902). This richly detailed narrative, recalling Browning's method, increased Robinson's audience, and his work was brought to the attention of Theodore Roosevelt (then President of the United States), who became interested in the poet, at the time earning a living as an inspector in the New York Subway, then in course of construction. In 1904, President Roosevelt offered him a clerkship in the New York Custom House. Robinson held this position from 1905 to 1910, leaving it the same year which marked the appearance of his volume, The Town Down the River. Robinson's three books, up to this time, showed his clean, firmly drawn quality, but, in spite of their excellences, they seem little more than a succession of preludes for the dynamic volume that was to establish him in the first rank of American poets. The Man Against the Sky, in many ways Robinson's fullest and most penetrating work, appeared in 1916. This was followed by The Three Taverns (1920), a less arresting but equally concentrated, many voiced collection of poems.

In all these books there is manifest a searching for the light beyond illusion. But Robinson's transcendentalism is no mere emotional escape; his temper subjects the slightest phrase to critical analysis, his intuitions are supported—or scrutinized—by a vigorous intellectuality. Purely as a psychological portrait painter, Robinson has given American literature an entire gallery of memorable figures: Richard Cory, who "glittered when he walked," gnawing his dark heart while he fluttered pulses with his apparent good fortune; Miniver Cheevy, frustrate dreamer, sighing "for what was not"; Aaron Stark, the miser with eyes "like little dollars in the dark"; the nameless mother in "The Gift of God," transmuting her mediocrity of a son into a shining demigod; Bewick Finzer, the wreck of wealth, coming for his pittance, "familiar as an old mistake, and futile as regret," Luke Havergal, Cliff Klingenhagen, Reuben Bright, Annandale, the tippling Mr. Flood—they persist in the mind more vividly than most living people. Such sympathetic illuminations reveal Robinson's sensitive power, especially in his projection of the apparent failures of life. Indeed, much of Robinson's work seems a protest, a criticism by implication, of that type of standardized success which so much of the world worships. Frustration and defeat are like an organ-point heard below the varying music of his verse; failure is almost glorified in his pages.

Technically, Robinson is as precise as he is dexterous. He is, in company with Frost, a master of the slowly diminished ending. But he is capable of cadences as rich as that which ends "The Gift of God," as pungent as the climax of "Calvary," as brilliantly fanciful as the sestet of his sonnet, "The Sheaves," as muted but sustained as the finale of "Eros Turannos" which might have been composed by a more controlled Swinburne.

There is never a false image or a blurred line in any of these verses which, while adhering to the strictest models and executed according to traditional forms, are always fresh and surprising. It is interesting to observe how the smoothness of his rhymes, playing against the hard outlines of his verse, emphasizes the epigrammatic strength of poems like "The Gift of God," that magnificent modern ballad "John Gorham," "For a Dead Lady," and "The Master," one of the finest evocations of Lincoln which is, at the same time, a bitter commentary on the commercialism of the times and the "shopman's test of age and worth."

Robinson's blank verse is scarcely less individual. It is astringent, personal, packed with the instant. In "Ben Jonson Entertains a Man from Stratford" we have the clearest and most human portrait of Shakespeare ever attempted; the lines run as fluently as good conversation, as inevitably as a perfect melody. In his reanimations of the Arthurian legends, Merlin (1917), Launcelot (1920), Tristram (1927), Robinson, shaming the tea-table idylls of Tennyson, has colored the tale with somber reflections of the collapse of old orders, the darkness of an age in ashes.

Avon's Harvest, which the author has called "a dime novel in verse," a study of a fear-haunted, hate-driven man, appeared in 1921. In the same year the Macmillan Company issued his Collected Poems, which received the Pulitzer Prize for 1921 and which was enlarged in 1929. Subsequent volumes strengthened his admirers' convictions and disproved any fears that Robinson might have "written himself out." Roman Bartholow (1923) is a single poem of almost two hundred pages; a dramatic and introspective narrative in blank verse. The Man Who Died Twice (1924), which was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for that year, is likewise one long poem: a tale which is a cross between a grotesque recital and inspired metaphysics. Curiously enough, the mixture is one of Robinson's greatest triumphs; none of his portraits, either miniatures or full-length canvases, has given us a profounder insight of a tortured soul than this of Fernando Nash, "the king who lost his crown before he had it."

Dionysus in Doubt (1925) begins and ends with a caustic arraignment of our mechanistic civilization, and is primarily a scornful and carefully premeditated condemnation of the Eighteenth Amendment, an attack which never descends to polemics or political diatribe. Robinson's ironic accents lift every phrase above the argumentative matter; the darkest of his doubts are illumined by "the salvage of a smile." Besides two other longish poems, this volume includes eighteen sonnets which again display Robinson's supremacy in the form. Time and again, he packs huge scenes into fourteen lines; if sonnets can assume the proportion of dramatic narratives, Robinson's have achieved the almost impossible feat.

Possibly the fact that Robinson had already won the Pulitzer Prize twice, possibly the increasing interest of his work may have accounted for his increased audience. Not even his most enthusiastic admirers awaited the reception accorded to Tristram (1927). Adopted by the most prominent book-club as its "book-of-the-month," awarded unstinted praise and the Pulitzer Prize for the third time, it outsold most "best-selling" novels. This was something of a phenomenon, for Tristram was not only a single poem of over forty thousand words, it was Robinson's most intricate and knotted work. But it was no mere problem in involution; Robinson, as though reacting against the charge of Puritanism, abandoned himself to a drama passionate and headlong.

Cavender's House (1929) was scarcely less esteemed. Formerly regarded as a poet's poet, the later volumes established Robinson in popular favor, no matter from what epoch he chose his theme. Tristram was medieval, Cavender's House was modern. Like Avon's Harvest and Roman Bartholow, the latter was melodrama glorified, but sharper and tenser than its predecessors. Both renewed the inevitable—and fatal—comparisons. Robinson's manner was likened to Browning's, his matter (particularly in the Arthurian tales) to Tennyson's. The comparison to Browning, though superficial and inaccurate, is at least comprehensible. The author of Merlin, like the author of Sordello, delights in subtly psychological portraiture, in the half-withheld inner drama, in the shift of suspensions and nuances of tension. But where Browning is forthright, Robinson is tangential; where Browning is lavish with imagery and flaring interjections, Robinson is sparse in metaphor and so economic with words that almost every phrase seems twisted and wrung of everything except its essential meaning. But the principal dissimilarity lies in their Weltanschauung, here they are diametrically opposed. Where Browning regards the universe compact of sweetness and light, Robinson observes a scheme whose chief components are bitterness and blight; the realm where "God's in his heaven, all's right with the world" becomes (as in the significantly entitled The Man Against the Sky) a place where

He may go forward like a stoic Roman
Where pangs and terrors in his pathway lie—
Or, seizing the swift logic of a woman,
Curse God and die.

Although Robinson was accused of holding consistently a negative attitude toward life, his poetry reveals a restless, uncertain, but persistent search for moral values. This quest—and questioning—of ultimates runs through his work as it ran through an age no longer satisfied with arid skepticism. It is significant that the same year which disclosed Eliot turning to a faith beyond intellect showed Robinson driving past reason to find

. . . There must be God; or if not God, a purpose and a law.

The conclusion of his sonnet to Crabbe might well be applied to him:

Whether or not we read him, we can feel
From time to time the vigor of his name
Against us like a finger for the shame
And emptiness of what our souls reveal
In books that are as altars where we kneel
To consecrate the flicker, not the flame.

After 1928 Robinson's poetry tended to become repetitious and prolix. Writing for an income and fearing the future, he felt it incumbent upon him to write an annual volume. Each year for seven years, until the very month of his death, he planned and issued a narrative poem in which personal as well as physical fatigue was increasingly evident. The Glory of the Nightingales (1930) is a melancholy tragedy which suffers from dryness of thought and atrophy of emotion. Matthias at the Door (1931) is another gloomy study which exhibits the author's narrowing limitations—the dark, deliberate idiom spoken indiscriminately by all the characters, the lack of life in any of the diamatis personae who function only as disembodied intellects in a state of continually painful thought, and a sense of hopeless defeatism. Nicodemus (1932) attempts to revive earlier spirits, but the summoned Annandale, Ponce de Leon, and Toussaint L'Ouverture are little more than garrulous ghosts. Talifer (1933) is far better, the happiest and most teasing of Robinson's longer poems, an unexpected blend of wisdom and wicked irony. Amaranth (1934) is another nightmare narrative of deluded failures and dream-ridden mediocrities. Unfortunately the poem, for all its dramatic possibilities, is wholly without drama, and it is difficult to tell whether Robinson is sympathizing with his lost shadows or satirizing them. The theme of frustration is continued in the posthumous King Jasper (1935) which was introduced with a shrewd analysis of "new ways of being new" by Robert Frost; unfortunately King Jasper is an involved and dubious allegory.

Subsequent to 1911 Robinson lived most of his summers at Peterborough, New Hampshire, at the MacDowell Colony, of which he was the unofficial but acknowledged presiding genius. He divided his winters between New York and Boston until ill health forced him to forego travel of any sort. His last winter in Boston was full of suffering, chiefly due to a growth in the pancreas, and when he was taken to the New York Hospital he was in a pitifully weakened condition. It was impossible to operate successfully and he died there April 6, 1935.

Upon his death there were the inevitable belated tributes to an unhappy poet and a lonely man. The most eloquent of them was Robinson Jeffers' spontaneous response. "I cannot speak of E. A. Robinson's work," wrote Jeffers. "Better critics than I have praised its qualities, and will again. Let me notice instead the debt we owe him for the qualities of his life; for the dignity with which he wore his fame, for the example of his reticence and steady concentration, for the single-mindedness with which he followed his own sense of direction, unbewildered and undiverted. . . . We are grateful that he was not what they call 'a good showman,' but gave himself to his work, not to his audience, and would have preferred complete failure to any success with the least taint of charlatanry." It was this undeviating integrity which carried Robinson through his difficulties and won him the admiration of all his contemporaries, irrespective of their preferences or poetic affiliations.

It has been said that Robinson's pessimism alienated part of his audience. But Robinson always took pains to refute this charge, not only in his private protests—in his letters and conversations—but in his poems. He denied that life was merely a material phenomenon. In the sonnet "Credo" he implied his faith; he said it explicitly when he maintained that humanity might be unaware of its destiny and unsure of its divinity, but it could not surrender its belief: "The world is not a 'prison-house' but a kind of spiritual kindergarten, where millions of bewildered infants are trying to spell God with the wrong blocks."

EX I T

For what we owe to other days,
Before we poisoned him with praise,
May we who shrank to find him weak
Remember that he cannot speak.

For envy that we may recall,
And for our faith before the fall,
May we who are alive be slow
To tell what we shall never know.

For penance he would not confess,
And for the fateful emptiness
Of early triumph undermined,
May we now venture to be kind.

C R E D O

I cannot find my way: there is no star
In all the shrouded heavens anywhere;
And there is not a whisper in the air
Of any living voice but one so far
That I can hear it only as a bar
Of lost, imperial music, played when fair
And angel fingers wove, and unaware,
Dead leaves to garlands where no roses are.

No, there is not a glimmer, nor a call,
For one that welcomes, welcomes when he fears,
The black and awful chaos of the night;
But through it all,—above, beyond it all—
I know the far-sent message of the years,
I feel the coming glory of the Light!

JAMES WETHERELL

We never half believed the stuff
 They told about James Wetherell;
 We always liked him well enough,
 And always tried to use him well;
 But now some things have come to light,
 And James has vanished from our view.—
 There isn't very much to write,
 There isn't very much to do.

MINIVER CHEEVY

Miniver Cheevy, child of scorn,
 Grew lean while he assailed the seasons;
 He wept that he was ever born,
 And he had reasons.

Miniver loved the days of old
 When swords were bright and steeds were prancing;
 The vision of a warrior bold
 Would set him dancing.

Miniver sighed for what was not,
 And dreamed, and rested from his labors;

He dreamed of Thebes and Camelot,
 And Priam's neighbors.

Miniver mourned the ripe renown—
 That made so many a name so fragrant;
 He mourned Romance, now on the town,
 And Art, a vagrant.

Miniver loved the Medici,
 Albeit he had never seen one;
 He would have sinned incessantly
 Could he have been one.

Miniver cursed the commonplace
 And eyed a khaki suit with loathing;
 He missed the medieval grace
 Of iron clothing.

Miniver scorned the gold he sought,
 But sore annoyed was he without it;
 Miniver thought, and thought, and thought,
 And thought about it.

Miniver Cheevy, born too late,
 Scratched his head and kept on thinking;
 Miniver coughed, and called it fate,
 And kept on drinking.

CLIFF KLINGENHAGEN

Cliff Klingenhausen had me in to dine
 With him one day; and after soup and meat,
 And all the other things there were to eat,
 Cliff took two glasses and filled one with wine
 And one with wormwood. Then, without a sign
 For me to choose at all, he took the draught
 Of bitterness himself, and lightly quaffed
 It off, and said the other one was mine.

And when I asked him what the deuce he meant
 By doing that, he only looked at me
 And grinned, and said it was a way of his.
 And though I know the fellow, I have spent
 Long time a-wondering when I shall be
 As happy as Cliff Klingenhausen is.

THE HOUSE ON THE HILL

They are all gone away,
The House is shut and still,
There is nothing more to say.

Through broken walls and gray
The winds blow bleak and shrill;
They are all gone away.

Nor is there one today
To speak them good or ill:
There is nothing more to say.

Why is it then we stray
Around that sunken sill?
They are all gone away,

And our poor fancy-play
For them is wasted skill:
There is nothing more to say.

There is ruin and decay
In the House on the Hill:
They are all gone away,
There is nothing more to say.

AN OLD STORY

Strange that I did not know him then,
That friend of mine.

I did not even show him then
One friendly sign;

But cursed him for the ways he had
To make me see
My envy of the praise he had
For praising me.

I would have rid the earth of him
Once, in my pride.
I never knew the worth of him
Until he died.

RICHARD CORY

Whenever Richard Cory went down town,
We people on the pavement looked at him:
He was a gentleman from sole to crown,
Clean favored, and imperially slim.

And he was always quietly arrayed,
And he was always human when he talked;
But still he fluttered pulses when he said,
"Good-morning," and he glittered when he walked.

And he was rich—yes, richer than a king—
And admirably schooled in every grace:
In fine, we thought that he was everything
To make us wish that we were in his place.

So on we worked, and waited for the light,
And went without the meat, and cursed the bread;
And Richard Cory, one calm summer night,
Went home and put a bullet through his head.

BEWICK FINZER

Time was when his half million drew
The breath of six per cent;
But soon the worm of what-was-not
Fed hard on his content;
And something crumbled in his brain
When his half million went.

Time passed, and filled along with his
The place of many more;
Time came, and hardly one of us
Had credence to restore,
From what appeared one day, the man
Whom we had known before.
The broken voice, the withered neck,
The coat worn out with care,

The cleanliness of indigence,
The brilliance of despair,
The fond imponderable dreams
Of affluence,—all were there.

Poor Finzer, with his dreams and schemes,
Fares hard now in the race,
With heart and eye that have a task
When he looks in the face

Of one who might so easily
Have been in Finzer's place.

He comes unfailing for the loan
We give and then forget;
He comes, and probably for years
Will he be coming yet,—
Familiar as an old mistake,
And futile as regret.

Because he was a butcher and thereby
Did earn an honest living (and did right)
I would not have you think that Reuben Bright
Was any more a brute than you or I;
For when they told him that his wife must die,
He stared at them and shook with grief and fright,
And cried like a great baby half that night,
And made the women cry to see him cry.

And after she was dead, and he had paid
The singers and the sexton and the rest,
He packed a lot of things that she had made
Most mournfully away in an old chest
Of hers, and put some chopped-up cedar boughs
In with them, and tore down the slaughter-house.

No more with overflowing light
Shall fill the eyes that now are faded,
Nor shall another's fringe with night
Their woman-hidden world as they did.
No more shall quiver down the days
The flowing wonder of her ways,
Whereof no language may requite
The shifting and the many-shaded.

The grace, divine, definitive,
Clings only as a faint forestalling;
The laugh that love could not forgive
Is hushed, and answers to no calling;

The forehead and the little ears
Have gone where Saturn keeps the years;
The breast where roses could not live
Has done with rising and with falling.

The beauty, shattered by the laws
That have creation in their keeping,
No longer trembles at applause,
Or over children that are sleeping;
And we who delve in beauty's lore
Know all that we have known before
Of what inexorable cause
Makes Time so vicious in his reaping.

C A L V A R Y

Friendless and faint, with martyred steps and slow,
Faint for the flesh, but for the spirit free,
Stung by the mob that came to see the show,
The Master toiled along to Calvary;
We gibed him, as he went, with houndish glee,
Till his dimmed eyes for us did overflow;

We cursed his vengeless hands thrice wretchedly,—
 And this was nineteen hundred years ago.
 But after nineteen hundred years the shame
 Still clings, and we have not made good the loss
 That outraged faith has entered in his name.
 Ah, when shall come love's courage to be strong!
 Tell me, O Lord—tell me, O Lord, how long
 Are we to keep Christ writhing on the cross!

/ VICKERY'S MOUNTAIN

Blue in the west the mountain stands,
 And through the long twilight
 Vickery sits with folded hands,
 And Vickery's eyes are bright.
 Bright, for he knows what no man else
 On earth as yet may know:
 There's a golden word that he never tells,
 And a gift that he will not show.

He dreams of honor and wealth and fame,
 He smiles, and well he may;
 For to Vickery once a sick man came
 Who did not go away.

The day before the day to be,
 "Vickery," said the guest,
 "You know as you live what's left of me—
 And you shall know the rest.

"You know as you live that I have come
 To what we call the end.
 No doubt you have found me troublesome,
 But you've also found a friend;

"For we shall give and you shall take
 The gold that is in view;
 The mountain there and I shall make
 A golden man of you.

"And you shall leave a friend behind
 Who neither frets nor feels;
 And you shall move among your kind
 With hundreds at your heels.

"Now this I have written here
 Tells all that need be told;
 So, Vickery, take the way that's clear,
 And be a man of gold."

Vickery turned his eyes again
 To the far mountain-side,

And wept a tear for worthy men
 Defeated and defied.

Since then a crafty score of years
 Have come, and they have gone;
 But Vickery counts no lost arrears:
 He lingers and lives on.

Blue in the west the mountain stands,
 Familiar as a face,
 Blue, but Vickery knows what sands
 Are golden at its base.

He dreams and lives upon the day
 When he shall walk with kings.
 Vickery smiles—and well he may:
 The life-caged linnet sings.

Vickery thinks the time will come
 To go for what is his;
 But hovering, unseen hands at home
 Will hold him where he is.

There's a golden word that he never tells
 And a gift that he will not show.
 All to be given to someone else—
 And Vickery shall not know.

TOO MUCH COFFEE

Together in infinite shade
 They defy the invincible dawn:
 The Measure that never was made,
 The Line that never was drawn.

THE MASTER

(Lincoln. Supposed to have been written not long after the Civil War)

A flying word from here and there
 Had sown the name at which we sneered,
 But soon the name was everywhere,
 To be reviled and then revered:

A presence to be loved and feared,
We cannot hide it, or deny
That we, the gentlemen who jeered,
May be forgotten by and by.

He came when days were perilous
And hearts of men were sore beguiled;
And having made his note of us,
He pondered and was reconciled.
Was ever master yet so mild
As he, and so untamable?
We doubted, even when he smiled,
Not knowing what he knew so well.

He knew that undeeceiving fate
Would shame us whom he served unsought;
He knew that he must wince and wait—
The jest of those for whom he fought;
He knew devoutly what he thought
Of us and of our ridicule;
He knew that we must all be taught
Like little children in a school.

We gave a glamour to the task
That he encountered and saw through,
But little of us did he ask,
And little did we ever do.
And what appears if we review
The season when we railed and chaffed?
It is the face of one who knew
That we were learning while we laughed.

The face that in our vision feels
Again the venom that we flung,

Transfigured to the world reveals
The vigilance to which we clung.
Shrewd, hallowed, harassed, and among
The mysteries that are untold,
The face we see was never young,
Nor could it ever have been old.

For he, to whom we had applied
Our shopman's test of age and worth,
Was elemental when he died,
As he was ancient at his birth:
The saddest among kings of earth,
Bowed with a galling crown, this man
Met rancor with a cryptic mirth,
Laconic—and Olympian.

The love, the grandeur, and the fame
Are bounded by the world alone;
The calm, the smoldering, and the flame
Of awful patience were his own:
With him they are forever flown
Past all our fond self-shadowings,
Wherewith we cumber the Unknown
As with inept Icarian wings.

For we were not as other men:
'Twas ours to soar and his to see.
But we are coming down again,
And we shall come down pleasantly;
Nor shall we longer disagree
On what it is to be sublime,
But flourish in our perigee
And have one Titan at a time.

MR. FLOOD'S PARTY

Old Eben Flood, climbing alone one night
Over the hill between the town below
And the forsaken upland hermitage
That held as much as he should ever know
On earth again of home, paused warily.
The road was his with not a native near;
And Eben, having leisure, said aloud,
For no man else in Tilbury Town to hear:

"Well, Mr. Flood, we have the harvest moon
Again, and we may not have many more;
The bird is on the wing, the poet says,
And you and I have said it here before.
Drink to the bird." He raised up to the light
The jug that he had gone so far to fill,

And answered huskily: "Well, Mr. Flood,
Since you propose it, I believe I will."

Alone, as if enduring to the end
A valiant armor of scarred hopes outworn,
He stood there in the middle of the road
Like Roland's ghost winding a silent horn.
Below him, in the town among the trees,
Where friends of other days had honored him,
A phantom salutation of the dead
Rang thinly till old Eben's eyes were dim.

Then, as a mother lays her sleeping child
Down tenderly, fearing it may awake,
He set the jug down slowly at his feet
With trembling care, knowing that most things break;
And only when assured that on firm earth
It stood, as the uncertain lives of men
Assuredly did not, he paced away,
And with his hand extended paused again:

"Well, Mr. Flood, we have not met like this
In a long time; and many a change has come
To both of us, I fear, since last it was
We had a drop together. Welcome home!"
Convivially returning with himself,
Again he raised the jug up to the light;
And with an acquiescent quaver said:
"Well, Mr. Flood, if you insist, I might.

"Only a very little, Mr. Flood—
For auld lang syne. No more, sir; that will do."
So, for the time, apparently it did,
And Eben evidently thought so too;
For soon amid the silver loneliness
Of night he lifted up his voice and sang,
Secure, with only two moons listening,
Until the whole harmonious landscape rang—

"For auld lang syne." The weary throat gave out,
The last word wavered, and the song being done,
He raised again the jug regretfully
And shook his head, and was again alone.
There was not much that was ahead of him,
And there was nothing in the town below—
Where strangers would have shut the many doors
That many friends had opened long ago.

GEORGE CRABBE

Give him the darkest inch your shelf allows,
Hide him in lonely garrets, if you will,—

But his hard, human pulse is throbbing still
 With the sure strength that fearless truth endows.
 In spite of all fine science disavows,
 Of his plain excellence and stubborn skill
 There yet remains what fashion cannot kill,
 Though years have thinned the laurel from his brows.

Whether or not we read him, we can feel
 From time to time the vigor of his name
 Against us like a finger for the shame
 And emptiness of what our souls reveal
 In books that are as altars where we kneel
 To consecrate the flicker, not the flame.

L U K E H A V E R G A L

Go to the western gate, Luke Havergal,
 There where the vines cling crimson on the wall,
 And in the twilight wait for what will come.
 The leaves will whisper there of her, and some,
 Like flying words, will strike you as they fall;
 But go, and if you listen, she will call.
 Go to the western gate, Luke Havergal—
 Luke Havergal.

No, there is not a dawn in eastern skies
 To rift the fiery night that's in your eyes;
 But there, where western glooms are gathering,
 The dark will end the dark, if anything:
 God slays himself with every leaf that flies,
 And hell is more than half of paradise.
 No, there is not a dawn in eastern skies—
 In eastern skies.

Out of a grave I come to tell you this,
 Out of a grave I come to quench the kiss
 That flames upon your forehead with a glow
 That blinds you to the way that you must go.
 Yes, there is yet one way to where she is,
 Bitter, but one that faith may never miss.
 Out of a grave I come to tell you this—
 To tell you this.

There is the western gate, Luke Havergal,
 There are the crimson leaves upon the wall.
 Go, for the winds are tearing them away,—
 Nor think to riddle the dead words they say,
 Nor any more to feel them as they fall;
 But go, and if you trust her she will call.
 There is the western gate, Luke Havergal—
 Luke Havergal.

JOHN GORHAM

"Tell me what you're doing over here, John Gorham, Sighing hard and seeming to be sorry when you're not;
Make me laugh or let me go now, for long faces in the moonlight
Are a sign for me to say again a word that you forgot."—

"I'm over here to tell you what the moon already
May have said or maybe shouted ever since a year ago;
I'm over here to tell you what you are, Jane Wayland,
And to make you rather sorry, I should say, for being so."—

"Tell me what you're saying to me now, John Gorham,
Or you'll never see as much of me as ribbons any more;
I'll vanish in as many ways as I have toes and fingers,
And you'll not follow far for one where flocks have been before."—

"I'm sorry now you never saw the flocks, Jane Wayland,
But you're the one to make of them as many as you need.
And then about the vanishing: It's I who mean to vanish;
And when I'm here no longer you'll be done with me indeed."—

"That's a way to tell me what I am, John Gorham!
How am I to know myself until I make you smile?
Try to look as if the moon were making faces at you,
And a little more as if you meant to stay a little while."—

"You are what it is that over rose-blown gardens
Makes a pretty flutter for a season in the sun;
You are what it is that with a mouse, Jane Wayland,
Catches him and lets him go and eats him up for fun."—

"Sure I never took you for a mouse, John Gorham;
All you say is easy, but so far from being true,
That I wish you wouldn't ever be again the one to think so;
For it isn't cats and butterflies that I would be to you."—

"All your little animals are in one picture—
One I've had before me since a year ago tonight;
And the picture where they live will be of you, Jane Wayland,
Till you find a way to kill them or to keep them out of sight."—

"Won't you ever see me as I am, John Gorham,
Leaving out the foolishness and all I never meant?
Somewhere in me there's a woman, if you know the way to find her.
Will you like me any better if I prove it and repent?"—

"I doubt if I shall ever have the time, Jane Wayland;
And I dare say all this moonlight lying round us might as well
Fall for nothing on the shards of broken urns that are forgotten,
As on two that have no longer much of anything to tell."

HOW ANNANDALE WENT OUT

"They called it Annandale—and I was there
 To flourish, to find words, and to attend:
 Liar, physician, hypocrite, and friend,
 I watched him; and the sight was not so fair
 As one or two that I have seen elsewhere:
 An apparatus not for me to mend—
 A wreck, with hell between him and the end,
 Remained of Annandale; and I was there.

"I knew the ruin as I knew the man;
 So put the two together, if you can,
 Remembering the worst you know of me.
 Now view yourself as I was, on the spot,
 With a slight kind of engine. Do you see?
 Like this . . . You wouldn't hang me? I thought not."

THE FIELD OF GLORY

War shook the land where Levi dwelt,
 And fired the dismal wrath he felt,
 That such a doom was ever wrought
 As his, to toil while others fought;
 To toil, to dream—and still to dream,
 With one day barren as another;
 To consummate, as it would seem,
 The dry despair of his old mother.

Far off one afternoon began
 The sound of man destroying man;
 And Levi, sick with nameless rage,
 Condemned again his heritage,
 And sighed for scars that might have come,
 And would, if once he could have sundered
 Those harsh, inhering claims of home
 That held him while he cursed and wondered.

Another day, and then there came,
 Rough, bloody, ribald, hungry, lame,
 But yet themselves, to Levi's door,
 Two remnants of the day before.
 They laughed at him and what he sought;
 They jeered him and his painful acre;
 But Levi knew that they had fought,
 And left their manners to their Maker.

That night, for the grim widow's ears,
 With hopes that hid themselves in fears,
 He told of arms, and fiery deeds,
 Whereat one leaps the while he reads,
 And said he'd be no more a clown,
 While others drew the breath of battle.
 The mother looked him up and down,
 And laughed—a scant laugh with a rattle.

She told him what she found to tell,
 And Levi listened, and heard well
 Some admonitions of a voice
 That left him no cause to rejoice.—
 He sought a friend, and found the stars,
 And prayed aloud that they should aid him;
 But they said not a word of wars,
 Or of a reason why God made him.

And who's of this or that estate
 We do not wholly calculate,
 When baffling shades that shift and cling
 Are not without their glimmering;
 When even Levi, tired of faith,
 Beloved of none, forgot by many,
 Dismissed as an inferior wraith,
 Reborn may be as great as any.

THE CLERKS

I did not think that I should find them there
 When I came back again; but there they stood,
 As in the days they dreamed of when young blood
 Was in their cheeks and women called them fair.
 Be sure they met me with an ancient air,—
 And yes, there was a shop-worn brotherhood
 About them; but the men were just as good,
 And just as human as they ever were.

And you that ache so much to be sublime,
 And you that feed yourselves with your descent,
 What comes of all your visions and your fears?
 Poets and kings are but the clerks of Time,
 Tiering the same dull webs of discontent
 Clipping the same sad alnage of the years.

THE DARK HILLS

Dark hills at evening in the west,
 Where sunset hovers like a sound
 Of golden horns that sang to rest
 Old bones of warriors under ground,
 Far now from all the bannered ways
 Where flash the legions of the sun,
 You fade—as if the last of days
 Were fading and all wars were done.

' EROS TURANNOS

She fears him, and will always ask
 What fated her to choose him;
 She meets in his engaging mask
 All reasons to refuse him;
 But what she meets and what she fears
 Are less than are the downward years,
 Drawn slowly to the foamless weirs
 Of age, were she to lose him.

Between a blurred sagacity
 That once had power to sound him,
 And Love, that will not let him be
 The Judas that she found him,
 Her pride assuages her almost,
 As if it were alone the cost.
 He sees that he will not be lost,
 And waits and looks around him.

A sense of ocean and old trees
 Envelops and allures him;

Tradition, touching all he sees,
 Beguiles and reassures him;
 And all her doubts of what he says
 Are dimmed with what she knows of days—
 Till even prejudice delays
 And fades, and she secures him.

The falling leaf inaugurates
 The reign of her confusion;
 The pounding wave reverberates
 The dirge of her illusion;
 And home, where passion lived and died,
 Becomes a place where she can hide,
 While all the town and harbor-side
 Vibrate with her seclusion.

We tell you, tapping on our brows,
 The story as it should be,
 As if the story of a house
 Were told, or ever could be;
 We'll have no kindly veil between
 Her visions and those we have seen,—
 As if we guessed what hers have been,
 Or what they are or would be.

Meanwhile we do no harm; for they
 That with a god have striven,
 Not hearing much of what we say,
 Take what the god has given;
 Though like waves breaking it may be,
 Or like a changed familiar tree,
 Or like a stairway to the sea
 Where down the blind are driven.

THE SHEAVES

Where long the shadows of the wind had rolled,
 Green wheat was yielding to the change assigned;
 And as by some vast magic undivined
 The world was turning slowly into gold.
 Like nothing that was ever bought or sold
 It waited there, the body and the mind;
 And with a mighty meaning of a kind
 That tells the more the more it is not told.

So in a land where all days are not fair,
 Fair days went on till on another day
 A thousand golden sheaves were lying there,
 Shining and still, but not for long to stay—
 As if a thousand girls with golden hair
 Might rise from where they slept and go away.

BEN JONSON ENTERTAINS A MAN FROM STRATFORD

You are a friend then, as I make it out,
 Of our man Shakespeare, who alone of us
 Will put an ass's head in Fairyland
 As he would add a shilling to more shillings,
 All most harmonious—and out of his Miraculous inviolable increase
 Fills Ilion, Rome, or any town you like
 Of olden time with timeless Englishmen;
 And I must wonder what you think of him—
 All you down there where your small Avon flows
 By Stratford, and where you're an Alderman.
 Some, for a guess, would have him riding back
 To be a farrier there, or say a dyer;
 Or maybe one of your adept surveyors;
 Or like enough the wizard of all tanners.
 Not you—no fear of that; for I discern
 In you a kindling of the flame that saves—
 The nimble element, the true caloric;
 I see it, and was told of it, moreover,
 By our discriminate friend himself, no other.
 Had you been one of the sad average,
 As he would have it—meaning, as I take it,
 The sinew and the solvent of our Island,
 You'd not be buying beer for this Terpander's
 Approved and estimated friend Ben Jonson;
 He'd never foist it as a part of his
 Contingent entertainment of a townsman
 While he goes off rehearsing, as he must,
 If he shall ever be the Duke of Stratford.
 And my words are no shadow on your town—

Far from it; for one town's like another
 As all are unlike London. Oh, he knows it—
 And there's the Stratford in him; he denies it,
 And there's the Shakespeare in him. So, God help him!

I tell him he needs Greek; but neither God
 Nor Greek will help him. Nothing will help that man.
 You see the fates have given him so much,
 He must have all or perish—or look out
 Of London, where he sees too many lords.
 They're part of half what ails him: I suppose
 There's nothing fouler down among the demons
 Than what it is he feels when he remembers
 The dust and sweat and ointment of his calling
 With his lords looking on and laughing at him.
 King as he is, he can't be king de facto,
 And that's as well, because he wouldn't like it;
 He'd frame a lower rating of men then
 Than he has now; and after that would come
 An abdication or an apoplexy.
 He can't be king, not even king of Stratford—
 Though half the world, if not the whole of it,
 May crown him with a crown that fits no king
 Save Lord Apollo's homesick emissary:
 Not there on Avon, or on any stream
 Where Naiads and their white arms are no more
 Shall he find home again. It's all too bad.
 But there's a comfort, for he'll have that House—
 The best you ever saw; and he'll be there
 Anon, as you're an Alderman. Good God!
 He makes me lie awake o' nights and laugh.

And you have known him from his origin,
 You tell me; and a most uncommon urchin
 He must have been to the few seeing ones—
 A trifle terrifying, I dare say,
 Discovering a world with his man's eyes,
 Quite as another lad might see some finches,
 If he looked hard and had an eye for Nature.
 But this one had his eyes and their foretelling,
 And he had you to fare with, and what else?
 He must have had a father and a mother—
 In fact I've heard him say so—and a dog,
 As a boy should, I venture; and the dog,
 Most likely, was the only man who knew him.
 A dog, for all I know, is what he needs
 As much as anything right here today,
 To counsel him about his disillusionments,
 Old aches, and parturitions of what's coming—
 A dog of orders, an emeritus,
 To wag his tail at him when he comes home,

And then to put his paws up on his knees
And say, "For God's sake, what's it all about?"

I don't know whether he needs a dog or not—
Or what he needs. I tell him he needs Greek;
I'll talk of rules and Aristotle with him,
And if his tongue's at home he'll say to that,
"I have your word that Aristotle knows,
And you mine that I don't know Aristotle."
He's all at odds with all the unities,
And what's yet worse it doesn't seem to matter;
He treads along through Time's old wilderness
As if the tramp of all the centuries
Had left no roads—and there are none, for him;
He doesn't see them, even with those eyes—
And that's a pity, or I say it is.
Accordingly we have him as we have him—
Going his way, the way that he goes best,
A pleasant animal with no great noise
Or nonsense anywhere to set him off—
Save only divers and inclement devils
Have made of late his heart their dwelling-place.
A flame half ready to fly out sometimes
At some annoyance may be fanned up in him,
But soon it falls, and when it falls goes out;
He knows how little room there is in there
For crude and futile animosities,
And how much for the joy of being whole,
And how much for long sorrow and old pain.
On our side there are some who may be given
To grow old wondering what he thinks of us
And some above us, who are, in his eyes,
Above himself—and that's quite right and English.
Yet here we smile, or disappoint the gods
Who made it so; the gods have always eyes
To see men scratch; and they see one down here
Who itches, manor-bitten, to the bone,
Albeit he knows himself—yes, yes, he knows—
The lord of more than England and of more
Than all the seas of England in all time
Shall ever wash. D'y'e wonder that I laugh?
He sees me, and he doesn't seem to care;
And why the devil should he? I can't tell you.
I'll meet him out alone of a bright Sunday,
Trim, rather spruce, and quite the gentleman.
"What, ho, my lord!" say I. He doesn't hear me;
Wherefore I have to pause and look at him.
He's not enormous, but one looks at him.
A little on the round if you insist,
For now, God save the mark, he's growing old;
He's five and forty, and to hear him talk

These days you'd call him eighty; then you'd add
More years to that. He's old enough to be The father of a world, and so he is.
"Ben, you're a scholar, what's the time of day?"
Says he; and there shines out of him again
An aged light that has no age or station—
The mystery that's his—a mischievous
Half-mad serenity that laughs at fame
For being won so easy, and at friends
Who laugh at him for what he wants the most,
And for his dukedom down in Warwickshire;—
By which you see we're all a little jealous. . . .
Poor Greene! I fear the color of his name
Was even as that of his ascending soul;
And he was one where there are many others—
Some scrivening to the end against their fate,
Their puppets all in ink and all to die there;
And some with hands that once would shade an eye
That scanned Euripides and Aeschylus
Will reach by this time for a pot-house mop
To slush their first and last of royalties.
Poor devils! and they all play to his hand;
For so it was in Athens and old Rome.
But that's not here or there; I've wandered off.
Greene does it, or I'm careful. Where's that boy?

Yes, he'll go back to Stratford. And we'll miss him?
Dear sir, there'll be no London here without him.
We'll all be riding, one of these fine days,
Down there to see him—and his wife won't like us;
And then we'll think of what he never said
Of women—which, if taken all in all
With what he did say, would buy many horses.
Though nowadays he's not so much for women.
"So few of them," he says, "are worth the guessing."
But there's a worm at work when he says that,
And while he says it one feels in the air
A deal of circumambient hocus-pocus.
They've had him dancing till his toes were tender,
And he can feel 'em now, come chilly rains.
There's no long cry for going into it,
However, and we don't know much about it.
But you in Stratford, like most here in London,
Have more now in the Sonnets than you paid for;
He's put one there with all her poison on,
To make a singing fiction of a shadow
That's in his life a fact, and always will be.
But she's no care of ours, though Time, I fear,
Will have a more reverberant ado
About her than about another one
Who seems to have decoyed him, married him,

And sent him scuttling on his way to London—
With much already learned, and more to learn,
And more to follow. Lord! how I see him now,
Pretending, maybe trying, to be like us.
Whatever he may have meant, we never had him;
He failed us, or escaped, or what you will—
And there was that about him (God knows what—We'd flayed another had he tried it on us)
That made as many of us as had wits
More fond of all his easy distances
Than one another's noise and clap-your-shoulder.
But think you not, my friend, he'd never talk!
Talk? He was eldritch at it; and we listened—
Thereby acquiring much we knew before
About ourselves, and hitherto had held
Irrelevant, or not prime to the purpose.
And there were some, of course, and there be now,
Disordered and reduced amazedly
To resignation by the mystic seal
Of young finality the gods had laid
On everything that made him a young demon;
And one or two shot looks at him already
As he had been their executioner;
And once or twice he was, not knowing it—
Or knowing, being sorry for poor clay
And saying nothing . . . Yet, for all his engines,
You'll meet a thousand of an afternoon
Who strut and sun themselves and see around 'em
A world made out of more that has a reason
Than his, I swear, that he sees here today;
Though he may scarcely give a Fool an exit
But we mark how he sees in everything
A law that, given that we flout it once too often,
Brings fire and iron down on our naked heads.
To me it looks as if the power that made him,
For fear of giving all things to one creature,
Left out the first—faith, innocence, illusion,
Whatever 'tis that keeps us out o' Bedlam—
And thereby, for his too consuming vision,
Empowered him out of nature; though to see him,
You'd never guess what's going on inside him.
He'll break out some day like a keg of ale
With too much independent frenzy in it;
And all for cellaring what he knows won't keep,
And what he'd best forget—but that he can't.
You'll have it, and have more than I'm foretelling;
And there'll be such a roaring at the Globe
As never stunned the bleeding gladiators.
He'll have to change the color of its hair
A bit, for now he calls it Cleopatra.
Black hair would never do for Cleopatra.

But you and I are not yet two old women,
 And you're a man of office. What he does
 Is more to you than how it is he does it—
 And that's what the Lord God has never told him.
 They work together, and the Devil helps 'em;
 They do it of a morning, or if not,
 They do it of a night; in which event
 He's peevish of a morning. He seems old;
 He's not the proper stomach or the sleep—
 And they're two sovran agents to conserve him
 Against the fiery art that has no mercy
 But what's in that prodigious grand new House.
 I gather something happening in his boyhood
 Fulfilled him with a boy's determination
 To make all Stratford 'ware of him. Well, well,
 I hope at last he'll have his joy of it,
 And all his pigs and sheep and bellowing beeves,
 And frogs and owls and unicorns, moreover,
 Be less than hell to his attendant ears.
 Oh, past a doubt we'll all go down to see him.

He may be wise. With London two days off,
 Down there some wind of heaven may yet revive him,
 But there's no quickening breath from anywhere
 Shall make of him again the young poised faun
 From Warwickshire, who'd made, it seems, already
 A legend of himself before I came
 To blink before the last of his first lightning.
 Whatever there be, there'll be no more of that;
 The coming on of his old monster Time
 Has made him a still man; and he has dreams
 Were fair to think on once, and all found hollow.
 He knows how much of what men paint themselves
 Would blister in the light of what they are;
 He sees how much of what was great now shares
 An eminence transformed and ordinary;
 He knows too much of what the world has hushed
 In others, to be loud now for himself;
 He knows now at what height low enemies
 May reach his heart, and high friends let him fall;
 But what not even such as he may know
 Bedevils him the worst: his lark may sing
 At heaven's gate how he will, and for as long
 As joy may listen, but he sees no gate,
 Save one whereat the spent clay waits a little
 Before the churchyard has it, and the worm.

Not long ago, late in an afternoon,
 I came on him unseen down Lambeth way,
 And on my life I was afear'd of him:
 He gloomed and mumbled like a soul from Tophet,

His hands behind him and his head bent solemn.
 "What is it now," said I, "another woman?"
 That made him sorry for me, and he smiled.
 "No, Ben," he mused; "it's Nothing. It's all Nothing.
 We come, we go; and when we're done, we're done;
 Spiders and flies—we're mostly one or t'other—
 We come, we go; and when we're done, we're done."
 "By God, you sing that song as if you knew it!"
 Said I, by way of cheering him; "what ails ye?"
 "I think I must have come down here to think,"
 Says he to that, and pulls his little beard;
 "Your fly will serve as well as anybody,
 And what's his hour? He flies, and flies, and flies,
 And in his fly's mind has a brave appearance;
 And then your spider gets him in her net,
 And eats him out, and hangs him up to dry.
 That's Nature, the kind mother of us all.
 And then your slattern housemaid swings her broom,
 And where's your spider? And that's Nature, also.
 It's Nature, and it's Nothing. It's all Nothing.
 It's all a world where bugs and emperors
 Go singularly back to the same dust,
 Each in his time; and the old, ordered stars
 That sang together, Ben, will sing the same Old stave tomorrow."

When he talks like that,
 There's nothing for a human man to do
 But lead him to some grateful nook like this
 Where we be now, and there to make him drink,
 He'll drink, for love of me, and then be sick;
 A sad sign always in a man of parts,
 And always very ominous. The great
 Should be as large in liquor as in love—
 And our great friend is not so large in either:
 One disaffects him, and the other fails him;
 Whatso he drinks that has an antic in it,
 He's wondering what's to pay in his insides;
 And while his eyes are on the Cyprian
 He's fribbling all the time with that damned House.
 We laugh here at his thrift, but after all
 It may be thrift that saves him from the devil;
 God gave it, anyhow—and we'll suppose
 He knew the compound of His handiwork.
 Today the clouds are with him, but anon
 He'll out of 'em enough to shake the tree
 Of life itself and bring down fruit unheard-of—
 And, throwing in the bruised and whole together,
 Prepare a wine to make us drunk with wonder;
 And if he live, there'll be a sunset spell

Thrown over him as over a glassed lake
That yesterday was all a black wild water.

God send he live to give us, if no more,
What now's a-rampage in him, and exhibit,
With a decent half-allegiance to the ages
An earnest of at least a casual eye
Turned once on what he owes to Gutenberg,
And to the fealty of more centuries
Than are as yet a picture in our vision.
"There's time enough—I'll do it when I'm old,
And we're immortal men," he says to that;
And then he says to me, "Ben, what's 'immortal'?"
Think you by any force of ordination
It may be nothing of a sort more noisy
Than a small oblivion of component ashes
That of a dream-addicted world was once
A moving atomy much like your friend here?"
Nothing will help that man. To make him laugh
I said then he was a mad mountebank—
And by the Lord I nearer made him cry.
I could have eat an eft then, on my knees,
Tails, claws, and all of him; for I had stung
The king of men, who had no sting for me,
And I had hurt him in his memories;
And I say now, as I shall say again,
I love the man this side idolatry.
He'll do it when he's old, he says. I wonder.
He may not be so ancient as all that.
For such as he the thing that is to do
Will do itself—but there's a reckoning;
The sessions that are now too much his own,
The roiling inward of a still outside,
The churning out of all those blood-fed lines,
The nights of many schemes and little sleep,
The full brain hammered hot with too much thinking,
The vexed heart over-worn with too much aching—
This weary jangling of conjoined affairs
Made out of elements that have no end,
And all confused at once, I understand,
Is not what makes a man to live forever.
O, no, not now! He'll not be going now:
There'll be time yet for God knows what explosions
Before he goes. He'll stay awhile. Just wait:
Just wait a year or two for Cleopatra,
For she's to be a balsam and a comfort;
And that's not all a jape of mine now, either.
For granted once the old way of Apollo
Sings in a man, he may then, if he's able,
Strike unafraid whatever strings he will
Upon the last and wildest of new lyres;
Nor out of his new magic, though it hymn

The shrieks of dungeoned hell, shall he create
 A madness or a gloom to shut quite out
 A cleaving daylight, and a last great calm
 Triumphant over shipwreck and all storms.
 He might have given Aristotle creeps,
 But surely would have given him his katharsis.
 He'll not be going yet. There's too much yet
 Unsung within the man. But when he goes,
 I'd stake ye coin o' the realm his only care
 For a phantom world he sounded and found wanting
 Will be a portion here, a portion there,
 Of this or that thing or some other thing
 That has a patent and intrinsical
 Equivalence in those egregious shillings.
 And yet he knows, God help him! Tell me, now,
 If ever there was anything let loose
 On earth by gods or devils heretofore
 Like this mad, careful, proud, indifferent Shakespeare!
 Where was it, if it ever was? By heaven,
 'Twas never yet in Rhodes or Pergamon—
 In Thebes or Nineveh, a thing like this!
 No thing like this was ever out of England;
 And that he knows. I wonder if he cares.
 Perhaps he does. . . . O Lord, that House in Stratford!

NEW ENGLAND

Here where the wind is always north-north-east
 And children learn to walk on frozen toes,
 Wonder begets an envy of all those
 Who boil elsewhere with such a lyric yeast
 Of love that you will hear them at a feast
 Where demons would appeal for some repose,
 Still clamoring where the chalice overflows
 And crying wildest who have drunk the least.

Passion is here a soilure of the wits,
 We're told, and Love a cross for them to bear;
 Joy shivers in the corner where she knits
 And Conscience always has the rocking-chair,
 Cheerful as when she tortured into fits
 The first cat that was ever killed by Care.

THE GIFT OF GOD

Blessed with a joy that only she
 Of all alive shall ever know,
 She wears a proud humility
 For what it was that willed it so,—
 That her degree should be so great
 Among the favored of the Lord

That she may scarcely bear the weight
 Of her bewildering reward.

As one apart, immune, alone,
 Or featured for the shining ones,
 And like to none that she has known
 Of other women's other sons,—

The firm fruition of her need,
He shines anointed; and he blurs
Her vision, till it seems indeed
A sacrifice to call him hers.

She fears a little for so much
Of what is best, and hardly dares
To think of him as one to touch
With aches, indignities, and cares;
She sees him rather at the goal,
Still shining; and her dream foretells
The proper shining of a soul
Where nothing ordinary dwells.

Perchance a canvass of the town
Would find him far from flags and shouts,
And leave him only the renown
Of many smiles and many doubts;
Perchance the crude and common tongue
Would havoc strangely with his worth;

But she, with innocence unwrung,
Would read his name around the earth.

And others, knowing how this youth
Would shine, if love could make him great,
When caught and tortured for the truth
Would only writh and hesitate;
While she, arranging for his days
What centuries could not fulfill,
Transmutes him with her faith and praise,
And has him shining where she will.

She crowns him with her gratefulness,
And says again that life is good;
And should the gift of God be less
In him than in her motherhood,
His fame, though vague, will not be small,
As upward through her dream he fares,
Half clouded with a crimson fall
Of roses thrown on marble stairs.

THE PRODIGAL SON

You are not merry, brother. Why not laugh,
As I do, and acclaim the fatted calf?
For, unless ways are changing here at home,
You might not have it if I had not come.
And were I not a thing for you and me
To execrate in anguish, you would be
As indigent a stranger to surprise,
I fear, as I was once, and as unwise.
Brother, believe as I do, it is best
For you that I'm again in the old nest—
Draggled, I grant you, but your brother still,
Full of good wine, good viands, and good will.
You will thank God, some day, that I returned,
And may be singing for what you have learned,
Some other day; and one day you may find Yourself a little nearer to mankind.
And having hated me till you are tired,
You will begin to see, as if inspired,
It was fate's way of educating us.
Remembering then when you were venomous,
You will be glad enough that I am gone,
But you will know more of what's going on;
For you will see more of what makes it go,
And in more ways than are for you to know.
We are so different when we are dead,
That you, alive, may weep for what you said;
And I, the ghost of one you could not save,
May find you planting lentils on my grave.

Edgar Lee Masters

EDGAR LEE MASTERS was born at Garnett, Kansas, August 23, 1869, of Puritan and pioneering stock. When he was still a boy, the family moved to Illinois, where, after desultory schooling, he studied law in his father's office at Lewiston. For a year he practiced with his father and then went to Chicago, where he became a successful attorney. Before going to Chicago, Masters had composed a quantity of rhymed verse in traditional forms on traditional themes; by the time he was twenty-four he had written about four hundred poems, the result of wide reading and the influence of Poe, Keats, Shelley, and Swinburne.

Masters' first volume of poems, published in his twenty-ninth year, was modestly entitled (perhaps with an implied bow to Omar Khayyám) A Book of Verses. With even greater modesty his second volume, The Blood of the Prophets (1905), was signed with a pseudonym, "Dexter Wallis." For the third book, Songs and Sonnets (1910), Masters adopted another pseudonym composed, this time, of the names of two Elizabethan dramatists: "Webster Ford." Meanwhile, under his own name, the author had published several plays—Maximilian (1902), Althea (1907), The Tinsler (1908), The Leaves of the Tree (1909), Eileen (1910), The Locket (1910)—and a set of essays, The New Star Chamber (1904).

Although industry is evident in the number and variety of these volumes there is little to indicate the vigor and driving honesty which propelled the succeeding work. Masters himself felt uncertain of his future, crippled by his environment. "I feel that no poet in English or American history had a harder life than mine was in the beginning at Lewiston," he wrote in his autobiography, Across Spoon River (1936), "among a people whose flesh and whose vibrations were better calculated to poison, to pervert, and even to kill a sensitive nature."

Masters left Lewiston for Chicago and became the partner of a famous criminal lawyer. Eight years later, his partner defaulted, professional and political enemies combined against him, and he plunged into the excited Chicago literary "movement" of 1912.

In 1914, Masters, at the suggestion of his friend, William Marion Reedy, turned from his preoccupation with classic subjects and began to draw upon the life he knew for those concise records which made him famous. Taking as his model The Greek Anthology, which Reedy had pressed upon him, Masters evolved Spoon River Anthology, that astonishing assemblage of over two hundred self-inscribed epitaphs, in which the dead of a Middle Western town are supposed to have written the truth about themselves. Through these frank revelations, many of them interrelated, the village is re-created; it lives again with all its intrigues, hypocrisies, feuds, martyrdoms and occasional exaltations. The monotony of existence in a drab township, the defeat of ideals, the struggle toward higher goals are synthesized in these crowded pages. All moods and all manner of voices are heard here—even Masters', who explains the selection of his form through "Petit, the Poet."

The success of the volume was extraordinary. With every new attack (and its frankness continued to make fresh enemies) its readers increased. It was imitated, parodied, reviled as "a piece of yellow journalism"; it was hailed as "an American Comédie Humaine." Finally, after the storm of controversy, it has taken its place as a landmark in American literature.

With Spoon River Anthology Masters arrived—and left. He went back to his first rhetorical style, resurrecting many of his earlier trifles, reprinting dull echoes of Tennyson, imitations of Shelley, archaic paraphrases in the manner of Swinburne. Yet though none of Masters' subsequent volumes can be compared to his masterpiece, all of them contain passages of the same straightforwardness and the stubborn searching that intensified his best-known characterizations.

Songs and Satires (1916) includes the startling "All Life in a Life" and the gravely moving "Silence." The Great Valley (1917) is packed with echoes and a growing dependence on Browning. In Toward the Gulf (1918), the Browning influence predominates. Starved Rock (1919), Domesday Book (1920) and The New Spoon River (1924) are queerly assembled mixtures of good, bad, and derivative verse. These volumes prepared us for the novels which, in their mixture of sharp concept and dull writing, were as uneven as his verse. The Fate of the Jury (1929) is a continuation of Domesday Book with its mechanics suggested by The Ring and the Book, large in outline, feeble in detail. Godbey (1931) is a dramatic poem containing six thousand lines of rhymed verse with a few sharply projected ideas, an occasionally vivid scene, and literally thousands of pedestrian couplets given over to debate and diatribe. Invisible Landscapes (1935) contains several ambitious poems devoted to varying manifestations of Nature, but they are impressive chiefly in length. One has only to compare Masters' "Hymn to Earth" with Elinor Wylie's poem of the same title to realize the difference between clairvoyance and doggedness.

Between 1935 and 1938 Masters was more prolific than ever. In less than three years he published a long autobiography, a novel, three biographies, three books of poems—eight volumes of declining merit. One of them, The New World (1937), was a quasi-epic which attempted to synthesize history and philosophy, law and literature. Poems of People (1936) was the best of the six; it marked a return to Masters' power of characterization plus a wider range than he had ever accomplished. The manner was equally varied, alternating from the gracefully lyrical "Week-End by the Sea" to the deeply etched "Widows," which contrasts the women living in "forsakeness and listless ease" with their menial sisters.

More People (1939) again reveals Masters as a grim historian of American life, lonely and bitter, but frequently turning the minutiae of history into poetry. The prairie section where Masters was born and where he grew up is spread out in the indigenous Illinois Poems (1941), in which the poet demonstrates his early environment and his late nostalgia. In spite of his repetitions and rhetoric, Masters' work is a continual if irritable quest for some key to the mystery of truth and the mystery of life. And there is always that milestone, the original Spoon River Anthology.

WEEK-END BY THE SEA

I

Far off the sea is gray and still as the sky,
Great waves roar to the shore like conch shells water-groined.

With a flapping coat I step, brace back as the wind drags by;
No ship as far as the seam where the sea and the sky are joined.

I am watched from the hotel, I think. Who faces the cold?
Why does he walk alone? 'Tis a bitter day.

But I trade dreams with the sea, for the sea is old,
And knows the dreams of a heart whose dreams are gray.

Two apple trees alone in the waste on a sandy ledge,
Grappled and woven together with sprouts in a blackened mesh,
They are dead almost at the roots, but nourish the sedge;
They are dead and at truce, like souls of outlived flesh.

I have startled a gull to flight. I thought him a wave:
White of his wings seemed foam, breast hued like the sand-hued roll.
When a part of the sea takes wing you would think that the grave
Of dead days might release to the heights a soul.

II

I slept as the day was ending: scarlet and gilt
Behind the Japan screen of shrubs and trees.
I awoke to the scabbard of night and the starry hilt
Of the sunken sun, to the old unease.

Sleeping, a void in my heart is awake;
Waking, there is the moon and the wind's moan.
I would I were as the sea that can break
Over the rocks, indifferent and alone.

III

I have climbed to the little burial plot of the lost
In wrecks at sea. West of me lies the town.
Below are the apple trees, pulling each other down.
Children are romping to school, ruddy from frost.

How the wind grieves around these weedy wisps,
And shakes them like a dog, sniffing from patch to patch.
I try the battered gate, lift up the latch,
And enter where the grass like a thistle lisps.

Lost at sea! Nothing thought out or planned!
What need? Thought enough in a moment that battles a wave!
What words tell more? And where is the hand to 'grave
Words that tell so much for the lost on land?

W I D O W S

For twenty years and more surviving after
Their husbands have been hidden away,
Gray, old, thin, or obese, day after day
Pillofed in luxury, waking with quavering laughter
From the drowsiness of midday food,
They sit, fingering long strands of crystals,
Reading a little in a waking mood;

Or waiting for the postman with epistles,
 Or for telephones, or callers coming to tea.
 Bonds, stocks, are theirs; or pensions it may be,
 Since the long-dead husband, under-salaried,
 Helped to subdue some barbarous isle;
 Now that he lies with the half-forgotten dead,
 His widow draws an honorarium,
 To prop her prestige yet a little while.
 The public treasury is rich, and feels
 The drain but little; yet it is a sum
 Which would relieve the anxious mind whose zeals
 For thought and progress dread the time to come.

In the hives of all the cities, high above
 The smoke and noise, where the air is pure,
 Are numberless widows, comfortable and secure,
 Protected by the watchman and God's love;
 Saved by the Church, and by the lawyer served,
 And by the actor, dancer, novelist amused.
 Some practise poetry; some, who are younger nerved,
 Dabble in sculpture; but all are used
 To win the attention of celebrities
 At dinners, or at the opera, to imbibe
 The high vitality of purchased devotees.
 But when not modeling, or scribbling verse,
 Nor drinking tea, nor tottering forth to dine,
 They sit concocting some new bribe
 To life for soul relief; they count what's in their purse;
 They stare at the window half asleep from wine
 Or poppy juice; they wait the luncheon hour;
 They visit with their maids; or they receive
 The heads of research schools, the which they dower,
 Or magazines, the better to achieve
 A place in memory or a present power;
 Or out of social bitterness they dictate
 The policies of journals, and compel
 Adherence to their husbands' inveterate
 Violence, like souls that brood in hell.
 From rents and funds, prescriptions, old mortmains
 They gather with fingers brown from moldy spots
 Exhaustless gold, with which they feed the veins
 Of palsied privilege, and they foil the plots
 Of living generations against the dying brains.

The hives of all the cities are full of these Widows, who in a complexity of combs
 Live in forsakeness and listless ease:
 All is deserted about them in such homes.
 Long has the rain fallen, and the snow been piled
 On the man under the trees outdoors;
 Even the bones in granite domiciled
 Have fallen apart—but still the widow sits

By the window resting above the city's floors.
 The drone, the gadfly, or the hornet flits
 About her lifeless hive; and she may gasp
 Beholding at times the black bees of the rites
 Of dead men, drag a fallen bee or wasp
 To the outdoors of rain or starry nights.
 And then she shudders, knowing the time is soon
 When the chauffeur of the ebon car will call
 To take her from the city where the moon
 Will eye the loneliness of hills; and all
 Her crystal necklaces and possessions will be strewn;
 And all the rentals of her lands,
 And dividends will re-assume with wings
 New shapes before the same insatiate hands.

And in the city there are numberless women,
 Widows grown old and lame, who scrub, or wait
 On entrance doors, or cook; whose lonely fate
 Is part of the city's pageant, part of the human Necessity, victims of profligate
 Or unprevisioned life! They have no spoil,
 No dividends, and no power of subsidy
 Over the world of care and poverty;
 They have but patience and a little room,
 Patience and the withered hands of toil.

PETIT, THE POET

Seeds in a dry pod, tick, tick, tick,
 Tick, tick, tick, like mites in a quarrel—
 Faint iambics that the full breeze wakens—
 But the pine tree makes a symphony thereof.
 Triolets, villanelles, rondels, rondeaus.
 Ballades by the score with the same old thought:
 The snows and the roses of yesterday are vanished;
 And what is love but a rose that fades?
 Life all around me here in the village:
 Tragedy, comedy, valor and truth,
 Courage, constancy, heroism, failure—
 All in the loom, and, oh, what patterns!
 Woodlands, meadows, streams and rivers—
 Blind to all of it all my life long.
 Triolets, villanelles, rondels, rondeaus,
 Seeds in a dry pod, tick, tick, tick,
 Tick, tick, tick, what little iambics,
 While Homer and Whitman roared in the pines!

LUCINDA MATLOCK

I went to the dances at Chanderville,
 And played snap-out at Winchester.
 One time we changed partners,

Driving home in the moonlight of middle June,
 And then I found Davis.
 We were married and lived together for seventy years,
 Enjoying, working, raising the twelve children,
 Eight of whom we lost
 Ere I had reached the age of sixty.
 I spun, I wove, I kept the house, I nursed the sick,
 I made the garden, and for holiday
 Rambled over the fields where sang the larks,
 And by Spoon River gathering many a shell,
 And many a flower and medicinal weed—
 Shouting to the wooded hills, singing to the green valleys.
 At ninety-six I had lived enough, that is all,
 And passed to a sweet repose.
 What is this I hear of sorrow and weariness,
 Anger, discontent and drooping hopes?
 Degenerate sons and daughters,
 Life is too strong for you—
 It takes life to love Life.

ANNE RUTLEDGE

Out of me unworthy and unknown
 The vibrations of deathless music:
 "With malice toward none, with charity for all."
 Out of me the forgiveness of millions toward millions,
 And the beneficent face of a nation
 Shining with justice and truth.
 I am Anne Rutledge who sleep beneath these weeds,
 Beloved in life of Abraham Lincoln,
 Wedded to him, not through union,
 But through separation.
 Bloom forever, O Republic,
 From the dust of my bosom!

SILENCE

I have known the silence of the stars and of the sea,
 And the silence of the city when it pauses,
 And the silence of a man and a maid,
 And the silence for which music alone finds the word,
 And the silence of the woods before the winds of spring begin,
 And the silence of the sick .
 When their eyes roam about the room.
 And I ask: For the depths
 Of what use is language?
 A beast of the field moans a few times
 When death takes its young.
 And we are voiceless in the presence of realities—
 We cannot speak.

A curious boy asks an old soldier
Sitting in front of the grocery store,
"How did you lose your leg?"
And the old soldier is struck with silence,
Or his mind flies away
Because he cannot concentrate it on Gettysburg.
It comes back jocosely
And he says, "A bear bit it off."
And the boy wonders, while the old soldier
Dumbly, feebly lives over
The flashes of guns, the thunder of cannon,
The shrieks of the slain,
And himself lying on the ground,
And the hospital surgeons, the knives,
And the long days in bed.
But if he could describe it all
He would be an artist.
But if he were an artist there would be deeper wounds
Which he could not describe.

There is the silence of a great hatred,
And the silence of a great love,
And the silence of a deep peace of mind,
And the silence of an embittered friendship,
There is the silence of a spiritual crisis,
Through which your soul, exquisitely tortured,
Comes with visions not to be uttered
Into a realm of higher life.
And the silence of the gods who understand each other without speech,
There is the silence of defeat.
There is the silence of those unjustly punished;
And the silence of the dying whose hand
Suddenly grips yours.
There is the silence between father and son,
When the father cannot explain his life,
Even though he be misunderstood for it.

There is the silence that comes between husband and wife.
There is the silence of those who have failed;
And the vast silence that covers
Broken nations and vanquished leaders.
There is the silence of Lincoln,
Thinking of the poverty of his youth.
And the silence of Napoleon
After Waterloo.
And the silence of Jeanne d'Arc
Saying amid the flames, "Blessèd Jesus"—
Revealing in two words all sorrow, all hope.
And there is the silence of age,
Too full of wisdom for the tongue to utter it
In words intelligible to those who have not lived
The great range of life.

And there is the silence of the dead.
 If we who are in life cannot speak
 Of profound experiences,
 Why do you marvel that the dead
 Do not tell you of death?
 Their silence shall be interpreted
 As we approach them.

Stephen Crane

STEPHEN CRANE, whose literary career was one of the most meteoric in American letters, was born in Newark, New Jersey, November 1, 1871. After taking a partial course at Lafayette College, he entered journalism at sixteen and, until the time of his death, was a reporter and writer of newspaper sketches. When he died prematurely, at the age of thirty, he had ten printed volumes to his credit, two more announced for publication, and two others which were appearing serially.

Crane's most famous novel, The Red Badge of Courage (1895), was a tour de force, written when he was twenty-two years old. What is even more astonishing is the fact that this detailed description of blood and battlefields was written by a civilian far from the scene of conflict. The Atlantic Monthly pronounced it "great enough to set a new fashion in literature"; H. G. Wells, speaking of its influence in England, said Crane was "the first expression of the opening mind of a new period . . . a record of intensity beyond all precedent."

Crane's other books, although less powerful than The Red Badge of Courage, are scarcely less vivid. The Open Boat (1898) and The Monster (1899) are full of an intuitive wisdom and a passionate sensitivity that caused Wells to exclaim, "The man who can call these 'brilliant fragments' would reproach Rodin for not 'completing' his fragments."

At various periods in Crane's brief career, he experimented in verse, seeking to find new effects in unrhymed lines, a new acuteness of symbol and vision. The results were embodied in two volumes of unusual poetry—The Black Riders (1895) and War Is Kind (1899), lines that strangely anticipated the Imagists and the elliptical free verse that followed fifteen years later. Acidulous and biting, these con-cisions were unappreciated in his day; Crane's suggestive verse has not yet received its due in an age which employs its very technique. But it was forty years before Emily Dickinson won her rightful audience, and a quarter of a century passed before a publisher risked a Complete Works of Stephen Crane. It was not until 1930 that a Collected Poems appeared.

Besides novels, short stories and poems, Crane was writing, at the time of his death, descriptions of the world's great battles for Lippincott's Magazine; his droll Whilomville Stories for boys were appearing in Harper's Monthly, and he was beginning a series of similar stories for girls. It is more than probable that this feverish energy of production aggravated the illness that caused Crane's death. He reached his refuge in the Black Forest only to die at the journey's end, June 5, 1900.

I SAW A MAN

I saw a man pursuing the horizon;
 Round and round they sped.
 I was disturbed at this;
 I accosted the man.
 "It is futile," I said,
 "You can never—"
 "You lie," he cried,
 And ran on.

THE WAYFARER

The wayfarer,
 Perceiving the pathway to truth,
 Was struck with astonishment.
 It was thickly grown with weeds.
 "Ha," he said,
 "I see that no one has passed here
 In a long time."
 Later he saw that each weed
 Was a singular knife.
 "Well," he mumbled at last,
 "Doubtless there are other roads."

HYMN

A slant of sun on dull brown walls,
 A forgotten sky of bashful blue.

Toward God a mighty hymn,
 A song of collisions and cries,
 Rumbling wheels, hoof-beats, bells,
 Welcomes, farewells, love-calls, final moans,
 Voices of joy, idiocy, warning, despair,
 The unknown appeals of brutes,
 The chanting of flowers,
 The screams of cut trees,
 The senseless babble of hens and wise men—
 A cluttered incoherency that says to the stars:
 "O God, save us!"

THE BLADES OF GRASS

In Heaven,
 Some little blades of grass
 Stood before God.
 "What did you do?"
 Then all save one of the little blades
 Began eagerly to relate
 The merits of their lives.

This one stayed a small way behind,
 Ashamed.

Presently, God said,
 "And what did you do?"
 The little blade answered, "Oh, my Lord,
 Memory is bitter to me,
 For, if I did good deeds,
 I know not of them."
 Then God, in all his splendor,
 Arose from his throne.
 "Oh, best little blade of grass!" he said.

THE BOOK OF WISDOM

I met a seer.
 He held in his hands
 The book of wisdom.
 "Sir," I addressed him,
 "Let me read."
 "Child—" he began.
 "Sir," I said,
 "Think not that I am a child,
 For already I know much
 Of that which you hold;
 Aye, much."

He smiled.
 Then he opened the book
 And held it before me.
 Strange that I should have grown so suddenly blind.

THE CANDID MAN

Forth went the candid man
 And spoke freely to the wind—
 When he looked about him he was in a far strange country.

Forth went the candid man
 And spoke freely to the stars—
 Yellow light tore sight from his eyes.

"My good fool," said a learned bystander,
 "Your operations are mad."

"You are too candid," cried the candid man.
 And when his stick left the head of the learned bystander
 It was two sticks.

THE HEART

In the desert
I saw a creature, naked, bestial,
Who, squatting upon the ground,
Held his heart in his hands,

And ate of it.
I said, "Is it good, friend?"
"It is bitter—bitter," he answered;
"But I like it
Because it is bitter,
And because it is my heart."

T. A. Daly

THOMAS AUGUSTINE DALY was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, May 28, 1871. He attended Villanova College and Fordham University, but quit education at the end of his sophomore year to become a newspaper man. Since 1891 he has been with various Philadelphia journals, writing reviews, editorials, travel-notes and, chiefly, running the columns in which his verse originally appeared.

Canzoni (1906) and Carmina (1909) contain the best known of Daly's varied dialect verse. Although he has written in half a dozen different idioms including "straight" English (vide Songs of Wedlock, 1916) his half-humorous, half-pathetic interpretations of the Irish and Italian immigrants are his forte. "Mia Carlotta" and "Between Two Loves" rank with the best dialect rhyming of the period.

Seldom descending to caricature, Daly exhibits the foibles of his characters without exploiting them; even the lightest passages in McAroni Ballads (1919) are done with delicacy and a not too sentimental appreciation. Less popular than Riley or Dunbar, Daly is more skillful and versatile than either; his range and quality are comparable to Field's.

MIA CARLOTTA

Giuseppe, da barber, ees greata for "mash,"
He gotta da bigga, da blacka mustache,
Good clo'ees an' good styla an' playnta good cash.

W'enevra Giuseppe ees walk on da street,
Da people dey talka, "how nobby! how neat!
How softa da handa, how smalla da feet."

He raisa hees hat an' he shaka hees curls,
An' smila weeth teetha so shiny like pearls;
O! many da heart of da seely young girls

He gotta.

Yes, playnta he gotta—
But notta
Carlotta!

Giuseppe, da barber, he maka da eye,
An' lika da steam engine pussa an' sigh,
For catcha Carlotta w'en she ees go by.

Carlotta she walka weeth nose in da air,
 An' look through Giuseppe weeth far-away stare,
 As eef she no see dere ees som'body dere.

Giuseppe, da barber, he gotta da cash,
 He gotta da clo'es an' da bigga mustache,
 He gotta da seely young girls for da "mash,"
 But notta—
 You bat my life, notta—
 Carlotta.
 I gotta!

B E T W E E N   T W O   L O V E S

I gotta lov' for Angela,
 I lov' Carlotta, too.
 I no can marry both o' dem,
 So w'at I gonna do?

O! Angela ees pretta girl,
 She gotta hair so black, so curl,
 An' teeth so white as anytheeng.
 An' O! she gotta voice to seeng,
 Dat mak' your hearta feel eet must
 Jump up an' dance or eet weel bust.
 An' alla time she seeng, her eyes
 Dey smila like Italia's skies,
 An' makin' flirtin' looks at you—
 But dat ees all w'at she can do.

Carlotta ees no gotta song,
 But she ees twice so big an' strong
 As Angela, an' she no look
 So beautiful—but she can cook.
 You oughta see her carry wood!
 I tal you w'at, eet do you good.
 When shc ees be som'body's wife
 She worka hard, you bat my life!
 She never gattin' tired, too—
 But dat ees all w'at she can do.

O! my! I weesh dat Angela
 Was strong for carry wood,
 Or else Carlotta gotta song
 An' looka pretta good.
 I gotta lov' for Angela,
 I lov' Carlotta, too.
 I no can marry both o' dem,
 So w'at I gonna do?

James Weldon Johnson

JAMES WELDON JOHNSON was born in Jacksonville, Florida, June 17, 1871. He was educated at Atlanta University and at Columbia University, where he received his A.M. He was principal of the colored high school in Jacksonville, was admitted to the Florida bar in 1897, and in 1901 removed to New York City, where he collaborated with his brother J. Rosamond Johnson in writing for vaudeville and the light opera stage. He served seven years as United States Consul in Venezuela and Nicaragua, became secretary of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, and occupied the chair of Creative Literature at Fisk University. His version of the libretto of Goyescas was produced at the Metropolitan Opera House in 1915. His death came suddenly and tragically; his automobile was struck by a railroad train near Wiscasset, Maine, June 26, 1938.

His first book of verse Fifty Years and Other Poems (1918) contains much that is meretricious and facile; but, half buried in the midst of clichés, there is not only the humor but the stern pathos characteristic of the Negro as singer. This quality was pronounced in God's Trombones (1927), Johnson's richest book of poems. The volume consists of seven Negro sermons in verse, done after the manner of the old Negro plantation sermons. In these poems the folk-stuff is used much as a composer might use folk-themes in writing a larger musical composition. "The Creation" and "Go Down, Death," in particular are large in conception; sonorous, strongly rhythmical free verse, reflecting the unctuous periods, the uninhibited imagery of the plantation preacher. They and, in a lesser degree, the other poems in God's Trombones, are a rambling mixture of Biblical and tropical figures, but always an artistically governed expression.

Saint Peter Relates an Incident of the Resurrection Day (privately distributed in 1930 and re-issued, with other poems, for general circulation in 1935) is a stirring expression in which irony masks a sense of outrage. Johnson was at work on the manuscript of a book when he picked up a newspaper and read that the government was sending to France a contingent of Gold Star mothers whose soldier sons were buried there, but that the Negro Gold Star mothers would not be allowed to sail on the ship with the white mothers. He threw the manuscript he was writing aside and did not take it up until he had finished the long satirical poem.

Among Johnson's other work are the novel The Autobiography of an Ex-Colored Man (1912, republished in 1927), Black Manhattan (1930), the story of the Negro in New York, and the eloquent autobiography Along this Way (1933). He also collaborated with his brother in the two collections of American Negro Spirituals in 1925 and 1926 and edited The Book of American Negro Poetry.

THE CREATION

(A Negro Sermon)

And God stepped out on space,
And He looked around and said,
"I'm lonely—
I'll make me a world."

And far as the eye of God could see
 Darkness covered everything,
 Blacker than a hundred midnights
 Down in a cypress swamp.

Then God smiled,
 And the light broke,
 And the darkness rolled up on one side,
 And the light stood shining on the other,
 And God said, "That's good!"

Then God reached out and took the light in His hands,
 And God rolled the light around in His hands,
 Until He made the sun;
 And He set that sun a-blazing in the heavens.
 And the light that was left from making the sun
 God gathered up in a shining ball
 And flung against the darkness,
 Spangling the night with the moon and stars.
 Then down between
 The darkness and the light
 He hurled the world;
 And God said, "That's good!"

Then God himself stepped down—
 And the sun was on His right hand,
 And the moon was on His left;
 The stars were clustered about His head,
 And the earth was under His feet.
 And God walked, and where He trod
 His footsteps hollowed the valleys out
 And bulged the mountains up.

Then He stopped and looked and saw
 That the earth was hot and barren.
 So God stepped over to the edge of the world
 And He spat out the seven seas;
 He batted His eyes, and the lightnings flashed;
 He clapped His hands, and the thunders rolled;
 And the waters above the earth came down,
 The cooling waters came down.

Then the green grass sprouted,
 And the little red flowers blossomed,
 The pine-tree pointed his finger to the sky,
 And the oak spread out his arms;
 The lakes cuddled down in the hollows of the ground,
 And the rivers ran down to the sea;
 And God smiled again,
 And the rainbow appeared,
 And curled itself around His shoulder.

Then God raised His arm and He waved His hand
 Over the sea and over the land,
 And He said, "Bring forth! Bring forth!"
 And quicker than God could drop His hand,
 Fishes and fowls
 And beasts and birds
 Swam the rivers and the seas,
 Roamed the forests and the woods,
 And split the air with their wings,
 And God said, "That's good!"

Then God walked around
 And God looked around
 On all that He had made.
 He looked at His sun,
 And He looked at His moon,
 And He looked at His little stars;
 He looked on His world
 With all its living things,
 And God said, "I'm lonely still."

Then God sat down
 On the side of a hill where He could think;
 By a deep, wide river He sat down;
 With His head in His hands,
 God thought and thought,
 Till He thought, "I'll make me a man!"

Up from the bed of the river
 God scooped the clay;
 And by the bank of the river
 He kneeled Him down;
 And there the great God Almighty,
 Who lit the sun and fixed it in the sky,
 Who flung the stars to the most far corner of the night,
 Who rounded the earth in the middle of His hand—
 This Great God,
 Like a mammy bending over her baby,
 Kneeling down in the dust
 Toiling over a lump of clay
 Till He shaped it in His own image;
 Then into it He blew the breath of life,
 And man became a living soul.
 Amen. Amen.

Paul Laurence Dunbar

P AUL LAURENCE DUNBAR was born in 1872 at Dayton, Ohio, the son of Negro slaves. He was, before and after he began to write his verse, an elevator-boy. He tried newspaper work unsuccessfully and, in 1899, was given a position in the Library of Congress at Washington, D. C.

Although Dunbar wrote several volumes of short stories and two novels, he was most at home in his verse. Even here, his best work is not those "literary English" pieces by which he set such store, but the racy rhymes written in Negro dialect, alternately tender and mocking. Dunbar's first collection, Lyrics of Lowly Life (1896), contains many of his most characteristic poems. In an introduction, in which mention was made of the octoroon Dumas and the great Russian poet Pushkin, who was a mulatto, William Dean Howells wrote, "So far as I could remember, Paul Dunbar was the first man of pure African blood and of American civilization to feel the Negro life esthetically and express it lyrically. . . . His brilliant and unique achievement was to have studied the American Negro objectively, and to have represented him as he found him—with humor, with sympathy, and yet with what the reader must instinctively feel to be entire truthfulness." Dunbar was the precursor of those Negro poets who, turning away from sentimentality, genuinely expressed the Negro, even though Dunbar avoided anything which seemed "controversial."

Lyrics of the Hearthside (1899) and Lyrics of Love and Laughter (1903) are two other volumes full of folk-stuff. Though the final Lyrics of Sunshine and Shadow (1905) is less original, being crowded with echoes of all kinds of poetry from the songs of Robert Burns to the childhood rhymes of J. W. Riley, it contains a few of Dunbar's least known but keenest interpretations.

Dunbar died in his birthplace, Dayton, Ohio, February 9, 1906.

THE TURNING OF THE BABIES IN THE BED

Woman's sho' a cur'ous critter, an' dey ain't no doubtin' dat.
 She's a mess o' funny capahs f'om huh slippahs to huh hat.
 Ef yo' tries to un'erstan' huh, an' yo' fails, des' up an' say:
 "D' ain't a bit o' use to try to un'erstan' a woman's way."

I don' mean to be complainin', but I's jes' a-settin' down
 Some o' my own obserwations, w'en I cas' my eye eroun'.
 Ef yo' ax me fu' to prove it, I ken do it mighty fine,
 Fu' dey ain't no bettah 'zample den dis ve'y wife o' mine.

In de ve'y hea't o' midnight, w'en I's sleepin' good an' soun',
 I kin hyeah a so't o' rustlin' an' somebody movin' 'roun'.
 An' I say, "Lize, whut yo' doin'?" But she frown an' shek huh haid,
 "Hesh yo' mouf, I's only tu'nin' of de chillun in de bed.

"Don' yo' know a chile gits restless, layin' all de night one way?
 An' yo' got to kind o' 'range him sev'al times befo' de day?
 So de little necks won't worry, an' de little backs won't break;
 Don' yo' t'ink 'cause chillun's chillun dey haint got no pain an' ache."

So she shakes 'em, an' she twists 'em, an' she tu'ns 'em 'roun' erbout,
 'Twell I don' see how de chillun evah keeps f'om hollahin' out.
 Den she lif's 'em up head down'ards, so's dey won't git livah-grown,
 But dey snoozes des' ez peaceful ez a liza'd on a stone.

W'en hit's mos' nigh time fu' wakin' on de dawn o' judgement day,
 Seems lak I kin hyeah ol' Gab'iel lay his trumpet down an' say,
 "Who dat walkin' 'roun' so easy, down on earf ermong de dead?"—
 'Twill be Lizy up a-tu'nin' of de chillun in de bed.

A COQUETTE CONQUERED

Yes, my ha't's ez ha'd ez stone—
 Go 'way, Sam, an' lemme 'lone.
 No; I ain't gwine change my min';
 Ain't gwine ma'y you—nuffin' de kin'.

Phiny loves you true an' deah?
 Go ma'y Phiny; whut I keer?
 Oh, you needn't mou'n an' cry—
 I don't keer how soon you die.

Got a present! What you got?
 Somefn' fu' de pan er pot!
 Huh! Yo' sass do sholy beat—
 Think I don't git 'nough to eat?

Whut's dat un'neal yo' coat?
 Looks des lak a little shoat.
 'Tain't no possum? Bless de Lamb!
 Yes, it is, you rascal, Sam!

Gin it to me; whut you say?
 Ain't you sma't! Oh, go 'way!
 Possum do look mighty nice;
 But you ax too big a price.

Tell me, is you talkin' true,
 Dat's de gal's whut ma'ies you?
 Come back, Sam; now whah's you gwine?
 Co'se you knows dat possum's mine!

DISCOVERED

Seen you down at chu'ch las' night,
 Nevah min', Miss Lucy.
 What I mean? Oh, dat's all right,
 Nevah min', Miss Lucy.
 You was sma't cz sma't could be,
 But you couldn't hide f'om me.
 Ain't I got two eyes to see!
 Nevah min', Miss Lucy.

Guess you thought you's awful keen;
 Nevah min', Miss Lucy.
 Evahthing you done, I seen;
 Nevah min', Miss Lucy.
 Seen him tek yo' ahm jes' so,
 When he got outside de do'—
 Oh, I know dat man's yo' beau!
 Nevah min', Miss Lucy.

Say now, honey, wa'd he say?—
 Nevah min', Miss Lucy.
 Keep yo' secrets—dat's yo' way—
 Nevah min', Miss Lucy.
 Won't tell me, an' I'm yo' pall!
 I'm gwine tell his othah gal,—
 Know huh, too; huh name is Sal.
 Nevah min', Miss Lucy.

Guy Wetmore Carryl

GUY WETMORE CARRYL, son of Charles Edward Carryl, author of Davy and the Goblin and The Admiral's Caravan, was born in New York City, March 4, 1873. He was graduated from Columbia University in 1895, was editor of Munsey's Magazine, 1895-6, and, during the time he lived abroad (from 1897 to 1902), was the foreign representative of various American publications.

As a writer of prose he was received with no little acclaim; his stories, The Transgression of Andrew Vane (1902) and Zut and Other Parisians (1903), held the attention of a restless reading public. But it was as a writer of light verse that Carryl became preeminent. Inheriting a remarkable technical gift from his father, young Carryl soon surpassed him as well as other rivals in the field of brilliantly rhymed, adroitly turned burlesques.

Although he wrote several serious poems which were collected in the posthumously published The Garden of Years (1904), Carryl's most characteristic work is to be found in his perversions of the parables of Aesop, Fables for the Frivolous (1898); the topsy-turvy interpretations of nursery rhymes, Mother Goose for Grown-ups (1900); and the fantastic variations on fairy tales in Grimm Tales Made Gay (1903)—all of them with a surprising (and punning) Moral attached. Even those who scorn the gymnastics of most light verse usually succumb to the ease with which Carryl overcomes seemingly impossible hazards in the rhyme-leaping fable of the fox and the raven or the appalling pun-juggling in the new version of Puss-in-Boots. He lacked only a Sullivan—and a sense of satire—to be called the Gilbert of America.

This extraordinary versifier died, before reaching the height of his power, at the age of thirty-one, in the summer of 1904.

HOW JACK FOUND THAT BEANS MAY GO BACK ON A CHAP

Without the slightest basis
For hypochondriasis
A widow had forebodings which a cloud around her flung,
And with expression cynical
For half the day a clinical Thermometer she held beneath her tongue.

Whene'er she read the papers
She suffered from the vapors,
At every tale of malady or accident she'd groan;
In every new and smart disease,
From housemaid's knee to heart disease,
She recognized the symptoms as her own!

She had a yearning chronic
To try each novel tonic,
Elixir, panacea, lotion, opiate, and balm;
And from a homeopathist
Would change to an hydropathist,
And back again, with stupefying calm!

She was nervous, cataleptic,
And anemic, and dyspeptic:
Though not convinced of apoplexy, yet she had her fears.
She dwelt with force fanatical
Upon a twinge rheumtical,
And said she had a buzzing in her ears!

Now all of this bemoaning
 And this grumbling and this groaning
     The mind of Jack, her son and heir, unconscionably bored.
 His heart completely hardening,
 He gave his time to gardening,
     For raising beans was something he adored.

Each hour in accents morbid
 This limp maternal bore bid
     Her callous son affectionate and lachrymose good-bys.
 She never granted Jack a day
 Without some long "Alackaday!"
     Accompanied by rolling of the eyes.

But Jack, no panic showing,
 Just watched his beanstalk growing,
     And twined with tender fingers the tendrils up the pole.
 At all her words funeral
 He smiled a smile ethereal,
     Or sighed an absent-minded "Bless my soul!"

That hollow-hearted creature
 Would never change a feature:
     No tear bedimmed his eye, however touching was her talk.
 She never fussed or flurried him,
 The only thing that worried him
     Was when no bean-pods grew upon the stalk!

But then he wabbled loosely
 His head, and wept profusely,
     And, taking out his handkerchief to mop away his tears,
 Exclaimed: "It hasn't got any!"
 He found this blow to botany
     Was sadder than were all his mother's fears.

The Moral is that gardeners pine
 Whene'er no pods adorn the vine.
 Of all sad words experience gleans
 The saddest are: "It might have beans."
     (I did not make this up myself:
     'Twas in a book upon my shelf.
     It's witty, but I don't deny
     It's rather Whittier than I!)

THE SYCOPHANTIC FOX AND THE GULLIBLE RAVEN

A raven sat upon a tree,
     And not a word he spoke, for
     His beak contained a piece of Brie,
     Or, maybe, it was Roquefort.
     We'll make it any kind you please—
     At all events it was a cheese.

Beneath the tree's umbrageous limb
 A hungry fox sat smiling;
 He saw the raven watching him,
 And spoke in words beguiling:
 "I admire," said he, "ton beau plumage,"
 (The which was simply persiflage).

Two things there are, no doubt you know,
 To which a fox is used:
 A rooster that is bound to crow,
 A crow that's bound to roost;
 And whichsoever he espies
 He tells the most unblushing lies.

"Sweet foul," he said, "I understand
 You're more than merely natty,
 I hear you sing to beat the band
 And Adelina Patti.
 Pray render with your liquid tongue
 A bit from 'Götterdämmerung.'"

This subtle speech was aimed to please
 The crow, and it succeeded;
 He thought no bird in all the trees
 Could sing as well as he did.
 In flattery completely doused,
 He gave the "Jewel Song" from "Faust."

But gravitation's law, of course,
 As Isaac Newton showed it,
 Exerted on the cheese its force,
 And elsewhere soon bestowed it.
 In fact, there is no need to tell
 What happened when to earth it fell.

I blush to add that when the bird
 Took in the situation
 He said one brief, emphatic word,
 Unfit for publication.
 The fox was greatly startled, but
 He only sighed and answered "Tut."

The Moral is: A fox is bound
 To be a shameless sinner.
 And also: When the cheese comes round
 You know it's after dinner.
 But (what is only known to few)
 The fox is after dinner, too.

HOW A CAT WAS ANNOYED AND A POET WAS BOOTTED

A poet had a cat.
 There was nothing odd in that—

(I might make a little pun about the Mewsl)
 But what is really more
 Remarkable, she wore

A pair of pointed patent-leather shoes.
 And I doubt me greatly whether
     You have heard the like of that:
 Pointed shoes of patent-leather
     On a cat!

His time he used to pass
 Writing sonnets, on the grass—
 (I might say something good on pen and swardl)
 While the cat sat near at hand,
 Trying hard to understand

The poems he occasionally roared.
 (I myself possess a feline,
     But when poetry I roar
 He is sure to make a bee-line
     For the door.)

The poet, cent by cent,
 All his patrimony spent—
 (I might tell how he went from verse to worsel)
 Till the cat was sure she could,
 By advising, do him good.

So addressed him in a manner that was terse:
 “We are bound toward the scuppers,
     And the time has come to act,
 Or we’ll both be on our uppers
     For a fact!”

On her boot she fixed her eye,
 But the boot made no reply—
 (I might say: “Couldn’t speak to save its solel”)
 And the foolish bard, instead
 Of responding, only read

A verse that wasn’t bad upon the whole.
 And it pleased the cat so greatly,
     Though she knew not what it meant,
 That I’ll quote approximately
     How it went:—

“If I should live to be
 The last leaf upon the tree”—
 (I might put in: “I think I’d just as leafl”)
 “Let them smile, as I do now,
 At the old forsaken bough”—
 Well, he’d plagiarized it bodily, in brief!
     But that cat of simple breeding
         Couldn’t read the lines between,
     So she took it to a leading Magazine.

She was jarred and very sore
 When they showed her to the door.
 (I might hit off the door that was a jarl)
 To the spot she swift returned
 Where the poet sighed and yearned,
 And she told him that he'd gone a little far.
 "Your performance with this rhyme has Made me absolutely sick,"
 She remarked. "I think the time has Come to kick!"

I could fill up half the page
 With descriptions of her rage—
 (I might say that she went a bit too fur!)
 When he smiled and murmured: "Shoo!"
 "There is one thing I can do!"
 She answered with a wrathful kind of purr.
 "You may shoe me, an it suit you,
 But I feel my conscience bid
 Me, as tit for tat, to boot you!"
 (Which she did.)

The Moral of the plot
 (Though I say it, as should not!)
 Is: An editor is difficult to suit.
 But again there're other times
 When the man who fashions rhymes
 Is a rascal, and a bully one to boot!

Trumbull Stickney

(Joseph) Trumbull Stickney was born June 20, 1874, at Geneva, Switzerland, of New England parents. In 1891 he entered Harvard and was graduated with high classical honors in 1895. Immediately thereafter, he went abroad, studying at the Sorbonne and Collège de France for seven years. The University of Paris gave him the Doctorat ès Lettres, never before conferred on an American, for two scholarly theses in 1903, the critic Masqueray pronouncing his "Les Sentences dans la Poesie Grecque" one of the best modern studies of Hellenic literature. A few months later he returned to America, where he became instructor of Greek at Harvard University. Here his work was suddenly interrupted by death, caused by a tumor on the brain, and he died at the age of thirty, October 11, 1904.

One year after his death, his friends, George Cabot Lodge, John Ellerton Lodge and William Vaughn Moody, edited his posthumous Poems (1905), a small and wholly forgotten volume, Dramatic Verses, having appeared in 1902. Stickney seems to have found no wider circle of readers than his restricted intimate one. The collections of the period have no record of him; Stedman's voluminous anthology does not even mention his name. Yet there can be no question but that Stickney was a representative poet of his generation, worthy to stand beside Moody, whose point of view as well as his rhetoric he shared. There is a note, however, in Stickney's poetry wholly unlike Moody's, a preoccupation with death that relates him—in spirit at least—to the later Jeffers. He spoke of divinely learning to suffer loneliness; his, he wrote, were the "wise denials."

LIVE BLINDLY AND UPON THE HOUR

Live blindly and upon the hour. The Lord,
 Who was the Future, died full long ago.
 Knowledge which is the Past is folly. Go,
 Poor child, and be not to thyself abhorred.
 Around thine earth sun-winged winds do blow
 And planets roll; a meteor draws his sword;
 The rainbow breaks his seven-colored chord
 And the long strips of river-silver flow:
 Awake! Give thyself to the lovely hours.
 Drinking their lips, catch thou the dream in flight
 About their fragile hairs' aerial gold.
 Thou art divine, thou livest,—as of old
 Apollo springing naked to the light,
 And all his island shivered into flowers.

IN THE PAST

There lies a somnolent lake
 Under a noiseless sky,
 Where never the mornings break
 Nor the evenings die.
 Mad flakes of color
 Whirl on its even face
 Iridescent and streaked with pallor;
 And, warding the silent place,
 The rocks rise sheer and gray
 From the sedgeless brink to the sky
 Dull-lit with the light of pale half-day
 Thro' a void space and dry.
 And the hours lag dead in the air
 With a sense of coming eternity
 To the heart of the lonely boatman there:
 That boatman am I,
 I, in my lonely boat,
 A waif on the somnolent lake,
 Watching the colors creep and float
 With the sinuous track of a snake.
 Now I lean o'er the side
 And lazy shades in the water see,

Lapped in the sweep of a sluggish tide
 Crawled in from the living sea;

And next I fix mine eyes,
 So long that the heart declines,
 On the changeless face of the open skies
 Where no star shines;

And now to the rocks I turn,
 To the rocks, around
 That lie like walls of a circling urn
 Wherein lie bound

The waters that feel my powerless strength
 And meet my homeless oar
 Laboring over their ashen length
 Never to find a shore.

But the gleam still skims
 At times on the somnolent lake,
 And a light there is that swims
 With the whirl of a snake;

And tho' dead be the hours in the air,
 And dayless the sky,
 The heart is alive of the boatman there:
 That boatman am I.

AGE IN YOUTH

From far she's come, and very old,
And very soiled with wandering.
The dust of seasons she has brought
Unbidden to this field of Spring.

She's halted at the log-barred gate.
The May-day waits, a tangled spill
Of light that weaves and moves along
The daisied margin of the hill,

Where Nature bares her bridal heart,
And on her snowy soul the sun
Languors desirously and dull,
An amorous pale vermillion.

She's halted, propped her rigid arms,
With dead big eyes she drinks the west;
The brown rags hang like clotted dust
About her, save her withered breast.

A very soilure of a dream
Runs in the furrows of her brow,
And with a crazy voice she croons
An ugly catch of long ago.

But look! Along the molten sky
There runs strange havoc of the sun.
"What a strange sight this is," she says,
"I'll cross the field, I'll follow on."

The bars are falling from the gate.
The meshes of the meadow yield;
And trudging sunsetward she draws
A journey thro' the daisy field.

The daisies shudder at her hem.
Her dry face laughs with flowery light;
An aureole lifts her soiled gray hair:
"I'll on," she says, "to see this sight."

In the rude math her torn shoe mows
Juices of trod grass and crushed stalk
Mix with a soiled and earthy dew,
With smear of petals gray as chalk.

The Spring grows sour along her track;
The winy airs of amethyst
Turn acid. "Just beyond the ledge,"
She says, "I'll see the sun at rest."

And to the tremor of her croon,
Her old, old catch of long ago,
The newest daisies of the grass
She shreds and passes on below. . . .

The sun is gone where nothing is
And the black-bladed shadows war.
She came and passed, she passed along
That wet, black curve of scimitar.

In vain the flower-lifting morn
With golden fingers to uprear;
The weak Spring here shall pause awhile:
This is a scar upon the year.

ALONE ON LYKAION

Alone on Lykaion since man hath been Stand on the height two columns, where at rest

Two eagles hewn of gold sit looking East
Forever; and the sun goes up between.
Far down around the mountain's oval green
An order keeps the falling stones abreast.
Below within the chaos last and least
A river like a curl of light is seen.
Beyond the river lies the even sea,
Beyond the sea another ghost of sky,—
O God, support the sickness of my eye
Lest the far space and long antiquity
Suck out my heart, and on this awful ground
The great wind kill my little shell with sound.

Anna Hempstead Branch

ANNA HEMPSTEAD BRANCH was born at New London, Connecticut. She was graduated from Smith College in 1897 and has devoted herself to literature and social service, mostly in New York. She died in her home September 8, 1937.

Her two chief volumes, The Shoes That Danced (1905) and Rose of the Wind

(1910), reveal the lyrist, but they show a singer who is less fanciful than philosophic. Often, indeed, Miss Branch weighs down her simple melodies with intellectuality; more often, she attains a high level of lyricism. Her lines are admirably condensed; rich in personal as well as poetic value, they maintain a high and austere level. A typical poem is "The Monk in the Kitchen," which, with its spiritual loveliness and verbal felicity, is a celebration of cleanliness that gives order an almost mystical nobility and recalls George Herbert.

Although nothing she has ever written has attained the popularity of her shorter works, "Nimrod" has an epic sweep, a large movement which, within the greater curve, contains moments of exalted imagery. The deeply religious feeling implicit governs the author as person no less than as poet, for Miss Branch had given a great part of her life to settlement work at Christadora House on New York's East Side. "To a Dog" is more direct than is Miss Branch's wont; "The Monk in the Kitchen" is no less straightforward, though its metaphysics make it seem less forthright.

THE MONK IN THE KITCHEN

I

Order is a lovely thing;
On disarray it lays its wing,
Teaching simplicity to sing.
It has a meek and lowly grace,
Quiet as a nun's face.
Lo—I will have thee in this place!
Tranquil well of deep delight,
All things that shine through thee appear
As stones through water, sweetly clear.
Thou clarity,
That with angelic charity
Revealst beauty where thou art,
Spread thyself like a clean pool.
Then all the things that in thee are,
Shall seem more spiritual and fair,
Reflection from serener air—
Sunken shapes of many a star
In the high heavens set afar.

II

Ye stolid, homely, visible things,
Above you all brood glorious wings
Of your deep entities, set high,
Like slow moons in a hidden sky.
But you, their likenesses, are spent
Upon another element.
Truly ye are but seemings—
The shadowy cast-off gleamings
Of bright solidities. Ye seem
Soft as water, vague as dream;
Image, cast in a shifting stream.

III

What are ye?
I know not.
Brazen pan and iron pot,
Yellow brick and gray flagstone
That my feet have trod upon—
Ye seem to me
Vessels of bright mystery
For ye do bear a shape, and so
Though ye were made by man, I know
An inner Spirit also made,
And ye his breathings have obeyed.

IV

Shape, the strong and awful Spirit,
Laid his ancient hand on you.
He waste chaos doth inherit;
He can alter and subdue.
Verily, he doth lift up
Matter, like a sacred cup.
Into deep substance he reached, and lo
Where ye were not, ye were; and so
Out of useless nothing, ye
Groaned and laughed and came to be,
And I use you, as I can,
Wonderful uses, made for man,
Iron pot and brazen pan.

V

What are ye?
I know not;
Nor what I really do
When I move and govern you.
There is no small work unto God.
He required of us greatness;
Of his least creature

A high angelic nature,
 Stature superb and bright completeness.
 He sets to us no humble duty.
 Each act that he would have us do
 Is haloed round with strangest beauty;
 Terrific deeds and cosmic tasks
 Of his plainest child he asks.
 When I polish the brazen pan
 I hear a creature laugh afar
 In the gardens of a star,
 And from his burning presence run
 Flaming wheels of many a sun.
 Whoever makes a thing more bright,
 He is an angel of all light.
 When I cleanse this earthen floor
 My spirit leaps to see
 Bright garments trailing over it,
 A cleanliness made by me.
 Purger of all men's thoughts and ways,
 With labor do I sound Thy praise,
 My work is done for Thee.
 Whoever makes a thing more bright,
 He is an angel of all light.
 Therefore let me spread abroad
 The beautiful cleanliness of my God.

vii

One time in the cool of dawn
 Angels came and worked with me.
 The air was soft with many a wing.
 They laughed amid my solitude
 And cast bright looks on everything.
 Sweetly of me did they ask
 That they might do my common task,
 And all were beautiful—but one
 With garments whiter than the sun
 Had such a face
 Of deep, remembered grace;
 That when I saw I cried—"Thou art
 The great Blood-Brother of my heart.
 Where have I seen thee?"—And he said,
 "When we were dancing round God's throne,
 How often thou art there.
 Beauties from thy hands have flown
 Like white doves wheeling in mid-air.
 Nay—they soul remembers not?
 Work on, and cleanse thy iron pot."

viii

What are we? I know not.

WHILE LOVELINESS GOES BY

Sometimes when all the world seems gray and dun
 And nothing beautiful, a voice will cry,
 "Look out, look out! Angels are drawing nigh!"
 Then my slow burdens leave me one by one,
 And swiftly does my heart arise and run
 Even like a child while loveliness goes by—
 And common folk seem children of the sky,
 And common things seem shapèd of the sun,
 Oh, pitiful that I who love them, must
 So soon perceive their shining garments fade!
 And slowly, slowly, from my eyes of trust
 Their flaming banners sink into a shade!
 While this earth's sunshine seems the golden dust
 Slow settling from that radiant cavalcade.

TO A DOG

I

If there is no God for thee
 Then there is no God for me,

If He sees not when you share
 With the poor your frugal fare,

Does not see you at a grave,
 Every instinct bred to save;

As if you were the only one
 Believing in a resurrection;

When you wait, as lovers do,
 Watching till your friend comes true;

Does not reverence when you take
Angry words for love's sweet sake;

If his eye does not approve
All your faith and pain and love;

If the heart of justice fail
And is for you of no avail;

If there is no heaven for thee
Then there is no heaven for me.

II

If the Lord they tell us of
Died for men yet loves not love,

If from out His Paradise
He shuts the innocent and wise,

The gay, obedient, simple, good,
The docile ones, of friendly mood,

Those who die to save a friend
Heavenly faithful to the end;

If there is no cross for thee
Then there is no cross for me.

III

If its boughs reach not so high
That they bowed star and sky,

If its roots are not so sound
That they cleave the heavy ground,

If it thrills not through all Nature
Plunged through every living creature,

If its leaves do not enmesh
Every bit of groaning flesh,

If it strike no mighty spur
Through fang and claw and tooth and fur

Piercing tree and earth and stone,
Then indeed I stand alone.

Nothing less than this can save
Me, from out my fleshy grave,

Me, in whom such jungles are
Where the beasts go out to war.

If there is no God for thee
Then there is no God for me.

Amy Lowell

AMY LOWELL was born in Brookline, Massachusetts, February 9, 1874, of a long line of noted publicists and poets; the first colonist (a Percival Lowell) arrived in Newburyport in 1637. James Russell Lowell was a cousin of her grandfather; Abbott Lawrence, her mother's father, was minister to England; Percival Lowell, the astronomer who charted the conjectural canals on Mars, was a brother; and Abbott Lawrence Lowell, her other brother, was president of Harvard University.

Miss Lowell obtained her early education through private tuition and travel abroad. These European journeys were the background upon which much of Miss Lowell's later work was unconsciously woven; her visits to France, Egypt, Turkey, and Greece bore fruit, many years later, in the exotic colors of her verse. As a young girl, she had vague aspirations toward being a writer; but it was not until 1902, when she was twenty-eight years old, that she definitely determined to be a poet. For eight years she served a rigorous apprenticeship, reading the classics of all schools, studying the technique of verse, but never attempting to publish a line. In 1910 her first verse was printed in The Atlantic Monthly; two years later her first book appeared.

This volume, A Dome of Many-colored Glass (1912), was a strangely unpromising first book. Subject and treatment were conventional; the influence of Keats and Tennyson was evident; the tone was soft and sentimental, without a trace of personality. It was a queer prologue to the vivid Sword Blades and Poppy Seed (1914), which marked not only an extraordinary advance but a new individuality. This second volume contained many poems written in the usual forms, a score of pictorial pieces illustrating Miss Lowell's identification with the Imagists, and, possibly most important from a technical standpoint, the first appearance in English of "polyphonic prose." Of this extremely flexible form, Miss Lowell, in an essay on John Gould Fletcher, wrote, "'Polyphonic' means 'many-voiced,' and the form is so-called because it makes use of the 'voices' of poetry, namely: meter, vers libre, assonance, alliteration, rhyme and return. It employs every form of rhythm, even prose rhythm at times." By this time Miss Lowell had "captured" the Imagist movement from Ezra Pound, had reorganized it, and, by her belligerent championing of vers libre, freedom of choice of subject, and other seeming innovations, had made poetry a fighting word.

It was because of her experiments in form and technique that Miss Lowell first attracted attention and is still best known. But, beneath a preoccupation with theories and novelty of utterance, there was the skilled story-teller, who revivified history with creative excitement. Men, Women and Ghosts (1916) brims with this contagious vitality; it is richer in variety than its predecessors, swifter in movement. It is, in common with all of Miss Lowell's work, best in its portrayal of colors and sounds, of physical perceptions rather than the reactions of inner experience. She is, pre-eminently, the poet of the external world; her visual effects are as "hard and clear" as the most uncompromising Imagist could desire. The colors with which her works are studded seem like bits of bright enamel; every leaf and flower has a lacquered brilliance. To compensate for the lack of the spirit's warmth, Miss Lowell feverishly agitates all she touches; nothing remains quiescent. Whether she writes about a fruit shop, or a flower-garden, or a string quartet, or a Japanese print—everything flashes, leaps, startles, and burns with dynamic, almost savage, speed. Motion too often takes the place of emotion.

In Can Grande's Castle (1918) Miss Lowell achieves a broader line; the teller of stories, the bizarre decorator, and the experimenter finally fuse. The poems in this volume are only four in number—four polyphonic prose-poems of unusual length, extraordinarily varied in their sense of amplitude and time. Pictures of the Floating World (1919) which followed is, in many ways, Miss Lowell's most personal revelation. Although there are pages devoted to the merely dazzling and grotesque, most of the poems are in a quieter key.

Legends (1921) is closely related to Can Grande's Castle; eleven stories are placed against seven different backgrounds. The first poem must be rated among Miss Lowell's most dazzling achievements: a tour de force with colors as strange and metallic as the scene it pictures. The next years were devoted to her Keats researches.

Besides Miss Lowell's original poetry, she undertook many studies in foreign literatures; she made the English versions of the poems translated from the Chinese by Florence Ayscough in the vivid Fir-Flower Tablets (1921). She also wrote two volumes of critical essays: Six French Poets (1915) and Tendencies in Modern American Poetry (1917), valuable aids to the student of contemporary literature. Two years after its publication she acknowledged the authorship of the anonymous A Critical Fable (1922), a modern sequel to James Russell Lowell's A Fable for Critics.

Her monumental John Keats, an exhaustive biography and analysis of the poet in two volumes, appeared early in 1925.

For years Miss Lowell had been suffering from ill health; she had been operated upon several times, but her general condition, as well as her continual desire to work, nullified the effects of the operations. In April, 1925, her condition became worse; she was forced to cancel a projected lecture trip through England and to cease all work. She died as the result of a paralytic stroke on May 12, 1925. Her death occasioned nation-wide tributes; the very journals which had ridiculed her during her life were loud in praise: it was agreed that hers was one of the most daring and picturesque figures in contemporary literature. Like all pioneers, she was the target of scorn and hostility; but, unlike most innovators, she lived to see her experiments rise from the limbo of ridicule to a definite place in their period.

Three posthumous volumes appeared at yearly intervals immediately after her death: What's O'Clock (1925) which was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for that year, East Wind (1926), and Ballads for Sale (1927). The first was arranged by the poet herself and includes such poems as "Meeting-House Hill" and "Lilacs" which are tart and native; the second is a set of dialect and highly overdramatized New England narratives; the third is a miscellaneous collection. Her qualities are epitomized in these three books and the fact that they show no particular advance upon the earlier "Patterns" is significant. Her brilliance, her command of the lacquered phrase and the glazed figure, her pyrotechnique which causes words to bloom and burst at the same moment as though issuing from firework flower-pots, her restless excitement provoking inanimate objects to a furious life of their own—these were characteristics recognizable from the first. In some of the new poems, the juxtaposition of the thing observed and the thing imagined ("Meeting-House Hill" is a particularly vivid example) is more than ordinarily surprising, but one is prepared for the verve and alacrity of upspringing colors, for the purposeful shifting and distortion of surfaces like the clash of planes in an agitated canvas. Perhaps the most important of the posthumous poems are the expressive and personal "Lilacs," "Evelyn Ray," a virtuoso piece in couplets, and "The Sisters," a shrewd commentary on the "queer lot of women who write poetry," particularly her "spiritual relations" Sappho, Mrs. Browning, and Emily Dickinson.

At the end of "The Sisters" the poet confesses that, in spite of her admiration for the Greek poet, the Englishwoman, and the American genius, none of the three has any word for her. They were, first of all, deeply emotional poets; Miss Lowell was not at home among the emotions. She triumphed in the visual world, in the reflection of reflections, in capturing the minute disturbances of light and movement. It has been said that, though a poet, she failed as a humanist, that she never touched deep feelings because she never knew where to look for them. This—contradicted by such poems as "Patterns," "Madonna of the Evening Flowers" and the ecstatic "In Excelsis"—is true in the sense that passion was not this poet's domain nor, except in a few instances, her concern. Color and finesse were her preoccupations, and her many volumes testify to a continually adroit craftsmanship.

Amy Lowell, storm-center, Imagist, strategist, poet, and personality, is shown in her vigorous many-sidedness in the comprehensive, if uncritical, biography Amy Lowell (1935) by S. Foster Damon.

A LADY

You are beautiful and faded,
 Like an old opera tune
 Played upon a harpsichord;
 Or like the sun-flooded silks
 Of an eighteenth-century boudoir.
 In your eyes
 Smolder the fallen roses of outlived minutes,
 And the perfume of your soul
 Is vague and suffusing,
 With the pungence of sealed spice-jars.
 Your half-tones delight me,
 And I grow mad with gazing
 At your blent colors.

My vigor is a new minted penny,
 Which I cast at your feet.
 Gather it up from the dust
 That its sparkle may amuse you.

SOLITAIRE

When night drifts along the streets of the city,
 And sifts down between the uneven roofs,
 My mind begins to peek and peer.
 It plays at ball in odd, blue Chinese gardens,
 And shakes wrought dice-cups in Pagan temples
 Amid the broken flutings of white pillars.
 It dances with purple and yellow crocuses in its hair,
 And its feet shine as they flutter over drenched grasses.
 How light and laughing my mind is,
 When all good folk have put out their bedroom candles,
 And the city is still.

PATTERNS

I walk down the garden-paths,
 And all the daffodils
 Are blowing, and the bright blue squills.
 I walk down the patterned garden-paths
 In my stiff, brocaded gown.
 With my powdered hair and jeweled fan,
 I too am a rare
 Pattern. As I wander down
 The garden-paths.

My dress is richly figured,
 And the train
 Makes a pink and silver stain
 On the gravel, and the thrift

Of the borders.
Just a plate of current fashion,
Tripping by in high-heeled, ribboned shoes.
Not a softness anywhere about me,
Only whalebone and brocade.
And I sink on a seat in the shade
Of a lime tree. For my passion
Wars against the stiff brocade.
The daffodils and squills
Flutter in the breeze
As they please.
And I weep;
For the lime-tree is in blossom
And one small flower has dropped upon my bosom.

And the plashing of waterdrops
In the marble fountain
Comes down the garden-paths.
The dripping never stops.
Underneath my stiffened gown
Is the softness of a woman bathing in a marble basin,
A basin in the midst of hedges grown
So thick, she cannot see her lover hiding,
But she guesses he is near,
And the sliding of the water
Seems the stroking of a dear
Hand upon her.
What is Summer in a fine brocaded gown!
I should like to see it lying in a heap upon the ground.
All the pink and silver crumpled up on the ground.

I would be the pink and silver as I ran along the paths,
And he would stumble after,
Bewildered by my laughter.
I should see the sun flashing from his sword-hilt and the buckles on his shoes.
I would choose
To lead him in a maze along the patterned paths,
A bright and laughing maze for my heavy-booted lover.
Till he caught me in the shade,
And the buttons of his waistcoat bruised my body as he clasped me,
Aching, melting, unafraid.
With the shadows of the leaves and the sundrops,
And the plopping of the waterdrops,
All about us in the open afternoon—
I am very like to swoon
With the weight of this brocade.
For the sun sifts through the shade.

Underneath the fallen blossom
In my bosom
Is a letter I have had.
It was brought to me this morning by a rider from the Duke.

"Madam, we regret to inform you that Lord Hartwell Died in action Thursday se'nnight."
 As I read it in the white, morning sunlight,
 The letters squirmed like snakes.
 "Any answer, Madam," said my footman.
 "No," I told him.
 "See that the messenger takes some refreshment.
 No, no answer."
 And I walked into the garden,
 Up and down the patterned paths,
 In my stiff, correct brocade.
 The blue and yellow flowers stood up proudly in the sun,
 Each one.
 I stood upright too,
 Held rigid to the pattern
 By the stiffness of my gown;
 Up and down I walked,
 Up and down.

In a month he would have been my husband.
 In a month, here, underneath this lime,
 We would have broke the pattern;
 He for me, and I for him,
 He as Colonel, I as Lady,
 On this shady seat.
 He had a whim
 That sunlight carried blessing.
 And I answered, "It shall be as you have said."
 Now he is dead.

In Summer and in Winter I shall walk
 Up and down
 The patterned garden-paths
 In my stiff, brocaded gown.
 The squills and daffodils
 Will give place to pillared roses, and to asters, and to snow.
 I shall go
 Up and down
 In my gown.
 Gorgeously arrayed,
 Boned and stayed.
 And the softness of my body will be guarded from embrace
 By each button, hook, and lace.
 For the man who should loose me is dead,
 Fighting with the Duke in Flanders,
 In a pattern called a war.
 Christ! What are patterns for?

WIND AND SILVER

Greatly shining,
 The Autumn moon floats in the thin sky;
 And the fish-ponds shake their backs and flash their dragon scales
 As she passes over them.

NIGHT CLOUDS

The white mares of the moon rush along the sky
 Beating their golden hoofs upon the glass Heavens;
 The white mares of the moon are all standing on their hind legs
 Pawing at the green porcelain doors of the remote Heavens.
 Fly, mares!
 Strain your utmost,
 Scatter the milky dust of stars,
 Or the tiger sun will leap upon you and destroy you
 With one lick of his vermilion tongue.

FREE FANTASIA ON JAPANESE THEMES

All the afternoon there has been a chirping of birds,
 And the sun lies warm and still on the western sides of swollen branches,
 There is no wind;
 Even the little twigs at the ends of the branches do not move,
 And the needles of the pines are solid
 Bands of inarticulated blackness
 Against the blue-white sky,
 Still, but alert;
 And my heart is still and alert,
 Passive with sunshine,
 Avid of adventure.

I would experience new emotions,
 Submit to strange enchantments,
 Bend to influences
 Bizarre, exotic,
 Fresh with burgeoning.
 I would climb a sacred mountain
 Struggle with other pilgrims up a steep path through pine-trees,
 Above to the smooth, treeless slopes,
 And prostrate myself before a painted shrine,
 Beating my hands upon the hot earth,
 Quieting my eyes upon the distant sparkle
 Of the faint spring sea.

I would recline upon a balcony
 In purple curving folds of silk,
 And my dress should be silvered with a pattern
 Of butterflies and swallows,
 And the black band of my obi
 Should flash with gold circular threads,

And glitter when I moved.
 I would lean against the railing
 While you sang to me of wars
 Past and to come—
 Sang, and played the samisen.
 Perhaps I would beat a little hand drum
 In time to your singing;
 Perhaps I would only watch the play of light
 Upon the hilt of your two swords.

I would sit in a covered boat,
 Rocking slowly to the narrow waves of a river,
 While above us, an arc of moving lanterns,
 Curved a bridge,
 A hiss of gold
 Blooming out of darkness,
 Rockets exploded,
 And died in a soft dripping of colored stars.
 We would float between the high trestles,
 And drift away from other boats,
 Until the rockets flared soundless,
 And their falling stars hung silent in the sky,
 Like wistaria clusters above the ancient entrance of a temple.

I would anything
 Rather than this cold paper;
 With outside, the quiet sun on the sides of burgeoning branches,
 And inside, only my books.

A DECADE

When you came, you were like red wine and honey,
 And the taste of you burnt my mouth with its sweetness.
 Now you are like morning bread,
 Smooth and pleasant.
 I hardly taste you at all, for I know your savor;
 But I am completely nourished.

MADONNA OF THE EVENING FLOWERS

All day long I have been working,
 Now I am tired.
 I call: "Where are you?"
 But there is only the oak tree rustling in the wind.
 The house is very quiet,
 The sun shines in on your books,
 On your scissors and thimble just put down,
 But you are not there.

Suddenly I am lonely;
 Where are you?
 I go about searching.

Then I see you,
 Standing under a spire of pale blue larkspur,
 With a basket of roses on your arm.
 You are cool, like silver,
 And you smile.

I think the Canterbury bells are playing little tunes,
 You tell me that the peonies need spraying,
 That the columbines have overrun all bounds,
 That the pyrus japonica should be cut back and rounded.
 You tell me these things.
 But I look at you, heart of silver,
 White heart-flame of polished silver,
 Burning beneath the blue steeples of the larkspur,
 And I long to kneel instantly at your feet,
 While all about us peal the loud, sweet Te Deums of the Canterbury bells.

EVELYN RAY

No decent man will cross a field
 Laid down to hay, until its yield
 Is cut and cocked, yet there was the track
 Going in from the lane and none coming back.

But that was afterwards; before,
 The field was smooth as a sea off shore

On a shimmering afternoon, waist-high
 With bent, and red top, and timothy.

Lush with oat grass and tall fescue,
 And the purple green of Kentucky blue;

A noble meadow, so broad each way
 It took three good scythes to mow in a day.

Just where the field broke into a wood
 A knotted old catalpa stood,

And in the old catalpa-tree
 A cat-bird sang immoderately.

The sky above him was round and big
 And its center seemed just over his twig.

The earth below him was fresh and fair,
 With the sun's long fingers everywhere.

The cat-bird perched where a great leaf hung,
 And the great leaf tilted, and flickered, and swung.

The cat-bird sang with a piercing glee
Up in the sun-specked catalpa-tree.

He sang so loud and he sang so long
That his ears were drowned in his own sweet song.

But the little peering leaves of grass
Shook and sundered to let them pass,

To let them pass, the men who heard
Nothing the grass said, nothing the bird.

Each man was still as a shining stone,
Each man's head was a buzzing bone

Wherein two words screeched in and out
Like a grinding saw with its turn about:

"Evelyn Ray," each stone man said,
And the words cut back and forth through his head,
And each of them wondered if he were dead.

The cat-bird sang with his head cocked up
Gazing into the sky's blue cup.

The grasses waved back into place,
The sun's long fingers stroked each face,

Each grim, cold face that saw no sun.
And the feet led the faces on and on.

They stopped beside the catalpa-tree,
Said one stone face to the other: "See!"

The other face had nothing to say,
Its lips were frozen on "Evelyn Ray."

They laid their hats in the tall green grass
Where the crickets and grasshoppers pass and pass.

They hung their coats in the crotch of a pine
And paced five feet in an even line.

They measured five paces either way,
And the saws in their heads screeched "Evelyn Ray."

The cat-bird sang so loud and clear
He heard nothing at all, there was nothing to hear.

Even the swish of long legs pushing
Through grass had ceased, there was only the hushing

Of a windless wind in the daisy tops,
And the jar stalks make when a grasshopper hops.

Every now and then a bee boomed over
The black-eyed Susans in search of clover,

And crickets shrilled as crickets do:
One—two. One—two.

The cat-bird sang with his head in the air,
And the sun's bright fingers poked here and there,

Past leaf, and branch, and needle, and cone.
But the stone men stood like men of stone.

Each man lifted a dull stone hand
And his fingers felt like weaving sand,

And his feet seemed standing on a ball
Which tossed and turned in a waterfall.

Each man heard a shot somewhere
Dropping out of the distant air.

But the screaming saws no longer said
“Evelyn Ray,” for the men were dead.

I often think of Evelyn Ray.
What did she do, what did she say?
Did she ever chance to pass that way?

I remember it as a lovely spot
Where a cat-bird sang. When he heard the shot,
Did he fly away? I have quite forgot.

When I went there last, he was singing again
Through a little fleeting, misty rain,
And pine-cones lay where they had lain.

This is the tale as I heard it when I was young from a man who was threescore and ten.
A lady of clay and two stone men.

A pretty problem is here, no doubt,
If you have a fancy to work it out:
What happens to stone when clay is about?

Muse upon it as long as you will,
I think myself it will baffle your skill,
And your answer will be what mine is—nil.

But every sunny Summer's day
 I am teased with the thought of Evelyn Ray,
 Poor little image of painted clay.
 And Heigh-o! I say.
 What if there be a judgment-day?

What if all religions be true,
 And Gabriel's trumpet blow for you
 And blow for them—what will you do?

Evelyn Ray, will you rise alone?
 Or will your lovers of dull gray stone
 Pace beside you through the wan

Twilight of that bitter day
 To be judged as stone and judged as clay,
 And no one to say the judgment nay?

Better be nothing, Evelyn Ray,
 A handful of buttercups that sway
 In the wind for a children's holiday.

For earth to earth is the best we know,
 Where the good blind worms push to and fro
 Turning us into the seeds which grow,

And lovers and ladies are dead indeed,
 Lost in the sap of a flower seed.
 Is this, think you, a sorry creed?

Well, be it so, for the world is wide
 And opinions jostle on every side.
 What has always been hidden will always hide.

And every year when the fields are high
 With oat grass, and red top, and timothy,
 I know that a creed is the shell of a lie.

Peace be with you, Evelyn Ray,
 And to your lovers, if so it may,
 For earth made stone and earth made clay.

THE TAXI

When I go away from you
 The world beats dead
 Like a slackened drum.
 I call out for you against the jutted stars
 And shout into the ridges of the wind.
 Streets coming fast,
 One after the other,

Wedge you away from me,
 And the lamps of the city prick my eyes
 So that I can no longer see your face.
 Why should I leave you,
 To wound myself upon the sharp edges of the night?

IN EXCELSIS

You—you
 Your shadow is sunlight on a plate of silver;
 Your footsteps, the seeding-place of lilies;
 Your hands moving, a chime of bells across a windless air.

The movement of your hands is the long, golden running of light from a rising sun;
 It is the hopping of birds upon a garden-path.

As the perfume of jonquils, you come forth in the morning.
 Young horses are not more sudden than your thought,
 Your words are bees about a pear-tree,
 Your fancies are the gold-and-black striped wasps buzzing among red apples.
 I drink your lips,
 I eat the whiteness of your hands and feet.
 My mouth is open,
 As a new jar I am empty and open.
 Like white water are you who fill the cup of my mouth,
 Like a brook of water thronged with lilies.

You are frozen as the clouds,
 You are far and sweet as the high clouds.
 I dare reach to you,
 I dare touch the rim of your brightness.
 I leap beyond the winds,
 I cry and shout,
 For my throat is keen as a sword
 Sharpened on a hone of ivory.
 My throat sings the joy of my eyes,
 The rushing gladness of my love.

How has the rainbow fallen upon my heart?
 How have I snared the seas to lie in my fingers
 And caught the sky to be a cover for my head?
 How have you come to dwell with me,
 Compassing me with the four circles of your mystic lightness,
 So that I say "Glory! Glory!" and bow before you
 As to a shrine?

Do I tease myself that morning is morning and a day after?
 Do I think the air a condescension,
 The earth a politeness,
 Heaven a boon deserving thanks?
 So you—air—earth—heaven—

I do not thank you,
 I take you,
 I live.
 And those things which I say in consequence
 Are rubies mortised in a gate of stone.

MEETING-HOUSE HILL

I must be mad, or very tired,
 When the curve of a blue bay beyond a railroad track
 Is shrill and sweet to me like the sudden springing of a tune,
 And the sight of a white church above thin trees in a city square
 Amazes my eyes as though it were the Parthenon.
 Clear, reticent, superbly final,
 With the pillars of its portico refined to a cautious elegance,
 It dominates the weak trees,
 And the shot of its spire
 Is cool and candid,
 Rising into an unresisting sky.

Strange meeting-house
 Pausing a moment upon a squalid hill-top.
 I watch the spire sweeping the sky,
 I am dizzy with the movement of the sky;
 I might be watching a mast
 With its royals set full
 Straining before a two-reef breeze.
 I might be sighting a tea-clipper,
 Tacking into the blue bay,
 Just back from Canton
 With her hold full of green and blue porcelain
 And a Chinese coolie leaning over the rail
 Gazing at the white spire
 With dull, sea-spent eyes.

LILACS

Lilacs,
 False blue,
 White,
 Purple,
 Color of lilac,
 Your great puffs of flowers
 Are everywhere in this my New England.
 Among your heart-shaped leaves
 Orange orioles hop like music-box birds and sing
 Their little weak soft songs;
 In the crooks of your branches
 The bright eyes of song sparrows sitting on spotted eggs
 Peer restlessly through the light and shadow
 Of all Springs.

Lilacs in dooryards

Holding quiet conversations with an early moon;

Lilacs watching a deserted house

Settling sideways into the grass of an old road;

Lilacs, wind-beaten, staggering under a lopsided shock of bloom

Above a cellar dug into a hill.

You are everywhere.

You were everywhere.

You tapped the window when the preacher preached his sermon,

And ran along the road beside the boy going to school.

You stood by pasture-bars to give the cows good milking,

You persuaded the housewife that her dish-pan was of silver

And her husband an image of pure gold.

You flaunted the fragrance of your blossoms

Through the wide doors of Custom Houses—

You, and sandalwood, and tea,

Charging the noses of quill-driving clerks

When a ship was in from China.

You called to them: "Goose-quill men, goose-quill men,

May is a month for flitting,"

Until they writhed on their high stools

And wrote poetry on their letter-sheets behind the propped-up ledgers.

Paradoxical New England clerks,

Writing inventories in ledgers, reading the "Song of Solomon" at night,

So many verses before bedtime,

Because it was the Bible.

The dead fed you

Amid the slant stones of graveyards.

Pale ghosts who planted you

Came in the night time

And let their thin hair blow through your clustered stems.

You are of the green sea,

And of the stone hills which reach a long distance.

You are of elm-shaded streets with little shops where they sell kites and marbles,

You are of great parks where everyone walks and nobody is at home.

You cover the blind sides of greenhouses

And lean over the top to say a hurry-word through the glass

To your friends, the grapes, inside.

Lilacs,

False blue,

White,

Purple,

Color of lilac,

You have forgotten your Eastern origin,

The veiled women with eyes like panthers,

The swollen, aggressive turbans of jeweled Pashas

Now you are a very decent flower,

A reticent flower,

A curiously clear-cut, candid flower,

Standing beside clean doorways,

Friendly to a house-cat and a pair of spectacles,
 Making poetry out of a bit of moonlight
 And a hundred or two sharp blossoms.

Maine knows you,
 Has for years and years;
 New Hampshire knows you,
 And Massachusetts
 And Vermont.
 Cape Cod starts you along the beaches to Rhode Island;
 Connecticut takes you from a river to the sea.
 You are brighter than apples,
 Sweeter than tulips,
 You are the great flood of our souls
 Bursting above the leaf-shapes of our hearts,
 You are the smell of all Summers,
 The love of wives and children,
 The recollection of the gardens of little children,
 You are State Houses and Charters
 And the familiar treading of the foot to and fro on a road it knows.
 May is lilac here in New England,
 May is a thrush singing "Sun up!" on a tip-top ash-tree,
 May is white clouds behind pine-trees
 Puffed out and marching upon a blue sky.
 May is a green as no other,
 May is much sun through small leaves,
 May is soft earth,
 And apple-blossoms,
 And windows open to a South wind.
 May is a full light wind of lilac
 From Canada to Narragansett Bay.

Lilacs,
 False blue,
 White,
 Purple,
 Color of lilac,
 Heart-leaves of lilac all over New England,
 Roots of lilac under all the soil of New England,
 Lilac in me because I am New England,
 Because my roots are in it,
 Because my leaves are of it,
 Because my flowers are for it,
 Because it is my country
 And I speak to it of itself
 And sing of it with my own voice
 Since certainly it is mine.

THE SISTERS

Taking us by and large, we're a queer lot
We women who write poetry. And when you think
How few of us there've been, it's queerer still.
I wonder what it is that makes us do it,
Singles us out to scribble down, man-wise,
The fragments of ourselves. Why are we Already mother-creatures, double-bearing,
With matrices in body and in brain?
I rather think that there is just the reason
We are so sparse a kind of human being;
The strength of forty thousand Atlases
Is needed for our every-day concerns.
There's Sapho, now I wonder what was Sapho.
I know a single slender thing about her:
That, loving, she was like a burning birch-tree
All tall and glittering fire, and that she wrote
Like the same fire caught up to Heaven and held there,
A frozen blaze before it broke and fell.
Ah, me! I wish I could have talked to Sapho,
Surprised her reticences by flinging mine
Into the wind. This tossing off of garments
Which cloud the soul is none too easy doing
With us today. But still I think with Sapho
One might accomplish it, were she in the mood
To bare her loveliness of words and tell
The reasons, as she possibly conceived them,
Of why they are so lovely. Just to know
How she came at them, just to watch
The crisp sea sunshine playing on her hair,
And listen, thinking all the while 'twas she
Who spoke and that we two were sisters
Of a strange, isolated little family.
And she is Sapho—Sapho—not Miss or Mrs.,
A leaping fire we call so for convenience.
But Mrs. Browning—who would ever think
Of such presumption as to call her “Ba.”
Which draws the perfect line between sea-cliffs
And a close-shuttered room in Wimpole Street.
Sapho could fly her impulses like bright
Balloons tip-tilting to a morning air
And write about it. Mrs. Browning's heart
Was squeezed in stiff conventions. So she lay
Stretched out upon a sofa, reading Greek
And speculating, as I must suppose,
In just this way on Sapho; all the need,
The huge, imperious need of loving, crushed
Within the body she believed so sick.
And it was sick, poor lady, because words
Are merely simulacra after deeds

Have wrought a pattern; when they take the place
 Of actions they breed a poisonous miasma
 Which, though it leave the brain, eats up the body.
 So Mrs. Browning, aloof and delicate,
 Lay still upon her sofa, all her strength
 Going to uphold her over-topping brain.
 It seems miraculous, but she escaped
 To freedom and another motherhood
 Than that of poems. She was a very woman
 And needed both.

If I had gone to call,
 Would Wimpole Street have been the kindlier place,
 Or Casa Guidi, in which to have met her?
 I am a little doubtful of that meeting,
 For Queen Victoria was very young and strong
 And all-pervading in her apogee
 At just that time. If we had stuck to poetry,
 Sternly refusing to be drawn off by mesmerism
 Or Roman revolutions, it might have done.
 For, after all, she is another sister,
 But always, I rather think, an older sister
 And not herself so curious a technician
 As to admit newfangled modes of writing—
 “Except, of course, in Robert, and that is neither Here nor there for Robert is a genius.”
 I do not like the turn this dream is taking,
 Since I am very fond of Mrs. Browning
 And very much indeed should like to hear her
 Graciously asking me to call her “Ba.”
 But then the Devil of Verisimilitude
 Creeps in and forces me to know she wouldn’t.
 Convention again, and how it chafes my nerves,
 For we are such a little family
 Of singing sisters, and as if I didn’t know
 What those years felt like tied down to the sofa.
 Confound Victoria, and the slimy inhibitions
 She loosed on all us Anglo-Saxon creatures!
 Suppose there hadn’t been a Robert Browning,
 No “Sonnets from the Portuguese” would have been written.
 They are the first of all her poems to be,
 One might say, fertilized. For, after all,
 A poet is flesh and blood as well as brain;
 And Mrs. Browning, as I said before,
 Was very, very woman. Well, there are two
 Of us, and vastly unlike that’s for certain.
 Unlike at least until we tear the veils
 Away which commonly gird souls. I scarcely think
 Mrs. Browning would have approved the process
 In spite of what had surely been relief;
 For speaking souls must always want to speak
 Even when bat-eyed, narrow-minded Queens

Set prudishness to keep the keys of impulse.
 Then do the frowning Gods invent new banes
 And make the need of sofas. But Sapho was dead
 And I, and others, not yet peeped above
 The edge of possibility. So that's an end
 To speculating over tea-time talks
 Beyond the movement of pentameters
 With Mrs. Browning.

But I go dreaming on,
 In love with these my spiritual relations. . .
 I rather think I see myself walk up
 A flight of wooden steps and ring a bell
 And send a card in to Miss Dickinson.
 Yet that's a very silly way to do.
 I should have taken the dream twist-ends about
 And climbed over the fence and found her deep
 Engrossed in the doings of a humming-bird
 Among nasturtiums. Not having expected strangers,
 She might forget to think me one, and holding up
 A finger say quite casually: "Take care.
 Don't frighten him, he's only just begun."
 "Now this," I well believe I should have thought,
 "Is even better than Sapho. With Emily
 You're really here, or never anywhere at all
 In range of mind." Wherefore, having begun
 In the strict center, we could slowly progress
 To various circumferences, as we pleased.

* * * * *

Good-by, my sisters, all of you are great,
 And all of you are marvelously strange,
 And none of you has any word for me.
 I cannot write like you, I cannot think
 In terms of Pagan or of Christian now.
 I only hope that possibly some day
 Some other woman with an itch for writing
 May turn to me as I have turned to you
 And chat with me a brief few minutes. How
 We lie, we poets! It is three good hours
 I have been dreaming. Has it seemed so long
 To you? And yet I thank you for the time,
 Although you leave me sad and self-distrustful,
 For older sisters are very sobering things.
 Put on your cloaks, my dears, the motor's waiting.
 No, you have not seemed strange to me, but near,
 Frightfully near, and rather terrifying.
 I understand you all, for in myself— .
 Is that presumption? Yet indeed it's true—
 We are one family. And still my answer
 Will not be any one of yours, I see.
 Well, never mind that now. Good night! Good night!

Ridgely Torrence

(Frederic) Ridgely Torrence was born at Xenia, Ohio, November 27, 1875, and was educated at Miami and Princeton University. For several years he was librarian of the Astor Library in New York City (1897-1901), later assuming an editorial position on the Cosmopolitan Magazine. He was, for several years, poetry editor of The New Republic.

His first volume, The House of a Hundred Lights (1900), bears the grave subtitle "A Psalm of Experience after Reading a Couplet of Bidpai." It is a whimsical hodge-podge of philosophy, love lyrics, artlessness and impudence.

Not until a quarter of a century later did Torrence publish his second volume of verse. In the meantime, poems of his had attracted attention upon their appearance in magazines and a few of his lyrics had been quoted so often that they were familiar to those who had never heard of Torrence's other work. Torrence had remained in the peculiar position of one whose best verse was not only un procurable, but unprinted. Hesperides (1925) remedied this strange circumstance. Like his first volume, this is not a large book, but these one hundred pages contain definite and distinguished poetry. In Hesperides one finds the magnificent "Eye-Witness," a most original treatment of the theme of Christ's second coming, the purely lyrical "The Singers in a Cloud" and that brief epic, "The Bird and the Tree" which is as famous as it is stirring. Poems (1941) contains some new and some previously published work.

Between Torrence's earliest and most recent volume, three of his plays were published: El Dorado (1903), Abelard and Héloïse (1907), and Granny Maumee, The Rider of Dreams, Simon the Cyrenian (1917). The last group, being three plays for a Negro theater, contains the best of Torrence's dramatic writing. He has caught here, particularly in Granny Maumee and The Rider of Dreams, something of that high color which the Negro himself has begun to articulate.

THE BIRD AND THE TREE

Blackbird, blackbird in the cage,
There's something wrong tonight.
Far off the sheriff's footfall dies,
The minutes crawl like last year's flies
Between the bars, and like an age
The hours are long tonight.

The sky is like a heavy lid
Out here beyond the door tonight.
What's that? A mutter down the street.
What's that? The sound of yells and feet.
For what you didn't do or did
You'll pay the score tonight.

No use to reck with reddened sweat,
No use to whimper and to sweat.
They've got the rope; they've got the guns,
They've got the courage and the guns;

An' that's the reason why tonight
No use to ask them any more.
They'll fire the answer through the door—
You're out to die tonight.

There where the lonely cross-road lies,
There is no place to make replies;
But silence, inch by inch, is there,
And the right limb for a lynch is there;
And a lean daw waits for both your eyes,
Blackbird.

Perhaps you'll meet again some place.
Look for the mask upon the face;
That's the way you'll know them there—
A white mask to hide the face.
And you can halt and show them there
The things that they are deaf to now,
And they can tell you what they meant—

To wash the blood with blood. But how
If you are innocent?

Blackbird singer, blackbird mute,
They choked the seed you might have found.
Out of a thorny field you go—
For you it may be better so—
And leave the sowers of the ground
To eat the harvest of the fruit,
Blackbird.

THE SON

(Southern Ohio Market Town)

I heard an old farm-wife,
Selling some barley,

Mingle her life with life
And the name "Charley."

Saying: "The crop's all in,
We're about through now;
Long nights will soon begin,
We're just us two now.

"Twelve bushels at sixty cents,
It's all I carried—
He sickened making fence;
He was to be married—

"It feels like frost was near—
His hair was curly.
The spring was late that year,
But the harvest early."

Robert Frost

ALTHOUGH known as the chief interpreter of New England, Robert (Lee) Frost was born in San Francisco, California, March 26, 1875. His father, born in New Hampshire, taught school, edited a paper, entered politics, and moved to San Francisco where his "copperhead" sympathy with the South led him to christen his son Robert Lee. Frost's mother, after the death of her husband, supported herself and her children by teaching school; bringing the family back East to the towns and hills where, for eight generations, his forefathers had lived and where, much later, Frost was to uphold the tradition by lecturing, accepting an "idle professorship" ("being a sort of poetic radiator") at Amherst, and buying farms in Vermont. After graduating from the high school at Lawrence, Massachusetts, in 1892, Frost entered Dartmouth College, where he remained only a few months. The routine of study was too much for him and he decided to earn his living and became a bobbin-boy in one of the mills at Lawrence. He had already begun to write poetry; a few of his verses had appeared in The Independent. But the strange, soil-flavored quality which even then distinguished his lines was not relished by the editors, and the very magazines to which he sent poems that today are famous rejected his verse with unanimity. For twenty years Frost continued to write his highly characteristic work in spite of the discouraging apathy, and for twenty years the poet remained unknown.

In 1897, two years after his marriage, Frost moved his family to Cambridge, Massachusetts, entering Harvard in a final determination to achieve culture. This time he followed the curriculum for two years, but at the end of that dry period he stopped trying to learn and started to teach. (Curiously enough, though Frost made light of and even ridiculed his scholarship, his marks in Greek and the classical studies were always exceptionally high.) For three years he followed the family tradition and taught school in New England; he also made shoes, edited a weekly paper, and in 1900 became a farmer at Derry, New Hampshire. During the next eleven years Frost labored to wrest a living from stubborn hills with scant success. Loneliness claimed him for its own; the rocks refused to give him a living; the literary world continued to remain oblivious of his existence. Frost sought a change of environment and, after a few years' teaching at Derry and Plymouth, New Hampshire, sold his farm and, with his wife and four children, sailed for England in September, 1912.

For the first time in his life, Frost moved in a literary world. Groups merged, dissolved and separated overnight; controversy and creation were in the air. A friendship was established with the poets Abercrombie, Brooke and Gibson, a close intimacy with Edward Thomas. Here Frost wrote most of his longer narratives, took his lyrics to a publisher with few hopes, went back to the suburban town of Beaconsfield and turned to other matters. A few months later A Boy's Will (1913) was published and Frost was recognized at once as one of the authentic voices of modern poetry.

A Boy's Will is seemingly subjective; in spite of certain reminiscences of Browning it is no set of derivations. In A Boy's Will Frost is not yet completely in possession of his own idiom; but the timbre is recognizably his. No one but Frost could have written "Reluctance" or "The Tuft of Flowers." Wholly lyrical, this volume, lacking the concentrated emotion of his subsequent works, is a significant introduction to the following book, which became an international classic. Early in 1914, Frost leased a small place in Gloucestershire; in the spring of the same year North of Boston (1914), one of the most intensely American books ever printed, was published in England. (See Preface.) This is, as he has called it, a "book of people." And it is more than that—it is a book of backgrounds as living and dramatic as the people they overshadow. Frost vivifies a stone wall, an empty cottage, a grindstone, a mountain, a forgotten wood-pile left

To warm the frozen swamp as best it could
With the slow, smokeless burning of decay.

North of Boston, like its successor, contains much of the finest poetry of our time. Rich in its actualities, richer in its spiritual values, every line moves with the double force of observation and implication. The very first poem in the book illustrates this power of character and symbolism. Although Frost is not arguing for anything in particular, one senses here something more than the enemies of walls. In "Mending Wall," we see two elemental and opposed forces. "Something there is that doesn't love a wall," insists the seeker after causes; "Good fences make good neighbors," doggedly replies the literal-minded lover of tradition. Here, beneath the whimsical turns and pungency of expression, we have the essence of nationalism versus the internationalist: the struggle, though the poet would be the last to prod the point, between blind obedience to custom and questioning iconoclasm.

So with all of Frost's characters. Like the worn-out incompetent in "The Death of the Hired Man" (one of the finest genre pictures of our time), or the autobiographical country boy climbing "black branches up a snow-white trunk toward heaven" in "Birches," or the positive, tight-lipped old lady in "The Black Cottage," or the headlong but laconic Brown of "Brown's Descent," his people are always amplified through the poet's circumlocutory but precise psychology. They remain close to their soil, Frost's monologs and dramatic idyls, written in a conversational blank verse, establish the connection between the vernacular and the language of literature; they remain rooted in realism. But Frost is never a photographic realist. "There are," he once said, "two types of realist—the one who offers a good deal of dirt with his potato to show that it is a real one; and the one who is satisfied with the potato brushed clean. I'm inclined to be the second kind. . . . To me, the thing that art does for life is to clean it, to strip it to form."

In March, 1915, Frost came back to America—to a hill outside of Franconia, New Hampshire. North of Boston had been reprinted in the United States and its author, who had left the country an unknown writer, returned to find himself famous. Honors were awarded to him; within ten years one university after another conferred degrees upon him who was unwilling to graduate from any of them; he became "professor in residence" at Amherst. His lectures (actually glorified philosophic speculations) were notable, although he permitted only one of them, Education by Poetry (1930), which Frost called "a meditative monologue," to be reduced to print.

Mountain Interval, containing some of Frost's most characteristic poems ("Birches," and "An Old Man's Winter Night" are typical), appeared in 1916. The idiom is the same as in the earlier volumes, but the notes are more varied, the lyrics intensified, the assurance is stronger. The subtle variations of the tones of speech find their sympathetic reporter here; the lines disclose delicate shades of emphasis in the way they present an entire scene by giving only a significant detail. Altogether natural, yet fanciful no less than realistic, this poetry escapes labels, "but," Frost once said, with a suspicion of a twinkle, "if I must be classified as a poet, I might be called a Synecdochist; for I prefer the syncdoche in poetry—that figure of speech in which we use a part for the whole."

New Hampshire (1923), which was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for the best volume of poetry published in 1923, synthesizes Frost's qualities: it combines the stark unity of North of Boston and the diffused geniality of Mountain Interval. If one thing predominates, it is a feeling of quiet classicism; the poet has lowered his voice but not the strength of his convictions. To say, as was said, that Frost gives us a poetry "without the delight of the senses, without the glow of warm feeling" is—particularly when faced with New Hampshire—to utter an absurdity. Frost, in spite of a superficial underemphasis, does not hesitate to declare his close affection. Such poems as "Two Look at Two," with its tremendous wave of love, "To Earthward," with its unreserved intensity, even the brilliantly condensed "Fire and Ice," with its candidly registered passion—all these brim with a physical radiance, with the very delight and pain of the senses. Nor is the fanciful by-play, the sly banter so characteristic of this poet, absent from the volume. Who but Frost could put so whimsical an accent in the farewell to an orchard entitled "Good-by and Keep Cold"; who but he could summon, with so few strokes, the frightened colt "with one forefoot on the wall, the other curled at his breast" in "The Runaway"? The very scheme of New Hampshire is an extended whimsicality: he offers the contents of the volume as a series of explanatory notes (and grace notes) to the title poem, which is supposed to be the book's raison d'être. The long poems (the "notes") rank with the narrative monologs in North of Boston; the "grace notes" contain not merely Frost's finest lines but some of the most haunting lyrics ever written by an American. Such a poem as "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening" once in the mind of a reader will never leave it. Had Frost written nothing but these thirty "grace notes" his place in poetry would be assured. A revised Selected Poems (revised in 1928 and 1935) and a rearranged Collected Poems (1930) which again won the Pulitzer Prize, confirmed the conclusions; the unpretentious bucolics had become contemporary classics.

It has been said that Frost's work suffers from an exclusiveness, and even his most ardent admirers would be willing to admit that his is not an indiscriminately inclusive passion like Whitman's. But Frost loves what he loves with a fierce attachment, a tenderness fixed beyond a more easily transferred regard. His devotion to the intimacies of earth is, even more than Wordsworth's, rich, almost inordinate in its fidelity; what his emotion (or his poetry) may lack in windy range, is trebly compensated for by its untroubled depths.

This is more true than ever of West-Running Brook (1928) which was hailed with loud—and misleading—enthusiasm. No contemporary poet received more praise than Frost, and none was more praised for the wrong attributes. As late as 1928, most of the critics were surprised that the writer identified with the long monologs in North of Boston should turn to lyrics, forgetting that Frost's first volume (written in the 1890's and published twenty years later) was wholly and insistently lyrical. One reviewer, echoing the false platitude concerning New England bleakness, applauded Frost's almost colorless reticence, his "preference for black and white." Another made the discovery that "where he was formerly content to limn a landscape . . . here the emphasis is primarily the poet's emotion." A more understanding consideration of Frost's poetry would have instructed the critics. They would have seen that no volumes have ever been less black and white, no poetry so delicately shaded. The so-called inhibitions disappear upon rereading. Frost's poems are only superficially reticent; actually they are profound and personal revelations. Frost has never been "content to limn a landscape." He cannot suggest a character or a countryside without informing the subject with his own philosophy, a philosophy whose bantering accents cannot hide a moral earnestness. Beyond the fact ("the dearest dream that labor knows"), beyond the tone of voice, which is—at least technically—the poet's first concern, there is that ardent and unifying emotion which is Frost's peculiar quality and his essential spirit. Nothing could prove it more fully than the title-poem with its seemingly casual but actually cosmic philosophy. Such poetry, with its genius for suggestive understatement, establishes Frost among the first of contemporary writers and places him with the very best of American poets past or present. It is not the technique nor even the thought, but the essence which finally convinces; the reader is fortified by Frost's serenity, strengthened by his strength.

West-Running Brook is a reflection and restatement of all that has gone before. The autobiographical references are a little more outspoken; Amy Lowell's assertion that "there is no poem which has San Francisco as a background nor which seems to owe its inception to the author's early life" is answered again and again by poems which are packed with the poet's youth. Thus a student will learn that the presumably "late" poem entitled "On Going Unnoticed" was written as early as 1901; the poem "Bereft" was conceived about 1893; and "Once by the Pacific" is half-humorously dated "as of about 1880"—at which time the poet was exactly six years old.

/ The poetry published between Frost's fiftieth and sixtieth years grew in serenity and intimacy. The lyrics became warmer and more musical, the communication more expansive. The poet still maintained his rôle of half-earnest syncdochist. He reaffirmed his conviction: "All that an artist needs is samples." This employment of the part for the whole sharpens the ruminating accents of "Tree at My Window," fastens the epigrammatic irony of "The Peaceful Shepherd," quickens the somber power of "Bereft" and "Once by the Pacific," points the teasing play of "The Bear."

A Further Range (1936) reveals the renewed play of the serious mind. It is emphasized by the self-disclosing "A Leaf-Treader" and "Desert Places" and "Two Tramps in Mud-Time," the last being one of the most persuasive poems of the period. In the later poems Frost is more than ever a "revisionist"; he uses his power to revise stereotypes of thought as well as clichés of expression. If it were not for the journalistic connotations one might add the term "humorist" to the roll-call of "classicist," "realist," and "revisionist." His style, so seemingly casual and yet so inimitable, so colloquial and so elevated, has a way of uniting opposites. It is a remarkable prestidigitation in which fact becomes fantasy, and the fancy is more convincing than the fact. Inner seriousness and outer humor continually shift their centers of gravity—and levity—until it must be plain to all but pedants that Frost's banter is as full of serious implications as his somber speculations, that his playfulness is even more profound than his profundity.

A new and comprehensive Collected Poems (1939) reveals the greater scope and increasing depth of the poet's gift. Published in Frost's sixty-fifth year, much of the poetry seems younger than ever. Retaining the tart accent of his forefathers, and sometimes recording what might be called New England's heritage of chronic adversity, Frost sounds a new tenderness and humor. From the early burlesque of "Brown's Descent" through the ironic "The Egg and the Machine" to the outright jocularity of "Departmental" there is a pungence which is also poignant. Here is disclosed the poetry of one who, like Wordsworth, knows Nature intimately, but one who, unlike the poet to whom Frost has been compared, refuses to sentimentalize "the spirit that impels all things." It is the expression of a man who has lived among men of many kinds, who has understood and even sympathized with the conventions, but who has never been deceived by them.

To the 1939 Collected Poems Frost furnished a preface entitled "The Figure a Poem Makes," a piece of prose as characteristic as his poetry. In it he wrote: "A poem begins in delight and ends in wisdom. It has an outcome that, though unforeseen, was predestined from the first image of the mood. . . . No surprise for the writer, no surprise for the reader. For me the initial delight is in the surprise of remembering something I didn't know I knew."

It is not hard to discover the reason for Frost's popularity among those who create poetry as well as those who do not often turn to it. Readers are grateful to such a poet because they have been charmed and, at the same time, intellectually challenged. They are happy not only because they have learned something new but because they have experienced something old—the initial delight of "remembering something" they didn't know they knew.

THE PASTURE

I'm going out to clean the pasture spring;
 I'll only stop to rake the leaves away
 (And wait to watch the water clear, I may):
 I shan't be gone long.—You come too.

I'm going out to fetch the little calf
 That's standing by the mother. It's so young,
 It totters when she licks it with her tongue.
 I shan't be gone long.—You come too.

THE ONSET

Always the same when on a fated night
 At last the gathered snow lets down as white
 As may be in dark woods, and with a song
 It shall not make again all winter long—
 Of hissing on the yet uncovered ground—
 I almost stumble looking up and round,
 As one, who, overtaken by the end,
 Gives up his errand and lets death descend
 Upon him where he is, with nothing done
 To evil, no important triumph won
 More than if life had never been begun.

Yet all the precedent is on my side:
 I know that winter-death has never tried
 The earth but it has failed; the snow may heap
 In long storms an undrifting four feet deep
 As measured against maple, birch or oak;
 It cannot check the Peeper's silver croak;
 And I shall see the snow all go down hill
 In water of a slender April rill
 That flashes tail through last year's withered brake
 And dead weed like a disappearing snake.
 Nothing will be left white but here a birch
 And there a clump of houses with a church.

THE TUFT OF FLOWERS

I went to turn the grass once after one
 Who mowed it in the dew 'before the sun.

The dew was gone that made his blade so keen
 Before I came to view the leveled scene.

I looked for him behind an isle of trees;
 I listened for his whetstone on the breeze.

But he had gone his way, the grass all mown,
 And I must be, as he had been,—alone,

"As all must be," I said within my heart,
"Whether they work together or apart."

But as I said it, swift there passed me by
On noiseless wing a bewildered butterfly,

Seeking with memories grown dim over night
Some resting flower of yesterday's delight

And once I marked his flight go round and round,
As where some flower lay withering on the ground.

And then he flew as far as eye could see,
And then on tremulous wing came back to me.

I thought of questions that have no reply,
And would have turned to toss the grass to dry;

But he turned first, and led my eye to look
At a tall tuft of flowers beside a brook,

A leaping tongue of bloom the scythe had spared
Beside a reedy brook the scythe had bared.

I left my place to know them by their name,
Finding them butterfly-weed when I came.

The mower in the dew had loved them thus,
By leaving them to flourish, not for us,

Nor yet to draw one thought of ours to him,
But from sheer morning gladness at the brim.

The butterfly and I had lit upon,
Nevertheless, a message from the dawn,

That made me hear the wakening birds around,
And hear his long scythe whispering to the ground,

And feel a spirit kindred to my own;
So that henceforth I worked no more alone;

But glad with him, I worked as with his aid,
And weary, sought at noon with him the shade;

And dreaming, as it were, held brotherly speech
With one whose thought I had not hoped to reach.

"Men work together," I told him from the heart,
"Whether they work together or apart."

RELUCTANCE

Out through the fields and the woods
 And over the walls I have wended;
 I have climbed the hills of view
 And looked at the world, and descended;
 I have come by the highway home,
 And lo, it is ended.

The leaves are all dead on the ground,
 Save those that the oak is keeping
 To ravel them one by one
 And let them go scraping and creeping
 Out over the crusted snow,
 When others are sleeping.

And the dead leaves he huddled and still,
 No longer blown hither and thither;
 The last lone aster is gone;
 The flowers of the witch-hazel wither;
 The heart is still aching to seek,
 But the feet question "Whither?"

Ah, when to the heart of man
 Was it ever less than a treason
 To go with the drift of things
 To yield with a grace to reason,
 And bow and accept the end
 Of a love or a season?

MENDING WALL

Something there is that doesn't love a wall,
 That sends the frozen-ground-swell under it,
 And spills the upper boulders in the sun;
 And makes gaps even two can pass abreast.
 The work of hunters is another thing:
 I have come after them and made repair
 Where they have left not one stone on a stone,
 But they would have the rabbit out of hiding,
 To please the yelping dogs. The gaps I mean,
 No one has seen them made or heard them made,
 But at spring mending-time we find them there.
 I let my neighbor know beyond the hill;
 And on a day we meet to walk the line
 And set the wall between us once again.
 We keep the wall between us as we go.
 To each the boulders that have fallen to each.
 And some are loaves and some so nearly balls
 We have to use a spell to make them balance:
 "Stay where you are until our backs are turned!"

We wear our fingers rough with handling them.
 Oh, just another kind of outdoor game,
 One on a side. It comes to little more:
 There where it is we do not need the wall:
 He is all pine and I am apple-orchard.
 My apple trees will never get across
 And eat the cones under his pines, I tell him
 He only says, "Good fences make good neighbors."
 Spring is the mischief in me, and I wonder
 If I could put a notion in his head:
 "Why do they make good neighbors? Isn't it
 Where there are cows? But here there are no cows.
 Before I built a wall I'd ask to know
 What I was walling in or walling out,
 And to whom I was like to give offense.
 Something there is that doesn't love a wall,
 That wants it down!" I could say "elves" to him,
 But it's not elves exactly, and I'd rather
 He said it for himself I see him there,
 Bringing a stone grasped firmly by the top
 In each hand, like an old-stone savage armed.
 He moves in darkness, as it seems to me,
 Not of woods only and the shade of trees.
 He will not go behind his father's saying,
 And he likes having thought of it so well
 He says again, "Good fences make good neighbors."

THE COW IN APPLE-TIME

Something inspires the only cow of late
 To make no more of a wall than an open gate,
 And think no more of wall-builders than fools.
 Her face is flecked with pomace and she drools
 A cider sirup. Having tasted fruit,
 She scorns a pasture withering to the root.
 She runs from tree to tree where lie and sweeten
 The windfalls spiked with stubble and worm-eaten.
 She leaves them bitten when she has to fly.
 She bellows on a knoll against the sky.
 Her udder shrivels and the milk goes dry.

THE DEATH OF THE HIRED MAN

Mary sat musing on the lamp-flame at the table
 Waiting for Warren. When she heard his step,
 She ran on tip-toe down the darkened passage
 To meet him in the doorway with the news
 And put him on his guard. "Silas is back."
 She pushed him outward with her through the door
 And shut it after her. "Be kind," she said.

She took the market things from Warren's arms
 And set them on the porch, then drew him down
 To sit beside her on the wooden steps.
 "When was I ever anything but kind to him?
 But I'll not have the fellow back," he said.
 "I told him so last haying, didn't I?
 'If he left then,' I said, 'that ended it.'
 What good is he? Who else will harbor him
 At his age for the little he can do?
 What help he is there's no depending on.
 Off he goes always when I need him most.
 'He thinks he ought to earn a little pay,
 Enough at least to buy tobacco with,
 So he won't have to beg and be beholden.'
 'All right,' I say, 'I can't afford to pay Any fixed wages, though I wish I could.'
 'Someone else can.' 'Then someone else will have to.'
 I shouldn't mind his bettering himself
 If that was what it was. You can be certain,
 When he begins like that, there's someone at him
 Trying to coax him off with pocket-money,—
 In haying time, when any help is scarce.
 In winter he comes back to us. I'm done."

"Sh! not so loud: he'll hear you," Mary said.

"I want him to: he'll have to soon or late."

"He's worn out. He's asleep beside the stove.
 When I came up from Rowe's I found him here,
 Huddled against the barn-door fast asleep,
 A miserable sight, and frightening, too—
 You needn't smile—I didn't recognize him—
 I wasn't looking for him—and he's changed.
 Wait till you see."

"Where did you say he'd been?"

"He didn't say. I dragged him to the house,
 And gave him tea and tried to make him smoke.
 I tried to make him talk about his travels,
 Nothing would do: he just kept nodding off."

"What did he say? Did he say anything?"

"But little."

"Anything? Mary, confess
 He said he'd come to ditch the meadow for me."

"Warren!"

"But did he? I just want to know."

"Of course he did. What would you have him say?
 Surely you wouldn't grudge the poor old man
 Some humble way to save his self-respect.
 He added, if you really care to know,
 He meant to clear the upper pasture, too.
 That sounds like something you have heard before?
 Warren, I wish you could have heard the way
 He jumbled everything. I stopped to look
 Two or three times—he made me feel so queer—
 To see if he was talking in his sleep.
 He ran on Harold Wilson—you remember—
 The boy you had in haying four years since.
 He's finished school, and teaching in his college.
 Silas declares you'll have to get him back.
 He says they two will make a team for work:
 Between them they will lay this farm as smooth!
 The way he mixed that in with other things.
 He thinks young Wilson a likely lad, though daft
 On education—you know how they fought
 All through July under the blazing sun,
 Silas up on the cart to build the load,
 Harold along beside to pitch it on."

"Yes, I took care to keep well out of earshot."

"Well, those days trouble Silas like a dream.
 You wouldn't think they would How some things linger!
 Harold's young college boy's assurance piqued him.
 After so many years he still keeps finding
 Good arguments he sees he might have used.
 I sympathize. I know just how it feels
 To think of the right thing to say too late.
 Harold's associated in his mind with Latin.
 He asked me what I thought of Harold's saying
 He studied Latin like the violin
 Because he liked it—that an argument!
 He said he couldn't make the boy believe
 He could find water with a hazel prong—
 Which showed how much good school had ever done him.
 He wanted to go over that. But most of all
 He thinks if he could have another chance
 To teach him how to build a load of hay—"

"I know, that's Silas' one accomplishment.
 He bundles every forkful in its place,
 And tags and numbers it for future reference,
 So he can find and easily dislodge it
 In the unloading. Silas does that well.
 He takes it out in bunches like birds' nests.

You never see him standing on the hay
He's trying to lift, straining to lift himself."

"He thinks if he could teach him that, he'd be
Some good perhaps to someone in the world.
He hates to see a boy the fool of books.
Poor Silas, so concerned for other folk,
And nothing to look backward to with pride,
And nothing to look forward to with hope,
So now and never any different."

Part of a moon was falling down the west,
Dragging the whole sky with it to the hills.
Its light poured softly in her lap. She saw
And spread her apron to it. She put out her hand
Among the harp-like morning-glory strings,
Taut with the dew from garden bed to eaves,
As if she played unheard the tenderness
That wrought on him beside her in the night.
"Warren," she said, "he has come home to die:
You needn't be afraid he'll leave you this time."

"Home," he mocked gently.

"Yes, what else but home?
It all depends on what you mean by home.
Of course he's nothing to us, any more
Than was the hound that came a stranger to us
Out of the woods, worn out upon the trail."

"Home is the place where, when you have to go there,
They have to take you in."

"I should have called it
Something you somehow haven't to deserve."

Warren leaned out and took a step or two,
Picked up a little stick, and brought it back
And broke it in his hand and tossed it by.
"Silas has better claim on us, you think,
Than on his brother? Thirteen little miles
As the road winds would bring him to his door.
Silas has walked that far no doubt today.
Why didn't he go there? His brother's rich,
A somebody—director in the bank."

"He never told us that."

"We know it though."

"I think his brother ought to help, of course.
I'll see to that if there is need. He ought of right

To take him in, and might be willing to—
 He may be better than appearances.
 But have some pity on Silas. Do you think
 If he'd had any pride in claiming kin
 Or anything he looked for from his brother,
 He'd keep so still about him all this time?"

"I wonder what's between them."

"I can tell you.
 Silas is what he is—we wouldn't mind him—
 But just the kind that kinstolk can't abide.
 He never did a thing so very bad.
 He don't know why he isn't quite as good
 As anyone. He won't be made ashamed
 To please his brother, worthless though he is."

"I can't think Si ever hurt anyone."

"No, but he hurt my heart the way he lay
 And rolled his old head on that sharp-edged chair-back.
 He wouldn't let me put him on the lounge.
 You must go in and see what you can do.
 I made the bed up for him there tonight.
 You'll be surprised at him—how much he's broken.
 His working days are done; I'm sure of it."

"I'd not be in a hurry to say that."

"I haven't been. Go, look, see for yourself.
 But, Warren, please remember how it is:
 He's come to help you ditch the meadow.
 He has a plan. You mustn't laugh at him.
 He may not speak of it, and then he may.
 I'll sit and see if that small sailing cloud
 Will hit or miss the moon."

It hit the moon.
 Then there were three there, making a dim row,
 The moon, the little silver cloud, and she.

Warren returned—too soon, it seemed to her,
 Slipped to her side, caught up her hand and waited.

"Warren?" she questioned.

"Dead," was all he answered.

AFTER APPLE-PICKING

My long two-pointed ladder's sticking through a tree
 Toward heaven still,
 And there's a barrel that I didn't fill
 Beside it, and there may be two or three Apples I didn't pick upon some bough.
 But I am done with apple-picking now.
 Essence of winter sleep is on the night,
 The scent of apples: I am drowsing off.
 I cannot rub the strangeness from my sight
 I got from looking through a pane of glass
 I skimmed this morning from the drinking trough
 And held against the world of hoary grass.
 It melted, and I let it fall and break.
 But I was well
 Upon my way to sleep before it fell,
 And I could tell
 What form my dreaming was about to take.
 Magnified apples appear and disappear,
 Stem-end and blossom-end,
 And every fleck of russet showing clear.
 My instep arch not only keeps the ache,
 It keeps the pressure of a ladder-round.
 I feel the ladder sway as the boughs bend.
 And I keep hearing from the cellar bin
 The rumbling sound
 Of load on load of apples coming in.
 For I have had too much
 Of apple-picking: I am overtired
 Of the great harvest I myself desired.
 There were ten thousand fruit to touch,
 Cherish in hand, lift down, and not let fall.
 For all
 That struck the earth,
 No matter if not bruised or spiked with stubble,
 Went surely to the cider-apple heap
 As of no worth.
 One can see what will trouble
 This sleep of mine, whatever sleep it is.
 Were he not gone,
 The woodchuck could say whether it's like his Long sleep, as I describe its coming on,
 Or just some human sleep.

AN OLD MAN'S WINTER NIGHT

All out of doors looked darkly in at him
 Through the thin frost, almost in separate stars,
 That gathers on the pane in empty rooms.
 What kept his eyes from giving back the gaze

Was the lamp tilted near them in his hand.
 What kept him from remembering what it was
 That brought him to that creaking room was age.
 He stood with barrels round him—at a loss.
 And having scared the cellar under him
 In clomping there, he scared it once again
 In clomping off; and scared the outer night,
 Which has its sounds, familiar, like the roar
 Of trees and crack of branches, common things,
 But nothing so like beating on a box.
 A light he was to no one but himself
 Where now he sat, concerned with he knew what;
 A quiet light, and then not even that.
 He consigned to the moon, such as she was,
 So late-arising, to the broken moon
 As better than the sun in any case
 For such a charge, his snow upon the roof,
 His icicles along the wall to keep;
 And slept. The log that shifted with a jolt
 Once in the stove, disturbed him and he shifted,
 And eased his heavy breathing, but still slept.
 One aged man—one man—can't fill a house,
 A farm, a countryside, or if he can,
 It's thus he does it of a winter night.

BIRCHES

When I see birches bend to left and right
 Across the line of straighter darker trees,
 I like to think some boy's been swinging them.
 But swinging doesn't bend them down to stay.
 Ice-storms do that. Often you must have seen them
 Loaded with ice a sunny winter morning
 After a rain. They click upon themselves
 As the breeze rises, and turn many-colored
 As the stir cracks and crazes their enamel.
 Soon the sun's warmth makes them shed crystal shells
 Shattering and avalanching on the snow-crust—
 Such heaps of broken glass to sweep away
 You'd think the inner dome of heaven had fallen.
 They are dragged to the withered bracken by the load,
 And they seem not to break; though once they are bowed
 So low for long, they never right themselves:
 You may see their trunks arching in the woods
 Years afterwards, trailing their leaves on the ground
 Like girls on hands and knees that throw their hair
 Before them over their heads to dry in the sun.
 But I was going to say when Truth broke in
 With all her matter-of-fact about the ice-storm
 I should prefer to have some boy bend them
 As he went out and in to fetch the cows—

Some boy too far from town to learn baseball,
 Whose only play was what he found himself,
 Summer or winter, and could play alone.
 One by one he subdued his father's trees
 By riding them down over and over again
 Until he took the stiffness out of them,
 And not one but hung limp, not one was left
 For him to conquer. He learned all there was
 To learn about not launching out too soon
 And so not carrying the tree away
 Clear to the ground. He always kept his poise
 To the top branches, climbing carefully
 With the same pains you use to fill a cup
 Up to the brim, and even above the brim.
 Then he flung outward, feet first, with a swish,
 Kicking his way down through the air to the ground.

So was I once myself a swinger of birches;
 And so I dream of going back to be.
 It's when I'm weary of considerations,
 And life is too much like a pathless wood
 Where your face burns and tickles with the cobwebs
 Broken across it, and one eye is weeping
 From a twig's having lashed across it open.
 I'd like to get away from earth awhile
 And then come back to it and begin over.
 May no fate willfully misunderstand me
 And half grant what I wish and snatch me away
 Not to return. Earth's the right place for love;
 I don't know where it's likely to go better.
 I'd like to go by climbing a birch tree,
 And climb black branches up a snow-white trunk
Toward heaven, till the tree could bear no more,
 But dipped its top and set me down again.
 That would be good both going and coming back.
 One could do worse than be a swinger of birches.

BROWN'S DESCENT
 OR, THE WILLY-NILLY SLIDE

Brown lived at such a lofty farm
 That everyone for miles could see
 His lantern when he did his chores
 In winter after half-past three.
 And many must have seen him make
 His wild descent from there one night,
 'Cross lots, 'cross walls, 'cross everything,
 Describing rings of lantern light.
 Between the house and barn the gale
 Got him by something he had on

And blew him out on the icy crust
 That cased the world, and he was gone!

Walls were all buried, trees were few:
 He saw no stay unless he stove
 A hole in somewhere with his heel.
 But though repeatedly he strove
 And stamped and said things to himself,
 And sometimes something seemed to yield,
 He gained no foothold, but pursued
 His journey down from field to field.

Sometimes he came with arms outspread
 Like wings revolving in the scene
 Upon his longer axis, and
 With no small dignity of mien.

Faster or slower as he chanced,
 Sitting or standing as he chose,
 According as he feared to risk
 His neck, or thought to spare his clothes,

He never let the lantern drop.
 And some exclaimed who saw afar
 The figure he described with it,
 "I wonder what those signals are

"Brown makes at such an hour of night!
 He's celebrating something strange.
 I wonder if he's sold his farm,
 Or been made Master of the Grange."

He reeled, he lurched, he bobbed, he checked;
 He fell and made the lantern rattle
 (But saved the light from going out).
 So half-way down he fought the battle

Incredulous of his own bad luck.
 And then becoming reconciled
 To everything, he gave it up
 And came down like a coasting child.

"Well—I—be—" that was all he said,
 As standing in the river road,

He looked back up the slippery slope
 (Two miles it was) to his abode.

Sometimes as an authority
 On motor-cars, I'm asked if I
 Should say our stock was petered out,
 And this is my sincere reply:

Yankees are what they always were.
 Don't think Brown ever gave up hope
 Of getting home again because
 He couldn't climb that slippery slope;

Or even thought of standing there
 Until the January thaw
 Should take the polish off the crust.
 He bowed with grace to natural law,

And then went round it on his feet,
 After the manner of our stock;
 Not much concerned for those to whom,
 At that particular time o'clock,

It must have looked as if the course
 He steered was really straight away
 From that which he was headed for—
 Not much concerned for them, I say,

But now he snapped his eyes three times;
 Then shook his lantern, saying, "Ile's
 'Bout out!" and took the long way home
 By road, a matter of several miles.

T H E R U N A W A Y

Once when the snow of the year was beginning to fall,
 We stopped by a mountain pasture to say, "Whose colt?"
 A little Morgan had one forefoot on the wall,
 The other curled at his breast. He dipped his head
 And snorted to us. And then he had to bolt.
 We heard the miniature thunder where he fled,
 And we saw him, or thought we saw him, dim and gray,
 Like a shadow against the curtain of falling flakes.
 "I think the little fellow's afraid of the snow.
 He isn't winter-broken. It isn't play
 With the little fellow at all. He's running away.
 I doubt if even his mother could tell him, 'Sakes,
 It's only weather.' He'd think she didn't know!
 Where is his mother? He can't be out alone."
 And now he comes again with a clatter of stone
 And mounts the wall again with whited eyes

And all his tail that isn't hair up straight.
 He shudders his coat as if to throw off flies.
 "Whoever it is that leaves him out so late,
 When other creatures have gone to stall and bin,
 Ought to be told to come and take him in."

TO EARTHWARD

Love at the lips was touch
 As sweet as I could bear;
 And once that seemed too much;
 I lived on air

That crossed me from sweet things,
 The flow of—was it musk
 From hidden grapevine springs
 Down hill at dusk?

I had the swirl and ache
 From sprays of honeysuckle
 That when they're gathered shake
 Dew on the knuckle.

I craved strong sweets, but those Seemed strong when I was young;
 The petal of the rose
 It was that stung.

Now no joy but lacks salt
 That is not dashed with pain
 And weariness and fault;
 I crave the stain

Of tears, the aftermath
 Of almost too much love,
 The sweet of bitter bark
 And burning clove.

When stiff and sore and scarred
 I take away my hand
 From leaning on it hard
 In grass and sand,

The hurt is not enough:
 I long for weight and strength
 To feel the earth as rough
 To all my length.

FIRE AND ICE

Some say the world will end in fire,
 Some say in ice.
 From what I've tasted of desire
 I hold with those who favor fire.
 But if it had to perish twice,
 I think I know enough of hate
 To say that for destruction ice
 Is also great
 And would suffice.

TWO LOOK AT TWO

Love and forgetting might have carried them
 A little further up the mountain side
 With night so near, but not much further up.
 They must have halted soon in any case
 With thoughts of the path back, how rough it was
 With rock and washout, and unsafe in darkness;
 When they were halted by a tumbled wall
 With barbed-wire binding. They stood facing this,
 Spending what onward impulse they still had
 In one last look the way they must not go,
 On up the failing path, where, if a stone
 Or earthslide moved at night, it moved itself;
 No footstep moved it. "This is all," they sighed,
 "Good-night to woods." But not so; there was more.
 A doe from round a spruce stood looking at them
 Across the wall as near the wall as they.

She saw them in their field, they her in hers.
 The difficulty of seeing what stood still,
 Like some up-ended boulder split in two,
 Was in her clouded eyes: they saw no fear there.
 She seemed to think that two thus they were safe.
 Then, as if they were something that, though strange,
 She could not trouble her mind with too long,
 She sighed and passed unscared along the wall.
 "This, then, is all. What more is there to ask?"
 But no, not yet. A snort to bid them wait.
 A buck from round the spruce stood looking at them
 Across the wall, as near the wall as they.
 This was an antlered buck of lusty nostril.
 Not the same doe come back into her place.
 He viewed them quizzically with jerks of head,
 As if to ask, "Why don't you make some motion?
 Or give some sign of life? Because you can't.
 I doubt if you're as living as you look."
 Thus till he had them almost feeling dared
 To stretch a proffering hand—and a spell-breaking.
 Then he too passed unscared along the wall.
 Two had seen two, whichever side you spoke from.
 "This must be all." It was all. Still they stood,
 A great wave from it going over them,
 As if the earth in one unlooked-for favor
 Had made them certain earth returned their love.

A SKY PAIR

CANIS MAJOR

The Great Overdog,
 That heavenly beast
 With a star in one eye,
 Gives a leap in the East.

He dances upright
 All the way to the West,
 And never once drops
 On his forefeet to rest.

I'm a poor Underdog;
 But tonight I will bark,
 With the Great Overdog
 That romps through the dark.

THE PEACEFUL SHEPHERD

If heaven were to do again,
 And on the pasture bars
 I leaned to line the figures in Between the dotted stars,

I should be tempted to forget,
 I think, the Crown of Rule,
 The Scales of Trade, the Cross of Faith,
 As hardly worth renewal.

For these have governed in our lives,
 And see how men have warred!
 The Cross, the Crown, the Scales, may all
 As well have been the Sword.

BEREFT

Where had I heard this wind before
 Change like this to a deeper roar?
 What would it take my standing there for,
 Holding open a restive door,
 Looking down hill to a frothy shore?
 Summer was past and day was past.
 Somber clouds on the West were massed.
 Out in the porch's sagging floor
 Leaves got up in a coil and hissed,
 Blindingly struck at my knee and missed.
 Something sinister in the tone

Told me my secret must be known:
Word I was in the house alone
Somchow must have gotten abroad;
Word I was in my life alone;
Word I had no one left but God.

TREE AT MY WINDOW

Tree at my window, window tree,
My sash is lowered when night comes on;
But let there never be curtain drawn
Between you and me.

Vague dream-head lifted out of the ground,
And thing next most diffuse to cloud,

Not all your light tongues talking aloud
Could be profound.

But, tree, I have seen you taken and tossed,
And if you have seen me when I slept,
You have seen me when I was taken and swept
And all but lost.

That day she put our heads together,
Fate had her imagination about her,
Your head so much concerned with outer,
Mine with inner, weather.

WEST-RUNNING BROOK

"Fred, where is north?"

"North? North is there, my love.

The brook runs west."

"West-running Brook then call it."

(West-running Brook men call it to this day.)

"What does it think it's doing running west
When all the other country brooks flow east
To reach the ocean? It must be the brook
Can trust itself to go by contraries
The way I can with you—and you with me—
Because we're—we're—I don't know what we are.
What are we?"

"Young or new?"

"We must be something.

We've said we two. Let's change that to we thre.
As you and I are married to each other,
We'll both be married to the brook. We'll build
Our bridge across it, and the bridge shall be
Our arm thrown over it asleep beside it.
Look, look, it's waving to us with a wave
To let us know it hears me."

"Why, my dear,

That wave's been standing off this jut of shore—"
(The black stream, catching on a sunken rock,
Flung backward on itself in one white wave,
And the white water rode the black forever,
Not gaining but not losing, like a bird
While feathers from the struggle of whose breast
Flecked the dark stream and flecked the darker pool
Below the point, and were at last driven wrinkled
In a white scarf against the far shore alders.)
"That wave's been standing off this jut of shore

Ever since rivers, I was going to say,
Were made in heaven. It wasn't waved to us."

"It wasn't, yet it was. If not to you
It was to me—in an annunciation."

"Oh, if you take it off to lady-land,
As 'twere the country of the Amazons
We men must see you to the confines of
And leave you there, ourselves forbid to enter,—
It is your brook! I have no more to say."

"Yes, you have, too. Go on. You thought of something."

"Speaking of contraries, see how the brook
In that white wave runs counter to itself.
It is from that in water we were from Long, long before we were from any creature.
Here we, in our impatience of the steps,
Get back to the beginning of beginnings,
The stream of everything that runs away.
Some say existence like a Pirouet
And Pirouette, forever in one place,
Stands still and dances, but it runs away,
It seriously, sadly, runs away
To fill the abyss' void with emptiness.
It flows beside us in this water brook,
But it flows over us. It flows between us
To separate us for a panic moment.
It flows between us, over us, and with us.
And it is time, strength, tone, light, life and love
And even substance lapsing unsubstantial;
The universal cataract of death
That spends to nothingness—and unresisted,
Save by some strange resistance in itself,
Not just a swerving, but a throwing back,
As if regret were in it and were sacred.
It has this throwing backward on itself
So that the fall of most of it is always
Raising a little, sending up a little.
Our life runs down in sending up the clock.
The brook runs down in sending up our life.
The sun runs down in sending up the brook.
And there is something sending up the sun.
It is this backward motion toward the source,
Against the stream, that most we see ourselves in,
The tribute of the current to the source.
It is from this in nature we are from.
It is most us."

"Today will be the day

You said so."

"No, today will be the day
You said the brook was called West-running Brook."

"Today will be the day of what we both said."

ONCE BY THE PACIFIC

The shattered water made a misty din,
Great waves looked over others coming in,
And thought of doing something to the shore
That water never did to land before.
The clouds were low and hairy in the skies
Like locks blown forward in the gleam of eyes.
You could not tell, and yet it looked as if
The sand was lucky in being backed by cliff,
The cliff in being backed by continent.
It looked as if a night of dark intent
Was coming, and not only a night, an age.
Someone had better be prepared for rage.
There would be more than ocean water broken
Before God's last Put out the light was spoken.

THE BEAR

The bear puts both arms around the tree above her
And draws it down as if it were a lover
And its choke-cherries lips to kiss good-by,
Then lets it snap back upright in the sky.
Her next step rocks a boulder on the wall
(She's making her cross-country in the fall.)
Her great weight creaks the barbed-wire in its staples
As she flings over and off down through the maples,
Leaving on one wire tooth a lock of hair.
Such is the uncaged progress of the bear.
The world has room to make a bear feel free;
The universe seems cramped to you and me.
Man acts more like a poor bear in a cage
That all day fights a nervous inward rage,
His mood rejecting all his mind suggests.
He paces back and forth and never rests
The toe-nail click and shuffle of his feet,
The telescope at one end of his beat,
And at the other end the microscope,
Two instruments of nearly equal hope,
And in conjunction giving quite a spread.
Or if he rests from scientific tread,
'Tis only to sit back and sway his head
Through ninety odd degrees of arc, it seems,
Between two metaphysical extremes.

He sits back on his fundamental butt
 With lifted snout and eyes (if any) shut,
 (He almost looks religious but he's not),
 And back and forth he sways from cheek to cheek,
 At one extreme agreeing with one Greek,
 At the other agreeing with another Greek
 Which may be thought, but only so to speak.
 A baggy figure, equally pathetic
 When sedentary and when peripatetic.

S A N D   D U N E S

Sea waves are green and wet,
 But up from where they die
 Rise others vaster yet,
 And those are brown and dry.

They are the sea made land
 To come at the fisher town,
 And bury in solid sand
 The men she could not drown.

She may know cove and cape,
 But she does not know mankind
 If by any change of shape
 She hopes to cut off mind.

Men left her a ship to sink;
 They can leave her a hut as well,
 And be but more free to think
 For the one more cast-off shell.

T H E   L O V E L Y   S H A L L   B E   C H O O S E R S

The Voice said, "Hurl her down!"

The Voices, "How far down?"

"Seven levels of the world."

"How much time have we?"

"Take twenty years.

She would refuse love safe with wealth and honor.
 The Lovely shall be choosers, shall they?
 Then let them choose!"

"Then we shall let her choose?"

"Yes, let her choose.

Take up the task beyond her choosing."

Invisible hands crowded on her shoulder
 In readiness to weigh upon her.

But she stood straight still,
 In broad round ear-rings, gold and jet with pearls,
 And broad round suchlike brooch,
 Her cheeks high colored,
 Proud and the pride of friends.

The Voice asked, "You can let her choose?"

"Yes, we can let her and still triumph."

"Do it by joys. And leave her always blameless.
 Be her first joy her wedding,
 That though a wedding,
 Is yet—well, something they know, he and she.
 And after that her next joy
 That though she grieves, her grief is secret:
 Those friends know nothing of her grief to make it shameful.
 Her third joy that though now they cannot help but know,
 They move in pleasure too far off
 To think much or much care.
 Give her a child at either knee for fourth joy
 To tell once and once only, for them never to forget,
 How once she walked in brightness,
 And make them see in the winter firelight.
 But give her friends, for them she dares not tell
 For their foregone incredulousness.
 And be her next joy this:
 Her never having deigned to tell them.
 Make her among the humblest even
 Seem to them less than they are.
 Hopeless of being known for what she has been,
 Failing of being loved for what she is,
 Give her the comfort for her sixth of knowing
 She fails from strangeness to a way of life
 She came to from too high too late to learn.
 Then send some one with eye to see
 And wonder at her where she is
 And words to wonder in her hearing how she came there.
 But without time to stay and hear her story.
 Be her last joy her heart's going out to this one
 So that she almost speaks.

You know them—seven in all."

"Trust us," the Voices said.

THE EGG AND THE MACHINE

He gave the solid rail a hateful kick.
 From far away there came an answering tick;
 And then another tick. He knew the code:
 His hate had roused an engine up the road.

He wished when he had had the track alone
 He had attacked it with a club or stone
 And bent some rail wide open like a switch
 So as to wreck the engine in the ditch.
 Too late, though, now to throw it down the bank;
 Its click was rising to a nearer clank.
 Here it came breasting like a horse in skirts.
 (He stood well back for fear of scalding squirts.)
 Then for a moment there was only size,
 Confusion, and a roar that drowned the cries
 He raised against the gods in the machine.
 Then once again the sand-bank lay serene,
 The traveler's eye picked up a turtle trail,
 Between the dotted feet a streak of tail,
 And followed it to where he made out vague,
 But certain signs of buried turtle egg;
 And probing with one finger not too rough,
 He found suspicious sand, and sure enough
 The pocket of a little turtle mine.
 If there was one egg in it, there were nine,
 Torpedo-like, with shell of gritty leather
 All packed in sand to wait the trump together.
 "You'd better not disturb me any more,"
 He told the distance. "I am armed for war.
 The next machine that has the power to pass
 Will get this plasin in its goggle glass."

STOPPING BY WOODS ON A SNOWY EVENING

Whose woods these are I think I know.
 His house is in the village though;
 He will not see me stopping here
 To watch his woods fill up with snow.

My little horse must think it queer
 To stop without a farmhouse near
 Between the woods and frozen lake
 The darkest evening of the year.

He gives his harness bells a shake
 To ask if there is some mistake.
 The only other sound's the sweep
 Of easy wind and downy flake.

The woods are lovely, dark and deep,
 But I have promises to keep,
 And miles to go before I sleep,
 And miles to go before I sleep.

NOTHING GOLD CAN STAY

Nature's first green is gold,
 Her hardest hue to hold.
 Her early leaf's a flower;
 But only so an hour
 Then leaf subsides to leaf.
 So Eden sank to grief,
 So dawn goes down to day.
 Nothing gold can stay.

THE ROAD NOT TAKEN

Two roads diverged in a yellow wood,
 And sorry I could not travel both
 And be one traveler, long I stood
 And looked down one as far as I could
 To where it bent in the undergrowth;

Then took the other, as just as fair,
 And having perhaps the better claim,
 Because it was grassy and wanted wear;
 Though as for that the passing there
 Had worn them really about the same,

And both that morning equally lay
In leaves no step had trodden black.
Oh, I kept the first for another day!
Yet knowing how way leads on to way,
I doubted if I should ever come back.

I shall be telling this with a sigh
Somewhere ages and ages hence:
Two roads diverged in a wood, and I—
I took the one less traveled by,
And that has made all the difference.

A LEAF-TREADER

I have been treading on leaves all day until I am autumn-tired.
God knows all the color and form of leaves I have trodden on and mired.
Perhaps I have put forth too much strength and been too fierce from fear.
I have safely trodden under foot the leaves of another year.

All summer long they were overhead more lifted up than I;
To come to their final place in earth they had to pass me by.
All summer long I thought I heard them threatening under their breath,
And when they came it seemed with a will to carry me with them to death.

They spoke to the fugitive in my heart as if it were leaves to leaf;
They tapped at my eyelids and touched my lips with an invitation to grief.
But it was no reason I had to go because they had to go.
Now up, my knee, to keep on top of another year of snow.

LOST IN HEAVEN

The clouds, the source of rain, one stormy night
Offered an opening to the source of dew,
Which I accepted with impatient sight,
Looking for my old sky-marks in the blue.

But stars were scarce in that part of the sky,
And no two were of the same constellation—
No one was bright enough to identify.
So 'twas with not ungrateful consternation,

Seeing myself well lost once more, I sighed,
“Where, where in heaven am I? But don’t tell me,”
I warned the clouds, “by opening me wide!
Let’s let my heavenly lostness overwhelm me.”

DESERT PLACES

Snow falling and night falling fast, oh, fast
In a field I looked into going past,
And the ground almost covered smooth in snow,
But a few weeds and stubble showing last.

The woods around it have it—it is theirs.
All animals are smothered in their lairs.
I am too absent-spirited to count:
The loneliness includes me unawares.

And lonely as it is, that loneliness
 Will be more lonely ere it will be less,
 A blankee whiteness of benighted snow,
 With no expression—nothing to express.

They cannot scare me with their empty spaces
 Between stars—on stars void of human races.
 I have it in me so much nearer home
 To scare myself with my own desert places.

TWQ TRAMPS IN MUD-TIME

Out of the mud two strangers came
 And caught me splitting wood in the yard.
 And one of them put me off my aim
 By hailing cheerily "Hit them hard!"
 I knew pretty well why he dropped behind
 And let the other go on a way.
 I knew pretty well what he had in mind:
 He wanted to take my job for pay.

Good blocks of beech it was I split,
 As large around as the chopping-block;
 And every piece I squarely hit
 Fell splinterless as a cloven rock.
 The blows that a life of self-control
 Spares to strike for the common good
 That day, giving a loose to my soul,
 I spent on the unimportant wood.

The sun was warm but the wind was chill.
 You know how it is with an April day:
 When the sun is out and the wind is still,
 You're one month on in the middle of May.
 But if you so much as dare to speak,
 A cloud comes over the sunlit arch,
 A wind comes off a frozen peak,
 And you're two months back in the middle of March.

A bluebird comes tenderly up to alight
 And fronts the wind to unruffle a plume,
 His song so pitched as not to excite
 A single flower as yet to bloom.
 It is snowing a flake: and he half knew
 Winter was only playing possum.
 Except in color he isn't blue,
 But he wouldn't advise a thing to blossom.

The water for which we may have to look
 In summertime with a witching-wand,
 In every wheelrut's now a brook,

In every print of a hoof a pond.
 Be glad of water, but don't forget
 The lurking frost in the earth beneath
 That will steal forth after the sun is set
 And show on the water its crystal teeth.

The time when most I loved my task
 These two must make me love it more
 By coming with what they came to ask.
 You'd think I never had felt before
 The weight of an ax head poised aloft,
 The grip on earth of outspread feet,
 The life of muscles rocking soit
 And smooth and moist in vernal heat.

Out of the woods two hulking tramps
 (From sleeping God knows where last night
 But not long since in the lumber camps).
 They thought all chopping was theirs of right.
 Men of the woods and lumber-jacks,
 They judged me by their appropriate tool.
 Except as a fellow handled an ax,
 They had no way of knowing a fool.

Nothing on either side was said.
 They knew they had but to stay their stay
 And all their logic would fill my head:
 As that I had no right to play
 With what was another man's work for gain.
 My right might be love but theirs was need.
 And where the two exist in twain
 Theirs was the better right—agreed.

But yield who will to their separation,
 My object in life is to unite
 My avocation and my vocation
 As my two eyes make one in sight.
 Only where love and need are one,
 And the work is play for mortal stakes,
 Is the deed ever really done
 For Heaven and the future's sakes.

DEPARTMENTAL

OR, MY ANT JERRY

An ant on the table-cloth
 Ran into a dormant moth
 Of many times her size.
 He showed not the least surprise.
 His business wasn't with such.
 He gave it scarcely a touch,
 And was off on his duty run.
 Yet if he encountered one
 Of the hive's enquiry squad
 Whose work is to find out God
 And the nature of time and space,
 He would put him onto the case.
 Ants are a curious race;
 One crossing with hurried tread
 The body of one of their dead
 Isn't given a moment's arrest—
 Seems not even impressed.
 But he no doubt reports to any
 With whom he crosses antennae,
 And they no doubt report

To the higher up at court.
 Then word goes forth in Formic:
 "Death's come to Jerry McCormic,
 Our selfless forager Jerry.
 Will the special Janizary
 Whose office it is to bury
 The dead of the commissary
 Go bring him home to his people.
 Lay him in state on a sepal.
 Wrap him for shroud in a petal.
 Embalm him with ichor of nettle.
 This is the word of your Queen."
 And presently on the scene
 Appears a solemn mortician;
 And taking formal position
 With feelers calmly atwiddle,
 Seizes the dead by the middle,
 And heaving him high in air,
 Carries him out of there.
 No one stands round to stare.
 It is nobody else's affair.

It couldn't be called ungentle.
 But how thoroughly departmental.

A CONSIDERABLE SPECK

A speck that would have been beneath my sight
 On any but a paper sheet so white
 Set oft across what I had written there,
 And I had idly poised my pen in air
 To stop it with a period of ink,
 When something strange about it made me think
 This was no dust speck by my breathing blown,
 But unmistakably a living mite
 With inclinations it could call its own.
 It paused as with suspicion of my pen,
 And then came racing wildly on again
 To where my manuscript was not yet dry,
 Then paused again and either drank or smelt—
 With horror, for again it turned to fly.
 Plainly with an intelligence I dealt.
 It seemed too tiny to have room for feet,
 Yet must have had a set of them complete
 To express how much it didn't want to die.
 It ran with terror and with cunning crept.
 It faltered! I could see it hesitate—
 Then in the middle of the open sheet
 Cower down in desperation to accept
 Whatever I accorded it of fate.
 I have none of the tenderer-than-thou

Political collectivistic love
 With which the modern world is being swept—
 But this poor microscopic item now!
 Since it was nothing I knew evil of
 I let it lie there till I hope it slept.
 I have a mind myself, and recognize
 Mind where I meet with it in any guise.
 No one can know how glad I am to find
 On any sheet the least display of mind.

HAPPINESS MAKES UP IN HEIGHT FOR WHAT IT LACKS IN LENGTH

Oh stormy, stormy world,
 The days you were not swirled
 Around with mist and cloud,
 Or wrapped as in a shroud,
 And the sun's brilliant ball
 Was not in part or all
 Obscured from mortal view,
 Were days so very few
 I can but wonder whence
 I get the lasting sense
 Of so much warmth and light.
 If my mistrust is right
 It may be altogether
 From one day's perfect weather
 When starting clear at dawn
 The day went clearly on
 To finish clear at eve.
 I verily believe
 My fair impression may
 Be all from that one day
 No shadow crossed but ours,
 As through the blazing flowers
 We went from house to wood
 For change of solitude.

COME IN

As I came to the edge of the woods,
 Thrush music—hark!
 Now if it was dusk outside,
 Inside it was dark.

Too dark in the woods for a bird
 By sleight of wing
 To better its perch for the night,
 Though it still could sing.

The last of the light of the sun
 That had died in the west

Still lived for one song more
 In a thrush's breast.

Far in the pillared dark
 Thrush music went—
 Almost like a call to come in
 To the dark and lament.

But no, I was out for stars:
 I would not come in.
 I meant not even if asked;
 And I hadn't been.

William Ellery Leonard

WILLIAM ELLERY LEONARD was born in Plainfield, New Jersey, January 25, 1876. He received his A.M. at Harvard in 1899 and completed his studies at the Universities of Göttingen and Bonn. After traveling for several years throughout Europe, he became a teacher and has been professor of English in the University of Wisconsin since 1906.

The Vaunt of Man (1912) is a characteristic volume. Traditional in form and material, it is anything but conservative in spirit. Leonard's fervor speaks in the simplest of his quatrains and sonnets. This protesting passion is given an even wider sweep in The Lynching Bee and Other Poems (1920).

Tutankhamen and After (1924) is an ambitious attempt to picture the continuity of man's life in three pages, but in spite of a few felicitous lines the title-poem is prosy. It was a grave injustice to claim this as Leonard's "most representative volume." That distinction must be claimed by Two Lives, which was privately issued in 1923 and publicly offered in 1925. Reminiscent of Richard Dehmel's Zwei Menschen, this chain of sonnets compresses an intensity in which the effect of the cumulative drama is far greater than that of any single poem.

The Locomotive God (1927) is a strange document written in autobiographical prose. It is the narrative of a student and poet who ends as a neurotic confined by an unusual phobia within a few blocks' radius of his home. Disproportionate in its concern with trifles, painful as analysis of fevered imagination, the book has a personal interest beyond the case history; it is frankly autobiographical.

A Son of Earth (1929) is composed of selections from Leonard's previous poetry with the exception of his translations and Two Lives. It, too, was arranged autobiographically "with reference to activities, aims, influences, crises." This larger collection suffers the same defects as Two Lives; its sincerity is compelling, its candor unreserved, but only a few pages could be offered as examples of poetry per se. A Son of Earth contains page after page of inversions and pomposities incredibly preserved; one can understand the youth that luxuriated in such clichés as "golden fee," "slumbering acons," "shadowy woodlands," "white nymphs," "brazen trumpets," "immemorial tides," but it is hard to credit a maturity that proudly reprints them. Rhetoric aside, there is wisdom here and wit, a malicious sparkle in the revised fables grouped under "Aesop and Hyssop."

Besides his original poetry, Leonard has published several volumes of translations of Beowulf, Empedocles and Lucretius.

THE IMAGE OF DELIGHT

O how came I that loved stars, moon, and flame,
And unimaginable wind and sea,
All inner shrines and temples of the free,
Legends and hopes and golden books of fame;
I that upon the mountain carved my name
With cliffs and clouds and eagles over me.

O how came I to stoop to loving thee—
I that had never stooped before to shame?

O 'twas not thee! Too eager of a white
Far beauty and a voice to answer mine,
Myself I built an image of delight,
Which all one purple day I deemed divine—
And when it vanished in the fiery night,
I lost not thee, nor any shape of thine.

TO THE VICTOR

Man's mind is larger than his brow of tears;
This hour is not my all of time; this place
My all of earth; nor this obscene disgrace
My all of life; and thy complacent sneers
Shall not pronounce my doom to my compeers
While the Hereafter lights me in the face,
And from the Past, as from the mountain's base,
Rise, as I rise, the long tumultuous cheers.
And who slays me must overcome a world:
Heroes at arms, and virgins who became
Mothers of children, prophecy and song;
Walls of old cities with their flags unfurled;
Peaks, headlands, ocean and its isles of fame—
And sun and moon and all that made me strong!

Carl Sandburg

CARL (AUGUST) SANDBURG was born of Swedish stock at Galesburg, Illinois, January 6, 1878. His schooling was haphazard; at thirteen he went to work on a milk wagon. During the next six years he was, in rapid succession, porter in a barber shop, scene-shifter in a cheap theater, truck-handler in a brickyard, turner-apprentice in a pottery, dish-washer in Denver and Omaha hotels, harvest hand in Kansas wheatfields. These tasks equipped him, as no amount of learning could have done, to be the laureate of industrial America. When war with Spain was declared in 1898, Sandburg, avid for fresh adventure, enlisted in Company C, Sixth Illinois Volunteers.

On his return from the campaign in Porto Rico, Sandburg entered Lombard College in Galesburg and, for the first time, began to think in terms of literature. After leaving college, where he had been captain of the basket-ball team as well as editor-in-chief of the college paper, Sandburg did all manner of things to earn a living. He was advertising manager for a department store and worked as district organizer for the Social-Democratic party of Wisconsin. He became salesman, pamphleteer, newspaperman.

In 1904 Sandburg published the proverbial "slender sheaf," a tiny pamphlet of twenty-two poems, uneven in quality, but strangely like the work of the mature

Sandburg in feeling. What is more, these experiments anticipated the inflection of the later poems, with their spiritual kinship to Henley and Whitman; several of these early experiments (with the exception of the rhymed verses) might be placed, without seeming incongruous, in the later collections. The idiom of Smoke and Steel (1920) is more intensified, but it is the same idiom as that of "Milville" (1903), which begins:

Down in southern New Jersey they make glass.

By day and by night, the fires burn on in Milville and bid the sand let in the light.

Meanwhile the newspaperman was struggling to keep the poet alive. Until he was thirty-six years old Sandburg was unknown to the literary world. In 1914 a group of his poems appeared in Poetry: A Magazine of Verse; during the same year one of the group (the now famous "Chicago") was awarded the Levinson prize of two hundred dollars. A little more than a year later his first real book was published, and Sandburg's stature was apparent to all who cared to look.

Chicago Poems (1916) is full of ferment; it seethes with loose energy. If Frost is an intellectual aristocrat, Sandburg might be termed an emotional democrat. Sandburg's speech is simple and powerful; he uses slang as freely as his predecessors used the now archaic tongue of their times. Never has the American vulgate been used with such artistry and effect. Immediately cries of protest were heard: Sandburg was coarse and brutal; his work ugly and distorted; his language unrefined, unfit for poetry. His detractors forgot that Sandburg was brutal only to condemn brutality; that beneath his toughness, he was one of the tenderest of living poets; that, when he used colloquialisms and a richly metaphorical slang, he was searching for new poetic values in "limber, lasting, fierce words"—unconsciously answering Whitman who asked, "Do you suppose the liberties and brawn of These States have to do only with delicate lady-words? With gloved gentleman-words?"

Cornhuskers (1918) is another step forward; it is as sweeping as its forerunner and more sensitive. The gain in power and restraint is evident in the very first poem, a wide-swept vision of the prairie. Here is something of the surge of a Norse saga; Cornhuskers is keen with a salty vigor, a sympathy for all that is splendid and terrible in Nature. But the raw violence is restrained to the point of half-withheld mysticism. There are, in this volume, dozens of those delicate perceptions of beauty that must astonish those who think that Sandburg can write only a big-fisted, rough-neck sort of poetry. As Sandburg has sounded some of the most fortissimo notes in modern poetry, he has also breathed some of its softest phrases. "Cool Tombs," one of the most poignant lyrics of our times, moves with a low music; "Grass" whispers as quietly as the earlier "Fog" stole in on stealthy, cat feet.

Smoke and Steel (1920) is the synthesis of its predecessors. In this collection, Sandburg has fused mood, accent and image. Whether the poet evokes the spirit of a jazz-band or, having had the radiance (the "flash crunson"), prays to touch life at its other extreme, this volume is not so vociferous as it is assured. Smoke-belching chimneys are here, quarries and great boulders of iron-ribbed rock; here are titanic visions: the dreams of men and machinery. And silence is here—the silence of sleeping tenements and sun-soaked cornfields.

Slabs of the Sunburnt West (1923) is a fresh fusing: here in quick succession are the sardonic invectives of "And So Today," the rhapsody of "The Windy City" (an amplification of the early "Chicago"), and the panoramic title-poem. Although the book's chief exhibit is the amplitude of its longer poems, there are a few brevities (such as "Upstream") which have the vigor of a jubilant cry. Sandburg is still tempted to talk at the top of his voice, to bang the table and hurl his loudest epithets into the teeth of his opponents. But often he goes to the other extreme; he is likely to leave his material soft and loose instead of solidifying his emotions. There are times when the poet seems unsure whether or not he can furnish more than a clew to the half-realized wisps of his imagination. But though his meaning may not always be clear, there is no mistaking the power of his feeling nor the curious cadences of his music.

Good Morning, America (1928) is characteristically Sandburg at his best and worst. There are passages which are hopelessly enigmatic, passages which are only inflations of commonplace ideas. On the other hand, there are pages which are remarkable experiments in suspension, pages sensitive with a beauty delicately perceived. The thirty-eight "Tentative (First Model) Definitions of Poetry" with which the volume is prefaced are footnotes as well as prologues to his work in general, and the purely descriptive pieces are among his finest. Incidentally, the volume shows how far Sandburg has gone in critical esteem since the time when his Chicago Poems was openly derided, the title poem of Good Morning, America, having been read as a Phi Beta Kappa poem at Harvard. Here, too, one is impressed by Sandburg's hatred of war; Sandburg was one of the first American poets to express the growing protests in "A. E. F." and other poems.

Besides his poetry, Sandburg has written three volumes of imaginative and, if one can conceive of such a thing, humorously mystical tales for children: Rootabaga Stories (1922), Rootabaga Pigeons (1923) and Potato Face (1930), the last being—so the poet and publisher insist—tales for adults of all ages. A collection of the Rootabaga stories was illustrated by Peggy Bacon in 1929. Eight years were spent traveling and studying documents for his vitalized Abraham Lincoln: The Prairie Years (1926), and assembling material for his collection of native folk-tunes The American Songbag (1927), a massive and revealing folio of words, music, and accompaniments to two hundred and eighty songs, more than one hundred of them never in print until Sandburg's ear and notebook gathered them from pioneer grandmothers, work-gangs, railroad men, hoboes, convicts, cowboys, mountain people, and others who sing "because they must." Another ten years prepared him to write Abraham Lincoln: The War Years, the six volumes constituting the most extensive modern presentation of Lincoln and his times.

In 1924 the poet perfected a unique lecture—part recital, part singing of American folk-tunes, part "circus," as he describes it—which he continued to give throughout the country. Accompanied by his guitar, Sandburg brought new values to the reading of poetry. His low-toned footnotes were full of philosophic asides. Speaking of realism and romanticism, he once told the following fable: "There was a man who did not find in his house all he desired. One day he came in to find his wife working with a workbasket full of bright silk threads. He caught up a handful. He held them tight for a moment. Then he opened his hand. The threads became hundreds of brilliant butterflies flying joyfully about the room. The man watched them. Then he opened his hand, gathered them all in, tightened his hold. They became silk threads; he returned them to the workbasket. . . . And if you can believe that," Sandburg concluded, "you are a romanticist."

Suddenly in his fifty-eighth year the poet emerged tougher and more resolute than ever. The People, Yes (1936) is a synthesis of research and rhapsody, of the collector's energy and the creator's imagination. The work is a carryall of folk-tales, catch-phrases, tall stories, gossip and history. With a new gusto and an old reliance on the native idiom, Sandburg affirms his faith. Never, except in Whitman, has the common man been so celebrated; never has there been a greater tribute to the people's shrewd skepticism and stubborn optimism, their patience and their power. Here are the people, misled and misunderstood, bewildered and betrayed, but stronger and wiser than they know: "a reservoir of the human reserves that shape history."

TEN DEFINITIONS OF POETRY

- 1 Poetry is a projection across silence of cadences arranged to break that silence with definite intentions of echoes, syllables, wave lengths.
- 2 Poetry is the journal of a sea animal living on land, wanting to fly the air.
- 3 Poetry is a series of explanations of life, fading off into horizons too swift for explanations.
- 4 Poetry is a search for syllables to shoot at the barriers of the unknown and the unknowable.
- 5 Poetry is a theorem of a yellow-silk handkerchief knotted with riddles, sealed in a balloon tied to the tail of a kite flying in a white wind against a blue sky in spring.
- 6 Poetry is the silence and speech between a wet struggling root of a flower and a sunlit blossom of that flower.
- 7 Poetry is the harnessing of the paradox of earth cradling life and then entombing it.
- 8 Poetry is a phantom script telling how rainbows are made and why they go away.
- 9 Poetry is the synthesis of hyacinths and biscuits.
- 10 Poetry is the opening and closing of a door, leaving those who look through to guess about what is seen during a moment.

CHICAGO

Hog Butcher for the World,
Tool Maker, Stacker of Wheat,
Player with Railroads and the Nation's Freight Handler;
Stormy, husky, brawling,
City of the Big Shoulders:

They tell me you are wicked and I believe them, for I have seen your painted women under the gas lamps luring the farm boys.

And they tell me you are crooked and I answer: Yes, it is true I have seen the gunman kill and go free to kill again.

And they tell me you are brutal and my reply is: On the faces of women and children I have seen the marks of wanton hunger.

And having answered so I turn once more to those who sneer at this my city, and I give them back the sneer and say to them:

Come and show me another city with listed head singing so proud to be alive and coarse and strong and cunning.

Flinging magnetic curses amid the toil of piling job on job, here is a tall bold slugger set vivid against the little soft cities;

Fierce as a dog with tongue lapping for action, cunning as a savage pitted against the wilderness,

Bareheaded,

Shoveling,

Wrecking,

Planning,

Building, breaking, rebuilding.

Under the smoke, dust all over his mouth, laughing with white teeth,

Under the terrible burden of destiny laughing as a young man laughs,

Laughing even as an ignorant fighter laughs who has never lost a battle,

Bragging and laughing that under his wrist is the pulse, and under his ribs the heart of the people,

Laughing!

Laughing the stormy, husky, brawling laughter of Youth, half-naked, sweating, proud to be Hog Butcher, Tool Maker, Stacker of Wheat, Player with Railroads and Freight Handler to the Nation.

The fog comes

G R A S S

Pile the bodies high at Austerlitz and Waterloo.

Shovel them under and let me work—

I am the grass; I cover all.

And pile them high at Gettysburg

And pile them high at Ypres and Verdun.

Shovel them under and let me work.

Two years, ten years, and passengers ask the conductor:

What place is this?

Where are we now?

I am the grass.

Let me work.

C O O L T O M B S

When Abraham Lincoln was shoveled into the tombs, he forgot the copperheads and the assassin . . . in the dust, in the cool tombs.

And Ulysses Grant lost all thought of con men and Wall Street, cash and collateral turned ashes . . . in the dust, in the cool tombs.

Pocahontas' body, lovely as a poplar, sweet as a red haw in November or a pawpaw in May, did she wonder? does she remember? . . . in the dust, in the cool tombs?

Take any streetful of people buying clothes and groceries, cheering a hero or throwing confetti and blowing tin horns . . . tell me if the lovers are losers . . . tell me if any get more than the lovers . . . in the dust . . . in the cool tombs.

NOCTURNE IN A DESERTED BRICKYARD

Stuff of the moon
 Runs on the lapping sand
 Out to the longest shadows.
 Under the curving willows,
 And round the creep of the wave line,
 Fluxions of yellow and dusk on the waters
 Make a wide dreaming pansy of an old pond in the night.

LIMITED

I am riding on a limited express, one of the crack trains of the nation.
 Hurling across the prairie into blue haze and dark air go fifteen all-steel coaches holding a thousand people.
 (All the coaches shall be scrap and rust and all the men and women laughing in the diners and sleepers shall pass to ashes.)
 I ask a man in the smoker where he is going and he answers: "Omaha."

I

The woman named Tomorrow sits with a hairpin in her teeth and takes her time
 and does her hair the way she wants it and fastens at last the last braid and coil and puts the hairpin where it belongs and turns and drawls: Well, what of it?
 My grandmother, Yesterday, is gone.
 What of it? Let the dead be dead.

2

The doors were cedar and the panel strips of gold and the girls were golden girls and the panels read and the girls chanted:
     We are the greatest city,
     and the greatest nation:
     nothing like us ever was.

The doors are twisted on broken hinges,
 Sheets of rain swish through on the wind
     where the golden girls ran and the panels read:
     We are the greatest city,
     the greatest nation,
     nothing like us ever was.

3

It has happened before.
 Strong men put up a city and got a nation together,
 And paid singers to sing and women
     to warble: We are the greatest city,
     the greatest nation,
     nothing like us ever was.

And while the singers sang and the strong men listened and paid the singers well, there were rats and lizards who listened
     . . . and the only listeners left now
     . . . are . . . the rats . . . and the lizards.
 And there are black crows crying, "Caw, caw," bringing mud and sticks building a nest
     over the words carved on the doors where the panels were cedar and the strips on the panels were gold and the golden girls came singing:
         We are the greatest city,
         the greatest nation:
         nothing like us ever was.

The only singers now are crows crying, "Caw, caw,"
 And the sheets of rain whine in the wind and doorways.
 And the only listeners now are . . . the rats . . . and the lizards.

4

The feet of the rats
 scribble on the doorsills;
 the hieroglyphs of the rat footprints chatter the pedigrees of the rats and babble of the blood and gabble of the breed of the grandfathers and the great-grandfathers of the rats.

And the wind shifts
 and the dust on a doorsill shifts and even the writing of the rat footprints tells us nothing, nothing at all about the greatest city, the greatest nation where the strong men listened and the women warbled: Nothing like us ever was.

A. E. F.

There will be a rusty gun on the wall, sweetheart,
 The rifle grooves curling with flakes of rust.
 A spider will make a silver string nest in the darkest, warmest corner of it.
 The trigger and the range-finder, they too will be rusty.
 And no hands will polish the gun, and it will hang on the wall.
 Forefingers and thumbs will point absently and casually toward it.
 It will be spoken among half-forgotten, wished-to-be-forgotten things.
 They will tell the spider: Go on, you're doing good work.

PRAYERS OF STEEL

Lay me on an anvil, O God.
 Beat me and hammer me into a crowbar.
 Let me pry loose old walls;
 Let me lift and loosen old foundations.

Lay me on an anvil, O God.
 Beat me and hammer me into a steel spike.
 Drive me into the girders that hold a skyscraper together.
 Take red-hot rivets and fasten me into the central girders.
 Let me be the great nail holding a skyscraper through blue nights into white stars.

JAZZ FANTASIA

Drum on your drums, batter on your banjos, sob on the long cool winding saxophones. Go to it, O jazzmen.

Sling your knuckles on the bottoms of the happy tin pans, let your trombones ooze, and go husha-husha-hush with the slippcry sandpaper.

Moan like an autumn wind high in the lonesome treetops, moan soft like you wanted somebody terrible, cry like a racing car slipping away from a motorcycle-cop, bang-bang! you jazzmen, bang altogether drums, traps, banjos, horns, tin cans—make two people fight on the top of a stairway and scratch each other's eyes in a clinch tumbling down the stairs.

Can the rough stuff . . . Now a Mississippi steamboat pushes up the night river with a hoo-hoo-hoo-oo . . . and the green lanterns calling to the high soft stars . . . a red moon rides on the humps of the low river hills. . . . Go to it, O jazzmen.

BLUE ISLAND INTERSECTION

Six street-ends come together here.
 They feed people and wagons into the center.

In and out all day horses with thoughts of nose-bags,
 Men with shovels, women with baskets and baby buggies.
 Six ends of streets and no sleep for them all day.
 The people and wagons come and go, out and in.
 Triangles of banks and drug stores watch.
 The policemen whistle, the trolley cars bump:
 Wheels, wheels, feet, feet, all day.

In the false dawn where the chickens blink
 And the east shakes a lazy baby toe at tomorrow,
 And the east fixes a pink half-eye this way,
 In the time when only one milk wagon crosses
 These three streets, these six street-ends
 It is the sleep time and they rest.
 The triangle banks and drug stores rest.
 The policeman is gone, his star and gun sleep.
 The owl car blutters along in a sleep-walk.

FROM "SMOKE AND STEEL"

Smoke of the fields in spring is one,
 Smoke of the leaves in autumn another.
 Smoke of a steel-mill roof or a battleship funnel,
 They all go up in a line with a smokestack,
 Or they twist . . . in the slow twist . . . of the wind.

If the north wind comes they run to the south.
 If the west wind comes they run to the east.

By this sign
 all smokes know each other.

Smoke of the fields in spring and leaves in autumn,
 Smoke of the finished steel, chilled and blue,
 By the oath of work they swear: "I know you."

Hunted and hissed from the center
 Deep down long ago when God made us over,
 Deep down are the cinders we came from—
 You and I and our heads of smoke.

Some of the smokes God dropped on the job
 Cross on the sky and count our years
 And sing in the secrets of our numbers;
 Sing their dawns and sing their evenings,
 Sing an old log-fire song:
     You may put the damper up,
     You may put the damper down,
     The smoke goes up the chimney just the same.

Smoke of a city sunset skyline,
 Smoke of a country dusk horizon—
 They cross on the sky and count our years.

Smoke of a brick-red dust
 Winds on a spiral
 Out of the stacks
 For a hidden and glimpsing moon.
 This, said the bar-iron shed to the blooming mill,
 This is the slang of coal and steel.
 The day-gang hands it to the night-gang,
 The night-gang hands it back.

Stammer at the slang of this—
 Let us understand half of it.

In the rolling mills and sheet mills,
 In the harr and boom of the blast fires,
 The smoke changes its shadow
 And men change their shadow;
 A nigger, a wop, a bohunk changes.

A bar of steel—it is only
 Smoke at the heart of it, smoke and the blood of a man.
 A runner of fire ran in it, ran out, ran somewhere else,
 And left smoke and the blood of a man
 And the finished steel, chilled and blue.

So fire runs in, runs out, runs somewhere else again,
 And the bar of steel is a gun, a wheel, a nail, a shovel,
 A rudder under the sea, a steering-gear in the sky;
 And always dark in the heart and through it,
 Smoke and the blood of a man.
 Pittsburgh, Youngstown, Gary, they make their steel with men.

In the blood of men and the ink of chimneys
 The smoke nights write their oaths:
 Smoke into steel and blood into steel;
 Homestead, Braddock, Birmingham, they make their steel with men.
 Smoke and blood is the mix of steel. . . .

LOSERS

If I should pass the tomb of Jonah
 I would stop there and sit for a while;
 Because I was swallowed one time deep in the dark
 And came out alive after all.

If I pass the burial spot of Nero
 I shall say to the wind, "Well, well!"—

I who have fiddled in a world on fire,
 I who have done so many stunts not worth the doing.

I am looking for the grave of Sinbad too.
 I want to shake his ghost-hand and say,
 "Neither of us died very early, did we?"

And the last sleeping-place of Nebuchadnezzar—
 When I arrive there I shall tell the wind:
 "You ate grass; I have eaten crow—
 Who is better off now or next year?"

Jack Cade, John Brown, Jesse James,
 There too I could sit down and stop for a while.
 I think I could tell their headstones:
 "God, let me remember all good losers."

I could ask people to throw ashes on their heads
 In the name of that sergeant at Belleau Woods,
 Walking into the drumfires, calling his men,
 "Come on, you . . . Do you want to live forever?"

WIND SONG

Long ago I learned how to sleep,
 In an old apple orchard where the wind swept by counting its money and throwing it away,
 In a wind-gaunt orchard where the limbs forked out and listened or never listened at all,
 In a passel of trees where the branches trapped the wind into whistling, "Who, who are you?"
 I slept with my head in an elbow on a summer afternoon and there I took a sleep lesson.
 There I went away saying: I know why they sleep, I know how they trap the tricky winds.
 Long ago I learned how to listen to the singing wind and how to forget and how to hear the deep whine,
 Slapping and lapsing under the day blue and the night stars:
 Who, who are you?

Who can ever forget listening to the wind go by counting its money
 and throwing it away?

PRIMER LESSON

Look out how you use proud words.
 When you let proud words go, it is not easy to call them back.
 They wear long boots, hard boots; they walk off proud; they can't hear you calling—
 Look out how you use proud words.

BROKEN-FACE GARGOYLES

All I can give you is broken-face gargoyle.
It is too early to sing and dance at funerals,
Though I can whisper to you I am looking for an undertaker humming a lullaby and throwing his feet in a swift and mystic buck-and-wing, now you see it and now you don't.

Fish to swim a pool in your garden flashing a speckled silver,
A basket of wine-saps filling your room with flame-dark for your eyes and the tang of valley orchards for your nose,
Such a beautiful pail of fish, such a beautiful peck of apples, I cannot bring you
now.
It is too early and I am not footloose yet.

I shall come in the night when I come with a hammer and saw.
I shall come near your window, where you look out when your eyes open in the morning,
And there I shall slam together bird-houses and bird-baths for wing-loose wrens and hummers to live in, birds with yellow wing tips to blur and buzz soft all summer.

So I shall make little fool homes with doors, always open doors for all and each to run away when they want to.
I shall come just like that even though now it is early and I am not yet footloose,
Even though I am still looking for an undertaker with a raw, wind-bitten face and a dance in his feet.
I make a date with you (put it down) for six o'clock in the evening a thousand years from now.

All I can give you now is broken-face gargoyle.
All I can give you now is a double gorilla head with two fish mouths and four eagle eyes hooked on a street wall, spouting water and looking two ways to the ends of the street for the new people, the young strangers, coming, coming, always coming.

It is early.
I shall yet be footloose.

FLASH CRIMSON

I shall cry God to give me a broken foot.

I shall ask for a scar and a slashed nose.

I shall take the last and the worst.

I shall be eaten by gray creepers in a bunkhouse where no runners of the sun come and no dogs live.

And yet—of all “and yets” this is the bronze strongest—

I shall keep one thing better than all else; there is the blue steel of a great star of early evening in it; it lives longer than a broken foot or any scar.

The broken foot goes to a hole dug with a shovel or the bone of a nose may whiten on a hilltop—and yet—and yet”—

There is one crimson pinch of ashes left after all; and none of the shifting winds that whip the grass and none of the pounding rains that beat the dust know how to touch or find the flash of this crimson.

I cry to God to give me a broken foot, a scar, or a lousy death.

I who have seen the flash of this crimson, I ask God for the last and worst.

EARLY LYNCHING

Two Christs were at Golgotha.

One took the vinegar, another looked on.

One was on the cross, another in the mob.

One had the nails in his hands, another the stiff fingers holding a hammer driving nails.

There were many more Christs at Golgotha, many more thief pals, many many more in the mob howling the Judean equivalent of “Kill Him! Kill Him!”

The Christ they killed, the Christ they didn’t kill, those were the two at Golgotha.

Pity, pity, the bones of these broken ankles.

Pity, pity, the limp of these broken wrists

The mother’s arms are strong to the last.

She holds him and counts the heart drips.

The smell of the slums was on him,

Wrongs of the slums lit his eyes.

Songs of the slums wove in his voice

The haters of the slums hated his slum heart.

The leaves of a mountain tree,

Leaves with a spinning star shook in them,

Rocks with a song of water, water, over them,

Hawks with an eye for death any time, any time,

The smell and the sway of these were on his sleeves, were in his nostrils, his words.

The slum man they killed, the mountain man lives on.

PRECIOUS MOMENTS

Bright vocabularies are transient as rainbows.

Speech requires blood and air to make it.

Before the word comes off the end of the tongue,

While the diaphragms of flesh negotiate the word,

In the moment of doom when the word forms

It is born, alive, registering an imprint—

Afterward it is a mummy, a dry fact, done and gone,
 The warning holds yet: Speak now or forever hold your peace.
Ecce homo had meanings: Behold the man! Look at him!
 Dying he lives and speaks!

MOIST MOON PEOPLE

The moon is able to command the valley tonight.
 The green mist shall go a-roaming, the white river shall go a-roaming.
 Yet the moon shall be commanding, the moon shall take a high stand on the sky.

When the cats crept up the gullies,
 And the goats fed at the rim a-laughing,
 When the spiders swept their rooms in the burr oaks,
 And the katydids first searched for this year's accordions,
 And the crickets began a-looking for last year's concertinas—

I was there, I saw that hour, I know God had grand intentions about it.
 If not, why did the moon command the valley, the green mist and white river go a-roaming, and the moon by itself take so high a stand on the sky?

If God and I alone saw it, the show was worth putting on,
 Yet I remember others were there, Amos and Priscilla, Axel and Hulda, Hank and Jo, Big Charley and Little Morningstar.
 They were all there; the clock ticks spoke with castanet clicks.

BUNDLES

I have thought of beaches, fields,
 Tears, laughter.

I have thought of homes put up—
 And blown away.

I have thought of meetings and for
 Every meeting a good-by.

I have thought of stars going alone,
 Orioles in pairs, sunsets in blundering
 Wistful deaths.

I have wanted to let go and cross over
 To a next star, a last star.

I have asked to be left a few tears
 And some laughter.

UPSTREAM

The strong men keep coming on,
 They go down shot, hanged, sick, broken.

They live on fighting, singing, lucky as plungers.
 The strong mothers pulling them on . . .
 The strong mothers pulling them from a dark sea, a great prairie, a long mountain.
 Call hallelujah, call amen, call deep thanks.
 The strong men keep coming on.

SUNSETS

There are sunsets who whisper a good-by.
 It is a short dusk and a way for stars.
 Prairie and sea rim they go level and even,
 And the sleep is easy.

There are sunsets who dance good-by.
 They fling scarves half to the arc,
 To the arc then and over the arc
 Ribbons at the ears, sashes at the hips,
 Dancing, dancing good-by. And here sleep
 Tosses a little with dreams.

ELEPHANTS ARE DIFFERENT TO DIFFERENT PEOPLE

Wilson and Pilcer and Snack stood before the zoo elephant.

Wilson said, "What is its name? Is it from Asia or Africa? Who feeds it? Is it a he or a she? How old is it? Do they have twins? How much does it cost to feed? How much does it weigh? If it dies how much will another one cost? If it dies what will they use the bones, the fat, and the hide for? What use is it besides to look at?"

Pilcer didn't have any questions; he was murmuring to himself, "It's a house by itself, walls and windows, the ears came from tall cornfields, by God; the architect of those legs was a workman, by God; he stands like a bridge out across deep water; the face is sad and the eyes are kind; I know elephants are good to babies."

Snack looked up and down and at last said to himself, "He's a tough son-of-a-gun outside and I'll bet he's got a strong heart, I'll bet he's strong as a copper riveted boiler inside."

They didn't put up any arguments.
 They didn't throw anything in each other's faces.
 Three men saw the elephant three ways
 And let it go at that.
 They didn't spoil a sunny Sunday afternoon;
 "Sunday comes only once a week," they told each other.

FOR YOU

The peace of great doors be for you.
 Wait at the knobs, at the panel oblongs;
 Wait for the great hinges.

The peace of great churches be for you,
 Where the players of loft pipe-organs
 Practice old lovely fragments, alone.

The peace of great books be for you,
 Stains of pressed clover leaves on pages,
 Bleach of the light of years held in leather.

The peace of great prairies be for you.
 Listen among windplayers in cornfields,
 The wind learning over its oldest music.

The peace of great seas be for you.
 Wait on a hook of land, a rock footing
 For you, wait in the salt wash.

The peace of great mountains be for you,
 The sleep and the eyesight of eagles,
 Sheet mist shadows and the long look across

The peace of great hearts be for you,
 Valves of the blood of the sun,
 Pumps of the strongest wants we cry.

The peace of great silhouettes be for you,
 Shadow dancers alive in your blood now,
 Alive and crying, "Let us out, let us out."

The peace of great changes be for you.
Whispers, oh beginners in the hills.
Tumble, oh cubs—tomorrow belongs to you.

The peace of great loves be for you.
Rain, soak these roots; wind, shatter the dry rot.
Bars of sunlight, grips of the earth; hug these.

The peace of great ghosts be for you,
Phantoms of night-gray eyes, ready to go
To the fog-star dumps, to the fire-white doors.

Yes, the peace of great phantoms be for you,
Phantom iron men, mothers of bronze,
Keepers of the lean clean breeds.

THEY HAVE YARNS

(from "The People, Yes")

They have yarns
Of a skyscraper so tall they had to put hinges
On the two top stories so to let the moon go by,
Of one corn crop in Missouri when the roots
Went so deep and drew off so much water
The Mississippi riverbed that year was dry,
Of pancakes so thin they had only one side,
Of "a fog so thick we shingled the barn and six feet out on the fog,"
Of Pecos Pete straddling a cyclone in Texas and riding it to the west coast where
"it rained out under him,"
Of the man who drove a swarm of bees across the Rocky Mountains and the Desert
"and didn't lose a bee,"
Of a mountain railroad curve where the engineer in his cab can touch the caboose and spit in the conductor's eye,
Of the boy who climbed a cornstalk growing so fast he would have starved to death
if they hadn't shot biscuits up to him,
Of the old man's whiskers: "When the wind was with him his whiskers arrived a day before he did,"
Of the hen laying a square egg and cackling, "Ouch!" and of hens laying eggs with the dates printed on them,
Of the ship captain's shadow: it froze to the deck one cold winter night,
Of mutineers on that same ship put to chipping rust with rubber hammers,
Of the sheep counter who was fast and accurate: "I just count their feet and divide by four,"
Of the man so tall he must climb a ladder to shave himself,
Of the runt so teeny-weeny it takes two men and a boy to see him,
Of mosquitoes: one can kill a dog, two of them a man,
Of a cyclone that sucked cookstoves out of the kitchen, up the chimney flue, and on to the next town,
Of the same cyclone picking up wagon-tracks in Nebraska and dropping them over in the Dakotas,
Of the hook-and-eye snake unlocking itself into forty pieces, each piece two inches long, then in nine seconds flat snapping itself together again,
Of the watch swallowed by the cow—when they butchered her a year later the watch was running and had the correct time,
Of horned snakes, hoop snakes that roll themselves where they want to go, and rattlesnakes carrying bells instead of rattles on their tails,
Of the herd of cattle in California getting lost in a giant redwood tree that had hollowed out,

Of the man who killed a snake by putting its tail in its mouth so it swallowed itself,
 Of railroad trains whizzing along so fast they reach the station before the whistle,
 Of pigs so thin the farmer had to tie knots in their tails to keep them from crawling through the cracks in their pens,
 Of Paul Bunyan's big blue ox, Babe, measuring between the eyes forty-two ax-handles and a plug of Star tobacco exactly,
 Of John Henry's hammer and the curve of its swing and his singing of it as "a rainbow round my shoulder."

"Do tell!"
 "I want to know!"
 "You don't say so!"
 "For the land's sake!"
 "Gosh all fish-hooks!"
 "Tell me some more.
     I don't believe a word you say but I love to listen to your sweet harmonica
         to your chin-music.
     Your fish stories hang together
     when they're just a pack of lies:
     you ought to have a leather medal:
     you ought to have a statue carved of butter: you deserve a large bouquet of turnips."

"Yessir," the traveler drawled,
 "Away out there in the petrified forest
     everything goes on the same as usual.
 The petrified birds sit in their petrified nests and hatch their petrified young from petrified eggs."

A high pressure salesman jumped off the Brooklyn Bridge and was saved by a policeman. But it didn't take him long to sell the idea to the policeman. So together they jumped off the bridge.

One of the oil men in heaven started a rumor of a gusher down in hell. All the other oil men left in a hurry for hell. As he gets to thinking about the rumor he had started he says to himself there might be something in it after all. So he leaves for hell in a hurry.

"The number 42 will win this raffle, that's my number." And when he won they asked him whether he guessed the number or had a system. He said he had a system, "I took up the old family album and there on page 7 was my grandfather and grandmother both on page 7. I said to myself this is easy for 7 times 7 is the number that will win and 7 times 7 is 49."

Once a shipwrecked sailor caught hold of a stateroom door and floated for hours till friendly hands from out of the darkness threw him a rope. And he called across the night, "What country is this?" and hearing voices answer, "New Jersey," he took a fresh hold on the floating stateroom door and called back half-wearily, "I guess I'll float a little farther."

An Ohio man bundled up the tin roof of a summer kitchen and sent it to a motor car maker with a complaint of his car not giving service. In three weeks a new car arrived for him and a letter: "We regret delay in shipment but your car was received in a very bad order."

A Dakota cousin of this Ohio man sent six years of tin can accumulations to the same works, asking them to overhaul his car. Two weeks later came a rebuilt car, five old tin cans, and a letter: "We are also forwarding you five parts not necessary in our new model."

Thus fantasies heard at filling stations in the midwest. Another relates to a Missouri mule who took aim with his heels at an automobile rattling by. The car turned a somersault, lit next a fence, ran right along through a cornfield till it came to a gate, moved onto the road and went on its way as though nothing had happened. The mule heehawed with desolation, "What's the use?"

Another tells of a farmer and his family stalled on a railroad crossing, how they jumped out in time to see a limited express knock it into flinders, the farmer calling, "Well, I always did say that car was no shucks in a real pinch."

When the Masonic Temple in Chicago was the tallest building in the United States west of New York, two men who would cheat the eyes out of you if you gave 'em a chance, took an Iowa farmer to the top of the building and asked him, "How is this for high?" They told him that for $25 they would go down in the basement and turn the building around on its turn-table for him while he stood on the roof and saw how this seventh wonder of the world worked. He handed them $25. They went. He waited. They never came back.

This is told in Chicago as a folk tale, the same as the legend of Mrs. O'Leary's cow kicking over the barn lamp that started the Chicago fire, when the Georgia visitor, Robert Toombs, telegraphed an Atlanta crony, "Chicago is on fire, the whole city burning down, God be praised!"

Nor is the prize sleeper Rip Van Winkle and his scolding wife forgotten, nor the headless horseman scooting through Sleepy Hollow

Nor the sunken treasure-ships in coves and harbors, the hideouts of gold and silver sought by Coronado, nor the Flying Dutchman rounding the Cape doomed to nevermore pound his ear nor ever again take a snooze for himself

Nor the sailor's caretaker Mother Carey seeing to it that every seafaring man in the afterworld has a seabird to bring him news of ships and women, an albatross for the admiral, a gull for the deckhand

Nor the sailor with a sweetheart in every port of the world, nor the ships that set out with flying colors and all the promises you could ask, the ships never heard of again

Nor Jim Liverpool, the riverman who could jump across any river and back without touching land he was that quick on his feet

Nor Mike Fink along the Ohio and the Mississippi, half wild horse and half cock-eyed alligator, the rest of him snags and snapping turtle. "I can out-run, out-jump, out-shoot, out-brag, out-drink, and out-fight, rough and tumble, no holts barred, any man on both sides of the river from Pittsburgh to New Orleans and back again to St. Louis. My trigger finger itches and I want to go redhot. War, famine and bloodshed puts flesh on my bones, and hardship's my daily bread."

Nor the man so lean he threw no shadow: six rattlesnakes struck at him at one time and every one missed him.

THE PEOPLE WILL LIVE ON

(from "The People, Yes")

The people will live on.

The learning and blundering people will live on.

They will be tricked and sold and again sold
And go back to the nourishing earth for rootholds,

The people so peculiar in renewal and comeback,

You can't laugh off their capacity to take it.

The mammoth rests between his cyclonic dramas.

The people so often sleepy, weary, enigmatic,
is a vast huddle with many units saying:

"I earn my living.

I make enough to get by and it takes all my time.

If I had more time

I could do more for myself and maybe for others.

I could read and study and talk things over and find out about things.

It takes time.

I wish I had the time."

The people is a tragic and comic two-face:
hero and hoodlum: phantom and gorilla twisting to moan with a gargoyle mouth. "They buy me and sell me . . . it's a game . . .
sometime I'll break loose . . ."

Once having marched

Over the margins of animal necessity,
Over the grim line of sheer subsistence

Then man came

To the deeper rituals of his bones,

To the lights lighter than any bones,

To the time for thinking things over,

To the dance, the song, the story,

Or the hours given over to dreaming,

Once having so marched.

Between the finite limitations of the five senses and the endless yearnings of man for the beyond the people hold to the humdrum bidding of work and food while reaching out when it comes their way for lights beyond the prison of the five senses, for keepsakes lasting beyond any hunger or death.

This reaching is alive.

The panders and liars have violated and smuttied it.

Yet this reaching is alive yet for lights and keepsakes.

The people know the salt of the sea and the strength of the winds lashing the corners of the earth.
 The people take the earth
 as a tomb of rest and a cradle of hope.
 Who else speaks for the Family of Man?
 They are in tune and step with constellations of universal law.

The people is a polychrome,
 a spectrum and a prism
 held in a moving monolith,
 a console organ of changing themes,
 a clavilux of color poems
 wherein the sea offers fog and the fog moves off in rain and the labrador sunset shortens to a nocturne of clear stars serene over the shot spray of northern lights.

The steel mill sky is alive.
 The fire breaks white and zigzag shot on a gun-metal gloaming.
 Man is a long time coming.
 Man will yet win.
 Brother may yet line up with brother:

This old anvil laughs at many broken hammers.
 There are men who can't be bought.
 The fireborn are at home in fire.
 The stars make no noise.
 You can't hinder the wind from blowing.
 Time is a great teacher.
 Who can live without hope?

In the darkness with a great bundle of grief
 the people march.
 In the night, and overhead a shovel of stars for keeps, the people march:
 "Where to? what next?"

Adelaide Crapsey

ADLEAIDE CRAPSEY, daughter of the famous minister, Algernon S. Crapsey, was born, September 9, 1878, in Rochester, New York, where she spent her childhood. She entered Vassar College in 1897, graduating with the class of 1901. Two years after graduation she began work as a teacher of History and Literature, in Kemper Hall, Kenosha, Wisconsin, where she had attended preparatory school. In 1905 she went abroad, studying archeology in Rome. After her return she tried again to teach, but her failing health compelled her to discontinue, and though she became instructor in Poetics at Smith College in 1911 the burden was too great for her.

Prior to this time she had written little verse, her chief work being an analysis of English metrics, an investigation (which she never finished) of problems in verse structure. In 1913, after her breakdown, she began to write her precise and sometimes poignant lines; most of her tiny volume was composed during the last few months of her life. She was particularly happy in her brief "Cinquains," a form which she originated. These five-line stanzas in the strictest possible pattern (the lines having, respectively, two, four, six, eight and two syllables) doubtless owe something to the Japanese hokku, but Adelaide Crapsey saturated them with her own fragile loveliness.

"Her death," writes Claude Bragdon, who was not only her friend but her first publisher, "was tragic. Full of the desire of life she was forced to go, leaving her work all unfinished. Her last year was spent in exile at Saranac. From her window she looked down on the graveyard—'Trudeau's Garden,' she called it, with grim-gay irony. Here, forbidden the work her metrical study entailed, these poems grew—flowers of a battlefield of the spirit." She died at her home in Rochester, New York, on October 8, 1914.

Her small volume Verse appeared in 1915, and a part of the unfinished Study in English Metrics was posthumously published in 1918. A second edition of Verse with a few additional poems appeared in 1922. An unconscious Imagist, she gave fragility a firmness which saved the smallest of her designs from preciousity.

SIX CINQUAINS

NOVEMBER NIGHT

Listen . . .
 With faint dry sound,
 Like steps of passing ghosts,
 The leaves, frost-crisp'd, break from the trees
 And fall.

SUSANNA AND THE ELDERS

"Why do
 You thus devise
 Evil against her?" "For that
 She is beautiful, delicate.
 Therefore."

TRIAD

These be
Three silent things:
The falling snow . . . the hour
Before the dawn . . . the mouth of one
Just dead.

NIAGARA

(Seen on a night in November)

How frail
Above the bulk
Of crashing water hangs,
Autumnal, evanescent, wan,
The moon.

THE WARNING

Just now,
Out of the strange
Still dusk . . . as strange, as still . . .
A white moth flew. Why am I grown
So cold?

ARBUTUS

Not Spring's
Thou art, but her's,
Most cool, most virginal,
Winter's, with thy faint breath, thy snows
Rose-tinged.

ON SEEING WEATHER-BEATEN TREES

Is it as plainly in our living shown,
By slant and twist, which way the wind hath blown?

VENDOR'S SONG

My songs to sell, good sir!
I pray you buy.
Here's one will win a lady's tears,
Here's one will make her gay,
Here's one will charm your true love true
Forever and a day;
Good sir, I pray you buy!

Oh, no, he will not buy.

My songs to sell, sweet maid!
I pray you buy.
This one will teach you Lilith's lore,
And this what Helen knew,
And this will keep your gold hair gold,
And this your blue eyes blue;
Sweet maid, I pray you buy!

Oh, no, she will not buy.

If I'd as much money as I could tell,
I never would cry my songs to sell,
I never would cry my songs to sell.

THE LONELY DEATH

In the cold I will rise, I will bathe
In waters of ice; myself
Will shiver and shrive myself,
Alone in the dawn, and anoint
Forehead and feet and hands;
I will shutter the windows from light,
I will place in their sockets the four
Tall candles and set them a-flame
In the gray of the dawn; and myself
Will lay myself straight in my bed,
And draw the sheet up under my chin.

SONG

I make my shroud, but no one knows—
So shimmering fine it is and fair,
With stitches set in even rows.
I make my shroud, but no one knows.

In door-way where the lilac blows,
Humming a little wandering air,
I make my shroud and no one knows,
So shimmering fine it is and fair.

THE IMMORTAL RESIDUE

Wouldst thou find my ashes? Look
In the pages of my book;
And, as these thy hand doth turn,
Know here is my funeral urn.

Vachel Lindsay

(Nicholas) Vachel Lindsay was born in Springfield, Illinois, November 10, 1879. His home for many years was next door to the executive mansion of the State of Illinois; from the window where Lindsay did most of his writing, he saw governors come and go, including the martyred John P. Altgeld, whom he has celebrated in one of his finest poems. He graduated from the Springfield High School, attended Hiram College (1897-1900), studied at the Art Institute at Chicago (1900-3) and at the New York School of Art (1904). After two years of lecturing and settlement work, he took the first of his long tramps, walking through Florida, Georgia, and the Carolinas, preaching "the gospel of beauty," and formulating his unique plans for a communal art. During the following five years, Lindsay made several of these trips, traveling as a combination missionary and minstrel. Like a true revivalist, he attempted to wake a response to beauty, distributing a little pamphlet entitled "Rhymes to Be Traded for Bread."

Lindsay began to create more poetry to reach the public—all of his verse was written in his rôle of apostle. He was, primarily, a rhyming John the Baptist singing to convert the heathen, to stimulate and encourage the half-hearted dreams that hide and are smothered in sordid villages and townships. But the great audiences he was endeavoring to reach did not hear him, even though his collection General William Booth Enters Into Heaven (1913) struck many a loud and racy note.

Lindsay broadened his effects, developed the chant, and, the following year, published his The Congo and Other Poems (1914), an infectious blend of rhyme, religion, and rag-time. In the title-poem and, in a lesser degree, the three companion chants, Lindsay struck his most powerful—and most popular—vein. When intoned in Lindsay's resonant baritone, it gave people that primitive joy in syncopated sound that is at the very base of song. In these experiments in breaking down the barriers between poetry and music, Lindsay (obviously infected by the echolalia of Poe's "Bells") tried to create what he called a "Higher Vaudeville" imagination, carrying the form back to the old Greek precedent where every line was half-spoken, half-sung. Gestures and stage directions, even chanted responses, were added.

Lindsay's innovation succeeded at once. The novelty, the speed, the clatter, forced the attention of people who had never paid the slightest heed to the poet's quieter verses. Men heard the sounds of hurtling America in these lines even when they were deaf to its spirit. They failed to see that, beneath the noise of "The Kallyope Yell" and "The Santa Fé Trail," Lindsay was partly an admirer, partly an ironical critic of the shrieking energy of these states. By his effort to win the enemy over, Lindsay had persuaded the proverbially tired business man to listen at last. But, in overstressing the vaudeville features, there arose the danger of Lindsay the poet being lost in Lindsay the entertainer. The sympathetic celebration of Negro spirits and psychology (seen at their best in "The Congo," "John Brown" and "Simon Legree") degenerated into the crude buffooneries of "The Daniel Jazz" and "The Blacksmith's Serenade." The three bracketed poems, and a few others, are certain of a place in the history of American poetry.

Lindsay's earnestness, keyed up by an exuberant fancy, saved him. The Chinese

Nightingale (1917) begins with the most whimsical extended rhymes Lindsay ever devised. This title-poem, with its air of free improvisation, is his finest piece of sheer texture. And if the subsequent The Golden Whales of California (1920) is less distinctive, it is principally because the author had written too much and too speedily to be self-critical. It is his peculiar appraisal of loveliness, the rollicking high spirits joined to a stubborn evangelism, that makes Lindsay so representative a product of his environment.

Collected Poems (1923) is a complete and almost cruel exhibit of Lindsay's best and worst. Inflated stanzas alternate with some of the most charming children's poetry of the times; the set of fanciful Moon Poems would be enough to keep Lindsay's name alive. That Lindsay had lost whatever faculty of self-appraisal he may have possessed is evidenced by page after page of crudities; verses are propelled by nothing more than physical energy whipping up a trivial idea. What mars so much of this writing is Lindsay's attempt to give every wisp of fancy a cosmic or at least a national significance. Thus that intoxicating chant "The Ghosts of the Buffaloes" appears in the later edition with an unfortunate appendage, an irrelevant hortatory appeal beginning, "Would I might rouse the Lincoln in you all!" But, in spite of the fact that the poet suffered from a complex of undiscriminating patriotism, a curious hero-worship which makes him link Woodrow Wilson with Socrates, his very catholicity was representative of a great part of his country. Johnny Appleseed and John L. Sullivan, Daniel Boone and William Jennings Bryan, Andrew Jackson and P. T. Barnum—such figures were the symbols of his motley America. They were not merely heroes but demi-gods. They typified the incongruous blend of high idealism and childish fantasy, of beauty and ballyhoo which made America resemble (to Lindsay) a County Fair—

every soul resident
In the earth's one circus tent.

It was a combination that made the United States "the golden dream" created by pioneers and baseball players, Presidents and movie-queens. Nuances of thought or expression were forgotten; exuberance, uncontrolled by taste or reason, triumphed. Going-to-the-Sun (1923), Going-to-the-Stars (1926), and The Candle in the Cabin (1927), illustrated with Lindsay's characteristic and flowery drawings, contain some charming and almost girlish verses, but followed each other in too rapid succession and betray Lindsay's uncritical loquacity. His prose is far better than the later verse. The Litany of Washington Street (1929), described as "a kind of Washington's birthday, Lincoln's birthday, Whitman's birthday, Jefferson's birthday book," is a set of Fourth of July orations on an idealized Main Street stretching from Connecticut to Calcutta.

Much of Lindsay will die; he will not live as either a prophet or a politician. But the vitality which impels the best of his galloping meters will persist; his innocent wildness of imagination, outlasting his naive programs, will charm even those to whom his declamations are no longer a novelty. His gospel is no less original for being preached through a saxophone.

Besides his original poetry, Lindsay had embodied his experiences and meditations on the road in two prose volumes, A Handy Guide for Beggars (1916) and Adventures While Preaching the Gospel of Beauty (1914), as well as an enthusiastic study of the "silent drama," The Art of the Moving Picture (1915). A curious document, half rhapsody, half visionary novel, entitled The Golden Book of Springfield, appeared in 1920.

Lindsay traded on his surplus energy. Some of it went into private games, such as the establishment of each individual's "personal hieroglyphics," some into grandiose but futile schemes, most into lecturing. For more than twenty years he ranged the country, exciting his audiences and exhausting himself. After fifty the strain was too much for him. He collapsed at the beginning of his fifty-third year just as he should have been turning to the larger works he had so often discussed with friends. The fear of poverty overcame him; his exuberance vanished; he was plagued with self-doubt. He felt that he was being neglected, even persecuted; he convinced himself he was a failure. The high-spirited "broncho that would not be broken" was broken at last. He committed suicide on the night of December 5, 1931.

THE CONGO

(A Study of the Negro Race)

I. THEIR BASIC SAVAGERY

Fat black bucks in a wine-barrel room,
 Barrel-house kings, with feet unstable,
 Sagged and reeled and pounded on the table,
 Pounded on the table,
 Beat an empty barrel with the handle of a broom,
 Hard as they were able,
 Boom, boom, Boom,
 With a silk umbrella and the handle of a broom,
 Boomlay, boomlay, boomlay, Boom.

A deep rolling bass.

THEN I had religion, THEN I had a vision.
 I could not turn from their revel in derision.
 THEN I SAW THE CONGO, CREEPING THROUGH THE BLACK,
 CUTTING THROUGH THE JUNGLE WITH A GOLDEN TRACK.

*More deliberate.
Solemnly chanted.*

Then along that riverbank
 A thousand miles
 Tattooed cannibals danced in files;
 Then I heard the boom of the blood-lust song
 And a thigh-bone beating on a tin-pan gong.
 And "BLOOD" screamed the whistles and the fifes of the warriors,
 "BLOOD" screamed the skull-faced, lean witch-doctors,
 "Whirl ye the deadly voo-doo rattle,
 Harry the uplands,
 Steal all the cattle,
 Rattle-rattle, rattle-rattle,
 Bing!
 Boomlay, boomlay, boomlay, Boom,"
 A roaring, epic, rag-time tune
 From the mouth of the Congo
 To the Mountains of the Moon.

A rapidly piling climax of speed and racket.

With a philosophic pause.

Death is an Elephant,
Torch-eyed and horrible,
Foam-flanked and terrible.

Shrilly and with a heavily accented meter.

Boom, steal the pygmies,
Boom, kill the Arabs,
Boom, kill the white men,
Hoo, Hoo, Hoo.

Like the wind in the chimney.

Listen to the yell of Leopold's ghost
Burning in Hell for his hand-maimed host.
Hear how the demons chuckle and yell
Cutting his hands off, down in Hell.
Listen to the creepy proclamation,
Blown through the lairs of the forest-nation,
Blown past the white-ants' hill of clay,
Blown past the marsh where the butterflies play:—
“Be careful what you do,
Or Mumbo-Jumbo, God of the Congo,
And all of the other
Gods of the Congo,
Mumbo-Jumbo will hoo doo you,
Mumbo-Jumbo will hoo-doo you,
Mumbo-Jumbo will hoo-doo you.”

*All the o sounds very golden
Heavy accents
very heavy Light accents very light Last line whispered.*

II. THEIR IRREPRESSIBLE HIGH SPIRITS

Wild crap-shooters with a whoop and a call
Danced the juba in their gambling-hall
And laughed fit to kill, and shook the town,
And guyed the policemen and laughed them down
With a boomlay, boomlay, boomlay, Boom. . . .

Rather shrill and high.

THEN I SAW THE CONGO, CREEPING THROUGH THE BLACK,
CUTTING THROUGH THE JUNGLE WITH A GOLDEN TRACK.
A negro fairyland swung into view,
A minstrel river
Where dreams come true.

Read exactly as in first section.

The ebony palace soared on high
Through the blossoming trees to the evening sky,
The inlaid porches and casements shone
With gold and ivory and elephant-bone.
And the black crowd laughed till their sides were sore
At the baboon butler in the agate door,
And the well-known tunes of the parrot band
That trilled on the bushes of that magic land.

*Lay emphasis on the delicate ideas.
Keep as light-
footed as possible.*

A troupe of skull-faced witch-men came Through the agate doorway in suits of flame,
Yes, long-tailed coats with a gold-leaf crust
And hats that were covered with diamond-dust.
And the crowd in the court gave a whoop and a call
And danced the juba from wall to wall.
But the witch-men suddenly stilled the throng
With a stern cold glare, and a stern old song:—
“Mumbo-Jumbo will hoo-doo you.” . . .

With pomposity.

With a great deliberation and hostliness.

Just then from the doorway, as fat as shotes,
 Came the cake-walk princes in their long red coats,
 Shoes with a patent leather shine,
 And tall silk hats that were red as wine.
 And they pranced with their butterfly partners there,
 Coal-black maidens with pearls in their hair,
 Knee-skirts trimmed with the jessamine sweet,
 And bells on their ankles and little black feet.
 And the couples railed at the chant and the trown
 Of the witch-men lean, and laughed them down.
 (O rare was the revel, and well worth while
 That made those glowering witch-men smile).

With overwhelming assurance, good cheer, and pomp.

With growing speed and sharply marked dance-rhythm.

The cake-walk royalty then began
 To walk for a cake that was tall as a man
 To the tune of "Boonlay, boomlay, Boom,"
 While the witch-men laughed, with a sinister air,
 And sang with the scalawags prancing there:—
 "Walk with care, walk with care,
 Or Mumbo-Junbo, God of the Congo,
 And all of the other
 Gods of the Congo,
 Mumbo-Junbo will hoo-doo you.
 Beware, beware, walk with care,
 Boomlay, boomlay, boomlay, boom.
 Boomlay, boomlay, boomlay, boom,
 Boomlay, boomlay, boomlay, boom,
 Boomlay, boomlay, boomlay,
 Boom."

O rare was the revel, and well worth while
 That made those glowering witch-men smile.

With a touch of negro dialect, and as rapidly as possible toward the end.

Slow philosophic calm.

III. THE HOPE OF THEIR RELIGION

A good old negro in the slums of the town
 Preached at a sister for her velvet gown.
 Howled at a brother for his low-down ways,
 His prowling, guzzling, sneak-thief days.
 Beat on the Bible till he wore it out,
 Starting the jubilee revival shout.
 And some had visions, as they stood on chairs,
 And sang of Jacob, and the golden stairs.
 And they all repented, a thousand strong,
 From their stupor and savagery and sin and wrong
 And slammed their hymn books till they shook the room
 With "Glory, glory, glory,"
 And "Boom, boom, Boom."
 THEN I SAW THE CONGO, CREEPING THROUGH THE BLACK,
 CUTTING THROUGH THE JUNGLE WITH A GOLDEN TRACK.
 And the gray sky opened like a new-rent veil
 And showed the Apostles with their coats of mail.
 In bright white steel they were seated round

Heavy bass with a literal imitation of camp-meeting racket, and trance.

Exactly as in the first section.

And their fire-eyes watched where the Congo wound.
 And the twelve Apostles, from their thrones on high,
 Thrilled all the forest with their heavenly cry:—
 "Mumbo-Jumbo will die in the jungle;
 Never again will he hoo-doo you,
 Never again will he hoo-doo you."

*Sung to the tune of "Hark, ten thousand harps
and voices."*

Then along that river, a thousand miles
 The vine-snared trees fell down in files.
 Pioneer angels cleared the way
 For a Congo paradise, for babes at play,
 For sacred capitals, for temples clean.
 Gone were the skull-faced witch-men lean.
 There, where the wild ghost-gods had wailed
 A million boats of the angels sailed
 With oars of silver, and prows of blue
 And silken pennants that the sun shone through.
 'Twas a land transfigured, 'twas a new creation.
 Oh, a singing wind swept the negro nation
 And on through the backwoods clearing flew:—
 "Mumbo-Jumbo is dead in the jungle.
 Never again will he hoo-doo you.
 Never again will he hoo-doo you."

With growing deliberation and joy.

Redeemed were the forests, the beasts and the men,
 And only the vulture dared again
 By the far, lone mountains of the moon
 To cry, in the silence, the Congo tune:—
 "Mumbo-Jumbo will hoo-doo you,
 Mumbo . . . Jumbo . . . will . . . hoo-doo . . . you."

In a rather high key—as delicately as possible.

*To the tune of "Hark, ten thousand harps
and voices."*

Dying off into a penetrating, terrified whisper.

TO A GOLDEN-HAIRED GIRL IN A LOUISIANA TOWN

You are a sunrise,
 If a star should rise instead of the sun.
 You are a moonrise,
 If a star should come in the place of the moon.
 You are the Spring,
 If a face should bloom instead of an apple-bough.
 You are my love,
 If your heart is as kind
 As your young eyes now.

GENERAL WILLIAM BOOTH ENTERS INTO HEAVEN

(To be sung to the tune of "The Blood of the Lamb" with indicated instruments)

I

(Bass drum beaten loudly.)

Booth led boldly with his big bass drum—
 (Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?)
 The Saints smiled gravely and they said: "He's come."

(Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?)
 Walking lepers followed, rank on rank,
 Lurching bravos from the ditches dank,
 Drabs from the alleyways and drug fiends pale—
 Minds still passion-ridden, soul-powers frail:—
 Vermin-eaten saints with moldy breath,
 Unwashed legions with the ways of Death—
 (Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?)

(Banjos.)

Every slum had sent its half-a-score
 The round world over. (Booth had groaned for more.)
 Every banner that the wide world flies
 Bloomed with glory and transcendent dyes.
 Big-voiced lasses made their banjos bang,
 Tranced, fanatical they shrieked and sang:—
 “Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?”
 Hallelujah! It was queer to see
 Bull-necked convicts with that land make free.
 Loons with trumpets blowed a blare, blare, blare
 On, on upward thro’ the golden air!
 (Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?)

II

(Bass drum slower and softer.)

Booth died blind and still by faith he trod,
 Eyes still dazzled by the ways of God.
 Booth led boldly, and he looked the chief,
 Eagle countenance in sharp relief,
 Beard a-flying, air of high command
 Unabated in that holy land.

(Sweet flute music.)

Jesus came from out the court-house door,
 Stretched his hands above the passing poor.
 Booth saw not, but led his queer ones there
 Round and round the mighty court-house square.
 Yet in an instant all that blear review
 Marched on spotless, clad in raiment new.
 The lame were straightened, withered limbs uncurled
 And blind eyes opened on a new, sweet world.

(Bass drum louder.)

Drabs and vixens in a flash made whole!
 Gone was the weasel-head, the snout, the jowl!
 Sages and sibyls now, and athletes clean,
 Rulers of empires, and of forests green!

(Grand chorus of all instruments. Tambourines to the foreground.)

The hosts were sandaled, and their wings were fire!
 (Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?)
 But their noise played havoc with the angel-choir.

(Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?)
 Oh, shout Salvation! It was good to see
 Kings and Princes by the Lamb set free.
 The banjos rattled and the tambourines
 Jing-jing-jingled in the hands of Queens.

(Reverently sung, no instruments.)
 And when Booth halted by the curb for prayer
 He saw his Master thro' the flag-filled air.
 Christ came gently with a robe and crown
 For Booth the soldier, while the throng knelt down.
 He saw King Jesus. They were face to face,
 And he knelt a-weeping in that holy place.
 Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?

THE EAGLE THAT IS FORGOTTEN

(John P. Altgeld. Born December 30, 1847; died March 12, 1902)

Sleep softly . . . eagle forgotten . . . under the stone.
 Time has its way with you there, and the clay has its own.
 "We have buried him now," thought your foes, and in secret rejoiced.
 They made a brave show of their mourning, their hatred unvoiced,
 They had snarled at you, barked at you, foamed at you, day after day,
 Now you were ended. They praised you, . . . and laid you away.

The others that mourned you in silence and terror and truth,
 The widow bereft of her pittance, the boy without youth,
 The mocked and the scorned and the wounded, the lame and the poor
 That should have remembered forever, . . . remember no more.

Where are those lovers of yours, on what name do they call
 The lost, that in armies wept over your funeral pall?
 They call on the names of a hundred high-valiant ones,
 A hundred white eagles have risen, the sons of your sons,
 The zeal in their wings is a zeal that your dreaming began
 The valor that wore out your soul in the service of man.

Sleep softly, . . . eagle forgotten, . . . under the stone,
 Time has its way with you there, and the clay has its own.
 Sleep on, O brave-hearted, O wise man, that kindled the flame—
 To live in mankind is far more than to live in a name,
 To live in mankind, far, far more . . . than to live in a name.

THE GHOSTS OF THE BUFFALOES

Last night at black midnight I woke with a cry,
 The windows were shaking, there was thunder on high,
 The floor was atremble, the door was ajar,
 White fires, crimson fires, shone from afar.

I rushed to the dooryard. The city was gone.
 My home was a hut without orchard or lawn.
 It was mud-smear and logs near a whispering stream,
 Nothing else built by man could I see in my dream . . .

Then . . .
 Ghost-kings came headlong, row upon row,
 Gods of the Indians, torches aglow.
 They mounted the bear and the elk and the deer,
 And eagles gigantic, aged and sere,
 They rode long-horn cattle, they cried "A-la-la."
 They lifted the knife, the bow, and the spear,
 They lifted ghost-torches from dead fires below,
 The midnight made grand with the cry "A-la-la."
 The midnight made grand with a red-god charge,
 A red-god show,
 A red-god show,
 "A-la-la, a-la-la, a-la-la, a-la-la."

With bodies like bronze, and terrible eyes
 Came the rank and the file, with catamount cries,
 Gibbering, yipping, with hollow-skull clacks,
 Riding white bronchos with skeleton backs,
 Scalp-hunters, beaded and spangled and bad,
 Naked and lustful and foaming and mad,
 Flashing primeval demoniac scorn,
 Blood-thirst and pomp amid darkness reborn,
 Power and glory that sleep in the grass
 While the winds and the snows and the great rains pass.
 They crossed the gray river, thousands abreast,
 They rode out in infinite lines to the west,
 Tide upon tide of strange fury and foam,
 Spirits and wraiths, the blue was their home,
 The sky was their goal where the star-flags are furled,
 And on past those far golden splendors they whirled.
 They burned to dim meteors, lost in the deep,
 And I turned in dazed wonder, thinking of sleep.

And the wind crept by
 Alone, unkempt, unsatisfied,
 The wind cried and cried—
 Muttered of massacres long past,
 Buffaloes in shambles vast . . .
 An owl said, "Hark, what is a-wing?"
 I heard a cricket caroling,
 I heard a cricket caroling,
 I heard a cricket caroling.

Then . . .
 Snuffing the lightning that crashed from on high
 Rose royal old buffaloes, row upon row.
 The lords of the prairie came galloping by.

And I cried in my heart "A-la-la, a-la-la.
 A red-god show,
 A red-god show,
 A-la-la, a-la-la, a-la-la."
 Buffaloes, buffaloes, thousands abreast,
 A scourge and amazement, they swept to the west.
 With black bobbing noses, with red rolling tongues,
 Coughing forth steam from their leather-wrapped lungs,
 Cows with their calves, bulls big and vain,
 Goring the laggards, shaking the mane,
 Stamping flint feet, flashing moon eyes,
 Pompous and owlish, shaggy and wise.

Like sea-cliffs and caves resounded their ranks
 With shoulders like waves, and undulant flanks.
 Tide upon tide of strange fury and foam,
 Spirits and wraiths, the blue was their home,
 The sky was their goal where the star-flags are furled,
 And on past those far golden splendors they whirled.
 They burned to dim meteors, lost in the deep,
 And I turned in dazed wonder, thinking of sleep.

I heard a cricket's cymbals play,
 A scarecrow lightly flapped his rags,
 And a pan that hung by his shoulder rang,
 Rattled and thumped in a listless way,
 And now the wind in the chimney sang,
 The wind in the chimney,
 The wind in the chimney,
 The wind in the chimney,
 Seemed to say:—
 "Dream, boy, dream,
 If you anywise can.
 To dream is the work
 Of beast or man.
 Life is the west-going dream-storm's breath,
 Life is a dream, the sigh of the skies,
 The breath of the stars, that nod on their pillows
 With their golden hair mussed over their eyes."
 The locust played on his musical wing,
 Sang to his mate of love's delight.
 I heard the whippoorwill's soft fret.
 I heard a cricket caroling,
 I heard a cricket caroling,
 I heard a cricket say: "Good-night, good night,
 Good-night, good-night, . . . good-night."

THE TRAVELER

The moon's a devil jester
 Who makes himself too free.

The rascal is not always
 Where he appears to be.
 Sometimes he is in my heart—
 Sometimes he is in the sea;
 Then tides are in my heart,
 And tides are in the sea.

O traveler, abiding not
 Where he pretends to be!

A NEGRO SERMON:—SIMON LEGREE

Legree's big house was white and green.
 His cotton-fields were the best to be seen.
 He had strong horses and opulent cattle,
 And bloodhounds bold, with chains that would rattle.
 His garret was full of curious things:
 Books of magic, bags of gold,
 And rabbits' feet on long twine strings,
But he went down to the Devil.

Legree, he sported a brass-buttoned coat,
 A snake-skin necktie, a blood-red shirt.
 Legree, he had a beard like a goat,
 And a thick hairy neck, and eyes like dirt.
 His puffed-out cheeks were fish-belly white,
 He had great long teeth, and an appetite.
 He ate raw meat, 'most every meal,
 And rolled his eyes till the cat would squeal.
 His fist was an enormous size
 To mash poor niggers that told him lies:
 He was surely a witch-man in disguise.
But he went down to the Devil.

He wore hip-boots, and would wade all day
 To capture his slaves that had fled away.
But he went down to the Devil.
 He beat poor Uncle Tom to death
 Who prayed for Legree with his last breath.
 Then Uncle Tom to Eva flew,
 To the high sanctoriums bright and new;
 And Simon Legree stared up beneath,
 And cracked his heels, and ground his teeth:
And went down to the Devil.
 He crossed the yard in the storm and gloom;
 He went into his grand front room.
 He said, "I killed him, and I don't care."
 He kicked a hound, he gave a swear;
 He tightened his belt, he took a lamp,
 Went down cellar to the webs and damp.

There in the middle of the moldy floor
He heaved up a slab; he found a door—
And went down to the Devil.

His lamp blew out, but his eyes burned bright.
Simon Legree stepped down all night—
Down, down to the Devil.

Simon Legree he reached the place,
He saw one half of the human race,
He saw the Devil on a wide green throne,
Gnawing the meat from a big ham-bone,
And he said to Mister Devil:

“I see that you have much to eat—
A red ham-bone is surely sweet.
I see that you have lion’s feet;
I see your frame is fat and fine,
I see you drink your poison wine—
Blood and burning turpentine.”

And the Devil said to Simon Legree:
“I like your style, so wicked and free.
Come sit and share my throne with me,
And let us bark and revel”

And there they sit and gnash their teeth,
And each one wears a hop-vine wreath
They are matching pennies and shooting craps,
They are playing poker and taking naps.
And old Legree is fat and fine:
He eats the fire, he drinks the wine—
Blood and burning turpentine—

Down, down with the Devil;
Down, down with the Devil;
Down, down with the Devil.

JOHN BROWN

(To be sung by a leader and chorus, the leader singing the body of the poem, while the chorus interrupts with the question)

I’ve been to Palestine

What did you see in Palestine?

I saw the ark of Noah—
It was made of pitch and pine.
I saw old Father Noah
Asleep beneath his vine.
I saw Shem, Ham and Japhet
Standing in a line.
I saw the tower of Babel
In the gorgeous sunrise shine—
By a weeping willow tree
Beside the Dead Sea.

I’ve been to Palestine.

What did you see in Palestine?

I saw abominations
And Gadarene swine.
I saw the sinful Canaanites
Upon the shewbread dine,
And spoil the temple vessels
And drink the temple wine.
I saw Lot’s wife, a pillar of salt
Standing in the brine—
By a weeping willow tree
Beside the Dead Sea.

I’ve been to Palestine.

What did you see in Palestine?

Cedars on Mount Lebanon,
Gold in Ophir’s mine,

And a wicked generation
Seeking for a sign,
And Baal's howling worshipers
Their god with leaves entwine.
And . . .

I saw the war-horse ramping
And shake his forelock fine—
By a weeping willow tree
Beside the Dead Sea.

I've been to Palestine.

What did you see in Palestine?

Old John Brown.

Old John Brown.

I saw his gracious wife
Dressed in a homespun gown.
I saw his seven sons
Before his feet bow down
And he marched with his seven sons,
His wagons and goods and guns,
To his campfire by the sea,
By the waves of Galilee.

I've been to Palestine

What did you see in Palestine?

I saw the harp and psaltry
Played for Old John Brown
I heard the ram's horn blow,
Blow for Old John Brown.
I saw the bulls of Bashan—
They cheered for Old John Brown.
I saw the big Bchemoth—
He cheered for Old John Brown.
I saw the big Leviathan—
He cheered for Old John Brown.
I saw the Angel Gabriel
Great power to him assign.
I saw him fight the Canaanites
And set God's Israel free.
I saw him when the war was done
In his rustic chair recline—
By his campfire by the sea
By the waves of Galilee.

I've been to Palestine.

What did you see in Palestine?

Old John Brown.

Old John Brown.

And there he sits

To judge the world.
His hunting dogs
At his feet are curled.
His eyes half-closed,
But John Brown sees
The ends of the earth,
The Day of Doom
And his shot gun lies
Across his knees—
Old John Brown,
Old John Brown.

THE DOVE OF NEW SNOW

I give you a house of snow,
I give you the flag of the wind above it,
I give you snow-bushes
In a long row,
I give you a snow-dove,
And ask you
To love it.

The snow-dove flies in
At the snow-house window,
He is a ghost
And he casts no shadow.
His cry is the cry of love
From the meadow,
The meadow of snow where he walked in a glow,
The glittering, angelic meadow.

THE FLOWER-FED BUFFALOES

The flower-fed buffaloes of the spring
In the days of long ago,
Ranged where the locomotives sing
And the prairie flowers lie low;
The tossing, blooming, perfumed grass
Is swept away by wheat,
Wheels and wheels and wheels spin by
In the spring that still is sweet.
But the flower-fed buffaloes of the spring
Left us long ago.
They gore no more, they bellow no more,
They trundle around the hills no more:—
With the Blackfeet lying low,
With the Pawnees lying low.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN WALKS AT MIDNIGHT

(In Springfield, Illinois)

It is portentous, and a thing of state
 That here at midnight, in our little town
 A mourning figure walks, and will not rest,
 Near the old court-house pacing up and down,

Or by his homestead, or in shadowed yards
 He lingers where his children used to play,
 Or through the market, on the well-worn stones
 He stalks until the dawn-stars burn away.

A bronzed, lank man! His suit of ancient black,
 A famous high top-hat and plain worn shawl
 Make him the quaint great figure that men love,
 The prairie-lawyer, master of us all.

He cannot sleep upon his hillside now.
 He is among us—as in times before!
 And we who toss and lie awake for long,
 Breathe deep, and start, to see him pass the door.

His head is bowed He thinks of men and kings.
 Yea, when the sick world cries, how can he sleep?
 Too many peasants fight, they know not why;
 Too many homesteads in black terror weep.

The sins of all the war-lords burn his heart.
 He sees the dreadnaughts scouring every main.
 He carries on his shawl-wrapped shoulders now
 The bitterness, the folly and the pain.

He cannot rest until a spirit-dawn
 Shall come;—the shining hope of Europe free:
 A league of sober folk, the workers' earth,
 Bringing long peace to Cornland, Alp and Sea.

It breaks his heart that kings must murder still,
 That all his hours of travail here for men
 Seem yet in vain. And who will bring white peace
 That he may sleep upon his hill again?

WHEN LINCOLN CAME TO SPRINGFIELD

When Lincoln came to Springfield,
 In the ancient days,
 Queer were the streets and sketchy,
 And he was in a maze.

Leaving log cabins behind him.
 For the mud streets of this place,
 Sorrow for Anne Rutledge
 Burned in his face.
 He threw his muddy saddle bags
 On Joshua Speed's floor,

He took off his old hat,
He looked around the store.

He shook his long hair
On his bison-head,
He sat down on the counter,
"Speed, I've moved," he said.

NANCY HANKS, MOTHER OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

"Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness" Judges 14:14

A sweet girl graduate, lean as a fawn,
The very whimsy of time,
Read her class upon Commencement Day—
A trembling filigree rhyme.
The pansy that blooms on the window sill,
Blooms in exactly the proper place;
And she nodded just like a pansy there,
And her poem was all about bowers and showers,
Sugary streamlet and mossy rill,
All about daisies on dale and hill—
And she was the mother of Buffalo Bill.

Another girl, a cloud-drift sort,
Dreamlit, moonlit, marble-white,
Light-footed saint on the pilgrim shore,
The best since New England fairies began,
Was the mother of Barnum, the circus man

A girl from Missouri, snippy and vain,
As frothy a miss as any you know,
A wren, a toy, a pink silk bow,
The belle of the choir, she drove insane
Missouri deacons and all the sleek,
Her utter tomfoolery made men weak,
Till they could not stand and they could not speak.

Oh, queen of fifteen and sixteen,
Missouri sweetened beneath her reign—
And she was the mother of bad Mark Twain.

Not always are lions born of lions,
Roosevelt sprang from a palace of lace;
On the other hand is the dizzy truth:
Not always is beauty born of beauty
Some treasures wait in a hidden place
All over the world were thousands of belles,
In far off eighteen hundred and nine,
Girls of fifteen, girls of twenty,
Their mammas dressed them up a-plenty—
Each garter was bright, each stocking fine,
But for all their innocent devices,
Their cheeks of fruit and their eyes of wine,
And each voluptuous design,
And all soft glories that we trace
In Europe's palaces of lace,
A girl who slept in dust and sorrow,
Nancy Hanks, in a lost cabin,
Nancy Hanks had the loveliest face!

WILD CATS

Here, as it were, in the heart of roaring Rome,
Here as far as men may get from the soil,
Here where political lords
Are proud of oil,
Oil in their skins,
Oil in their robber wells,
Where money and stone and orations are combined,
Here in Washington, D. C.,
Here where sins are refined and over-refined,
Here where they ape the very walls of Rome,
The temples and pillars of Imperial Rome,
We think of the time the wild cats kept awake
Our little camp, and filled our hearts with fright,
When porcupine and bear-cub stirred the brake,
And the friendliest wind seemed cold and impolite.
We think of our terror through the camp-fire night,
Of how we hoped to kiss the earth aright,

In spite of fear, and hoped not all in vain,
 Of how we hoped for wild days, clean with power,
 Of how we sought the fine log-cabin hour,
 Of how we thought to rule
 By leading men to a lone log-cabin school.
 We think of our pioneer American pride,
 Our high defiance that has not yet died,
 Here, as it were, in the heart of roaring Rome,
 In Washington, D. C.
 Where they ape the very walls of Rome.

THE APPLE-BARREL OF JOHNNY APPLESSED

On the mountain peak, called "Going-To-The-Sun,"
 I saw gray Johnny Applesced at prayer
 Just as the sunset made the old earth fair.
 Then darkness came; in an instant, like great smoke,
 The sun fell down as though its great hoops broke
 And dark rich apples, poured from the dim flame
 Where the sun set, came rolling toward the peak,
 A storm of fruit, a mighty cider-reek,
 The perfume of the orchards of the world,
 From apple-shadows' red and russet domes
 That turned to clouds of glory and strange homes
 Above the mountain tops for cloud-born souls --
 Reproofs for men who build the world like moles,
 Models for men, if they would build the world
 As Johnny Applesced would have it done--
 Praying, and reading the books of Swedenborg
 On the mountain top called "Going-To-The-Sun."

THE VOYAGE

What is my mast? A pen.
 What are my sails? Ten crescent moons.
 What is my sea? A bottle of ink.
 Where do I go? To heaven again.
 What do I eat? The amaranth flower,
 While the winds through the jungles think old tunes.
 I eat that flower with ivory spoons
 While the winds through the jungles play old tunes;
 The songs the angels used to sing
 When heaven was not old autumn, but spring--
 The bold, old songs of heaven and spring.

THE CHINESE NIGHTINGALE

(A Song in Chinese Tapestries)

"How, how," he said. "Friend Chang," I said,
 "San Francisco sleeps as the dead—

Ended license, lust and play:
 Why do you iron the night away?
 Your big clock speaks with a deadly sound,
 With a tick and a wail till dawn comes round,
 While the monster shadows glower and creep,
 What can be better for man than sleep?"

"I will tell you a secret," Chang replied;
 "My breast with vision is satisfied,
 And I see green trees and fluttering wings,
 And my deathless bird from Shanghai sings."
 Then he lit five firecrackers in a pan,
 "Pop, pop," said the firecrackers, "crack crack."
 He lit a joss stick long and black
 Then the proud gray joss in the corner stirred;
 On his wrist appeared a gray small bird,
 And this was the song of the gray small bird:
 "Where is the princess, loved forever,
 Who made Chang first of the kings of men?"

And the joss in the corner stirred again;
 And the carved dog, curled in his arms, awoke,
 Barked forth a smoke cloud that whirled and broke.
 It piled in a maze round the morning place,
 And there on the snowy table wide
 Stood a Chinese lady of high degree,
 With a scornful, witching, tea-rose face. . . .
 Yet she put away all form and pride,
 And laid her glimmering veil aside
 With a childlike smile for Chang and me.

The walls fell back, night was aflower,
 The table gleamed in a moonlit bower,
 While Chang, with a countenance carved of stone,
 Ironed and ironed, all alone.
 And thus she sang to the busy man Chang:
 "Have you forgotten . . .
 Deep in the ages, long, long ago,
 I was your sweetheart, there on the sand—
 Storm-worn beach of the Chinese land?
 We sold our grain in the peacock town—
 Built on the edge of the sea-sands brown—
 Built on the edge of the sea-sands brown. . . .
 When all the world was drinking blood
 From the skulls of men and bulls
 And all the world had swords and clubs of stone,
 We drank our tea in China beneath the sacred spice-trees,
 And heard the curled waves of the harbor moan
 And this gray bird, in Love's first spring,
 With a bright-bronze breast and a bronze-brown wing,
 Captured the world with his caroling.

Do you remember, ages after,
 At last the world we were born to own?
 You were the heir of the yellow throne—
 The world was the field of the Chinese man
 And we were the pride of the Sons of Han?
 We copied deep books and we carved in jade,
 And wove blue silks in the mulberry shade. . . ?

"I remember, I remember
 That Spring came on forever,
 That Spring came on forever,"
 Said the Chinese nightingale.

My heart was filled with marvel and dream,
 Though I saw the western street-lamps gleam,
 Though dawn was bringing the western day,
 Though Chang was a laundryman ironing away. . . .
 Mingled there with the streets and alleys,
 The railroad-yard and the clock-tower bright,
 Demon clouds crossed ancient valleys;
 Across wide lotus-ponds of light
 I marked a giant firefly's flight.

And the lady, rosy-red,
 Flourished her fan, her shimmering fan,
 Stretched her hand toward Chang, and said:
 "Do you remember,
 Ages after,
 Our palace of heart-red stone?
 Do you remember
 The little doll-faced children
 With their lanterns full of moon-fire,
 That came from all the empire
 Honoring the throne?—
 The loveliest fête and carnival
 Our world had ever known?
 The sages sat about us
 With their heads bowed in their beards,
 With proper meditation on the sight.
 Confucius was not born;
 We lived in those great days
 Confucius later said were lived aright. . . .
 And this gray bird, on that day of spring,
 With a bright-bronze breast and a bronze-brown wing,
 Captured the world with his caroling.
 Late at night his tune was spent.
 Peasants,
 Sages,
 Children,
 Homeward went,
 And then the bronze bird sang for you and me.

We walked alone Our hearts were high and free.
 I had a silvery name, I had a silvery name,
 I had a silvery name—do you remember
 The name you cried beside the tumbling sea?"

Chang turned not to the lady slim—
 He bent to his work, ironing away;
 But she was arch, and knowing and glowing,
 For the bird on his shoulder spoke for him.

"Darling . . . darling . . . darling . . . darling . . ."
 Said the Chinese nightingale.

The great gray joss on the rustic shelf,
 Rakish and shrewd, with his collar awry,
 Sang impolitely, as though by himself,
 Drowning with his bellowing the nightingale's cry:
 "Back through a hundred, hundred years
 Hear the waves as they climb the piers,
 Hear the howl of the silver seas,
 Hear the thunder.
 Hear the gongs of holy China
 How the waves and tunes combine
 In a rhythmic clashing wonder,
 Incantation old and fine.
 'Dragons, dragons, Chinese dragons,
 Red firecrackers, and green firecrackers
 And dragons, dragons, Chinese dragons.'"

Then the lady, rosy-red,
 Turned to her lover Chang and said:
 "Dare you forget that turquoise dawn
 When we stood in our mist-hung velvet lawn,
 And worked a spell this great joss taught
 Till a God of the Dragons was charmed and caught?
 From the flag high over our palace home
 He flew to our feet in rainbow-foam—
 A king of beauty and tempest and thunder
 Panting to tear our sorrows asunder.
 A dragon of fair adventure and wonder.
 We mounted the back of that royal slave
 With thoughts of desire that were noble and grave.
 We swam down the shore to the dragon-mountains,
 We whirled to the peaks and the fiery fountains
 To our secret ivory house we were borne.
 We looked down the wonderful wind-filled regions
 Where the dragons darted in glimmering legions.
 Right by my breast the nightingale sang;
 The old rhymes rang in the sunlit mist
 That we this hour regain—
 Song-fire for the brain.

When my hands and my hair and my feet you kissed,
 When you cried for your heart's new pain,
 What was my name in the dragon-mist,
 In the rings of the rainbowed rain?"

"Sorrow and love, glory and love,"
 Sang the Chinese nightingale,
 "Sorrow and love, glory and love,"
 Said the Chinese nightingale.

And now the joss broke in with his song:
 "Dying ember, bird of Chang,
 Soul of Chang, do you remember?—
 Ere you returned to the shining harbor
 There were pirates by ten thousand
 Descended on the town
 In vessels mountain-high and red and brown,
 Moon-ships that climbed the storms and cut the skies.
 On their prows were painted terrible bright eyes.
 But I was then a wizard and a scholar and a priest;
 I stood upon the sand;
 With lifted hand I looked upon them
 And sunk their vessels with my wizard eyes,
 And the stately lacquer-gate made safe again
 Deep, deep below the bay, the seaweed and the spray,
 Embalmed in amber every pirate lies,
 Embalmed in amber every pirate lies."

Then this did the noble lady say.
 "Bird, do you dream of our home-coming day
 When you flew like a courier on before
 From the dragon-peak to our palace-door,
 And we drove the steed in your singing path—
 The ramping dragon of laughter and wrath:
 And found our city all aglow,
 And knighted this joss that decked it so?
 There were golden fishes in the purple river
 And silver fishes and rainbow fishes
 There were golden junks in the laughing river,
 And silver junks and rainbow junks.
 There were golden lilies by the bay and river,
 And silver lilies and tiger-lilies,
 And tinkling wind-bells in the gardens of the town
 By the black-lacquer gate
 Where walked in state
 The kind king Chang
 And his sweetheart mate. . . .
 With his flag-born dragon
 And his crown of pearl . . . and . . . jade,
 And his nightingale reigning in the mulberry shade,
 And sailors and soldiers on the sea-sands brown,
 And priests who bowed them down to your song—

By the city called Han, the peacock town,
By the city called Han, the nightingale town,
The nightingale town."

Then sang the bird, so strangely gay,
Fluttering, fluttering, ghostly and gray,
A vague, unraveling, final tune,
Like a long unwinding silk cocoon;
Sang as though for the soul of him
Who ironed away in that bower dim:—
    "I have forgotten
    Your dragons great,
    Merry and mad and friendly and bold.
Dim is your proud lost palace-gate.
I vaguely know
There were heroes of old,
Troubles more than the heart could hold,
There were wolves in the woods
Yet lambs in the fold,
Nests in the top of the almond tree. . . .
The evergreen tree . . . and the mulberry tree. . . .
Life and hurry and joy forgotten,
Years and years I but half-remember . . .
Man is a torch, then ashes soon,
May and June, then dead December,
Dead December, then again June.
Who shall end my dream's confusion?
Life is a loom, weaving illusion. . . .
I remember, I remember
There were ghostly veils and laces. . . .
In the shadowy bowery places. . . .
With lovers' ardent faces
Bending to one another,
Speaking each his part.
They infinitely echo
In the red cave of my heart.
'Sweetheart, sweetheart, sweetheart,'
They said to one another.
They spoke, I think, of perils past.
They spoke, I think, of peace at last
One thing I remember:
Spring came on forever,
Spring came on forever,"
Said the Chinese nightingale.

Melville Cane

MELVILLE CANE was born April 15, 1879, at Plattsburg, New York. He was educated at Columbia Grammar School, received his A.B. at Columbia in 1900, LL.B. in 1903. At Columbia he was editor-in-chief of the Literary Monthly; he wrote the lyrics of the Varsity operetta, the music of which was supplied by John Erskine. While still in college he contributed light verse to Puck, Judge, and the more sedate Century and was a reporter on the New York Evening Post. Upon graduation he engaged in the practice of law, specializing in the law of copyright and the theater.

After an interval of twenty years, he resumed writing and turned to a wholly unforeseen expression. January Garden (1926) is the antithesis of the light verse of Cane's youth; it is sensitive and unequivocally serious. Most of the volume is in a free verse whose contours are shaped by introspection. A somber cast may have accounted for the sparse enthusiasm with which it was received, but it is more difficult to account for failure to recognize the delicacy of the pictorial effects.

Cane's Behind Dark Spaces (1930) is less impressionistic, but what it loses in suggestion it gains in sharpness. Mixing "pure" and "suspended" rhyme, his tone-color has grown richer; concentrating on instead of writing around the object, he has developed power without resorting to force. Since 1934 Cane has written in a new genre, a type of poetry which blends seriousness and veis de société with a nice balance.

SNOW TOWARD EVENING

Suddenly the sky turned gray,
The day,
Which had been bitter and chill,
Grew soft and still.
Quietly
From some invisible blossoming tree
Millions of petals cool and white
Drifted and blew,
Lifted and flew,
Fell with the falling night.

TREE IN DECEMBER

Frost has sealed
The still December field.
Over fern and furrow,
Over the quickening
Within each meadowy acre,
Frost, invisibly thorough,
Spreads its thickening
Stiffening lacquer.

Above the field, beneath a sky
Heavy with snow stirring to fly,

A tree stands alone,
Bare of fruit, leaves gone
Bleak as stone.

Once, on a similar glazed
Field, on a similar tree,
Dead as the eye could see,
The first man, dazed
In the first December, grimly gazed,
Never having seen
The miracle of recurring green,
The shining spectacle of rebirth
Rising out of frozen earth.

Snow fell and all about
Covered earth, and him with doubt.
More chill grew the air
And his mute despair.

Leaves that April had uncurled
Now were blown dust in the world,
Apples mellowing sweet and sound
Now were icy rot in the ground;
Roses August sunned in bloom
Now were less than lost perfume.

Had he seen the final hour
Of fruit and leaf and flower?
Had the last bird taken wing,
Nevermore to sing?
Never to fly in the light of another spring?

The man trembled with cold, with dread,
Thinking of all things dead
And his own earthen bed.

Trembling, he grew aware
Of a new quiet in the air;
Snow had ceased;
A ray came faintly through;
The wavering slit of blue
Vaguely increased.

Trembling, the first man gazed
At the glazed
And glittering tree,
Dead as the eye could see.

Whence came the sight
To read the sign aright?
The hint,—
The glad intimation, flashing:
"Wintry rains
Are blood in the veins,
Under snows and binding sieves
Locked roots live, a heart still beats?"

From what impalpable breath
Issued the faith,
The inner cry: "This is not death"?

DAWN HAS YET TO RIPPLE IN

What is this that I have heard?
Scurrying rat or stirring bird?
Scratching in the wall of sleep?
Twitching on the eaves of sleep?
I can hear it working close
Through a space along the house,
Through a space obscure and thin.
Night is swiftly running out,
Dawn has yet to ripple in,
Dawn has yet to clear the doubt,
Rat within or bird without.

HYMN TO NIGHT

Now it grows dark.
Red goes
Out of the rose;
Out of the lawn
Green's withdrawn;
Each buttercup now yields
Its gold from blurring fields;
Larkspur and sky surrender
Blue wonder.

We were dark within, we relied
For our strength on the nourishing sun;
Now it is under and gone.
Now, as the light grows duller,
We, who had flourished on color,
Stand, in the ever-deepening shade,
Bereft, dismayed

We were dark within, it was death
We saw, we had never seen
Within the dark, we had never known
The spark, the vital breath.
If only we had known
That black is neither loss nor lack
But holds the essential seed
Of mortal hope and need!

Now sheltering dusk,
Shepherd of color and light for dawns unending,
Tends the holy task.

Praise be to black, the benign,
No longer malign,
Prolonger of days!
Praise the preserver of shine,
The keeper of blaze!

Praise Night,
Forever praise
Savior Night,
Who surely stays
The arm of time,
Who guards the flame,
Who hoards the light.

Praised be the Night.

Wallace Stevens

WALLACE STEVENS was born in Reading, Pennsylvania, October 2, 1879. A student at Harvard University and New York Law School, he was admitted to the Bar in 1904 and engaged in the general practice of law in New York City. In 1916 he became associated with the Hartford Accident and Indemnity Company, of which he became vice-president in 1934.

A poet of peculiar reticence, he kept himself from book publication for a long and rigorous time. Although many of his poems appeared as early as 1913, he was so self-critical that he refused to publish a volume until 1923 when the first edition of Harmonium appeared. The most casual reading of this volume discloses that Stevens is a stylist of unusual delicacy.<sup>1</sup> Even the least sympathetic reader must be struck by the poet's hypersensitive and ingenious imagination. It is a curiously ambiguous world which Stevens paints: a world of merging half-lights, of finicking shadows, of disembodied emotions. Even this last word is an exaggeration, for emotion itself seems absent from the clear and often fiercely colored segments of the poet's designs.

Considered as a painter, Stevens is one of the most original impressionists of the times. He is fond of little blocks of color, verbal mosaics in which syllables are used as pigments. Little related to any human struggle, the content of Harmonium progresses toward a sort of "absolute" poetry which, depending on tone rather than on passion, aims to flower in an air of pure estheticism. His very titles—which deliberately add to the reader's confusion by having little or no connection with most of the poems—betray this quality: "Hymn from a Watermelon Pavilion," "The Paltry Nude Starts on a Spring Voyage," "Frogs Eat Butterflies, Snakes Eat Frogs, Hogs Eat Snakes, Men Eat Hogs." Such poems have much for the eye, something for the ear, but little for that central hunger which is at the core of all the senses.

Chieftain Iffucan of Azcan in caftan
Of tan with henna hackles, halt!

Thus Stevens begins his "Bantam in Pine-Woods" and his pleasure in playing with sounds must be evident to the most perplexed reader. Like Williams, to whose Collected Poems Stevens furnished an introduction, Stevens is interested in things chiefly from their "unreal" aspect. He is, nevertheless, romantic. A romantic poet nowadays, says Stevens, "happens to be one who still dwells in an ivory tower, but who insists that life there would be intolerable except for the fact that one has, from the top, such an exceptional view of the public dump and the advertising signs. . . . He is the hermit who dwells alone with the sun and moon, and insists on taking a rotten newspaper."<sup>2</sup> That is why Stevens can write of "The Worms at Heaven's Gate" with no disrespect to Shakespeare, make a study in esthetics of the contents of a cab, and entitle a poem on death ("the finale of seem") "The Emperor of Ice-Cream."

"Sunday Morning" and "Sea Surface Full of Clouds" are blends of disintegrated fantasy and fictitious reality. These poems are highly selective in choice of allusions, inner harmonies, and special luxuriance of sound. They burst into strange bloom; they foliate in a region where the esthetic impulse encroaches on the reasoning intellect. "Thirteen Ways of Looking at a Blackbird" and "Domination of Black" have a delicacy of design which suggests the Chinese; "Peter Quince at the Clavier" and the exquisite "To the One of Fictive Music" (Stevens' most obviously musical moment) reveal a distinction which places "this auditor of insects, this lutanist of fleas" as one who has perfected a kind of poetry which is a remarkable, if strangely hermetic, art.

After a twelve years' silence Stevens published Ideas of Order (1935) in a limited edition. The format of the book and its private publication emphasizes the limitation as well as the elegance of the contents. Here, as in Harmonium, Stevens seldom writes poetry about the Ding an sich, but almost always about the overtones which the thing creates in his mind. Here the candid surface breaks into cryptic epigrams, and the scenes are recorded in a deft but elusive phrase. Often enough a poem refuses to yield its meaning, but "Academic Discourse at Havana" and "The Idea of Order at Key West" surrender themselves in an almost pure music.

The Man with the Blue Guitar (1937), with a bow to Picasso, places its emphasis on man as artist and on the complicated relations between art and life. It is a far cry from the delight in luxuriance for its own sake which Stevens once called "the essential gaudiness of poetry." There is little mischievous playing with the sound of words, as in the much-quoted line (from "The Emperor of Ice-Cream") which had the "roller of big cigars" whip

In kitchen cups concupiscent curds.

There is, instead, an increasing concern with the problem of a society in chaos and the difficult "idea of order." Stevens has sacrificed some of the barbaric piling up of effects; his work is no longer a pageant of colors, sounds, and smells. The riotousness has been replaced by a grave awareness of the plight of man. Without losing the wit and delicacy of what Allen Tate has characterized as "floating images," Stevens has gained compassion. A new preoccupation with man's bewilderment and despair strengthens Stevens' later work. The poet's "place" is established by critical estimates in the Wallace Stevens number of The Harvard Advocate (December, 1940), and his own attitude is clearly pronounced in "Asides on the Oboe" from that issue. Without discarding the early resonance and free play of associations, he hails the provoked intelligence:

The impossible possible philosopher's man,
The man who has had the time to think enough.

Stevens has never been more pointed than in his later poems, which are both rhetorical and profound.

He is the transparency of the place in which
He is, and in his poems we find peace.

But Stevens does not insist that peace is to be found in poetry. The "central man" finds no panacea but "the sum of men . . . the central evil, the central good."

A NECDOTE OF THE JAR

I placed a jar in Tennessee,
And round it was, upon a hill.
It made the slovenly wilderness
Surround that hill.

The wilderness rose up to it,
And sprawled around, no longer wild.
The jar was round upon the ground
And tall and of a port in air.

It took dominion everywhere.
The jar was gray and bare.
It did not give of bird or bush,
Like nothing else in Tennessee.

PETER QUINCE AT THE CLAVIER

I

Just as my fingers on these keys
Make music, so the self-same sounds
On my spirit make a music, too.

Music is feeling, then, not sound;
And thus it is that what I feel,
Here in this room, desiring you,

Thinking of your blue-shadowed silk,
Is music. It is like the strain
Waked in the elders by Susanna:

Of a green evening, clear and warm,
She bathed in her still garden, while
The red-eyed elders, watching, felt

The basses of their beings throb
In witching chords, and their thin blood
Pulse pizzicati of Hosanna.

II

In the green water, clear and warm,
Susanna lay,
She searched
The touch of springs,
And found
Concealed imaginings.
She sighed,
For so much melody.

Upon the bank, she stood
In the cool

Of spent emotions.
She felt, among the leaves,
The dew
Of old devotions.

She walked upon the grass,
Still quavering.
The winds were like her maids
On timid feet,
Fetching her woven scarves,
Yet wavering.

A breath upon her hand
Muted the night.
She turned—
A cymbal crashed,
And roaring horns.

III

Soon, with a noise like tambourines,
Came her attendant Byzantines.

They wondered why Susanna cried
Against the elders by her side;

And as they whispered, the refrain
Was like a willow swept by rain.

Anon, their lamps' uplifted flame
Revealed Susanna and her shame.

And then, the simpering Byzantines
Fled, with a noise like tambourines.

IV

ty is momentary in the mind—
fitful tracing of a portal;
But in the flesh it is immortal.

The body dies; the body's beauty lives.
So evenings die, in their green going,
A wave, interminably flowing.
So gardens die, their meek breath scenting

The cowl of Winter, done repenting.
So maidens die, to the auroral
Celebration of a maiden's choral.

Susanna's music touched the bawdy strings
Of those white elders; but, escaping,
Left only Death's ironic scraping.
Now, in its immortality, it plays
On the clear viol of her memory,
And makes a constant sacrament of praise

TO THE ONE OF FICTIVE MUSIC

Sister and mother and diviner love,
And of the sisterhood of the living dead
Most near, most clear, and of the clearest bloom,
And of the fragrant mothers the most dear
And queen, and of diviner love the day
And flame and summer and sweet fire, no thread
Of cloudy silver sprinkles in your gown
Its venom of renown, and on your head
No crown is simpler than the simple hair.

Now, of the music summoned by the birth
That separates us from the wind and sea,
Yet leaves us in them, until earth becomes,
By being so much of the things we are,
Gross effigy and simulacrum, none
Gives motion to perfection more serene
Than yours, out of our imperfections wrought,
Most rare, or ever of more kindred air
In the laborious weaving that you wear.

For so retentive of themselves are men
That music is intensest which proclaims
The near, the clear, and vaunts the clearest bloom,
And of all vigils musing the obscure,
That apprehends the most which sees and names,
As in your name, an image that is sure,
Among the arrant spices of the sun,
O bough and bush and scented vine, in whom
We give ourselves our likest issuance.

Yet not too like, yet not so like to be Too near, too clear, saving a little to endow
Our feigning with the strange unlike, whence springs
The difference that heavenly pity brings.
For this, musician, in your girdle fixed
Bear other perfumes. On your pale head wear
A band entwining, set with fatal stones.
Unreal, give back to us what once you gave:
The imagination that we spurned and crave.

SUNDAY MORNING

I

Complacencies of the peignoir, and late
 Coffee and oranges in a sunny chair,
 And the green freedom of a cockatoo
 Upon a rug, mingle to dissipate
 The holy hush of ancient sacrifice.
 She dreams a little, and she feels the dark
 Encroachment of that old catastrophe,
 As a calm darkens among water-lights.
 The pungent oranges and bright green wings
 Seem things in some procession of the dead,
 Winding across wide water, without sound.
 The day is like wide water, without sound,
 Stilled for the passing of her dreaming feet
 Over the seas, to silent Palestine,
 Dominion of the blood and sepulcher.

II

She hears, upon that water without sound,
 A voice that cries: "The tomb in Palestine
 Is not the porch of spirits lingering;
 It is the grave of Jesus, where He lay."
 We live in an old chaos of the sun,
 Or old dependency of day and night,
 Or island solitude, unsponsored, free,
 Of that wide water, inescapable.
 Deer walk upon our mountains, and the quail
 Whistle about us their spontaneous cries:
 Sweet berries ripen in the wilderness;
 And in the isolation of the sky,
 At evening, casual flocks of pigeons make
 Ambiguous undulations as they sink,
 Downward to darkness, on extended wings.

III

She says: "I am content when wakened birds,
 Before they fly, test the reality
 Of misty fields, by their sweet questionings;
 But when the birds are gone, and their warm fields
 Return no more, where, then, is paradise?"
 There is not any haunt of prophecy,
 Nor any old chimera of the grave,
 Neither the golden underground, nor isle
 Melodious, where spirits gat them home,
 Nor visionary South, nor cloudy palm
 Remote on heaven's hill, that has endured
 As April's green endures; or will endure
 Like her remembrance of awakened birds,
 Or her desire for June and evening, tipped
 By consummation of the swallow's wings.

IV

She says, "But in contentment I still feel
 The need of some imperishable bliss."
 Death is the mother of beauty; hence from her,
 Alone, shall come fulfillment to our dreams
 And our desires. Although she strews the leaves
 Of sure obliteration on our paths—
 The path sick sorrow took, the many paths
 Where triumph rang its brassy phrase, or love
 Whispered a little out of tenderness—
 She makes the willow shiver in the sun
 For maidens who were wont to sit and gaze
 Upon the grass, relinquished to their feet.
 She causes boys to bring sweet-smelling pears
 And plums in ponderous piles. The maidens taste
 And stray impassioned in the littering leaves.

V

Supple and turbulent, a ring of men
 Shall chant in orgy on a summer morn
 Their boisterous devotion to the sun—
 Not as a god, but as a god might be,
 Naked among them, like a savage source.
 Their chant shall be a chant of paradise,
 Out of their blood, returning to the sky;
 And in their chant shall enter, voice by voice,
 The windy lake wherein their lord delights,
 The trees, like seraphim, and echoing hills,
 That choir among themselves long afterward.
 They shall know well the heavenly fellowship
 Of men that perish and of summer morn—
 And whence they came and whither they shall go,
 The dew upon their feet shall manifest.

DOMINATION OF BLACK

At night, by the fire,
 The colors of the bushes
 And of the fallen leaves,
 Repeating themselves,
 Turned in the room,
 Like the leaves themselves
 Turning in the wind.
 Yes: but the color of the heavy hemlocks
 Came striding.
 And I remembered the cry of the peacocks.

The colors of their tails
 Were like the leaves themselves
 Turning in the wind,
 In the twilight wind.

They swept over the room,
 Just as they flew from the boughs of the hemlocks
 Down to the ground.
 I heard them cry—the peacocks.
 Was it a cry against the twilight
 Or against the leaves themselves
 Turning in the wind,
 Turning as the flames
 Turned in the fire,
 Turning as the tails of the peacocks
 Turned in the loud fire,
 Loud as the hemlocks
 Full of the cry of the peacocks?
 Or was it a cry against the hemlocks?

Out of the window,
 I saw how the planets gathered
 Like the leaves themselves
 Turning in the wind.
 I saw how the night came,
 Came striding like the color of the heavy hemlocks.
 I felt afraid.
 And I remembered the cry of the peacocks.

SEA SURFACE FULL OF CLOUDS

I

In that November off Tehuantepec,
 The slopping of the sea grew still one night
 And in the morning summer hued the deck

And made one think of rosy chocolate
 And gilt umbrellas. Paradisal green
 Gave suavity to the perplexed machine

Of ocean, which like limpid water lay.
 Who, then, in that ambrosial latitude
 Out of the light evolved the moving blooms,

Who, then, evolved the sea-blooms from the clouds
 Diffusing balm in that Pacific calm?
C'était mon enfant, mon bijou, mon âme.

The sea-clouds whitened far below the calm
 And moved, as blooms move, in the swimming green
 And in its watery radiance, while the hue

Of heaven in an antique reflection rolled
 Round those flotillas. And sometimes the sea
 Poured brilliant iris on the glistening blue.

II

In that November off Tehuantepec
 The slopping of the sea grew still one night.
 At breakfast jelly yellow streaked the deck

And made one think of chop-house chocolate
 And sham umbrellas. And a sham-like green
 Capped summer-seeming on the tense machine

Of ocean, which in sinister flatness lay.
 Who, then, beheld the rising of the clouds
 That strode submerged in that malevolent sheen,

Who saw the mortal massives of the blooms
 Of water moving on the water-floor?
C'était mon frère du ciel, ma vie, mon or.

The gongs rang loudly as the windy blooms
 Hoo-hooed it in the darkened ocean-blooms.
 The gongs grew still. And then blue heaven spread

Its crystalline pendentives on the sea
 And the macabre of the water-glooms.
 In an enormous undulation fled.

III

In that November off Tehuantepec,
 The slopping of the sea grew still one night,
 And a pale silver patterned on the deck

Made one think of porcelain chocolate
 And pied umbrellas. An uncertain green,
 Piano-polished, held the tranced machine

Of ocean, as a prelude holds and holds.
 Who, seeing silver petals of white blooms
 Unfolding in the water, feeling sure

Of the milk within the saltiest spurge, heard, then,
 The sea unfolding in the sunken clouds?
Oh! C'était mon extase et mon amour.

So deeply sunken were they that the shrouds,
 The shrouding shadows, made the petals black
 Until the rolling heaven made them blue,

A blue beyond the rainy hyacinth,
 And smiting the crevasses of the leaves
 Deluged the ocean with a sapphire hue.

IV

In that November off Tehuantepec
 The night-long slopping of the sea grew still.
 A mallow morning dozed upon the deck

And made one think of musky chocolate
 And frail umbrellas. A too-fluent green
 Suggested malice in the dry machine

Of ocean, pondering dank stratagem.
 Who then beheld the figures of the clouds,
 Like blooms secluded in the thick marine?

Like blooms? Like damasks that were shaken off
 From the loosed girdles in the spangling must.
C'était ma foi, la nonchalance divine.

The nakedness would rise and suddenly turn
 Salt masks of beard and mouths of bellowing,
 Would— But more suddenly the heaven rolled

Its bluest sea-clouds in the thinking green
 And the nakedness became the broadest blooms,
 Mile-mallows that a mallow sun cajoled.

V

In that November off Tehuantepec
 Night stilled the slopping of the sea. The day
 Came, bowing and voluble, upon the deck,

Good clown. . . . One thought of Chinese chocolate
 And large umbrellas. And a motley green
 Followed the drift of the obese machine

Of ocean, perfected in indolence.
 What pistache one, ingenuous and droll,
 Beheld the sovereign clouds as jugglery

And the sea as turquoise-turbaned Sambô, neat
 At tossing saucers—cloudy-conjuring sea?
C'était mon esprit batard, l'ignominie.

The sovereign clouds came clustering. The conch
 Of loyal conjuration trumped. The wind
 Of green blooms turning crisped the motley hue

To clearing opalescence. Then the sea
 And heaven rolled as one and from the two
 Came fresh transfigurings of freshest blue.

ANNUAL GAIETY

In the morning in the blue snow
The catholic sun, its majesty,
Pinks and pinks the ice-hard melanchole.

Wherefore those prayers to the moon?
Or is it that alligators lie
Along the edges of your eye
Basking in desert Florida?

Père Guzz, in heaven, thumb your lyre
And chant the January fire
And joy of snow and snow.

HOMUNCULUS ET LA BELLE ETOILE

In the sea, Biscayne, there prinks
The young emerald, evening star,
Good light for drunkards, poets, widows,
And ladies soon to be married.

By this light the salty fishes
Arch in the sea like tree-branches,
Going in many directions
Up and down.

This light conducts
The thoughts of drunkards, the feelings
Of widows and trembling ladies,
The movements of fishes.

How pleasant an existence it is
That this emerald charms philosophers,
Until they become thoughtlessly willing
To bathe their hearts in later moonlight,

Knowing that they can bring back thought
In the night that is still to be silent,
Reflecting this thing and that,
Before they sleep!

It is better that, as scholars,
They should think hard in the dark cuffs
Of voluminous cloaks,
And shave their heads and bodies.

It might well be that their mistress
Is no gaunt fugitive phantom.
She might, after all, be a wanton,
Abundantly beautiful, eager,

Fecund,
From whose being by starlight, on sea-coast,
The innermost good of their seeking
Might come in the simplest of speech.

It is a good light, then, for those
That know the ultimate Plato,
Tranquilizing with this jewel
The torments of confusion.

TWO FIGURES IN DENSE VIOLET LIGHT

I had as lief be embraced by the porter at the hotel
As to get no more from the moonlight
Than your moist hand.

Be the voice of night and Florida in my ear.
Use dusky words and dusky images.
Darken your speech.

Speak, even, as if I did not hear you speaking,
But spoke for you perfectly in my thoughts,
Conceiving words,

As the night conceives the sea-sounds in silence,
And out of their droning sibilants makes
A serenade.

Say, puerile, that the buzzards crouch on the ridge-pole
And sleep with one eye watching the stars fall
Below Key West.

Say that the palms are clear in a total blue,
Are clear and are obscure; that it is night;
That the moon shines.

GALLANT CHATEAU

Is it bad to have come here
And to have found the bed empty?
One might have found tragic hair,
Bitter eyes, hands hostile and cold.
There might have been a light on a book
Lighting a pitiless verse or two.

There might have been the immense solitude
Of the wind upon the curtains.
Pitiless verse? A few words tuned
And tuned and tuned and tuned.
It is good. The bed is empty,
The curtains are stiff and prim and still.

THE IDEA OF ORDER AT KEY WEST

She sang beyond the genius of the sea.
The water never formed to mind or voice,
Like a body wholly body, fluttering
Its empty sleeves; and yet its mimic motion
Made constant cry, caused constantly a cry,
That was not ours although we understood,
Inhuman, of the veritable ocean.

The sea was not a mask. No more was she.
The song and water were not medleyed sound,
Even if what she sang was what she heard,
Since what she sang she uttered word by word.
It may be that in all her phrases stirred
The grinding water and the gasping wind;
But it was she and not the sea we heard.

For she was the maker of the song she sang.
The ever-hooded, tragic-gestured sea
Was merely a place by which she walked to sing.
Whose spirit is this? we said, because we knew
It was the spirit that we sought and knew
That we should ask this often as she sang.

If it was only the dark voice of the sea
That rose, or even colored by many waves;
If it was only the outer voice of sky
And cloud, of the sunken coral water-walled,
However clear, it would have been deep air,
The heaving speech of air, a summer sound
Repeated in a summer without end
And sound alone. But it was more than that,
More even than her voice, and ours, among
The meaningless plungings of water and the wind,
Theatrical distances, bronze shadows heaped
On high horizons, mountainous atmospheres
Of sky and sea.

It was her voice that made
 The sky acutest at its vanishing.
 She measured to the hour its solitude.
 She was the single artificer of the world
 In which she sang. And when she sang, the sea,
 Whatever self it had, became the self
 That was her song, for she was maker. Then we,
 As we beheld her striding there alone,
 Knew that there never was a world for her
 Except the one she sang and, singing, made.

Ramon Fernandez, tell me, if you know,
 Why, when the singing ended and we turned Toward the town, tell why the glassy lights,
 The lights in the fishing boats at anchor there,
 As the night descended, tilting in the air,
 Mastered the night and portioned out the sea,
 Fixing emblazoned zones and fiery poles,
 Arranging, deepening, enchanting night.

Oh! Blessed rage for order, pale Ramon,
 The maker's rage to order words of the sea,
 Words of the fragrant portals, dimly-starred,
 And of ourselves and of our origins,
 In ghostlier demarcations, keener sounds.

B O U Q U E T O F B E L L E S C A V O I R

It is she alone that matters.
 She made it. It is easy to say
 The figures of speech, as why she chose
 This dark, particular rose.

Everything in it is herself.
 Yet the freshness of the leaves, the burn
 Of the colors, are tinsel changes,
 Out of the changes of both light and dew.

How often had he walked
 Beneath summer and the sky
 To receive her shadow into his mind . . .
 Miserable that it was not she.

The sky is too blue, the earth too wide.
 The thought of her takes her away
 The form of her in something else
 Is not enough.

The reflection of her here, and then there,
 Is another shadow, another evasion,

Another denial. If she is everywhere,
She is nowhere, to him.

But this she has made. If it is Another image, it is one she has made.
It is she that he wants, to look at directly,
Someone before him to see and to know.

ASIDES ON THE OBOE

The prologues are over. It is question, now,
Of final belief. So, say that final belief
Must be in a fiction. It is time to choose.

That obsolete fiction of the wide river in
An empty land; the gods that Boucher killed;
And the metal heroes that time granulates—
The philosophers' man alone still walks in dew,
Still by the sea-side mutters milky lines
Concerning an immaculate imagery.
If you say on the hautboy man is not enough
Can never stand as god, is ever wrong
In the end, however naked, tall, there is still
The impossible possible philosophers' man,
The man who has had the time to think enough,
The central man, the human globe, responsive
As a mirror with a voice, the man of glass,
Who in a million diamonds sums us up.

2

He is the transparency of the place in which
He is, and in his poems we find peace.
He sets this peddler's pie and cries in summer,
The glass man, cold and numbered, dewily cries,
"Thou art not August unless I make thee so."
Clandestine steps upon imagined stairs
Climb through the night, because his cuckoos call.

One year, death and war prevented the jasmine scent
And the jasmine islands were bloody martyrdoms.
How was it then with the central man? Did we Find peace? We found the sum of men. We found,
It we found the central evil, the central good.
We buried the fallen without jasmine crowns.
There was nothing he did not suffer, no; nor we.

It was not as if the jasmine ever returned.
But we and the diamond globe at last were one.
We had always been partly one. It was as we came
To see him, that we were wholly one, as we heard
Him chanting for those buried in their blood,
In the forests that had been jasmine, that we knew
The glass man, without external reference.

Franklin P. Adams

FRANKLIN PIERCE ADAMS, better known to the readers of his column as F. P. A., was born in Chicago, Illinois, November 15, 1881. He attended the University of Michigan and, after a brief career as insurance agent, plunged into journalism. In 1904 he came to New York, running his section on The Evening Mail until 1914, when he started "The Conning Tower" for the New York Tribune, transferring it some years later to the New York World and, later still, to the New York Herald Tribune. He is one of the experts on "Information Please."

Adams is the author of several volumes of a light verse that is unusually skillful. Tobogganing on Parnassus (1909), In Other Words (1912), By and Large (1914), and So There (1923) reveal a spirit which is essentially one of mockery. These contain impudent paraphrases of Horace and Propertius, and a healthy satire that runs sharply through the smooth lines. The best of his later work is in Christopher Columbus (1930) and that modern metropolitan chronicle The Diary of Our Own Samuel Pepys (1935), a prose portrait of himself and a period.

THE RICH MAN

The rich man has his motor-car,
His country and his town estate.
He smokes a fifty-cent cigar
And jeers at Fate.
He frivols through the livelong day,
He knows not Poverty, her pinch.

His lot seems light, his heart seems gay;
He has a cinch.
Yet though my lamp burns low and dim,
Though I must slave for livelihood—
Think you that I would change with him?
You bet I would!

THOSE TWO BOYS

When Bill was a lad he was terribly bad.
He worried his parents a lot;
He'd lie and he'd swear and pull little girls' hair;
His boyhood was naught but a blot.

At play and in school he would fracture each rule—
In mischief from autumn to spring;
And the villagers knew when to manhood he grew
He would never amount to a thing.

When Jim was a child he was not very wild;
He was known as a good little boy;
He was honest and bright and the teacher's delight—
To his mother and father a joy.

All the neighbors were sure that his virtue'd endure,
That his life would be free of a spot;
They were certain that Jim had a great head on him
And that Jim would amount to a lot.

And Jim grew to manhood and honor and fame
    And bears a good name;
While Bill is shut up in a dark prison cell—
    You never can tell.

Witter Bynner

WITTER BYNNER was born in Brooklyn, New York, August 10, 1881. He was graduated from Harvard in 1902 and was assistant editor of various periodicals as well as adviser to publishers. He spent much of his time lecturing on poetry, traveling in the Orient and studying the American Indian. He lived most of the year in Santa Fé, New Mexico.

Young Harvard (1907), the first of Bynner's volumes, was, as the name implies, a celebration of his Alma Mater. The New World (1915) is a far more ambitious effort. In this extended poem, Bynner sought—almost too determinedly—to translate the ideals of democracy into verse. Neither of these volumes displays its author's gifts at their best, for Bynner is, first of all, a lyric poet. Grenstone Poems (1917) and A Canticle of Pan (1920) reveal a natural singing voice. Bynner harmonizes in many keys; transposing, modulating, and shifting from one tonality to another. This very ease is his handicap, for Bynner's facility leads him not only to write too much, but in too many different styles. Instead of a fusion of gifts we have, too often, as in Caravan (1925), only a confusion. When Bynner is least dexterous he is most ingratiating. Even in The Beloved Stranger (1919), where the borrowed accents of his alter ego are only too apparent, one is arrested by lines of charm and fluency.

Under the pseudonym "Emanuel Morgan" Bynner was co-author with Arthur Davison Ficke (writing under the name of "Anne Knish") of Spectra (1916). Spectra was a serious burlesque of some of the extreme manifestations of modern poetic tendencies—a hoax that deceived many of the radical propagandists as well as most of the conservative critics.

A volume in collaboration with Kiang Kang-Hu, The Jade Mountain (1929), included three hundred translations of poems of the T'ang Dynasty. Indian Earth (1929) summons the effect rather than the rhythms of the buffalo dance at Santo Domingo, the rain invocation at Cochiti, and the Shalako dance-dramas in a technique as delicate as the brush-strokes used to evoke the shifting scene.

Eden Tree (1931) is Bynner's own synthesis of himself and his work viewed in retrospect at fifty. The tone is a troubled one, the approach is by way of fantasy running into phantasmagoria; but the mood between clear perception and cloudy consciousness is skillfully maintained. Guest Book (1935) is a lighter volume, a series of seventy sonnets which "portray" contemporary persons with more rhetoric than accuracy. The complimentary poems are not deeply registered and the satirical ones are not sharp enough to be effective caricatures. Bynner, as host, is too tactful a recorder; the real poet is in Eden Tree.

Selected Poems (1936), edited by Robert Hunt, is a summary of Bynner's best work.

GRASS-TOPS

What bird are you in the grass-tops?
 Your poise is enough of an answer,
 With your wing-tips like up-curving fingers
 Of the slow-moving hands of a dancer . . .

And what is so nameless as beauty,
 Which poets, who give it a name,
 Are only unnaming forever?—
 Content, though it go, that it came.

VOICES

O there were lights and laughter
 And the motions to and fro
 Of people as they enter
 And people as they go . . .

And there were many voices
 Vying at the feast,
 But mostly I remember
 Yours—who spoke the least.

A FARMER REMEMBERS LINCOLN

"Lincoln?—

Well, I was in the old Second Maine,
 The first regiment in Washington from the Pine Tree State.
 Of course I didn't get the butt of the clip;
 We was there for guardin' Washington—
 We was all green.

"I ain't never ben to the theayter in my life—
 I didn't know how to behave.
 I ain't never ben since.
 I can see as plain as my hat the box where he sat in
 When he was shot.
 I can tell you, sir, there was a panic
 When we found our President was in the shape he was in!
 Never saw a soldier in the world but what liked him.

"Yes, sir. His looks was kind o' hard to forget.
 He was a spare man;
 An old farmer.
 Everything was all right, you know,
 But he wasn't a smooth-appearin' man at all—
 Not in no ways;
 Thin-faced, long-necked,
 And a swellin' kind of a thick lip like.

"And he was a jolly old fellow—always cheerful;
 He wasn't so high but the boys could talk to him their own ways.
 While I was servin' at the Hospital
 He'd come in and say, 'You look nice in here,'
 Praise us up, you know.
 And he'd bend over and talk to the boys—
 And he'd talk so good to 'em—so close—
 That's why I call him a farmer.
 I don't mean that everything about him wasn't all right, you understand,
 It's just—well, I was a farmer—
 And he was my neighbor, anybody's neighbor.
 I guess even you young folks would 'a' liked him."

TRAIN-MATES

Outside hove Shasta, snowy height on height,
 A glory; but a negligible sight,
 For you had often seen a mountain-peak
 But not my paper. So we came to speak . . .
 A smoke, a smile,—a good way to commence
 The comfortable exchange of difference!
 You a young engineer, five feet eleven,
 Forty-five chest, with football in your heaven,
 Liking a road-bed newly built and clean,
 Your fingers hot to cut away the green
 Of brush and flowers that bring beside a track
 The kind of beauty steel lines ought to lack,—
 And I a poet, wistful of my betters,
 Reading George Meredith's high-hearted letters,
 Joining betweenwhiles in the mingled speech
 Of a drummer, circus-man, and parson, each
 Absorbing to himself—as I to me
 And you to you—a glad identity!

After a time, when others went away,
 A curious kinship made us choose to stay,
 Which I could tell you now; but at the time
 You thought of baseball teams and I of rhyme,
 Until we found that we were college men
 And smoked more easily and smiled again;
 And I from Cambridge cried, the poet still:
 "I know your fine Greek theater on the hill
 At Berkeley!" With your happy Grecian head
 Upraised, "I never saw the place," you said—
 "Once I was free of class, I always went Out to the field."

Young engineer, you meant
 As fair a tribute to the better part
 As ever I did. Beauty of the heart
 Is evident in temples. But it breathes
 Alive where athletes quicken curly wreaths,
 Which are the lovelier because they die.
 You are a poet quite as much as I,
 Though differences appear in what we do,
 And I an athlete quite as much as you.
 Because you half-surmise my quarter-mile
 And I your quatrain, we could greet and smile.
 Who knows but we shall look again and find
 The circus-man and drummer, not behind
 But leading in our visible estate—
 As discus-thrower and as laureate?

THE SINGING HUNTSMAN

The huntswoman-moon was my mother,
And the song-man, Apollo, my sire;
And I know either trick like the other,
The trick of the bow and the lyre.

And when beauty darts by me or lingers,
When it opens or folds its wing,
On bow and on lyre are my fingers,
And I shoot, and I sing.

AGAINST THE COLD

Autumn is only winter in disguise,
A summer-skeleton in scarlet cover.

Now is no spring nor summer in the skies
Nor early song of nightingale or plover.
Bones are the fingers now that touch the grass

And turn the edge of timothy and clover;
Bones are the feet that on the highway pass
And tread the weeds and turn the gravel over.

Bear backward, then, within the warming walls

Of stone or wood or clay, no more a rover
Beside the meadowlands and waterfalls
But an abashed and reverential lover—
And build of better stuff than spring, the old

Unceasing fortitude against the cold.

James Oppenheim

JAMES OPPENHEIM was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, May 24, 1882. Two years later his family moved to New York City, where he lived most of his life. After a public school education, he took special courses at Columbia University (1901-3) and engaged in settlement work, acting in the capacity of assistant head worker of the Hudson Guild Settlement, and superintendent of the Hebrew Technical School for Girls (1904-7). His studies and experiences on the lower East Side of New York furnished material for his first book of short stories, Doctor Rast (1909).

Oppenheim's initial venture as a poet, Monday Morning and Other Poems (1909), was imitative and experimental. In spite of its obvious indebtedness to Whitman, most of the verses are in formal meters and regular (though ragged) rhyme. Beauty is sought, but seldom captured here; the message is coughed out between bursts of eloquence and fits of stammering.

Songs for the New Age (1914) made Oppenheim his own liberator. The speech, echoing the Whitmanic sonority, develops a music that is strangely Biblical and yet native. It is the expression of an ancient people reacting to modernity, of a race in solution. This volume, like all of Oppenheim's subsequent work, is analysis in terms of poetry; a slow searching beneath the musical surface attempts to diagnose the tortured soul of man and the twisted times he lives in. The old Isaiah note, with a new introspection, rises out of such poems as "The Slave," "We Dead," "Tasting the Earth"; the music and imagery of the Psalms are heard in "The Flocks," and "The Runner in the Skies."

War and Laughter (1916) holds much of its predecessor's fervor. The Semitic blend of delight and disillusion—that quality which hates the world for its hypocrisies and loves it in spite of them—is revealed in "Greed," in the ironic "Report on the Planet Earth" and the affirmative "Laughter."

The Book of Self (1917) is an imperfect fusion Oppenheim's preoccupation with analytical psychology mars the effect of the long passages which contain flashes of clairvoyance. Most of it reads like Leaves of Grass translated by Freud. The Solitary (1919) is a stride forward; its major section, a long symbolic poem called "The Sea," breathes the same note that was the burden of the earlier books: "We are flesh on the way to godhood."

The Mystic Warrior (1921) is an autobiography in free verse. It is a chronicle of inhibition, the effort of an artist to find himself and freedom in a rigid, mechanistic environment. Oppenheim's studies and practice in psychoanalysis are, again, somewhat too evident in this volume; the chief figure emerges as a weak and groping stumbler towards immensities, a figure lost between self-contempt and over-reaching egotism. Golden Bird (1923) is a return to Oppenheim's less personal mysticism. It suffers from loquacity and a curious "yearning back," but some of the poems (such as "Hebrews") rise from a rather cloying catalog of perished beauty.

The Sea, Oppenheim's most comprehensive volume, was published in 1923. It includes the best of all his previous books of poetry with the addition of several "connecting" verses.

Besides his poetry, Oppenheim has published several volumes of short stories, five novels, and two poetic plays. During 1916-17 he was editor of that provoking but short-lived magazine, The Seven Arts. Later he tried hack-work; he prepared a "popular" handbook on psychoanalysis and another, American Types (1931), of a similar nature. He died, after a severe illness, August 4, 1932.

THE SLAVE

They set the slave free, striking off his chains . . .
Then he was as much of a slave as ever.

He was still chained to servility,
He was still manacled to indolence and sloth,
He was still bound by fear and superstition,
By ignorance, suspicion, and savagery . . .
His slavery was not in the chains,
But in himself. . . .

They can only set free men free . . .
And there is no need of that:
Free men set themselves free.

THE RUNNER IN THE SKIES

Who is the runner in the skies,
With her blowing scarf of stars,
And our Earth and sun hovering like bees about her blossoming heart?
Her feet are on the winds, where space is deep,
Her eyes are nebulous and veiled;
She hurries through the night to a far lover . . .

THE LINCOLN CHILD

Clearing in the forest,
 In the wild Kentucky forest,
 And the stars, wintry stars strewn above!
 O Night that is the starriest
 Since Earth began to roll—
 For a Soul
 Is born out of Love!
 Mother love, father love, love of Eternal God—
 Stars have pushed aside to let him through—
 Through heaven's sun-sown deeps
 One sparkling ray of God
 Strikes the clod—
 (And while an angel-host through wood and clearing sweeps!)
 Born in the wild
 The Child—
 Naked, ruddy, new,
 Wakes with the piteous human cry and at the mother-heart sleeps.

To the mother wild berries and honey,
 To the father awe without end,
 To the child a swaddling of flannel—
 And a dawn rolls sharp and sunny
 And the skies of winter bend
 To see the first sweet word penned
 In the godliest human annal.

Frail Mother of the Wilderness,
 How strange the world shines in
 And the cabin becomes chapel
 And the baby lies secure—
 Sweet Mother of the Wilderness,
 New worlds for you begin,
 You have tasted of the apple
 That giveth wisdom sure. . . .

Soon in the wide wilderness,
 On a branch blown over a creek,
 Up a trail of the wild coon,
 In a lair of the wild bee,
 The rugged boy, by danger's stress,
 Learnt the speech the wild things speak,
 Learnt the Earth's eternal tune
 Of strife-engendered harmony—
 Went to school where Life itself was master,
 Went to church where Earth was minister—
 And in Danger and Disaster
 Felt his future manhood stir!

All about him the land,
 Eastern cities, Western prairie,
 Wild, immeasurable, grand;
 But he was lost where blossomy boughs make airy
 Bowers in the forest, and the sand
 Makes brook-water a clear mirror that gives back
 Green branches and trunks black
 And clouds across the heavens lightly fanned.
 Yet all the Future dreams, eager to waken,
 Within that woodland soul—
 And the bough of boy has only to be shaken
 That the fruit drop whereby this Earth shall roll
 A little nearer God than ever before.
 Little recks he of war,
 Of national millions waiting on his word—
 Dreams still the Event unstirred
 In the heart of the boy, the little babe of the wild—
 But the years hurry and the tide of the sea
 Of Time flows fast and ebbs, and he, even he,
 Must leave the wilderness, the wood-haunts wild.
 Soon shall the cyclone of Humanity
 Tearing through Earth suck up this little child
 And whirl him to the top, where he shall be Riding the storm-column in the lightning-stroke,
 Calm at the peak, while down below worlds rage,
 And Earth goes out in blood and battle-smoke,
 And leaves him with the Sun—an epoch and an age!

And lo, as he grew ugly, gaunt,
 And gnarled his way into a man,
 What wisdom came to feed his want,
 What worlds came near to let him scan!
 And as he fathomed through and through
 Our dark and sorry human scheme,
 He knew what Shakespeare never knew,
 What Dante never dared to dream—
 That Men are one
 Beneath the sun,
 And before God are equal souls—
 This truth was his,
 And this it is
 That round him such a glory rolls—
 For not alone he knew it as a truth,
 He made it of his blood, and of his brain—
 He crowned it on the day when piteous Booth
 Sent a whole land to weeping with world pain—
 When a black cloud blotted the sun
 And men stopped in the streets to sob,
 To think Old Abe was dead.
 Dead, and the day's work still undone,
 Dead, and war's ruining heart athrob,

And earth with fields of carnage freshly spread—
 Millions died fighting,
 But in this man we mourned
 Those millions, and one other—
 And the States today uniting,
 North and South,
 East and West,
 Speak with a people's mouth
 A rhapsody of rest
 To him our beloved best,
 Our big, gaunt, homely brother—
 Our huge Atlantic coast-storm in a shawl,
 Our cyclone in a smile—our President,
 Who knew and loved us all
 With love more eloquent
 Than his own words—with Love that in real deeds was spent. . . .

O living God, O Thou who living art,
 And real, and near, draw, as at that babe's birth,
 Into our souls and sanctify our Earth—
 Let down Thy strength that we endure
 Mighty and pure
 As mothers and fathers of our own Lincoln-child—
 Make us more wise, more true, more strong, more mild,
 That we may day by day
 Rear this wild blossom through its soft petals of clay;
 That hour by hour
 We may endow it with more human power
 Than is our own—
 That it may reach the goal
 Our Lincoln long has shown!
 O Child, flesh of our flesh, bone of our bone,
 Soul torn from out our Soul!
 May you be great, and pure, and beautiful—
 A Soul to search this world
 To be a father, brother, comrade, son,
 A toiler powerful;
 A man whose toil is done
 One with God's Law above:
 Work wrought through Love!

NIGHT NOTE

A little moon was restless in Eternity
 And, shivering beneath the stars,
 Dropped in the hiding arms of the western hill.
 Night's discord ceased:
 The visible universe moved in an endless rhythm:
 The wheel of the heavens turned to the pulse of a cricket in the grass.

TASTING THE EARTH

In a dark hour, tasting the Earth.

As I lay on my couch in the muffled night, and the rain lashed my window,
 And my forsaken heart would give me no rest, no pause and no peace,
 Though I turned my face far from the wailing of my bereavement. . . .
 Then I said: I will eat of this sorrow to its last shred,
 I will take it unto me utterly,
 I will see if I be not strong enough to contain it. . . .
 What do I fear? Discomfort?
 How can it hurt me, this bitterness?

The miracle, then!
 Turning toward it, and giving up to it,
 I found it deeper than my own self. . . .
 O dark great mother-globe so close beneath me . . .
 It was she with her inexhaustible grief,
 Ages of blood-drenched jungles, and the smoking of craters, and the roar of tempests,
 And moan of the forsaken seas,
 It was she with the hills beginning to walk in the shapes of the dark-hearted animals,
 It was she risen, dashing away tears and praying to dumb skies, in the pompcrumblung tragedy of man . . .
 It was she, container of all griefs, and the buried dust of broken hearts,
 Cry of the christs and the lovers and the child-stripped mothers,
 And ambition gone down to defeat, and the battle overborne,
 And the dreams that have no waking. . . .

My heart became her ancient heart:
 On the food of the strong I fed, on dark strange life itself.
 Wisdom-giving and somber with the unremitting love of ages. . . .
 There was dank soil in my mouth,
 And bitter sea on my lips,
 In a dark hour, tasting the Earth.

H E B R E W S

I come of a mighty race . . . I come of a very mighty race . . .
 Adam was a mighty man, and Noah a captain of the moving waters,
 Moses was a stern and splendid king, yea, so was Moses . . .
 Give me more songs like David's to shake my throat to the pit of the belly,
 And let me roll in the Isaiah thunder . . .
 Ho! the mightiest of our young men was born under a star in midwinter . . .
 His name is written on the sun and it is frosted on the moon . . .
 Earth breathes him like an eternal spring; he is a second sky over the Earth.

Mighty race! mighty race!—my flesh, my flesh
 Is a cup of song,
 Is a well in Asia . . .

I go about with a dark heart where the Ages sit in a divine thunder . . .
 My blood is cymbal-clashed and the anklets of the dancers tinkle there . . .
 Harp and psaltery, harp and psaltery make drunk my spirit . . .
 I am of the terrible people, I am of the strange Hebrews . . .
 Amongst the swarms fixed like the rooted stars, my folk is a streaming Comet,
 The Wanderer of Eternity, the eternal Wandering Jew . . .

Ho! we have turned against the mightiest of our young men
 And in that denial we have taken on the Christ,
 And the two thieves beside the Christ,
 And the Magdalen at the feet of the Christ,
 And the Judas with thirty silver pieces selling the Christ,
 And our twenty centuries in Europe have the shape of a Cross
 On which we have hung in disaster and glory . . .

Mighty race! mighty race!—my flesh, my flesh
 Is a cup of song,
 Is a well in Asia.

Lola Ridge

LOLA RIDGE was born in Dublin, Ireland, leaving there in infancy and spending her childhood in Sydney, Australia. After living some years in New Zealand, she returned to Australia to study art. In 1907, she came to the United States, and supported herself for three years by writing fiction for popular magazines. She stopped this work only, as she says, "because I found I would have to do so if I wished to survive as an artist." For several years she earned her living in a variety of ways—as organizer for an educational movement, as advertisement writer, as illustrator, artist's model, factory-worker. In 1918, The New Republic published her long poem, "The Ghetto," and Miss Ridge, until then totally unknown, became the "discovery" of the year. She died in Brooklyn on May 19, 1941.

Her volume, The Ghetto and Other Poems (1918), contains one poem that is brilliant, several that are powerful, and none that is mediocre. The title-poem is its pinnacle; it is a poem of the city, of its sudden brutalities, its sudden beauties. Swift figures shine from these lines, like barbaric colors leaping out of darkness; images are surprising but never strained; confusion is given clarity. In the other poems—especially in "The Song of Iron," "Faces" and the poignant portrait "Marie"—the same dignity is maintained, though with somewhat less magic.

Sun-Up (1920) and Red Flag (1924) are less integrated, more frankly experimental. But the same vibrancy and restrained power that distinguished her first book are manifest here. Her delineations are sensitive, her phrases vivid yet natural. In spite of an overuse of similes, she accomplishes the maximum in effect with a minimum of effort.

Firehead (1929) is a narrative poem, the time and scene of which are the day of the Crucifixion. Making John, Peter and the two Marys interpret the significance of the event, Miss Ridge constructed a poem of depth and urgent penetration. If anything, the effort is too grandiose; the reader loses sight of the central figure in a bright cloud of metaphors. Phrases rise, not from the core of the tragedy, but from the prodded literary mind; the Passion is lost in a panorama. And yet there is a finality in Fuehead beyond the finality of phrase. Passages move in and out of the large design taking possession of the imagination, passages that are music visualized and "time made audible."

In Dance of Fue (1935) her gift of unusual but accurate image, her undeviating integrity, and her passion for social justice are fused and concentrated in the clean fire which she celebrates. Miss Ridge was a revolutionary in a technical as well as a spiritual sense; yet it is a curious thing that, whereas her first published work was wholly in free verse, Dance of Fue is cast almost entirely in regular patterns, the peak of the volume being the three-part section "Via Ignis," a series of twenty-eight sonnets. These sonnets reveal a discipline which makes them worthy to stand with the best sonnet cycles produced in this period.

P A S S A G E S F R O M " T H E G H E T T O "

Old Sodos no longer makes saddles.
 He has forgotten how . . .
 Time spins like a crazy dial in his brain,
 And night by night
 I see the love-gesture of his arm
 In its green-greasy coat-sleeve
 Circling the Book,
 And the candles gleaming starkly
 On the blotched-paper whiteness of his face,
 Like a miswritten psalm . . .
 Night by night
 I hear his lifted praise,
 Like a broken whinnying
 Before the Lord's shut gate.

Lights go out
 And the stark trunks of the factories
 Melt into the drawn darkness,
 Sheathing like a seamless garment.

And mothers take home their babies,
 Waxen and delicately curled,
 Like little potted flowers closed under the stars. . . .

Lights go out . . .
 And colors rush together,
 Fusing and floating away.
 Pale worn gold like the settings of old jewels . . .
 Mauve, exquisite, tremulous, and luminous purples,
 And burning spires in aureoles of light
 Like shimmering auras.
 They are covering up the pushcarts . . .

Now all have gone save an old man with mirrors—
 Little oval mirrors like tiny pools.
 He shuffles up a darkened street
 And the moon burnishes his mirrors till they shine like phosphorus. . . .
 The moon like a skull,
 Staring out of eyeless sockets at the old men trundling home the pushcarts.

A sallow dawn is in the sky
 As I enter my little green room.
 Without, the frail moon,
 Worn to a silvery tissue,
 Throws a faint glamor on the roofs,
 And down the shadowy spires
 Lights tip-toe out . . .
 Softly as when lovers close street doors.

Out of the Battery
 A little wind
 Stirs idly—as an arm
 Trails over a boat's side in dalliance—
 Rippling the smooth dead surface of the heat,
 And Hester Street,
 Like a forlorn woman over-borne
 By many babies at her teats,
 Turns on her trampled bed to meet the day.

FACES

A late snow beats
 With cold white fists upon the tenements—
 Hurriedly drawing blinds and shutters,
 Like tall old slatterns
 Pulling aprons about their heads.

Lights slanting out of Mott Street
 Gibber out,
 Or dribble through bar-room slits,
 Anonymous shapes
 Conniving behind shuttered panes
 Caper and disappear . . .
 Where the Bowery
 Is throbbing like a fistula
 Back of her ice-scabbed fronts.

Livid faces
 Glimmer in furtive doorways,
 Or spill out of the black pockets of alleys,
 Smears of faces like muddied beads,
 Making a ghastly rosary
 The night mumbles over

And the snow with its devilish and silken whisper . . .
 Patrolling arcs
 Blowing shrill blasts over the Bread Line
 Stalk them as they pass,
 Silent as though accouched of the darkness,
 And the wind noses among them,
 Like a skunk
 That roots about the heart . . .

Colder:
 And the Elevated slams upon the silence
 Like a ponderous door.
 Then all is still again,
 Save for the wind fumbling over
 The emptily swaying faces—
 The wind rummaging
 Like an old Jew . . .

Faces in glimmering rows . . .
 (No sign of the abject life—
 Not even a blasphemy . . .)
 But the spindle legs keep time
 To a limping rhythm,

And the shadows twitch upon the snow
Convulsively—
As though death played
With some ungainly dolls.

NEW ORLEANS

Do you remember
Honey-melon moon
Dripping thick sweet light
Where Canal Street saunters off by herself
among quiet trees?
And the faint decayed patchouli—
Fragrance of New Orleans . . .
New Orleans,
Like a dead tube rose
Upheld in the warm air . . .
Miraculously whole.

WIND IN THE ALLEYS

Wind, rising in the alleys,
My spirit lifts in you like a banner streaming free of hot walls.
You are full of unshaped dreams . . .
You are laden with beginnings . . .
There is hope in you . . . not sweet . . .
acrid as blood in the mouth.
Come into my tossing dust
Scattering the peace of old deaths,
Wind rising out of the alleys
Carrying stuff of flame.

MARIE

Marie's face is a weathered sign
To the palace of gliding cars
Over the bend where the trolley dips:
A dime for a wired rose,
Nickel-a-ride to the zig-zag stars,
And then men in elegant clothes,

That feed you on cardboard ships,
And the sea-floats so fine!—
Like a green and gorgeous bubble
God blew out of his lips.

When Marie carries down the stair
The ritual of her face,
Your greeting takes her unaware,
And her glance is timid-bold
As a dog's unsure of its place.
With that hair, of the rubbed-off gold
Of a wedding-ring worn to a thread,
In a halo about the head,
And those luminous eyes in their rims of paint,
She looks a bedizened saint.

But when the worn moon, like a face still beautiful,
Wavers above the Battery,
And light comes in, mauve-gray,
Squeezing through shutters of furnished rooms
Till only corners hold spots of darkness—
As a tablecloth its purple stains
When a festival is ended—
Then Marie creeps into the house.

The paint is lonesome on her cheek.
The paint is gone from off her mouth
That curls back loosely away from her teeth.
She pushes slackly at the dawn
That crawls upon the yellow blind,
And enters like an aimless moth
Whose dim wings hover and alight
Upon the blurred face of the clock,
Or on the pallor of her feet—
Or anything that's white.
Until dispersed upon the sheet,
All limp, her waxen body lies
In its delinquent grace,
Like a warm bent candle
That flares about its place.

APRIL OF OUR DESIRE

Is not this April of our brief desire
That stirs the robins to a twittering
But waste vibration of some vaster spring
Which moves the void to utterance. This fire
Once babbled on our hills (that have forgot
Their fiery accents) when the earth was cleft

And flooding in her canyons, raging hot,
Ere this intricate, fair design was left.

Long, long before strange creatures overhead
Cast wheeling shadows on the desert, wings
Flamed from out the mountains, radiant things,
That stood erect upon each blazing rim
Of horned horizons, shone like seraphim
And shook the earth with their enormous tread.

William Carlos Williams

WILLIAM CARLOS WILLIAMS was born September 17, 1883, in Rutherford, New Jersey, where he has lived and practiced medicine ever since. His father, William George Williams, was born in Birmingham, England; his father's mother's name was, curiously enough, Emily Dickinson. His mother, Raquel Ellen Rose Hoheb, was born in Mayaguez, Puerto Rico. Her mother, a Basque named Melina Hurrard, was born in Martinique; her father, Solomon Hoheb, of Dutch-Spanish-Jewish descent, was born in St. Thomas. This liberal mixture of bloods made Williams a complete melting-pot in himself; there are those who claim that the mingled strains fused logically into some of the most definitely American writing of the period.

Williams was educated at Horace Mann High School, New York, at Château de Lancy, near Geneva, Switzerland, and at the University of Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in medicine in 1906. There followed two years of internship in New York and a year of graduate study in pediatrics in Leipzig. In his twenty-third year he published the traditionally imitative first volume, Poems (1909), which was followed by The Tempers (1913), published in London and bearing the influence of Pound and his fellow-imaginists. Al Que Quiere (1917) strikes a more decisive experimental note; from the mocking directions for a funeral which Williams has entitled "Tract" to the extended suite called "January Morning" Williams achieves a purposeful distortion which intensifies his objects in sharp detail. Kora in Hell (1921) and Sour Grapes (1922) pay increasing attention to the "pure" value of physical things. Spring and All (1923) was followed by The Descent of Winter in which Williams alternated between exact description and an attempt to record the wavering outlines of the unconscious. At one moment Williams declared he was "sick of rime," but, almost immediately after, he concluded: "And we thought to escape rime / by imitation of the senseless / unarrangement of wild things—the stupidest rime of all." Those who have been quick to accuse Williams of disorganization have not examined the strong color and delicate movement of such poems as "Metric Figure," "Dawn," "Queen-Ann's-Lace," "Daisy," and the remarkable "Poem" beginning "By the road to the contagious hospital."

When the first Collected Poems appeared in 1934 Wallace Stevens wrote in the Preface: "The man has spent his life in rejecting the accepted sense of things. His passion for the anti-poetic is a blood passion and not a passion for the ink-pot. Something of the unreal is necessary to fecundate the real; something of the sentimental is necessary to fecundate the anti-poetic. . . . One might run through these pages and point out how often the essential poetry is the result of the conjunction of the unreal and the real, the sentimental and the anti-poetic, the constant interaction of two opposites." A few years later, in "A Note on Poetry," Williams replied to those who had attacked his poems for being bare in outline and violent in idiom. "The American writer," Williams began, "uses a language . . . which has been modified by time and the accidents of place to acquire a character differing greatly from that of present-day English. For the appreciation of American poetry it is necessary that the reader accept this language difference from the beginning."

The Complete Collected Poems 1906-1938 reveals with what increasing strength Williams has developed in the idiom of the United States. Although his lines rarely descend to slang, they are full of the conversational speech of the country; they express the brusque nervous tension, the vigor and rhetoric of American life. Even when they are purposely unadorned and non-melodic they intensify some common object with pointed detail and confident, if clipped, emotion. "Emotion," says Williams, "clusters about common things, the pathetic often stimulates the imagination to new patterns—but the job of the poet is to use language effectively, his own language, the only language which is to him authentic. In my own work it has always sufficed that the object of my attention be presented without further comment." Actually Williams' gamut is much greater than he implies. With characteristic growth he freed himself from Pound and the pretty escapism of the Imagists; some of the richest and most individualized free verse of the period can be found in "Flowers by the Sea," "The Poor," "The Yachts," and "These." Again and again Williams proves that everything in the world is the poet's material, and that the most tawdry objects have their use and beauty "if the imagination can lighten them."

The scope and quality of his work justify Williams' theory. His poems have grown simpler and more austere; his compositions are stricter in form, the colors are flat but fresh. This is evident even in the thirty-page pamphlet, The Broken Span (1941), which ranges from the early objective poetry of sheer sensation to a deep concern with the ordinary aspects of everyday life. His later work shows an observation especially sharp but rarely malicious, and a sympathy which is wide but never maudlin. More and more rigorously it tends to cut away all excessive decoration and place the stress upon the object itself. This later poetry, even when it remains a poetry of non-intellectual feeling, achieves a technique matching the wide-ranging curiosity. The fusion of content and design is so simple and, at the same time, so subtle that it often conceals the poet's mastery of his material.

Various prose works, notably the essays In the American Grain (1925), and the novels A Voyage to Pagany (1928), White Mule (1937), and In the Money (1940) mingle history and reappraisal, reportorial accuracy and creative imagination.

M E T R I C F I G U R E

There is a bird in the poplars—
It is the sun!
The leaves are little yellow fish
Swimming in the river;
The bird skims above them—

Day is on his wings.
Phoenix!
It is he that is making '
The great gleam among the poplars.
It is his singing
Outshines the noise
Of leaves clashing in the wind.

D A W N

Ecstatic bird songs pound the hollow vastness of the sky with metallic clinkings—
beating color up into it
at a far edge,—beating it, beating it with rising, triumphant ardor,— stirring it into warmth, quickening in it a spreading change,— bursting wildly against it as dividing the horizon, a heavy sun lifts himself—is lifted—bit by bit above the edge of things,—runs free at last out into the open—! lumbering glorified in full release upward—songs cease.

P O E M

By the road to the contagious hospital, under the surge of the blue mottled clouds driven from the northeast—cold wind. Beyond, the waste of broad, muddy fields, brown with dried weeds, standing and fallen,
patches of standing water,
the scattering of tall trees.

All along the road the reddish,
purplish, forked, upstanding, twiggy stuff of brushes and small trees with dead, brown leaves under them leafless vines—

Lifeless in appearance, sluggish, dazed spring approaches—

They enter the new world naked, cold, uncertain of all save that they enter. All about them the cold, familiar wind—

Now the grass, tomorrow
the stiff curl of wild-carrot leaf.

One by one objects are defined—
It quickens: clarity, outline of leaf,

But now the stark dignity of entrance— Still, the profound change has come upon them; rooted, they grip down and begin to awaken.

J A N U A R Y

Again I reply to the triple winds running chromatic fifths of derision outside my window:

Play louder.
You will not succeed. I am bound more to my sentences
the more you batter at me to follow you.

And the wind,
as before, fingers perfectly its derisive music.

Q U E E N - A N N ' S - L A C E

Her body is not so white as anemone petals nor so smooth—nor so remote a thing. It is a field of the wild carrot taking the field by force; the grass does not raise above it.
Here is no question of whiteness,
white as can be, with a purple mole
at the center of each flower.
Each flower is a hand's span of her whiteness. Wherever his hand has lain there is a tiny purple blemish. Each part is a blossom under his touch to which the fibers of her being stem one by one, each to its end, until the whole field is a white desire, empty, a single stem,

 a cluster, flower by flower,
 a pious wish to whiteness gone over—or nothing.

D A I S Y

The dayseye hugging the earth in August, ha! Spring is gone down in purple,
 weeds stand high in the corn,
 the rainbeaten furrow is clotted with sorrel and crabgrass, the branch is black under the heavy mass of the leaves—
 The sun is upon a slender green stem
 ribbed lengthwise.
 He lies on his back—
 it is a woman also—he regards his former majesty and
 round the yellow center, split and creviced and done into minute flowerheads, he sends out his twenty rays—a little and the wind is among them to grow cool there!

One turns the thing over in his hand and looks at it from the rear: brownedged, green and pointed scales
 armor his yellow.
 But turn and turn,
 the crisp petals remain
 brief, translucent, greenfastened, barely touching at the edges:

 blades of limpid seashell.

O N G A Y W A L L P A P E R

The green-blue ground is ruled with silver lines to say the sun is shining

And on this mural sea of grass or dreams lie flowers or baskets of desires

Heaven knows what they are between cerulean shapes laid regularly round

Mat roses and tridentate leaves of gold
 threes, threes and threes

Three roses and three stems the basket floating standing in the horns of blue

Repeated to the ceiling to the windows
 where the day

Blows in the scalloped curtains to the sound of rain.

T R A C T

I will teach you my townspeople
 how to perform a funeral—for you have it over a troop of artists—
 unless one should scour the world—
 you have the ground sense necessary.

See! the hearse leads.
 I begin with a design for a hearse.
 For Christ's sake not black—nor white either—and not polished!
 Let it be weathered—like a farm wagon—with gilt wheels (this could be applied fresh at small expense)
 or no wheels at all:
 a rough dray to drag over the ground.

Knock the glass out!
 My God—glass, my townspeople!
 For what purpose? Is it for the dead to look out or for us to see how well he is housed or to see the flowers or the lack of them—or what?
 To keep the rain and snow from him?
 He will have a heavier rain soon:
 pebbles and dirt and what not.
 Let there be no glass—
 and no upholstery! phew!
 and no little brass rollers and small easy wheels on the bottom—my townspeople what are you thinking of!

A rough plain hearse then with gilt wheels and no top at all.
 On this the coffin lies
 by its own weight.

No wreaths please—
 especially no hot-house flowers.
 Some common memento is better,
 something he prized and is known by:
 his old clothes—a few books perhaps—
 God knows what! You realize how we are about these things,
 my townspeople—
 something will be found—anything—even flowers if he had come to that.
 So much for the hearse.

For heaven's sake though see to the driver!
 Take off the silk hat! In fact that's no place at all for him up there unceremoniously
 dragging our friend out to his own dignity!
 Bring him down—bring him down!
 Low and inconspicuous! I'd not have him ride on the wagon at all—damn him—

the undertaker's understrapper!
 Let him hold the reins and walk at the side and inconspicuously too!

Then briefly as to yourselves:
 Walk behind—as they do in France,
 seventh class, or if you ride
 Hell take curtains! Go with some show of inconvenience; sit openly—to the weather as to grief.
 Or do you think you can shut grief in?
 What—from us? We who have perhaps nothing to lose? Share with us share with us—it will be money in your pockets.

Go now
 I think you are ready.

S M E L L

Oh strong ridged and deeply hollowed nose of mine! what will you not be smelling?
 What tactless asses we are, you and I, boney nose,
 always indiscriminate, always unashamed,
 and now it is the souring flowers of the bedraggled poplars: a festering pulp on the wet earth beneath them. With what deep thirst we quicken our desires to that rank odor of a passing springtime!
 Can you not be decent? Can you not reserve your ardors for something less unlovely? What girl will care for us, do you think, if we continue in these ways?
 Must you taste everything? Must you know everything?
 Must you have a part in everything?

A G O O D N I G H T

Go to sleep—though of course you will not—to tideless waves thundering slantwise against strong embankments, rattle and swish of spray dashed thirty feet high, caught by the lake wind, scattered and strewn broadcast in over the steady car rails! Sleep, sleep! Gulls' cries in a wind-gust broken by the wind; calculating wings set above
 the field of waves breaking.
 Go to sleep to the lunge between foam-crests, refuse churned in the recoil. Food! Food!
 Offal! Offal! that holds them in the air, wave-white for the one purpose, feather upon feather, the wild chill in their eyes, the hoarseness in their voices—sleep, sleep . . .

Gentlefooted crowds are treading out your lullaby.
Their arms nudge, they brush shoulders, hitch this way, then that, mass and surge at the crossings—
lullaby, lullaby! The wild-towl police whistles, the enraged roar of the traffic, machine shrieks:
it is all to put you to sleep,
to soften your limbs in relaxed postures,
and that your head slip sidewise, and your hair loosen
and fall over your eyes and over your mouth, brushing your lips wistfully that you may dream,
sleep and dream—

A black fungus springs out about lonely church doors—sleep, sleep. The Night, coming down upon the wet boulevard, would start you awake with his message, to have in at your window. Pay no heed to him. He storms at your sill with cooings, with gesticulations, curses!
You will not let him in He would keep you from sleeping.
He would have you sit under your desk lamp brooding, pondering; he would have you slide out the drawer, take up the ornamented dagger and handle it. It is late, it is nineteen-nineteen—go to sleep, his cries are a lullaby;
his jabbering is a sleep-well-my-baby; he is a crackbrained messenger.

The maid waking you in the morning
when you are up and dressing, the rustle of your clothes as you raise them—
it is the same tune.
At table the cold, greenish, split grapefruit, its juice on the tongue, the clink of the spoon in your coffee, the toast odors say it over and over.

The open street-door lets in the breath of the morning wind from over the lake.
The bus coming to a halt grinds from its sullen brakes—lullaby, lullaby. The crackle of a newspaper, the movement of the troubled coat beside you—
sleep, sleep, sleep . . .
It is the sting of snow, the burning liquor of the moonlight, the rush of rain in the gutters packed with dead leaves: go to sleep, go to sleep.
And the night passes—and never passes—

THE RED WHEELBARROW

so much depends upon a red wheel barrow

glazed with rain water

beside the white chickens

FLOWERS BY THE SEA

When over the flowery, sharp pasture's edge, unseen, the salt ocean

lifts its form—chicory and daisies tide, released, seem hardly flowers alone

but color and the movement—or the shape perhaps—of restlessness, whereas the sea is circled and sways peacefully upon its plantlike stem

THE POOR

It's the anarchy of poverty delights me, the old yellow wooden house indented
among the new brick tenements

Or a cast iron balcony with panels showing oak branches in full leaf. It fits the dress of the children

reflecting every stage and custom of necessity—
Chimneys, roofs, fences of wood and metal in an unfenced

age and enclosing next to nothing at all: the old man in a sweater and soft black hat who sweeps the sidewalk—

his own ten feet of it—in a wind that fitfully turning his corner has overwhelmed the entire city

THESE

are the desolate, dark weeks when nature in its barrenness equals the stupidity of man.

The year plunges into night and the heart plunges lower than night

to an empty, windswept place without sun, stars or moon but a peculiar light as of thought that spins a dark fire—

whirling upon itself until,
in the cold, it kindles

to make a man aware of nothing that he knows, not loneliness itself—Not a ghost but would be embraced—emptiness, despair—(They whine and whistle) among the flashes and booms of war;

 houses of whose rooms
 the cold is greater than can be thought,

the people gone that we loved,
 the beds lying empty, the couches damp, the chairs unused—

Hide it away somewhere out of the mind, let it get roots and grow, unrelated to jealous ears and eyes—for itself.
 In this mine they come to dig—all.
 Is this the counterfoil to sweetest music? The source of poetry that seeing the clock stopped, says,

 The clock has stopped

that ticked yesterday so well?
 and hears the sound of lakewater
 splashing—that is now stone.

ILLEGITIMATE THINGS

Water still flows—
 The thrush still sings

though in the skirts of the sky

at the bottom of the distance

huddle . . .
 . . . echoing cannon!

Whose silence revives valley after valley to peace

 as poems still conserve

the language of old ecstasies.

Sara Teasdale

SARA TEASDALE was born August 8, 1884, in St. Louis, Missouri, and educated there. After leaving school she traveled in Europe and the Near East. She was fascinated and frightened by the poet Vachel Lindsay who courted her with overwhelming exuberance. In 1914 she married Ernst Filsinger and, two years later, moved with him to New York. But she was essentially the solitary spirit pictured in her poem on page 318, and the marriage was not successful. After her divorce, she lived in seclusion, and ill health emphasized her unhappiness. She was found drowned in the bath of her New York apartment, January 28, 1933.

Her first book was a slight volume, Sonnets to Duse (1907), which gave little promise of the lyricism to follow. Helen of Troy and Other Poems (1911) contains hints of that delicate craftsmanship which this poet brought to such finesse. The six opening monologues are written in a blank verse as musical as many of her lyrics. At times her quatrains suffer from too conscious a cleverness; the dexterity with which Miss Teasdale turns a phrase or twists her last line is frequently too obtrusive to be unreservedly enjoyable. Moreover, they seem written in a mood of predetermined and too picturesque romance, the mood of languishing roses, silken balconies, moonlight on guitars, and abstract kisses for unreal Collins.

Rivers to the Sea (1915) emphasizes a new skill and a greater restraint. The volume contains at least a dozen unforgettable snatches, lyrics in which the words seem to fall into place without art or effort. Seldom employing metaphor or striking imagery, almost bare of ornament, these poems have the touch of folk-song. Theirs is an artlessness that is something more than art.

Love Songs (1917) is a collection of Miss Teasdale's previous melodies for the viola d'amore together with several in which the turns are no longer obviously unexpected. Maturity is evident in the poet's rejection of many of her facile stanzas and her choice of firmer material.

Flame and Shadow (1920; revised edition, published in England, in 1924) is the ripest of her books. Here the emotion is fuller and deeper; an almost mystic radiance plays from these verses. Technically, also, this volume marks Miss Teasdale's greatest advance. The words are chosen with a keener sense of their actual as well as their musical values; the rhythms are more subtle and varied; the line moves with a greater naturalness. Beneath the symbolism of poems like "Water-Lilies," "The Long Hill," and "Let It Be Forgotten," one is conscious of a finer artistry, a more flexible speech that is all the lovelier for its slight (and logical) irregularities.

After Flame and Shadow Miss Teasdale's theme became somewhat autumnal. Though never funeral, the songs are preoccupied with the coming of age, the gathering of night, the mutability of things. Dark of the Moon (1926) is more thoughtful than any other previous verse. It is, as the title indicates, even more somber. If the movement is slower it is a no less delicate music that moves under the surface rhythms. "Wisdom," "The Solitary," "The Flight" may not be the most popular poems that Miss Teasdale has written, but they must be numbered among her best. Hers is a disillusion without cynicism; her proud acceptance of life's darker aspects adds new dignity to the old lyricism.

Strange Victory (1933) is Sara Teasdale's posthumous memorial to a world she never quite despised yet never wholly trusted. The poems are sad yet not sentimental. Though death overshadows the book there is never the querulous cry of frustration nor the melodrama of dying. As in the later lyrics the lines are direct, the emotion unwhipped; the beauty is in the restraint, the careful selection, the compression into the essential spirit, into a last serenity. It is an irony that as her admirers grew less voluble her work increased in value.

Besides her own books, Miss Teasdale had compiled an anthology, The Answering Voice (1917), comprising one hundred love lyrics by women, and a collection for children, Rainbow Gold (1922).

NIGHT SONG AT AMALFI

I asked the heaven of stars
What I should give my love—
It answered me with silence,
Silence above.

I asked the darkened sea
Down where the fishermen go—
It answered me with silence,
Silence below.

Oh, I could give him weeping,
Or I could give him song—

But how can I give silence
My whole life long?

SPRING NIGHT

The park is filled with night and fog,
The veils are drawn about the world,
The drowsy lights along the paths
Are dim and pearly.

Gold and gleaming the empty streets,
Gold and gleaming the misty lake,
The mirrored lights like sunken swords,
Glimmer and shake.

Oh, is it not enough to be
 Here with this beauty over me?
 My throat should ache with praise, and I
 Should kneel in joy beneath the sky.
 O beauty, are you not enough?
 Why am I crying after love
 With youth, a singing voice, and eyes
 To take earth's wonder with surprise?

Why have I put off my pride,
 Why am I unsatisfied,—
 I, for whom the pensive night
 Binds her cloudy hair with light,—
 I, for whom all beauty burns
 Like incense in a million urns?
 O beauty, are you not enough?
 Why am I crying after love?

I SHALL NOT CARE

When I am dead and over me bright April
 Shakes out her rain-drenched hair,
 Though you should lean above me broken-hearted,
 I shall not care.

I shall have peace, as leafy trees are peaceful
 When rain bends down the bough;
 And I shall be more silent and cold-hearted
 Than you are now.

THE LONG HILL

I must have passed the crest a while ago
 And now I am going down—
 Strange to have crossed the crest and not to know,
 But the brambles were always catching the hem of my gown.

All the morning I thought how proud I should be
 To stand there straight as a queen,
 Wrapped in the wind and the sun with the world under me—
 But the air was dull, there was little I could have seen.

It was nearly level along the beaten track
 And the brambles caught in my gown—
 But it's no use now to think of turning back,
 The rest of the way will be only going down.

WATER-LILIES

If you have forgotten water-lilies floating
 On a dark lake among mountains in the afternoon shade,
 If you have forgotten their wet, sleepy fragrance,
 Then you can return and not be afraid.

But if you remember, then turn away forever
 To the plains and the prairies where pools are far apart,
 There you will not come at dusk on closing water-lilies,
 And the shadow of mountains will not fall on your heart.

LET IT BE FORGOTTEN

Let it be forgotten, as a flower is forgotten,
 Forgotten as a fire that once was singing gold,
 Let it be forgotten for ever and ever,
 Time is a kind friend, he will make us old.

If anyone asks, say it was forgotten
 Long and long ago,
 As a flower, as a fire, as a hushed footfall
 In a long-forgotten snow.

WISDOM

It was a night of early spring,
 The winter-sleep was scarcely broken;
 Around us shadows and the wind
 Listened for what was never spoken.

Though half a score of years are gone,
 Spring comes as sharply now as then—
 But if we had it all to do
 It would be done the same again.

It was a spring that never came;
 But we have lived enough to know
 That what we never have, remains;
 It is the things we have that go.

THE SOLITARY

My heart has grown rich with the passing of years,
 I have less need now than when I was young
 To share myself with every comer,
 Or shape my thoughts into words with my tongue.

It is one to me that they come or go
 If I have myself and the drive of my will,
 And strength to climb on a summer night
 And watch the stars swarm over the hill.

Let them think I love them more than I do,
 Let them think I care, though I go alone,
 If it lifts their pride, what is it to me,
 Who am self-complete as a flower or a stone?

THE CRYSTAL GAZER

I shall gather myself into myself again,
 I shall take my scattered selves and make them one.
 I shall fuse them into a polished crystal ball
 Where I can see the moon and the flashing sun.

I shall sit like a sibyl, hour after hour intent,
 Watching the future come and the present go—
 And the little shifting pictures of people rushing
 In tiny self-importance to and fro.

APPRAISAL

Never think she loves him wholly,
 Never believe her love is blind,
 All his faults are locked securely
 In a closet of her mind;
 All his indecisions folded
 Like old flags that time has faded,
 Limp and streaked with rain,
 And his cautiousness like garments
 Frayed and thin, with many a stain—
 Let them be, oh, let them be,
 There is treasure to outweigh them,
 His proud will that sharply stirred,
 Climbs as surely as the tide,
 Senses strained too taut to sleep,
 Gentleness to beast and bird,
 Humor flickering hushed and wide
 As the moon on moving water,

And a tenderness too deep
 To be gathered in a word.

ON THE SOUTH DOWNS

Over the downs there were birds flying,
 Far off glittered the sea,
 And toward the north the weald of Sussex
 Lay like a kingdom under me.

I was happier than the larks
 That nest on the downs and sing to the sky—
 Over the downs the birds flying
 Were not so happy as I.

It was not you, though you were near,
 Though you were good to hear and see;
 It was not earth, it was not heaven,
 It was myself that sang in me.

AUGUST NIGHT

On a midsummer night, on a night that was eerie with stars,
 In a wood too deep for a single star to look through,
 You led down a path whose turnings you knew in the darkness,
 But the scent of the dew-dripping cedars was all that I knew.

I drank of the darkness, I was fed with the honey of fragrance,
 I was glad of my life, the drawing of breath was sweet;
 I heard your voice, you said, "Look down, see the glow-worm!"
 It was there before me, a small star white at my feet.

We watched while it brightened as though it were breathed on and burning,
 This tiny creature moving over earth's floor—
 "L'amor che move il sole e l'altra stelle,"
 You said, and no more.

EFFIGY OF A NUN

(Sixteenth Century)

Infinite gentleness, infinite irony
 Are in this face with fast-sealed eyes,
 And round this mouth that learned in loneliness
 How useless their wisdom is to the wise.

In her nun's habit carved, patiently, lovingly,
 By one who knew the ways of womankind,
 This woman's face still keeps, in its cold wistful calm,
 All of the subtle pride of her mind.

These long patrician hands, clasping the crucifix,
 Show she had weighed the world, her will was set;
 These pale curved lips of hers, holding their hidden smile
 Once having made their choice, knew no regret.

She was of those who hoard their own thoughts carefully,
 Feeling them far too dear to give away,
 Content to look at life with the high, insolent
 Air of an audience watching a play.

If she was curious, if she was passionate
 She must have told herself that love was great,
 But that the lacking it might be as great a thing
 If she held fast to it, challenging fate.

She who so loved herself and her own warring thoughts,
 Watching their humorous, tragic rebound,
 In her thick habit's fold, sleeping, sleeping,
 Is she amused at dreams she has found?

Infinite tenderness, infinite irony
 Are hidden forever in her closed eyes,
 Who must have learned too well in her long loneliness
 How empty wisdom is, even to the wise.

THE FLIGHT

We are two eagles
 Flying together,
 Under the heavens,
 Over the mountains,
 Stretched on the wind.
 Sunlight heartens us,
 Blind snow baffles us,
 Clouds wheel after us,
 Raveled and thinned.

We are like eagles;
 But when Death harries us,
 Human and humbled
 When one of us goes,
 Let the other follow—
 Let the flight be ended,
 Let the fire blacken,
 Let the book close.

Elizabeth Madox Roberts

ELIZABETH MADOX ROBERTS was born in 1885, at Perryville, near Springfield, Kentucky, and attended the University of Chicago, where she received her Ph.B. in 1921. Except when obliged to travel for health or warmth, she lived in the Salt River country of Kentucky, twenty-eight miles from Harrodsburg, old Fort Harrod, the first settlement in the state. Suffering from anemia she died March 13, 1941.

As an undergraduate she won the local Fiske Prize with a group of poems which later appeared in Poetry: A Magazine of Verse. An amplification of these verses appeared as Under the Tree (1922) and critics were quick to recognize the unusually fresh accents in this first volume. Under the Tree spoke directly to the young, for it was written, not so much for children, but as a sensitive child might write. The observation is precise, the reflections are candidly clear, the humor delicate, never simpering or archly beribboned. Here is a simplicity which is straightforward without being shrill or mincing. The verse is graceful where grace commands the gesture, but Miss Roberts' unforced nauveté allows her to be gauche whenever awkwardness is natural.

After this volume Miss Roberts returned to her native state, and spent much of her time studying the archaic English speech still spoken in the remote parts of Kentucky. "Orpheus," although written later than her first book, is a highly interesting use of her early idiom, localizing as well as vitalizing the old myth. "Stranger" is more definitely indigenous; it has something of the flavor of the Lonesome Tunes collected by Howard Brockway and Loraine Wyman. Concerning this poem, Miss Roberts writes, "In these verses I have used material from the old ballads—or suggestions from them, material which may be found abundantly in Kentucky, together with modern syncopation and a refrain designed to call up banjo notes." "A Ballet Song of Mary," which won the John Reed Memorial Prize in Poetry (1928), is an "artificial" piece—using the adjective in the best sense—founded on ancient archaic words and uses. Here, as in her prose, Miss Roberts writes with an ear always tuned to local phrase and feeling.

In 1925 Miss Roberts turned to the prose for which she has been so widely celebrated. The Time of Man (1926), one of the most moving novels of the period, is an epic of the Appalachians in which every chapter has the effect of a poem. My Heart and My Flesh (1927), a darker and more difficult exploration, discloses less local and more universal regions of the spirit. Jingling in the Wind (1928) is a less successful experiment, a light farce which tries but fails to be a satire on industrial civilization. All three are characterized by a lyrical charm and an inscrutability which set Miss Roberts apart from the competent writers of easy fiction.

The Great Meadow (1930) is an exploration of the material uncovered in her first novel. Placed in the Kentucky meadow-lands against the heroic backgrounds of early American history, it is a pioneering panorama. Native to the least grass-blade, it is much more than a narrative of the soil; it is a widening saga of the men and women who imposed themselves and their pattern on the unshaped wilderness. Thus The Great Meadow acts both as the preparation for and the rich completion of The Time of Man. A novel He Sent Forth a Raven (1935) combines her early individual diction with the later restrained mysticism, a combination that is curiously lifting and intense.

THE SKY

I saw a shadow on the ground
And heard a bluejay going by;
A shadow went across the ground,
And I looked up and saw the sky.

It hung up on the poplar tree,
But while I looked it did not stay;
It gave a tiny sort of jerk
And moved a little bit away.

And farther on and farther on
It moved and never seemed to stop.
I think it must be tied with chains
And something pulls it from the top.

It never has come down again,
And every time I look to see,
The sky is always slipping back
And getting far away from me.

CHRISTMAS MORNING

If Bethlehem were here today,
Or this were very long ago,
There wouldn't be a winter time
Nor any cold or snow.

I'd run out through the garden gate,
And down along the pasture walk;
And off beside the cattle barns
I'd hear a kind of gentle talk.

I'd move the heavy iron chain
And pull away the wooden pin;
I'd push the door a little bit
And tiptoe very softly in.

The pigeons and the yellow hens
And all the cows would stand away;
Their eyes would open wide to see
A lady in the manger hay,
If this were very long ago
And Bethlehem were here today.

And Mother held my hand and smiled—
I mean the lady would—and she

Would take the woolly blankets off
Her little boy so I could see.

His shut-up eyes would be asleep,
And he would look just like our John,
And he would be all crumpled too,
And have a pinkish color on.

I'd watch his breath go in and out.
His little clothes would all be white.
I'd slip my finger in his hand
To feel how he could hold it tight.

And she would smile and say, "Take care
The mother, Mary, would, "Take care";
And I would kiss his little hand
And touch his hair.

While Mary put the blankets back
The gentle talk would soon begin.
And when I'd tiptoe softly out
I'd meet the wise men going in.

ORPHEUS

He could sing sweetly on a string.
He'd make the music curve around;
He'd make it tremble through the woods
And all the trees would leave the ground.

The tunes would walk on steps of air,
For in his hand a wire would sing;
The songs would fly like wild quick geese—
He could play sweetly on a string.

If Orpheus would come today,
Our trees would lean far out to hear,
And they would stretch limb after limb;
Then the ellum trees would leave the ground,
And the sycamores would follow him.

And the poplar tree and the locust tree
And the coffeeberry tree would come
And all the rows of osage thorns,
And then the little twisted plum.

He'd lead them off across the hill.
They'd flow like water toward his feet.
He'd walk through fields and turn in roads;
He'd bring them down our street.

And he'd go by the blacksmith shop,
And one would say, "Now who are these?—
I wonder who that fellow is,
And where he's going with the trees!"

"To the sawmill, likely," one would say,
"Oh, yes, the sawmill, I should think."
And then he'd cut the horse's hoof
And hammers would go clink and clink.

He could play sweetly on a wire.
And he would lean down near his lyre
To hear its songs unfold and wind,

And it would reach up toward his ear
To hear the music in his mind.

And when the road turned by the kiln,
Then Orpheus would happen to see
The little plum and the sycamore
And the poplar tree and the chinaberry tree,

And all the rows of osage thorns—
When he happened once to look—
He'd see them coming after him . . .
Three birches, and he'd see the oak.

And he would lead them back again.
He'd bring each one to its own ground.
He'd bring each to its growing-place
And set them back with sound and sound.

He'd fit them in with whispered chords,
And tap them down with humming words

STRANGER

When Polly lived back in the old deep woods,
Sing, sing, sing and howdy, howdy-o!
Nobody ever went by her door,
Tum a-tum tum and danky, danky-o!

Valentine worked all day in the brush,
He grubbed out stumps and he chopped with his ax,
He chopped a clear road up out of the branch;
Their wheels made all the tracks.

And all they could see out doors were the trees,
And all the night they could hear the wolves go;
But one cold time when the dark came on
A man's voice said, "Hello, there, hello!"

He stood away by the black oak tree
When they opened the door in the halfway light;
He stood away by the buttonwood stump,
And Valentine said, "Won't you stay all night?"

He sat by the fire and warmed his bones.
He had something hidden down deep in a sack,
And Polly watched close while she baked her pones;
He felt of it once when she turned her back—
Polly had a fear of his sack.

Nobody lived this way or there,
And the night came down and the woods came dark,
A thin man sat by the fire that night,
And the cabin pane was one red spark.

He took the something out of his sack,
 When the candle dimmed and the logs fell low,
 It was something dark, as Polly could see,
 Sing, sing, sing and howdy, howdy-o!

He held it up against his chest,
 And the logs came bright with a fresh new glow,
 And it was a fiddle that was on his breast,
 Tum tum-a tum and danky, danky-o!

He played one tune and one tune more;
 He played five tunes all in a long row.
 The logs never heard any songs before.
 Sing, sing, sing and howdy, howdy-o!

The tunes lay down like drowsy cats;
 They tumbled over rocks where the waterfalls go;
 They twinkled in the sun like little June gnats;
 Tum a-tum tum and danky dee-o!

The stumps stood back in Valentine's mind;
 The wolves went back so Polly couldn't see;
 She forgot how they howled and forgot how they whined.
 Tum tum a-tum and danky-dee!

The tunes flew by like wild quick geese,
 Sing, sing, sing and howdy howdy-o!
 And Polly said, "That's a right good piece."
 Tum tum tum and danky danky-o!
 Tum a-tum tum and danky dee-o!

A BALLET SONG OF MARY

Her smock was of the holland fine,
 Skunkled with colors three;
 Her shawl was of the velvet blue,
 The Queen of Galilee.

Her hair was yellow like the wax,
 Like the silken floss fine-spun;
 The girdle for her golden cloak
 Was all in gold bedone.

She sat her down in her own bower place
 And dressed herself her hair.
 Her gold kemb in her braid she laid,
 And a sound fell on the door.

He came within her own bower room
 "Hail, Mary, hail!" says he;
 "A goodly grace is on your head,
 For the Lord is now with thee."

She folded down her little white hands
 When Gabriel spoke again.
 She set her shawl, the corners right, •
 For ceremony then.

"And the God will overshadow thee
 And bring a holy sweten.
 Fear not, fear not," then Gabriel said,
 "It's the God of the good high heaven.

"And what must be born it will heal the sick;
 It will make a goodly lear;
 It will fettle men for christentie
 And to keep holy gear."

Then up then rose this little maid
 When Gabriel's word was said,
 And out of the bower she ran in haste,
 And out of the hall she is sped.

She is running far to Zachary's house—
 "Is this the way?" says she.

"A little maid in haste," they said,
"Has gone to the hills of Judge."

And what will be born it will ope their eyes;
It will hearten men in their stear;
It will fettle men for christentie
And to have holy gear.

It will scourge with a thong when those make gain
Where a humble man should be;
It will cast the witches from out of his saule
And drown them into the sea.

It will give men drink from the horn of the wind,
And give men meat from the song of a bird;
Their cloak they will get from the sheen of the grass,
And a roof from a singin' word.

And when they come to the Brig o' Dread,
And they cry, "I fall! I'm afar!"
It will close their eyes and give them sleep
To heal them outen their lonesome cheer,
When they come to the Brig o' Dread.

WOODCOCK OF THE IVORY BEAK

Bough of the plane tree, where is the clear-beaked bird
That was promised? When I walked here, now, I heard
A swift cry in my own voice lifted in laughter—absurd
Mock at a crow—crying under the glee-wrung word, Saying, "Where?" Saying, "When?" Saying, "Will it be? Here?
The woodcock of the ivory bill? Will it be? Where?"

Old winds that blew deep chaos down through the valley,
Moan-haunted, sob-tosèd, shudder and shackle, rout and rally,
Where? Did you toss a feather and bend plume a cold May early Morning, when the ivory bill shone, song lifted, pearly
Clear on the rose-stippled, blue-shadowed trunk of the plane tree?
Oh, woodcock of the ivory beak, I came here to see . . .

Elinor Wylie

ELINOR (HOYT) WYLIE was born September 7, 1885, in Somerville, New Jersey, but she was, as she often protested, of pure Pennsylvania stock. The family was a literary one and it was soon evident that Elinor, the first born, was a prodigy. The facts of her life, if not the inner conflicts and personal sufferings, have been recorded by Nancy Hoyt, her younger sister, in Elinor Wylie: The Portrait of an Unknown Woman (1935), and, though the biography might have been fuller and franker without diminishing the poet's stature, it is invaluable source material. On both sides Elinor Wylie traced her ancestry back through old American families. A grandfather was Governor of Pennsylvania; her father, at the age of thirty-six, was Assistant Attorney-General under McKinley, later Solicitor General during Theodore Roosevelt's administration.

Elinor Hoyt's youth was spent in Washington, D. C. At eighteen she attended a life-class at the Corcoran Museum of Art, composing poems in secret, and wavering between painting and writing as a possible career. Shortly after her "coming-out party" there was a youthful romance and, disappointed because it was inconclusive, Elinor "rushed off and, without the knowledge of her parents, became engaged to a nice-looking and well-born young suitor with a bad temper," Philip Hichborn, son of an admiral. A son was born of the union, but the marriage was an unhappy one. Three years after, when scarcely twenty-four, she eloped with Horace Wylie, unable to obtain a divorce, disrupting the social circles in which she had conducted herself so primly. Elinor and Horace Wylie lived in England, where they were married some years later, until the World War forced them to return to America. It was in England that her first work was published, a tiny book of forty-three pages entitled Incidental Numbers (1912), privately printed and unsigned. It is a tentative collection and Elinor was so sensitive about its "incredible immaturity" that she pleaded with the few who knew of its existence never to refer to it until after her death. But she had no reason to be ashamed of it. ("I think the juvenilia superior to the rest," she wrote to the editor many years later.) Much of it is manifestly immature, since most of it was written in her early twenties and the rest was the product of her teens. Yet her characteristic touch—the firm thought matched by the firmly molded line—is already suggested, especially in such poems as "The Knight Fallen on Evil Days," anticipating the later beautifully knit sonnets, and "Pegasus Lost," a strangely ironic fantasy written at seventeen.

She returned to America in the summer of 1916, and lived in Boston and in Mount Desert, Maine. Her poems began to appear in the magazines; she moved to Washington, where she met various friends of her brother Henry, including William Rose Benét. In 1921 her first "real" volume, Nets to Catch the Wind, appeared. Three years later she was a famous person, the author of two volumes of poems and an extraordinary first novel (Jennifer Loin), married to William Rose Benét, and part of the literary life of New York.

Nets to Catch the Wind impresses immediately because of its brilliance. The brilliance is one which, at first, seems to sparkle without burning. In several of the poems the author achieves a frigid ecstasy; emotion is not absent from her lines, but too frequently it seems a passion frozen at its source. It is the brilliance of moonlight coruscating on a plain of ice. But if Mrs. Wylie seldom allows her verses to grow agitated, she never permits them to remain dull. As a technician, she is always admirable; in "August" the sense of heat is conveyed by tropic luxuriance and contrast; in "The Eagle and the Mole" she lifts didacticism to a proud level. Her auditory effects are scarcely less remarkable; never has snow-silence been more unerringly communicated than in "Velvet Shoes."

Black Armour (1923) exhibits Mrs. Wylie's keenness against a mellower background. The beauty evoked in this volume no longer has "the hard heart of a child." The intellect has grown more fiery, the mood has grown warmer, and the craftsmanship is more dazzling than ever. This devotee of severe elegance has perfected an accent which is clipped and patrician; she varies the perfect modulation with rhymes that are delightfully acrid and unique departures which never fail of success. Mrs. Wylie, it is evident from the very titles of her volumes, had read the metaphysicians; Donne, Webster, and Eliot found a voice in her lines. She felt

"behind a carnal mesh,
The clean bones crying in the flesh."

Possibly the most obvious and arresting feature of her work is the variety of her gifts. She reached from the nimble dexterity of a rondo like "Peregrine" to the introspective poignance of "Self Portrait," from the fanciful "Escape" to the grave mockery of "Let No Charitable Hope." But a greater unfoldment was to come.

Trivial Breath (1928) is the work of a poet in transition. At times the craftsman is uppermost; at times the creative genius. A preoccupation with her material obscures the half-uttered wisdom. Many of the verses, steeped in literature, pay homage to the letter; a smaller number, less absorbed in shaping an immaculate phrase, do reverence to the spirit. Mrs. Wylie recognized the danger of her own exquisiteness, of a style where elegance was too often a richly embroidered cloak draped upon a neat triviality. In "Minotaur" she admonished herself:

Go study to disdain
The frail, the overfine
That tapers to a line
Knotted about the brain.

Her distrust of the "overfine" deepened; she became more influenced by the fiery spirit of Shelley; her prose grew less mannered and more searching; her poetry attained a new richness. While in England during the summer of 1928 she wrote, with almost breathless haste but with calm certainty, the verses which compose her posthumous volume. In the autumn she returned to America; suffering from high blood pressure and partial paralysis, she began to arrange her final work. The day before she died she decided on the order of the poems, affixed the motto from Donne, and got the manuscript ready for the printer. She died December 16, 1928.

Angels and Earthly Creatures (1929) is the sublimation of all her gifts. Here are the cunningly poised and polished syllables, here are the old concerns with freezing silvers, frail china, and pearly monotones, but here is a quality which lifts them high above themselves. Still indebted to the Jacobean metaphysicians, the poet transcends her influences and develops a highly personal mysticism. To say that her emotion is governed and disciplined is not to say that Angels and Earthly Creatures suffers from a lack of emotion. On the contrary, the sequence of nineteen sonnets has the spontaneity of a passionate improvisation, of something close to abandonment. The other poems share this intensity. "This Corruptible" is both visionary and philosophic; "O Virtuous Light" deals with that piercing clarity, the intuition which disturbs the senses, threatens reason and, "begotten of itself," unreconciled to ordinary experience, is "not a light by which to live." The other poems are scarcely less uplifted, finding their summit in "Hymn to Earth," which is possibly the deepest of her poems and one which is certain to endure. It was, as it happened, a clear premonition; it remains a noble valedictory. She could go no further. She had perfected her technique; without discarding her idiom, her spirit reached toward a final expression. She had suddenly attained the emotional stature of a great poet.

A sumptuous Collected Poems of Elinor Wylie was published in 1932, containing, with the exception of the booklet issued in England, her four books of poems as well as a section of forty-eight poems hitherto uncollected. Some of the posthumous verse had never seen print; others published in magazines—notably "Golden Bough" and "The Pebble"—may be ranked among the poet's ripest utterances. "The Pebble" is significant not only as a fine piece of craftsmanship but as a revealing bit of spiritual autobiography.

Though more mannered than her verse, her prose was scarcely less accomplished. Jennifer Lorn (1923), subtitled "A Sedate Extravaganza," The Venetian Glass Nephew (1925), and The Orphan Angel (1926) adroitly juggle a harlequin style, even when it is least appropriate to the matter. Mr. Hodge and Mr. Hazard is a somewhat more serious and ironic allegory. Differing widely from each other in plot, ranging from macabre artifice to an apocryphal legend of Shelley redivivus in America, the manipulation of these novels is always deft and the iridescent phrasing is the product of an unusually "jeweled" brain. An omnibus volume Collected Prose of Elinor Wylie (1933) includes the four novels besides ten uncollected short stories and essays introduced by William Rose Benét in the section "Fugitive Prose." Although one must admire the fine-spun filigree of Jennifer Lorn and the delicate diablerie of The Venetian Glass Nephew, even the height of her prose cannot match the peaks attained by such poems as "This Corruptible," "Hymn to Earth" and "O Virtuous Light."

For it was as a poet that Elinor Wylie was most at home in the world, and it is as a poet that she will be remembered. Whether she spins a web of words to catch an elusive whimsicality, or satirizes herself, or plunges from the fragmentary to the profound, every line bears her authentic stamp. The intellectual versatility is eventually reenforced by spiritual strength, insuring permanence to work which "preserves a shape utterly its own."

THE EAGLE AND THE MOLE

Avoid the recking herd,
Shun the polluted flock,
Live like that stoic bird,
The eagle of the rock.

The huddled warmth of crowds
Begets and fosters hate;
He keeps, above the clouds,
His cliff inviolate.

When flocks are folded warm,
And herds to shelter run,
He sails above the storm,
He stares into the sun.

If in the eagle's track
Your sinews cannot leap,
Avoid the lathered pack,
Turn from the steaming sheep.

If you would keep your soul
From spotted sight or sound,
Live like the velvet mole;
Go burrow underground.

And there hold intercourse
With roots of trees and stones,
With rivers at their source,
And disembodied bones.

THE KNIGHT FALLEN ON EVIL DAYS

God send the Devil is a gentleman,
Else had I none amongst mine enemies!
O what uncouth and cruel times are these
In which the unlettered Boor and Artisan,
The snarling Priest and smirking Lawyer can
Spit filthy enmity at whom they please—
At one, returned from spilling overseas
The Princely blood of foes Olympian.

Apothecaries curse me, who of late
 Was cursed by Kings for slaughtering French lords!
 Friendless and loverless is my estate,
 Yet God be praised that Hell at least affords
 An adversary worthy of my hate,
 With whom the Angels deigned to measure swords!

PEGASUS LOST

And there I found a gray and ancient ass,
 With dull glazed stare, and stubborn wrinkled smile,
 Sardonic, mocking my wide-eyed amaze.
 A clumsy hulking form in that white place
 At odds with the small stable, cleanly, Greek,
 The marble manger and the golden oats.
 With loathing hands I felt the ass's side,
 Solidly real and hairy to the touch.
 Then knew I that I dreamed not, but saw truth;
 And knowing, wished I still might hope I dreamed.
 The door stood wide, I went into the air.
 The day was blue and filled with rushing wind,
 A day to ride high in the heavens and taste
 The glory of the gods who tread the stars.
 Up in the mighty purity I saw
 A flashing shape that gladly sprang aloft—
 My little Pegasus, like a far white bird
 Seeking sun-regions, never to return.
 Silently then I turned my steps about,
 Entered the stable, saddled the slow ass;
 Then on its back I journeyed dustily
 Between sun-wilted hedgerows into town.

MADMAN'S SONG

Better to see your cheek grown hollow,
 Better to see your temple worn,
 Than to forget to follow, follow,
 After the sound of a silver horn.

Better to bind your brow with willow
 And follow, follow until you die,
 Than to sleep with your head on a golden pillow,
 Nor lift it up when the hunt goes by.

Better to see your cheek grown sallow
 And your hair grown gray, so soon, so soon,
 Than to forget to hallo, hallo,
 After the milk-white hounds of the moon.

S A N C T U A R Y

This is the bricklayer; hear the thud
 Of his heavy load dumped down on stone.
 His lustrous bricks are brighter than blood,
 His smoking mortar whiter than bone.

Set each sharp-edged, fire-bitten brick
 Straight by the plumb-line's shivering length;
 Make my marvelous wall so thick
 Dead nor living may shake its strength.

Full as a crystal cup with drink
 Is my cell with dreams, and quiet, and cool. . . .
 Stop, old man! You must leave a chink;
 How can I breathe? You can't, you fool!

V E L V E T S H O E S

Let us walk in the white snow
 In a soundless space;
 With footsteps quiet and slow,
 At a tranquil pace,
 Under veils of white lace.

I shall go shod in silk,
 And you in wool,
 White as a white cow's milk,
 More beautiful
 Than the breast of a gull.

We shall walk through the still town
 In a windless peace;
 We shall step upon white down,
 Upon silver fleece,
 Upon softer than these.

We shall walk in velvet shoes:
 Wherever we go . . .

Silence will fall like dews
 On white silence below.
 We shall walk in the snow.

E S C A P E

When foxes eat the last gold grape,
 And the last white antelope is killed,
 I shall stop fighting and escape
 Into a little house I'll build.

But first I'll shrink to fairy size,
 With a whisper no one understands,
 Making blind moons of all your eyes,
 And muddy roads of all your hands.

And you may grope for me in vain
 In hollows under the mangrove root,
 Or where, in apple-scented rain,
 The silver wasp-nests hang like fruit.

G O L D E N B O U G H

These lovely groves of fountain-trees that shake
 A burning spray against autumnal cool,
 Descend again in molten drops to make
 The rutted path a river and a pool.

They rise in silence, fall in quietude,
 Lie still as looking-glass to every sense;
 Only their lion-color in the wood
 Roars to miraculous heat and turbulence.

AUGUST

Why should this Negro insolently stride
 Down the red noonday on such noiseless feet?
 Piled in his barrow, tawnier than wheat,
 Lie heaps of smoldering daisies, somber-eyed,
 Their copper petals shriveled up with pride,
 Hot with a superfluity of heat,
 Like a great brazier borne along the street
 By captive leopards, black and burning pied.

Are there no water-lilies, smooth as cream,
 With long stems dripping crystal? Are there none
 Like those white lilies, luminous and cool,
 Plucked from some hemlock-darkened northern stream
 By fair-haired swimmers, diving where the sun
 Scarce warms the surface of the deepest pool?

PURITAN SONNET

Down to the Puritan marrow of my bones
 There's something in this richness that I hate.
 I love the look, austere, immaculate,
 Of landscapes drawn in pearly monotones.
 There's something in my very blood that owns
 Bare hills, cold silver on a sky of slate,
 A thread of water, churned to milky spate
 Streaming through slanted pastures fenced with stones.

I love those skies, thin blue or snowy gray,
 Those fields sparse-planted, rendering meager sheaves;
 That spring, briefer than apple-blossom's breath,
 Summer, so much too beautiful to stay,
 Swift autumn, like a bonfire of leaves,
 And sleepy winter, like the sleep of death.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR

My body is weary to death of my mischievous brain;
 I am weary forever and ever of being brave;
 Therefore I crouch on my knees while the cool white rain
 Curves the clover over my head like a wave.

The stem and the frosty seed of the grass are ripe;
 I have devoured their strength; I have drunk them deep;
 And the dandelion is gall in a thin green pipe,
 But the clover is honey and sun and the smell of sleep.

LET NO CHARITABLE HOPE

Now let no charitable hope
 Confuse my mind with images
 Of eagle and of antelope;
 I am in nature none of these.

I was, being human, born alone;
 I am, being woman, hard beset;
 I live by squeezing from a stone
 The little nourishment I get.

In masks outrageous and austere
 The years go by in single file;
 But none has merited my fear,
 And none has quite escaped my smile.

CONFESSION OF FAITH

I lack the braver mind
 That dares to find
 The lover friend, and kind.

I fear him to the bone;
 I lie alone
 By the beloved one,

And, breathless for suspense,
 Erect defense
 Against love's violence

Whose silences portend
 A bloody end
 For lover never friend.

But, in default of faith,
 In futile breath,
 I dream no ill of Death.

“DESOLATION IS A DELICATE THING”

Sorrow lay upon my breast more heavily than winter clay
 Lying ponderable upon the unmoving bosom of the dead;
 Yet it was dissolved like a thin snowfall; it was softly withered away;
 Presently like a single drop of dew it had trembled and fled.

This sorrow, which seemed heavier than a shovelful of loam,
 Was gone like water, like a web of delicate frost;
 It was silent and vanishing like smoke; it was scattered like foam;
 Though my mind should desire to preserve it, nevertheless it is lost.

This sorrow was not like sorrow; it was shining and brief;
 Even as I waked and was aware of its going, it was past and gone;
 It was not earth; it was no more than a light leaf,
 Or a snowflake in spring, which perishes upon stone.

This sorrow was small and vulnerable and short-lived;
 It was neither earth nor stone; it was silver snow
 Fallen from heaven, perhaps; it has not survived
 An hour of the sun; it is sad it should be so.

This sorrow, which I believed a gravestone over my heart,
 Is gone like a cloud; it eluded me as I woke;
 Its crystal dust is suddenly broken and blown apart;
 It was not my heart; it was this poor sorrow alone which broke.

PETER AND JOHN

Twelve good friends
 Walked under the leaves
 Binding the ends
 Of the barley sheaves.

Peter and John
 Lay down to sleep
 Pillowed upon
 A haymaker's heap.

John and Peter
 Lay down to dream.
 The air was sweeter
 Than honey and cream.

Peter was bred
 In the salty cold.
 His hair was red
 And his eyes were gold.

John had a mouth
 Like a wing bent down.
 His brow was smooth
 And his eyes were brown.

Peter to slumber
 Sank like a stone,
 Of all their number
 The bravest one.

John more slowly
 Composed himself,
 Young and holy
 Among the Twelve.

John as he slept
 Cried out in grief,
 Turned and wept
 On the golden leaf:

“Peter, Peter,
 Stretch me your hand
 Across the glitter
 Of the harvest land!

“Peter, Peter,
 Give me a sign!
 This was a bitter
 Dream of mine,—

“Bitter as aloes
 It parched my tongue.
 Upon the gallows
 My life was hung.

“Sharp it seemed
 As a bloody sword.
 Peter, I dreamed
 I was Christ the Lord!”

Peter turned To holy Saint John:
 His body burned
 In the falling sun.

In the falling sun
 He burned like flame:
 “John, Saint John,
 I have dreamed the same!

"My bones were hung
On an elder tree;
Bells were rung
Over Galilee.

"A silver penny
Sealed each of my eyes.
Many and many
A cock crew thrice."

When Peter's word
Was spoken and done,
"Were you Christ the Lord
In your dream?" said John.

"No," said the other,
"That I was not.
I was our brother
Iscariot."

FULL MOON

My bands of silk and miniver
Momently grew heavier;
The black gauze was beggarly thin;
The ermine muffled mouth and chin;
I could not suck the moonlight in.

Harlequin in lozenges
Of love and hate, I walked in these
Striped and ragged rigmaroles;
Along the pavement my footsoles
Trod warily on living coals.

Shouldering the thoughts I loathed,
In their corrupt disguises clothed,
Mortality I could not tear
From my ribs, to leave them bare
Ivory in silver air.

There I walked and there I raged;
The spiritual savage caged
Within my skeleton, raged afresh
To feel, behind a carnal mesh,
The clean bones crying in the flesh.

EPI TAPH

For this she starred her eyes with salt
And scooped her temples thin,
Until her face shone pure of fault
From the forehead to the chin.

In coldest crucible of pain
Her shrinking flesh was fired
And smoothed into a finer grain
To make it more desired.

Pain left her lips more clear than glass;
It colored and cooled her hand.
She lay a field of scented grass
Yielded as pasture land.

For this her loveliness was curved
And carved as silver is:
For this she was brave: but she deserved
A better grave than this.

BIRTHDAY SONNET

Take home Thy prodigal child, O Lord of Hosts!
Protect the sacred from the secular danger;
Advise her, that Thou never needst avenge her;
Marry her mind neither to man's nor ghost's
Nor holier domination's, if the costs
Of such commingling should transport or change her;
Defend her from familiar and stranger,
And earth's and air's contagions and rusts.

Instruct her strictly to preserve Thy gift
And alter not its grain in atom sort;
Angels may wed her to their ultimate hurt
And men embrace a specter in a shift
So that no drop of the pure spirit fall
Into the dust: defend Thy prodigal.

O VIRTUOUS LIGHT

A private madness has prevailed
Over the pure and valiant mind;
The instrument of reason failed
And the star-gazing eyes struck blind.

Sudden excess of light has wrought
Confusion in the secret place
Where the slow miracles of thought
Take shape through patience into grace.

Mysterious as steel and flint
The birth of this destructive spark
Whose inward growth has power to print
Strange suns upon the natural dark.

O break the walls of sense in half
And make the spirit fugitive!
This light begotten of itself
Is not a light by which to live!

The fire of farthing tallow dips
Dispels the menace of the skies
So it illuminate the lips
And enter the discerning eyes.

O virtuous light, if thou be man's
Or matter of the meteor stone,
Prevail against this radiance
Which is engendered of its own!

THE PEBBLE

If any have a stone to shy,
Let him be David and not I;
The lovely shepherd, brave and vain,
Who has a maggot in the brain,
Which, since the brain is bold and pliant,
Takes the proportions of a giant.
Alas, my legendary fate!
Who sometimes rage, but never hate.
Long, long before the pebble fieth
I see a virtue in Goliath;

Yea, in the Philistine his face,
A touching majesty and grace;
Then like the lights of evening shine
The features of the Philistine
Until my spirit faints to see
The beauty of my enemy.
If any have a stone to sling
Let him be a shepherd-king,
Who is himself so beautiful
He may detest the gross and dull
With holy rage and heavenly pride
To make a pebble sanctified
And feather its course with wings of scorn.
But, from the day that I was born
Until like corn I bow to the sickle,
I am in hatred false and sickle.
I am most cruel to anyone
Who hates me with devotion;
I will not freeze, I will not burn;
I make his heart a poor return
For all the passion that he spends
In swearing we shall never be friends;
For all the pains his passion spent
In hatred I am impotent;
The sad perversity of my mind
Sees in him my kin and kind.
Alas, my shameful heritage,
False in hate and sickle in rage!
Alas, to lack the power to loathe!
I like them each; I love them both;
Philistine and shepherd-king
They strike the pebble from my sling;
My heart grows cold, my spirit grows faint;
Behold, a hero and a saint
Where appeared, a moment since,
A giant and a heathen prince;
And I am bound and given over
To be no better than a lover,
Alas, who strove as a holy rebel!
They have broke my sling and stole my pebble:
If any have a stone to throw
It is not I, ever or now.

SONNET FROM "ONE PERSON"

I hereby swear that to uphold your house
I would lay my bones in quick destroying lime
Or turn my flesh to timber for all time;
Cut down my womanhood; lop off the boughs

Of that perpetual ecstasy that grows
 From the heart's core; condemn it as a crime
 If it be broader than a beam, or climb
 Above the stature that your roof allows.

I am not the hearthstone nor the cornerstone
 Within this noble fabric you have builded;
 Not by my beauty was its cornice gilded;
 Not on my courage were its arches thrown:
 My lord, adjudge my strength, and set me where
 I bear a little more than I can bear.

THIS CORRUPTIBLE

The Body, long oppressed
 And pierced, then prayed for rest
 (Being but apprenticed to the other Powers);
 And kneeling in that place
 Implored the thrust of grace
 Which makes the dust lie level with the flowers.

Then did that fellowship
 Of three, the Body strip;
 Beheld his wounds, and none among them mortal;
 The Mind severe and cool;
 The Heart still half a fool;
 The fine-spun Soul, a beam of sun can startle.

These three, a thousand years
 Had made adventurers
 Amid all villainies the earth can offer,
 Applied them to resolve
 From the universal gulph
 What pangs the poor material flesh may suffer.

"This is a pretty pass;
 To hear the growing grass
 Complain; the clay cry out to be translated;
 Will not this grosser stuff
 Receive reward enough
 If stabled after laboring, and baited?"

Thus spoke the Mind in scorn.
 The Heart, which had outworn
 The Body, and was weary of its fashion,
 Preferring to be dressed
 In skin of bird or beast,
 Replied more softly, in a feigned compassion.

"Anatomy most strange
 Crying to chop and change;

Inferior copy of a higher image;
 While I, the noble guest,
 Sick of your second-best
 Sigh for embroidered archangelic plumage:

“For shame, thou fustian cloak!”
 And then the Spirit spoke;
 Within the void it swung securely tethered
 By strings composed of cloud;
 It spoke both low and loud
 Above a storm no lesser star had weathered.

“O lodging for the night!
 O house of my delight!
 O lovely hovel builded for my pleasure!
 Dear tenement of clay
 Endure another day
 As coffin sweetly fitted to my measure.

“Take Heart and call to Mind
 Although we are unkind;
 Although we steal your shelter, strength, and clothing;
 ’Tis you who shall escape
 In some enchanting shape
 Or be dissolved to elemental nothing.

“You, the unlucky slave,
 Are the lily on the grave;
 The wave that runs above the bones a-whitening;
 You are the new-mown grass;
 And the wheaten bread of the Mass;
 And the fabric of the rain, and the lightning.

“If one of us elect
 To leave the poor suspect
 Imperfect bosom of the earth our parent;
 And from the world avert
 The Spirit of the Heart
 Upon a further and essential errand;

“His chain he cannot slough
 Nor cast his substance off;
 He bears himself upon his flying shoulder;
 The Heart, infirm and dull;
 The Mind, in any skull;
 Are captive still, and wearier and colder.

“ ’Tis you who are the ghost,
 Disintegrated, lost;
 The burden shed; the dead who need not bear it;
 O grain of God in power,
 Endure another hour!
 It is but for an hour,” said the Spirit.

HYMN TO EARTH

Farewell, incomparable element,
 Whence man arose, where he shall not return;
 And hail, imperfect urn
 Of his last ashes, and his firstborn fruit;
 Farewell, the long pursuit,
 And all the adventures of his discontent;
 The voyages which sent
 His heart averse from home:
 Metal of clay, permit him that he come
 To thy slow-burning fire as to a hearth;
 Accept him as a particle of earth.

Fire, being divided from the other three,
 It lives removed, or secret at the core;
 Most subtle of the four,
 When air flies not, nor water flows,
 It disembodied goes,
 Being light, elixir of the first decree,
 More volatile than he;
 With strength and power to pass
 Through space, where never his least atom was:
 He has no part in it, save as his eyes
 Have drawn its emanation from the skies.

A wingless creature heavier than air,
 He is rejected of its quintessence;
 Coming and going hence,
 In the twin minutes of his birth and death,
 He may inhale as breath,
 As breath relinquish heaven's atmosphere,
 Yet in it have no share,
 Nor can survive therein
 Where its outer edge is filtered pure and thin:
 It doth but lend its crystal to his lungs
 For his early crying, and his final songs.

The element of water has denied
 Its child; it is no more his element;
 It never will relent;
 Its silver harvests are more sparsely given
 Than the rewards of heaven,
 And he shall drink cold comfort at its side:
 The water is too wide:
 The seamew and the gull
 Feather a nest made soft and pitiful
 Upon its foam; he has not any part
 In the long swell of sorrow at its heart.

Hail and farewell, beloved element,
 Whence he departed, and his parent once;
 See where thy spirit runs
 Which for so long hath had the moon to wife;
 Shall this support his life
 Until the arches of the waves be bent
 And grow shallow and spent?
 Wisely it cast him forth
 With his dead weight of burdens nothing worth,
 Leaving him, for the universal years,
 A little seawater to make his tears.

Hail, element of earth, receive thy own,
 And cherish, at thy charitable breast,
 This man, this mongrel beast:
 He plows the sand, and, at his hardest need,
 He sows himself for seed;
 He plows the furrow, and in this lies down
 Before the corn is grown;
 Between the apple bloom
 And the ripe apple is sufficient room
 In time, and matter, to consume his love
 And make him parcel of a cypress grove.

Receive him as thy lover for an hour
 Who will not weary, by a longer stay,
 The kind embrace of clay;
 Even within thine arms he is dispersed
 To nothing, as at first;
 The air flings downward from its four-quartered tower
 Him whom the flames devour;
 At the full tide, at the flood,
 The sea is mingled with his salty blood:
 The traveler dust, although the dust be vile,
 Sleeps as thy lover for a little while.

Ezra Pound

ONE of the most controversial figures of the period and unquestionably the most belligerent expatriate of his generation, Ezra (Loomis) Pound was born at Hailey, Idaho, October 30, 1885. A precocious reader, he entered the University of Pennsylvania at the age of fifteen. At sixteen, unbeknown to the faculty, he began studying comparative literature; before he was seventeen (in 1902) he enrolled as special student "to avoid irrelevant subjects." He continued the process at Hamilton College (1903-5) and from 1905 to 1907 was "Instructor with professorial functions" at the University of Pennsylvania. His next move brought him to Crawfordsville,

Indiana—"‘the Athens of the West,’ a town with literary traditions, Lew Wallace having died there.” Pound was dismissed from Wabash College after four months—“all accusations,” he says, “having been ultimately refuted save that of being ‘the Latin Quarter type.’”

Though a born educator, actually burning to teach, Pound was compelled to seek less academic circles. In 1908 he landed in Gibraltar with eighty dollars and lived on the interest for some time. The same year found him for the first time in Italy, which was to become his future home. A Lume Spento (1908) was printed in Venice. A few months later he was established in London, where he lived until 1920. Convinced of the aridity of England, he crossed over to Paris, from which, after four years, he moved to Rapallo, on the Italian Riviera, where he has lived since 1924.

Shortly after Pound’s arrival in London he published Personae (1909), a work which, though small, contains some of his most arresting verse.

Although the young American was a total stranger to the English literary world, his book made a definite impression on critics of all shades and tastes. Edward Thomas, one of the most cautious appraisers, wrote, “The beauty of it is the beauty of passion, sincerity and intensity, not of beautiful words and images and suggestions. . . . The thought dominates the words and is greater than they are.” Another critic (Scott James) placed the chief emphasis on Pound’s metrical innovations, saying, “At first the whole thing may seem to be mere madness and rhetoric, a vain exhibition of force and passion without beauty. But as we read on, these curious meters seem to have a law and order of their own.”

Exultations (1909) was printed in the autumn of the same year that saw the appearance of Personae. It was received with even greater cordiality; a new force and freedom were manifest in such poems as “Sestina: Altaforte,” “Ballad of the Goodly Fere,” and the stark “Ballad for Gloom.” Both books were republished in a single volume, with other poems, as Personae, in 1926.

In these books there is evident Pound’s erudition—a familiarity with medieval literature, Provençal singers, Troubadour ballads—an erudition which, later, was to degenerate into pedantry. Too often Pound seemed to become theory-logged, to sink himself in an intellectual Sargasso Sea, to be more the archeologist than the artist. Canzoni (1911) and Ripostes (1912) contain much that is sharp and living; they also contain the germs of desiccation and decay. Pound began to scatter his talents; to start movements which he quickly discarded for new ones; to spend himself in poetic propaganda for the Vorticists and others; to give more and more time to translation (The Sonnets of Guido Cavalcanti appeared in 1912) and arrangements from the Chinese (Cathay, paraphrased from the notes of Ernest Fenollosa, was issued in 1915); to lay the chief stress on technique, shades of color, verbal nuances. The result was a lassitude of the creative faculties, an impoverishment of emotion. In the later books, Pound seemed to suffer from a decadence which appraises the values in life chiefly as esthetic values.

Lustra appeared in 1916. In this collection, as in the preceding volumes, Pound struggled with his influences; accents of Swinburne, Browning, Lionel Johnson, and Yeats mingled with those of the Provençal poets. From his immediate predecessors Pound learned the value of “verse as speech” while, as Eliot has pointed out, from the more antiquarian studies Pound was learning the importance of “speech as song." It was not until Hugh Selwyn Mauberley (1920) and the Cantos that Pound integrated his own inflection, form, and philosophy.

The Cantos, as yet unfinished, must be recognized as Pound's chief work. The poem (for the Cantos are parts of a loosely connected major opus) when and if completed will comprise about one hundred "chapters." More than seventy cantos have been published: Cantos I-XVI in 1925; XVII-XXVII in 1928; A Draft of XXX Cantos in 1930; Eleven New Cantos: XXXI to XLI in 1934. Complex in tone, bewildering in their shiftings of time and space, of many languages and multiple accents, the Cantos are easier to grasp in theory than in practice. Only a scholar versed in many cultures can pretend to follow the digressions, the obscure references, the self-interrupted narratives, comments, myths, legends, imprecations, jokes, the whole curious ambivalence which worships and destroys the poetic tradition in the same movement. Yet the scheme of the Cantos is reasoned and even formal: Pound is attempting to write a Human Comedy in several dimensions and many voices, using the repetitions of history as recurring leitmotifs. The structure is intended to be fugual (with subject, response, and counter-subject) and Pound, who has written music as well as words, has conceived the work on a huge scale. It juxtaposes the jargon of the modern world with disrupted quotations and a vast, even violent, scholasticism.

Critical opinion of the Cantos was sharply divided. To many the indicated pattern was a masterpiece of obfuscation, a jig-saw puzzle with the important pieces missing. "About the poems," wrote Edward Fitzgerald, "there hangs a dismal mist of unresolved confusion. Through that mist we can see fact, but fact historically stated, enlivened in no way by either a creative or a critical process." Some found it a garble of literature and nothing else, composed of scraps from newspapers, oddments from documents difficult of access, and the minor classics, all piled upon each other without an original idea or an experience outside of print. To others it was a modern Gospel. "One of the three great works of poetry of our time," wrote Allen Tate. Ford Madox Ford's enthusiasm was even less guarded. "The first words you have to say about the Cantos," said Ford, "is: Their extraordinary beauty . . . They form an unparalleled history of a world seen from those shores which are the home of our civilization." John Crowe Ransom's estimate was more temperate. He concluded, "Mr. Pound, in his capacity of guide to literature, never wearies of telling us about the troubadour songs of Provence, which he reveres. He lays down the law that, the further the poem goes from its original character of song, the more dubious is its estate. But what if we apply that canon to the Cantos? The result is that we find ourselves sometimes admiring in Mr. Pound's poetry an effect of brilliance and nearly always missing the effect of poetry."

Whatever differences arose concerning the finality of Pound's performance, none could dispute the power of his influence. The accent of the Cantos can be traced through Eliot's The Waste Land, Hart Crane's The Bridge, and MacLeish's longer poems, particularly his Conquistador. Moreover, any attempt to do justice to Pound must take account of the chronology of his work in relation to others. He invented the term "Imagism" and organized the Imagist school long before the ensuing period of exploitation. He published Cathay in 1915, and rendered Certain Noble Plays of Japan from the Fenollosa Manuscripts, anticipating the flood of Chinese and Japanese translations that, soon after, inundated the country. He

"placed" Tagore as literary artist, not as messiah, and saw the Bengalese poet become a cult. He fought for the musician George Antheil; wrote a study of Gaudier Brzeska, when that sculptor was unknown; created a controversy by his Provençal paraphrases, expanded his Italian studies into The Poems of Guido Cavalcanti.

Besides his poetry Pound wrote, translated, and edited more than fourteen volumes of prose, the most characteristic being A B C of Reading (1934), an exposition of a critical method; Make it New (1935), which is a deceptive title since all but one of the essays appeared in Pavannes and Divisions (1918) and Instigations (1920); and the little known Imaginary Letters.

Pound's voluminous and highly personal prose Culture (1939) was followed by Cantos LII-LXXI (1940). The two volumes complement each other in their inconsistencies: in historical oddities and elliptical references, in erratic philosophy and objectionable politics. Pound's increasing bias against America developed into an attack on all democracies; he championed Fascism, even to the extent of becoming its protagonist via the official Italian short-wave radio. The Cantos grow pedantic and petulant. They represent an ever-growing flux of Greek myth, Chinese culture, medieval usury and local history. Hitherto it was conjectured that the architecture of the Cantos was that of a fugue; but the latest annotator (with Pound's sanction) refers to it as a Commedia. We are told that the Greek, Renaissance, and World War episodes are the Inferno; the history of money and banking form the Purgatorio; while the Cantos to come will construct the Paradiso. Finally we are gravely informed that, whereas most English verse is written in iambic meter, the Cantos have a great number of feet which are trochaic, dactylic, anapestic, and spondaic, and that this results in "nothing less than a revolution in English versification, a new basis for the writing of poetry."

In his argumentative introduction to The Oxford Book of Modern Verse Yeats maintained that, although Ezra Pound had more style than any contemporary poet, his style was constantly broken and "twisted into nothing by its direct opposite: nervous obsession, nightmare, stammering confusion." Conceding Pound's influence, Yeats concluded that Pound was "a brilliant improvisator translating at sight from an unknown Greek masterpiece." It is an apt epigram if an incomplete disposal. In all of Pound's work, from the clipped products of his Imagist period to the gathering bulk of the Cantos there is the feeling of brilliant (if inaccurate) translation, the air of antiquity lovingly disguised as advanced thinking.

Too special to achieve permanence, too arrogant and erudite to become popular, Pound's contribution to the period should not be underestimated. He was a pioneer in the new forms; he fought dullness wherever he encountered it; he experimented in a poetic speech which was alive and essentially his own. This new tone and technique helped broaden a path recognized by a few and unacknowledged by many who followed the trail nonchalantly, unconscious of who had blazed it. Much of Pound's art is difficult, much of it is poetry in pantomime, but even the dumb-show and the difficulties are significant.

AN IMMORALITY

X
Sing we for love and idleness,
Naught else is worth the having.

Though I have been in many a land,
There is naught else in living.

And I would rather have my sweet,
Though rose-leaves die of grieving,

Than do high deeds in Hungary
To pass all men's believing.

A VIRGINAL

No, no! Go from me. I have left her lately.
I will not spoil my sheath with lesser brightness,
For my surrounding air has a new lightness;
Slight are her arms, yet they have bound me straitly
And left me cloaked as with a gauze of ether;
As with sweet leaves; as with a subtle clearness.
Oh, I have picked up magic in her nearness
To sheathe me half in half the things that sheathe her.

No, no! Go from me. I have still the flavor,
Soft as spring wind that's come from birchen bowers.
Green come the shoots, aye April in the branches,
As winter's wound with her sleight hand she staunches,
Hath of the trees a likeness of the savor:
As white their bark, so white this lady's hours.

BALLAD FOR GLOOM

For God, our God is a gallant foe
That playeth behind the veil.

I have loved my God as a child at heart
That seeketh deep bosoms for rest,
I have loved my God as a maid to man—
But lo, this thing is best:

To love your God as a gallant foe that plays behind the veil;
To meet your God as the night winds meet beyond Arcturus' pale.

I have played with God for a woman,
I have staked with my God for truth,
I have lost to my God as a man, clear-eyed—
His dice be not of ruth.

For I am made as a naked blade,
But hear ye this thing in sooth:

Who loseth to God as man to man
Shall win at the turn of the game.
I have drawn my blade where the lightnings meet

But the ending is the same:
 Who loseth to God as the sword blades lose
 Shall win at the end of the game.

For God, our God is a gallant foe that playeth behind the veil.
 Whom God deigns not to overthrow hath need of triple mail.

GREEK EPIGRAM

Day and night are never weary,
 Nor yet is God of creating
 For day and night their torch-bearers
 The aube and the crepuscule.

So, when I weary of praising the dawn and the sunset,
 Let me be no more counted among the im-
 mortals;
 But number me amid the wearying ones,
 Let me be a man as the herd,
 And as the slave that is given in barter.

BALLAD OF THE GOODLY FERE<sup>1</sup>

(Simon Zelotes speaketh it somewhat after the Crucifixion)

Ha' we lost the goodliest fere o' all
 For the priests and the gallows tree?
 Aye, lover he was of brawny men,
 O' ships and the open sea.

When they came wi' a host to take Our Man
 His smile was good to see,
 "First let these go!" quo' our Goodly Fere,
 "Or I'll see ye damned," says he.

Aye, he sent us out through the crossed high spears,
 And the scorn of his laugh rang free,
 "Why took ye not me when I walked about Alone in the town?" says he.

Oh we drank his "Hale" in the good red wine
 When we last made company,
 No capon priest was the Goodly Fere
 But a man o' men was he.

I ha' seen him drive a hundred men
 Wi' a bundle o' cords swung free,

<sup>1</sup> Fere = Mate, Companion.

When they took the high and holy house
 For their pawn and treasury.

They'll no get him a' in a book I think
 Though they write it cunningly;
 No mouse of the scrolls was the Goodly
 Fere
 But aye loved the open sea.

If they think they ha' snared our Goodly Fere
 They are fools to the last degree.
 "I'll go to the feast," quo' our Goodly Fere,
 "Though I go to the gallows tree."

"Ye ha' seen me heal the lame and the blind,
 And wake the dead," says he,
 "Ye shall see one thing to master all:
 'Tis how a brave man dies on the tree."

A son of God was the Goodly Fere
 That bade us his brothers be.
 I ha' seen him cow a thousand men.
 I ha' seen him upon the tree.

He cried no cry when they drove the nails
 And the blood gushed hot and free,
 The hounds of the crimson sky gave tongue
 But never a cry cried he.

I ha' seen him cow a thousand men
 On the hills o' Galilee,
 They whined as he walked out calm between,
 Wi' his eyes like the gray o' the sea.

Like the sea that brooks no voyaging
 With the winds unleashed and free,
 Like the sea that he cowed at Gennesaret
 Wi' twey words spoke' suddenly.

A master of men was the Goodly Fere,
 A mate of the wind and sea,
 If they think they ha' slain our Goodly Fere
 They are fools eternally.

I ha' seen him eat o' the honey-comb
Sin' they nailed him to the tree.

A GIRL

The tree has entered my hands,
The sap has ascended my arms,
The tree has grown in my breast
Downward,
The branches grow out of me, like arms.

Tree you are,
Moss you are,
You are violets with wind above them.
A child—so high—you are;
And all this is folly to the world.

IN A STATION OF THE METRO

The apparition of these faces in the crowd;
Petals on a wet, black bough.

DANCE FIGURE

(For the Marriage in Cana of Galilee)

Dark eyed,
O woman of my dreams,
Ivory sandaled,
There is none like thee among the dancers,
None with swift feet.

I have not found thee in the tents,
In the broken darkness.
I have not found thee at the well-head
Among the women with pitchers.
Thine arms are as a young sapling under the bark;
Thy face as a river with lights.

White as an almond are thy shoulders;
As new almonds stripped from the husk.
They guard thee not with eunuchs;
Not with bars of copper.

Gilt turquoise and silver are in the place of thy rest.
A brown robe with threads of gold woven in patterns hast thou gathered about thee,
O Nathat-Ikanaie, "Tree-at-the-river."

As a rillet among the sedge are thy hands upon me;
Thy fingers a frosted stream.

Thy maidens are white like pebbles;
Their music about thee!

There is none like thee among the dancers;
None with swift feet.

ΔΩΡΙΑ

Be in me as the eternal moods of the bleak wind, and not As transient things are—gayety of flowers.

Have me in the strong loneliness of sunless cliffs
 And of gray waters.
     Let the gods speak softly of us
 In days hereafter,
     the shadowy flowers of Orcus
 Remember thee.

SILET

When I behold how black, immortal ink
 Drips from my deathless pen—ah, well-away!
 Why should we stop at all for what I think?
 There is enough in what I chance to say.

It is enough that we once came together;
 What is the use of setting it to rime?
 When it is autumn do we get spring weather,
 Or gather may of harsh northwindish time?

It is enough that we once came together;
 What if the wind have turned against the rain?
 It is enough that we once came together;
 Time has seen this, and will not turn again.

And who are we, who know that last intent,
 To plague tomorrow with a testament!

PORTRAIT D'UNE FEMME<sup>1</sup>

Your mind and you are our Sargasso Sea,
 London has swept about you this score years
 And bright ships left you this or that in fee:
 Ideas, old gossip, oddments of all things,
 Strange spars of knowledge and dimmed wares of price.
 Great minds have sought you—lacking someone else.
 You have been second always. Tragical?
 No. You preferred it to the usual thing:
 One dull man, dulling and uxorious,
 One average mind—with one thought less, each year.
 Oh, you are patient. I have seen you sit
 Hours, where something might have floated up.
 And now you pay one. Yes, you richly pay.
 You are a person of some interest, one comes to you
 And takes strange gain away:
 Trophies fished up; some curious suggestion;
 Fact that leads nowhere; and a tale for two,
 Pregnant with mandrakes, or with something else
 That might prove useful and yet never proves,
 That never fits a corner or shows use,

<sup>1</sup> Compare the poem on the same theme on page 429.

Or finds its hour upon the loom of days:
 The tarnished, gaudy, wonderful old work;
 Idols, and ambergris and rare inlays.
 These are your riches, your great store; and yet
 For all this sea-hoard of deciduous things,
 Strange woods half sodden, and new brighter stuff:
 In the slow float of differing light and deep,
 No! there is nothing! In the whole and all,
 Nothing that's quite your own.

Yet this is you.

THE RETURN

See, they return; ah see the tentative
 Movements, and the slow feet,
 The trouble in the pace and the uncertain
 Wavering!

See, they return, one, and by one,
 With fear, as half-awakened;
 As if the snow should hesitate
 And murmur in the wind,
 and half turn back;
 These were the "Wing'd-with-Awe," Inviolable.

Gods of the wingèd shoe!
 With them the silver hounds,
 sniffing the trace of air!

Hai! Hai!
 These were the swift to harry;
 These were the keen-scented;
 These were the souls of blood.

Slow on the leash,
 pallid the leash-men!

ENVOL

Go, dumb-born book,
 Tell her that sang me once that song of Lawes:
 Hadst thou but song
 As thou hast subjects known,
 Then were there cause in thee that should condone
 Even my faults that heavy upon me lie,
 And build her glories their longevity.

Tell her that sheds
 Such treasure in the air,
 Recking naught else but that her graces give Life to the moment,
 I would bid them live
 As roses might, in magic amber laid,
 Red overwrought with orange and all made
 One substance and one color
 Braving time.

Tell her that goes
 With song upon her lips
 But sings not out the song, nor knows
 The maker of it, some other mouth,
 May be as fair as hers,
 Might, in new ages, gain her worshipers,
 When our two dusts with Waller's shall be laid,
 Siftings on siftings in oblivion,
 Till change hath broken down
 All things save Beauty alone.

THE REST

O helpless few in my country,
 O remnant enslaved!

Artists broken against her,
 Astray, lost in the villages,
 Mistrusted, spoken-against,

Lovers of beauty, starved,
 Thwarted with systems,
 Helpless against the control;

You who cannot wear yourselves out
 By persisting to successes,
 You who can only speak,
 Who cannot steel yourselves into reiteration;

You of the finer sense,
 Broken against false knowledge,
 You who can know at first hand,
 Hated, shut in, mistrusted:

Take thought:
 I have weathered the storm,
 I have beaten out my exile.

ITÉ

Go, my songs, seek your praise from the young and from the intolerant,
 Move among the lovers of perfection alone.
 Seek ever to stand in the hard Sophoclean light
 And take your wounds from it gladly.

CANTO I

And then went down to the ship,
 Set keel to breakers, forth on the godly sea, and
 We set up mast and sail on that swart ship,
 Bore sheep aboard her, and our bodies also
 Heavy with weeping, and winds from sternward
 Bore us out onward with bellying canvas,
 Circe's this craft, the trim-coifed goddess.
 Then sat we amidships, wind jamming the tiller,
 Thus with stretched sail, we went over sea till day's end.
 Sun to his slumber, shadows o'er all the ocean,
 Came we then to the bounds of deepest water,
 To the Kimmerian lands, and peopled cities
 Covered with close-webbed mist, unpierced ever
 With glitter of sun-ray
 Nor with stars stretched, nor looking back from heaven
 Swardest night stretched over wretched men there.
 The ocean flowing backward, came we then to the place
 Aforesaid by Circe.
 Here did they rites, Perimedes and Eurylochus,
 And drawing sword from my hip
 I dug the ell-square pitkin;
 Poured we libations unto each the dead,
 First mead and then sweet wine, water mixed with white flour.
 Then prayed I many a prayer to the sickly death's-heads;
 As set in Ithaca, sterile bulls of the best
 For sacrifice, heaping the pyre with goods,
 A sheep to Tiresias only, black and a bell-sheep.
 Dark blood flowed in the fosse,
 Souls out of Erebus, cadaverous dead, of brides
 Of youths and of the old who had borne much;
 Souls stained with recent tears, girls tender,
 Men many, mauled with bronze lance heads,
 Battle spoil, bearing yet dreary arms,
 These many crowded about me; with shouting,
 Pallor upon me, cried to my men for more beasts;
 Slaughtered the herds, sheep slain of bronze;

Poured ointment, cried to the gods,
 To Pluto the strong, and praised Proserpine;
 Unsheathed the narrow sword,
 I sat to keep off the impetuous impotent dead,
 Till I should hear Tiresias.
 But first Elpenor came, our friend Elpenor,
 Unburied, cast on the wide earth,
 Limbs that we left in the house of Circe,
 Unwept, unwrapped in sepulcher, since toils urged other.
 Pitiful spirit. And I cried in hurried speech:
 "Elpenor, how art thou come to this dark coast?
 "Cam'st thou afoot, outstripping seamen?"
 And he in heavy speech:
 "Ill fate and abundant wine. I slept in Circe's ingle.
 "Going down the long ladder unguarded,
 "I fell against the buttress,
 "Shattered the nape-nerve, the soul sought Avernus.
 "But thou, O King, I bid remember me, unwept, unburied,
 "Heap up mine arms, be tomb by sea-board, and inscribed:
 "'A man of no fortune and with a name to come.'
 "And set my oar up, that I swung mid fellows."

And Anticlea came, whom I beat off, and then Tiresias Theban,
 Holding his golden wand, knew me, and spoke first:
 "A second time? why? man of ill star,
 "Facing the sunless dead and this joyless region?
 "Stand from the fosse, leave me my bloody bever
 "For soothsay."

And I stepped back,
 And he strong with the blood, said then: "Odysseus
 "Shalt return through spiteful Neptune, over dark seas,
 "Lose all companions." And then Anticlea came.
 Lie quiet Divus. I mean that is Andreas Divus,
 In officina Wecheli, 1538, out of Homer.
 And he sailed, by Sirens and thence outward and away
 And unto Circe.

Venerandam,
 In the Cretan's phrase, with the golden crown, Aphrodite,
 Cyprum munimenta sortita est, mirthful, oricalchi, with golden
 Girdles and breast bands, thou with dark eyelids
 Bearing the golden bough of Argicida.

Louis Untermeyer

LOUIS UNTERMEYER was born October 1, 1885, in New York City, where he lived, except for brief intervals, until 1923. His schooling was fitful and erratic; he liked to boast that he was the least educated writer in America. He attended the De Witt Clinton High School, but his failure to comprehend the essentials of geom-

try prevented him from graduating. In youth his one ambition was to be a composer. At sixteen he appeared as a semi-professional pianist; at seventeen he entered his father's jewelry manufacturing establishment. For nearly twenty years he commuted to Newark, New Jersey, being advanced from designer to factory manager and vice-president. In 1923 he retired and, after two years of study abroad, returned to America to devote himself entirely to literature. In 1928 he achieved a lifelong desire, acquiring a farm, a trout-stream, and half a mountain of sugar-maples in the Adirondacks. There he indulges himself in his two pet vices: cats and puns, and his guests frequently complain of both. He became "poet in residence" at various universities. His lectures brought him into every state of the Union except South Dakota. The talks ranged through the arts and their social implications, many of his seminars presumed to teach teachers what not to teach.

It is difficult for the present compiler to consider this writer as severely as he deserves, the editor not having attained toward the poet that Olympian detachment which is the goal of criticism. However, it is evident that his work is divided into four kinds: his poetry, his parodies, his translations, and his prose. His initial volume of verse, First Love (1911), was a sequence of some seventy lyrics in which the influences of Heine and Housman were not only obvious but crippling. It was with Challenge (1914) that the author first declared himself with any sort of integrity. Although the ghost of Henley haunts many of these pages, poems like "Praycr" and "Caliban in the Coal Mines" show "a fresh and lyrical sympathy with the modern world. . . . His vision" (thus The Boston Transcript) "is a social vision, his spirit a passionately energized command of the forces of justice." Challenge was succeeded by These Times (1917), which lacked the unity of its predecessor. The New Adam (1920) is somewhat better; "a frank expression of the modern poet's conception of love, this new Adam, caught in the eternal struggle of the flesh, is the child of a complex and analytical age."

Roast Leviathan (1923) was the most luxuriant of his volumes. The American critics found it too exuberant, but the English reviewers praised "the lavish use of interior rhyme and assonance, brilliant as an Oriental tapestry." "On every subject he treats," wrote Edwin Muir, "he gives opulent measure, an opulence within the reach of nobody in contemporary verse but himself." In Burning Bush (1928) the key is quieter, the tone surer. Food and Drink (1932) is a further progress; many of the poems (notably "Food and Drink" and "Last Words Before Winter") experiment in the masking of serious, even solemn, emotion in a light tone of voice.

Four volumes of his parodies were combined in Collected Parodies (1926), which the author, with great self-restraint, refrained from calling "Parodies Regained." His interests in German backgrounds and literature were manifested in Poems of Heinrich Heine (1917); a translation of Ernst Toller's Masse Mensch, produced by the Theatre Guild in 1923; and Blue Rhine—Black Forest (1930), an informal guide and day-book. His translations from Heine were revised and amplified to form the second volume of an analytical biography, Heinrich Heine: Paradox and Poet (1937).

Beginning with an adaptation of Gottfried Keller's Swiss stories (published under the title The Fat of the Cat) the author alternately wrote volumes of prose and poetry. The best of his fiction, he insists, is Moses (1928), miscalled a novel. Actually the work is a combination of historical reconstruction and poetic fantasia.

Other fictional work included The Donkey of God (1932), written for a young audience, which won the Italian Enit Award in 1934 for the best recent book on Italy written in any language by a non-Italian, and The Last Pirate (1934), in which the author presumed to do for Gilbert and Sullivan what the Lambs had done for Shakespeare.

A book of essays, The New Era in American Poetry (1919), was amplified and shaped into a more balanced set of twenty subdivided chapters as American Poetry Since 1900 (1923). The critical anthologies Modern American Poetry and Modern British Poetry were revised and enlarged several times since their original publication in 1919 and 1920, and used as textbooks in the universities. A companion volume, American Poetry from the Beginning to Whitman (1931), attempted a comprehensive and drastic reappraisal of native poetry from 1620 to 1880.

Besides these critical compilations the editor prepared several anthologies with a minimum of prefatory or interpretive matter: The Book of Living Verse (1932), the widest in scope, ranging from the thirteenth century to the twentieth; Yesterday and Today (1927), a comparative collection of the present and the immediate past; This Singing World (1923), a selection of modern verse for a not too elderly audience; This Singing World for Younger Readers (1926); Rainbow in the Sky (1935); and Stars to Steer By (1941). These volumes were widely adopted in high schools and colleges, as was The Forms of Poetry (1926), a "pocket dictionary of verse."

New Songs for New Voices (1928), a collaboration with David and Clara Mannes, wedded modern music to modern poetry and gave the editor the opportunity to make his first (and last) public appearance as composer. Poetry: Its Appreciation and Enjoyment (1934), written with Carter Davidson, is a cross between a treatise and a textbook. Selected Poems and Parodies (1935), assembles the best of Untermeyer's serious poems. This volume, said William Rose Benét hand somely, "entitles him to occupy the place of a Heine in America." His standing as critic was enhanced by Play in Poetry (1937), a set of commentaries delivered as lectures on the Henry Ward Beecher Foundation at Amherst. From Another World (1939) is not so much an autobiography as a set of autobiographical reminiscences which give a direct picture of a period.

Before his fiftieth year Untermeyer had written and compiled thirty volumes of prose and verse; had served as associate editor of such magazines as The Liberator and The Seven Arts; had been Poetry Editor of The American Mercury from 1934 to 1937; and had written the articles on modern American poetry for the Encyclopaedia Britannica. A friend of young authors, he spends part of his summers with Robert Frost conducting courses at the Bread Loaf Writers' Conference in Vermont.

P R A Y E R

God, though this life is but a wraith,
Although we know not what we use,
Although we grope with little faith,
Give me the heart to fight—and lose.

Ever insurgent let me be,
Make me more daring than devout;

From sleek contentment keep me free,
And fill me with a buoyant doubt.

Open my eyes to visions girt
With beauty, and with wonder lit—
But let me always see the dirt,
And all that spawn and die in it.

Open my ears to music; let Me thrill with Spring's first flutes and drums—
But never let me dare forget
The bitter ballads of the slums.

From compromise and things half-done,
Keep me, with stern and stubborn pride.
And when, at last, the fight is won,
God, keep me still unsatisfied.

CALIBAN IN THE COAL MINES

God, we don't like to complain;
We know that the mine is no lark.
But—there's the pools from the rain;
But—there's the cold and the dark.

God, You don't know what it is—
You, in Your well-lighted sky—
Watching the meteors whizz;
Warm, with a sun always by.

God, if You had but the moon
Stuck in Your cap for a lamp,
Even You'd tire of it soon,
Down in the dark and the damp.

Nothing but blackness above
And nothing that moves but the cars. . .
God, if You wish for our love,
Fling us a handful of stars!

THE DARK CHAMBER

The brain forgets, but the blood will remember.
There, when the play of sense is over,
The last, low spark in the darkest chamber
Will hold all there is of love and lover.

The war of words, the life-long quarrel
Of self against self will resolve into nothing;
Less than the chain of berry-red coral
Crying against the dead black of her clothing.

What has the brain that it hopes to last longer?
The blood will take from forgotten violence,
The groping, the break of her voice in anger.
There will be left only color and silence.

These will remain, these will go searching
Your veins for life when the flame of life smolders:
The night that you two saw the mountains marching
Up against dawn with the stars on their shoulders—

The jetting poplars' arrested fountains
As you drew her under them, easing her pain—
The notes, not the words, of a half-finished sentence—
The music, the silence. . . . These will remain.

SCARCELY SPRING

Nothing is real. The world has lost its edges;
The sky, uncovered, is the one thing clear.
The earth is little more than atmosphere
Where yesterday were rocks and naked ridges.
Nothing is fixed. Tentative rain dislodges

Green upon green or lifts a coral spear
That breaks in blossom, and the hills appear
Too frail to be the stony fruit of ages.

Nothing will keep. Even the heavens waver.
Young larks, whose first thought is to cry aloud,
Have spent their bubble notes. And here or there
A few slow-hearted boys and girls discover
A moon as unsubstantial as a cloud
Painted by air on washed and watery air.

LONG FEUD

Where, without bloodshed, can there be
A more relentless enmity
Than the long feud fought silently

Between man and the growing grass.
Man's the aggressor, for he has
Weapons to humble and harass

The impudent spears that charge upon
His sacred privacy of lawn.
He mows them down, and they are gone

Only to lie in wait, although
He builds above and digs below
Where never a root would dare to go.

His are the triumphs till the day
There's no more grass to cut away
And, weary of labor, weary of play,

Having exhausted every whim,
He stretches out each conquering limb.
And then the small grass covers him.

UNREASONING HEART

Here in a world whose heaven is powder-white,
Where, cased in glass, the branches bear a weight
Too light for leaves and far too cold for flowers,
Nothing disturbs these alabaster floors.
The black stream does not move; it is a vein
Of onyx cropping out, a metal vine
Twisted and thrown away. There is no sound.
Blankets of snow, curtains of snow-flake sand
Bury the footsteps of the one man here.
Here, where the world has died, away from her,
Here for the fevered mind too long harassed
Is wintry silence, cooling space and rest.
Waves of a soundless music rise to lift
The unburied thing that lived and even laughed.
And, as a broken life can be made whole
By looking at the slant of one long hill,
In this eternity of peace, the heart
Forgetting all forgets that it can hurt.

And yet, does even the weariest heart want peace?
Back to the fever, the intemperate pace,
Back to the ruthless word, the headlong deed
(Fearing that passion stilled is passion dead)
The worn heart hungers. Forever unappeased,

Forever self-persuaded, self-opposed,
 It turns away from each escape, to pine
 For the old wars and victories of pain;
 Embracing all that reason hopes to leave,
 With no less hurt and even greater love.
 As though to cry, "Here I belong—I must!
 Here is the place where I have suffered most."

FOOD AND DRINK

Why has our poetry eschewed
 The rapture and response of food?
 What hymns are sung, what prayers are said
 For home-made miracles of bread?
 Since what we love has always found
 Expression in enduring sound,
 Music and verse should be competing
 To match the transient joy of eating.
 There should be present in our songs
 As many tastes as there are tongues;
 There should be humbly celebrated
 One passion that is never sated.

Let us begin it with the first
 Distinction of a conscious thirst
 When the collusion of the vine
 Uplifted water into wine.
 Let us give thanks before we turn
 To other things of less concern
 For all the poetry of the table:
 Clams that parade their silent fable;
 Lobsters that have a rock for stable;
 Red-faced tomatoes ample as
 A countryman's full-bosomed lass;
 Plain-spoken turnips; honest beets;
 The carnal gusto of red meats;
 The wood-fire pungence of smoked ham;
 The insipidity of lamb;
 Young veal that's smooth as natural silk;
 The lavish motherliness of milk;
 Sweet-sour carp, beloved by Jews;
 Pot luck simplicity of stews;
 Crabs, juiciest of Nature's jokes;
 The deep reserve of artichokes;
 Mushrooms, whose taste is texture, loath
 To tell of their mysterious growth;
 Quick, mealy comfort glowing in
 A baked potato's crackled skin;
 The morning promise, hailed by man,
 Of bacon crisping in the pan;
 The sage compound of Hasenpfeffer
 With dumplings born of flour and zephyr;

Anchovies glorified in oil;
 Spinach whose spirit is the soil;
 Corn that is roasted in the ash;
 The eternal compromise of hash;
 The slow-gold nectar maples yield;
 Pale honey tasting of the field
 Where every clover is Hymettus;
 The cooling sanity of lettuce,
 And every other herbal green
 Whose touch is calm, whose heart is clean;
 Succulent bean-sprouts; bamboo-shoots;
 The sapid catalogue of fruits:
 Plebeian apple; caustic grape;
 Quinces that have no gift for shape;
 Dull plums that mind their own affairs;
 Incurably bland and blunted pears;
 Fantastic passion-fruit; frank lemons
 With acid tongues as sharp as women's;
 Exotic loquats; sly persimmons;
 White currants; amber-fleshed sultanas
 (Miniature and sweetened mannas);
 Expansive peaches; suave bananas;
 Oranges ripening in crates;
 Tight-bodied figs; sun-wrinkled dates;
 Melons that have their own vagaries;
 The bright astringency of berries;
 Pepper, whose satire stings and cuts;
 The pointless persiflage of nuts;
 Sauces of complex mysteries;
 Proverbial parsnips; muscular cheese;
 Innocent eggs that scorn disguises;
 Languid molasses; burning spices
 In kitchen-oracles to Isis;
 Thick sauerkraut's fat-bellied savor;
 Anything with a chocolate flavor;
 Deep generosity of pies;
 Rich puddings bursting to surprise;
 The smug monotony of rice;
 Raisins that doze in cinnamon buns;
 Kentucky biscuits, Scottish scones;
 Venison steaks that smack of cloisters;
 Goose-liver for the soul that roisters:

Reticent prawn; Lucullan oysters;
Sausages, fragrant link on link. . . .

The vast ambrosias of drink:
Tea, that domestic mandarin;
Bucolic cider; loose-lipped gin;
Coffee, extract of common sense,
Purgative of the night's pretense;
Cocoa's prim nursery; the male
Companionship of crusty ale;
Cognac as oily as a ferret;
The faintly iron thrust of claret;
Episcopal port, aged and austere;
Rebellious must of grape; the clear,
Bluff confraternity of beer—

All these are good, all are a part
Of man's imperative needs that start
Not in the palate but the heart.
Thus fat and fiber, root and leaf,
Become quick fuel and slow grief.
These, through the chemistry of blood,
Sustain his hungering manhood,
Fulfilling passion, ripening pain;
Steel in his bone, fire at his brain.
So, until man abjures the meats
Terrestrial, and impermanent sweets,
Growing beyond the thing he eats,
Let us be thankful for the good
Beauty and benison of food;
Let us join chiming vowel with vowel
To rhapsodize fish, flesh and fowl;
And let us thank God in our songs
'There are as many tastes as tongues!

LAST WORDS BEFORE WINTER

*All my sheep
Gather in a heap,
For I spy the woolly, woolly wolf.*

Farewell, my flocks,
Farewell. But let me find you
Safe in your stall and barn and box
With your winter's tale behind you.

Farewell, my cattle (both).
I leave you just as loath
As though you were a hundred head,
Instead
Of two-and-a-half.
(Two cows and a calf.)

Farewell, my apple-trees;
You have learned what it is to freeze,
With the drift on your knees.
But, oh, beware
Those first kind days, the snare
Of the too promising air,
The cost
Of over-sudden trust—
And then the killing frost.'

Farewell, belovéd acres;
I leave you in the hands
Of one whose earliest enterprise was lands:
Your Maker's.

Yard, hutch, and house, farewell.
It is for you to tell
How you withstood the great white wolf, whose fell
Is softer than a lambkin's, but whose breath
Is death.
Farewell, hoof, claw, and wing,
Finned, furred, and feathered thing,
Till Spring—

*All my sheep
Gather in a heap,
For I spy the woolly, woolly wolf.*

AGAINST TIME

The event stands clear of history.
Originality
Is not in ranks of trees, but in this tree;
And every fruit is the first fruit
Shapely and absolute.

Events are individual as pain.

This day, this trouble-fingering rain
 Has never been.
 Beauty comes clean
 In the cock's rusty vowels or in
 Sky-searching towers that lift
 Themselves light as a swift.

Time's a machine
 That clocks the outworn, the untrue.
 But we have seen
 What no clock has recorded; we have seen
 Time counted and completed; we have seen
 Newness begetting newness, and the old
 Refuse to die, take hold,
 Assume free shape, deny the habitual mould;
 While earth, love, substance grew
 As it was made to do.
 And the event stood new.

MOTHER GOOSE UP-TO-DATE

JOHN MASEFIELD

Relates the Story of Tom, Tom, the Piper's Son

Thomas, the vagrant piper's son,
 Was fourteen when he took to fun;
 He was the sixth of a bewilderin'
 Family of eleven children.
 Mary, the first of all the lot;
 Was married to a drunken sot;
 And Clement, second on the list,
 Fell off the roof and was never missed.
 Susan and little Goldilocks
 Were carried off by the chicken-pox;
 And Franky went—though I can't recall
 Whatever happened to him at all.
 Thomas was next—and he's still alive,
 The only one of them all to thrive.
 The rest just petered out somehow—
 At least, nobody hears of them now.

Now Tom, as I said when I'd begun,
 Was fourteen when he took to fun.
 Wine was the stuff he loved to swim in;
 He lied, and fought, and went with women.
 He scattered oaths, as one flings bounties,
 The dirtiest dog in seven counties.

One morning when the sun was high
 And larks were cleaving the blue sky,
 Singing as though their hearts would break
 With April's keen and happy ache,
 Thomas went walking, rather warm,

Beside old Gaffer Hubbard's farm.
 He saw that wintry days were over
 And bees were out among the clover.
 Earth stretched its legs out in the sun;
 Now that the spring was well begun,
 Heaven itself grew bland and fat.
 So Thomas loafed a while and spat,
 And thought about his many follies—
 Yonder the gang was tipping trollies.
 The sight made Tom's red blood run quicker
 Than whiskey, beer or any liquor.
 "By cripes," he said, "that's what I need;
 "Twill make a man of me indeed.
 Why should I be a roaring slob
 When there's Salvation in a job!"
 He started up—when lo, behind him,
 As though it sought to maim and blind him,
 A savage pig sprang straight against him.
 At first Tom kicked and fought and fenced him,
 And then he fell. But as they rolled
 Tom took a tight and desperate hold
 And thought the bloody fight was over.
 "Here is one pig that's not in clover—
 Tonight I'll have you in my cupboard!"
 Who should come up but Gaffer Hubbard.
 "Leggo that pig."

"What for?" says Tom.
 "It's mine, you lousy, thieving bum."
 "It ain't."
 "It is."
 "Clear out!"
 "We'll see."
 "I'll fix 'ee!"
 "Better let me be."

With that the farmer turned again
 And called out half a dozen men.
 Up they came running. "Here," said he,
 "Here is a pig belongs to me—
 But ye can have it all for eating
 If ye will give this tramp a beating."
 "Hurroo!" they shouted in high feather,
 And jumped on Thomas all together.
So the pig was eat, and Tom was beat;
And Tom went roaring down the street!

WALTER DE LA MARE

Tells the Listener About Jack and Jill

Up to the top of the haunted turf
 They climbed on the moonlit hill.

Not a leaf rustled in the underbrush;
The listening air was still,

And only the noise of the water pail
As it struck on a jutting stone,
Clattered and jarred against the silence
As the two trod on alone.

Up to the moonlit peak they went;
And, though not a word would they say,
Their thoughts outnumbered a poet's love-songs
In the first green weeks of May.

The stealthy shadows crept closer;
They clutched at the hem of Jill's gown;
And there at the very top she stumbled,
And Jack came shuddering down.

Their cries rang out against the stillness,
Pitiful and high and thin.
And the echoes edged back still further
As the silence gathered them in.

EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY

Exhorts Little Boy Blue

From that last acre on oblivion's heap
Come, lad tricked out in bold and trumpery blue;
Come, blow your idle horn, and send the few
Notes with no name against the night. Here sheep
Trample the fetid meadow; here cows creep,
Raising their eyes wherever one or two
Crushing the corn, pause to admire the view;
Come, doubtful dreamer, spurn ignoble sleep.

I tell you this, Boy Blue, lift up your horn
Against the world's deliberate apathy,
Or what we held so dear will be the scorn
Of casual rats and roaches; life will be
A town not worth the taking, a spent call.
Grimly I tell you this. And this is all.

ARCHIBALD MAC LEISH

Suspends the Five Little Pigs

. . . So

Went this little pig from the mainland to the market:
Autumn it was: and a salt wind flowing:

And the rotten grain left on the stalk for no harvest:
And the going rough: the bread wormy: the smoke turned sour:
And the towns a jungle of dogs let loose in a rubble of garbage:

And this little pig stayed home: and this one devoured
 Roast upon roast of beef and drank the milk of the aloe:
 Rinsing his mouth with the melons: drowsing

In a grove of clean sun interwoven with swallows:
 And the earth kind to the bone with rain's fragrance:
 And the moon stroking the breast and the hand grown callous:

And this little pig had none—not for love nor the paying—
 Dust in his corded throat: and the knife above it:
 And the quick slit under the jaw: and he took it bravely:

And this little pig—the littlest and the loveliest—
 Gallic in breed to the impudent turn of his tail
 Cried, "Oui! Oui! Oui!" all the way home . . .

. . . and the hovering

Gale from the . . .

north . . .

the sun-bright names . . .

Gone from the page . . .

and the blazing . . .

lives

Hazy . . .

the days passing . . .

the faces

Blurred or erased . . .

and the five . . .

the hunted five

A word . . .

a child's rhyme . . .

in that country. . . .

EDGAR A. GUEST

Syndicates the Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe

It takes a heap o' children to make a home that's true,
 And home can be a palace grand, or just a plain, old shoe;
 But if it has a mother dear, and a good old dad or two,
 Why, that's the sort of good old home for good old me and you.

Of all the institutions this side the Vale o' Rest
 Howe'er it be, it seems to me a good old mother's best;
 And fathers are a blessing, too, they give the place a tone;
 In fact each child should try and have some parents of its own.

The food can be quite simple; just a sop of milk and bread
 Are plenty when the kiddies know it's time to go to bed.
 And every little sleepy-head will dream about the day
 When he can go to work because a Man's Work is his Play.

And, oh, how sweet his life will seem, with nought to make him cross;
 And he will never watch the clock and always mind the boss.
 And when he thinks (as may occur), this thought will please him best:
 That ninety million think the same—including Eddie Guest.

John Gould Fletcher

JOHN GOULD FLETCHER was born at Little Rock, Arkansas, January 3, 1886. He was educated at Harvard (1903-7) and, after spending several years in Massachusetts, moved to England, where he lived for fifteen years. In 1933 he returned to America, to the family home in Little Rock.

In 1913 Fletcher published five books of poems which he has referred to as "his literary wild oats," five small collections of experimental and faintly interesting verse. In 1914, shortly after the publication of his Fire and Wine (one of the early quintet), Fletcher joined the Imagists. With H. D. and Amy Lowell he became one of the leaders of this interesting movement and his contributions were among the outstanding features of the three anthologies which furnish so illuminating a record of the esthetics of the period. Coincident with the first appearance of Some Imagist Poets, Fletcher discarded his previous style and emerged as a decidedly less conservative and far more arresting poet with Irradiations—Sand and Spray (1915). This volume is full of an extraordinary fancy; imagination riots through it, though it is sometimes a bloodless and bodiless imagination. It is crowded—even overcrowded—with shifting subtleties; a brilliant, haphazard series of improvisations.

In the following book, Goblins and Pagodas (1916), Fletcher carries his unrelated harmonies much further. Color dominates him; the ambitious set of eleven "color symphonies" is an elaborate design in which tone and thought are summoned by color-associations, sometimes closely related, sometimes far-fetched. "It contains," says Conrad Aiken in his appreciative chapter on Fletcher in Scepticisms, "little of the emotion which relates to the daily life of men and women. . . . It is a sort of absolute poetry, a poetry of detached waver and brilliance, a beautiful flowering of language alone—a parthenogenesis, as if language were fertilized by itself rather than by thought or feeling. Remove the magic of phrase and sound and there is nothing left: no thread of continuity, no thought, no story, no emotion. But the magic of phrase and sound is powerful, and it takes one into a fantastic world."

In 1917 Fletcher again began to change in spirit as well as style. Emotion declared itself with surprising candor. After having appeared in the three Imagist anthologies, he sought for depths rather than surfaces; his "Lincoln" accomplished a closer relation to humanity. A moving mysticism speaks from The Tree of Life (1918); the more obviously native Granite and Breakers (1921) and Parables (1925) contain a prophetic note new to this poet. Though less arresting than the ones by which he is best known, the later poems reach depths which the preceding verses never attained. Although the unconscious often dictates Fletcher's fantasies, a calm music dominates them. A grave, subdued lyricism moves through The Black Rock (1928) and Branches of Adam (1926), in which the philosophy is akin to Nietzsche's while the motto might well be Blake's "How is it we have walked through fire, and yet are not consumed?" Never a popular poet, Fletcher gains—and suffers—from his original and fluctuating power. He is the poet held in a state of flux.

XXIV Elegies (1935) is a work which took Fletcher twenty years to write; the poems, one for each hour of the twenty-four, having been composed between 1914 and 1934. The dignified tone and depth of feeling are communicated throughout.

There are, as there would be in a work of this character, many tedious passages, and an American poet in the twentieth century might have spared himself an elegy on "Tristan in Brittany" and an "Elegy on Tintern Abbey." But he atones for these lapses in the "Elegy on the Building of the Washington Bridge," "Elegy on the Jewish People," "Elegy in a Civil War Cemetery," and by the general accent, an inflection which uses the grand manner but restrains the rhetoric. South Star (1941) combines experience and legend; much of it is regional in theme.

Besides his quality as poet Fletcher ranks high as a translator from the French, having made the English versions of The Dance over Fire and Water (by Elie Faure) in 1926 and The Reveries of a Solitary (by J. J. Rousseau) in 1927. The Two Frontiers (1930) is a speculative but highly serious consideration—a sort of prophetic historical essay—regarding the parallels and contrasts of America and Russia.

FROM "IRRADIATIONS"

I

Over the roof-tops race the shadows of clouds;
Like horses the shadows of clouds charge down the street.

Whirlpools of purple and gold,
Winds from the mountains of cinnabar,
Lacquered mandarin moments, palanquins swaying and balancing
Amid vermilion pavilions, against the jade balustrades,
Glint of the glittering wings of dragon-flies in the light:
Silver filaments, golden flakes settling downwards,
Rippling, quivering flutters, repulse and surrender,
The sun broidered upon the rain,
The rain rustling with the sun.

Over the roof-tops race the shadows of clouds;
Like horses the shadows of clouds charge down the street.

II

Flickering of incessant rain
On flashing pavements:
Sudden scurry of umbrellas:
Bending, recurved blossoms of the storm.

The winds come clangling and clattering
From long white highroads whipping in ribbons up summits:
They strew upon the city gusty wafts of apple-blossom,
And the rustling of innumerable translucent leaves.

Uneven tinkling, the lazy rain
Dripping from the eaves.

III

The trees, like great jade elephants,
Chained, stamp and shake 'neath the gadflies of the breeze;
The trees lunge and plunge, unruly elephants:
The clouds are their crimson howdah-canopies,

The sunlight glints like the golden robe of a Shah.
Would I were tossed on the wrinkled-backs of those trees.

IV

O seeded grass, you army of little men
Crawling up the long slope with quivering, quick blades of steel:
You who storm millions of graves, tiny green tentacles of Earth,
Interlace yourselves tightly over my heart,
And do not let me go:
For I would lie here forever and watch with one eye
The pilgrimaging ants in your dull, savage jungles,
The while with the other I see the stiff lines of the slope
Break in mid-air, a wave surprisingly arrested,—
And above them, wavering, dancing, bodiless, colorless, unreal,
The long thin lazy fingers of the heat.

V

The morning is clean and blue and the wind blows up the clouds:
Now my thoughts gathered from afar
Once again in their patched armor, with rusty plumes and blunted swords,
Move out to war.

Smoking our morning pipes we shall ride two and two
Through the woods,
For our old cause keeps us together,
And our hatred is so precious not death or defeat can break it.

God willing, we shall this day meet that old enemy
Who has given us so many a good beating.
Thank God we have a cause worth fighting for,
And a cause worth losing and a good song to sing

GREEN SYMPHONY

I

The glittering leaves of the rhododendrons
Balance and vibrate in the cool air;
While in the sky above them
White clouds chase each other.

Like scampering rabbits,
Flashes of sunlight sweep the lawn;
They fling in passing
Patterns of shadow,
Golden and green.

With long cascades of laughter,
The mating birds dart and swoop to the turf:
'Mid their mad trillings
Glints the gay sun behind the trees.

Down there are deep blue lakes:
 Orange blossom droops in the water.
 In the tower of the winds
 All the bells are set adrift:
 Jingling
 For the dawn.

Thin fluttering streamers
 Of breeze lash through the swaying boughs,
 Palely expectant
 The earth receives the slanting rain.

The glittering leaves of the rhododendron
 Are shak'en like blue-green blades of grass,
 Flickering, crackling, falling:
 Splintering in a million fragments.

The wind runs laughing up the slope
 Stripping off handfuls of wet green leaves,
 To fling in people's faces.
 Wallowing on the daisy-powdered turf,
 Clutching at the sunlight,
 Cavorting in the shadow.

Like baroque pearls,
 Like cloudy emeralds,
 The clouds and the trees clash together;
 Whirling and swirling,
 In the tumult
 Of the spring,
 And the wind.

II

The trees splash the sky with their fingers,
 A restless green rout of stars.

With whirling movement
 They swing their boughs
 About their stems:
 Planes on planes of light and shadow
 Pass among them,
 Opening fanlike to fall.

The trees are like a sea;
 Tossing,
 Trembling,
 Roaring,
 Wallowing,
 Darting their long green flickering fronds up at the sky,
 Spotted with white blossom-spray.

The trees are roofs:
 Hollow caverns of cool blue shadow,
 Solemn arches
 In the afternoons.
 The whole vast horizon
 In terrace beyond terrace,
 Pinnacle above pinnacle,
 Lifts to the sky
 Serrated ranks of green on green.

They caress the roofs with their fingers,
 They sprawl about the river to look into it;
 Up the hill they come
 Gesticulating challenge:
 They cower together
 In dark valleys;
 They yearn out over the fields.

Enameled domes
 Tumble upon the grass,
 Crashing in ruin,
 Quiet at last.

The trees lash the sky with their leaves,
 Uneasily shaking their dark green manes.

III

Far let the voices of the mad wild birds be calling me,
 I will abide in this forest of pines.

When the wind blows
 Battling through the forest,
 I hear it distantly,
 The crash of a perpetual sea.

When the rain falls,
 I watch the silver spears slanting downwards
 From pale river-pools of sky,
 Enclosed in dark fronds.

When the sun shines,
 I weave together distant branches till they enclose mighty circles,
 I sway to the movement of hooded summits,
 I swim leisurely in deep blue seas of air.

I hug the smooth bark of stately red pillars
 And with cones carefully scattered
 I mark the progression of dark dial-shadows
 Flung diagonally downwards through the afternoon.

This turf is not like turf:
 It is a smooth dry carpet of velvet,
 Embroidered with brown patterns of needles and cones.
 These trees are not like trees:
 They are innumerable feathery pagoda-umbrellas,
 Stiffly ungracious to the wind,
 Teetering on red-lacquered stems.

In the evening I listen to the winds' lisping,
 While the conflagrations of the sunset flicker and clash behind me,
 Flamboyant crenellations of glory amid the charred ebony boles.

In the night the fiery nightingales
 Shall clash and trill through the silence:
 Like the voices of mermaids crying
 From the sea.

Long ago has the moon whelmed this uncompleted temple.
 Stars swim like gold fish far above the black arches.

Far let the timid feet of dawn fly to catch me:
 I will abide in this forest of pines:
 For I have unveiled naked beauty,
 And the things that she whispered to me in the darkness,
 Are buried deep in my heart.

Now let the black tops of the pine-trees break like a spent wave,
 Against the gray sky:
 These are tombs and temples and altars sun-kindled for me.

L O N D O N   N I G H T F A L L

I saw the shapes that stood upon the clouds:
 And they were tiger-breasted, shot with light,
 And all of them, lifting long trumpets together,
 Blew over the city, for the night to come.
 Down in the street, we floundered in the mud;
 Above, in endless files, gold angels came
 And stood upon the clouds, and blew their horns
 For night.

Like a wet petal crumpled,
 Twilight fell suddenly on the weary city;
 The buses lurched and groaned,
 The shops put up their doors.

But skywards, far aloft,
 The angels, vanishing, waved broad plumes of gold,
 Summoning spirits from a thousand hills
 To pour the thick night out upon the earth.

THE SKATERS

Black swallows swooping or gliding
 In a flurry of entangled loops and curves;
 The skaters skim over the frozen river.
 And the grinding click of their skates as they impinge upon the surface,
 Is like the brushing together of thin wing-tips of silver.

LINCOLN

I

Like a gaunt, scraggly pine
 Which lifts its head above the mournful sandhills;
 And patiently, through dull years of bitter silence,
 Untended and uncared for, begins to grow.

Ungainly, laboring, huge,
 The wind of the north has twisted and gnarled its branches;
 Yet in the heat of midsummer days, when thunder-clouds ring the horizon,
 A nation of men shall rest beneath its shade.

And it shall protect them all,
 Hold everyone safe there, watching aloof in silence;
 Until at last one mad stray bolt from the zenith
 Shall strike it in an instant down to earth.

II

There was a darkness in this man; an immense and hollow darkness,
 Of which we may not speak, nor share with him, nor enter;
 A darkness through which strong roots stretched downwards into the earth
 Towards old things;
 Towards the herdman-kings who walked the earth and spoke with God,
 Towards the wanderers who sought for they knew not what, and found their goal at last;
 Towards the men who waited, only waited patiently when all seemed lost,
 Many bitter winters of defeat;
 Down to the granite of patience
 These roots swept, knotted fibrous roots, prying, piercing, seeking,
 And drew from the living rock and the living waters about it
 The red sap to carry upwards to the sun.

Not proud, but humble,
 Only to serve and pass on, to endure to the end through service;
 For the ax is laid at the root of the trees, and all that bring not forth good fruit
 Shall be cut down on the day to come and cast into the fire.

III

There is silence abroad in the land today,
 And in the hearts of men, a deep and anxious silence;
 And, because we are still at last, those bronze lips slowly open,
 Those hollow and weary eyes take on a gleam of light.

Slowly a patient, firm-syllabled voice cuts through the endless silence
 Like laboring oxen that drag a plow through the chaos of rude clay-fields:
 "I went forward as the light goes forward in early spring,
 But there were also many things which I left behind.

"Tombs that were quiet;
 One, of a mother, whose brief light went out in the darkness,
 One, of a loved one, the snow on whose grave is long falling,
 One, only of a child, but it was mine.

"Have you forgot your graves? Go, question them in anguish,
 Listen long to their unstirred lips. From your hostages to silence,
 Learn there is no life without death, no dawn without sun-setting,
 No victory but to Him who has given all."

IV

The clamor of cannon dies down, the furnace-mouth of the battle is silent.
 The midwinter sun dips and descends, the earth takes on afresh its bright colors.
 But he whom we mocked and obeyed not, he whom we scorned and mistrusted,
 He has descended, like a god, to his rest.

Over the uproar of cities,
 Over the million intricate threads of life wavering and crossing,
 In the midst of problems we know not, tangling, perplexing, ensnaring,
 Rises one white tomb alone.
 Beam over it, stars.
 Wrap it round, stripes—stripes red for the pain that he bore for you—
 Enfold it forever, O flag, rent, soiled, but repaired through your anguish;
 Long as you keep him there safe, the nations shall bow to your law.

Strew over him flowers:
 Blue forget-me-nots from the north, and the bright pink arbutus
 From the east, and from the west rich orange blossoms,
 But from the heart of the land take the passion-flower;

Rayed, violet, dim,
 With the nails that pierced, the cross that he bore and the circlet,
 And beside it there lay also one lonely snow-white magnolia,
 Bitter for remembrance of the healing which has passed.

A REBEL

Tie a bandage over his eyes,
 And at his feet
 Let rifles drearily patter
 Their death-prayers of defeat.

Throw a blanket over his body,
 It need no longer stir;
 Truth will but stand the stronger
 For all who died for her.

Now he has broken through
To his own secret place;
Which, if we dared to do,
We would have no power left to look on that dead face.

BEFORE OLYMPUS

Across the sky run streaks of white light, aching;
Across the earth the chattering grass is sprawling;
Across the sea roll troubled gleams awaking,
Across the steeps dark broken shapes are crawling.

We have been scourged with youth, a rod in pickle
To cut the hide from our own hearts. We know
The tree of life is also cursed. We heed
The silent laughter of gray gods of time.

We do not seek the lithe and brittle music
Of swords and flame. We have no more desire
For glory or contempt. The moment flies
Past us, and shouting carries its echo on.

The clank of wheels and pumps, the screech of levers
No longer now afflicts our inmost bearing;
The old wise nightingales have longer ears,
They sing the blooming of wild immortelles.

And through the desolation of great cities
As in a madhouse we go peering where Black butterflies slit about a carcass. Words
Gallop about the sky. The earth broods like a stone.

Heaven is a blank news-sheet fixed and trembling
Between the knees of God. The grass runs crawling.
The waves of the sea their laughter are dissembling,
But who will reap them when our scythes are falling?

ADVENT

I have no more gold;
I spent it all on foolish songs,
Gold I cannot give to you.

Incense, too, I burned
To the great idols of this world;
I must come with empty hands.

Myrrh I lost
In that darker sepulcher
Where another Christ
Died for man in vain.—

I can only give myself,
 I have nothing left but this.
 Naked I wait, naked I fall
 Into Your Hands, Your Hands.

THE BIRTH OF LUCIFER

Helpless is God in struggling with that star
 Which in derision makes His light less dim;
 The evening bids the morning from afar
 To rise and conquer Him;

After nine hours of night the sun, expiring,
 Breaks the dark vessel that it fills; and then
 Erect against the noon it stands, desiring
 This transience, making us both Gods and men:

Life seeks again its dark and secret places,
 Where under the sunset's leveled sword, it keeps
 Its rest until rekindled in new faces,
 Old worlds awake from their too dreamless sleep.

A NEW HEAVEN

We have our hopes and fears that flout us,
 We have our illusions, changeless through the years;
 We have our dreams of rest after long struggle,
 After our toil is finished, folded hands.
 But for those who have fallen in battle,
 What Heaven can there be?

Heaven is full of those who can remember
 The ebbing-out of life that slowly lingered
 At the dark doors of pain;
 Heaven is full of those who dropped their burden
 At last through weariness;
 But these the War has taken
 Remember naught but their own exultant youth
 Filling their hearts with unaccomplished dreams:
 The trumpet-call—then the swift scaring darkness
 Stilling the proud sad song.

How will these enter in
 Our old dull Heaven?
 Where we seek only to drowse at ease, unthinking,
 Since we are safe at last.
 Safe? For these souls who faced a thousand dangers,
 And found sly Death that robbed them of their chance,
 Ere it befell?
 Safe—can a Heaven which is safe and painless,
 Ever be Heaven to them?

Somewhere amid the clouds there is the home of thunder;
 Thunder is naught to them,
 It is a ball, a heavy plaything
 They may kick hither and thither with their feet.
 Lightning is but a toy—the flaming stars
 Are endless camp-fire lights;
 And for the silence of eternity,
 They too on out-post duty, often heard it speak.

We have the dreams of our fat lives that lead us
 To waste our lives;
 We have the false hope we are serving others
 When it is but ourselves we serve;
 Yet these who have never lived, and whose sole service
 Was but to die too soon,
 Perhaps somewhere are making a new Heaven
 Filled with the divine despair and joy this dead earth never knew.

A D M A J O R E M H O M I N I S
G L O R I A M

In the summit of my head
 Pride and wrath their pain have shed;

In my heart's fierce furnace-fire
 Knowledge struggles with desire:

At the bottom of my heart,
 Love and pity sleep apart.

Wherefore should my hells be high,
 And my heavens below my eye?

Why should I, who earthfixed dwell,
 Sink to heaven, rise to hell?

T H E L O F T Y H O U S E

Go not into the lofty house;
 Nor pass the pillared portico that, tall,

Looks over all;
 Unless you wish to rouse
 The dead. They will be ready when you call.
 Thin hands will touch worn chair-backs and sad eyes
 Look on you long without the least surprise
 Go not into the lofty house, at Spring or Fall.
 For ghosts are happiest left
 About their own affairs;
 Why should you trouble these, so long bereft
 Of all but loss, with loss that is not theirs?
 Go not into the house, I say;
 Let the pale pillars still untroubled rear
 Their light against the moons that shifting, play
 Against the pediment. Let windows peer Or remain blank, close-shuttered. Let the mouse
 Gnaw the old trunks in the dark attic stored
 For God's sake do not go into the house,
 Unless you share a past still undeplored.

William Rose Benét

WILLIAM ROSE BENÉT was born at Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, February 2, 1886. He was educated at Albany Academy and graduated from Yale in 1907. After various experiences as freelance writer, publisher's reader, magazine editor, and second lieutenant in the U. S. Air Service, Benét became Associate Editor of the New York Post's Literary Review in 1920. He resigned in 1924 to become one of the founders and editors of The Saturday Review of Literature.

The outstanding feature of Benét's verse is its extraordinary versatility; an Oriental imagination runs through his pages. Like the title-poem of his first volume, Merchants from Cathay (1913), Benét's volumes vibrate with a vigorous music; they are full of the sonorous stuff that one rolls out crossing wintry fields or tramping a road alone. But Benét's charm is not confined to the lift and swing of rollicking choruses. The Falconer of God (1914), The Great White Wall (1916) and The Burglar of the Zodiac (1918) contain decorations bold as they are brilliant; they ring with a strange and spicy music evoked from seemingly casual words. His scope is wide, although he is most at home in fancies which glow with a halt-lurid, half-humorous reflection of the grotesque. There are times indeed when Benét seems to be forcing his ingenuity. The poet frequently lets his fantastic Pegasus run away with him, and what started out to be a gallop among the stars ends in a scraping of shins on the pavement. But he is saved by an acrobatic dexterity even when his energy betrays him. Perpetual Light (1919), a memorial to his first wife, is, naturally, a more subdued collection.

Moons of Grandeur (1920) represents an appreciable development of Benét's whimsical gift; a combination of Eastern phantasy and Western vigor. Even more arresting are those poems which appeared subsequent to this volume. A firmer line, a cooler condensation may be found in Man Possessed (1927), a selection of the best of the previous volumes with many new poems. "Whale" is a particularly brilliant example; "The Horse Thief" is one of the most fanciful and one of the most popular of American ballads; "Jesse James" rocks with high spirits and the true balladist's gusto; "Inscription for a Mirror in a Deserted Dwelling," written during the life of his second wife, Elinor Wylie, reflects the poet who wrote it and the poet to whom it was written, while "Sagacity" is a tribute to her memory. Golden Fleece (1935) is a more critical selection of Benét's poems with the addition of several new verses, many of them in an unexpectedly light vein.

Besides his verse, the older Benét is the author of two novels and several tales for children, the editor (with Henry Seidel Canby and John Drinkwater) of Twentieth Century Poetry (1929), and Fifty Poets (1932), an "auto-anthology" in which fifty American poets chose their own best, or favorite, poems. The Dust Which Is God (1941) is a portrait in which the autobiographical element is lightly disguised.

MERCHANTS FROM CATHAY

How that They came.

Their heels slapped their bumping mules; their fat chaps glowed.
Glory unto Mary, each seemed to wear a crown!
Like sunset their robes were on the wide, white road:
So we saw those mad merchants come dusting into town!

Of their Beasts,

Two paunchy beasts they rode on and two they drove before.
May the Saints all help us, the tiger-stripes they had!
And the panniers upon them swelled full of stuffs and ore!
The square buzzed and jostled at a sight so mad.

And their Boast,

They bawled in their beards, and their turbans they wrived.
They stopped by the stalls with curvetting and clatter.
As bronze as the bracken their necks and faces dyed—
And a stave they sat singing, to tell us of the matter.

With its Burthen

"For your silks, to Sugarmagol! For your dyes, to Isfahan!
Wend fruits from the Isle o' Lamaree.

But for magic merchandise,

For treasure-trove and spice,

Here's a catch and a carol to the great, grand Chan,
The King of all the Kings across the sea!

And Chorus.

"Here's a catch and a carol to the great, grand Chan;
For we won through the deserts to his sunset barbican;
And the mountains of his palace no Titan's reach may span
Where he wields his seignorie!

*A first Slave
Fearsome,*

"Red-as-blood skins of panthers, so bright against the sun
On the walls of the halls where his pillared state is set
They daze with a blaze no man may look upon.

And with conduits of beverage those floors run wet.

*And a second Right hand
To stomach*

"His wives stiff with riches, they sit before him there.
Bird and beast at his feast make song and clapping cheer.
And jugglers and enchanters, all walking on the air,
Make fall eclipse and thunder—make moons and suns appear!

*And a third,
Which is a Laughable
Thing.*

"Once the Chan, by his enemies sore-prest, and sorely spent,
Lay, so they say, in a thicket 'neath a tree
Where the howl of an owl vexed his foes from their intent:
Then that fowl for a holy bird of reverence made he!

We gape to Hear them end,

"A catch and a carol to the great, grand Chan!
Pastmasters of disasters, our desert canavan
Won through all peril to his sunset barbican,
Where he wields his seignorie!
And crowns he gave us! We end where we began:
A catch and a carol to the great, grand Chan!
The King of all the Kings across the sea!"

And are in Terror,

Those mad, antic Merchants! . . . Their striped beasts did beat
 The market-square suddenly with hooves of beaten gold!
 The ground yawned gaping and flamed beneath our feet!
 They plunged to Pits Abysmal with their wealth untold!

*And dread
it is Devil's Work!*

And some say the Chan himself in anger dealt the stroke—
 For sharing of his secrets with silly, common folk:
 But Holy, Blessed Mary, preserve us as you may
 Lest once more those mad Merchants come chanting from Cathay!

NIGHT

Let the night keep
 What the night takes,
 Sighs buried deep,
 Ancient heart-aches,
 Groans of the lover,
 Tears of the lost;

Let day discover not
 All the night cost!

Let the night keep
 Love's burning bliss,
 Drowned in deep sleep
 Whisper and kiss,

Thoughts like white flowers
In hedges of May;
Let such deep hours not
Fade with the day!

Monarch is night
Of all eldest things,
Pain and affright,
Rapturous wings;
Night the crown, night the sword
Lifted to smite.
Kneel to your overlord,
Children of night!

THE FAWN IN THE SNOW

The brown-dappled fawn
Bereft of the doe
Shivers in blue shadow
Of the glaring snow,

His whole world bright
As a jewel, and hard,
Diamond white,
Turquoise barred.

The trees are black,
Their needles gold,
Their boughs crack
In the keen cold.

The brown-dappled fawn
Bereft of the doe
Trembles and shudders
At the bright snow.

The air whets
The warm throat,
The frost frets
At the smooth coat.

Brown agate eyes
Opened round
Agonize
At the cold ground,

At the cold heaven
Enamored pale,
At the earth shriven
By the snowy gale,

At magic glitter
Burning to blind,
At beauty bitter
As an almond rind.

Fawn, fawn,
Seek for your south,
For kind dawn
With her cool mouth,

For green sod
With gold and blue
Dappled, as God
Has dappled you, . . .

The shivering fawn
Paws at the snow.
South and dawn
Lie below;

Richness and mirth,
Dearth forgiven,
A happy earth,
A warm heaven.

The sleet streams;
The snow flies;
The fawn dreams
With wide brown eyes.

WHALE

*Rain, with a silver flail;
Sun, with a golden ball;
Ocean, wherein the whale
Swims minnow-small;*

*I heard the whale rejoice
And cynic sharks attend;
He cried with a purple voice,
“The Lord is my Friend!”*

“With flanged and battering tail,
With huge and dark baleen,
He said, ‘Let there be Whale
In the Cold and Green!’

“He gave me a water-spout,
A side like a harbor wall;
The Lord from cloud looked out
And planned it all.

With glittering crown atilt
He leaned on a glittering rail;
He said, 'Where Sky is spilt,
Let there be Whale.'

"Tier upon tier of wings
Blushed and blanched and bowed;
Phalanxed fiery things
Cried in the cloud;

"Million-eyed was the mirk
At the plan not understood;
But the Lord looked on His work
And saw it was good.

"He gave me marvelous girth
For the curve of back and breast,
And a tiny eye of mirth
To hide His jest.

"He made me a floating hill,
A plunging deep-sea mine.
This was the Lord's will;
The Lord is Divine.

"I magnify His name
In earthquake and eclipse,
In weltering molten flame
And wrecks of ships,

"In waves that lick the moon;
I, the plow of the sea!
I am the Lord's boon;
The Lord made me!"

The sharks barked from beneath,
As the whale rollicked and roared,
"Yes, and our grinning teeth,
Was it not the Lord?"

Then questions pattered like hail
From fishes large and small.
"The Lord is mighty," said Whale,
"The Lord made all!"

"His is a mammoth jest
Life may never betray;
He has laid it up in His breast
Till Judgment Day;

"But high when combers foam
And tower their last of all,
My power shall haul you home
Through Heaven wall.

"A trumpet then in the gates,
To the ramps a thundering drum,
I shall lead you where He waits
For His Whale to come.

"Where His cloudy seat is placed
On high in an empty dome,
I shall trail the Ocean abased
In chains of foam,

"Unwieldy, squattering dread.
Where the blazing cohorts stand
At last I shall lift my head
As it feels His hand.

"Then wings with a million eyes
Before mine eyes shall quail:
'Look you, all Paradise,
I was His Whale!'

*I heard the Whale rejoice,
As he splayed the waves to a fan:
"And the Lord shall say with His Voice,
'Leviathan!'*

"The Lord shall say with His Tongue,
'Now let all Heaven give hail
To my Jest when I was young,
To my very Whale.'"

*Then the Whale careered in the Sea,
He floundered with flailing tail;
Flourished and rollicked he,
"Aha! Mine Empery!
For the Lord said, 'Let Whale Be!'
And there Was Whale!"*

THE HORSE THIEF

There he moved, cropping the grass at the purple canyon's lip.
His mane was mixed with the moonlight that silvered his snow-white side,
For the moon sailed out of a cloud with the wake of a spectral ship.
I crouched and I crawled on my belly, my lariat coil looped wide.

Dimly and dark the mesas broke on the starry sky.

A pall covered every color of their gorgeous glory at noon.

I smelt the yucca and mesquite, and stifled my heart's quick cry,

And wormed and crawled on my belly to where he moved against the moon!

Some Moorish barb was that mustang's sire. His lines were beyond all wonder.

From the prick of his ears to the flow of his tail he ached in my throat and eyes.

Steel and velvet grace! As the prophet says, God had "clothed his neck with thunder."

Oh, marvelous with the drifting cloud he drifted across the skies!

And then I was near at hand—crouched, and balanced, and cast the coil;

And the moon was smothered in cloud, and the rope through my hands with a rip!

But somehow I gripped and clung, with the blood in my brain a-boil,—

With a turn round the rugged tree-stump there on the purple canyon's lip.

Right into the stars he reared aloft, his red eye rolling and raging.

He whirled and sunfished and lashed, and rocked the earth to thunder and flame.

He squealed like a regular devil horse. I was haggard and spent and aging—

Roped clean, but almost storming clear, his fury too fierce to tame.

And I cursed myself for a tenderfoot moon-dazzled to play the part,

But I was doubly desperate then, with the posse pulled out from town,

Or I'd never have tried it. I only knew I must get a mount and a start.

The filly had snapped her foreleg short. I had had to shoot her down.

So there he struggled and strangled, and I snubbed him around the tree.

Nearer, a little nearer—hoofs planted, and lolling tongue—

Till a sudden slack pitched me backward. He reared right on top of me.

Mother of God—that moment! He missed me . . . and up I swung.

Somehow, gone daft completely and clawing a bunch of his mane,

As he stumbled and tripped in the lariat, there I was—up and astride

And cursing for seven counties! And the mustang? Just insane!

Crack-bang! went the rope; we cannoned off the tree—then—gods, that ride!

A rocket—that's all, a rocket! I dug with my teeth and nails.

Why, we never hit even the high spots (though I hardly remember things),

But I heard a monstrous booming like a thunder of flapping sails

When he spread—well, call me a liar!—when he spread those wings, those wings!

So white that my eyes were blinded, thick-feathered and wide unfurled,

They beat the air into billows. We sailed, and the earth was gone.

Canyon and desert and mesa withered below, with the world.

And then I knew that mustang; for I—was Bellerophon!

Yes, glad as the Greek, and mounted on a horse of the elder gods,

With never a magic bridle or a fountain-mirror nigh!

My chaps and spurs and holster must have looked it? What's the odds?

I'd a leg over lightning and thunder, careering across the skyl

And forever streaming before me, fanning my forehead cool,
 Flowed a mane of molten silver; and just before my thighs
 (As I gripped his velvet-muscled ribs, while I cursed myself for a fool),
 The steady pulse of those pinions—their wonderful fall and rise!

The bandanna I bought in Bowie blew loose and whipped from my neck.
 My shirt was stuck to my shoulders and ribboning out behind.
 The stars were dancing, wheeling and glancing, dipping with smirk and beck.
 The clouds were flowing, dusking and glowing. We rode a roaring wind.

We soared through the silver starlight to knock at the planets' gates.
 New shimmering constellations came whirling into our ken.
 Red stars and green and golden swung out of the void that waits
 For man's great last adventure. The Signs took shape—and then

I knew the lines of that Centaur the moment I saw him come!
 The musical box of the heavens all round us rolled to a tune
 That tinkled and chimed and trilled with silver sounds that struck you dumb,
 As if some archangel were grinding out the music of the moon.

Melody-drunk on the Milky Way, as we swept and soared hilarious,
 Full in our pathway, sudden he stood—the Centaur of the Stars,
 Flashing from head and hoofs and breast! I knew him for Sagittarius.
 He reared, and bent and drew his bow. He crouched as a boxer spars.

Flung back on his haunches, weird he loomed—then leapt—and the dim void lightened.
 Old White Wings shied and swerved aside, and fled from the splendor-shod.
 Through a flashing welter of worlds we charged. I knew why my horse was frightened.
 He had two faces—a dog's and a man's—that Babylonian god!

Also, he followed us real as fear. Ping! went an arrow past.
 My broncho buck-jumped, humping high. We plunged . . . I guess that's all!
 I lay on the purple canyon's lip, when I opened my eyes at last—
 Stiff and sore and my head like a drum, but I broke no bones in the fall.

So you know—and now you may string me up. Such was the way you caught me.
 Thank you for letting me tell it straight, though you never could greatly care.
 For I took a horse that wasn't mine! . . . But there's one the heavens brought me,
 And I'll hang right happy, because I know he is waiting for me up there.

From creamy muzzle to cannon-bone, by God, he's a peerless wonder!
 He is steel and velvet and furnace-fire, and death's supremest prize,
 And never again shall be roped on earth that neck that is "clothed with thunder. . . ."
 String me up, Dave! Go dig my grave! I rode him across the skies!

BRAZEN TONGUE

Quick in spite I said unkind
 Words that should have struck me blind.
 Flatly on my eardrums rung
 The raucous echoes of my tongue.

Burnished bees in an iron hive
 Seemed my wits, and scarce alive
 I sat with elbows on my knees
 Sick with silence like disease.

Slowly through the solid floor
 I sank, till there was nothing more
 Than a grease-spot of me there
 Shadowed by the upright chair.

O last night I lay awake
 Parrying darkness for your sake,
 Like an armory glittered bright
 The lilded hours of our delight!

O this morning I intended
 All the virtues this has ended,

Golden as a new-coined planet!
 Now I wither into granite.

Tongue, you are a tongue of fire,
 Shriveling like a white-hot wire,
 Blackening like a dragon's breath
 Flower-fluttering fields with death.

Tongue, you are a tongue of brass
 In the jawbone of an ass,
 Slaying what was most divine,—
 Not the recking Philistine.

So, she dug me from my quarry;
 Came and said that she was sorry;
 Sprinkled me with words like myrrh;
 So I sat and stared at her;

And so I climb the burning mountain
 And sit beside the lava fountain,
 And, white with ashes, wonder why
 In the devil I am I.

JESSE JAMES

(A Design in Red and Yellow for a Nickel Library)

Jesse James was a two-gun man,
 (Roll on, Missouri!)
 Strong-arm chief of an outlaw clan,
 (From Kansas to Illinois!)
 He twirled an old Colt forty-five;
 (Roll on, Missouri!)
 They never took Jesse James alive.
 (Roll, Missouri, roll!)

Jesse James was King of the Wes';
 (Cataracts in the Missouri!)
 He'd a di'mon' heart in his lef' breas';
 (Brown Missouri rolls!)
 He'd a fire in his heart no hurt could stifle;
 (Thunder, Missouri!)
 Lion eyes an' a Winchester rifle.
 (Missouri, roll down!)

Jesse James rode a pinto hawse;
 Come at night to a water-cawse;
 Tretched with the rowel that pinto's flank;
 She sprung the torrent from bank to bank.

Jesse rode through a sleepin' town;
 Looked the moonlit street both up an' down;

Crack-crack-crack, the street ran flames
An' a great voice cried, "I'm Jesse James!"

Hawse an' afoot they're after Jess!
(Roll on, Missouri!)

Spurrin' an' spurrin'—but he's gone Wes'.
(Brown Missouri rolls!)

He was ten foot tall when he stood in his boots;
(Lightnin' like the Missouri!)

More'n a match fer sich galoots.
(Roll, Missouri, roll!)

Jesse James rode outa the sage;
Roun' the rocks come the swayin' stage;
Straddlin' the road a giant stan's
An' a great voice bellers, "Throw up yer han's!"

Jesse raked in the di'mon' rings,
The big gold watches an' the yuther things;
Jesse divvied 'em then an' thar
With a cryin' child had lost her mar.

They're creepin'; they're crawlin'; they're stalkin' Jess;
(Roll on, Missouri!)

They's a rumor he's gone much further Wes';
(Roll, Missouri, roll!)

They's word of a cayuse hitched to the bars
(Ruddy clouds on Missouri!)

Of a golden sunset that busts into stars.
(Missouri, roll down!)

Jesse James rode hell fer leather;
He was a hawse an' a man together;
In a cave in a mountain high up in air
He lived with a rattlesnake, a wolf, an' a bear.

Jesse's heart was as sof' as a woman;
Fer guts an' stren'th he was sooper-human;
He could put six shots through a woodpecker's eye
And take in one swaller a gallon o' rye.

They sought him here an' they sought him there,
(Roll on, Missouri!)

But he strides by night through the ways of the air;
(Brown Missouri rolls!)

They say he was took an' they say he is dead,
(Thunder, Missouri!)

But he ain't—he's a sunset overhead!
(Missouri down to the seal!)

Jesse James was a Hercules.
When he went through the woods he tore up the trees.
When he went on the plains he smoked the groun'
An' the hull lan' shuddered fer miles aroun'.

Jesse James wore a red bandanner
 That waved on the breeze like the Star Spangled Banner;
 In seven states he cut up daddos.
 He's gone with the buffer an' the desperadoes.

Yes, Jesse James was a two-gun man
(Roll on, Missouri!)
 The same as when this song began;
(From Kansas to Illinois!)
 An' when you see a sunset bust into flames
(Lightnin' like the Missouri!)
 Or a thunderstorm blaze—that's Jesse James!
(Hear that Missouri roll!)

ETERNAL MASCULINE

Neither will I put myself forward as others may do,
 Neither, if you wish me to flatter, will I flatter you;
 I will look at you grimly, and so you will know I am true.

Neither when all do agree and lout low and salute,
 And you are beguiled by the tree and devout for the fruit,
 Will I seem to be aught but the following eyes of a brute.

I will stand to one side and sip of my hellebore wine,
 I will snarl and deride the antics and airs of the swine;
 You will glance in your pride, but I will deny you a sign.

I will squint at the moon and be peaceful because I am dead,
 I will whistle a tune and be glad of the harshness I said.
O you will come soon, when the stars are a mist overhead!

You will come, with eyes fierce; you will act a defiant surprise.
 Quick lightnings will pierce to our hearts from the pain in our eyes,
 Standing strained and averse, with the trembling of love that defies.

And then I will know, by the heartbreaking turn of your head,
 My madness brought low in a hell that is spared to the dead.
 The upas will grow from the poisonous words that I said;

From under its shade out to where like a statue you stand,
 Without wish to evade, I will reach, I will cry with my hand,
 With my spirit dismayed, with my eyes and my mouth full of sand. . . .

INSCRIPTION FOR A MIRROR IN A DESERTED DWELLING

Set silver cone to tulip flame!
 The mantel mirror floats with night
 Reflecting still green watery light.
 The sconces glimmer. If she came
 Like silence through the shadowy wall
 Where walls are wading in the moon

The dark would tremble back to June.
 So faintly now the moonbeams fall,
 So soft this silence, that the verge
 Of speech is reached. Remote and pale
 As through some faint viridian veil
 The lovely lineaments emerge,
 The clearly amber eyes, the tint
 Of pearl and faintest rose, the hair

To lacquered light, a silken snare
 Of devious bronze, the tiny dint
 With which her maker mocked the years
 Beneath her lip imprinting praise.
 Dim flower of desecrating days,
 The old reflection, strange with tears,
 Is gazing out upon the gloom,
 Is widening eyes to find the light
 In reminiscence, in the night
 Of this foregone, forgotten room.

And you, the watcher, with your eyes
 As wide as hers in dark distress,
 Who never knew her loveliness
 But guess through glass her shadowy guise,
 For you around the glass I trace
 This secret writing, that will burn
 Like witch-fire should her shade return
 To haunt you with that wistful face.

At least no gesturing figures pass;
 Here is no tragic immanence
 Of all the scenes of small events
 That pantomimed before the glass.
 No bliss, no passion, no despair,
 No other actor lingers now;
 The moonlight on a lifted brow
 Is all,—the eyes so wide aware
 Of clouds that pass with stars, and suns,
 Of mystery that pales the cheek,
 Of all the heart could never speak,
 Of joy and pain so vivid once,
 That ceased with music and the lights,
 Dimming to darkness and repose. . . .
 Lean then and kiss that ghostly rose
 That was her face, this night of nights,—
 And know the vision fled indeed,
 The mirror's surface smooth and cold,
 The words unbreathed, the tale untold,
 The past unpiteous to your need!

SAGACITY

We knew so much; when her beautiful eyes could lighten,
 Her beautiful laughter follow our phrase;
 Or the gaze go hard with pain, the lips tighten,
 On the bitterer days.
 Oh, ours was all knowing then, all generous displaying.
 Such wisdom we had to show!
 And now there is merely silence, silence, silence saying
 All we did not know.

Hazel Hall

HAZEL HALL was born February 7, 1886, in St. Paul, Minnesota, but as a small child was taken to Portland, Oregon, where she remained the rest of her life. Either from the effects of scarlet fever or as the result of a fall, she was unable to walk after she was twelve years old. She never complained. As Ruth Hall, her sister, wrote in a letter to the editor, "The word 'invalid' was anathema in her ears. Although she was forced to spend her days in a wheel chair, she possessed a rare abundance of health, which enabled her to know life concretely, as a satisfaction for her senses, even though it might remain an abstract sorrow for her mind. She lived life thoroughly, admiring its complexities, with a fine relish for the irony which gave a bitter-sweet taste to the whole."

Curtains, her first volume, which appeared in 1921, is, in the main, a book of charming rather than arresting lyrics; it is evident from the poems that her needle was not only a means of support but a refuge for the poet. The fact that she herself could never walk made her extraordinarily sensitive to the tramp or shuffle of feet; her mind seemed filled with the thought of men marching eternally about the earth. And so her second book, Walkers (1923), is filled with the wonder of mere pedestrian life, of a boy whacking a stick against a wall, of couples passing at dusk, of feet half-sinking in snow, of children's heels flashing in the sun.

Her third volume, Cry of Time (1929), upon which she was at work at the time of her death, contains her finest writing and the poems by which she probably will be remembered longest. These later poems have the appeal of the first two books with an emotional depth which the early volumes barely suggested.

Although Hazel Hall was in sound health until a few weeks before her death, she seemed to have a premonition that the end was near before she became critically ill. She died May 11, 1924. The last two poems which she wrote were "Slow Death" and "Riddle," both of which appeared a fortnight after her death.

FLIGHT

A bird may curve across the sky—
A feather of dusk, a streak of song;
And save a space and a bird to fly
There may be nothing all day long.

Flying through a cloud-made place
A bird may tangle east and west,
Maddened with going, crushing space
With the arrow of its breast.

Though never wind nor motion bring
It back again from indefinite lands,
The thin blue shadow of its wing
May cross and cross above your hands.

ANY WOMAN

When there is nothing left but darkness
And the day is like a leaf
Fallen onto sodden grasses,
You have earned a subtle grief.

Never let them take it from you,
Never let them come and say:
Night is made of black gauze; moonlight
Blows the filmy dark away.

You have a right to know the thickness
Of the night upon your face,
To feel the inky blue of nothing
Drift like ashes out of space.

You have a right to lift your fingers
And stare in pity at your hands

That are the exquisite frail mirrors
Of all the mind misunderstands.

Your hand, potent in portrayal,
Falls of its own weight to rest
In a quiet curve of sorrow
On the beating of your breast.

HERE COMES THE THIEF

Here comes the thief
Men nickname Time,
Oh, hide you, leaf,
And hide you, rhyme.
Leaf, he would take you
And leave you rust
Rhyme, he would flake you
With spotted dust.
Scurry to cover,
Delicate maid
And serious lover.
Girl, bind the braid
Of your burning hair;
He has an eye
For the lusciously fair
Who passes by.
O lover, hide—
Who comes to plunder
I Has the crafty stride
Of unheard thunder.
Quick—lest he snatch,
In his grave need,
And sift and match,
Then sow like seed

Your love's sweet grief
On the backward air,
With the rhyme and the leaf
And the maiden's hair.

SLOW DEATH

You need no other death than this
Slow death that wears your heart away;
It is enough, the death that is
Your every night, your every day.
It is enough, the sun that slants
Across your breast, heavy as steel,

Leaving the rust of radiance
To shape a wound that will not heal.

Enough, the crystal at your lips,
Wasting you even as it lies—
Vibrant there before it slips
Away, torn from your mouth like cries

There will be now, as fumes from wood,
A passing, yet no new death's care.
You will know only the frustrate mood
Of breath tarnished to color of air.

Jean Starr Untermeyer

JEAN STARR was born at Zanesville, Ohio, May 13, 1886, and educated at the Putnam Seminary in the city of her birth. At sixteen she came to New York City, pursuing special studies at Columbia. She married Louis Untermeyer in 1907, divorced in 1933.

Growing Pains (1918) is a thin book of thirty-four poems, the result of eight years' slow and critical creation. This highly selective process did much to bring the volume up to an unusual level; a severity of standards maintains the poet on an austere plane. Perfection is a passion with her; the first poem in the book ("Clay Hills") declares it with almost intolerant definiteness.

Acutely self-analytical, there is a stern, uncompromising relentlessness toward her introspections; these poems are, as she explains in her title-poem—

No songs for an idle lute,
No pretty tunes of coddled ills,
But the bare chart of my growing pains.

A sharp color sense, a surprising whimsicality, a translation of the ordinary in terms of the unexplored illumine such poems as "Sinfonia Domestica," "Clothes," and the much-quoted "Autumn," a celebration of domesticity which might be described as a housekeeper's paean. In the last named Mrs. Untermeyer has reproduced her early environment with bright pungency; "Verhaeren's Flemish genre pictures are no better," writes Amy Lowell. Several of her purely pictorial poems establish a swift kinship between the most romantic and most prosaic objects. The tiny "Moonrise" is an example; so is "High Tide," that, in one extended metaphor, turns the mere fact of a physical law into an arresting fancy.

Dreams Out of Darkness (1921) is a ripening of this author's power with a richer musical undercurrent. An increase of melody is manifest on every page, possibly most striking in "Lake Song," which, beneath its symbolism, is one of the few notable unrhymed lyrics of the period. The form of this poetry is, as Joseph Freeman has written, "distinguished not only by the clear qualities of chiseled marble, not only by a music so melodious that some of her free verse pieces have to be read two or three times before their lack of rhyme becomes noticeable, but also by its intellectual fluidity." Amy Lowell, amplifying this theme, concludes, "After all, beautiful as Mrs. Untermeyer's forms often are, it is her thoughts that make the book. This is the very heart of a woman, naked and serious, beautiful and unashamed."

Her training as a musician (she made her début as a Liedersinger in Vienna and London in 1924) added to her equipment as translator of the "official" life of Franz Schubert by Oscar Bie in 1928. Steep Ascent (1927) marks a spiritual as well as poetic climax. The dominant note, as might have been foreseen, is ethical, but there is no reliance on mere religiosity. "What is most remarkable about Jean Starr Untermeyer," wrote Edmund Wilson, "is the peculiar shading and force of her style. I believe that hers is classically Hebraic. She has always seemed to me one of the few writers who have successfully preserved in a modern language something of the authentic austerity of Jewish literature."

The poems in Winged Child (1936)—two of which are reprinted in these pages—have a new serenity, even a sly humor; they do not proceed, as did many of the others, from struggle, but from assurance. The early vers libriste gives way to the later formalist, even the "dissonant" rhymes of "Dew on a Dusty Heart" being cast in a sonnet.

Love and Need (1940) assembles the four preceding volumes with the addition of about twenty new poems, among which are several of the author's best in craftsmanship and power of communication.

After the publication of her collected poems, Mrs. Untermeyer spent most of her time on a translation of Hermann Broch's The Death of Virgil, a work which combines the novel and lyric poetry, history, philosophy, and stream-of-consciousness. Stephan Zweig said that the book, beyond the life and death of a poet "reflects the problems of all ages."

HIGH TIDE

I edged back against the night.
 The sea growled assault on the wave-bitten shore.
 And the breakers,
 Like young and impatient hounds,
 Sprang with rough joy on the shrinking sand.
 Sprang—but were drawn back slowly
 With a long, relentless pull,
 Whimpering, into the dark.

Then I saw who held them captive;
 And I saw how they were bound
 With a broad and quivering leash of light,
 Held by the moon,
 As, calm and unsmiling,
 She walked the deep fields of the sky.

AUTUMN

(To My Mother)

How memory cuts away the years,
And how clean the picture comes
Of autumn days, brisk and busy;
Charged with keen sunshine.
And you, stirred with activity,
The spirit of those energetic days.

There was our back-yard,
So plain and stripped of green,
With even the weeds carefully pulled away
From the crooked red bricks that made the walk,
And the earth on either side so black.

Autumn and dead leaves burning in the sharp air.
And winter comforts coming in like a pageant.
I shall not forget them:—
Great jars pompous with the raw green of pickles,
Standing in a solemn row across the back of the porch,
Exhaling the pungent dill;
And in the very center of the yard,
You, tending the great catsup kettle of gleaming copper,
Where fat, red tomatoes bobbed up and down
Like jolly monks in a drunken dance.
And there were bland banks of cabbages that came by the wagon-load,
Soon to be cut into delicate ribbons
Only to be crushed by the heavy, wooden stompers.
Such feathery whiteness—to come to kraut!
And after, there were grapes that hid their brightness under a gray dust,
Then gushed thrilling, purple blood over the fire;
And enameled crab-apples that tricked with their fragrance
But were bitter to taste.
And there were spicy plums and ill-shaped quinces,
And long string beans floating in pans of clear water
Like slim, green fishes.
And there was fish itself,
Salted, silver herring from the city. . . .

And you moved among these mysteries,
Absorbed and smiling and sure;
Stirring, tasting, measuring,
With the precision of a ritual.
I like to think of you in your years of power—
You, now so shaken and so powerless—
High priestess of your home.

CLAY HILLS

It is easy to mold the yielding clay.
 And many shapes grow into beauty
 Under the facile hand.
 But forms of clay are lightly broken;
 They will lie shattered and forgotten in a dingy corner.

Yet underneath the slipping clay
 Is rock . . .
 I would rather work in stubborn rock
 All the years of my life,
 And make one strong thing
 And set it in a high, clean place,
 To recall the granite strength of my desire.

SINFONIA DOMESTICA

When the white wave of a glory that is hardly I
 Breaks through my mind and washes it clean,
 I know at last the meaning of my ecstasy,
 And know at last my wish and what it can mean.

To have sped out of life that night—to have vanished
 Not as a vision, but as something touched, yet grown
 Radiant as the moonlight, circling my naked shoulder;
 Wrapped in a dream of beauty, longed for, but never known.

For how with our daily converse, even the sweet sharing
 Of thoughts, of food, of home, of common life,
 How shall I be that glory, that last desire
 For which men struggle? Is Romance in a wife?

Must I bend a heart that is bowed to breaking
 With a frustration, inevitable and slow,
 And bank my flame to a low hearth fire, believing
 You will come for warmth and life to its tempered glow?

Shall I mold my hope anew, to one of service,
 And tell my uneasy soul, "Behold, this is good"?
 And meet you (if we do meet), even at Heaven's threshold,
 With ewer and basin, with clothing and with food?

LAKE SONG

The lapping of lake water
 Is like the weeping of women,
 The weeping of ancient women
 Who grieved without rebellion.

The lake falls over the shore
Like tears on their curven bosoms.
Here is languid, luxurious wailing;
The wailing of kings' daughters.

So do we ever cry,
A soft, unmutinous crying,
When we know ourselves each a princess
Locked fast within her tower.

The lapping of lake water
Is like the weeping of women,
The fertile tears of women
That water the dreams of men.

BIRTHDAY

Now the beautiful business of summer is over,
Earth wraps herself in a bright, leaf-patterned shawl.
The hives cement the prodigal juice of the clover
And spendthrift gold is hoarded in bin and stall.
Beyond the wind-crisped hedge the cornstalks hover;
The pumpkin lies by the wall.

October's the heir of the year, and you, my lover,
October's darling, the first to come at her call,
May claim and hold what your wandering eyes discover
On jeweled hills that tempt a reluctant fall;
Blest by the fired earth, while skies above her
Spill golden peace over all.

COUNTRY OF NO LACK

A lilac ribbon is unbound,
A band of gradual rose untied,
And lo, the glowing book of day
Is opened on the mountainside.

What curves salute, what colors sound
From this so-rich-illumined scroll,
For whose perusal one need pay
Only a just delight as toll.

The brook's clean silver set in stones
Is balanced by the silver sheen
Of clean-stripped logs, which in a field
Seem floating down a river of green.

Furze are not flowers, but the tones
Of sunlight that a bird has sung,
And broken purples but the yield
Of hoarded twilights, meadow-flung.

Against a heaven's faithful blue,
A fadeless forest lifts its pines,
From shadows deepening into black
A slim and shadowy road inclines.

Upon the printed air, how true
Stand lizard, lake and leaf, page-still.
Here in the country of no lack,
What care can move, what grief can chill?

ONE KIND OF HUMILITY

Shall we say heaven is not heaven
Since golden stairs are rugged and uneven?

Or that no light illuminates a star
That swings in other regions than we are?

Deny with soured breath enduring God
Because we cling so rankly to the sod?

No. Cleanse with weeping, fasting and with prayer.

Praise God. Look starward. Mount the stair!

DEW ON A DUSTY HEART

If come into this world again I must
And take unto myself another form,
Oh, let it be unblemished by a mist
Of imperfections or the line infirm.

And let it shapen to a secret wish
Untouched, untinctured, even by a dram
Of earthiness; nor let the fretted wash
Of passion tray the fine-immaculate dream.

Oh, let me come back as a melody
New as the air it takes, no taint of ill
To halt such lovely flying as birds do
Going from infinite nought to infinite all.
Giving to dusty hearts that lag at even
The dewy rest they dream of and call heaven

H. D.

HILDA DOOLITTLE was born September 10, 1886, at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. When she was still a child, her father became Director of the Flower Observatory and the family moved to a suburb in the outskirts of Philadelphia. Hilda Doolittle attended a private school in West Philadelphia; entered Bryn Mawr College in 1904; and went abroad, for what was intended to be a short sojourn, in 1911. After a visit to Italy and France she came to London, joined Ezra Pound, and helped to organize the Imagists. She married one of the original group, Richard Aldington, the English poet and novelist, whom she later divorced. Her work (signed "H. D.") began to appear in a few magazines and its unusual quality was recognized at once. Remaining for a while in London, she became one of the leaders of the movement, creating through a chiseled verse her flawless evocations of Greek poetry and sculpture. In 1920 she made a long-deferred visit to America, settling on the California coast, returning the following year to England. Since 1921 H. D. has lived in London and in a small town in Switzerland on the shore of Lake Geneva.

Her first collection, Sea Garden, appeared in 1916; an interval of five years elapsed before the publication of her second volume, Hymen, which was printed simultaneously in England and America in 1921. These volumes showed H. D. as the most important of her group. She was the only one who steadfastly held to the letter as well as the spirit of its credo. She was, in fact, the only true Imagist. Her poems are like a set of Tanagra figurines. Here, at first glance, the effect is chilling—beauty seems held in a frozen gesture. But it is in this very fixation of light, color and emotion that she achieves intensity. What at first seemed static becomes fluent; the arrested moment glows with a quivering tension.

Observe the poem entitled "Heat." Here, in the fewest possible words, is something beyond the description of heat—here is the effect of it. In these lines one feels the weight and solidity of a midsummer afternoon. So in "The Islands" a propulsion of feeling hurries forward the syllables balancing on light and dark vowels, and what might have been only a list of antique names becomes an outcry. Her efforts to draw the contemporary world are less happy. H. D. is best in her reflections of clear-cut loveliness in a quietly pagan world; in most of her moods, she seems less a modern writer than an inspired anachronism.

Heliodora and Other Poems appeared in 1924. So much had already been written concerning the form of H. D.'s poetry that it was no longer necessary to expatiate on the unique features of her metric. Even those least impressed by the program of the Imagists readily conceded her exquisite if oversubtle flavor, the stripped purity of her line, the precision of her epithets. But the most apparent feature of Heliodora—even more noticeable than its beauties of form—is its intensity. A freely declared passion radiates from lines which are at once ecstatic and austere. Even the most casual reading must convince one that this poet is not, as she first seemed to us, a Greek statue faintly flushed with life, a delightful but detached relic of another world. This is a woman responsive to color and pain, aroused by loveliness, shocked by betrayal, affected by all those manifestations which are too old to be timely, too fresh to be "antique."

Practically all of H. D.'s previous volumes were assembled in Collected Poems (1925) which contains not only her original work but the spirited translations from the Odyssey and her flexible expansions of fragmentary phrases of Sappho. A play, Hippolytus Tempozes, appeared in 1927. In the later works it is interesting to trace the tightening of form, the approximation of more regular structure, even the introduction of half-candid, half-concealed rhyme.

Red Roses for Bionze (1932) stresses the note of personal emotion, the emotion of love once requited but now unreturned. The poetry is more weighted than before and less dependent on its decorations; sometimes its direct appeal is compelling, sometimes it relies on platitudes of passion and rings hollow. At their best the poems combine the skill of the early Imagist with the strength of the mature poet.

H. D.'s prose is somewhat more derivative, bearing overtones of Gertrude Stein, but it rises above its influences. Palimpsest (1926) and Hedylus (1928) embody a poet's prose, the former a triptych of interrelated tragedies, actual and intuitive.

O R E A D

Whirl up, sea—
Whirl your pointed pines.
Splash your great pines
On our rocks.
Hurl your green over us—
Cover us with your pools of fir.

P E A R T R E E

Silver dust lifted from the earth,
higher than my arms reach,
you have mounted.
O silver,
higher than my arms reach
you front us with great mass;
no flower ever opened
so staunch a white leaf,
no flower ever parted silver
from such rare silver;

O white pear,
your flower-tufts,
thick on the branch,
bring summer and ripe fruits
in their purple hearts.

H E A T

O wind, rend open the heat,
cut apart the heat,
rend it to tatters.

Fruit cannot drop
through this thick air—fruit cannot fall into heat that presses up and blunts the points of pears
and rounds the grapes.

Cut through the heat—
plow through it,

turning it on either side of your path.

ORCHARD

I saw the first pear
as it fell—
the honey-seeking, golden-banded,
the yellow swarm,
was not more fleet than I,
(spare us from loveliness!)
and I fell prostrate,
crying:
you have flayed us with your blossoms,
spare us the beauty of fruit-trees!

The honey-seeking paused not;
the air thundered their song,
and I alone was prostrate.

O rough-hewn
god of the orchard,
I bring you an offering—
do you, alone unbeautiful,
son of the god,
spare us from loveliness:

these fallen hazel-nuts,
stripped late of their green sheaths,
grapes, red-purple,
their berries
dripping with wine;
pomegranates already broken,
and shrunken figs,
and quinces untouched,
I bring you as offering.

SONG

You are as gold
as the half-ripe grain that merges to gold again,
as white as the white rain that beats through the half-opened flowers of the great flower tufts thick on the black limbs of an Illyrian apple bough.

Can honey distill such fragrance
as your bright hair—
for your face is as fair as rain;
yet as rain that lies clear on white honey-comb lends radiance to the white wax, so your hair on your brow
casts light for a shadow.

FROM "LET ZEUS RECORD".

Stars wheel in purple, yours is not so rare
as Hesperus, nor yet so great a star as bright Aldebaran or Sirius,
nor yet the stained and brilliant one of War:

stars turn in purple, glorious to the sight;
yours is not gracious as the Pleiads arc,
nor as Orion's sapphires, luminous;

yet disenchanted, cold, imperious face,
when all the others, blighted, reel and fall,
your star, steel-set, keeps lone and frigid tryst
to freighted ships baffled in wind and blast

LAIS

Let her who walks in Paphos
take the glass,
let Paphos take the mirror
and the work of frosted fruit, gold apples set
with silver apple-leaf, white leaf of silver
wrought with vein of gilt.

Let Paphos lift the mirror;
let her look into the polished center of the disk.
Let Paphos take the mirror:
did she press
flowerlet of flame-flower to the lustrous white of the white forehead?
Did the dark veins beat a deeper purple
than the wine-deep tint
of the dark flower?

Did she deck black hair,
one evening, with the winter-white flower of the winter-berry?

Did she look (rest of her lover)
at a face gone white under the chaplet
of white virgin-breath?

Lais, exultant, tyrannizing Greece,
Lais who kept her lovers in the porch,
lover on lover waiting (but to creep
where the robe brushed the threshold where still sleeps Lais),
so she creeps, Lais,
to lay her mirror at the feet
of her who reigns in Paphos.

Lais has left her mirror,
for she sees no longer in its depth the Lais' self that laughed exultant, tyrannizing Greece.

Lais has left her mirror,
for she weeps no longer,
finding in its depth
a face, but other than dark flame and white feature of perfect marble.

Lais has left her mirror
(so one wrote)
to her who reigns in Paphos;
Lais who laughed a tyrant over Greece,
Lais who turned the lovers from the porch,
that swarm for whom now
Lais has no use;
Lais is now no lover of the glass,
seeing no more the face as once it was,
wishing to see that face and finding this.

FROM "HALCYON"

("Bind—loved of sea-men")

I'm not here,
everything's vague, blurred everywhere,
then you are blown
into a room;

the sea comes where a carpet
laid red and purple,

and where the edge showed marble
there is sea-weed;

sedge breaks the wall
where the couch stands,
the hands of strange people,
twisting tassel and fringe of rich cloth, become clear;

I understand the people,
they aren't hateful but dear;
over all

a shrill wind, clear sky;
O why, why, why
am I fretful, insecure,
why am I vague, unsure

until you are blown,
unexpected, small, quaint, unnoticeable,
a gray gull
into a room.

SONGS FROM CYPRUS

I

Gather for festival
bright weed and purple shell;
make on the holy sand pattern as one might make who tread with rose-red heel
a measure
pleasureful;

such as those songs we made in rose and myrtle shade where rose and myrtle fell (shell-petal or rose-shell)
on just such holy sand;
ah, the song
musical;

give me white rose and red;
find me in citron glade
citron of precious weight,
spread gold before her feet,
ah, weave the citron flower;
hail, goddess
beautiful.

II

Where is the nightingale,
in what myrrh-wood and dim?
ah, let the night come black,
for we would conjure back
all that enchanted him,
all that enchanted him.

Where is the bird of fire?
in what packed hedge of rose?
in what roofed ledge of flower?
no other creature knows
what magic lurks within,
what magic lurks within.

Bird, bird, bird, bird, we cry,
hear, pity us in pain;
hearts break in the sunlight,
hearts break in daylight rain,
only night heals again,
only night heals again.

H O L Y S A T Y R

Most holy Satyr,
like a goat,
with horns and hooves to match thy coat
of russet brown,
I make leaf-circlets
and a crown of honey-flowers for thy throat;
where the amber petals
drip to ivory,
I cut and slip
each stiffened petal
in the rift
of carven petal;
honey horn
has wed the bright
virgin petal of the white flower cluster: lip to lip let them whisper,
let them lilt, quivering.

Most holy Satyr,
like a goat,
hear this our song,
accept our leaves,
love-offering,

return our hymn,
like echo fling
a sweet song,
answering note for note.

T H E I S L A N D S

I

What are the islands to me,
what is Greece,
what is Rhodes, Samos, Chios,
what is Paros facing west,
what is Crete?

What is Samothrace,
rising like a ship,
what is Imbros rending the storm-waves
with its breast?

What is Naxos, Paros, Milos,
what the circle about Lycia,
what the Cyclades'
white necklace?

What is Greece—
Sparta, rising like a rock,
Thebes, Athens,
what is Corinth?

What is Euboia
with its island violets,
what is Euboia, spread with grass,
set with swift shoals,
what is Crete?

What are the islands to me,
what is Greece?

II

What can love of land give to me
that you have not—what do the tall Spartans know,
and gentler Attic folk?

What has Sparta and her women
more than this?

What are the islands to me
if you are lost—
what is Naxos, Tinos, Andros, and Delos, the clasp

of the white necklace?

III

What can love of land give to me
that you have not,
what can love of strife break in me
that you have not?

Though Sparta enter Athens,
Thebes wrack Sparta,
each changes as water,
salt, rising to wreak terror
and falling back.

IV

"What has love of land given to you that I have not?"

I have questioned Tyrians where they sat on the black ships,
weighted with rich stuffs;
I have asked the Greeks
from the white ships, and Greeks from ships whose hulks lay on the wet sand, scarlet with great beaks.
I have asked bright Tyrians and tall Greeks—
"what has love of land given you?"
And they answered—"peace."

V

But Beauty is set apart, beauty is cast by the sea,
a barren rock,
beauty is set about
with wrecks of ships, upon our coast, death keeps the shallows—death waits clutching toward us from the deeps.

Beauty is set apart;
the winds that slash its beach,
swirl the coarse sand
upward toward the rocks.

VI

In my garden
the winds have beaten
the ripe lilies;
in my garden, the salt
has wilted the first flakes of young narcissus,
and the lesser hyacinth,
and the salt has crept
under the leaves of the white hyacinth.

In my garden,
even the wind-flowers lie flat,
broken by the wind at last.

VII

What are the islands to me
if you are lost,
what is Paros to me
if your eyes draw back, what is Milos
if you take fright of beauty, terrible, tortuous, isolated,
a barren rock?

What is Rhodes, Crete,
what is Paros facing west,
what, white Imbros?

What are the islands to me
if you hesitate,
what is Greece if you draw back from the terror
and cold splendor of song
and its bleak sacrifice?

HELEN

All Greece hates
the still eyes in the white face,
the luster as of olives
where she stands,
and the white hands.

All Greece reviles
the wan face when she smiles, hating it deeper still when it grows wan and white, remembering past enchantments
and past ills.

Greece sees unmoved,
God's daughter, born of love,

Beauty is set apart
from the islands and from Greece.

the beauty of cool feet
and slenderest knees,
could love indeed the maid,
only if she were laid,
white ash amid funereal cypresses.

LETHE

Nor skin nor hide nor fleece
Shall cover you,
Nor curtain of crimson nor fine
Shelter of cedar-wood be over you,
Nor the fir-tree
Nor the pine.

Nor sight of whin nor gorse
Nor river-yew,
Nor fragrance of flowering bush,
Nor wailing of reed-bird to waken you.
Nor of linnet
Nor of thrush.

Nor word nor touch nor sight
Of lover, you
Shall long through the night but for this:
The roll of the full tide to cover you
Without question,
Without kiss.

John Hall Wheelock

JOHN HALL WHEELOCK was born at Far Rockaway, Long Island, in 1886. He was graduated from Harvard, receiving his B.A. in 1908, and finished his studies at the Universities of Gottingen and Berlin, 1908-10.

Wheelock's first book is, in many respects, his best. The Human Fantasy (1911) sings with the voice of youth—youth vibrantly, even vociferously, in love with existence. Rhapsodic and obviously influenced by Whitman and Henley, these lines beat bravely; headlong ecstasy rises from pages whose refrain is "Splendid it is to live and glorious to die." The Beloved Adventure (1912) is less powerful, but scarcely less passionate. Lyric after lyric moves by its athletic affirmation.

Wheelock's subsequent volumes are less individualized. Love and Liberation (1913) and Dust and Light (1919) are long dilutions of the earlier strain. The music is still here, but most of the vigor has gone. Wheelock has allowed himself to be exploited by his own fluency and the result is lyrical monotony. Yet vast stretches of two hundred and thirty unvaried love-songs cannot bury a dozen vivid poems which lie, half-concealed, in a waste of verbiage.

The Black Panther (1922) furnishes additional proof that though Wheelock's star may have waned it did not die. In this volume the poet's gift assumes greater dignity; the flashing athleticism has matured into a steady fervor. With the exception of a few innocuous songs, there is revealed a graver music than Wheelock has accomplished. In the longer poems, most effectively in "Earth," he expresses the paradox of conflict and consent: the philosophy of the single Consciousness which reconciles terror and tenderness, murder and laughter, dawn and destruction—"Life, the dreadful, the magnificent."

The Bright Doom (1927), the smallest of Wheelock's volumes, is full of his best and worst. No poem is bad; no poem is quite good enough. The total effect is of desperate sincerity lost in foggy generalities, genuine poetry floundering in a wash of rhetoric. The early verse, less notable in idea, is more persuasive in image, more winning as music.

SUNDAY EVENING IN THE COMMON

Look—on the topmost branches of the world
 The blossoms of the myriad stars are thick;
 Over the huddled rows of stone and brick,
 A few, sad wisps of empty smoke are curled
 Like ghosts, languid and sick.

One breathless moment now the city's moaning
 Fades, and the endless streets seem vague and dim;
 There is no sound around the whole world's rim,
 Save in the distance a small band is droning
 Some desolate old hymn.

Van Wyck, how often have we been together
 When this same moment made all mysteries clear;
 —The infinite stars that brood above us here,
 And the gray city in the soft June weather,
 So tawdry and so dear!

TRIUMPH OF LOVE

I shake my hair in the wind of morning
 For the joy within me that knows no bounds,
 I echo backward the vibrant beauty
 Wherewith heaven's hollow lute resounds.

I shed my song on the feet of all men,
 On the feet of all shed out like wine,
 On the whole and the hurt I shed my bounty,
 The beauty within me that is not mine.

Turn not away from my song, nor scorn me,
 Who bear the secret that holds the sky
 And the stars together, but know within me
 There speaks another more wise than I.

Nor spurn me here from your heart, to hate me!
 Yet hate me here if you will—not so
 Myself you hate, but the Love within me
 That loves you, whether you would or no.

Here love returns with love to the lover,
 And beauty unto the heart thereof,
 And hatred unto the heart of the hater,
 Whether he would or no, with love!

NIRVANA

Sleep on, I lie at heaven's high oriels,
Over the stars that murmur as they go
Lighting your lattice-window far below;
And every star some of the glory spells
Whereof I know.

I have forgotten you long, long ago,
Like the sweet silver singing of thin bells
Vanished, or music fading faint and low.
Sleep on, I lie at heaven's high oriels,
Who loved you so.

LOVE AND LIBERATION

Lift your arms to the stars
And give an immortal shout;
Not all the veils of darkness
Can put your beauty out!

You are armed with love, with love,
Nor all the powers of Fate
Can touch you with a spear,
Nor all the hands of hate.

What of good and evil,
Hell and Heaven above—
Trample them with love!
Ride over them with love!

EARTH

Grasshopper, your fairy song
And my poem alike belong
To the dark and silent earth
From which all poetry has birth.
All we say and all we sing
Is but as the murmuring
Of that drowsy heart of hers
When from her deep dream she stirs:
If we sorrow, or rejoice,
You and I are but her voice.

Deftly does the dust express
In mind her hidden loveliness,
And from her cool silence stream
The cricket's cry and Dante's dream;
For the earth that breeds the trees
Breeds cities too, and symphonies.
Equally her beauty flows
Into a savior, or a rose—

Looks down in dream, and from above
Smiles at herself in Jesus' love.
Christ's love and Homer's art
Are but the workings of her heart;
Through Leonardo's hand she seeks Herself, and through Beethoven speaks
In holy thunders around
The awful message of the ground.

The serene and humble mold
Does in herself all selves unfold—
Kingdoms, destinies, and creeds,
Great dreams, and dauntless deeds,
Science that metes the firmament,
The high, inflexible intent
Of one for many sacrificed—
Plato's brain, the heart of Christ;
All love, all legend, and all lore
Are in the dust forevermore.

Even as the growing grass,
Up from the soil religions pass,
And the field that bears the rye
Bears parables and prophecy.
Out of the earth the poem grows
Like the lily, or the rose;
And all man is, or yet may be,
Is but herself in agony
Toiling up the steep ascent
Toward the complete accomplishment
When all dust shall be, the whole
Universe, one conscious soul.

Yea, the quiet and cool sod
Bears in her breast the dream of God.
If you would know what earth is, scan
The intricate, proud heart of man,
Which is the earth articulate,
And learn how holy and how great,
How limitless and how profound
Is the nature of the ground—
How without terror or demur
We may entrust ourselves to her
When we are wearied out and lay
Our faces in the common clay.

For she is pity, she is love,
All wisdom, she, all thoughts that move
About her everlasting breast
Till she gathers them to rest:
All tenderness of all the ages,
Seraphic secrets of the sages,

Vision and hope of all the seers,
 All prayer, all anguish, and all tears
 Are but the dust that from her dream
 Awakes, and knows herself supreme—
 Are but earth, when she reveals
 All that her secret heart conceals
 Down in the dark and silent loam,
 Which is ourselves, asleep, at home.
 Yea, and this, my poem, too,
 Is part of her as dust and dew,
 Wherein herself she doth declare
 Through my lips, and say her prayer.

THIS QUIET DUST

Here in my curving hands I cup
 This quiet dust, I lift it up.

Here is the mother of all thought;
 Of this the shining heavens are wrought,
 The laughing lips, the feet that rove,
 The face, the body, that you love:
 Mere dust, no more, yet nothing less,
 And this has suffered consciousness,
 Passion, and terror, this again
 Shall suffer passion, death, and pain.

For, as all flesh must die, so all,
 Now dust, shall live. 'Tis natural;
 Yet hardly do I understand—
 Here in the hollow of my hand
 A bit of God Himself I keep,
 Between two vigils fallen asleep.

Roy Helton

ROY (ADDISON) HELTON was born at Washington, D. C., in 1886 and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1908. He studied art—and found he was color-blind. He spent two years at inventions—and found he had no business sense. After a few more experiments he became a schoolmaster in West Philadelphia and at the Penn Charter School in Germantown.

Helton's first volume, Youth's Pilgrimage (1915), is a strange, mystical affair, full of vague symbolism and purple patches. Outcasts in Beulah Land (1918) is entirely different in theme and treatment. This is a much starker verse, direct and sharp in its effect. Helton became intimately connected with primitive backgrounds, spending a great part of his time in the mountains of South Carolina and Kentucky. His later verse in Lonesome Water (1930) shows the influence of this intimacy. Its spirit creeps into his fanciful prose, The Early Adventures of Peacham Grew (1925), a story which unites quaintness and tragedy in a delicate chronicle of boyhood. Strangeness of another sort fills Nitchie Tille (1934), a later novel.

"Old Christmas Morning" is a Kentucky Mountain dialogue in which Helton has introduced an element rare in modern verse. Told with the directness of an old ballad, this drama of the night twelve days after the universally celebrated Christmas unfolds a ghost story in which the surprise is heightened by the skillful suspensions. "Lonesome Water" is a direct communication in the vernacular. Asked to furnish a glossary, Helton wrote: "I have tried to use only the common and most general mountain words, despising that preciousity of folk-talk dug out and patched together which is now a fashion. . . . Sung: a universal Southernmountain word for Gin Seng wherever the weed is grown or picked. Trace: a trail or footpath. Pretties: any sort of toy or decoration. Uses: lives."

OLD CHRISTMAS MORNING

(A Kentucky Mountain Ballad)

"Where are you coming from, Lomey Carter,
So airly over the snow?
And what's them pretties you got in your hand,
And where you aiming to go?"

"Step in, Honey: Old Christmas morning
I ain't got nothing much;
Maybe a bite of sweetness and corn bread,
A little ham meat and such."

"But come in, Honey! Sally Anne Barton's
Hungering after your face.
Wait till I light my candle up:
Set down! There's your old place."

"Now where you been so airly this morning?"
*"Graveyard, Sally Anne.
Up by the trace in the salt lick meadows
Where Taulbe kilt my man."*

"Taulbe ain't to home this morning . . .
I can't scratch up a light . . .
Dampness gets on the heads of the matches;
But I'll blow up the embers bright." . . .

"Needn't trouble. I won't be stopping Going a long ways still."

"You didn't see nothing, Lomey Carter,
Up on the graveyard hill?"

"What should I see there, Sally Anne Barton?"
"Well, sperits do walk last night."

*"There were an elder bush a-blooming
While the moon still give some light."*

"Yes, elder bushes, they bloom, Old Christmas,
And critters kneel down in their straw.
Anything else up in the graveyard?"

*"One thing more I saw:
I saw my man with his head all bleeding
Where Taulbe's shot went through."*

"What did he say?"
"He stooped and kissed me."

"What did he say to you?"

*"Said, Lord Jesus forguv your Taulbe;
But he told me another word;
He said it soft when he stooped and kissed me.
That were the last I heard."*

"Taulbe ain't to home this morning."

*"I know that, Sally Anne,
For I kilt him, coming down through the meadow
Where Taulbe kilt my man.*

*"I met him upon the meadow trace
When the moon were fainting fast,
And I had my dead man's rifle gun
And kilt him as he come past."*

"But I heard two shots."

*"'Twas his was second:
He shot me 'fore he died.'
You'll find us at daybreak, Sally Anne Barton:
I'm laying these dead at his side."*

LONESOME WATER

Drank lonesome water:
Warn't but a tad then
Up in a laurel thick
Digging for sang;
Came on a place where
The stones were hollow,
Something below them
Tinkled and rang.

Dug whar I heard it
Dripping below me:
Should a knowed better,
Should a been wise;
Leant down and drank it,
Clutching and gripping
The over hung cliv
With the terns in my eyes.

Tasted of heart leaf
And that smells the sweetest,
Pawpaw and spice bush
And wild brier rose;
Must a been counting
The heels of the spruce pines,
And neighboring round
Whar angelica grows.

I'd drunk lonesome water,
I knowed in a minute:
Never larnt nothing
From then till today:
Nothing worth larning
Nothing worth knowing,
I'm bound to the hills
And I can't get away.

Mean sort of dried up old
Ground-hoggy fellow,
Laying out cold here
Watching the sky;
Pore as a hipporwill,
Bent like a grass blade;
Counting up stars
Till they count too high.

I know whar the gray foxes
Uses up yander:
Know what will cure you
Of tisic and chills,
But I never been way from here,
Never got going;
I've drunk lonesome water.
I'm bound to the hills.

Marianne Moore

MARIANNE MOORE was born in St. Louis, Missouri, November 15, 1887. She received her B.A. from Bryn Mawr College in 1909; taught stenography at the United States Indian school at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, from 1911 to 1915; was an assistant in the Hudson Park Branch of the New York Public Library, and editor of The Dial from 1925 to its demise in 1929.

It was not until 1921 that a few of her friends "pirated" her work; without her cooperation, Poems was published in that year by The Egoist Press. Three years later she received the Dial Award of two thousand dollars for "distinguished service to American letters." Observations (1924), including the early poems as well as some new ones, appeared at the same time.

Miss Moore's work is frankly puzzling, not only to the disinterested reader, but to the student of modern poetry. Although her early verses present no difficulties, her more characteristic lines seem to erect a barrier of jagged clauses, barbed quotations and suspicious structures between herself and her audience. It has been asserted, and the editor shares this opinion, that Miss Moore's highly intellectualized dissertations are actually part of the domain of criticism rather than of poetry, and that her creations are in the latter division chiefly because of the physical pattern of her lines. Her studies are scrupulously precise; they avoid stock phrases and stereotype sentiments, but they tend to disguise statements which seem to be seeking their prose origins: a sort of witty and ironic geometry.

Selected Poems, published in 1935, with an introduction by T. S. Eliot, accentuates the problems presented by her work. There can be no doubt about Miss Moore's wit or the incision of her ideas. Her language has a curious bite, and the phrasing is both exact and unusual. The lizard is "a nervous naked sword on little feet," the elephant "black earth preceded by a tendril," the snake has "hypodermic teeth." What Are Years (1941) contains only fifteen poems, but these are among her most exact—and exacting—variations on surprisingly trivial themes. This poet is best in reflections, in an allusiveness which is a kind of analyzed memory, a microscopic musing.

A TALISMAN

Under a splintered mast, torn from the ship and cast
near her hull,

a stumbling shepherd found,
embedded in the ground,
    a sea-gull

of lapis lazuli,
a scarab of the sea,
    with wings spread—

curling its coral feet, parting its beak to greet men long dead.

THAT HARP YOU PLAY SO WELL

O David, if I had
Your power, I should be glad—
    In harping, with the sling,
    In patient reasoning!

Blake, I Homer, Job, and you,
Have made old wine-skins new.
    Your energies have wrought
    Stout continents of thought.

But, David, if the heart
Be brass, what boots the art
    Of exorcising wrong,
    Of harping to a song?

The scepter and the ring
 And every royal thing
     Will fail. Grief's lustiness
     Must cure the harp's distress.

TO A STEAM ROLLER

The illustration
 is nothing to you without the application.
 You lack half wit. You crush all the particles down into close conformity, and then walk back and forth on them.

Sparkling chips of rock
 are crushed down to the level of the parent block.
 Were not "impersonal judgment in esthetic matters, a metaphysical impossibility," you might fairly achieve

 it. As for butterflies, I can hardly conceive of one's attending upon you; but to question
     the congruence of the complement is vain, if it exists.

ENGLAND

with its baby rivers and little towns, each with its abbey or its cathedral; with voices—one voice perhaps, echoing through the transept—the criterion of suitability and convenience, and Italy with its equal shores—contriving an epicureanism from which the grossness has been extracted and Greece with its goats and its gourds, the nest of modified illusions:
 and France, the "chrysalis of the nocturnal butterfly" in whose products, mystery of construction diverts one from what was originally one's object—substance at the core: and the East with its snails, its emotional shorthand and jade cockroaches, its rock crystal and its imperturbability, all of museum quality: and America where there is the little old ramshackle victoria in the south, where cigars are smoked on the street in the north; where there are no proof readers, no silkworms, no digressions;
 the wild man's land; grass-less, links-less, language-less country—in which letters are written not in Spanish, not in Greek, not in Latin, not in shorthand, but in plain American which cats and dogs can read! The letter "a" in psalm and calm when pronounced with the sound of "a" in candle, is very noticeable but why should continents of misapprehension have to be accounted for by the fact? Does it follow that because there are poisonous toadstools which resemble mushrooms, both are dangerous? In the case of mettlesomeness which may be mistaken for appetite, of heat which may appear to be haste, no conclusions may be drawn. To have misapprehended the matter, is to have confessed that one has not looked far enough. The sublimated wisdom of China, Egyptian discernment, the cataclysmic torrent of emotion compressed in the verbs of the Hebrew language, the books of the man who is able to say, "I envy nobody but him and him only, who catches more fish than I do,"—the flower and fruit of all that noted superiority—should one not have stumbled upon it in America, must one imagine that it is not there? It has never been confined to one locality.

THE FISH

Wade
through black jade
Of the crow-blue mussel shells, one keeps adjusting the ash heaps;
opening and shutting itself like an injured fan.

The barnacles which encrust the side of the wave, cannot hide there for the submerged shafts of the sun,

split like spun
glass, move themselves with spotlight swiftness into the crevices—
in and out, illuminating

the turquoise sea of bodies. The water drives a wedge
of iron through the iron edge of the cliff, whereupon the stars, pink rice grains, ink

bespattered jelly-fish, crabs like green
lilies and submarine
toadstools, slide each on the other.

All
external marks of abuse are present on this defiant edifice—
all the physical features of accident—lack of cornice, dynamite grooves, burns

and hatchet strokes, these things stand out on it; the chasm side is dead.

Repeated

evidence has proved that it can live
on what cannot revive its youth. The sea grows old in it.

Robinson Jeffers

ROBINSON JEFFERS' condensed autobiography runs as follows: "Born in Pittsburgh in 1887; my parents carried me about Europe a good deal. Of the first visit I remember three things—a pocketful of snails loosed on the walls of a kindergarten in Zurich, paintings of Keats and Shelley hanging side by side somewhere in London, and Arthur's Seat, the hill about Edinburgh. When I was fifteen I was brought home. Next year my family moved to California and I graduated at eighteen from Occidental College, Los Angeles. After that, desultory years at the University of Southern California, University of Zurich, Medical School in Los Angeles, University of Washington, but with faint interest. I wasn't deeply interested in anything but poetry. I married Una Call Kuster in 1913. We were going to England in the autumn of 1914. But the August news turned us to this village of Carmel instead; and when the stagecoach topped the hill from Monterey, and we looked down through pines and sea-fogs on Carmel Bay, it was evident that we had come without knowing it to our inevitable place." There, on the ocean's edge, Jeffers has lived ever since, identifying himself with the Californian rocks and headlands.

Flagons and Apples (1912) was Jeffers' undistinguished first volume; it was followed by Californians (1916), a scarcely more original book. In 1925 Tamar and Other Poems was brought out by a small printer and caused an overnight sensation. It was reprinted the following year, with the addition of new work, as Roan Stallion, Tamar and Other Poems (1926). This, it was evident at once, was masculine poetry, stark, even terrible in its intensities. Whatever defects this verse has—and it must be confessed that Jeffers piles on his catastrophes with little humor and less restraint—there is no denying its elemental power. He combines two almost contrary types of strength: the impetuous American and the stoic Greek.

The Women at Point Sur (1927) shows how easily Jeffers can swing the long line, how suddenly his phrases soar from the tawdry into the terrible, how boldly he can lift a language which, in the hands of most poets, would be nothing more than wild rhetoric.

Cawdor (1928) again reveals Jeffers turning away from gentle themes to almost unbearable ones. The long poem is a continuation of the bewilderment announced in the preceding volumes. Jeffers himself says, "I think of Cawdor as making a third with Tamar and The Women at Point Sur; but as if in Tamar human affairs had been seen looking westward against the ocean; in Point Sur looking upward, minimized to ridicule against the stars; in Cawdor looking eastward, against the earth, reclaiming a little dignity from that association. . . . Where not only generations but races drizzle away so fast, one wonders the more urgently what it is for, and whether this beautiful earth is amused or sorry at the procession of her possessors." There are also a number of shorter poems, not actually subversive but, continues Jeffers, "the mere common sense of our predicament as passionate bits of earth and water." . . . The setting of Cawdor is monstrous, the symbols excessive, the speech of his characters unreal; yet the backgrounds are not much more tragic than Jeffers' own weird Carmel coast and his people move in an atmosphere larger if more forbidding than reality. As in his other work, exaggerations of lust and violence outdo each other; but these, which in a lesser man would be absurd, are compelling because of the sheer force behind them and the malefic universe they imply.

This force is not only inherent in Jeffers' extraordinary language, but in his demonic search for ultimates. He despairs the illusions by which man makes life endurable: love, nature, the mind—these are all self-destructive and useless. Quiet is empty denial and peace a forlorn hope. Death seems the one freedom, "the huge gift," but annihilation itself, he realizes, is impossible. There is left only despair—and this is the cry beneath Jeffers' strength. The longing for oblivion explains his wild dreams, bloodshot landscapes, inhuman crimes, incests, brutalities, nightmare-struggles where life "drinks her defeat and devours her famine for food."

Thus he celebrates "the charm of the dark," enlarges on passions turned inward and men "all matted in one mesh"; he sings a frustrated Dies Iude to unresponsive Nothingness. Therefore the things he loves best are rocks, black cypresses, depths of ocean, granite mountains—things that have their being without ambition, without hope, without consciousness.

But negation alone cannot explain the poet's dark persuasiveness. To Jeffers consciousness is the great curse of mankind; unconsciousness is the desirable state of nature. That man can never know such unconsciousness is what compels Jeffers' anguish and dictates his most impassioned lines. Impassioned they are, whatever one may think of the philosophy that prompts them, and an examination of Jeffers' utterance discloses a strange phenomenon: This poet preaches the gospel of Nothingness with an exuberant liveliness. He mourns, with inconsistent vigor, "the broken balance, the hopeless prostration of the earth under men's hands." His Jesus (in Dear Judas) is only an extension of the fanatically possessive Barclay (in The Women at Point Sur); even mystical passion becomes a high-pitched turbulence and love a last despair.

Thus Jeffers is in danger of emotional abandonment. His dramas are too often conditioned not by the exigencies of the situation nor by the demands of his characters, but by Jeffers' inverted violences. The chaos is self-generated; the didacticism no less didactic for being nullifying and uncontrolled; the imagination is too often disturbed by intellectual hysteria.

Dear Judas (1929) is composed of two long and a few short poems, the two longer ones bearing a relation to each other in the contrasted aspects of love, the shorter ones condensing Jeffers' philosophy into some of his finest moments. Like his other work, Dear Judas exhibits Jeffers projecting blind and bewildering Nature, misconceiving man as a "spectral episode." Here again is energy threshing in meaninglessness; here is force in need of a faith.

Thurso's Landing (1932) consists of one long poem and several highly characteristic shorter ones. The title-poem must rank among Jeffers' most important creations—a poem in which sheer power and eloquence triumph above black and unrelieved melodrama. Here again the dramatis personae are nakedly symbols of tortured humanity, "all compelled, all unhappy, all helpless." The idea dominating the book is the idée fixe which runs through all of Jeffers' volumes: Life is horrible. Love, as we practice it, is inverted and incestuous; not one self-adoring man in a million expresses outward-going passion. Death is the beautiful capricious savior, "the gay child with the gypsy eyes." Civilization is a transient sickness. Were the world free of this botch of humanity, this walking disease of consciousness, it would be a cleaner place, one in which the noble, impersonal elements would be at home. In a few thousand years this may well happen, and life will no longer be a torture for the living. Meanwhile our nature, "ignoble in its quiet times, mean in its pleasures, slavish in the mass" can, in its stricken moments, occasionally "shine terribly against the dark magnificence of things." Meanwhile we can learn from hawks and headlands; we can learn to bear; we can endure. Sometimes the philosophy is implicit in the action of Jeffers' characters; sometimes it is explicit, and the poet steps out of the drama to say:

. . . No life

Ought to be thought important in the weave of the world, whatever it may show of courage or endured pain.

It owns no other manner of shining but to bear pain; for pleasure is too little, our inhuman God is too great, thought is too lost.

The shorter poems in Give Your Heart to the Hawks (1934) and Solstice (1935), like those in the preceding volumes, are Jeffers at his most characteristic; condensation forces his pessimism into a rhythm that is both long and compact, like a tightly coiled spring. Several of the finest appeared in the 1927 issue of A Miscellany of American Poetry and were added to the popular edition of Roan Stallion, Tamar and Other Poems, brought out by The Modern Library in 1935. This excellent reprint also contains an introduction by the author which is a valuable piece of self-appraisal, especially in its estimate of "originality." "It seemed to me," says Jeffers, "that Mallarmé and his followers, renouncing intelligibility in order to concentrate the music of poetry, had turned off the road into a narrowing lane. Their successors could only make further renunciations; ideas had gone, now meter had gone, imagery would have to go; then recognizable emotions would have to go; perhaps at last even words might have to go or give up their meaning, nothing be left but musical syllables. Every advance required the elimination of some aspect of reality, and what could it profit me to know the direction of modern poetry if I did not like the direction? It was too much like putting out your eyes to cultivate the sense of hearing, or cutting off the right hand to develop the left. These austereities were not for me; originality by amputation was too painful for me."

Three years after distressing himself about "originality" Jeffers began to write Tamar, the work which was one of the most original of his generation. Superficially, because of his loose musical line, Jeffers seems to resemble Whitman, but his spirit is the very opposite of that rude yea-sayer's. Where Whitman lifts himself in all-embracing affirmations, Jeffers loses himself in all-inclusive negations. The California poet turns against the sense of love which upheld Whitman; until man can "love outwardly," love of man, to Jeffers, is only "the trap that catches noblest spirits, that caught—they say—God, when he walked on earth." It was, however, not so much Jeffers' negations to which the critics objected as to his abnormal themes. This was the more curious since, beneath his preoccupations with abnormality, the poet implied a definite morality. Jeffers explained this element of his work in a letter which leaves no doubt of his intentions: "In Tamar a little and in The Women at Point Sur consciously and definitely, incest is symbolized racial introversion: man regarding man exclusively—sounding his values, desires, a picture of the universe, all on his own humanity. . . . The tendency to romanticize unmoral freedom leads to destruction—often of the individual but always of the social organism."

Such Counsels You Gave to Me and Other Poems (1937) repeats all the notes of Jeffers' previous work, but it contains a new attempt at clarification. Man is still "a spectral episode" and "humanity is needless"; but, even in an inhuman and valueless universe, man inconsistently, stupidly, seeks for values. The Selected Poetry of Robinson Jeffers (1938), a book of 620 pages, reveals this self-contradiction on a large scale; Be Angry at the Sun (1941) half conceals it in a fiercely restrained bitterness. There is, first of all, the glorification of tragedy, of the struggle toward self-realization and the "ennobling" power of pain. And there is the insistence that all struggle is useless, that all values are inconsequential in a universe which flees "the contagion of consciousness that infects this corner of space." Joy leads to destruction, and terror is the reward of truth.

Yet if Jeffers feeds on destruction and terror, he is not sickened but sustained by it. His poetry communicates a stormy vigor. It never falters, but sweeps on, cumulative and irresistible. The epithets are almost always exact, the occasional metaphors as inevitable as "the leopard-footed evening," "she moved sighing, like a loose fire"; a hawk's wing "trails like a banner in defeat."

One must, somehow, separate the idea and its expression, remembering that the poem transcends the experience and the personality that prompted it. Between Jeffers the philosopher and Jeffers the poet there is a significant dichotomy. The philosophy is negative, repetitious, dismal. The poetry, even when bitterest, is positive as any creative expression must be. It is varied in movement and color; it vibrates with a reckless fecundity, it is continually breaking through its own pattern to dangerous and unfathomed depths. This is not a work to be enjoyed without sacrificing that sense of ease dear to the casual reader; it is doubtful if, in the common sense, it can be "enjoyed" at all. But here is a full-throated poetry, remarkable in sheer drive and harrowing drama, a poetry we may never love but which we cannot forget.

C O M P E N S A T I O N

Solitude that unmakes me one of men
In snow-white hands brings singular recompence,
Evening me with kindlier natures when
On the needled pinewood the cold dews condense

About the hour of Rigel fallen from heaven
 In wintertime, or when the long night tides
 Sigh blindly from the sand-dune backward driven,
 Or when on stormwings of the northwind rides
 The foamscud with the cormorants, or when passes
 A horse or dog with brown affectionate eyes,
 Or autumn frosts are pricked by earliest grasses,
 Or whirring from her covert a quail flies.
 Why, even in humanity, beauty and good
 Show from the mountainside of solitude.

AGE IN PROSPECT

Praise youth's hot blood if you will, I think that happiness
 Rather consists in having lived clear through
 Youth and hot blood, on to the wintrier hemisphere
 Where one has time to wait and to remember.

Youth and hot blood are beautiful, so is peacefulness.
 Youth had some islands in it, but age is indeed
 An island and a peak; age has infirmities,
 Not few, but youth is all one fever.

To look around and to love in his appearances,
 Though a little calmly, the universal God's Beauty is better I think than to lip eagerly
 The mother's breast or another woman's.

And there is no possession more sure than memory's;
 But if I reach that gray island, that peak,
 My hope is still to possess with eyes the homeliness
 Of ancient loves, ocean and mountains,

And meditate the sea-mouth of mortality
 And the fountain six feet down with a quieter thirst
 Than now I feel for old age; a creature progressively
 Thirsty for life will be for death too. . .

ANTE MORTEM

It is likely enough that lions and scorpions
 Guard the end; life never was bonded to be endurable nor the act of dying
 Unpainful; the brain burning too often
 Earns, though it held itself detached from the object, often a burnt age.
 No matter, I shall not shorten it by hand.
 Incapable of body or unmoved of brain is no evil, one always went envying
 The quietness of stones. But if the striped blossom
 Insanity spread lewd splendors and lightning terrors at the end of the forest;
 Or intolerable pain work its known miracle,
 Exile the monarch soul, set a sick monkey in the office . . . remember me
 Entire and balanced when I was younger,
 And could lift stones, and comprehend in the praises the cruelties of life.

POST MORTEM

Happy people die whole, they are all dissolved in a moment, they have had what they wanted,
 No hard gifts; the unhappy
 Linger a space, but pain is a thing that is glad to be forgotten; but one who has given
 His heart to a cause or a country,
 His ghost may spaniel it a while, disconsolate to watch it. I was wondering how long the spirit
 That sheds this verse will remain
 When the nostrils are nipped, when the brain rots in its vault or bubbles in the violence of fire
 To be ash in metal. I was thinking
 Some stalks of the wood whose roots I married to the earth of this place will stand five centuries;
 I held the roots in my hand,
 The stems of the trees between two fingers; how many remote generations of women
 Will drink joy from men's loins,
 And dragged from between the thighs of what mothers will giggle at my ghost when it curses the axmen,
 Gray impotent voice on the sea-wind,
 When the last trunk falls? The women's abundance will have built roofs over all this foreland;
 Will have buried the rock foundations
 I laid here: the women's exuberance will canker and fail in its time and like clouds the houses
 Unframe, the granite of the prime
 Stand from the heaps: come storm and wash clean: the plaster is all run to the sea and the steel
 All rusted; the foreland resumes
 The soun we loved when we saw it. Though one at the end of the age and far off from this place Should meet my presence in a poem,
 The ghost would not care but be here, long sunset shadow in the seams of the granite, and forgotten
 The flesh, a spirit for the stone.

NOON

The pure air trembles, O pitiless God,
 The air aches with flame on these gaunt rocks
 Over the flat sea's face, the forest
 Shakes in gales of piercing light.

But the altars are behind and higher
 Where the great hills raise naked heads,
 Pale antagonists in the reverberance
 Of the pure air and the pitiless God.

On the domed skull of every hill
 Who stand blazing with spread vans,
 The arms uplifted, the eyes in ecstasy?

What wine has the God drunk, to sing
 Violently in heaven, what wine his worshipers
 Whose silence blazes? The light that is over
 Light, the terror of noon, the eyes
 That the eagles die at, have thrown down
 Me and my pride, here I lie naked
 In a hollow of the shadowless rocks,
 Full of the God, having drunk fire.

CLOUDS OF EVENING

Enormous cloud-mountains that form over Point Lobos and into the sunset,
 Figures of fire on the walls of tonight's storm,
 Foam of gold in gorges of fire, and the great file of warrior angels:
 Dreams gathering in the curdled brain of the earth—
 The sky the brain-vault—on the threshold of sleep poor earth, you, like your children
 By inordinate desires tortured, make dreams?
 Storms more enormous, wars nobler, more toppling mountains, more jeweled waters, more free
 Fires on impossible headlands . . . as a poor girl
 Wishing her lover taller and more desirous, and herself maned with gold,
 Dreams the world right, in the cold bed, about dawn.
 Dreams are beautiful; the slaves of form are beautiful also; I have grown to believe
 A stone is a better pillow than many visions.

TO THE STONE-CUTTERS

Stone-cutters fighting time with marble, you foredefeated
 Challengers of oblivion,
 Eat cynical earnings, knowing rock splits, records fall down,
 The square-limbed Roman letters
 Scale in the thaws, wear in the rain. The poet as well
 Builds his monument mockingly;
 For man will be blotted out, the blithe earth die, the brave sun
 Die blind, his heart blackening:
 Yet stones have stood for a thousand years, and pained thoughts found
 The honey peace in old poems.

GALE IN APRIL

Intense and terrible beauty, how has our race with the frail naked nerves,
 So little a craft swum down from its far launching?
 Why now, only because the northwest blows and the headed grass billows,
 Great seas jagging the west and on the granite

Blanching, the vessel is brimmed, this dancing play of the world is too much passion.

A gale in April so overfilling the spirit,
Though his ribs were thick as the earth's, arches of mountain, how shall one dare to live,

Though his blood were like the earth's rivers and his flesh iron,
How shall one dare to live? One is born strong, how do the weak endure it?
The strong lean upon death as on a rock,
After eighty years there is shelter and the naked nerves shall be covered with deep quietness.

O beauty of things, go on, go on, O torture
Of intense joy, I have lasted out my time, I have thanked God and finished,
Roots of millennial trees fold me in the darkness,
Northwest winds shake their tops, not to the root, not to the root, I have passed
From beauty to the other beauty, peace, the night splendor.

APOLOGY FOR BAD DREAMS

I

In the purple light, heavy with redwood, the slopes drop seaward,
Headlong convexities of forest, drawn in together to the steep ravine. Below, on the sea-cliff,

A lonely clearing; a little field of corn by the streamside; a roof under spared trees.
Then the ocean

Like a great stone someone has cut to a sharp edge and polished to shining Beyond it, the fountain

And furnace of incredible light flowing up from the sunk sun In the little clearing a woman

Was punishing a horse; she had tied the halter to a sapling at the edge of the wood;
but when the great whip

Clung to the flanks the creature kicked so hard she feared he would snap the halter; she called from the house

The young man her son; who fetched a chain tie-rope, they working together
Noosed the small rusty links round the horse's tongue

And tied him by the swollen tongue to the tree.

Seen from this height they are shrunk to insect size,
Out of all human relation. You cannot distinguish

The blood dripping from where the chain is fastened,
The beast shuddering; but the thrust neck and the legs

Far apart. You can see the whip fall on the flanks. . . .

The gesture of the arm. You cannot see the face of the woman.

The enormous light beats up out of the west across the cloud-bars of the trade-wind.

The ocean

Darkens, the high clouds brighten, the hills darken together. Unbridled and unbelievable beauty

Covers the evening world . . . not covers, grows apparent out of it, as Venus down there grows out

From the lit sky. What said the prophet? "I create good: and I create evil: I am the Lord."

II

This coast crying out for tragedy like all beautiful places,
 (The quiet ones ask for quieter suffering; but here the granite cliff the gaunt cypresses' crown
 Demands what victim? The dykes of red lava and black what Titan? The hills like pointed flames
 Beyond Soberanes, the terrible peaks of the bare hills under the sun, what im-molation?)
 This coast crying out for tragedy like all beautiful places: and like the passionate spirit of humanity
 Pain for its bread· God's, many victims', the painful deaths, the horrible trans-figurements· I said in my heart,
 "Better invent than suffer: imagine victims
 Lest your own flesh be chosen the agonist, or you
 Martyr some creature to the beauty of the place" And I said,
 "Burn sacrifices once a year to magic
 Horror away from the house, this little house here
 You have built over the ocean with your own hands
 Beside the standing bowlders: for what are we,
 The beast that walks upright, with speaking lips
 And little hair, to think we should always be fed,
 Sheltered, intact, and self-controlled? We sooner more liable
 Than the other animals. Pain and terror, the insanities of desire; not accidents, but essential,
 And crowd up from the core." I imagined victims for those wolves, I made the phantoms to follow.
 They have hunted the phantoms and missed the house. It is not good to forget over what gulls the spirit
 Of the beauty of humanity, the petal of a lost flower blown seaward by the night-wind, floats to its quietness.

III

Bowlders blunted like an old bear's teeth break up from the headland; below them
 All the soil is thick with shells, the tide-rock feasts of a dead people.
 Here the granite flanks are scarred with ancient fire, the ghosts of the tribe
 Crouch in the nights beside the ghost of a fire, they try to remember the sunlight,
 Light has died out of their skies. These have paid something for the future
 Luck of the country, while we living keep old griefs in memory: though God's Envy is not a likely fountain of ruin, to forget evil calls down
 Sudden reminders from the cloud: remembered deaths be our redeemers;
 Imagined victims our salvation: white as the half moon at midnight
 Someone flamelike passed me, saying, "I am Tamar Cauldwell, I have my desire,"
 Then the voice of the sea returned, when she had gone by, the stars to their towers.
 . . . Beautiful country, burn again, Point Pinos down to the Sur Rivers
 Burn as before with bitter wonders, land and ocean and the Carmel water.

IV

He brays humanity in a mortar to bring the savor
 From the bruised root: a man having bad dreams, who invents victims, is only the ape of that God.
 He washes it out with tears and many waters, calcines it with fire in the red crucible,

Deforms it, makes it horrible to itself: the spirit flies out and stands naked, he sees the spirit.

He takes it in the naked ecstasy; it breaks in his hand, the atom is broken, the power that massed it

Cries to the power that moves the stars, "I have come home to myself, behold me.
I bruised myself in the flint mortar and burnt me
In the red shell, I tortured myself, I flew forth,
Stood naked of myself and broke me in fragments,
And here am I moving the stars that are me."

I have seen these ways of God: I know of no reason
For fire and change and torture and the old returnings.

He being sufficient might be still. I think they admit no reason; they are the ways of my love.

Unmeasured power, incredible passion, enormous craft: no thought apparent but burns darkly

Smothered with its own smoke in the human brain-vault: no thought outside: a certain measure in phenomena:

The fountains of the boiling stars, the flowers on the foreland, the ever-returning roses of dawn.

The heads of strong old age are beautiful
Beyond all grace of youth. They have strange quiet,
Integrity, health, soundness, to the full
They've dealt with life and been attempered by it.
A young man must not sleep, his years are war
Civil and foreign but the former's worse;
But the old can breathe in safety now that they are Forgetting what youth meant, the being perverse,
Running the fool's gauntlet and being cut
By the whips of the five senses. As for me,
If I should wish to live long it were but
To trade those fevers for tranquillity,
Thinking though that's entire and sweet in the grave
How shall the dead taste the deep treasure they have?

B I R T H - D U E S

Joy is a trick in the air; pleasure is merely contemptible, the dangled
Carrot the ass follows to market or precipice;
But limitary pain—the rock under the tower and the hewn coping
That takes thunder at the head of the turret—
Terrible and real. Therefore a mindless dervish carving himself
With knives will seem to have conquered the world.

The world's God is treacherous and full of unreason; a torturer, but also
The only foundation and the only fountain.

Who fights him eats his own flesh and perishes of hunger; who hides in the grave
To escape him is dead; who enters the Indian
Recession to escape him is dead; who falls in love with the God is washed clean
Of death desired and of death dreaded.

He has joy, but joy is a trick in the air; and pleasure, but pleasure is contemptible;
And peace; and is based on solder than pain.

He has broken boundaries a little and that will estrange him; he is monstrous, but not

To the measure of the God. . . . But I having told you—

However I suppose that few in the world have energy to hear effectively—

Have paid my birth-dues; am quits with the people.

When the sun shouts and people abound
One thinks there were the ages of stone and the age of bronze
And the iron age; iron the unstable metal;
Steel made of iron, unstable as his mother; the towered-up cities
Will be stains of rust on mounds of plaster.
Roots will not pierce the heaps for a time, kind rains will cure them,
Then nothing will remain of the iron age
And all these people but a thigh-bone or so, a poem
Stuck in the world's thought, splinters of glass
In the rubbish dumps, a concrete dam far off in the mountain. . . .

C R E D O

My friend from Asia has powers and magic, he plucks a blue leaf from the young blue-gum

And gazing upon it, gathering and quieting

The God in his mind, creates an ocean more real than the ocean, the salt, the actual Appalling presence, the power of the waters.

He believes that nothing is real except as we make it

I humbler have found in my blood

Bred west of Caucasus a harder mysticism.

Mulutude stands in my mind but I think that the ocean in the bone vault is only
The bone vault's ocean: out there is the ocean's;

The water is the water, the cliff is the rock, come shocks and flashes of reality. The mind

Passes, the eye closes, the spirit is a passage;

The beauty of things was born before eyes and sufficient to itself; the heart-breaking beauty

Will remain when there is no heart to break for it.

P E L I C A N S

Four pelicans went over the house,

Sculled their worn oars over the courtyard: I saw that ungainliness
Magnifies the idea of strength.

A lifting gale of sea-gulls followed them; slim yachts of the element,
Natural growths of the sky, no wonder

Light wings to leave sea; but those grave weights toil, and are powerful,
And the wings torn with old storms remember

The cone that the oldest redwood dropped from, the tilting of continents,

The dinosaur's day, the lift of new sea-lines.
 The omnisecular spirit keeps the old with the new also.
 Nothing at all has suffered erasure.
 There is life not of our time. He calls ungainly bodies
 As beautiful as the grace of horses.
 He is weary of nothing; he watches air-planes; he watches pelicans.

LOVE THE WILD SWAN

"I hate my verses, every line, every word,
 Oh pale and brittle pencils ever to try
 One grass-blade's curve, or the throat of one bird
 That clings to twig, ruffled against white sky.
 Oh cracked and twilight mirrors ever to catch
 One color, one glinting flash, of the splendor of things.
 Unlucky hunter, Oh bullets of wax,
 The lion beauty, the wild-swan wings, the storm of the wings."
 —This wild swan of a world is no hunter's game.
 Better bullets than yours would miss the white breast,
 Better mirrors than yours would crack in the flame.
 Does it matter whether you hate your . . . self? At least
 Love your eyes that can see, your mind that can Hear the music, the thunder of the wings. Love the wild swan.

NIGHT

The cbb slips from the rock, the sunken
 Tide-rocks lift streaming shoulders
 Out of the slack, the slow west
 Sombering its torch; a ship's light
 Shows faintly, far out,
 Over the weight of the prone ocean
 On the low cloud.

Over the dark mountain, over the dark pinewood,
 Down the long dark valley along the shrunken river,
 Returns the splendor without rays, the shining shadow,
 Peace-bringer, the matrix of all shining and quieter of shining.
 Where the shore widens on the bay she opens dark wings
 And the ocean accepts her glory. O soul worshipful of her
 You, like the ocean, have grave depths where she dwells always,
 And the film of waves above that takes the sun takes also
 Her, with more love. The sun-lovers have a blond favorite,
 A father of lights and noises, wars, weeping and laughter,
 Hot labor, lust and delight and the other blemishes.

Quictness
 Flows from her deeper fountain; and he will die; and she is immortal.

Far off from here the slender
 Flocks of the mountain forest

Move among stems like towers
 Of the old redwoods to the stream,
 No twig crackling; dip shy
 Wild muzzles into the mountain water
 Among the dark ferns.

O passionately at peace you being secure will pardon
 The blasphemies of glowworms, the lamp in my tower, the fretfulness
 Of cities, the crescents of the planets, the pride of the stars.
 This August night in a rift of cloud Antares reddens,
 The great one, the ancient torch, a lord among lost children,
 The earth's orbit doubled would not girdle his greatness, one fire
 Globed, out of grasp of the mind enormous; but to you

O Night

What? Not a spark? What flicker of a spark in the faint far glimmer
 Of a lost fire dying in the desert, dim coals of a sand-pit the Bedouins
 Wandered from at dawn. . . . Ah singing prayer to what gulfs tempted Suddenly are you more lost? To us the near-hand mountain
 Be a measure of height, the tide-worn cliff at the sea-gate a measure of continuance.

The tide, moving the night's Vastness with lonely voices,
 Turns, the deep dark-shining
 Pacific leans on the land,
 Feeling his cold strength
 To the outmost margins: you Night will resume
 The stars in your time.

O passionately at peace when will that tide draw shoreward,
 Truly the spouting fountains of light, Antares, Arcturus,
 Tire of their flow, they sing one song but they think silence.
 The striding winter-giant Orion shines, and dreams darkness.
 And life, the flicker of men and moths and the wolf on the hill,
 Though furious for continuance, passionately feeding, passionately
 Remaking itself upon its mates, remembers deep inward
 The calm mother, the quietness of the womb and the egg,
 The primal and the latter silences: dear Night it is memory
 Prophesies, prophecy that remembers, the charm of the dark.
 And I and my people, we are willing to love the four-score years
 Heartily; but as a sailor loves the sea, when the helm is for harbor.

Have men's minds changed,
 Or the rock hidden in the deep of the waters of the soul
 Broken the surface? A few centuries
 Gone by, was none dared not to people
 The darkness beyond the stars with harps and habitations.
 But now, dear is the truth. Life is grown sweeter and lonelier,
 And death is no evil.

SHINE, PERISHING REPUBLIC

While this America settles in the mold of its vulgarity, heavily thickening to empire,
And protest, only a bubble in the molten mass, pops and sighs out, and the mass hardens,

I sadly smiling remember that the flower fades to make fruit, the fruit rots to make earth.

Out of the mother; and through the spring exultances, ripeness and decadence; and home to the mother.

You make haste on decay: not blameworthy; life is good, be it stubbornly long or suddenly

A mortal splendor: meteors are not needed less than mountains: shine, perishing republic.

But for my children, I would have them keep their distance from the thickening center; corruption

Never has been compulsory, when the cities lie at the monster's feet there are left the mountains.

And boys, be in nothing so moderate as in love of man, a clever servant, insufferable master.

There is the trap that catches noblest spirits, that caught—they say—God, when he walked on earth.

DIVINELY SUPERFLUOUS BEAUTY

The storm-dances of gulls, the barking game of seals,
Over and under the ocean . . .

Divinely superfluous beauty

Rules the games, presides over destinies, makes trees grow
And hills tower, waves fall.

The incredible beauty of joy

Stars with fire the joining of lips, O let our loves too
Be joined, there is not a maiden

Burns and thirsts for love

More than my blood for you, by the shore of seals while the wings
Weave like a web in the air

Divinely superfluous beauty.

HURT HAWKS

The broken pillar of the wing jags from the clotted shoulder,
The wing trails like a banner in defeat,
No more to use the sky forever but live with famine
And pain a few days: cat nor coyote
Will shorten the week of waiting for death, there is game without talons.

He stands under the oak-bush and waits
The lame feet of salvation; at night he remembers freedom

And flies in a dream, the dawns ruin it.
 He is strong and pain is worse to the strong, incapacity is worse.
 The curs of the day come and torment him
 At distance, no one but death the redeemer will humble that head,
 The intrepid readiness, the terrible eyes.
 The wild God of the world is sometimes merciful to those
 That ask mercy, not often to the arrogant.
 You do not know him, you communal people, or you have forgotten him;
 Intemperate and savage, the hawk remembers him;
 Beautiful and wild, the hawks, and men that are dying remember him.

I'd sooner, except the penalties, kill a man than a hawk; but the great redtail
 Had nothing left but unable misery
 From the bone too shattered for mending, the wing that trailed under his talons when he moved.
 We had fed him six weeks, I gave him freedom,
 He wandered over the foreland hill and returned in the evening, asking for death,
 Not like a beggar, still eyed with the old
 Implacable arrogance. I gave him the lead gift in the twilight.

What fell was relaxed,

Owl-downy, soft feminine feathers; but what
 Soared· the fierce rush· the night-herons by the flooded river cried fear at its rising
 Before it was quite unsheathed from reality.

P R E S C R I P T I O N O F P A I N F U L E N D S

Lucretius felt the change of the world in his time, the great republic coming to the height
 Whence no way leads but downward, Plato in his time watched Athens Dance the down path. The future is ever a misted landscape, no man foreknows it, but at cyclical turns
 There is a change felt in the rhythm of events: as when an exhausted horse Falters and recovers, then the rhythm of the running hoofbeats is altered, he will run miles yet,
 But he must fall: we have felt it again in our own lifetime, slip, shift and speed-up
 In the gallop of the world, and now suspect that, come peace or war, the progress of America and Europe
 Becomes a long process of deterioration—starred with famous Byzantiums and Alexandrias,
 Surely,—but downward. One desires at such times
 To gather the insights of the age summit against future loss, against the narrowing mind and the tyrants,
 The pedants, the mystagogues, the swarms of barbarians: time-conscious poems, poems for treasures: Lucretius
 Sings his great theory of natural origins and of wise conduct; Plato smiling carves dreams, bright cells
 Of incorruptible wax to hive the Greek honey.

Our own time, much greater and far less fortunate

Has acids for honey and for fine dreams
 The immense vulgarities of misapplied science and decaying Christianity: therefore one christens each poem, in dutiful
 Hope of burning off at least the top crust of the time's uncleanness, from the acid bottles.

MAY - JUNE, 1940

Foreseen for so many years: these evils, this monstrous violence, these massive agonies: no easier to bear.
 We saw them with slow stone strides approach, everyone saw them; we closed our eyes against them, we looked
 And they had come nearer. We ate and drank and slept, they came nearer. Sometimes we laughed, they were nearer. Now
 They are here. And now a blind man foresees what follows them: degradation, famine, recovery and so forth, and the Epidemic manias: but not enough death to serve us, not enough death. It would be better for men
 To be few and live far apart, where none could infect another; then slowly the sanity of field and mountain
 And the cold ocean and glittering stars might enter their minds.

Another

dream, another dream.
 We shall have to accept certain limitations
 In future, and abandon some humane dreams; only hard-minded, sleepless and realist, can ride this rock-slide
 To new fields down the dark mountain, and we shall have to perceive that these insanities are normal;
 We shall have to perceive that battle is a burning flower or like a huge music, and the dive-bomber's screaming orgasm
 As beautiful as other passions, and that death and life are not serious alternatives.
     One has known all these things
 For many years: there is greater and darker to know
 In the next hundred.

And why do you cry, my dear, why do you cry?
 It is all in the whirling circles of time.
 If millions are born millions must die,
 If England goes down and Germany up
 The stronger dog will still be on top,
 All in the turning of time.
 If civilization goes down, that
 Would be an event to contemplate.
 It will not be in our time, alas, my dear,
 It will not be in our time.

Frank Ernest Hill

FRANK ERNEST HILL was born in San Jose, California, October 29, 1888. He graduated from Stanford University, taught at the University of Illinois, Stanford University and Columbia Extension. During the War, he went into the Air Service, and after a brief experience with the Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor Corporation, engaged in journalism, publishing, and teaching. In collaboration with Joseph Auslander, he wrote The Wingèd Horse (1927), which is a story rather than a criticism of poetry, and edited The Wingèd Horse Anthology (1929). His translation of The Canterbury Tales (1935), containing all the metrical tales unexpurgated, is the best modern rendering, being highly readable and authoritative.

Stone Dust (1928) is a volume which presents the clash between the mechanical and creative forces in modern civilization. Neither scorning nor sentimentalizing the machine, Hill appraises it in terms of inner as well as outer experience. "Upper Air," "Wing Harbor," and the three other aeroplane poems are verses—possibly the first—by one who has known flying intimately; they transcend physical sensation, registering effects on spirit. The two longer poems, of which "Earth and Air" is the better, pierce through the material with clear vision. It is interesting to compare "Earth and Air"—particularly its point of view—with Elinor Wylie's "Hymn to Earth."

EARTH AND AIR

I

Earth is the tower of granite, the floor of loam,
 The grass that seeds, the sheep that fatten for men,
 Shapes that are beaten in fire or built in wall,
 The plow preparing the soil to be born again;
 The crystal well, the gold of the honeycomb,
 The hands that pattern with wool or hide or clay;
 Earth is the wain, the sickle, the sledge, the stall—
 Earth is our yesterday.

II

Air is the thrust of steam and burning gas,
 The spark men take from the foam of a falling stream,
 The word of the first sea caught on the last of the seven,
 Ships with the speed of a dream made more than dream;
 The throb of steel in a cage of steel and glass,
 Iron fingers at smooth and gleaming play,
 Air is the wings of men on the sea of heaven—
 Air is today.

III

Earth is the suck of men, their loaf and their healing;
 With earth they are poor but sapful, driven but strong;
 Air is a high, thin world where their eyes grow weaker,
 Their round breasts flatten, their cheeks fall white and long.
 Air is a shifting floor and a viewless ceiling,
 Genii building and wrecking and building again,

It is a half-heard magic speech from a hidden speaker
Sounding through light and rain.

IV

Men with the vision of air went planning and building;
They dreamed of slaves of iron and wrought their slaves;
They envied the wind and the eagle and spread their wings
Above the shadow of sinking woods and waves.
Men made little suns for the midnight's gilding,
Bridged with their wires the bridgeless gap of seas;
They dulled the teeth of winter, they turned the stings
And withering of disease—

V

Men with the dream of air have climbed to their vision,
But now they are faint for the meat of a day gone by;
The steeds of the sun race on in a golden madness,
The hurtling drivers are pale in the height of the sky.
Some say: "Hard Fate in a wrath and a great derision
Has laid the tools of gods in the hands of men;
Can dust breed stars? Can tears be distilled to gladness?
Let us go to earth again!"

VI

But the many hear not, the millions follow their dreaming
Driving their iron cattle on stone or steel,
Flying their iron hawks on an airy ocean,
Bearing children that play with the spark and the wheel.
They will never turn from swiftness and silver gleaming
Or the sense that he who has taken in wheel or rod
The staff of gods and the magic of god-like motion
Himself shall become a god.

VII

Perhaps they will come again to the sun and the bough,
The wind and the clod that once were their strife and their fate;
They will take not of olden beauty or olden toil;
They will only come back to earth when earth is air:
When they girdle peaks with their pavements and send their plow
Like a whirl of wind, and store their snow and their sun,
And sow where the strength they have sifted into the soil
Yields five instead of one.

VIII

Look back, then, you who had love for earth and regret her,
And mourn a change that harries your hill and sky;
For men are turned from the peace of the scythe and candle;
Their eyes are fierce for the bright and the swift and the high.
They have wrecked a world for the leaping dream of a better,
And gone from peace toward a peace beyond a war,
They have mounted untrodden stairs to a key and a handle
That open a door.

UPPER AIR

High, pale, imperial places of slow cloud
 And windless wells of sunlit silence. . . . Sense
 Of some aware, half-scornful Permanence
 Past which we flow like water that is loud
 A moment on the granite. Nothing here
 Beats with the pulse that beat in us below;
 That was a flame; this is the soul of snow
 Immortalized in moveless atmosphere.

Yet we shall brood upon this haunt of wings
 When love, like perfume washed away in rain,
 Dies on the years. Still we shall come again,
 Seeking the clouds as we have sought the sea,
 Asking the peace of these immortal things
 That will not mix with our mortality.

T. S. Eliot

THOMAS STEARNS ELIOT was born in St. Louis, Missouri, September 26, 1888. He received his A.B. at Harvard, 1909, and his A.M., 1910. Subsequently, he studied at the Sorbonne and at Merton College, Oxford. In 1914 he settled in London where he became a teacher, lecturer, editor, and publisher. In 1927 he became a naturalized British subject and declared that he was "Anglo-Catholic in religion, royalist in politics, and classicist in literature."

Prufock appeared in England in 1917. An American edition, including a number of other verses, was published under the title Poems in 1920. It was hailed, reviled, applauded, misunderstood, and imitated. There were indeed many imitators, particularly in England, where the younger men, rebounding from the affected simplicity of the Georgians, seized upon Eliot's disillusioned subtleties as a new gospel. Most of them patterned their lines upon the now famous "Sweeney" model, and by 1922 Eliot was one of the most discussed and disputed of living American poets. This early work reveals two sharply differentiated idioms. The more arresting inflection is in the impressionistic sets of quatrains that compose "Sweeney Among the Nightingales," "The Hippopotamus," "Burbank with a Baedeker." It is a witty if recondite inflection which is heard beneath the muffled allusions; the edged lines crackle with observations as shrewd as "the snarled and yelping seas," "this oval O cropped out with teeth," "laughter tinkling among the teacups," "the damp souls of housemaids." Occasionally Eliot's wit takes on a darker intensity; speaking of Donne's struggle to transcend the senses, he writes:

He knew the anguish of the marrow,
 Theague of the skeleton;
 No contact possible of flesh
 Allayed the fever of the bone.

But there is another phase of Eliot, one that is disclosed in "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock," the "Portrait of a Lady," and "La Figlia Che Piange," in which picture, philosophy, and music are surprisingly blended. "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock," written while Eliot was still at Harvard, is a minor masterpiece; nothing in recent poetry (if we forget Laforgue and the other French poets to whom Eliot is manifestly indebted), nothing in English since the seventeenth century metaphysicals, has communicated so great a sense of ambiguous hurt and general frustration.

First and last Eliot represents a revolt from the "cheerfulness, optimism, and hopefulness" of the nineteenth century; his work is an implicit declaration that poetry must not only "be found through suffering, but can find its material only in suffering." Beauty itself is suspect in the modern world; Eliot insists that the poet should "be able to see beneath both beauty and ugliness; to see the boredom, and the horror, and the glory." In "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock" Eliot shows the boredom and the horror, if not the glory, in contemporary society. The prematurely old Prufrock is a dilettante, culture-ridden and world-weary, aloof and disillusioned. He is inhibited by his own distorted memory and his confused desires; he recognizes passion, but he cannot rise to it. His isolation is emphasized by the strange opening simile ("when the evening is spread out against the sky like a patient etherized upon the table") with its mood of sick helplessness, and by the introductory lines from Dante's Inferno: "If I thought my answer were to one who ever could return to the world, this frame should shake no more; but since, if what I hear be true, none ever did return alive from this depth, without fear of infamy I answer thee."

Equally precise in its hyperesthetic delicacy is the "Portrait of a Lady," an analytical study of the feminine dilettante, the faded votary of dimly lit studios—a baffled précieuse diffusing small talk and boredom. In these poems Eliot becomes the laureate of nostalgia, of dwindling hope and universal purposelessness.

More important than Eliot's philosophy is his technique. It is a fascinating mixture of statement and suggestion, of passion and wit, of fact and symbol: the first extended use in English of the Symbolist method. The method, as Edmund Wilson showed in his valuable study Axel's Castle, is the result of an anti-scientific, romantic escapism; it consists chiefly in approximating the "indefiniteness of music," mingling "the grand and prosaic manners," and, generally, avoiding plain statements in favor of intimations. Instead of seeking the "jewel-like phrase" with its finality of definition, the Symbolists attempt to communicate "states of feeling." Eliot carries the method further by communicating—or at least registering—states of feeling that are complicated and highly personal. To achieve this he employs a complex verse, combining trivial and tawdry pictures with traditionally poetic subject-matter, linking the banalities of conversation to rich rhetoric, and interrupting the present with flash-backs of the past. This method, not unfamiliar to students of the films, makes for a nervous disintegration; the rapid and, seemingly, unrelated images, the discordant metaphors achieve an emotional response at the expense of a logical progression. But logic is not the objective. The reader is carried on by the rapidity of suggestions, by the swiftly accumulating ideas and echoes, chiefly by the play of cultural associations.

The contrast of the beautiful past with the repulsive present, the degradation of everything which enlarges the spirit, is given full scope in Eliot's The Waste Land. The Waste Land (1922) is Eliot's attempt to sound his favorite theme—the disillusion-frustration motif—on a major scale. The publication of this forty-page poem caused an outburst so violent and prolonged that the echoes of the controversy hung in the air for several years. On the one hand it was dismissed as "an impudent hoax," "filthy bedlam raving"; on the other it was exalted as "the greatest document of our day, showing the starvation of our entire civilization." The Waste Land is neither "erudite gibberish" nor is it "a great work, with one triumph after another." It is, in essence, a set of mangled, difficult, and (in spite of the arbitrary program of unification) separate failures and solitary successes. If its pages are splintered with broken phrases and distorted pictures, one must remember that Eliot is attempting to portray disintegration itself. Its dependence on associations in other literature makes it seem like an anthology of assimilations; its jumble of quotations (without inverted commas) from thirty-one sources gives the entire structure the look of a piece of literary carpentry; its allusiveness frantically attempts to connect the favorite myths of all time. It does, however, present a double picture: the cross-section of a tortured mind and the image of an arid world. Its sense of sterility, its refusal to face the growing complexity of the age was so significant—and so appealing to the escapistst—that it became a term which characterized a period.

Eliot's influence was felt on both sides of the Atlantic. The younger poets repudiated his inverted romanticism masked as classicism, and his pessimism which scarcely troubled to conceal the death-wish, but they were fascinated by his technique. They scorned Eliot's withdrawal into Anglo-Catholicism, but they admired—and imitated—his power of suggestion. In England W. H. Auden, Stephen Spender, and C. Day Lewis acknowledged his influence; in America his poetry affected the work of Conrad Aiken, Archibald MacLeish, and Horace Gregory, among others.

In his turn, Eliot was strongly influenced by his "ancestors" in France. Reviewing Peter Quennell's Baudelaire and the Symbolists in 1930 he referred to Arthur Symons' Symbolist Movement in Literature, saying, "I myself owe Mr. Symons a great debt. But for having read his book I should not, in the year 1908, have heard of Laforgue and Rimbaud; I should probably not have begun to read Verlaine; and but for reading Verlaine, I should not have heard of Corbière. So the Symons book is one of those which have affected the course of my life." But, as Edmund Wilson points out, though Eliot's main theme (the inferiority of the present to the past) is found in Laforgue and the other Romantics, though the idea of juxtaposing many literatures and a medley of idioms was suggested by Ezra Pound, "yet Eliot manages to be more effective precisely where he might be expected to be least original—he succeeds in conveying his meanings, in communicating his emotions, in spite of all his learning or mysterious allusions, and whether we understand them or not. . . . He has been able to lend even to the rhythms, to the words themselves, of his great predecessors a new music and a new meaning." His borrowings are a proof of Eliot's retreat to the safety of literature; scholars have been surprised (and sometimes a little pained) to find many of Eliot's phrases not only in the minor Elizabethans, but (as Elizabeth Jackson discovered) in so curious a modern writer as Conan Doyle. The very "mottoes" or epigraphs are intended not only to comment upon the poems which they introduce, but to amplify their suggestiveness. "The Love Song of J Alfred Prufrock" is prefaced by a quotation from Dante emphasizing the repressed Prufrock's ultra-fastidious and isolated spirit; "Burbank with a Baedeker" is set off by the preceding jumble of phrases from Shakespeare, Browning, and Henry James referring to Venice; the quotation "Mistah Kurtz—he dead" from Conrad's Heart of Darkness intensifies the sense of loss and emptiness rising from the lines which follow—as F. O. Matthiessen remarks, it "epitomizes in a sentence the very tone of blasphemous hopelessness which issues from 'The Hollow Men.'"

In "The Hollow Men," which emphasizes the barrenness of The Waste Land, Eliot reached a dead end of doubt. "The Hollow Men" pictures a world exhausted—"shape without form, shade without color, paralyzed force, gesture without motion." Men gather on stony soil in a "valley of dying stars." They lean together, lacking initiative. They are without vision; they grope without thought. The confusion is intensified by the juxtaposition of a distorted nursery rhyme and a fragment from the Lord's Prayer. The finale completes the despair. Civilization, having lost its ideals and religion, has reached an impasse; man cannot even die heroically. The world ends not with a bang, but with a whimper.

After "The Hollow Men" Eliot, finding he could proceed no further with doubt, turned to faith. Ash Wednesday (1930), The Rock: a Pageant Play (1934), and Murder in the Cathedral (1935) express a hopefulness which Eliot's earlier poems repudiated. The Family Reunion (1939) is a drama in verse, the theme of which is the persistent sense of sin; the setting is contemporary, although the Eumenides appear in person. Eliot accepts the Christian religion and, beneath the austerity of the later work, sounds a compassion which is genuine and moving. Critics were particularly enthusiastic concerning Ash Wednesday, which begins in desperation, rises on hope, and rests in peaceful resignation. Here, said Edwin Muir, Eliot passes "from a historical conception of society to a religious one, or rather to that society within society in which he sees man's sole hope of salvation. A church is the only kind of institution in which the individual can hold communion not only with the living (the ideal of the Socialist and the Communist), but with the dead as well; and so membership of a church was perfectly consonant with Eliot's view of life and his development as a poet. Ash Wednesday is one of the most moving poems he has written, and perhaps the most perfect."

Murder in the Cathedral (1935), a dramatization of the murder of Thomas Becket in 1170, was written for production at the Canterbury Festival in 1935. The language is lucid, the action straightforward, and the poetry almost wholly free of the obliquity and harsh juxtaposition with which Eliot shocked an epoch out of its exhausted sentiments and offered new symbols for a new generation. Instead of a confusion of private references and literary allusions the verse has a simple unity, and the choruses are not only skillfully balanced but eloquent. The play was successfully produced in New York by the Federal Theater Project in 1938.

Collected Poems: 1907-1935 appeared in 1936. It comprehensively reveals Eliot struggling through his nightmares of vulgarity, crying aloud in an endless cactus land, and finally reaching his spiritual haven. Again the critics were divided. "Reading Eliot's new poems," wrote Malcolm Cowley, "was like excavating buried cities at the ends of the Syrian desert; they were full of imposing temples and perfectly proportioned statues of the gods, but there was nothing in the streets that breathed." But there were many besides Edwin Muir who considered his new poems—and particularly "A Song for Simeon," "Animula," "Journey of the Magi," and "Ash Wednesday"—his best.

Eliot's leadership in esthetic criticism was maintained in several volumes; it was established in Selected Essays. 1917-1932. Followed by The Use of Poetry (1933), After Strange Gods: A Primer of Modern Heresy (1934), a set of lectures delivered at the University of Virginia during a visit to America, and Elizabethan Essays (1934), Eliot abandoned the arbitrary absolutism of his early work and assumed an attitude so conservatively "classical" as to seem reactionary. Many of Eliot's admirers were alarmed by the Virginia lectures and the attitude assumed in The Idea of a Christian Society (1940). Pointing out the destructive element in Eliot's puritan conscience which strives desperately toward Catholicism, Stephen Spender wrote, "It is in fact an Old Testament doctrine suited to intense nationalism and racial self-sufficiency." And Horace Gregory, in a review written in 1936, anticipated Spender: "It is toward this danger that Eliot has been moving for the past five years, a danger which may at last obscure the values of his poetry and leave him, at the end of a career, an isolated symbol of post-war sensibility."

No one questioned the sensibility. Although the manner of his criticism is pontifical, the matter is always provocative; there are few critics who surpass Eliot in scholarliness, few who equal him in subtlety, coolness, and clarity. Wholly unlike his poetry, sometimes oppressively academic, sometimes marred by fantastic theories, Eliot's criticism is persuasive and backed by authority.

For an excellent study and a comprehensive, though uncritical, résumé of the poet's work the reader should examine The Achievement of T. S. Eliot (1935) by F. O. Matthiessen. The chapters on Eliot in Poetry and the Modern World (1940) by David Daiches, in The Destructive Element (1936) by Stephen Spender, and in The New Criticism (1941) by John Crowe Ransom are recommended for contrasting reports.

LA FIGLIA CHE PIANGE

O quam te memorem vugo . . .

Stand on the highest pavement of the stair—
 Lean on a garden urn—
 Weave, weave the sunlight in your hair—
 Clasp your flowers to you with a pained surprise—
 Fling them to the ground and turn
 With a fugitive resentment in your eyes:
 But weave, weave the sunlight in your hair.

So I would have had him leave,
 So I would have had her stand and grieve,
 So he would have left
 As the soul leaves the body torn and bruised,
 As the mind deserts the body it has used.

I should find
 Some way incomparably light and deft,
 Some way we both should understand,
 Simple and faithless as a smile and shake of the hand.

She turned away, but with the autumn weather
 Compelled my imagination many days,
 Many days and many hours:
 Her hair over her arms and her arms full of flowers,
 And I wonder how they should have been together!
 I should have lost a gesture and a pose.
 Sometimes these cogitations still amaze
 The troubled midnight and the noon's repose.

THE LOVE SONG OF J. ALFRED PRUFROCK

*S'io credevo che mai neposta fosse
 A persona che mai tornasse al mondo,
 Questa fiamma stava senza più scosse.
 Ma perciocche grammia di questo fondo
 Non torno vivo alcun, s'i'odo il vero,
 Senza tema d'infausta tu rispondo.*

Let us go then, you and I,
 When the evening is spread out against the sky
 Like a patient etherized upon a table;
 Let us go, through certain half-deserted streets,
 The muttering retreats
 Of restless nights in one-night cheap hotels
 And sawdust restaurants with oyster-shells;
 Streets that follow like a tedious argument
 Of insidious intent
 To lead you to an overwhelming question. . . .
 Oh, do not ask, "What is it?"
 Let us go and make our visit.

In the room the women come and go
 Talking of Michelangelo.

The yellow fog that rubs its back upon the window-panes,
 The yellow smoke that rubs its muzzle on the window-panes,
 Licked its tongue into the corners of the evening,
 Lingered upon the pools that stand in drains,
 Let fall upon its back the soot that falls from chimneys,
 Slipped by the terrace, made a sudden leap,
 And seeing that it was a soft October night,
 Curled once about the house, and fell asleep.

And indeed there will be time
 For the yellow smoke that slides along the street,
 Rubbing its back upon the window-panes;
 There will be time, there will be time

To prepare a face to meet the faces that you meet;
 There will be time to murder and create,
 And time for all the works and days of hands
 That lift and drop a question on your plate;
 Time for you and time for me,
 And time yet for a hundred indecisions,
 And for a hundred visions and revisions,
 Before the taking of a toast and tea.

In the room the women come and go
 Talking of Michelangelo.

And indeed there will be time
 To wonder, "Do I dare?" and, "Do I dare?"
 Time to turn back and descend the stair,
 With a bald spot in the middle of my hair—
 ("They will say: "How his hair is growing thin!")
 My morning coat, my collar mounting firmly to the chin,
 My necktie rich and modest, but asserted by a simple pin—
 ("They will say: "But how his arms and legs are thin!")
 Do I dare
 Disturb the universe?
 In a minute there is time
 For decisions and revisions which a minute will reverse.

For I have known them all already, known them all:
 Have known the evenings, mornings, afternoons,
 I have measured out my life with coffee spoons;
 I know the voices dying with a dying fall
 Beneath the music from a farther room.
 So how should I presume?

And I have known the eyes already, known them all—
 The eyes that fix you in a formulated phrase,
 And when I am formulated, sprawling on a pin,
 When I am pinned and wriggling on the wall,
 Then how should I begin
 To spit out all the butt-ends of my days and ways?
 And how should I presume?

And I have known the arms already, known them all—
 Arms that are braceleted and white and bare
 (But in the lamplight, downed with light brown hair!)
 Is it perfume from a dress
 That makes me so digress?
 Arms that lie along a table, or wrap about a shawl,
 And should I then presume?
 And how should I begin?

Shall I say, I have gone at dusk through narrow streets
 And watched the smoke that rises from the pipes
 Of lonely men in shirt-sleeves, leaning out of windows? . . .

I should have been a pair of ragged claws
 Scuttling across the floors of silent seas.

And the afternoon, the evening, sleeps so peacefully!
 Smoothed by long fingers,
 Asleep . . . tired . . . or it malingers,
 Stretched on the floor, here beside you and me.
 Should I, after tea and cakes and ices,
 Have the strength to force the moment to its crisis?
 But though I have wept and fasted, wept and prayed,
 Though I have seen my head (grown slightly bald) brought in upon a platter,
 I am no prophet—and here's no great matter;
 I have seen the moment of my greatness flicker,
 And I have seen the eternal Footman hold my coat, and smicker,
 And in short, I was afraid.

And would it have been worth it, after all,
 After the cups, the marmalade, the tea,
 Among the porcelain, among some talk of you and me,
 Would it have been worth while,
 To have bitten off the matter with a smile,
 To have squeezed the universe into a ball
 To roll it toward some overwhelming question,
 To say: "I am Lazarus, come from the dead,
 Come back to tell you all, I shall tell you all"—
 If one, settling a pillow by her head,
     Should say: "That is not what I meant at all;
     That is not it, at all."

And would it have been worth it, after all,
 Would it have been worth while,
 After the sunsets and the dooryards and the sprinkled streets,
 After the novels, after the teacups, after the skirts that trail along the floor—
 And this, and so much more?—
 It is impossible to say just what I mean!
 But as if a magic lantern threw the nerves in patterns on a screen:
 Would it have been worth while
 If one, settling a pillow or throwing off a shawl,
 And turning toward the window, should say:
     "That is not it at all,
     That is not what I meant, at all."

No! I am not Prince Hamlet, nor was meant to be;
 Am an attendant lord, one that will do
 To swell a progress, start a scene or two,
 Advise the prince; no doubt, an easy tool,

Deferential, glad to be of use,
 Politic, cautious, and meticulous;
 Full of high sentence, but a bit obtuse;
 At times, indeed, almost ridiculous—
 Almost, at times, the Fool.

I grow old. . . . I grow old. . . .
 I shall wear the bottoms of my trousers rolled.

Shall I part my hair behind? Do I dare to eat a peach?
 I shall wear white flannel trousers, and walk upon the beach.
 I have heard the mermaids singing, each to each.

I do not think that they will sing to me.

I have seen them riding seaward on the waves
 Combing the white hair of the waves blown back
 When the wind blows the water white and black.

We have lingered in the chambers of the sea
 By sea-girls wreathed with seaweed red and brown
 Till human voices wake us, and we drown.

MORNING AT THE WINDOW

They are rattling breakfast plates in basement kitchens,
 And along the trampled edges of the street
 I am aware of the damp souls of housemaids
 Sprouting despondently at area gates.

The brown waves of fog toss up to me
 Twisted faces from the bottom of the street,
 And tear from a passer-by with muddy skirts
 An aimless smile that hovers in the air
 And vanishes along the level of the roofs.

PRELUD E

The winter evening settles down
 With smells of steaks in passageways.
 Six o'clock.
 The burnt-out ends of smoky days.
 And now a gusty shower wraps
 The grimy scraps
 Of withered leaves about his feet
 And newspapers from vacant lots;
 The showers beat
 On broken blinds and chimney pots,
 And at the corner of the street
 A lonely cab-horse steams and stamps.
 And then the lighting of the lamps.

PORTRAIT OF A LADY<sup>1</sup>

I

Among the smoke and fog of a December afternoon
 You have the scene arrange itself—as it will seem to do—
 With “I have saved this afternoon for you”;
 And four wax candles in the darkened room,
 Four rings of light upon the ceiling overhead,
 And atmosphere of Juliet’s tomb
 Prepared for all the things to be said, or left unsaid.
 We have been, let us say, to hear the latest Pole
 Transmit the Preludes, through his hair and finger-tips.
 “So intimate, this Chopin, that I think his soul
 Should be resurrected only among friends
 Some two or three, who will not touch the bloom
 That is rubbed and questioned in the concert room.”
 —And so the conversation slips
 Among velleities and carefully caught regrets
 Through attenuated tones of violins
 Mingled with remote cornets
 And begins.
 “You do not know how much they mean to me, my friends,
 And how, how rare and strange it is, to find
 In a life composed so much, so much of odds and ends
 (For indeed I do not love it . . . you knew? You are not blind!
 How keen you are!)
 To find a friend who has these qualities,
 Who has, and gives
 Those qualities upon which friendship lives.
 How much it means that I say this to you—
 Without these friendships—life, what couchemarl!
 Among the windings of the violins
 And the ariettes
 Of cracked cornets
 Inside my brain a dull tom-tom begins
 Absurdly hammering a prelude of its own,
 Capricious monotone
 That is at least one definite “false note.”
 —Let us take the air, in a tobacco trance,
 Admire the monuments,
 Discuss the late events,
 Correct our watches by the public clocks,
 Then sit for half an hour and drink our bocks.

II

Now that lilacs are in bloom
 She has a bowl of lilacs in her room
 And twists one in her fingers while she talks.
 “Ah, my friend, you do not know, you do not know

<sup>1</sup> Compare the poem by Ezra Pound on the same theme on page 346.

What life is, you should hold it in your hands";
 (Slowly twisting the lilac stalks)
 "You let it flow from you, you let it flow,
 And youth is cruel, and has no remorse
 And smiles at situations which it cannot see."

I smile, of course,
 And go on drinking tea.
 "Yet with these April sunsets, that somehow recall
 My buried life, and Paris in the Spring,
 I feel immeasurably at peace, and find the world
 To be wonderful and youthful, after all."

The voice returns like the insistent out-of-tune
 Of a broken violin on an August afternoon:
 "I am always sure that you understand
 My feelings, always sure that you feel,
 Sure that across the gulf you reach your hand.
 You are invulnerable, you have no Achilles' heel.
 You will go on, and when you have prevailed
 You can say: at this point many a one has failed.

"But what have I, but what have I, my friend,
 To give you, what can you receive from me?
 Only the friendship and the sympathy
 Of one about to reach her journey's end
 I shall sit here, serving tea to friends. . . ."

I take my hat: how can I make a cowardly amends
 For what she has said to me?

You will see me any morning in the park
 Reading the comics and the sporting page.
 Particularly I remark
 An English countess goes upon the stage.
 A Greek was murdered at a Polish dance.
 Another bank defaulter has confessed.
 I keep my countenance,
 I remain self-possessed
 Except when a street piano, mechanical and tired,
 Reiterates some worn-out common song
 With the smell of hyacinths across the garden,
 Recalling things that other people have desired.
 Are these ideas right or wrong?

III

The October night comes down; returning as before
 Except for a slight sensation of being ill at ease
 I mount the stairs and turn the handle of the door
 And feel as if I had mounted on my hands and knees.

"And so you are going abroad; and when do you return?
 But that's a useless question.
 You hardly know when you are coming back;
 You will find so much to learn."
 My smile falls heavily among the bric-à-brac.

"Perhaps you can write to me."
 My self-possession flares up for a second;
This is as I had reckoned.
 "I have been wondering frequently of late
 (But our beginnings never know our ends!)
 Why we have not developed into friends"
 I feel like one who smiles, and turning shall remark
 Suddenly, his expression in a glass.
 My self-possession gutters; we are really in the dark.

"For everybody said so, all our friends,
 They all were sure our feelings would relate
 So closely! I myself can hardly understand.
 We must leave it now to fate.
 You will write, at any rate.
 Perhaps it is not too late.
 I shall sit here, serving tea to friends."

And I must borrow every changing shape
 To find expression . . . dance, dance
 Like a dancing bear,
 Cry like a parrot, chatter like an ape. . . .
 Let us take the air, in a tobacco trance—
 Well! and what if she should die some afternoon,
 Afternoon gray and smoky, evening yellow and rose;
 Should die and leave me sitting pen in hand
 With the smoke coming down above the housetops;
 Doubtful, for quite a while
 Not knowing what to feel or if I understand
 Or whether wise or foolish, tardy or too soon . . .
 Would she not have the advantage, after all?
 This music is successful with a "dying fall"
 Now that we talk of dying—
 And should I have the right to smile?

CONVERSATION GALANTE

I observe: "Our sentimental friend, the moon!
 Or possibly (fantastic, I confess)
 It may be Prester John's balloon
 Or an old battered lantern hung aloft
 To light poor travelers to their distress."
 She then: "How you digress!"

And I then: "Someone frames upon the keys
 That exquisite nocturne, with which we explain

The night and moonshine; music which we seize
To body forth our vacuity."

She then: "Does this refer to me?"
"Oh, no, it is I who am inane.

"You, madam, are the eternal humorist,
The eternal enemy of the absolute,
Giving our vagrant moods the slightest twist!
With your air indifferent and imperious
At a stroke our mad poetics to confute—"
And—"Are we then so serious?"

GERONTION

*Thou hast not youth nor age
But as it were an after dinner sleep
Dreaming of both*

Here I am, an old man in a dry month,
Being read to by a boy, waiting for rain.
I was neither at the hot gates
Nor fought in the warm rain
Nor knee deep in the salt marsh, heaving a cutlass,
Bitten by flies, fought.
My house is a decayed house,
And the Jew squats on the window sill, the owner,
Spawned in some estaminet of Antwerp,
Blistered in Brussels, patched and pealed in London.
The goat coughs at night in the field overhead;
Rocks, moss, stonecrop, iron, merds.
The woman keeps the kitchen, makes tea,
Sneezes at evening, poking the peevish gutter.

I an old man,
A dull head among windy spaces.

Signs are taken for wonders. "We would see a sign":
The word within a word, unable to speak a word,
Swaddled with darkness. In the juvescence of the year
Came Christ the tiger

In depraved May, dogwood and chestnut, flowering judas,
To be eaten, to be divided, to be drunk
Among whispers; by Mr. Silvero
With caressing hands, at Limoges
Who walked all night in the next room;
By Hakagawa, bowing among the Titians;
By Madame de Tornquist, in the dark room
Shifting the candles; Fraulein von Kulp
Who turned in the hall, one hand on the door. Vacant shuttles

Weave the wind. I have no ghosts,
 An old man in a draughty house
 Under a windy knob.
 After such knowledge, what forgiveness? Think now
 History has many cunning passages, contrived corridors
 And issues, deceives with whispering ambitions,
 Guides us by vanities. Think now
 She gives when our attention is distracted
 And what she gives, gives with such supple confusions
 That the giving famishes the craving. Gives too late
 What's not believed in, or if still believed,
 In memory only, reconsidered passion. Gives too soon
 Into weak hands, what's thought can be dispensed with Till the refusal propagates a fear. Think
 Neither fear nor courage saves us. Unnatural vices
 Are fathered by our heroism. Virtues
 Are forced upon us by our impudent crimes.
 These tears are shaken from the wrath-bearing tree.

The tiger springs in the new year. Us he devours. Think at last
 We have not reached conclusion, when I
 Stiffen in a rented house. Think at last
 I have not made this show purposelessly
 And it is not by any concitation
 Of the backward devils.
 I would meet you upon this honestly.
 I that was near your heart was removed therefrom
 To lose beauty in terror, terror in inquisition.
 I have lost my passion: why should I need to keep it
 Since what is kept must be adulterated?
 I have lost my sight, smell, hearing, taste and touch:
 How should I use it for your closer contact?

These with a thousand small deliberations
 Protract the profit of their chilled delirium,
 Excite the menibrane, when the sense has cooled,
 With pungent sauces, multiply variety
 In a wilderness of mirrors. What will the spider do,
 Suspend its operations, will the weevil
 Delay? De Bailhache, Fresca, Mrs. Cammel, whirled
 Beyond the circuit of the shuddering Bear
 In fractured atoms. Gull against the wind, in the windy straits
 Of Belle Isle, or running on the Horn,  $\zeta \gamma$
 White feathers in the snow, the Gulf claims,
 And an old man driven by the Trades
 To a sleepy corner.

Tenants of the house, &
 Thoughts of a dry brain in a dry season. /

RIAPSODY ON A WINDY NIGHT

Twelve o'clock.
 Along the reaches of the street
 Held in a lunar synthesis,
 Whispering lunar incantations
 Dissolve the floors of memory
 And all its clear relations,
 Its divisions and precisions,
 Every street lamp that I pass
 Beats like a fatalistic drum,
 And through the spaces of the dark
 Midnight shakes the memory
 As a madman shakes a dead geranium.

Half-past one,
 The street-lamp sputtered,
 The street-lamp muttered,
 The street-lamp said, "Regard that woman
 Who hesitates toward you in the light of the door
 Which opens on her like a grin.
 You see the border of her dress
 Is torn and stained with sand,
 And you see the corner of her eye
 Twists like a crooked pin"

The memory throws up high and dry
 A crowd of twisted things;
 A twisted branch upon the beach
 Eaten smooth, and polished
 As if the world gave up
 The secret of its skeleton,
 Stiff and white.
 A broken spring in a factory yard,
 Rust that clings to the form that the strength has left
 Hard and curled and ready to snap.

Half-past two,
 The street-lamp said,
 "Remark the cat which flattens itself in the gutter,
 Slips out its tongue
 And devours a morsel of rancid butter."
 So the hand of the child, automatic,
 Slipped out and pocketed a toy that was running along the quay.
 I could see nothing behind that child's eye.
 I have seen eyes in the street
 Trying to peer through lighted shutters,

And a crab one afternoon in a pool,
 An old crab with barnacles on his back,
 Gripped the end of a stick which I held him.

Half-past three,
 The lamp sputtered,
 The lamp muttered in the dark.
 The lamp hummed:
 "Regard the moon,
 La lune ne garde aucune rancune,
 She winks a feeble eye,
 She smiles into corners.
 She smooths the hair of the grass.
 The moon has lost her memory.
 A washed-out smallpox cracks her face,
 Her hand twists a paper rose,
 That smells of dust and eau de Cologne,
 She is alone
 With all the old nocturnal smells
 That cross and cross her brain."
 The reminiscence comes
 Of sunless dry geraniums
 And dust of crevices,
 Smells of chestnuts in the streets,
 And female smells in shuttered rooms,
 And cigarettes in corridors
 And cocktail smells in bars.

The lamp said,
 "Four o'clock,
 Here is the number on the door.
 Memory!
 You have the key,
 The little lamp spreads a ring on the stair,
 Mount.
 The bed is open; the tooth-brush hangs on the wall,
 Put your shoes at the door, sleep, prepare for life."

The last twist of the knife.

SWEENEY AMONG THE
NIGHTINGALES

Apeneck Sweeney spreads his knees
 Letting his arms hang down to laugh,
 The zebra stripes along his jaw
 Swelling to maculate giraffe.

The circles of the stormy moon
Slide westward toward the River Plate,
Death and the Raven drift above
And Sweeney guards the hornèd gate.

Gloomy Orion and The Dog
Are veiled; and hushed the shrunken seas;
The person in the Spanish cape
Tries to sit on Sweeney's knees;

Slips and pulls the table cloth,
Overturns a coffee-cup,
Reorganized upon the floor
She yawns and draws a stocking up;

The silent man in mocha brown
Sprawls at the window-sill and gapes;
The waiter brings in oranges
Bananas figs and hothouse grapes;

The silent vertebrate in brown
Contracts and concentrates, withdraws;
Rachel née Rabinovitch
Tears at the grapes with murderous paws;

She and the lady in the cape
Are suspect, thought to be in league;
Therefore the man with heavy eyes
Declines the gambit, shows fatigue,

Leaves the room and reappears
Outside the window, leaning in,
Branches of wistaria
Circumscribe a golden grin;

The host with someone indistinct
Converses at the door apart,
The nightingales are singing near
The Convent of the Sacred Heart,

And sang within the bloody wood
When Agamemnon cried aloud,
And let their liquid siftings fall
To stain the stiff dishonored shroud.

BURBANK WITH A BAEDEKER: BLEISTEIN WITH A CIGAR

Tra-la-la-la-la-la-la—nil nisi divinum stabile est, cetera fumus—the gondola stopped, the old palace was there, how charming its gray and pink—gouts and monkeys, with such hair too!—so the countess passed on until she came through the little park, where Niobe presented her with a cabinet, and so departed.

Burbank crossed a little bridge
Descending at a small hotel;
Princess Volupine arrived,
They were together, and he fell.

Defunctive music under sea
Passed seaward with the passing bell
Slowly the God Hercules
Had left him, that had loved him well

The horses, under the axletree
Beat up the dawn from Istria
With even feet Her shuttered barge
Burned on the water all the day.

But this or such was Bleistein's way:
A saggy bending of the knees
And elbows, with the palms turned out,
Chicago Semite Viennese.

A lusterless protrusive eye
Stares from the protozoic slime
At a perspective of Caunaletto.
The smoky candle end of time

Declines On the Rialto once.
The rats are underneath the piles.
The Jew is underneath the lot.
Money in furs. The boatman smiles,

Princess Volupine extends
A meager, blue-nailed, phthisic hand
To climb the waterstair. Lights, lights,
She entertains Sir Ferdinand

Klein Who clipped the lion's wings
And flea'd his rump and pared his claws?
Thought Burbank, meditating on Time's ruins, and the seven laws.

THE HOLLOW MEN

*Mistah Kurtz—he dead.
A penny for the Old Guy*

I

We are the hollow men
We are the stuff'd men
Leaning together
Headpiece filled with straw. Alas!
Our dried voices, when
We whisper together
Are quiet and meaningless
As wind in dry grass

Or rats' feet over broken glass
In our dry cellar

Shape without form, shade without color,
Paralyzed force, gesture without motion;

Those who have crossed
With direct eyes, to death's other Kingdom
Remember us—if at all—not as lost
Violent souls, but only
As the hollow men
The stuffed men.

II

Eyes I dare not meet in dreams
In death's dream kingdom
These do not appear:
There, the eyes are
Sunlight on a broken column
There, is a tree swinging
And voices are
In the wind's singing
More distant and more solemn
Than a fading star.

Let me be no nearer
In death's dream kingdom
Let me also wear
Such deliberate disguises
Rat's coat, crowskin, crossed staves
In a field
Behaving as the wind behaves
No nearer—

Not that final meeting
In the twilight kingdom

III

This is the dead land
This is cactus land
Here the stony images
Are raised, here they receive
The supplication of a dead man's hand
Under the twinkle of a fading star.

Is it like this
In death's other kingdom
Waking alone
At the hour when we are Trembling with tenderness
Lips that would kiss
From prayers to broken stone.

IV

The eyes are not here
There are no eyes here

In this valley of dying stars
In this hollow valley
This broken jaw of our lost kingdoms

In this last of meeting places
We grope together
And avoid speech
Gathered on this beach of the tumid river

Sightless, unless
The eyes reappear
As the perpetual star
Multifoliate rose
Of death's twilight kingdom
The hope only
Of empty men.

ANIMULA

"Issues from the hand of God, the simple soul"
 To a flat world of changing lights and noise,
 To light, dark, dry or damp, chilly or warm;
 Moving between the legs of tables and of chairs,
 Rising or falling, grasping at kisses and toys,
 Advancing boldly, sudden to take alarm,
 Retreating to the corner of arm and knee,
 Eager to be reassured, taking pleasure
 In the fragrant brilliance of the Christmas tree,
 Pleasure in the wind, the sunlight and the sea;
 Studies the sunlit pattern on the floor
 And running stags around a silver tray;
 Confounds the actual and the fanciful,
 Content with playing-cards and kings and queens,
 What the fairies do and what the servants say.
 The heavy burden of the growing soul
 Perplexes and offends more, day by day;
 Week by week, offends and perplexes more
 With the imperatives of "is and seems"
 And may and may not, desire and control.
 The pain of living and the drug of dreams
 Curl up the small soul in the window seat
 Behind the Encyclopaedia Britannica.
 Issues from the hand of time the simple soul
 Irresolute and selfish, misshapen, lame,
 Unable to fare forward or retreat,
 Fearing the warm reality, the offered good,
 Denying the importunity of the blood,
 Shadow of its own shadows, specter in its own gloom,
 Leaving disordered papers in a dusty room;
 Living first in the silence after the viaticum.

Pray for Guiterriez, avid of speed and power,
 For Boudin, blown to pieces,
 For this one who made a great fortune,
 And that one who went his own way.
 Pray for Floret, by the boarhound slain between the yew trees,
 Pray for us now and at the hour of our birth.

A SONG FOR SIMEON

Lord, the Roman hyacinths are blooming in bowls and
 The winter sun creeps by the snow hills;
 The stubborn season has made stand.
 My life is light, waiting for the death wind,
 Like a feather on the back of my hand.
 Dust in sunlight and memory in corners
 Wait for the wind that chills towards the dead land.

Grant us thy peace.

I have walked many years in this city,
Kept faith and fast, provided for the poor,
Have given and taken honor and ease.

There went never any rejected from my door.

Who shall remember my house, where shall live my children's children
When the time of sorrow is come?

They will take to the goat's path, and the fox's home,
Fleeing from the foreign faces and the foreign swords.

Before the time of cords and scourges and lamentation
Grant us thy peace.

Before the stations of the mountain of desolation,
Before the certain hour of maternal sorrow,
Now at this birth season of decease,

Let the Infant, the still unspeaking and unspoken Word,
Grant Israel's consolation
To one who has eighty years and no tomorrow.

According to thy word.

They shall praise Thee and suffer in every generation
With glory and derision,

Light upon light, mounting the saints' stair.

Not for me the martyrdom, the ecstasy of thought and prayer,
Not for me the ultimate vision

Grant me thy peace.

(And a sword shall pierce thy heart, Thine also.)

I am tired with my own life and the lives of those after me,
I am dying in my own death and the deaths of those after me.
Let thy servant depart,
Having seen thy salvation.

JOURNEY OF THE MAGI

"A cold coming we had of it,

Just the worst time of the year

For a journey, and such a long journey:

The ways deep and the weather sharp,

The very dead of winter."

And the camels galled, sore-footed, refractory,

Lying down in the melting snow.

There were times we regretted

The summer palaces on slopes, the terraces,

And the silken girls bringing sherbet.

Then the camel men cursing and grumbling

And running away, and wanting their liquor and women,

And the night-fires going out, and the lack of shelters,

And the cities hostile and the towns unfriendly

And the villages dirty and charging high prices:

A hard time we had of it.

At the end we preferred to travel all night,
 Sleeping in snatches,
 With the voices singing in our ears, saying
 That this was folly.

Then at dawn we came down to a temperate valley,
 Wet, below the snow line, smelling of vegetation;
 With a running stream and a water-mill beating the darkness,
 And three trees on the low sky,
 And an old white horse galloped away in the meadow.
 Then we came to a tavern with vine-leaves over the lintel,
 Six hands at an open door dicing for pieces of silver,
 And feet kicking the empty wine-skins
 But there was no information, and so we continued
 And arriving at evening, not a moment too soon
 Finding the place; it was (you may say) satisfactory.

All this was a long time ago, I remember,
 And I would do it again, but set down
 This set down
 This: were we led all that way for Birth or Death? There was a Birth, certainly,
 We had evidence and no doubt. I had seen birth and death,
 But had thought they were different; this Birth was Hard and bitter agony for us, like Death, our death.
 We returned to our places, these Kingdoms,
 But no longer at ease here, in the old dispensation,
 With an alien people clutching their gods.
 I should be glad of another death.

I

Because I do not hope to turn again
 Because I do not hope
 Because I do not hope to turn
 Desiring this man's gift and that man's scope
 I no longer strive to strive towards such things
 (Why should the aged eagle stretch its wings?)
 Why should I mourn
 The vanished power of the usual reign?
 Because I do not hope to know again
 The infirm glory of the positive hour
 Because I do not think
 Because I know I shall not know
 The one veritable transitory power
 Because I cannot drink
 There, where trees flower, and springs flow, for there is nothing again
 Because I know that time is always time
 And place is always and only place

And what is actual is actual only for one time
 And only for one place
 I rejoice that things are as they are and
 I renounce the blessed face
 And renounce the voice

Because I cannot hope to turn again
 Consequently I rejoice, having to construct something
 Upon which to rejoice

And pray to God to have mercy upon us
 And I pray that I may forget
 These matters that with myself I too much discuss
 Too much explain
 Because I do not hope to turn again
 Let these words answer
 For what is done, not to be done again,
 May the judgement not be too heavy upon us

Because these wings are no longer wings to fly
 But merely vans to beat the air
 The air which is now thoroughly small and dry
 Smaller and dryer than the will Teach us to care and not to care
 Teach us to sit still.

Pray for us sinners now and at the hour of our death
 Pray for us now and at the hour of our death.

II

Lady, three white leopards sat under a juniper-tree
 In the cool of the day, having fed to satiety
 On my legs my heart my liver and that which had been contained
 In the hollow round of my skull. And God said
 Shall these bones live? shall these Bones live? And that which had been contained
 In the bones (which were already dry) said chirping:
 Because of the goodness of this Lady
 And because of her loveliness, and because
 She honors the Virgin in meditation,
 We shine with brightness. And I who am here dissembled
 Proffer my deeds to oblivion, and my love
 To the posterity of the desert and the fruit of the gourd.
 It is this which recovers
 My guts the strings of my eyes and the indigestible portions
 Which the leopards reject. The Lady is withdrawn
 In a white gown, to contemplation, in a white gown.
 Let the whiteness of bones atone to forgetfulness.
 There is no life in them. As I am forgotten
 And would be forgotten, so I would forget
 Thus devoted, concentrated in purpose. And God said
 Prophesy to the wind, to the wind only, for only

The wind will listen. And the bones sang chirping
With the burden of the grasshopper, saying

Lady of silences
Calm and distressed
Torn and most whole
Rose of memory
Rose of forgetfulness
Exhausted and life-giving
Worried reposed
The single Rose
Is now the Garden
Where all loves end
Terminate torment
Of love unsatisfied
The greater torment
Of love satisfied
End of the endless
Journey to no end
Conclusion of all that
Is inconclusive
Speech without word and
Word of no speech
Grace to the Mother
For the Garden
Where all love ends.

Under a juniper-tree the bones sang, scattered and shining
We are glad to be scattered, we did little good to each other,
Under a tree in the cool of the day, with the blessing of sand,
Forgetting themselves and each other, united
In the quiet of the desert. This is the land which ye Shall divide by lot. And neither division nor unity
Matters. This is the land. We have our inheritance.

III

At the first turning of the second stair
I turned and saw below
The same shape twisted on the banister
Under the vapor in the fetid air
Struggling with the devil of the stairs who wears
The deceitful face of hope and of despair.

At the second turning of the second stair
I left them twisting, turning below;
There were no more faces and the stair was dark,
Damp, jagged, like an old man's mouth drivelling, beyond repair,
Or the toothed gullet of an aged shark.

At the first turning of the third stair
Was a slotted window bellied like the fig's fruit
And beyond the hawthorn blossom and a pasture scene
The broadbacked figure drest in blue and green

Enchanted the maytime with an antique flute.
 Blown hair is sweet, brown hair over the mouth blown,
 Lilac and brown hair;
 Distraction, music of the flute, stops and steps of the mind over the third stair,
 Fading, fading; strength beyond hope and despair
 Climbing the third stair.

Lord, I am not worthy
 Lord, I am not worthy

but speak the word only.

IV

Who walked between the violet and the violet
 Who walked between
 The various ranks of varied green
 Going in white and blue, in Mary's color,
 Talking of trivial things
 In ignorance and in knowledge of eternal dolour
 Who moved among the others as they walked,
 Who then made strong the fountains and made fresh the springs

Made cool the dry rock and made firm the sand
 In blue of larkspur, blue of Mary's color,
 Sovagna vos

Here are the years that walk between, bearing
 Away the fiddles and the flutes, restoring
 One who moves in the time between sleep and waking, wearing

White light folded, sheathed about her, folded.
 The new years walk, restoring
 Through a bright cloud of tears, the years, restoring
 With a new verse the ancient rhyme. Redeem
 The time. Redeem
 The unread vision in the higher dream
 While jewelled unicorns draw by the gilded hearse.

The silent sister veiled in white and blue
 Between the yews, behind the garden god,
 Whose flute is breathless, bent her head and sighed but spoke no word

But the fountain sprang up and the bird sang down
 Redeem the time, redeem the dream
 The token of the word unheard, unspoken

Till the wind shake a thousand whispers from the yew
 And after this our exile

V

If the lost word is lost, if the spent word is spent
 If the unheard, unspoken
 Word is unspoken, unheard;

Still is the unspoken word, the Word unheard,
 The Word without a word, the Word within
 The world and for the world;
 And the light shone in darkness and
 Against the Word the unstill'd world still whirled
 About the center of the silent Word.

O my people, what have I done unto thee.

Where shall the word be found, where will the word
 Resound? Not here, there is not enough silence,
 Not on the sea or on the islands, not
 On the mainland, in the desert or the rain land,
 For those who walk in darkness
 Both in the day time and in the night time
 The right time and the right place are not here
 No place of grace for those who avoid the face
 No time to rejoice for those who walk among noise and deny the voice

Will the veiled sister pray for
 Those who walk in darkness, who chose thee and oppose thee,
 Those who are torn on the horn between season and season, time and time, between Hour and hour, word and word, power and power, those who wait
 In darkness? Will the veiled sister pray
 For children at the gate
 Who will not go away and cannot pray:
 Pray for those who chose and oppose

O my people, what have I done unto thee.

Will the veiled sister between the slender
 Yew trees pray for those who offend her
 And are terrified and cannot surrender
 And affirm before the world and deny between the rocks
 In the last desert between the last blue rocks
 The desert in the garden the garden in the desert
 Of drouth, spitting from the mouth the withered apple-seed.

O my people.

VI

Although I do not hope to turn again
 Although I do not hope
 Although I do not hope to turn

Wavering between the profit and the loss
 In this brief transit where the dreams cross
 The dreamcrossed twilight between birth and dying
 (Bless me father) though I do not wish to wish these things
 From the wide window towards the granite shore
 The white sails still fly seaward, seaward flying
 Unbroken wings

And the lost heart stiffens and rejoices
 In the lost lilac and the lost sea voices
 And the weak spirit quickens to rebel
 For the bent golden-rod and the lost sea smell
 Quickens to recover
 The cry of quail and the whirling plover
 And the blind eye creates
 The empty forms between the ivory gates
 And smell renews the salt savor of the sandy earth

This is the time of tension between dying and birth
 The place of solitude where three dreams cross
 Between blue rocks
 But when the voices shaken from the yew-tree drift away
 Let the other yew be shaken and reply.

Blessed sister, holy mother, spirit of the fountain, spirit of the garden,
 Suffer us not to mock ourselves with falsehood
 Teach us to care and not to care
 Teach us to sit still
 Even among these rocks,
 Our peace in His will
 And even among these rocks
 Sister, mother,
 And spirit of the river, spirit of the sea,
 Suffer me not to be separated

And let my cry come unto Thee.

John Crowe Ransom

JOHN CROWE RANSOM was born in Pulaski, Tennessee, April 30, 1888, of Scotch-Irish descent. Pulaski, so Ransom states, is otherwise distinguished as being the County Seat of Giles County, the deathplace of Sam Davis, the Confederate martyr, and of the Ku Klux Klan. (Ransom's own great-uncle took part in the foundation of the latter.) Ransom, the son of a local minister, was educated in his own state and abroad: he received his B.A. at Vanderbilt University in 1909, his B.A. at Oxford in 1913. At the latter he was Rhodes Scholar from Tennessee, taking the "Greats" (classical) course. He taught at Vanderbilt from 1914 until 1937; he then transferred to Kenyon College, Ohio, where he founded The Kenyon Review. He was the chief instigator and one of the founders of The Fugitive, that experimental journal which did much to disprove Mencken's contention that the South was a vast "Sahara of the Beaux Arts." Although Ransom is realistically aware that the past is past, he cannot help yearning for a vanished richness, for an agrarianism that cannot be and a culture that never was.

Poems About God appeared in 1919, a raw first book with a tang of bitter humor. Here was no southern gentleman's proverbial courtliness, no unctuous and mincing gallantry; here was a bristling acerbity blurted in a strong if uncertain utterance. The lines range from the roughly powerful (reminding one of a coarser Robert Frost) to the surprisingly banal. During the five-year interval between Poems About God and his next volume, Ransom's poetry underwent an almost complete change. Little of the crudeness remains in Chills and Fever, by all odds the most distinguished volume of poetry published in 1924. Ransom, it was evident, reacted from the callow simplicities and the tradition of Wonder in words of one syllable; his verse is definitely for mature minds willing not only to allow a mature poet his mixed modes but willing to follow them. It is, at first glance, a curiously involved speech which Ransom uses to clothe his semi-whimsical, semi-ironic philosophy. But beneath his precise circumlocutions one is made aware of an extraordinarily sensitive lyricist. What adds zest to his verses is the mocking gravity of his speech—a gravity which is sometimes exaggerated to the verge of parody, if a philosopher can achieve that dubious art.

Ransom strikes his note with a sureness that is almost defiant. He is witty, but his wit is strengthened by passion; he turns from dialectical fencing to sudden emotion. Surprise is his forte; he can weave patterns that are, at one time, fanciful and learned. His account of a small boy's walk in deep woods ("First Travels of Max") is as fine a macabre piece as anything achieved by Amy Lowell. He can draw portraits of dream-lost mediocrities as sympathetically as Robinson, "Tom, Tom, the Piper's Son" being a second cousin to "Miniver Cheevey" and "Bewick Finzer." He can sound the mordant brasses in "Captain Carpenter," the muted violins in "Here Lies a Lady" and the prophetic trumpets in "Spiel of the Three Mountebanks" with equal precision. "Parting Without a Sequel" is memorable in its combination of emotion and mockery. "Piazza Piece" is, perhaps, the most characteristic of these poems; in a sonnet balanced as a lyric Ransom has revitalized—and localized—the old theme of Death and the Lady.

Such music, half soothing, half stinging, is new in our poetry; the modulations are strange, the cadences charming in their slight irregularities. Ransom knows how to employ the unresolved suspension; he delights in pairing such slant rhymes as "drunkard-conquered," "little-scuttle," "ready-study." But it is not merely the free use of dissonance and assonance which distinguishes his poems; it is what he does with these properties. "Antique Harvesters" breathes the very quixotic spirit of the old South and the Southerner's devotion to that spirit; "Lady Lost" is a perfect harmonizing of teasing and tenderness; "Janet Waking" uncannily minglest sympathy and mock pathos.

Two Gentlemen in Bonds (1927) has the fresh combination of cavalier grace and surprising savagery uttered in a precise softness of speech. But the surprise is not only occasioned by his tempo which is both nervous and drawling. As Mark Van Doren wrote, "He has been at pains to salt his rhymes and pepper his diction with fresh, realistic words; he has wrenched his cadences to fit his wayward thought; he has written with an original and almost acid gayety."

Yet, for all of Ransom's variety, in spite of his ability to play equally well in the spangles of harlequin and the graver habit of Kapellmeister, this Southerner will never be a popular poet. His is too elegant a speech to meet with general favor; his vocabulary is meticulous to the point of being overelaborate, his utterance is often so finical as to seem pedantic. The fact that a great part of this particularity is not affectation, but a scholar's gentle mockery, will not save him from the disapproval or the neglect of the public which dreads polysyllabic poets. Nor can one blame the common reader. Several of Ransom's poems lose themselves in ellipses and remote allusions, a few are so rarefied as to be unintelligible without footnotes and a chart of cross-references. His later work is both a growth and a departure. Such poems as "Prelude to an Evening," with its overtones of domestic worry, and "Painting: a Head" are a far cry from the philosophic-fanciful tone of "Here Lies a Lady." In this more difficult poetry Ransom seems to be hesitating between a veiled romanticism and an almost abstract intellectuality.

Nevertheless, even in a facile, overproductive age, there can be no doubt that these crisp narratives and teasing lyrics will find their niche. It will be neither a mean nor a long neglected one. Ransom has developed a new tone without straining for novelty; he has become an influence without becoming oracular. If the chief characteristic of Ransom's verse is irony, as Cleanth Brooks has pointed out, "it remains an instrument—it never becomes a mere attitude adopted by the poet for its own sake."

The combination of elegance and honesty which distinguishes Ransom's verse is even more striking in his prose. It characterizes God without Thunder (1930), which Ransom called an unorthodox defense of orthodoxy; his contribution to the agrarian symposium in I'll Take My Stand (1930); The World's Body (1938), a collection of animated literary studies, and The New Criticism (1941), an analytical examination of the critical theories of I. A. Richards, T. S. Eliot, Yvor Winters, and William Empson.

BELLS FOR JOHN WHITESIDE'S DAUGHTER

There was such speed in her little body,
And such lightness in her footfall,
It is no wonder that her brown study
Astonishes us all.

Her wars were bruited in our high window.
We looked among orchard trees and beyond,
Where she took arms against her shadow,
Or harried unto the pond

The lazy geese, like a snow cloud
Dripping their snow on the green grass,
Tricking and stopping, sleepy and proud,
Who cried in goose, Alas,

For the tireless heart within the little
Lady with rod that made them rise
From their noon apple-dreams, and scuttle
Goose-fashion under the skies!

But now go the bells, and we are ready;
In one house we are sternly stopped
To say we are vexed at her brown study,
Lying so primly propped.

LADY LOST

This morning, there flew up the lane
 A timid lady-bird to our bird-bath
 And eyed her image dolefully as death;
 This afternoon, knocked on our windowpane
 To be let in from the rain.

And when I caught her eye
 She looked aside, but at the clapping thunder
 And sight of the whole earth blazing up like tinder
 Looked in on us again most miserably,
 Indeed as if she would cry.

So I will go out into the park and say,
 "Who has lost a delicate brown-eyed lady
 In the West End Section? Or has anybody
 Injured some fine woman in some dark way,
 Last night or yesterday?"

"Let the owner come and claim possession,
 No questions will be asked. But stroke her gently
 With loving words, and she will evidently Resume her full soft-haired white-breasted fashion,
 And her right home and her right passion."

BLUE GIRLS

Twirling your blue skirts, traveling the sward
 Under the towers of your seminary,
 Go listen to your teachers old and contrary
 Without believing a word.

Tie the white fillets then about your lustrous hair
 And think no more of what will come to pass
 Than blucbirds that go walking on the grass
 And chattering on the air.

Practice your beauty, blue girls, before it fail;
 And I will cry with my loud lips and publish
 Beauty which all our power shall never establish,
 It is so frail.

For I could tell you a story which is true:
 I know a lady with a terrible tongue,
 Blear eyes fallen from blue,
 All her perfections tarnished—and yet it is not long
 Since she was lovelier than any of you.

HERE LIES A LADY

Here lies a lady of beauty and high degree,
 Of chills and fever she died, of fever and chills,
 The delight of her husband, her aunts, an infant of three,
 And of medicos marveling sweetly on her ills.

For either she burned, and her confident eyes would blaze,
 And her fingers fly in a manner to puzzle their heads—
 What was she making? Why, nothing; she sat in a maze
 Of old scraps of laces, snipped into curious shreds—

Or this would pass, and the light of her fire decline
 Till she lay discouraged and cold as a thin stalk white and blown,
 And would not open her eyes, to kisses, to wine.
 The sixth of these states was her last; the cold settled down.

Sweet ladies, long may ye bloom, and toughly I hope ye may thole,
 But was she not lucky? In flowers and lace and mourning,
 In love and great honor we bade God rest her soul
 After six little spaces of chill, and six of burning.

JANET WAKING

Beautifully Janet slept
 'Till it was deeply morning. She woke then
 And thought about her dainty-feathered hen,
 To see how it had kept.

One kiss she gave her mother,
 Only a small one gave she to her daddy
 Who would have kissed each curl of his shining baby;
 No kiss at all for her brother.

“Old Chucky, Old Chucky!” she cried,
 Running on little pink feet upon the grass
 To Chucky’s house, and listening. But alas,
 Her Chucky had died.

It was a transmogrifying bee
 Came droning down on Chucky’s old bald head
 And sat and put the poison. It scarcely bled,
 But how exceedingly

And purply did the knot
 Swell with the venom and communicate
 Its rigor! Now the poor comb stood up straight
 But Chucky did not.

So there was Janet .
 Kneeling on the wet grass, crying her brown hen

(Translated far beyond the daughters of men)
To rise and walk upon it.

And weeping fast as she had breath
Janet implored us, "Wake her from her sleep!"
And would not be instructed in how deep
Was the forgetful kingdom of death.

SPIEL OF THE THREE MOUNTEBANKS

THE SWARTHY ONE—

Villagers who gather round,
This is Fides, my lean hound.
Bring your bristled village curs
To try his fang and tooth, sweet sirs:
He will rend them, he is savage,
Thinking nothing but to ravage,
Nor with cudgel, fire, rope,
May ye control my misanthrope;
He would tear the moon in the sky
And fly at Heaven, could he fly.
And for his ravening without cease
I have had of him no peace.
Only once I bared the knife
To quit my devil of his life,
But listen, how I heard him say,
"Think you I shall die today?
Since your mother cursed and died,
I am keeping at your side,
We are firmly knit together,
Two ends tugging at one tether,
And you shall see when I shall die
That you are mortal even as I."
Bring your stoutest-hearted curs
If ye would risk him, gentle sirs.

THE THICK ONE—

Countrymen, here's a noble frame,
Humphrey is my elephant's name.
When my father's back was bent
Under steep impediment,
Humphrey came to my possession,
With patient strength for all his passion.
Have ye a mountain to remove?
It is Humphrey's dearest love.
Pile his burden to the skies,
Loose a pestilence of flies,
Foot him in the quick morass
Where no laden beast can pass:

He will staunch his weariless back
And march unswerving on the track.
Have ye seen a back so wide,
Such impenetrable hide?
Nor think ye by this Humphrey hill
Prince Hamlet bare his fardels ill?
Myself I like it not for us
To wear beneath an incubus;
I take offense, but in no rage
May I dispose my heritage;
Though in good time the vast and tough
Shall sink and totter soon enough.
So pile your population up:
They are a drop in Humphrey's cup;
Add all your curses to his pack
To make one straw for Humphrey's back.

THE PALE ONE—

If ye remark how poor I am,
Come, citizens, behold my lamb!
Have ye a lion, ounce, or scourge,
Or any beast of dainty gorge?
Agnus lays his tender youth
Between the very enemy's mouth,
And though he sniff his delicate meat,
He may not bruise that flesh nor eat,
He may not rend him limb from limb,
If Agnus do but bleat on him.
Fierce was my youth, but like a dream
I saw a temple, and a stream,
And where I knelt and washed my sore,
This infant lamb stood on the shore,
He mounted with me from the river.
And still he cries, as brave as ever,
"Lay me down by the lion's side
To match my frailty with his pride;
Fain would I welter in my blood
To teach these lions true lionhood."
So daily Agnus would be slain
But daily is denied again,
And still the hungry lions range
While Agnus waits upon a change;

Only the coursing lions die
And in their deserts mortify.
So bring us lion, leopard, bear,

To try of Agnus without fear,
And ye less gentle than I am,
Come, be instructed of my Lamb.

FIRST TRAVELS OF MAX

As hath been, lo, these many generations,
The best of the Van Vroomans was the youngest;
And even he, in a chevroned sailor's blouse
And tawny curls far from subdued to the cap,
Had slapped old Katie and betaken himself
From games for children. That was because they told Him never, never to set a wicked foot
Into Fool's Forest, where the devil dwelt.

"Become Saint Michael's sword!" said Max to the stick,
And to the stone, "Be a brand-new revolver!"
Then Max was glad that he had armed so wisely,
As darker grew the wood, and shrill with silence.
All good fairies were helpless here; at night
Whipped in an inch of their lives; weeping, forbidden
To play with strange scared truant little boys
Who didn't belong there. Snakes were allowed there
And lizards and adders—people of age and evil
That lay on their bellies and whispered—no bird nor rabbit.
There were more rotten trees than there were sound ones;
In that wood, timber was degenerate
And rotted almost faster than it grew.
There were no flowers nor apples; too much age.
The only innocent thing in there was Max,
And even he had cursed his little sisters.

The little black tarn rose up almost in his face—
It was as black and sudden as the pit
The Adversary digs in the bowels of earth;
Bubbles were on it, breath of the black beast
(Formed like a spider, white bag for entrails)
Who took that sort of blackness to inhabit
And dangle after bad men in Fool's Forest.
"Must they be bad?" said casuistical Max.
"Mightn't a good boy who stopped saying his prayers
Be allowed to slip into the spider's fingers?"
Max raised his sword—but what can swords do
Against the Prince of the Dark? Max sheathed his point
And crept around the pool.

In the middle of the wood was a Red Witch.
Max half expected her. He never expected
To find a witch's house so dirty and foolish,
A witch with a wide bosom yellow as butter,
Or a witch combing so many obscene things

From her black hair into her scarlet lap.
 He never believed there would attempt to sing
 The one that taught the rats to squall and Bashan's
 Bull to bellow.

"Littlest and last Van Vrooman, do you come too?"
 She knew him, it appeared, would know him better,
 The scarlet hulk of hell with a fat bosom,
 Pirouetting at the bottom of the forest.
 Certainly Max had come, but he was going,
 Unequal contests never being commanded
 On young knights only armed in innocence.
 "When I am a grown man I will come here
 And cut your head off!" That was very well;
 Not a true heart beating in Christendom
 Could have said more, but that for the present would do.
 Max went straight home; and nothing chilled him more
 Than the company kept him by the witch's laugh
 And the witch's song, and the creeping of his flesh.

Max is more firmly domiciliated.
 A great house is Van Vrooman, a green slope
 South to the sun do the great ones inhabit
 And a few children play on the lawn with the nurse.
 Max has returned to his play, and you may find him,
 His famous curls unsmoothed, if you will call
 Where the Van Vroomans live, the tribe Van Vrooman
 Live there, at least, when any are at home.

ANTIQUÉ HARVESTERS

(Scene: Of the Mississippi the bank sinister, and of the Ohio the bank sinister)

Tawny are the leaves turned, but they still hold.
 It is the harvest; what shall this land produce?
 A meager hill of kernels, a runnel of juice.
 Declension looks from our land, it is old.
 Therefore let us assemble, dry, gray, spare,
 And mild as yellow air.

"I hear the creak of a raven's funeral wing."
 The young men would be joying in the song
 Of passionate birds; their memories are not long.
 What is it thus rehearsed in sable? "Nothing."
 Trust not but the old endure, and shall be older
 Than the scornful beholder.

We pluck the spindling ears and gather the corn.
 One spot has special yield? "On this spot stood Heroes and drenched it with their only blood."
 And talk meets talk, as echoes from the horn

Of the hunter—echoes are the old men's arts
Ample are the chambers of their hearts.

Here come the hunters, keepers of a rite.
The horn, the hounds, the lank mares coursing by
Under quaint archetypes of chivalry;
And the fox, lovely ritualist, in flight
Offering his unearthly ghost to quarry;
And the fields, themselves to harry.

Resume, harvesters. The treasure is full bronze
Which you will garner for the Lady, and the moon
Could tinge it no yellower than does this noon;
But the gray will quench it shortly—the fields, men, stones.
Pluck fast, dreamers; prove as you rumble slowly
Not less than men, not wholly.

Bare the arm too, dainty youths, bend the knees
Under bronze burdens. And by an autumn tone
As by a gray, as by a green, you will have known
Your famous Lady's image; for so have these.
And if one say that easily will your hands
More prosper in other lands,

Angry as wasp-music be your cry then:
“Forsake the Proud Lady, of the heart of fire,
The look of snow, to the praise of a dwindled choir,
Song of degenerate specters that were men?
The sons of the fathers shall keep her, worthy of What these have done in love.”

True, it is said of our Lady, she ageth.
But see, if you peep shrewdly, she hath not stooped;
Take no thought of her servitors that have drooped,
For we are nothing; and if one talk of death—
Why, the ribs of the earth subsist frail as a breath
If but God wearieh.

PIAZZA PIECE

—I am a gentleman in a dustcoat trying
To make you hear. Your ears are soft and small
And listen to an old man not at all;
They want the young men's whispering and sighing.
But see the roses on your trellis dying
And hear the spectral singing of the moon—
For I must have my lovely lady soon.
I am a gentleman in a dustcoat trying.

—I am a lady young in beauty waiting
Until my true-love comes, and then we kiss.
But what gray man among the vines is this

Whose words are dry and faint as in a dream?
 Back from my trellis, sir, before I scream!
 I am a lady young in beauty waiting.

CAPTAIN CARPENTER

Captain Carpenter rose up in his prime
 Put on his pistols and went riding out
 But had got wellnigh nowhere at that time
 Till he fell in with ladies in a rout.

It was a pretty lady and all her train
 That played with him so sweetly but before
 An hour she'd taken a sword with all her main
 And twined him of his nose for evermore.

Captain Carpenter mounted up one day
 And rode straightway into a stranger rogue
 That looked unchristian but be that as it may
 The Captain did not wait upon prologue.

But drew upon him out of his great heart
 The other swung against him with a club
 And cracked his two legs at the shinny part
 And let him roll and stick like any tub.

Captain Carpenter rode many a time
 From male and female took he sundry harms
 He met the wife of Satan crying "I'm
 The she wolf bids you shall bear no more arms."

Their strokes and counters whistled in the wind
 I wish he had delivered half his blows
 But where she should have made off like a hind
 The bitch bit off his arms at the elbows.

And Captain Carpenter parted with his ears
 To a black devil that used him in this wise
 O jesus ere his threescore and ten years
 Another had plucked out his sweet blue eyes.

Captain Carpenter got up on his roan
 And sallied from the gate in hell's despite
 I heard him asking in the grimmest tone
 If any enemy yet there was to fight?

"To any adversary it is fame
 If he risk to be wounded by my tongue
 Or burnt in two beneath my red heart's flame
 Such are the perils he is cast among.

"But if he can he has a pretty choice
 From an anatomy with little to lose
 Whether he cut my tongue and take my voice
 Or whether it be my round red heart he choose."

It was the neatest knave that ever was seen
 Stepping in perfume from his lady's bower
 Who at this word put in his merry mien
 And fell on Captain Carpenter like a tower.

I would not knock old fellows in the dust
 But there lay Captain Carpenter on his back
 His weapons were the old heart in his bust
 And a blade shook between rotten teeth alack.

The rogue in scarlet and gray soon knew his mind
 He wished to get his trophy and depart;
 With gentle apology and touch refined
 He pierc'd him and produc'd the Captain's heart.

God's mercy rest on Captain Carpenter now
 I thought him Sirs an honest gentleman
 Citizen husband soldier and scholar enow
 Let jangling kites eat of him if they can.

But God's deep curses follow after those
 That shore him of his goodly nose and ears
 His legs and strong arms at the two elbows
 And eyes that had not watered seventy years.

The curse of hell upon the sleek upstart
 Who got the Captain finally on his back
 And took the red red vitals of his heart
 And made the kites to whet their beaks clack clack.

OLD MAN PONDERED

Three times he crossed our way where with me went
 One who is fair and gentle, and it was strange,
 But not once glancing did his vision range
 Wayward on me, or my most innocent,
 But strictly watched his own predicament.
 How are old spirits so dead? His eye seemed true
 As mine, he walked by it, it was as blue,
 How came it monstered in its fixed intent?

But I will venture how. In his long years
 Close-watched and dangerous, many a bright-barbed hate
 Burning had smote against the optic gate
 To enter and destroy. But the quick gears

Blinked shut the aperture. Else those grim leers
Had won to the inner chamber where sat Hope
To spin and pray, and made her misanthrope,
And bled her courage with a thousand spears.

Thus hate and scorn. And he must guard as well
Against alluring love, whose mild engine
Was perilous too for the lone sitter-in,
So hard consented to her little cell;
The tenderest looks vainly upon him fell,
Of dearest company, lest one light arrow
Be sharpened with a most immortal sorrow.
So had he kept his mansion shut of hell.

Firm and upright he walked for one so old,
Thrice-pondered; and I dare not prophesy
What age must bring me; for I look round bold
And seek my enemies out; and leave untold
The sideway watery dog's-glances I
Send fawning on you, thinking you will not scold.

PARTING, WITHOUT A SEQUEL

She has finished and sealed the letter
At last, which he so richly has deserved,
With characters venomous and hatefully curved,
And nothing could be better.

But even as she gave it,
Saying to the blue-capped functioner of doom,
"Into his hands," she hoped the leering groom
Might somewhere lose and leave it.

Then all the blood
Forsook the face. She was too pale for tears,
Observing the ruin of her younger years.
She went and stood

Under her father's vaunting oak
Who kept his peace in wind and sun, and glistened
Stoical in the rain; to whom she listened
If he spoke.

And now the agitation of the rain
Rasped his sere leaves, and he talked low and gentle,
Reproaching the wan daughter by the lintel;
Ceasing, and beginning again.

Away went the messenger's bicycle,
His serpent's track went up the hill forever.
And all the time she stood there hot as fever
And cold as any icicle.

PRELUDE TO AN EVENING

Do not enforce the tired wolf
 Dragging his infected wound homeward
 To sit tonight with the warm children
 Naming the pretty kings of France.

The images of the invaded mind
 Being as monsters in the dreams
 Of your most brief enchanted headful,
 Suppose a miracle of confusion:

That dreamed and undreamt become each other
 And mix the night and day of your mind;
 And it does not matter your twice crying
 From mouth unbeatitud against the pillow

To avert the gun of the same old soldier;
 For cry, cock-crow, or the iron bell
 Can crack the sleep-sense of outrage,
 Annihilate phantoms who were nothing.

But now, by our perverse supposal,
 There is a drift of fog on your mornings;
 You in your peignoir, dainty at your orange cup,
 Feel poising round the sunny room

Invisible evil, deprived and bold
 All day the clock will metronome
 Your gallant fear; the needles clicking,
 The heels detonating the stair's cavern.

Freshening the water in the blue bowls
 For the buckberries, with not all your love,
 You shall be listening for the low wind,
 The warning sibilance of pines.

You like a waning moon, and I accusing
 Our too banded Eumenides,
 While you pronounce Nocs wanderingly
 And smooth the heads of the hungry children.

PAINTING: A HEAD

By dark severance the apparition head
 Smiles from the air a capital on no
 Column or a Platonic perhaps head
 On a canvas sky depending from nothing;

Stirs up an old illusion of grandeur
 By tickling the instinct of heads to be
 Absolute and to try decapitation
 And to play truant from the body bush;

But too happy and beautiful for those sorts
 Of head (homekeeping heads are happiest)
 Discovers maybe thirty unwidowed years
 Of not dishonoring the faithful stem;

Is nameless and has authored for the evil
 Historian headhunters neither book
 Nor state and is therefore distinct from tart
 Heads with crowns and guilty gallery heads;

So that the extravagant device of art
 Unhousing by abstraction this once head
 Was capital irony by a loving hand
 That knew the no treason of a head like this;

Makes repentance in an unlovely head
 For vinegar disparagement of flesh
 Till, the hurt flesh recusing, the hard egg
 Is shrunken to its own deathlike surface;

And an image thus: the body bears the head
 (So hardly one they terribly are two)
 Feeds and obeys and unto please what end?
 Not to the glory of tyrant head but to

The increase of body. Beauty is of body.
 The flesh contouring shallowly on a head
 Is a rock-garden needing body's love
 And best bodiness to colorify

The big blue birds sitting and sea-shell flats
 And caves and on the iron acropolis
 To spread the hyacinthine hair and rear
 The olive garden for the nightingales.

Conrad Aiken

CONRAD (POTTER) AIKEN was born at Savannah, Georgia, August 5, 1889. He attended Harvard, was chosen class poet during his senior year, received his A.B. in 1912, traveled extensively for three years, and since then devoted all his time to literature, living at South Yarmouth, Massachusetts, until 1921. In that year he moved his family to England; a few years later he bought a house on the Sussex coast at Rye. After a brief return to America in 1928 Aiken alternated between England and Massachusetts, finally settling in the latter.

The outstanding feature of Aiken's work is its rapid adaptability and its slow growth. His first volume, Earth Triumphant and Other Tales in Verse (1914), is the Keats tradition crossed, paraphrased, and vulgarized by Masefield. Turns and Movies (1916) is a complete change; Masefield is exchanged for Masters. But in the less conspicuous half of this book Aiken begins to speak with his true voice. Here he is the natural musician, playing with new rhythms, haunting cadences. The Jig of Forlorn (1916) is an elaboration of his method. In this volume Aiken goes back to the narrative—or rather, to a series of loosely connected stories—and, reinforced by studies in analytical psychology, explores "the process of vicarious wish fulfillment by which civilized man enriches his circumscribed life."

Nocturne of Remembered Spring (1917), The Charnel Rose (1918) and The House of Dust (1920) are packed with a tired but often beautiful music. Even though it is enlivened by injections of T. S. Eliot's conversational idiom, the effect is frequently misty and monotonous. Rain seems to fall persistently through these volumes, dust blows down the street; the shadows blur; everything dissolves in a wash of boredom and forgetfulness. Even the poignance seems on the point of falling asleep.

Often Aiken loses himself in this watery welter of language. In trying to create a closer liaison between poetry and music, he places so much importance on the rise and fall of syllables that his very excess of melody defeats his purpose. His verse, thus, gains greatly on the sensuous side, but loses, in its murmuring indefiniteness, that vitality of speech which is the very blood of poetry. It is a subaqueous music, strangely like the magic of Debussy.

This weakening overinsistence on sound does not prevent Aiken from attaining many exquisite effects. Primarily, a lyric poet, he condenses an emotion in a few lines; some of his best moments are these "lapses" into tune. The music of the "Morning Song from 'Senlin'" (in The Charnel Rose) is rich with subtleties of rhythm. But it is much more than a lyrical movement. Beneath the flow and flexibility of these lines there is a summoning of the immensities that loom behind the casual moments of everyday.

Punch: The Immortal Liar (1921) is an almost complete volte face. After it seemed established that Aiken's gift was limited to the twitching of overrefined nerves, to a too ready response to gloomy subconsciousness, the poet strikes out toward a naked directness. Brilliant though the first half of this work is, it is the second part which burns steadily. Here Punch, stripped of his mask of bragg-adocio, is revealed as the solitary, frustrated dreamer; a pitiful puppet floundering in a net he cannot see; jerked and gesticulating without knowledge of the strings which direct him—a symbol, in short, of man as marionette. This second part of Punch contains not only Aiken's most delicate exposition of the inhibited soul, but some of the finest lyrics he has produced.

Priapus and the Pool (1922) is preponderantly lyrical, containing twenty-five songs, several of which are as skillful as those of any contemporary American singer. The succeeding volume, The Pilgrimage of Festus (1923), returns to the symphonic form; beneath its imaginative outlines it is an extended essay in epistemology. Festus is the lineal descendant of Aiken's own Senlin and a not distant relative of Ibsen's Peer Gynt. A revised and enlarged edition of Priapus and the Pool appeared in 1925.

Aiken, the keenest critic of his own poetry, has been quick to see its limitations as well as its potentialities. In a self-analysis in which he confessed that his verse has groped continually toward symphonic arrangement, Aiken wrote, "Here I give myself away as being in quest of a sort of absolute poetry, a poetry in which the intention is not so much to arouse an emotion, or to persuade of a reality, as to employ such emotion or sense of reality (tangentially struck) with the same cool detachment with which a composer employs notes or chords."

Here we are at the heart of the contradiction: the paradox that, though Aiken is undoubtedly one of the most musical of living poets, he is one of the least popular. An audience that prefers its emotion outright, that craves a palpable reality, resents (or, worse, ignores) the nuance "tangentially struck." The emphasis on overtone and implication creates, too often, an obscure pantomime; it is, as Aiken himself was quick to see, "a prestidigitation in which the juggler's bottles or balls are a little too apt, unfortunately, to be altogether invisible." What is even more obvious, an audience is quick to sense the performer's uncertainty. This—until the most recent work—has been Aiken's undoing. He has fancied himself as a symphonist when he was, preeminently, a lyricist, albeit a lyricist neither pure nor simple. More than any contemporary, except T. S. Eliot, who seems to have learned several tricks in dissonance from Aiken, he has evolved a subtly subjective poetry which flows as smoothly, as surprisingly, as the stream of the subconscious. He has given formlessness a form, has brought tortured self-analysis to a pitch of pure poetry, and (whether in the suspensions of the famous "Morning Song from 'Senlin'" or the more certain modulations of "Tetélestai") he has registered an immediacy of anguish. Aiken's growth in tonal surety must be evident to all but the tone-deaf. "The Road" is more than a compelling dream picture; in it Aiken contradicts his own credo and participates in the struggle of humanity. "At a Concert of Music" and "Annihilation" bring the earlier modulations to a perfect cadence.

Aiken's musical advance is cumulatively established by the Selected Poems (1929), which won the Pulitzer Prize for that year, John Death and Other Poems (1930), and Landscape West of Eden (1933). All these deal with sets of symbols and dream pictures in a limbo of fantasy. John Death is one of the most curious poems Aiken has written, and the lyrics which follow it ("Annihilation," "The Quarrel," "At a Concert of Music," with others) are among his completely successful pieces, something which cannot be said for The Coming Forth by Day of Osiris Jones (1931).

The music of such meditative lyrics is pitched lower in the somber "preludes" which began preoccupying Aiken before 1930 and of which he has written a hundred or more. Sixty-three of these were published in Preludes for Memnon (1931) and, though Memnon typified the sun, these poems seem chiefly addressed to darkness. The mood is disconsolate, the tone languorous to lugubrious. Most of the book suggests that abstract and "absolute" poetry to which Aiken has so often tuned his muted instruments, yet several of the individual poems ("This is not you?" "So, in the evening to the simple cloister," "But how it came from earth," "One star fell and another as we walked") are rich in movement and emotional intensity.

Time in the Rock (1936), which was sub-titled "Preludes to Definition," was received more cordially than And in the Human Heart (1940), a sequence of forty-three sonnets, which was faintly praised for its fluency and loudly damned for its outworn rhetoric. Reviewing And in the Human Heart as a piece of outworn incantation, an attempt to trade "in rhetorical magic," Randall Jarrell wrote in The New Republic, "He is in love with a few dozen words, and their permutations and combinations have assumed for him a weight and urgency that would be quite incomprehensible to his readers, if it were not for the fact that most of these terms are the traditional magic-making words of English romantic poetry. . . . To him, now, the world exists as a thesaurus from which to derive the glittering and immaculate counters that arrange themselves, almost automatically, into a poem. Any similarity between the poems and reality is purely coincidental." But two weeks later Malcolm Cowley replied in the same journal, "Mr. Jarrell fails to discuss Mr. Aiken's real methods. He does not mention his subtly varied repetitions; and above all he does not say anything about the music of Mr. Aiken's verse. In an age when most poetry has become entirely visual, Mr. Aiken writes to be read aloud."

Besides his poetry, Aiken has written some extraordinarily sensitive criticism. Scepticisms (1919) is a provocative and valuable set of studies. His anthologies—Modern American Poets (1922) and American Poetry, 1671-1928—suffer from Aiken's predilection for experimental and abstract verse, but are far superior to the ordinary compilation. He edited the first Selected Poems of Emily Dickinson which appeared in England in 1924. In that year his prose began to attract attention. Bring! Bring! (1925) and Costumes by Eros (1928) are collections of introspective short stories in a successful if not altogether new genre. Blue Voyage (1927) is less influenced, a novel closely woven and strangely unresolved. Great Circle (1933) is a tense study in psychopathological maladjustment, a theme which Aiken employs with skill and extraordinary effect. King Coffin (1935), a novel, is a brilliant study of a paranoiac and his "perfect" crime. Conversation (1940) is a story of domestic crisis, lighter in texture than most of Aiken's other work.

BREAD AND MUSIC

Music I heard with you was more than music,
And bread I broke with you was more than bread;
Now that I am without you, all is desolate;
All that was once so beautiful is dead.

Your hands once touched this table and this silver,
 And I have seen your fingers hold this glass.
 These things do not remember you, belovèd,
 And yet your touch upon them will not pass.

For it was in my heart you moved among them,
 And blessed them with your hands and with your eyes;
 And in my heart they will remember always,—
 They knew you once, O beautiful and wise.

MIRACLES

Twilight is spacious, near things in it seem far,
 And distant things seem near.
 Now in the green west hangs a yellow star.
 And now across old waters you may hear
 The profound gloom of bells among still trees,
 Like a rolling of huge bowlders beneath seas.

Silent as thought in evening contemplation
 Weaves the bat under the gathering stars.
 Silent as dew, we seek new incarnation,
 Meditate new avatars.
 In a clear dusk like this
 Mary climbed up the hill to seek her son,
 To lower him down from the cross, and kiss
 The mauve wounds, every one.

Men with wings
 In the dusk walked softly after her.
 She did not see them, but may have felt
 The winnowed air around her stir;
 She did not see them, but may have known
 Why her son's body was light as a little stone.
 She may have guessed that other hands were there
 Moving the watchful air.

Now, unless persuaded by searching music
 Which suddenly opens the portals of the mind,
 We guess no angels,
 And are contented to be blind.
 Let us blow silver horns in the twilight,
 And lift our hearts to the yellow star in the green,
 To find perhaps, if, while the dew is rising,
 Clear things may not be seen.

MORNING SONG FROM "SEN LIN"

It is morning, Senlin says, and in the morning
 When the light drips through the shutters like the dew,

I arise, I face the sunrise,
 And do the things my fathers learned to do.
 Stars in the purple dusk above the rooftops
 Pale in a saffron mist and seem to die,
 And I myself on a swiftly tilting planet
 Stand before a glass and tie my tie.

Vine-leaves tap my window,
 Dew-drops sing to the garden stones,
 The robin chirps in the chinaberry tree
 Repeating three clear tones.

It is morning. I stand by the mirror
 And tie my tie once more.
 While waves far off in a pale rose twilight
 Crash on a white sand shore.
 I stand by a mirror and comb my hair:
 How small and white my face!—
 The green earth tilts through a sphere of air
 And bathes in a flame of space.
 There are houses hanging above the stars
 And stars hung under a sea . . .
 And a sun far off in a shell of silence
 Dapples my walls for me. . . .

It is morning, Senlin says, and in the morning
 Should I not pause in the light to remember God?
 Upright and firm I stand on a star unstable,
 He is immense and lonely as a cloud.
 I will dedicate this moment before my mirror
 To him alone, for him I will comb my hair.
 Accept these humble offerings, clouds of silence!
 I will think of you as I descend the stair.

Vine-leaves tap my window,
 The snail-track shines on the stones;
 Dew-drops flash from the chinaberry tree
 Repeating two clear tones.

It is morning, I awake from a bed of silence,
 Shining I rise from the starless waters of sleep.
 The walls are about me still as in the evening,
 I am the same, and the same name still I keep.
 The earth revolves with me, yet makes no motion,
 The stars pale silently in a coral sky.
 In a whistling void I stand before my mirror,
 Unconcerned, and tie my tie.

There are horses neighing on far-off hills
 Tossing their long white manes,
 And mountains flash in the rose-white dusk,
 Their shoulders black with rains. . . .

It is morning, I stand by the mirror
 And surprise my soul once more;
 The blue air rushes above my ceiling,
 There are suns beneath my floor. . . .

. . . It is morning, Senlin says, I ascend from darkness
 And depart on the winds of space for I know not where;
 My watch is wound, a key is in my pocket,
 And the sky is darkened as I descend the stair.
 There are shadows across the windows, clouds in heaven,
 And a god among the stars; and I will go
 Thinking of him as I might think of daybreak
 And humming a tune I know. . . .

Vine leaves tap at the window,
 Dew-drops sing to the garden stones,
 The robin chirps in the chinaberry tree
 Repeating three clear tones.

THE ROOM

Through that window—all else being extinct
 Except itself and me—I saw the struggle
 Of darkness against darkness. Within the room
 It turned and turned, dived downward. Then I saw
 How order might—if chaos wished—become:
 And saw the darkness crush upon itself,
 Contracting powerfully; it was as if
 It killed itself, slowly: and with much pain.
 Pain. The scene was pain, and nothing but pain.
 What else, when chaos draws all forces inward
 To shape a single leaf? . . .

For the leaf came
 Alone and shining in the empty room;
 After a while the twig shot downward from it;
 And from the twig a bough; and then the trunk,
 Massive and coarse; and last the one black root.
 The black root cracked the walls. Boughs burst the window:
 The great tree took possession.

Tree of trees!
 Remember (when time comes) how chaos died
 To shape the shining leaf. Then turn, have courage,
 Wrap arms and roots together, be convulsed
 With grief, and bring back chaos out of shape.
 I will be watching then as I watch now.
 I will praise darkness now, but then the leaf.

THE PUPPET DREAMS

(from "Punch: The Immortal Liar")

Sheba, now let down your hair,
And play upon it with your hands,
While girls from Tal and Mozambique
Parade before in sarabands,—

Play him songs inaudible
With white hands braceleted and slim,
Or shake your hair and let it fall
And softly darken him.

Cling to him, while cymbals far
Are sweetly smitten in the dusk,
And maenads, under a haughty star,
Break the white rose for its musk:

Cling to him, and with your lips
Feed his heart on crumbs of fire
That shall, perpetually, delight
But never slay desire!

Open a window on the world
With all its sorrow, and then
When he has heard that sound a space,
Close it fast again. . . .

Sweet will it be, lapped round with ease
And music-troubled air,
To hear for a moment on the wind
A sound of far despair:

And then, to turn to lights again,
And fingers soft on strings,
While Sheba slips her bracelets off
And spreads her arms and sings. . . .

Sweet will it be, to hear far off
That gusty sound of pain,
And to remember, far away,
A world of death and rain:

And then, to close the window fast,
And laugh, and clap soft hands,
While girls from Tal and Mozambique
Parade in sarabands. . . .

Close now the window! Close it well!
That slow lament of pain
Was but the dissonance that makes Dull music sweet again.

There is a fountain in a wood
Where wavering lies a moon:
It plays to the slowly falling leaves
A sleepy tune.

. . . The peach-trees lean upon a wall
Of gold and ivory:
The peacock spreads his tail, the leaves
Fall silently. . . .

There, amid silken sounds and wine
And music idly broken,
The drowsy god observes his world
With no word spoken.

Arcturus, rise! Orion, fall! . . .
The white-winged stars obey. . . .
Or else he greets his Fellow-God;
And there, in the dusk, they play

A game of chess with stars for pawns
And a silver moon for queen.
Immeasurable as clouds, above
A chess-board world they lean

And thrust their hands amid their beards,
And utter words profound
That shake the star-swung firmament
With a fateful sound! . . .

. . . The peach-trees lean upon a wall
Of gold and ivory;
The peacock spreads his tail; the leaves
Fall silently. . . .

PORTRAIT OF A GIRL

This is the shape of the leaf, and this of the flower,
And this the pale bole of the tree . . .
Which watches its bough in a pool of unwavering water
In a land we never shall see.

The thrush on the bough is silent, the dew falls softly,
 In the evening is hardly a sound. . . .
 And the three beautiful pilgrims who come here together
 Touch lightly the dust of the ground.

Touch it with feet that trouble the dust but as wings do,
 Come shyly together, are still,
 Like dancers who wait in a pause of the music, for music
 The exquisite silence to fill . . .

This is the thought of the first, and this of the second,
 And this the grave thought of the third:
 "Linger we thus for a moment, palely expectant,
 And silence will end, and the bird

"Sing the pure phrase, sweet phrase, clear phrase in the twilight
 To fill the blue bell of the world;
 And we, who on music so leaflike have drifted together,
 Leaflike apart shall be whirled

"Into what but the beauty of silence, silence forever? . . ."
 . . . This is the shape of the tree,
 And the flower and the leaf, and the three pale beautiful pilgrims:
 This is what you are to me.

AND IN THE HANGING GARDENS—

And in the hanging gardens there is rain
 From midnight until one, striking the leaves
 And bells of flowers, and stroking boles of planes,
 And drawing slow arpeggios over pools
 And stretching strings of sound from eaves to ferns.
 The princess reads. The knave of diamonds sleeps.
 The king is drunk, and flings a golden goblet
 Down from the turret window (curtained with rain)
 Into the lilacs.

And at one o'clock
 The vulcan under the garden wakes and beats
 The gong upon his anvil. Then the rain
 Ceases, but gently ceases, dripping still,
 And sound of falling water fills the dark
 As leaves grow bold and upright, and as eaves
 Part with water. The princess turns the page
 Beside the candle, and between two braids
 Of golden hair. And reads: "From there I went Northward a journey of four days, and came
 To a wild village in the hills, where none
 Was living save the vulture and the rat
 And one old man who laughed but could not speak.
 The roofs were fallen in, the well grown over
 With weed. And it was here my father died.

Then eight days further, bearing slightly west,
 The cold wind blowing sand against our faces,
 The food tasting of sand. And as we stood
 By the dry rock that marks the highest point
 My brother said: 'Not too late is it yet
 To turn, remembering home.' And we were silent
 Thinking of home." The princess shuts her eyes
 And feels the tears forming beneath her eyelids
 And opens them, and tears fall on the page.
 The knave of diamonds in the darkened room
 Throws off his covers, sleeps, and snores again.
 The king goes slowly down the turret stairs
 To find the goblet.

And at two o'clock

The vulcan in his smithy underground
 Under the hanging gardens, where the drip
 Of rain among the clematis and ivy
 Still falls from sipping flower to purple flower
 Smites twice his anvil, and the murmur comes
 Among the roots and vines. The princess reads:
 "As I am sick, and cannot write you more,
 And have not long to live, I give this letter
 To him, my brother, who will bear it south
 And tell you how I died. Ask how it was,
 There in the northern desert, where the grass
 Was withered, and the horses, all but one,
 Perished . . ." The princess drops her golden head
 Upon the page between her two white arms
 And golden braids. The knave of diamonds wakes
 And at his window in the darkened room
 Watches the lilacs tossing, where the king
 Seeks for the goblet.

And at three o'clock

The moon inflames the lilac heads, and thrice
 The vulcan, in his root-bound smithy, clangs
 His anvil; and the sounds creep softly up
 Among the vines and walls. The moon is round,
 Round as a shield above the turret top.
 The princess blows her candle out, and weeps
 In the pale room, where scent of lilacs comes,
 Weeping, with hands across her eyelids, thinking
 Of withered grass, withered by sandy wind.
 The knave of diamonds, in his darkened room,
 Holds in his hands a key, and softly steps
 Along the corridor, and slides the key
 Into the door that guards her. Meanwhile, slowly,
 The king, with raindrops on his beard and hands,
 And dripping sleeves, climbs up the turret stairs,
 Holding the goblet upright in one hand;
 And pauses on the midmost step to taste
 One drop of wine wherewith wild rain has mixed.

THE ROAD

Three then came forward out of darkness, one
 An old man bearded, his old eyes red with weeping,
 A peasant, with hard hands. "Come now," he said,
 "And see the Road, for which our people die.
 Twelve miles of road we've made, a little only,
 Westward winding. Of human blood and stone
 We build; and in a thousand years will come
 Beyond the hills to sea."

I went with them,
 Taking a lantern, which upon their faces
 Showed years and grief; and in a time we came
 To the wild road which wound among wild hills
 Westward; and so along this road we stopped,
 Silent, thinking of all the dead men there
 Compounded with sad clay. Slowly we moved:
 For they were old and weak, had given all
 Their life to build this twelve poor miles of road,
 Muddy, under the rain. And in my hand,
 Turning the lantern here or there, I saw
 Deep holes of water where the raindrop splashed,
 And rainfilled footprints in the grass, and heaps
 Of broken stone, and rusted spades and picks,
 And helves of axes. And the old man spoke,
 Holding my wrist: "Three hundred years it took
 To build these miles of road: three hundred years;
 And human lives unnumbered. But the day
 Will come when it is done." Then spoke another,
 One not so old, but old, whose face was wrinkled:
 "And when it comes, our people will all sing
 For joy, passing from east to west, or west
 To east, returning, with the light behind them;
 All meeting in the road and singing there."
 And the third said: "The road will be their life;
 A heritage of blood. Grief will be in it,
 And beauty out of grief. And I can see
 How all the women's faces will be bright.
 In that time, laughing, they will remember us.
 Blow out your lantern now, for day is coming."

My lantern blown out, in a little while
 We climbed in long light up a hill, where climbed
 The dwindling road, and ended in a field.
 Peasants were working in the field, bowed down
 With unrewarded work and grief and years
 Of pain. And as we passed them, one man fell
 Into a furrow that was bright with water
 And gave a cry that was half cry, half song—
 "The road . . . the road . . . the road . . ." And all then fell

Upon their knees and sang.

We four passed on
Over the hills, to westward. . . . Then I felt
How tears ran down my face, tears without end,
And knew that all my life henceforth was weeping,
Weeping, thinking of human grief, and human
Endeavor fruitless in a world of pain.
And when I held my hands up they were old;
I knew my face would not be young again.

ANNIHILATION

While the blue noon above us arches
And the poplar sheds disconsolate leaves,
Tell me again why love bewitches
And what love gives.

Is it the trembling finger that traces
The eyebrow's curve, the curve of the cheek?
The mouth that quivers, while the hand caresses,
But cannot speak?

No, not these, not in these is hidden
The secret, more than in other things:
Not only the touch of a hand can gladden
Till the blood sings.

It is the leaf that falls between us,
The bell that murmurs, the shadows that move,
The autumnal sunlight that fades upon us,
These things are love.

It is the "No, let us sit here longer,"
The "Wait till tomorrow," the "Once I knew"—
These trifles, said as you touch my finger
And the clock strikes two.

The world is intricate, and we are nothing.
It is the complex world of grass,
The twig on the path, a look of loathing,
Feelings that pass—

These are the secret; and I could hate you
When, as I lean for another kiss,
I see in your eyes that I do not meet you,
And that love is this.

Rock meeting rock can know love better
Than eyes that stare or lips that touch.
All that we know in love is bitter,
And it is not much.

THE QUARREL

Suddenly, after the quarrel, while we waited,
 Disheartened, silent, with downcast looks, nor stirred
 Eyelid nor finger, hopeless both, yet hoping Against all hope to unsay the sundering word:

While all the room's stillness deepened, deepened about us,
 And each of us crept his thought's way to discover
 How, with as little sound as the fall of a leaf,
 The shadow had fallen, and lover quarreled with lover;

And while, in the quiet, I marveled—alas, alas—
 At your deep beauty, your tragic beauty, torn
 As the pale flower is torn by the wanton sparrow—
 This beauty, pitied and loved, and now forsown;

It was then, when the instant darkened to its darkest,—
 When faith was lost with hope, and the rain conspired
 To strike its gray arpeggios against our heartstrings,—
 When love no longer dared, and scarcely desired:

It was then that suddenly, in the neighbor's room,
 The music started: that brave quartette of strings
 Breaking out of the stillness, as out of our stillness,
 Like the indomitable heart of life that sings

When all is lost; and startled from our sorrow,
 Tranced from our grief by that diviner grief,
 We raised remembering eyes, each looked at other,
 Blinded with tears of joy; and another leaf

Fell silently as that first; and in the instant
 The shadow had gone, our quarrel became absurd;
 And we rose, to the angelic voices of the music,
 And I touched your hand, and we kissed, without a word.

AT A CONCERT OF MUSIC

Be still, while the music rises about us: the deep enchantment
 Towers, like a forest of singing leaves and birds,
 Built for an instant by the heart's troubled beating,
 Beyond all power of words.

And while you are silent, listening, I escape you,
 And I run, by a secret path, through that bright wood
 To another time, forgotten, and another woman,
 And another mood.

Then, too, the music's pure algebra of enchantment
 Wrought all about us a bird-voice-haunted grove.

Then, too, I escaped, as now, to an earlier moment
And a brighter love.

Alas! Can I never have peace in the shining instant?
The hard bright crystal of being, in time and space?
Must I always touch, in the moment, a remembered moment,
A remembered face?

Absolve me: I would adore you, had I the secret,
With all this music's power, for yourself alone:
I would try to answer, in the world's chaotic symphony,
Your one clear tone:

But alas, alas, being everything you are nothing;
The history of all my life is in your face;
And all I can grasp is an earlier, more haunted moment,
And a happier place.

T E T É L E S T A I

I

How shall we praise the magnificence of the dead,
The great man humbled, the haughty brought to dust?
Is there a horn we should not blow as proudly
For the meanest of us all, who creeps his days,
Guarding his heart from blows, to die obscurely?
I am no king, have laid no kingdoms waste,
Taken no princes captive, led no triumphs
Of weeping women through long walls of trumpets;
Say rather, I am no one, or an atom;
Say rather, two great gods, in a vault of starlight,
Play ponderingly at chess, and at the game's end
One of the pieces, shaken, falls to the floor
And runs to the darkest corner; and that piece
Forgotten there, left motionless, is I. . . .
Say that I have no name, no gifts, no power,
Am only one of millions, mostly silent;
One who came with eyes and hands and a heart,
Looked on beauty, and loved it, and left it.
Say that the fates of time and space obscured me,
Led me a thousand ways to pain, bemused me,
Wrapped me in ugliness; and like great spiders
Dispatched me at their leisure. . . . Well, what then?
Should I not hear, as I lie down in dust,
The horns of glory blowing above my burial?

II

Morning and evening opened and closed above me:
Houses were built above me; trees let fall
Yellowing leaves upon me, hands of ghosts;
Rain has showered its arrows of silver upon me

Seeking my heart; winds have roared and tossed me;
 Music in long blue waves of sound has borne me
 A helpless weed to shores of unthought silence;
 Time, above me, within me, crashed its gongs
 Of terrible warning, sifting the dust of death;
 And here I lie. Blow now your horns of glory
 Harshly over my flesh, you trees, you waters!
 You stars and suns, Canopus, Deneb, Rigel,
 Let me, as I lie down, here in this dust,
 Hear, far off, your whispered salutation!
 Roar now above my decaying flesh, you winds,
 Whirl out your earth-scents over this body, tell me
 Of ferns and stagnant pools, wild roses, hillsides!
 Anoint me, rain, let crash your silver arrows
 On this hard flesh! I am the one who named you,
 I lived in you, and now I die in you.
 I your son, your daughter, treader of music,
 Lie, broken, conquered. . . . Let me not fall in silence.

III

I, the restless one; the circler of circles;
 Herdsman and roper of stars, who could not capture
 The secret of self; I who was tyrant to weaklings,
 Striker of children; destroyer of women; corrupter
 Of innocent dreamers, and laugher at beauty; I,
 Too easily brought to tears and weakness by music,
 Bassled and broken by love, the helpless beholder
 Of the war in my heart, of desire with desire, the struggle
 Of hatred with love, terror with hunger; I
 Who laughed without knowing the cause of my laughter, who grew
 Without wishing to grow, a servant to my own body;
 Loved without reason the laughter and flesh of a woman,
 Enduring such torments to find her! I who at last
 Grow weaker, struggle more feebly, relent in my purpose,
 Choose for my triumph an easier end, look backward
 At earlier conquests; or, caught in the web, cry out
 In a sudden and empty despair, "Tetélestai!"
 Pity me, now! I, who was arrogant, beg you!
 Tell me, as I lie down, that I was courageous.
 Blow horns of victory now, as I reel and am vanquished.
 Shatter the sky with trumpets above my grave.

IV

. . . Look! this flesh how it crumbles to dust and is blown!
 These bones, how they grind in the granite of frost and are nothing!
 This skull, how it yawns for a flicker of time in the darkness,
 Yet laughs not and sees not! It is crushed by a hammer of sunlight,
 And the hands are destroyed. . . . Press down through the leaves of the jasmine,
 Dig through the interlaced roots—nevermore will you find me;
 I was no better than dust, yet you cannot replace me. . . .
 Take the soft dust in your hand—does it stir: does it sing?

Has it lips and a heart? Does it open its eyes to the sun?
 Does it run, does it dream, does it burn with a secret, or tremble
 In terror of death? Or ache with tremendous decisions? . . .
 Listen! . . . It says: "I lean by the river. The willows
 Are yellowed with bud. White clouds roar up from the south
 And darken the ripples; but they cannot darken my heart,
 Nor the face like a star in my heart! . . . Rain falls on the water
 And pelts it, and rings it with silver. The willow trees glisten,
 The sparrow chirps under the eaves; but the face in my heart
 Is a secret of music. . . . I wait in the rain and am silent."
 Listen again! . . . It says: "I have worked, I am tired,
 The pencil dulls in my hand; I see through the window
 Walls upon walls of windows with faces behind them,
 Smoke floating up to the sky, an ascension of sea-gulls.
 I am tired. I have struggled in vain, my decision was fruitless,
 Why then do I wait? with darkness, so easy, at hand! . . .
 But tomorrow, perhaps . . . I will wait and endure till tomorrow!" . . .
 Or again: "It is dark. The decision is made. I am vanquished
 By terror of life. The walls mount slowly about me
 In coldness. I had not the courage. I was forsaken.
 I cried out, was answered by silence . . . Télestai! . . ."

v

Hear how it babbles!—Blow the dust out of your hand,
 With its voices and visions, tread on it, forget it, turn homeward
 With dreams in your brain. . . . This, then, is the humble, the nameless,—
 The lover, the husband and father, the struggler with shadows,
 The one who went down under shoutings of chaos, the weakling
 Who cried his "forsaken!" like Christ on the darkening hilltop! . . .
 This, then, is the one who implores, as he dwindles to silence,
 A fanfare of glory. . . . And which of us dares to deny him?

WHEN THE TREE BARES

When the tree bares, the music of it changes:
 Hard and keen is the sound, long and mournful;
 Pale are the poplar boughs in the evening light
 Above my house, against a slate-cold cloud.
 When the house ages and the tenants leave it,
 Crickets sing in the tall grass by the threshold;
 Spider, by the cold mantel, hangs his web.
 Here, in a hundred years from that clear season
 When first I came here, bearing lights and music,
 To this old ghostly house my ghost will come,—
 Pause in the half-light, turn by the poplar, glide
 Above tall grasses through the broken door.
 Who will say that he saw—or the dusk deceived him—
 A mist with hands of mist blow down from the tree
 And open the door and enter and close it after?
 Who will say that he saw, as midnight struck
 Its tremulous golden twelve, a light in the window,

And first heard music, as of an old piano,
 Music remote, as if it came from the earth,
 Far down; and then, in the quiet, eager voices?
 ". . . Houses grow old and die, houses have ghosts.
 Once in a hundred years we return, old house,
 And live once more." . . . And then the ancient answer,
 In a voice not human, but more like the creak of boards
 Or a rattle of panes in the wind—"Not as the owner,
 But as a guest you come, to fires not lit
 By hands of yours. . . . Through these long-silent chambers
 Move slowly, turn, return, and bring once more
 Your lights and music. It will be good to talk."

ONE STAR FELL AND ANOTHER

One star fell and another as we walked.
 Lifting his hand toward the west, he said—
 —How prodigal that sky is of its stars!
 They fall and fall, and still the sky is sky.
 Two more have gone, but heaven is heaven still.

Then let us not be precious of our thought,
 Nor of our words, nor hoard them up as though
 We thought our minds a heaven which might change
 And lose its virtue when the word had fallen.
 Let us be prodigal, as heaven is;
 Lose what we lose, and give what we may give,— Ourselves, are still the same. Lost you a planet—?
 Is Saturn gone? Then let him take his rings
 Into the Limbo of forgotten things.

O little foplings of the pride of mind,
 Who wrap the phrase in lavender, and keep it
 In order to display it: and you, who save our loves
 As if we had not worlds of love enough—!

Let us be reckless of our words and worlds,
 And spend them freely as the tree his leaves;
 And give them where the giving is most blest.
 What should we save them for,—a night of frost? . . .
 All lost for nothing, and ourselves a ghost.

BUT HOW IT CAME FROM EARTH

But how it came from earth this little white this waxen edge this that is sharp and white this that is mortal and bright the petals bent and all so curved as if for lovers meant and why the earth unfolded in this shape
 as coldly as words from the warm mouth escape

Or what it is that made the blood so speak or what it was it wanted that made this breath of curled air this hyacinth this word this that is deeply seen profoundly heard miracle of quick device from fire and ice

Or why the snail puts out a horn to see or the brave heart puts up a hand to take or why the mind, as if to agonize, will close, a century ahead, its eyes—
 a hundred years put on the clock
 its own mortality to mock—

Christ come, Confucius come, and tell us why the mind delights before its death to die embracing nothing as a lover might in a terrific ecstasy of night—
 and tell us why the hyacinth is sprung from the world's dull tongue.

Did death so dream of life, is this its dream?
 Does the rock think of flowers in its sleep?
 Then words and flowers are only thoughts of stone unconscious of the joy it thinks upon;
 and we ourselves are only the rock's words
 stammered in a dark dream of men and birds.

P R E L U D E VI

This is not you? These phrases are not you?
 That pomegranate of verses was not you?
 The green bright leaf not you, nor the gold fruit
 Burning amongst the leaves,—hot fruit of gold,—
 Nor bird, nor bough, nor bole, nor heaven's blue? . . .
 Alas, dear woman, I have sung in vain.

Let me dishevel then once more the leaves
 Of Cupid's bright thesaurus, and there find
 The word of words, the crimson seed of seeds,
 The aureate sound of sounds; and out of this
 Conceive once more your beauty, and in terms
 Your feminine keen eye will not disdain.

For this is you: on April page it is,
 Again on June, and once more on December;
 On August page I find it twice; and March
 Chronicles it in footnote; and July
 Asserts it roundly. Thus, from page to page,
 I find you many times in many terms.

It is a snowflake, which is like a star,
 And melts upon the hand; it is a cobweb,
 Shot with silver, that from the golden lip
 Of April's dandelion hangs to the grass;
 It is a raindrop,—of tremendous worth,—
 Which slides the whole length of a lilac leaf. . . .

This is not you? These symbols are not you?
 Not snowflake, cobweb, raindrop? . . . Woman, woman,
 You are too literal, too strict with me.
 What would you have? Some simple copper coin—
 I love you, you are lovely, I adore you?
 Or (better still) dumb silence, and a look?

No, no, this will not do; I am not one
 For whom these silences are sovereign;
 The pauses in the music are not music,
 Although they make the music what it is.
 Therefore I thumb once more the god's thesaurus,
 For phrase and praise, and find it all for you.

It is a star which might be thought a snowflake,
 Lost in a twinkling; it is a dandelion
 Shrouded with silver brightness; it is a leaf
 Which lets the raindrop go, but keeps its light. . . .
 It is the purple veining in the white
 That makes the pure throat of the iris pure. . . .

Yet you would have me say your hair is Helen's,—
 Your gait angelic; while I turn from these
 To the vast pages of that manuscript
 On which the stars are stars, the world a world;
 And there I find you written down, between Arcturus and a primrose and the sea.

CLOISTER

So, in the evening, to the simple cloister:
 This place of boughs, where sounds of water, softly,
 Lap on the stones. And this is what you are:
 Here, in this dusty room, to which you climb
 By four steep flights of stairs. The door is closed:
 The furies of the city howl behind you:
 The last bell plunges rock-like to the sea:
 The horns of taxis wail in vain. You come
 Once more, at evening, to this simple cloister;
 Hushed by the quiet walls, you stand at peace.

What ferns of thought are these, the cool and green,
 Dripping with moisture, that festoon these walls?
 What water-lights are these, whose pallid rings
 Dance with the leaves, or speckle the pale stones?

What spring is this, that bubbles the cold sand,
 Urging the sluggish grains of white and gold? . . .
 Peace. The delicious silence throngs with ghosts
 Of wingèd sound and shadow. These are you.

Now in the evening, in the simple cloister,
 You stand and wait; you stand and listen, waiting
 For wingèd sounds, and wingèd silences,
 And long-remembered shadows. Here the rock
 Lets down its vine of many-colored flowers:
 Waiting for you, or waiting for the lizard
 To move his lifted claw, or shift his eye
 Quick as a jewel. Here the lizard waits
 For the slow snake to slide among cold leaves.
 And, on the bough that arches the deep pool,
 Lapped in a sound of water, the brown thrush
 Waits, too, and listens, till his silence makes Silence as deep as song. And time becomes
 A timeless crystal, an eternity,
 In which the gone and coming are at peace.

What bird is this, whose silence fills the trees
 With rich delight? What leaves and boughs are these,
 What lizard, and what snake? . . . The bird is gone:
 And while you wait, another comes and goes,—
 Another and another; yet your eye,
 Although it has not moved, can scarcely say
 If birds have come and gone,—so quick, so brief,—
 Or if the thrush who waits there is the same. . . .
 The snake and lizard change, yet are the same:
 The flowers, many-colored, on the vine,
 Open and close their multitude of stars,—
 Yet are the same. . . . And all these things are you.

Thus, in the evening, in the simple cloister,
 Eternity adds ring to ring, the darker
 Beyond the brighter; and your silence fills
 With such a world of worlds,—so still, so deep,—
 As never voice could speak, whether it were
 The ocean's or the bird's. The night comes on:
 You wait and listen, in the darkened room,
 To all these ghosts of change. And they are you.

James Whaler

JAMES WHALER was born May 5, 1889, in Wilmington, Delaware. His parents came from Maryland and Pennsylvania with no city backgrounds anywhere until the family reached Wilmington. Whaler attended the Wilmington Friends' School and graduated from Princeton University, from which he received a doctor's degree for a work on Miltonic simile. Paying hard for his education, he worked in many capacities until he became head of a Nature Study class at the Minnesota State Teachers' College and then Instructor of English at Goucher College, Baltimore.

His first impulse to write poetry came when he found himself in the depths of the Maine woods in 1922, but Whaler was thirty-eight before his first book, Hale's Pond (1927), was published. The volume attracted little notice; beyond two or three perfunctory reviews, there was no critical consideration of the six long narratives comprising this strange work. But though few copies of the book were sold, rumors of its quality seemed to spread by grapevine telegraph; here a surprised critic and there an unprofessional enthusiast spoke up for the coiled vigor of "Runaway," "Jordan," "Monsieur Pipereau." This was New England with a difference. Purporting to be the poetry of the Maine woods, it was the very antithesis of the plein-air-afoot-through-the-great-outdoors sort of verse to which the Wanderlust school had accustomed us. Instead of pedestrian platitudes, here were ideas as novel as their idiom; instead of dilutions of sentiment, here were emotional and verbal richness.

This luxuriance, at first commendable, is Whaler's chief handicap, for it leads him to pile figure upon figure, pack word against word until his line becomes congested. So, too, his utterance, strained to its emotional capacity, tends to be pitched an octave too high. But Whaler might well be calling attention to a kind of Yankee we have forgotten. Understatement is characteristic of one type of New Englander; there is another—and as genuine a type—who, when he speaks, speaks too loudly with the abrupt release of long suppressions. The very knots and congestions, as well as the intense key of Whaler's verse, result from an endeavor to express the person who, when he talks, cries out his thought and who, when a poet, is likely to forget restraint. Whaler's faults are the faults of excess, not those of insufficiency, and, though here and there he shows the danger of knowing the woods too well, his men and women come first. He can—and does—draw the fine line between the incidental and the inevitable.

In varying degrees, all the long poems exhibit this power to seize on the significant trivial, none better than "Monsieur Pipereau." In some ways this poem is the author's chief triumph, for here, without preamble or apology, Whaler calmly re-writes one of the world's most popular poems. "Monsieur Pipereau" is, plot for plot, detail for detail, Browning's "Pied Piper of Hamelin" translated to a lumber-camp in Maine. But instead of being overcome by the comparison, the reader forgets the American's audacity, even—after the first page or two—forgets the original.

Green River (1931) is a long poem centering about Constantine Rafinesque, the great botanist and nature-lover, who came to America when he was seventeen, crossed the Alleghenies on foot, floated down the Ohio, and became a professor at Transylvania College, in Lexington, Kentucky. Green River is a headlong narrative distinguished by its strange evocativeness. It is the talk of a man who has been less persuaded than jarred into speech, jarred beyond the pattern of realism.

THE POND

(from "Runaway")

Shadowed in midnight green,
 Wedging her belly down a wide ravine,
 Pinned by birch-silver to a bed of umber,
 Her splay-claws lax, vibrating with her slumber,
 No moon to bathe her eyes
 And wake her, warn her that a storm would rise,—
 Hale's Pond I felt before me in an hour
 By thick black scents of fish and fern and flower.
 I rested on the "Dock"—
 Two split logs slapping at a foundered rock
 Where lichen-paint dripped into lily-wire;
 Here often had I dived through June's wet fire,
 Here often had I crawled a chill ooze-bed,
 With frog-palms, trout-eyes, chest ribbed round with lead.

For Father, when he had a cider-bout,
 And in the shame of it, would send me out
 To weed—then dive instead, and shout and swim
 Till sun-slope and the black cows' milking-hymn!
 Was I not muskrat, water-snake, raccoon?
 Was I not dragon-fly and diving loon?
 Polliwog, dreaming under lily-pads?
 Victor of song in frog-olympiads?
 Crawfish investigating runes of stone?
 Minnow of sucking glass and glassy bone?
 I flamed a water-beetle's fat vermillion,
 I joined the water-striders' cool cotillion;
 I made my body calamus for thin
 Silk fish to nibble at me, toe to chin;
 And once, while I was floating like a mink,
 Straight in my face a doe looked down to drink!
 I saw my soul burn in her golden eyes,
 Globed among ecstasies!
 I caught her breath above a pickerel-bloom:
 It was black plum and russet-mild mushroom.
 But best of all, eyes fish-wide, six feet under,
 Breasting the veil between two worlds asunder,
 I measured the immeasurable caress,
 The moving-calm, fin-naked gentleness
 Of sunlight, and I heard an ocean boom
 Afar, and my soul's treasure disentomb.

MONSIEUR PIPEREAU

The worst camp-life man ever lived? That season
 Up near Seboomook. Couldn't been worse. The reason?
 RATS! Big enough rats to circumcise wildcats,
 Sociable, devastating democrats,
 Under the bunkhouse, up above the ceiling,
 Under the cook-room, and forever squealing
 Under the stables, through the manger-racks,
 Round every bale of hay in herds and packs,
 Under manure-piles, sawdust, shingles, sacks,
 Kegs, harness, grease-pots, axle-trees, ropes, jacks,
 Under our blankets, under our very backs,
 Until that whole camp looked like maniacs!
 For days big Simmons couldn't use his head:
 Rats bit him in the neck one night in bed.
 Nadeau got out his rosary and prayed
 Currying his horses, he was so afraid;
 And once I even saw him make his mare
 Kneel down beside him in the straw for prayer.
 Rogers, the foreman, had them send us traps
 From Bangor: cages with invisible snaps
 And flaps to hold a dozen, traps of steel
 Whose center-plates would crash at a grasshopper's heel:
 Flat-traps of maple, circle-traps of wire,
 Traps built to serve mankind and to inspire,—
 We had a hundred and seven traps all told;
 And every brand of poison-mixture sold.
 Ever study rats?—You'll take them by surprise
 Once—no! not even once! No trap, how wise
 Or simple, fools a rat in his right mind!
 First day, caught ten—the deaf and dumb and blind;
 And the first night six more—the sick and lean;
 And next day none—making in all sixteen.
 "Five cents per head!" Rogers announced that night.
 Vainly imagining we could strike the light
 Of inspiration, were there bounty to it,—
 Lord! we'd have paid him ten per head to do it!
 One way was left: rifles with powder and lead:
 Shooting them from the rafters overhead
 By lantern-glow; but almost all objected—
 Preferring rats to one shot misdirected;
 And when a bullet killed a laying-fowl
 Of Mrs. Grove's, our cook, we heard a howl
 That went into the food she fed us. RATS!
 As it grew cold they took to shoes and hats.
 I woke one morning minus watch and vest:
 Some rat's idea to improve his nest.

Now Rogers and his wife, and Mrs. Grove
 Her sister, had a cabin—with its drove

Of rats—all separate from ours. One night
 We brought him final word we'd lost the fight,
 Would have to quit, and asked to draw our pay.
 But Rogers said: "Boys, hold it one more day.
 I share this hell you're in that's worse than war.
 We got 'em bad here too—just one day more!
 Haven't talked much, but I've a large surprise
 For this whole camp tomorrow. Shine your eyes
 To see dead rats tomorrow—dead ones!—do y'hear?
 Listen to what our Super writes: 'Monsieur
 Bernard de Pipereau from Canada,
 Expert in shrews, rats, mice, et cetera,
 Will reach Seboomook Thursday. As to fee,
 No more than forty for his guarantee.
 Tom Rogers, hold the men! Write, let us know.'
 Well, what are you grinning at? This Pipereau
 Is known in Brunswick.—Men, we are in luck!
 That's right, stay on one day, and if the ruck
 Of these eternal varmints ain't in hell
 By Saturday, then, by God! I'll pull the bell
 To quit! But if that Canadian's what I say,
 Then holiday
 On me at Joe's, and pay goes on the same!"
 Even while he argued, up the window-frame
 Inside—behind him—slouched a long slick rat.
 Big Simmons nearly cried. "We don't want that,"
 Said nervous Nadeau. "Ain't we had enough
 Holidays every night? Another bluff!"
 Yet Rogers spoke so meek and fair and certain
 You never had found the devil himself deserting,
 "Of course you doubt me, boys, but that's not odd—Doubt—honest doubt's the noblest work of God!"
 "Yes, but a rat ain't!" wheezed old Shorty Myer,
 Who set all laughing, as we slipped back sprier,
 To dream in ratland one more day and night.

Next noon, accoutered as a wizard might
 From Lapland if a parliament of witches
 Had sent to Maine for heaps of flesh and riches,
 The doctor came that Rogers promised—just Floated to camp through arches of snow-dust,
 And, galloping to messhouse, on a long
 Stallion that snorted an Icelandic song,
 He reined up in the center of a ring
 Of men. We hailed him as our saviour-king.
 But not till Tom came running with a grin,
 Would he slide from the saddle and go in,
 Leaving his horse in a long muzzle of steam
 Snapping a drift with vicious teeth of cream.
 Rogers came round and introduced.

"The boys—

Be pleased to meet the boys."

"Ah! rat annoys
Such beeg, beeg men! I show you how you kill."
We sat down on the dinner-benches, still
Sizing the stranger up, some not through eating;
And other men came in, looked, passed no greeting,
For something strange was in the air: the oak
Logs on the hearth seemed damp and turned to smoke.

"The devil for looks!" said Shorty Myer low.
"He'd give a porcupine the vertigo!"
Nose long and thin, and eyes that never saw
The thing outside without its inside flaw.
Hair long and thin, ears long, cheeks thin and taper,
With the complexion of last year's newspaper;
Long thin mustaches and some spears of thin
Long bristles reddish-gray from a long chin.
That Frenchman's eyes wheeled round and hypnotized us:
Oh, there's no miracle would have surprised us
More than the thing he did! He sent a bench
Of men to the other end; and, like the French,
Talked with his elbows till he cleared a corner;
Then bows and squats before us like a mourner,
And, with long hands as stiff as cant-dog hooks,
He pulls a board away, and looks and looks
At two small rat-holes, motioning us be still:
I tell you not a body moved a gill.
Even Mrs. Grove held up her pan of beans
Steaming, but felt no heat or weight.—Such scenes
We think we dream in.—Wee, wee-wee, hsts-hsts,
Hsts-hsts, wee-wee! and, like ventriloquists,
He whistled so that cries were overhead,
Were underfoot, came from a box of bread.
Now feet were heard to patter under bench
And table; and the men began to brench.
He made a sound like tuning-forks from June
Mosquitoes, till that winter afternoon
Turned for the moment green, the snow was gone,
And birds began to whistle through the dawn.
We saw no longer human lips and teeth
On him who charmed those vermin underneath:
The motion of the music in his face
Made all his body tremble, and displace
The human by a beast—or worse than that:
The men close by him shrunk away,—a RAT!
And then he threw his brown coat round him like
A tent; his lightning-fingers gave a strike,
A shake, and, with a little laugh of French,
He tossed a dead rat to an empty bench.

The stable-kid began to cry hurrah,
 But Pipereau turned black, and waved his claw,—
 Seemed to congeal poor Joey's underjaw.
 But Mrs. Grove, the pan pressed to her heart,
 Murmured to Mrs. Rogers: "Ain't he smart!"
 Close by the other hole once more he drew;
 Whistling, he spread his coat for number two,
 Flipped him to death with two invisible pinches,
 And tossed him to Rogers,—a beast of eighteen inches
 From tooth to tail-tip—longer than the first:
 Tom Rogers grabbed the tails of both and cursed,
 And pitched them to the fireplace nose in,
 To test if they were real or he was dozing.

The Frenchman stood full height and said, "Plenteel
 You have plentee and clevar rats—oui, oui!"
 Then Rogers asked his terms. Quarter per head—
 These first two free. Or, one gross sum instead,
 And we'd be cured of rats in a day and night.
 "One hundred dollars and I do it right!"
 The price turned Rogers pale. "That is a great
 Pile in this country, friend. It's not the rate
 Named in this letter from my Company!—
No more than forty for his guarantee."
 "Correct! One hundred is ze lowest price
 To kill or drife away all rats and mice;
 But forty more—I guarantee you, men:
 Zey leafe to leafe, and never come again!"
 Tom whispered with his wife. . . . "That's reasonable,
 Doctor," he said. "There's not an obstacle
 To hinder here: we'll follow all you say
 If you can rid our camp in a night and day."

John Heald came hobbling from the cook-house. "Yep!
 Rats have resigned! All night he made 'em step!"

"Ah, ah! Ze good time wiz ze boys?" Outside
 Tom's cabin Pipereau left his horse untied.
 Then as they talked within we boys leaned to.
 "How, doctor, can you prove your job is through?
 Suppose when you're gone tonight we find rats still?—
 We've lost one hundred forty! What proof will
 We ask? This: we take twenty buttered rolls,
 And with them plug up twenty cook-room holes;
 Take twenty squares of cheese, and lay a square
 On every mess-room bench and table and chair.
 The air's not cold outside—all hands can wait
 Till seven o'clock. Then we'll inspect the bait."
 "Eh bien! Oui, oui!"

At once the thing was done.
 The Frenchman, bundled like a skeleton,
 Wove round and round the camp a savage, quick
 Canter that showed his horse knew every trick.
 For two sharp hours he rode, while Rogers walked
 Among his men around a fire and talked.
 The moon was near the full, the woods were deep
 With ghostly lights like any sick man's sleep.
 John Heald, on crutches, shook his beard in two Telling us what he saw that Frenchman do
 When he looked through a keyhole. "Had a pipe,"
 He said, "thin as the leg-bone of a snipe—
 And on that pipe he trilled in graveyard pitch
 The damnedest tunes! They would have laid a witch!
 I saw them tunes! Brown smoke—that snaked a way
 Down every chink and hole where rats can stay!
 God help what falls into that Frenchman's clutches!
 You think I dreamt, Tom! Never! Took up crutches
 At twelve o'clock, and hobbled toward the barn,
 Where, through a hole, what did I see, by darn!
 But that horse eating in the moonlight there
 Live rats as if it was a regular fare!
 Live rats! I tell you not a one was dead
 Until that stallion grabbed it by its head!
 That pipe's peculiar music has such force
 It sends those rats all racing for the horse,
 Greedy to gaze into that horse's eye!
 I saw them coming one by one—to die!
 Endless processions—two and sometimes three
 Rat-giants at once would stand up patiently
 Waiting to catch that horse's ey! And they Would mew like kittens playing in the hay.
 Once Pipereau came in—I am no har!—
 And, Tom, those two rats you threw in the fire?
 He brought 'em alive and well, to feed that horse!
 It must have been the brute's five-hundredth course!
 And then that Frenchman drew a rat-skin bag
 Out of the saddle somewhere: such a swag!
 Oh, such a swag! Gold coins and ruby globes!
 Diamonds of folded firs like folded robes!
 And little images of glowworm light—
 I left off looking, I shook so for fright:
 I'd only strength to make my bunk-room, lock
 The door, and listen for the crowing cock.
 I don't see how those women dared to serve
 Meals to that rat!—They beat us men for nerve!
 Oh, I forgot to tell about some stuff
 I saw him take—" But Rogers cried, "Enough!
 An interesting dream, John, that will keep!
 See here, it's seven! It's business now, not sleep!"

And Pipereau was waiting with a yawn,
 And a laughing wink that all our rats were gone.
 He held the pail to pick up rolls and cheese
 While Tom preceded, swinging lanter'n and keys.
 Back they came arguing.

“I tell you flat,
 Doctor, you haven’t killed us every rat!
 You saw me lay the bait—but here’s nineteen,
 No more than nineteen rolls! And you saw clean
 White squares of cheese I cut: but these lack three
 Of making twenty! And the rest, you see,
 Are all gnawed through! And at my very door
 An apple’s gone that you saw there before! . . .
 By contract, must I pay you anything
 At all?—Here, take this forty, covering
 All rats you killed and all you might have killed
 Had you but had more time—or been more skilled.”
 The Frenchman clenched the bills and ground his teeth.
 Jabbering a lightning lingo underneath
 His chest, that shivered in the furs he wore;
 And from the dieu’s he blew I guessed he swore.
 He leaped so quick upon the stallion that
 We jumped, imagining a bloody rat!
 He leaped so arrowy we thought he strode
 The great moon that had risen from the road;
 And the free stallion, treading clouds of snow,
 Cut sharp that moon into a cameo,
 While all was silent but our hearts, that shook.
 Tom cried, “I’m through forever with that crook!”
 We ate in silence.

Never was there bliss
 Like ours that night! Oh, never night like this
 In Rogers’ camp! Dreamless and oathless—ratless!
 No one to wake and find a wardrobe hatless,
 Bootless or shoeless! Night so overpowering
 Peaceful I woke while yet the moon was towering.
 There lay the men like innocents new-born,
 Some barely breathing, others blowing horn
 Or bowing violins of wood and silk.
 Not since these men had quit their mothers’ milk
 Was such content. I lit a pipe to think,
 And walked out to the shed to get a drink,
 When in the moonlight I could see Nadeau
 Standing outside the doorway in the snow.
 “Just like a nursery, ain’t it!”

“God, it’s that!
 But didn’t you hear some time ago a cat?” . . .
 “It’s just from listening to John Heald’s words
 Last night, Nadeau; but John dreams dreams—and lies.
 The plague is over! Frenchy takes the prize!

He's galloped to the moon with all his rats!"
We both turned in and slept like autocrats.

Of all days for calamity—Sunday! Black
Sunday it was in Rogers' almanac!
We boys awoke that morning with a shout
Of bliss: the rats were banished without doubt!—
Each of us glowing like a god of Rome,
Or like the wandering boy that's welcomed home.
Thermometer ten above,—just comfortable
To renovate our camp from stove to stall.
Now business first on Sundays was to shave
Or bathe, or both—but to do both was brave;
Yet every man this morning called for tub
And water, till we looked a swimming-club.
What if a wind had crossed the rising sun,
And flakes as round as quarters had begun
To quilt the roofs with whiter wool?—I say
Paradise gave up its morning to our day.

Well, I was raking off my beard for fair
At McIlvenny's mirror, and the air
Was being lit with hymns from twenty faces,
Nadeau's fine tenor up above the basses
In his pet lullaby, "Fair Infidel,"
And all were starving for the breakfast-bell,—
When on a sudden every note went flat!
I dropped my razor, nervous as a cat.
Someone was hollering in Rogers' house!
We opened doors to hear him.

"Cook's heraus!"

Called Al Lemure. Then Rogers burst in—hat
And coat off, bald head blue with cold. "That rat!
That French rat, boys!"

Well, late that night before,
His wife and Mrs. Grove unlocked their door,
All clad for travel—furs and gloves and hoods,—
Ran from the moonlight into the deep woods,
And up behind that Frenchman on that horse
They were now flying.—"God knows what their course!
Though you could still see footprints where they ran,
This new snow covers up that Frenchman's plan!
It's Pipereau's witchcraft—that rat Pipereau!—
And eight hours' start in all this world of snow!"

"Boys!" cried big Simmons, "is there road or trail,
Mountain or pond or stream or swamp or swale
Round here but we know better 'n a love-letter?
Wherever Tom's wife is I say we get her!"
"And bring the cook back tool" cried Al Lemure.

Well, up and down and round Moosehead we sure
 Did spread the tidings of that Pipereau.
 Some went to Greenville, Rogers through the snow
 Drove clear to Foxcroft, and till Wednesday night,
 As we'd agreed, we trailed that Frenchman's flight.
 Whatever were the footprints, all led south,
 Or we'd have mashed it to the St. Lawrence mouth.
 Tom tried the law; but lawyers urged, of course,
 One hundred dollars for a quick divorce.
 Oh, Maine is broad, but Canada is broader:
 That Frenchman, once he loped across the border,
 Could have set sail to Lapland with his riches,
 Or galloped there between a brace of witches.
 Neither his wife nor cook Tom saw again,
 Nor Pipereau, though trailed by many men.

Hear to the end: there's still a funeral;
 For when Tom lost his wife, that was not all.
 By Wednesday night we were too fagged to pull
 Boots from our feet or speak a syllable.
 Staggered and haggard like a wreck of drunks,
 We fell, with no undressing, on our bunks,
 Wind-broken dogs from shocing through that snow—
 And neither Frenchman, wife, nor cook to show.
 And yet one comfort mightly surpassed
 Our toil: we had a ratless camp at last!—
 Oh, think of coming home to sleep, sleep, sleep!
 Without one prayer to God our souls to keep!
 With such a hope one man can fight like ten;
 Eagles can harbor in the heart of a wren.
 Pure slumber to the muscles of my hair,
 I fell to dreaming I had shot a bear,
 When a volcano's voice shook through my head:
 “Rats! Rats! Rats! RATS!—They're back!—They're on your bed!”
 The moon burnt frosty through the panes of glass,
 Annealing rafters to a milky brass,
 Daubed everywhere with shadows big as cats—
 RATS!
 Tremendous teams and troupes of acrobats,
 Chewing on harness and on leather puttees,
 On snow-shoe straps as if it were on cheese.
 I saw their eyes like little jeweled moons
 Arching from rope to rope in glad festoons.
 And under-floor I heard the patterning pests,—
 The old full families squealing in their nests.
 Wherever ear could listen there was gnawing
 And clawing and pawing and chawing and wild seesawing.
 A trunk that held my only Sunday suit
 Was being investigated by one brute;
 Two more I watched climb out of Mac's new shoes;
 Nowhere in sight but they were working in twos

Where there'd been one before that Frenchman came.
 Mac, with his gun out now, was taking aim.
 "You'll wake up Rogers, Mac; don't waste your shell!"
 Flump! The anatomies of dead rats fell
 Over a dozen bunks—and then the room was hell!
 The rats took cover while the lead kept flying;—
 No use if Rogers had come pacifying;
 The boys let powder loose at every hole
 And shadow where they saw that Frenchman's soul.
 At length ten minutes' peace, then hordes on hordes
 Came swarming back to the same beams and boards.
 We shot the roof into a sieve for snow
 To cover up the flesh of rats below;
 We shook that roof into a storm of flakes
 Which melted on the bunks in crimson lakes.
 A blizzard underneath the moon was that!
 A battlefield of wild-man versus rat!
 And all that night Tom Rogers stayed away,
 But we'd hear bullets fired and ricochet
 Inside his cabin, and we wished him well:
 We knew his heaven, like ours, had turned to hell.

If, near Seboomook, on a rise of loose
 Green bowlders and a single stand of spruce
 And pine, you stumble on a ruined camp,
 Find bits of bone around a broken lamp,
 And shingles made of little holes,—begone!
 Unless you are a wizard or a faun,
 Oh, crave no harbor here for any night!
 For in one hour of the fall of light
 You will see life that Pharaoh did not see,
 You will arise and shake—and you will flee
 To cast your couch with dews and moss and rocks,
 Lonelier than a woodrat, lonelier than a fox.

Edna St. Vincent Millay

EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY was born February 22, 1892, in Rockland, Maine. After a childhood spent in her native State, she attended Vassar College, from which she was graduated in 1917. Coming to New York, she supported herself by writing short stories under various pseudonyms (Distressing Dialogues, 1924, published under the name of "Nancy Boyd"), translating songs, acting with the Provincetown Players in the capacity of playwright and performer. After her marriage to Eugen Boissevain, she moved to a farm in the Berkshires, which she leaves only to travel and deliver occasional readings.

Her first long poem, "Renascence," was the outstanding feature of The Lyric Year (1912), an anthology which revealed many new names. "Renascence" was written when Miss Millay was scarcely nineteen; it remains one of the most remarkable poems of this generation. Beginning like a casual aimless rhyme, it proceeds, with calm lucidity, to a set of climaxes. It is as if a child had, in the midst of ingenuousness, uttered some terrific truth. The cumulative power of this poem is surpassed only by its passages of individual beauty.

Renascence, Miss Millay's first volume, was published in 1917. The small collection enlarges the tone of the title poem; here is a hunger for beauty so intense that no delight can appease it. Such poems as "God's World" and a few of the unnamed sonnets, capturing the breathless awe of "Renascence" in a smaller compass, vibrate with the emotion of romantic and rebellious youth.

A Few Figs from Thistles (originally published in 1920 and revised several times since then), although one of Miss Millay's most popular collections, is her least commendable performance. In many of the self-conscious flippancies, Miss Millay has exchanged her poetic birthright for a mess of cleverness. There are a few poems which are worthy of her calling, but the greater part of this volume smirks with a facile sophistication, admiring its own pertly cynical pirouettes. These heel-and-toe exercises are even less graceful in the later work where, it was maliciously said, they suffered from fallen archness.

Second April (1921) is a return to the triumph of her first book. In spite of certain lapses in which the poet seems to have adopted a fixed simper, Second April expresses that passion for identification with all of life which few poets in her generation have surpassed; she has made ecstasy articulate and almost tangible. A new note, new at least for this singer, creeps into the lyrics, the note of gravity; here is dignity, almost an austerity, of emotion. In her inversions and archaic epithets, her "forsooths" and "alacks," Miss Millay seems to be a belated Elizabethan; she uses locutions which ordinarily have a false and affected ring. Far from marring her work, these antique accents suit the light banter of "The Bean-Stalk," as well as the intensity of "The Poet and His Book," the much quoted "Passer Mortuus Est," and the unforgettable "Elegy."

Three plays were published in 1921: Two Slatterns and a King, "a moral interlude" in adroit couplets, The Lamp and the Bell, a five-act drama which is a strange composite of native speech and Shakespearean echoes, and Aria Da Capo, a one-act play which, for all its brevity, is a profound satire on war and war-makers. A juvenile effort, The Princess Marries the Page, was exhumed from undergraduate days and published in 1932.

The Harp-Weaver and Other Poems (1924) wears its author's heart on its sleeve; often, in fact, that responsive organ is displayed as a shining bauble, a decoration tricked with frayed ribbons. But here Miss Millay begins to wear her heart with a difference. Rarely now is she narcissistic or consciously arch; she speaks with a disillusion that contains more than a tinge of bitterness. Love, she announces, sometimes with a wry wistfulness, sometimes with a proud scorn, is not enough. If, she tells us, it is hard never to attain one's desires, it is even more painful to have them fulfilled. This change of key makes The Harp-Weaver and Other Poems Miss Millay's most uneven collection. The title-poem, which was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Poetry in 1922, barely saves itself from sentimentality. But the twenty-two sonnets which comprise Part Four of this book are not only representative of Miss Millay's best, but are among the finest modern examples of the form.

The Buck in the Snow and Other Poems (1928) is pitched in the key of loss. The heel-and-toe insouciance has disappeared; a new and more somber poet emerges from these pages. The happy vibrations of her early work have lengthened to a music that no longer celebrates eager dawn or headlong day but is tuned to the beginning of evening. Never has Miss Millay plucked so insistently on the autumnal string; never has she been so preoccupied with the water darkening, with the ceaseless "action of waves and the action of sorrow," with the lonely self, and the going down of "the sun that will not rise again." This is not to imply that the poet has become detached; Miss Millay's ecstasies are never abstract in the essential way that those of Léonie Adams are. Her metaphysics of passion remain personal; she is still too much in love with lost love, with the shards of the broken pot, with the memory of a world forgotten, with the spirit of persecution, and the minutiae of unrelinquishing mortal mind. The mood is rarely anything but subjective and self-perturbed. Even so general a poem on death as "Moriturus" proceeds from an undignified fear, a "shricking to the south and clutching at the north."

Exception, however, must be made in the case of a small part of the volume, especially the group which brings the book to its ascending close. The seven sonnets in The Buck in the Snow overcome the limitations of the poet as well as the limitations of the form. In "Sonnet to Gath" she has fashioned an irony far removed from impertinence; in "On Hearing a Symphony of Beethoven" she achieves the impossible, writing that rarest of things, a successful poem on a symphony, and holding, in fourteen lines, the music, the orchestra, the audience, and the triumphant catharsis which is Beethoven. Rising above its almost fatal first line, it turns inversions and generalities into a victory over rhetoric.

Fatal Interview (1931), a set of fifty-two love sonnets, was hailed with superlatives. Reviewers strained to outcry each other by comparing the sequence to Mrs. Browning's, Rossetti's, Sidney's, Petrarch's, Shakespeare's, mostly in Miss Millay's favor. Only a few voices registered a minority opinion. Theodore Morrison objected that "the sonnets give the air of being manufactured, of being wondrously clever, an extraordinary simulation rather than the true substance of poetry," and a reviewer in the London Times flatly asserted that "the sequence as a whole is rather verbally than truly impassioned. . . . We admire the rhetoric but find little real feeling to which to respond. It is always at the pitch of romantic extravagance."

Wine from These Grapes (1934) betrays, in spite of its author's craftsmanship, the same reliance on rhetoric which marred Fatal Interview. Here, too, the emotion is often inflated, the poem stretched beyond its capacity. There is, moreover, a certain magisterial utterance heard in the books published after 1924, which is suspiciously portentous. Wine from These Grapes is, technically, Miss Millay's most uncertain volume; philosophically, it is her most mature one. Here the poet turns from prettiness and the pangs of love, and concerns herself with the bewildered and self-torturing human spirit.

Conversation at Midnight (1937) is Miss Millay's outstanding failure. In the preceding work, the poet had usually spoken in character; she had alternately used the voice of the precocious, subtle child and the mind of the experienced, disillusioned woman. Now she determined to express herself like a man—like seven men. The result is a set of discussions prosy and pretentious. Miss Millay fails to make her men talk with conviction, for she creates neither real controversy nor actual character. She is not a thinker, though she tries hard to be one; she is intuitive, not intellectual. When she relies unhappily on intellect, she falls back upon clichés of thought as well as stereotypes of expression. The confusion is increased by the queer mixture of idioms; at one moment Miss Millay makes her dialecticians discourse in her favorite Elizabethan accent, the next moment she has them imitate Ogden Nash.

Huntsman, What Quarry? (1939) is an effort to return to the personal lyricism in which Miss Millay is most at home: the anatomy of love and defiance of age, a preoccupation which is candid if not self-critical. A few of the poems deal with subjects outside herself, but most of them dramatize a self which still hesitates to discard youth and accept maturity. Even her admirers were cautious in their praise; one of them, Gilbert Maxwell, wrote, "It seems regrettable that she has found in all these years no antidote for her animal fear of death and no substitute for that religious realization so perfectly projected in 'Renascence'." "What complicates its expression," wrote Louise Bogan, "is the influence of the hampering and sometimes destructive role of unofficial feminine laureate which Miss Millay has had to play for so long."

It was as laureate and political commentator, rather than as poet, that Miss Millay wrote Make Bright the Arrows (1940). The feeling which prompted the verse was intense, the outrage against the dictators and aggressors was deep and direct; but the reviewers could not help deprecating the facile couplets and journalistic carelessness. As Babette Deutsch wrote, "The subtitle of this thin collection ('1940 Notebook') might disarm the critic, but the fact that Miss Millay has permitted these verse commentaries on current history to appear between boards indicates that she believes in their permanent validity. This belief one must regretfully decline to share."

The legendary Miss Millay, the feminine Byron of the early 1920s, worshiped by her imitators, has not yet received final appraisal. One estimate rates her importance as high as her undoubted popularity; another deprecates her self-concern and concludes that she expresses "a twentieth century romantic temperament in a nineteenth century romantic vehicle." Critics of the future will be quick to discern the exaggeration, unevenness, and variety of Miss Millay's gifts; they will not fail to find, beyond the literary aptitude, the notes of authority.

RENASCENCE

All I could see from where I stood
Was three long mountains and a wood;
I turned and looked another way,
And saw three islands in a bay.
So with my eyes I traced the line
Of the horizon, thin and fine,
Straight around till I was come
Back to where I'd started from;
And all I saw from where I stood
Was three long mountains and a wood.
Over these things I could not see;
These were the things that bounded me;
And I could touch them with my hand,
Almost, I thought, from where I stand.

And all at once things seemed so small
My breath came short, and scarce at all
But, sure, the sky is big, I said;
Miles and miles above my head;
So here upon my back I'll lie
And look my fill into the sky.
And so I looked, and, after all,
The sky was not so very tall.
The sky, I said, must somewhere stop,
And—sure enough!—I see the top!
The sky, I thought, is not so grand;
I 'most could touch it with my hand!
And, reaching up my hand to try,
I screamed to feel it touch the sky.

I screamed, and—lo!—Infinity
Came down and settled over me;

Forced back my scream into my chest,
 Bent back my arm upon my breast,
 And, pressing of the Undefined
 The definition on my mind,
 Held up before my eyes a glass
 Through which my shrinking sight did pass
 Until it seemed I must behold
 Immensity made manifold;
 Whispered to me a word whose sound
 Deafened the air for worlds around,
 And brought unmuffled to my ears
 The gossiping of friendly spheres,
 The creaking of the tented sky,
 The ticking of Eternity.

I saw and heard, and knew at last
 The How and Why of all things, past,
 And present, and forevermore.
 The universe, cleft to the core,
 Lay open to my probing sense
 That, sickening, I would fain pluck thence
 But could not,—nay! But needs must suck
 At the great wound, and could not pluck
 My lips away till I had drawn
 All venom out.—Ah, fearful pawn!
 For my omniscience I paid toll
 In infinite remorse of soul.
 All sin was of my sinning, all
 Atoning mine, and mine the gall
 Of all regret. Mine was the weight
 Of every brooded wrong, the hate
 That stood behind each envious thrust,
 Mine every greed, mine every lust.
 And all the while for every grief,
 Each suffering, I craved relief
 With individual desire,—
 Craved all in vain! And felt fierce fire
 About a thousand people crawl;
 Perished with each,—then mourned for all!
 A man was starving in Capri;
 He moved his eyes and looked at me;
 I felt his gaze, I heard his moan,
 And knew his hunger as my own.
 I saw at sea a great fog-bank
 Between two ships that struck and sank;
 A thousand screams the heavens smote;
 And every scream tore through my throat;
 No hurt I did not feel, no death
 That was not mine; mine each last breath
 That, crying, met an answering cry
 From the compassion that was I.

All suffering mine, and mine its rod;
 Mine, pity like the pity of God.
 Ah, awful weight! Infinity
 Pressed down upon the finite me!
 My anguished spirit, like a bird,
 Beating against my lips I heard;
 Yet lay the weight so close about
 There was no room for it without.
 And so beneath the weight lay I
 And suffered death, but could not die.

Long had I lain thus, craving death,
 When quietly the earth beneath
 Gave way, and inch by inch, so great
 At last had grown the crushing weight,
 Into the earth I sank till I
 Full six feet under ground did lie,
 And sank no more,—there is no weight
 Can follow here, however great.
 From off my breast I felt it roll,
 And as it went my tortured soul
 Burst forth and fled in such a gust
 That all about me swirled the dust.

Deep in the earth I rested now;
 Cool is its hand upon the brow
 And soft its breast beneath the head
 Of one who is so gladly dead.
 And all at once, and over all,
 The pitying rain began to fall.
 I lay and heard each patterning hoof
 Upon my lowly, thatched roof.
 And seemed to love the sound far more
 Than ever I had done before.
 For rain it hath a friendly sound
 To one who's six feet underground;
 And scarce the friendly voice or face:
 A grave is such a quiet place.

The rain, I said, is kind to come
 And speak to me in my new home.
 I would I were alive again
 To kiss the fingers of the rain,
 To drink into my eyes the shine
 Of every slanting silver line,
 To catch the freshened, fragrant breeze
 From drenched and dripping apple-trees.
 For soon the shower will be done,
 And then the broad face of the sun
 Will laugh above the rain-soaked earth
 Until the world with answering mirth

Shakes joyously, and each round drop
 Rolls, twinkling, from its grass-blade top.
 How can I bear it; buried here,
 While overhead the sky grows clear
 And blue again after the storm?
 O, multi-colored, multi-form,
 Belovèd beauty over me,
 That I shall never, never see
 Again! Spring-silver, autumn-gold,
 That I shall never more behold!
 Sleeping your myriad magics through,
 Close-sepulchered away from you!
 O God, I cried, give me new birth,
 And put me back upon the earth!
 Upset each cloud's gigantic gourd
 And let the heavy rain, down-poured
 In one big torrent, set me free,
 Washing my grave away from me!

I ceased; and, through the breathless hush
 That answered me, the far-off rush
 Of herald wings came whispering
 Like music down the vibrant string
 Of my ascending prayer, and—crash!
 Before the wild wind's whistling lash
 The startled storm-clouds reared on high
 And plunged in terror down the sky,
 And the big rain in one black wave
 Fell from the sky and struck my grave.

I know not how such things can be,
 I only know there came to me
 A fragrance such as never clings
 To aught save happy living things;
 A sound as of some joyous elf
 Singing sweet songs to please himself,
 And, through and over everything,
 A sense of glad awakening.
 The grass, a tip-toe at my ear,
 Whispering to me I could hear;
 I felt the rain's cool finger-tips
 Brushed tenderly across my lips,
 Laid gently on my sealed sight,
 And all at once the heavy night
 Fell from my eyes and I could see,—
 A drenched and dripping apple-tree,
 A last long line of silver rain,
 A sky grown clear and blue again.
 And as I looked a quickening gust
 Of wind blew up to me and thrust

Into my face a miracle
 Of orchard-breath, and with the smell,—
 I know not how such things can be!—
 I breathed my soul back into me.

Ah! Up then from the ground sprang I
 And hailed the earth with such a cry
 As is not heard save from a man
 Who has been dead and lives again.
 About the trees my arms I wound;
 Like one gone mad I hugged the ground;
 I raised my quivering arms on high;
 I laughed and laughed into the sky,
 Till at my throat a strangling sob
 Caught fiercely, and a great heart-throb
 Sent instant tears into my eyes;
 O God, I cried, no dark disguise
 Can e'er hereafter hide from me
 Thy radiant identity!
 Thou canst not move across the grass
 But my quick eyes will see Thee pass,
 Nor speak, however silently,
 But my hushed voice will answer Thee.
 I know the path that tells Thy way
 Through the cool eve of every day;
 God, I can push the grass apart
 And lay my finger on Thy heart!

The world stands out on either side
 No wider than the heart is wide;
 Above the world is stretched the sky,—
 No higher than the soul is high.
 The heart can push the sea and land
 Farther away on either hand;
 The soul can split the sky in two,
 And let the face of God shine through.
 But East and West will pinch the heart
 That cannot keep them pushed apart;
 And he whose soul is flat—the sky
 Will cave in on him by and by.

THE PEAR TREE

In this squalid, dirty dooryard,
 Where the chickens scratch and run,
 White, incredible, the pear tree
 Stands apart and takes the sun,
 Mindful of the eyes upon it,
 Vain of its new holiness,
 Like the waste-man's little daughter
 In her first communion dress

GOD'S WORLD

O world, I cannot hold thee close enough!
 Thy winds, thy wide gray skies!
 Thy mists that roll and rise!
 Thy woods, this autumn day, that ache and sag
 And all but cry with color! That gaunt crag
 To crush! To lift the lean of that black bluff!
 World, world, I cannot get thee close enough!

Long have I known a glory in it all,
 But never knew I this;
 'Here such a passion is
 As stretcheth me apart Lord, I do fear
 Thou'st made the world too beautiful this year.
 My soul is all but out of me,—let fall
 No burning leaf; prithee, let no bird call.

WILD SWANS

I looked in my heart while the wild swans went over;—
 And what did I see I had not seen before?
 Only a question less or a question more;
 Nothing to match the flight of wild birds flying.
 Tiresome heart, forever living and dying!
 House without air! I leave you and lock your door!
 Wild swans, come over the town, come over
 The town again, trailing your legs and crying!

THE POET AND HIS BOOK

Down, you mongrel, Death!
Back into your kennel!
I have stolen breath
In a stalk of fennel!
You shall scratch and you shall whine
Many a night, and you shall worry
Many a bone, before you bury
One sweet bone of mine!

When shall I be dead?
 When my flesh is withered,
 And above my head
 Yellow pollen gathered
 All the empty afternoon?
 When sweet lovers pause and wonder
 Who am I that lie thereunder,
 Hidden from the moon?

This my personal death?—
 That my lungs be failing

To inhale the breath
 Others are exhaling?
 This my subtle spirit's end?—
 Ah, when the thawed winter splashes
 Over these chance dust and ashes,
 Weep not me, my friend!

Me, by no means dead
 In that hour, but surely
 When this book, unread,
 Rots to earth obscurely,
 And no more to any breast,
 Close against the clamorous swelling
 Of the thing there is no telling,
 Are these pages pressed!

When this book is mold,
 And a book of many
 Waiting to be sold
 For a casual penny,
 In a little open case,
 In a street unclean and cluttered,

Where a heavy mud is spattered
From the passing drays,
Stranger, pause and look;
From the dust of ages
Lift this little book,
Turn the tattered pages,
Read me, do not let me die!
Search the fading letters, finding
Steadfast in the broken binding
All that once was I!

When these veins are weeds,
When these hollowed sockets
Watch the rooty seeds
Bursting down like rockets,
And surmise the spring again,
Or, remote in that black cupboard,
Watch the pink worms writhing upward
At the smell of rain,

Boys and girls that lie
Whispering in the hedges,
Do not let me die,
Mix me in your pledges;

Boys and girls that slowly walk
In the woods, and weep, and quarrel,
Staring past the pink wild laurel,
Mix me with your talk.

Do not let me die!
Farmers at your raking,
When the sun is high,
While the hay is making,
When, along the stubble strewn,
Withering on their stalks uneaten,
Strawberries turn dark and sweeten
In the lapse of noon;

Shepherds on the hills,
In the pastures, drowsing
To the tinkling bells
Of the brown sheep browsing;
Sailors crying through the storm;
Scholars at your study; hunters
Lost amid the whirling winter's
Whiteness uniform;

Men that long for sleep;
Men that wake and revel;—
If an old song leap
To your senses' level
At such moments, may it be
Sometimes, though a moment only,

Some forgotten, quaint and homely
Vehicle of me!

Women at your toil,
Women at your leisure
Till the kettle boil,
Snatch of me your pleasure,
Where the broom-straw marks the leaf;
Women quiet with your weeping
Lest you wake a workman sleeping,
Mix me with your grief!

Boys and girls that steal
From the shocking laughter
Of the old, to kneel
By a dripping rafter
Under the discolored eaves,
Out of trunks with hingeless covers
Lifting tales of saint and lovers,
Travelers, goblins, thieves,

Suns that shine by night,
Mountains made from valleys,—
Bear me to the light,
Flat upon your bellies
By the webby window lie,
Where the little flies are crawling,—
Read me, margin me with scrawling,
Do not let me die!

*Sexton, ply your spadel
In a shower of gravel
Stamp upon your spadel
Many a rose shall ravel,
Many a metal wreath shall rust
In the rain, and I go singing
Through the lots where you are flinging
Yellow clay on dust!*

SPRING

To what purpose, April, do you return again?
Beauty is not enough.
You can no longer quiet me with the redness
Of little leaves opening stickily.
I know what I know.
The sun is hot on my neck as I observe
The spikes of the crocus.
The smell of the earth is good.
It is apparent that there is no death.
But what does that signify?
Not only under ground are the brains of men
Eaten by maggots.

Life in itself
Is nothing,
An empty cup, a flight of uncarpeted stairs,
It is not enough that yearly, down this hill,
April
Comes like an idiot, babbling and strewing flowers.

P A S S E R M O R T U U S E S T

Death devours all lovely things;
Lesbia with her sparrow

Shares the darkness,—presently
Every bed is narrow.

Unremembered as old rain
Dries the sheer libation,
And the little petulant hand
Is an annotation.

After all, my erstwhile dear,
My no longer cherished,
Need we say it was not love,
Now that love has perished?

W H A T L I P S M Y L I P S H A V E K I S S E D

What lips my lips have kissed, and where, and why,
I have forgotten, and what arms have lain
Under my head till morning; but the rain
Is full of ghosts tonight, that tap and sigh
Upon the glass and listen for reply;
And in my heart there stirs a quiet pain
For unremembered lads that not again
Will turn to me at midnight with a cry.

Thus in the winter stands the lonely tree,
Nor knows what birds have vanished one by one,
Yet knows its boughs more silent than before:
I cannot say what loves have come and gone;
I only know that summer sang in me
A little while, that in me sings no more.

P I T Y M E N O T

Pity me not because the light of day
At close of day no longer walks the sky;
Pity me not for beauties passed away
From field and thicket as the year goes by;
Pity me not the waning of the moon,
Nor that the ebbing tide goes out to sea,
Nor that a man's desire is hushed so soon,
And you no longer look with love on me.

This have I known always: love is no more
Than the wide blossom which the wind assails;
Than the great tide that treads the shifting shore,
Strewing fresh wreckage gathered in the gales.
Pity me that the heart is slow to learn
What the swift mind beholds at every turn.

DEPARTURE

It's little I care what path I take,
 And where it leads it's little I care;
 But out of this house, lest my heart break,
 I must go, and off somewhere.

It's little I know what's in my heart,
 What's in my mind it's little I know,
 But there's that in me must up and start,
 And it's little I care where my feet go.

I wish I could walk for a day and a night,
 And find me at dawn in a desolate place
 With never the rut of a road in sight,
 Nor the roof of a house, nor the eyes of a face.

I wish I could walk till my blood should spout,
 And drop me, never to stir again,
 On a shore that is wide, for the tide is out,
 And the weedy rocks are bare to the rain.

But dump or dock, where the path I take Brings up, it's little enough I care;
 And it's little I'd mind the fuss they'll make,
 Huddled dead in a ditch somewhere.

*"Is something the matter, dear," she said,
 "That you sit at your work so silently?"
 "No, mother, no, 'twas a knot in my thread.
 There goes the kettle, I'll make the tea."*

I SHALL GO BACK

I shall go back again to the bleak shore
 And build a little shanty on the sand
 In such a way that the extremest band
 Of brittle seaweed will escape my door
 But by a yard or two, and nevermore
 Shall I return to take you by the hand;
 I shall be gone to what I understand
 And happier than I ever was before.

The love that stood a moment in your eyes,
 The words that lay a moment on your tongue,
 Are one with all that in a moment dies,
 A little under-said and over-sung;
 But I shall find the sullen rocks and skies Unchanged from what they were when I was young.

ELEGY

Let them bury your big eyes
 In the secret earth securely,
 Your thin fingers, and your fair,
 Soft, indefinite-colored hair,—
 All of these in some way, surely,
 From the secret earth shall rise.
 Not for these I sit and stare,
 Broken and bereft completely;
 Your young flesh that sat so neatly
 On your little bones will sweetly
 Blossom in the air.

But your voice,—never the rushing
 Of a river underground,
 Not the rising of the wind
 In the trees before the rain,

Not the woodcock's watery call,
 Not the note the white-throat utters,
 Not the feet of children pushing
 Yellow leaves along the gutters
 In the blue and bitter fall,
 Shall content my musing mind
 For the beauty of that sound
 That in no new way at all
 Ever will be heard again.

Sweetly through the sappy stalk
 Of the vigorous weed,

Holding all it held before,
 Cherished by the faithful sun,
 On and on eternally
 Shall your altered fluid run,
 Bud and bloom and go to seed;
 But your singing days are done;
 But the music of your talk
 Never shall the chemistry
 Of the secret earth restore.
 All your lovely words are spoken.
 Once the ivory box is broken,
 Beats the golden bird no more.

J U S T I C E D E N I E D I N M A S S A C H U S E T T S<sup>1</sup>

Let us abandon then our gardens and go home
 And sit in the sitting-room.
 Shall the larkspur blossom or the corn grow under this cloud?
 Sour to the fruitful seed
 Is the cold earth under this cloud,
 Fostering quack and weed, we have marched upon but cannot conquer;
 We have bent the blades of our hoes against the stalks of them.

Let us go home, and sit in the sitting-room.
 Not in our day
 Shall the cloud go over and the sun rise as before,
 Beneficent upon us
 Out of the glittering bay,
 And the warm winds be blown inward from the sea
 Moving the blades of corn
 With a peaceful sound.
 Forlorn, forlorn,
 Stands the blue hay-rack by the empty mow.
 And the petals drop to the ground,
 Leaving the tree unfruited.
 The sun that warmed our stooping backs and withered the weed uprooted—
 We shall not feel it again.
 We shall die in darkness, and be buried in the rain.

What from the splendid dead
 We have inherited—
 Furrows sweet to the grain, and the weed subdued—
 See now the slug and the mildew plunder.
 Evil does overwhelm
 The larkspur and the corn;
 We have seen them go under.

Let us sit here, sit still,
 Here in the sitting-room until we die;
 At the step of Death on the walk, rise and go;

<sup>1</sup> Written after the final decision in the Sacco-Vanzetti case.

Leaving to our children's children this beautiful doorway,
 And this elm,
 And a blighted earth to till
 With a broken hoe.

EUCLID ALONE HAS LOOKED ON BEAUTY BARE

Euclid alone has looked on Beauty bare.
 Let all who prate of Beauty hold their peace,
 And lay them prone upon the earth and cease
 To ponder on themselves, the while they stare
 At nothing, intricately drawn nowhere
 In shapes of shifting lineage; let geese
 Gabble and hiss, but heroes seek release
 From dusty bondage into luminous air.

O blinding hour, O holy, terrible day,
 When first the shaft into his vision shone
 Of light anatomized! Euchd alone
 Has looked on Beauty bare. Fortunate they
 Who, though once only and then but far away,
 Have heard her massive sandal set on stone.

ON HEARING A SYMPHONY OF BEETHOVEN

Sweet sounds, oh, beautiful music, do not cease!
 Reject me not into the world again.
 With you alone is excellence and peace,
 Mankind made plausible, his purpose plain.
 Enchanted in your air benign and shrewd,
 With limbs a-sprawl and empty faces pale,
 The spiteful and the stingy and the rude
 Sleep like the scullions in the fairy-tale.
 This moment is the best the world can give:
 The tranquil blossom on the tortured stem.
 Reject me not, sweet sounds! oh, let me live,
 Till Doom espy my towers and scatter them,
 A city spell-bound under the aging sun.
 Music my rampart, and my only one.

SONNET TO GATH

Country of hunchbacks!—where the strong, straight spine
 Jeered at by crooked children, makes his way
 Through by-streets at the kindest hour of day,
 Till he deplore his stature, and incline
 To measure manhood with a gibbous line;
 Till out of loneliness, being flawed with clay,
 He stoop into his neighbor's house and say,
 "Your roof is low for me—the fault is mine."

Dust in an urn long since, dispersed and dead
 Is great Apollo; and the happier he;
 Since who amongst you all would lift a head
 At a god's radiance on the mean door-tree,
 Saving to run and hide your dates and bread,
 And cluck your children in about your knee?

THE CAMEO

Forever over now, forever, forever gone
 That day. Clear and diminished like a scene
 Carven in cameo, the lighthouse, and the cove between
 The sandy cliffs, and the boat drawn up on the beach;
 And the long skirt of a lady innocent and young,
 Her hand resting on her bosom, her head hung;
 And the figure of a man in earnest speech.

Clear and diminished like a scene cut in cameo
 The lighthouse, and the boat on the beach, and the two shapes
 Of the woman and the man; lost like the lost day
 Are the words that passed, and the pain,—discarded, cut away
 From the stone, as from the memory the heat of the tears escapes.

O troubled forms, O early love unfortunate and hard,
 Time has estranged you into a jewel cold and pure;
 From the action of the waves and from the action of sorrow forever secure,
 White against a ruddy cliff you stand, chalcedony on sard.

OH, SLEEP FOREVER IN THE LATMIAN CAVE

Oh, sleep forever in the Latmian cave,
 Mortal Endymion, darling of the Moon!
 Her silver garments by the senseless wave
 Shouldered and dropped and on the shingle strewn,
 Her fluttering hand against her forehead pressed,
 Her scattered looks that trouble all the sky,
 Her rapid footsteps running down the west—
 Of all her altered state, oblivious lie!
 Whom earthen you, by deathless lips adored,
 Wild-eyed and stammering to the grasses thrust,
 And deep into her crystal body poured
 The hot and sorrowful sweetness of the dust:
 Whereof she wanders mad, being all unsit
 For mortal love, that might not die of it.

SEE WHERE CAPELLA WITH HER GOLDEN KIDS

See where Capella with her golden kids
 Grazes the slope between the east and north?
 Thus when the builders of the pyramids
 Flung down their tools at nightfall and poured forth

Homeward to supper and a poor man's bed,
 Shortening the road with friendly jest and slur,
 The risen She-Goat showing blue and red
 Climbed the clear dusk, and three stars followed her.
 Safe in their linen and their spices lie
 The kings of Egypt; even as long ago
 Under these constellations, with long eye
 And scented limbs they slept, and feared no foe.
 Their will was law; their will was not to die.
 And so they had their way; or nearly so.

THE RETURN

Earth does not understand her child,
 Who from the loud gregarious town
 Returns, depleted and defiled,
 To the still woods, to fling him down.

Earth cannot count the sons she bore:
 The wounded lynx, the wounded man
 Come trailing blood unto her door;
 She shelters both as best she can.

But she is early up and out,
 To trim the year or strip its bones;
 She has no time to stand about
 Talking of him in undertones

Who has no aim but to forget,
 Be left in peace, be lying thus
 For days, for years, for centuries yet,
 Unshaven and anonymous;

Who, marked for failure, dulled by grief,
 Has traded in his wife and friend
 For this warm ledge, this alder leaf:
 Comfort that does not comprehend.

Maxwell Bodenheim

MAXWELL BODENHEIM was born at Natchez, Mississippi, May 26, 1892. His education, with the exception of grammar school training, was achieved under the guidance of the U. S. Army, in which he served an enlistment of three years, beginning in 1910. For a while he studied law and art in Chicago, but his mind turned to literature. In 1918 his first volume appeared and even those who were puzzled or repelled by Bodenheim's complex idiom were forced to recognize its individuality.

Minna and Myself (1918) reveals, first of all, this poet's sensitivity to words. Words, under his hands, have unexpected growths; placid nouns and sober adjectives bear fantastic fruit. Sometimes he packs his metaphors so close that they become inextricably confused. Sometimes he spins his fantasies so thin that the cord of coherence snaps and the poem frays into unpatterned ravelings.

In Advice (1920) Bodenheim's manner—and his mannerisms—are intensified. There is scarcely a phrase that is not tricked out with more ornaments than it can bear; whole poems sink beneath the weight of profuse decorations, although there is evidence of the ironic imagination which dominates his subsequent work.

Introducing Irony (1922) and Against This Age (1923) allow the sardonic impulse to dictate its harshest accents. The communication is more involved than ever: the expression of an acrobatic mind that juggles a dozen mixed metaphors, balancing itself meanwhile upon the knives of emotion with a mordant grimace. The Sardonic Aim (1923) shows an author acrid, grotesque, verbally dandified—but seldom unintelligible. Even when Bodenheim writes in the spirit of resentment self-confessed in Against This Age, he has something to say which the reader, provoked though he may be by the author's supercilious disdain, might listen to with profit. It is, nevertheless, still true that Bodenheim too often writes in the rôle of literary ring-master, cracking his savage whip over cowering adjectives and recalcitrant adverbs, compelling them to leap in unwilling pairs over the fantastically piled barriers of his imagination.

In The King of Spain and Other Poems (1928) Bodenheim continues to exercise his invectives. Yet, in spite of the egotism of the notes which precede and follow many of the poems, the work is sharp and unhackneyed. It is obvious that no such language has ever been spoken as the conversation detailed in his volumes; not his characters but the author himself does all the talking; and it is he, a breathlessly sardonic euphuist, who leaps desperately from one image to another. But the images themselves are glittering, and in the realm of the whimsical-grotesque, Bodenheim's footing is sure; his is a nimble if disturbing transilience.

An effort to please popular taste, Bringing Jazz (1930), lived up neither to its title nor to its author's reputation for the unusual.

Bodenheim is also the author of several novels, Crazy Man (1924), Replenishing Jessica (1925), and Sixty Seconds (1929) being the most successful as well as the most self-revealing.

POET TO HIS LOVE

An old silver church in a forest
 Is my love for you.
 The trees around it
     Are words that I have stolen from your heart.
 An old silver bell, the last smile you gave,
     Hangs at the top of my church.
 It rings only when you come through the forest
     And stand beside it.
 And then it has no need for ringing,
     For your voice takes its place.

OLD AGE

In me is a little painted square
 Bordered by old shops with gaudy awnings.
 And before the shops sit smoking, open-bloused old men,
 Drinking sunlight.
 The old men are my thoughts;
 And I come to them each evening, in a creaking cart,
 And quietly unload supplies.
 We fill slim pipes and chat
 And inhale scents from pale flowers in the center of the square. . . .
 Strong men, tinkling women, and dripping, squealing children
 Stroll past us, or into the shops.
 They greet the shopkeepers and touch their hats or foreheads to me. . . .
 Some evening I shall not return to my people.

DEATH

I shall walk down the road;
 I shall turn and feel upon my feet
 The kisses of Death, like scented rain.
 For Death is a black slave with little silver birds
 Perched in a sleeping wreath upon his head.
 He will tell me, his voice like jewels
 Dropped into a satin bag,
 How he has tip-toed after me down the road,
 His heart made a dark whirlpool with longing for me.
 Then he will graze me with his hands,
 And I shall be one of the sleeping, silver birds
 Between the cold waves of his hair, as he tip-toes on.

HILL-SIDE TREE

Like a drowsy, rain-browned saint,
 You squat, and sometimes your voice,
 In which the wind takes no part,
 Is like mists of music wedding each other.
 A drunken, odor-laced peddler is the morning wind.
 He brings you golden-scarfed cities
 Whose voices are swirls of bells burdened with summer;
 And maidens whose hearts are galloping princes.
 And you raise your branches to the sky,
 With a whisper that holds the smile you cannot shape.

FACTORY GIRL

Why are your eyes like dry brown flower-pods,
 Still, gripped by the memory of lost petals?
 I feel that if I touched them
 They would crumble to falling brown dust

And you would stand with blindness revealed.
 Yet you would not shrink, for your life
 Has been long since memorized,
 And eyes would only melt out against its high walls.
 Besides, in the making of boxes
 Sprinkled with crude forget-me-nots,
 One is curiously blessed if one's eyes are dead.

ADVICE TO A BLUE-BIRD

Who can make a delicate adventure
 Of walking on the ground?
 Who can make grass-blades
 Arcades for pertly careless straying?
 You alone, who skim against these leaves,
 Turning all desire into light whips
 Molded by your deep blue wing-tips,
 You who shrill your unconcern
 Into the sternly antique sky.
 You to whom all things
 Hold an equal kiss of touch.

Mincing, wanton blue-bird,
 Grimace at the hoofs of passing men.
 You alone can lose yourself
 Within a sky, and rob it of its blue!

Archibald MacLeish

ARCHIBALD MAC LEISH was born in Glencoe, northern Illinois, May 7, 1892. The son of a Scotch merchant and a Connecticut clergyman's daughter, he spent his boyhood on the lake shore, was educated in the public schools of his native town, a Connecticut preparatory school, Yale University, and Harvard Law School. He served in the Field Artillery in France during the War, became a lawyer in Boston and gave up the practice of law for literature, living in the Berkshires during the summer and in Paris during the winter. After his return to America, he spent most of the year in New York, where he became one of the editors of Fortune.

MacLeish's first volume, Tower of Ivory (1917), gave few hints of the original talent that was revealed in The Happy Marriage (1924), The Pot of Earth (1925) and the curious Nobodaddy (1925). There are influences apparent in all of these. The Happy Marriage owes not a little to Conrad Aiken and E. A. Robinson; The Pot of Earth relies on T. S. Eliot's structure as well as his free use of dissonance and peculiar juxtapositions. But MacLeish has something to say which is quite his own, something about man's uncertain place in the Unknown and, in these volumes, he is learning how to say it.

In Streets in the Moon (1926) the complete poet emerges. Here his subject-matter, conceived in amplitude, conveys an unusual "sense of infinity." But it is his idiom even more than his theme which makes MacLeish an important modern poet. He can, by the skillful use of repetition, achieve new effects in harmony, he can prompt a new beat in even so old a form as the sonnet, vide "The End of the World." "Ars Poetica" is more than an extension of poetic language; beneath its successful experiments in timing, interior rhyme and suspension, it says a number of pointed and profound things which have nothing to do with timeliness and changing tastes. The tone of these verses may be as new as this generation; the spirit which moves beneath them is as old as the sung phrase and the unspoken word.

The Hamlet of A. MacLeish (1928) is clearer in pattern and suppler in power than any of his other long poems. Its blemishes are those of confirmed modernity. Speaking of its author, Conrad Aiken says, "He is a kind of slave of tradition, with the difference that the traditions which enslave him are contemporary ones." MacLeish has not completely thrown off the influence of Eliot and various modern French poets, but his conceptions are so much his own that no one could mistake the originality of his design. In The Hamlet of A. MacLeish, the poet has plunged deeper into himself. The half-conscious breaks through; remote associations, shifting allusions, disordered griefs, phantasms, fag-ends of memories float up. By overtone and undercurrent, the reader is led to identify himself—as the author has done—with the eternal Hamlet, that conglomeration of lover, poet, procrastinator, ranter, doer, and doubter.

New Found Land (1930) contains only fourteen poems, yet some of MacLeish's richest verses are in this small book. The mood is elegiac, but the melancholy is provocative rather than lulling. The perceptions are unusually keen, the images highly charged, and the tone throughout is not only uplifted but noble. Some of MacLeish's critics made much of his nostalgia for the past, forgetting that no poet (no person, in fact) is free of it, and what distinguishes the poet is not his subject-matter but the way in which he employs his material. No one could question the distinction of "You, Andrew Marvell," that beautiful and uncanny exercise in suspension, one of the finest poems of the period, "Immortal Autumn," with its classical overtones, "Epistle to be Left in the Earth," and others. In these poems—as in "Memorial Rain," which says more about War than any poetry since Owen's and Sassoon's—the style is elliptical but the figures are concrete; without strain or exaggeration MacLeish uses ordinary language to suggest extraordinary sensations and abstractions. Here, too, MacLeish is shown to be one of the most resourceful technicians of an experimental age; he employs all the approved forms and invents several of his own; extends the gamut of rhyme through dissonance and consonance to half-rhyme ("thin-continues," "sun-running," "dish-official," "star-harbor," etc.), rhyming consonants and unrhyming vowels ("lake-like," "vine-vane," "west-waste," etc.), and concealed internal rhyme.

Conquistador (1932) employs these effects on a wider scale for a larger purpose. Certain reviewers referred to the poem as being "loosely ductile" and "unrhymed." Conquistador happens to be highly formal, the form being nothing "looser" than terza rima. The rhyming trios, however, are unorthodox since MacLeish varies full rhyme with assonance ("market-carpenter-arsenal," "things-wind-insolent," etc.) and suspension. But it is not only in technique that Conquistador displays the poet's maturity; in accent and spirit it is a rich fulfillment of MacLeish's gifts. Richness of color, extension of musical devices, and a mastery of the long breath combine to produce the most accomplished saga-poem of the generation. Founded on Bernal Diaz's True History of the Conquest of New Spain and influenced by the accent of Pound's Cantos, especially Canto I, the narrative proceeds from one vivid detail to another. Sometimes the tale is disrupted as the aged narrator confuses time and events; yet even here the poem gains in movement, like the swift progression of a dream. Everything contributes to the vitality of this movement, most of all MacLeish's vocabulary. Conquistador, in spite of being cast in the key of reminiscence, is a record of life in action; and this parade of fighting and feasting, of blood, song, and quick surrenders is tuned to words that live and leap no less actively. No modern writer has used the device of Anglo-Saxon alliteration so well as MacLeish; we have to go back to The Seafarer to find narration so stripped in phrase, so speeded. The poem as a whole is a triumph in sonority and sustained power. It was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1933.

Poems 1924-1933 contains several new poems besides the best of those previously published, further experiments in stylistic subtlety. Panic (1935) is a play in flexible verse, which caused no little controversy when it was produced in New York. Neither the reactionaries nor the revolutionists were cheered by it, for MacLeish refused to join either camp, but none could dispute the eloquence of the mass choruses, the drive behind the dissolving scenes, and the universality of the passion which marked Panic as a significant revival of the poetic drama.

Public Speech (1936) includes twenty poems, about half of which are (as the title implies) tracts for the times. The poet has come a long way from the time when he announced that

A poem should not mean
But be.

Public Speech is definitely a poetry of meanings, even of convictions. No longer a modern Hamlet seeking to escape his situation, MacLeish participates in the problems of the present, he now declares that men are "brothers by life lived and are hurt for it." His style gathers strength. The delicacy is supported by dignity; the movement is vigorous without snapping its biceps. "Speech to a Crowd" and "The Reconciliation" are widely separated in subject matter but are united by a tone which is colloquial yet allusive.

Two verse plays for radio prove that MacLeish the poet is not only a wiser person than MacLeish the theorist, but a much more stimulating writer. The Fall of the City (1937) is a drama primarily for the ear rather than for the eye. The action takes place in the central plaza of a great city. Portents are in the air; a dead woman appears and prophesies. She tells them, not knowing what the words mean, that masterless men will take a master. The crowd is puzzled and fearful. A messenger appears warning the city that a ruthless conqueror is upon them. Orators, priests, and generals harangue the crowd, increasing uncertainty and inaction. Finally the conqueror appears; he comes out of the shadows and takes command. His visor opens, and the Announcer tells the listeners that there is no one in the armor; the metal is only a shell, absolutely empty; "the push of a stiff pole at the nipple would topple it." But the people lie on the ground. They do not or will not see. They shout as though they had won a victory; masterless men have found a master. The city falls.

The effectiveness of The Fall of the City is increased by the poet's recognition of the resources of radio and his employment of the Announcer as a combination of Greek Chorus and casual commentator. Air Raid (1938) is a worthy successor to the first poetry play written for the radio-spoken word. The Fall of the City is an allegory in terms of action; Air Raid is a prolonged action in terms of the morning headlines. MacLeish's favorite device, the employment of almost unbearable tension, is used here to remarkable effect.

In 1937 MacLeish collaborated with Ernest Hemingway, Lillian Hellman, and Joris Ivens on the film The Spanish Earth. During the year 1938 he was custodian of the Nieman Collection of Journalism at Harvard. In 1939 he was appointed Librarian of Congress. His work continued to increase in social consciousness. Land of the Free (1938) combines pictures and verse in a way that is experimental and dialectical: photographs of farmers, share-croppers, migrants, and other underprivileged Americans appear on the right-hand pages, while on the opposite pages MacLeish has furnished a text that is a cross between a running poem and a "sound track."

In 1941 MacLeish simultaneously published two volumes of essays: A Time to Speak, the burden of which is the importance of the poet's role in a world of social change, and The American Cause, which is an eloquent statement of the case for democracy. "Democracy," says MacLeish, "is never a thing done. Democracy is always something that a nation must be doing. . . . Democracy itself is neither things, nor goods, nor fatness and indifference and an empty heart, but winter on the Massachusetts Bay and the cold at Trenton and the gun-fire in Kentucky and the hungry ground."

In spite of his achievements in technique, it is neither the novel form nor the phrase-making which distinguishes MacLeish. It is the discipline which he imposes on the flow of suggestions, on the very chaos of the unconscious, it is the rapid—and sometimes too immediate—employment of material almost too fluent to fix, which has made him one of the most debated poets of the period.

ARS POETICA

A poem should be palpable and mute
As a globed fruit

Dumb
As old medallions to the thumb

Silent as the sleeve-worn stone
Of casement ledges where the moss has grown—

A poem should be wordless
As the flight of birds

A poem should be motionless in time
As the moon climbs

Leaving, as the moon releases
Twig by twig the night-entangled trees,

Leaving, as the moon behind the winter leaves,
Memory by memory the mind—

A poem should be motionless in time
As the moon climbs

A poem should be equal to:
Not true

For all the history of grief
An empty doorway and a maple leaf

For love
The leaning grasses and two lights above the sea—

A poem should not mean
But be.

PROLOGUE

These alternate nights and days, these seasons
Somehow fail to convince me. It seems
I have the sense of infinity!

(In your dreams, O crew of Columbus,
O listeners over the sea
For the surf that breaks upon Nothing—)

Once I was waked by nightingales in the garden.

I thought, What time is it? I thought,
Time—Is it Time still?—Now is it Time?

(Tell me your dreams, O sailors:
Tell me, in sleep did you climb
The tall masts, and before you—)

At night the stillness of old trees
Is a leaning over, and the inertness
Of hills is a kind of waiting.

(In sleep, in a dream, did you see
The world's end? Did the water Break—and no shore—Did you see?)

Strange faces come through the streets to me
Like messengers; and I have been warned
By the moving slowly of hands at a window.

O, I have the sense of infinity—
But the world, sailors, is round.
They say there is no end to it.

IN MY THIRTIETH YEAR

And I have come upon this place
By lost ways, by a nod, by words,
By faces, by the old man's face
At Morlaix lifted to the birds,

By hands upon the tablecloth
At Aldebori's, by the thin
Child's hands that opened to the moth
And let the flutter of the moonlight in,

By hands, by voices, by the voice
Of Mrs. Husman on the stair,
By Margaret's "If we had the choice
To choose or not—" through her thick hair,

By voices, by the creak and fall
Of footsteps on the upper floor,
By silence waiting in the hall
Between the door-bell and the door,

By words, by voices, a lost way—
And here above the chimney stack
The unknown constellations sway—
And by what way shall I go back?

MEMORIAL RAIN

Ambassador Puser the ambassador
Reminds himself in French, felicitous tongue,
What these (young men no longer) lie here for
In rows that once, and somewhere else, were young—

All night in Brussels the wind had tugged at my door:
I had heard the wind at my door and the trees strung
Taut, and to me who had never been before
In that country it was a strange wind blowing

Steadily, stiffening the walls, the floor,
 The roof of my room. I had not slept for knowing
 He too, dead, was a stranger in that land
 And felt beneath the earth in the wind's flowing
 A tightening of roots and would not understand,
 Remembering lake winds in Illinois,
 That strange wind. I had felt his bones in the sand Listening.

—Reflects that these enjoy
 Their country's gratitude, that deep repose,
 That peace no pain can break, no hurt destroy,
 That rest, that sleep—

At Ghent the wind rose.
 There was a smell of rain and a heavy drag
 Of wind in the hedges but not as the wind blows
 Over fresh water when the waves lag
 Foaming and the willows huddle and it will rain:
 I felt him waiting.

—Indicates the flag
 Which (may he say) ensiles in Flanders' plain
 This little field these happy, happy dead
 Have made America—

In the ripe grain
 The wind coiled glistening, darted, fled,
 Dragging its heavy body: at Waereghem
 The wind coiled in the grass above his head:
 Waiting—listening—

—Dedicates to them
 This earth their bones have hallowed, this last gift
 A grateful country—

Under the dry grass stem
 The words are blurred, are thickened, the words sift
 Confused by the rasp of the wind, by the thin grating
 Of ants under the grass, the minute shift
 And tumble of dusty sand separating
 From dusty sand. The roots of the grass strain,
 Tighten, the earth is rigid, waits—he is waiting—

And suddenly, and all at once, the rain!

The people scatter, they run into houses, the wind
 Is trampled under the rain, shakes free, is again
 Trampled. The rain gathers, running in thinned
 Spurts of water that ravel in the dry sand
 Seeping into the sand under the grass roots, seeping
 Between cracked boards to the bones of a clenched hand:
 The earth relaxes, loosens; he is sleeping,
 He rests, he is quiet, he sleeps in a strange land.

WEATHER

The northeast wind was the wind off the lake
 Blowing the oak leaves pale side out like
 Aspen: blowing the sound of the surf far
 Inland over the fences: blowing for Miles over smell of earth the alien
 Lake smell.

The southwest wind was thunder on
 Afternoon: you saw the wind first in the vine
 Over the side porch and the weather vane
 Whirled on the barn and the doors slammed all together.
 After the rain in the grass we used to gather
 Wind-fallen cold white apples.

The west

Wind was the August wind, the wind over waste
 Valleys over the waterless plains where still
 Were skulls of buffalo, where in the sand stale
 Dung lay of wild cattle. The west wind blew
 Day after day as the winds on the plains blow
 Burning the grass, turning the leaves brown, filling
 Noon with the bronze of cicadas, far out falling
 Dark on the colorless water, the lake where not Waves were nor movement.

The north wind was at night

When no leaves and the husk on the oak stirs
 Only nor birds then. The north wind was stars
 Over the whole sky and snow in the ways
 And snow on the sand where in summer the water was . . .
 North here is the sea and westward the sea
 And south the Tyrrhenian sea where the hills saw
 Once the long oars and the helmsman. But here to me
 The winds blow as always they blew in my Country,

the winds blow out of Illinois,
 Out of Missouri, out of Michigan. I know
 The northeast wind: I know how the trees look—
 The northeast wind is the wind over the lake
 Blowing the oak leaves pale side out. . . .

IMMORTAL AUTUMN

I speak this poem now with grave and level voice
 In praise of autumn of the far-horn-winding fall
 I praise the flower-barren fields the clouds the tall
 Unanswering branches where the wind makes sullen noise

I praise the fall it is the human season now
 No more the foreign sun does meddle at our earth
 Enforce the green and thaw the frozen soil to birth
 Nor winter yet weigh all with silence the pine bough

But now in autumn with the black and outcast crows
 Share we the spacious world the whispering year is gone
 There is more room to live now the once secret dawn
 Comes late by daylight and the dark unguarded goes

Between the mutinous brave burning of the leaves
 And winter's covering of our hearts with his deep snow
 We are alone there are no evening birds we know
 The naked moon the tame stars circle at our eaves

It is the human season on this sterile air
 Do words outrun breath the sound goes on and on
 I hear a dead man's cry from autumn long since gone

I cry to you beyond this bitter air.

YOU, ANDREW MARVELL

And here face down beneath the sun
 And here upon earth's noonward height
 To feel the always coming on
 The always rising of the night

To feel creep up the curving east
 The earthly chill of dusk and slow
 Upon those under lands the vast
 And ever-climbing shadow grow

And strange at Ecbatan the trees
 Take leaf by leaf the evening strange
 The flooding dark about their knees
 The mountains over Persia change

And now at Kermanshah the gate
 Dark empty and the withered grass
 And through the twilight now the late
 Few travelers in the westward pass

And Baghdad darken and the bridge
 Across the silent river gone

And through Arabia the edge
 Of evening widen and steal on

And deepen on Palmyra's street
 The wheel rut in the ruined stone
 And Lebanon fade out and Crete
 High through the clouds and overblown

And over Sicily the air
 Still flashing with the landward gulls
 And loom and slowly disappear
 The sails above the shadowy hulls

And Spain go under and the shore
 Of Africa the gilded sand
 And evening vanish and no more
 The low pale light across that land

Nor now the long light on the sea—

And here face downward in the sun
 To feel how swift how secretly
 The shadow of the night comes on . . .

THE END OF THE WORLD

Quite unexpectedly as Vasserot
 The armless ambidextrian was lighting
 A match between his great and second toe
 And Ralph the lion was engaged in biting
 The neck of Madame Sosman while the drum
 Pointed, and Teeny was about to cough
 In waltz-time swinging Jocko by the thumb—
 Quite unexpectedly the top blew off:

And there, there overhead, there, there, hung over
 Those thousands of white faces, those dazed eyes,
 There in the starless dark, the poise, the hover,
 There with vast wings across the canceled skies,
 There in the sudden blackness, the black pall
 Of nothing, nothing, nothing—nothing at all.

THE TOO-LATE BORN

We too, we too, descending once again
 The hills of our own land, we too have heard
 Far off— Ah, que ce cor a longue haleine—
 The horn of Roland in the passages of Spain,
 The first, the second blast, the sailing third,
 And with the third turned back and climbed once more
 The steep road southward, and heard faint the sound
 Of swords, of horses, the disastrous war,
 And crossed the dark defile at last, and found
 At Roncevaux upon the darkening plain
 The dead against the dead and on the silent ground
 The silent slain—

EPISTLE TO BE LEFT IN THE EARTH

. . . It is colder now there are many stars
                                 we are drifting
 North by the Great Bear
                                 the leaves are falling
 The water is stone in the scooped rocks to southward
 Red sun gray air
                                 the crows are Slow on their crooked wings
                                 the jays have left us
 Long since we passed the flares of Orion
 Each man believes in his heart he will die
 Many have written last thoughts and last letters
 None know if our deaths are now or forever
 None know if this wandering earth will be found

We lie down and the snow covers our garments
 I pray you
                                 you (if any open this writing)
 Make in your mouths the words that were our names
 I will tell you all we have learned
                                 I will tell you everything
 The earth is round
                                 there are springs under the orchards
 The loam cuts with a blunt knife
                                 beware of

Elms in thunder

the lights in the sky are stars

We think they do not see

we think also

The trees do not know nor the leaves of the grasses

hear us

The birds too are ignorant

Do not listen

Do not stand at dark in the open windows

We before you have heard this they are voices

They are not words at all but the wind rising

Also none among us has seen God

(. . . We have thought often

The flaws of sun in the late and driving weather

Pointed to one tree but it was not so)

As for the nights I warn you the nights are dangerous

The wind changes at night and the dreams come

It is very cold

there are strange stars near Arcturus

Voices are crying an unknown name in the sky

BURYING GROUND BY THE TIES

(from "Frescoes for Mr. Rockefeller's City")

Ayee! Ai! This is heavy earth on our shoulders:
There were none of us born to be buried in this earth:
Niggers we were Portuguese Magyars Polacks:

We were born to another look of the sky certainly:
Now we lie here in the river pastures:
We lie in the mowings under the thick turf:

We hear the earth and the all-day rasp of the grasshoppers:
It was we laid the steel on this land from ocean to ocean:
It was we (if you know) put the U. P. through the passes

Bringing her down into Laramie full load
Eighteen mile on the granite anticinal
Forty-three foot to the mile and the grade holding:

It was we did it: hunkies of our kind:
It was we dug the caved-in holes for the cold water:
It was we built the gully spurs and the freight sidings:

Who would do it but we and the Irishmen bossing us?
It was all foreign-born men there were in this country:
It was Scotsmen Englishmen Chinese Squareheads Austrians . . .

Ayee! but there's weight to the earth under it:
 Not for this did we come out—to be lying here
 Nameless under the ties in the clay cuts:

There's nothing good in the world but the rich will buy it:
 Everything sticks to the grease of a gold note—
 Even a continent—even a new sky!

Do not pity us much for the strange grass over us:
 We laid the steel to the stone stock of these mountains:
 The place of our graves is marked by the telegraph poles!

It was not to lie in the bottoms we came out
 And the trains going over us here in the dry hollows . . .

P A N I C

(from "Panic")

A N O L D M A N

Slowly the thing comes.
 There are many signs: there are furnaces
 Dead now that were burning
 Thirty years in a town—
 Never dark: there are foundries—
 Fires drawn: trestles
 Silent. The swifts nest in Stacks that for generations
 Flowed smoke. The patience of Hawks is over the cities:
 They circle in clean light where the Smoke last year frightened them.

A W O M A N

The gears turn: twitter: are Still now. The sound dies.
 From the east with the sun's rising
 Daily are fewer whistles:
 Many mornings listening
 One less or two.

A Y O U N G M A N

The thing comes pursuing us
 Creeping as death creeps in an Old man: as sleep comes:
 Leaving on one hill—
 On the stand—the stalks silver—
 Corn rotted in ear:
 Leaving on land nearest us
 Wagons abandoned: milk cows
 Slaughtered for no sickness:
 Rigs rusting at pit-heads:

Pumps frozen: switches
 Green with the rain: the oil
 Thickened: scale in boilers—
 Good gear all of it:
 Sound metal: faultless:
 Idle now: never manned.

A G I R L

Men in the dusk—and they stand there
 Letting the girls go by with the Sweet scent: silent:
 Leaning heavily: bent to the Painted signs on the fences—
 They that in other times
 Calling after us climbed by the Steep stair for the sight of a
 Girl's knee delighting her.

A M A N

From what ill and what enemy
 Armless shall we defend the
 Evening—the night hours?

A M A N

No eyes of ours have Ever knowing beheld it.
 It comes not with the bells
 Arousing towns: racing with Smoke—with the wind's haste—
 The tallest houses toppled.

A M A N

Comes not from the hospitals—
 Odor of scattered lime—
 Night burials climbing the Empty streets by the markets.

A MAN

Not with the shot: with the barking of Dogs before color of dawn—
The whistle over the lawn—the Running footfalls stumbling.

A WOMAN

Nevertheless it comes.
Men die: houses
Fall among kitchen flowers.
Families scatter. Children
Wander the roads building of Broken boxes shelter.
A land of great wealth and the Old hungry: the young
Starving—but not with hunger.
None have beheld this enemy.
What arms can defend the
Evening—the night hours—
When fear: faceless: devours us?

A WOMAN

Blight—not on the grain!
Drouth—not in the springs!
Rot—not from the rain!

A MAN

What shadow hidden or
Unseen hand in our midst
Ceaselessly touches our faces?

FINAL CHORUS

(from "Panic")

AN OLD WOMAN (exultantly)

Bellies bitter with drinking the Weak tears do you fear the Fall of the walls and the sky
High over you shining there?

A MAN (exultantly)

Mouths bitter with hate and the Aching of tears have you tasted the
New water that springs in the Hollow of thirst in your fingers?

A MAN (exultantly)

Eyes blind with the sleet and the Freezing of night have you seen how the Wind's in the rising East and the Mountains of morning increasing?

A WOMAN

The roof's fallen! The sun
Stands on the sky with his wonder.

A WOMAN

The wind—the wind's in the house!

A WOMAN

The walls open arousing us!

A MAN

Wildly as swollen river the Dark will of the world
Flooded on rock rushes
Raving—bearing the brush down:
Breaking from ancient banks.
Cities are buried. The man
Drowns in his door who opposes it.

VOICES

Follow!

Give!

Go with the
Rushing of time in us!

Make of the

Silence of fate a trumpet!
Make of the time a drum!

March!

Shout!

A MAN

Run with the Marching men: with the thunder of Thousand heels on the earth—
Making of mortal burden a Banner to shout and to break in the Blazing of sunlight and shaken therel

VOICES

Take it!

Be taken!

The trumpet of
Time in our ears and the brazen and
Breaking shout of our days!

MANY VOICES

Man's fate is a drum!

THE RECONCILIATION

Time like the repetitions of a child's piano
 Brings me the room again the shallow lamp the love
 The night the silence the slow bell the echoed answer.

By no thing here or lacking can the eyes discover
 The hundred winter evenings that have gone between Nor know for sure the night is this and not that other.

The room is here the lamp is here: the mirror's leaning
 Searches the same deep shadow where her knees were caught:
 All these are here within the room as I have seen them.

Time has restored them all as in that rainy autumn:
 Even the echoes of that night return to this—
 All as they were when first the earthy evening brought them.

Between this night and that there is no human distance:
 There is no space an arm could not out-reach by much—
 And yet the stars most far apart are not more distant.

Between my hand that touched and her soft breast that touches
 The irremediable past as steep as tone:
 Wider than water: like all land and ocean stretches:

We touch and by that touching farness are alone.

SPEECH TO A CROWD

Tell me, my patient friends—awaiters of messages—
 From what other shore: from what stranger.
 Whence was the word to come? Who was to lesson you?

Listeners under a child's crib in a manger—
 Listeners once by the oracles: now by the transoms—
 Whom are you waiting for? Who do you think will explain?

Listeners thousands of years and still no answer—
 Writers at night to Miss Lonely-Hearts: awkward spellers—
 Open your eyes! There is only earth and the man!

There is only you: there is no one else on the telephone:
 No one else is on the air to whisper:
 No one else but you will push the bell.

No one knows if you don't: neither ships
 Nor landing-fields decode the dark between:
 You have your eyes and what your eyes see is.

The earth you see is really the earth you are seeing:
 The sun is truly excellent, truly warm:
 Women are beautiful as you have seen them—

Their breasts (believe it) like cooing of doves in a portico:
 They bear at their breasts tenderness softly. Look at them!
 Look at yourselves. You are strong. You are well formed.

Look at the world—the world you never took!
 It is really true you may live in the world heedlessly:
 Why do you wait to read it in a book then?

Write it yourselves! Write to yourselves if you need to!
 Tell yourselves there is sun and the sun will rise:
 Tell yourselves the earth has food to feed you:—

Let the dead men say that men must die!
 Who better than you can know what death is?
 How can a bone or a broken body surmise it?

Let the dead shriek with their whispering breath:
 Laugh at them! Say the murdered gods may wake
 But we who work have end of work together:

Tell yourselves the earth is yours to take!

Waiting for messages out of the dark you were poor.
 The world was always yours: you will not take it.

LAND OF THE FREE

(Conclusion of the Sound Track)

We wonder whether the dream of American liberty
 Was two hundred years of pine and hardwood
 And three generations of the grass

And the generations are up: the years over

We don't know

It was two hundred years from the smell of the tidewater
 Up through the Piedmont: on through the piney woods:
 Till we came out
 With our led calves and our lean women
 In the oak openings of Illinois

It was three generations from the oak trees—
 From the islands of elm and the islands of oak in the prairie—
 Till we heeled out with our plows and our steel harrows
 On the grass-drowned reef bones of the Plains

“Four score and seven years” said the Orator

We remember it differently: we remember it
 Kansas: Illinois: Ohio: Connecticut.
 We remember it Council Bluffs: St. Louis:
 Wills Creek: the Cumberland: Shenandoah—

The long harangues of the grass in the wind are our histories

We tell our freedom backward by the land

We tell our past by the gravestones and the apple trees

We wonder whether the great American dream

Was the singing of locusts out of the grass to the west and the West is behind us now:

The west wind's away from us:

We wonder if the liberty is done:

The dreaming is finished

We can't say

We aren't sure

Or if there's something different men can dream

Or if there's something different men can mean by Liberty

Or if there's liberty a man can mean that's

Men: not land

We wonder

We don't know

We're asking

THE FALL OF THE CITY

A Verse Play for Radio

VOICE OF THE STUDIO DIRECTOR (orotund and professional)

Ladies and gentlemen:

This broadcast comes to you from the city

Listeners over the curving air have heard

From furthest-off frontiers of foreign hours—

Mountain Time: Ocean Time: of the islands:

Of waters after the islands—some of them waking

Where noon here is the night there: some

Where noon is the first few stars they see or the last one.

For three days the world has watched this city—

Not for the common occasions of brutal crime

Or the usual violence of one sort or another

Or coronations of kings or popular festivals:

No: for stranger and disturbing reasons—

The resurrection from death and the tomb of a dead woman.

Each day for three days there has come

To the door of her tomb at noon a woman buried!

The terror that stands at the shoulder of our time
 Touches the cheek with this: the flesh winces.
 There have been other omens in other cities
 But never of this sort and never so credible.

In a time like ours seemings and portents signify.
 Ours is a generation when dogs howl and the Skin crawls on the skull with its beast's foreboding.
 All men now alive with us have feared.
 We have smelled the wind in the street that changes weather.
 We have seen the familiar room grow unfamiliar:
 The order of numbers alter: the expectation
 Cheat the expectant eye. The appearance defaults with us.

Here in this city the wall of the time cracks.

We take you now to the great square of this city. . . .

(The shuffle and hum of a vast patient crowd gradually rises: swells' fills the background.)

VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER (matter-of-fact)

We are here on the central plaza.
 We are well off to the eastward edge.
 There is a kind of terrace over the crowd here.
 It is precisely four minutes to twelve.
 The crowd is enormous: there might be ten thousand:
 There might be more: the whole square is faces.
 Opposite over the roofs are the mountains.
 It is quite clear: there are birds circling.
 We think they are kites by the look: they are very high. . . .

The tomb is off to the right somewhere—
 We can't see for the great crowd.
 Close to us here are the cabinet ministers:
 They stand on a raised platform with awnings.
 The farmers' wives are squatting on the stones:
 Their children have fallen asleep on their shoulders.
 The heat is harsh: the light dazzles like metal.
 It dazes the air as the clang of a gong does. . . .

News travels in this nation:
 There are people here from away off—
 Horse-raisers out of the country with brooks in it:
 Herders of cattle from up where the snow stays—
 The kind that cook for themselves mostly:
 They look at the girls with their eyes hard
 And a hard grin and their teeth showing. . . .

It is one minute to twelve now:
 There is still no sign: they are still waiting:
 No one doubts that she will come:

No one doubts that she will speak too:
Three times she has not spoken.

(The murmur of the crowd changes—not louder but more intense: higher.)

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER (low but with increasing excitement)

Now it is twelve: now they are rising:
Now the whole plaza is rising;
Fathers are lifting their small children:
The plumed fans on the platform are motionless. . . .

There is no sound but the shuffle of shoe leather . . .

Now even the shoes are still. . . .

We can hear the hawks: it is quiet as that now. . . .

It is strange to see such throngs so silent. . . .

Nothing yet: nothing has happened. . . .

Wait! There's a stir here to the right of us:
They're turning their heads: the crowd turns:
The cabinet ministers lean from their balcony:
There's no sound: only the turning. . . .

(A woman's voice comes over the silence of the crowd: it is a weak voice but penetrating; it speaks slowly and as though with difficulty.)

THE VOICE OF THE DEAD WOMAN

First the waters rose with no wind. . . .

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER (whispering)

Listen: that is she! She's speaking!

THE VOICE OF THE DEAD WOMAN

Then the stones of the temple kindled
Without flame or tinder of maize-leaves. . . .

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER (whispering)

They see her beyond us: the crowd sees her. . . .

THE VOICE OF THE DEAD WOMAN

Then there were cries in the night haze:
Words in a once-heard tongue: the air
Rustling above us as at dawn with herons.

Now it is I who must bring fear:
 I who am four days dead: the tears
 Still unshed for me—all of them: I
 For whom a child still calls at nightfall.

Death is young in me to fear!
 My dress is kept still in the press in my bedchamber:
 No one has broken the dish of the dead woman.

Nevertheless I must speak painfully:
 I am to stand here in the sun and speak:

(There is a pause. Then her voice comes again loud, mechanical, speaking as by rote.)

The city of masterless men
 Will take a master.

There will be shouting then:
 Blood after!

(The crowd stirs. Her voice goes on weak and slow as before.)

Do not ask what it means: I do not know:
 Only sorrow and no hope for it.

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

She has gone. . . . No, they are still looking.

THE VOICE OF THE DEAD WOMAN

It is hard to return from the time past. I have come
 In the dream we must learn to dream where the crumbling of Time like the ash from a burnt string has Stopped for me. For you the thread still burns:
 You take the feathery ash upon your fingers.
 You bring yourselves from the time past as it pleases you.

It is hard to return to the old nearness . . .

Harder to go again. . . .

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

She is gone.

We know because the crowd is closing.
 All we can see is the crowd closing.
 We hear the releasing of held breath—
 The weight shifting: the lifting of shoe leather.
 The stillness is broken as surface of water is broken—
 The sound circling from in outward.

(The murmur of the crowd rises.)

Small wonder they feel fear.
Before the murders of the famous kings—
Before imperial cities burned and fell—
The dead were said to show themselves and speak.

When dead men came disaster came. Presentiments
That let the living on their beds sleep on Woke dead men out of death and gave them voices.
All ancient men in every nation knew this.

A VOICE OVER THE CROWD

Masterless men . . .

A VOICE OVER THE CROWD

When shall it be . . .

A VOICE OVER THE CROWD

Masterless men
Will take a master . . .

A VOICE OVER THE CROWD

What has she said to us . . .

A VOICE OVER THE CROWD

When shall it be . . .

A VOICE OVER THE CROWD

Masterless men
Will take a master.
Blood after . . .

A VOICE OVER THE CROWD

What has she said to us . . .

VOICES TOGETHER

Blood after!

(The voices run together into the excited roar of the crowd. The Announcer's voice is loud over it.)

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

They are milling around us like cattle that smell death.
The whole square is whirling and turning and shouting.
One of the ministers raises his arms on the platform.
No one is listening; now they are sounding drums:
Trying to quiet them likely: No! No!
Something is happening: there in the far corner:
A runner: a messenger: staggering: people are helping him:
People are calling: he comes through the crowd: they are quieter.
Only those on the far edge are still shouting:
Listen! He's here by the ministers now! He is speaking. . . .

THE VOICE OF THE MESSENGER

There has come the conqueror!
I am to tell you.
I have raced over sea land:
I have run over cane land:
I have climbed over cone land.
It was laid on my shoulders
By shall and by shan't
That standing by day
And staying by night
Were not for my lot
Till I came to the sight of you.
Now I have come.

Be warned of this conqueror!
This one is dangerous!
Word has out-oared him.
East over sea-cross has
All taken—
Every country.
No men are free there.
Ears overhear them.
Their words are their murderers.
Judged before judgment
Tried after trial
They die as do animals:—
Offer their throats
As the goat to her slaughterer.
Terror has taught them this!

Now he is here!

He was violent in his vessel:
He was steering in her stern:
He was watching in her waist:
He was peering in her prow:

And he dragged her up
 Nine lengths
 Till her keel lodged
 On this nation.

Now he is here
 Waylaying and night-lying.
 If they hide before dark
 He comes before sunup.
 Where hunger is eaten
 There he sits down:
 Where fear sleeps
 There he arises.

I tell you beware of him!
 All doors are dangers.
 The warders of wealth
 Will admit him by stealth.
 The lovers of men
 Will invite him as friend.
 The drinkers of blood
 Will drum him in suddenly.
 Hope will unlatch to him:
 Hopelessness open.

I say and say truly
 To all men in honesty
 Such is this conqueror!
 Shame is his people.
 Lickers of spittle
 Their lives are unspeakable:
 Their dying indecent.

Be well warned!
 He comes to you slightly
 Slanting and sprinting
 Hinting and shadowing:
 Sly is his hiding:—
 A hard lot:
 A late rider:

Watch! I have said to you!

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

They are leading him out: his legs give:
 Now he is gone in the crowd: they are silent:
 No one has spoken since his speaking:

They stand still circling the ministers.
 No one has spoken or called out:—
 There is no stir at all nor movement:

Even the farthest have stood patiently:
 They wait trusting the old men:
 They wait faithfully trusting the answer.
 Now the huddle on the platform opens:
 A minister turns to them raising his two arms. . . .

THE VOICE OF THE ORATOR

Freemen of this nation!
 The persuasion of your wills against your wisdom is not dreamed of.
 We offer themes for your consideration.

What is the surest defender of liberty?
 Is it not liberty?
 A free people resists by freedom:
 Not locks! Not blockhouses!

The future is a mirror where the past
 Marches to meet itself. Go armed toward arms!
 Peaceful toward peace! Free and with music toward freedom!
 Face tomorrow with knives and tomorrow's a knife-blade.
 Murder your foe and your foe will be murder!—
 Even your friends suspected of false-speaking:
 Hands on the door at night and the floor boards squeaking.

Those who win by the spear are the spear-toters.
 And what do they win? Spears! What else is there?
 If their hands let go they have nothing to hold by.
 They are no more free than a paralytic propped against a tree is.

With the armored man the arm is upheld by the weapon:
 The man is worn by the knife.

Once depend on iron for your freedom and your Freedom's iron!
 Once overcome your resisters with force and your Force will resist you!—
 You will never be free of force.
 Never of arms unarmed
 Will the father return home:
 The lover to her loved:
 The mature man to his fruit orchard
 Walking at peace in that beauty—
 The years of his trees to assure him.
 Force is a greater enemy than this conqueror—
 A treacherous weapon.

Nevertheless my friends there is a weapon!
 Weakness conquers!

Against chainlessness who breaks?
 Against wall-lessness who vaults?
 Against forcelessness who forces?

Against the feather of the thistle
Is blunted sharpest metal.
No edge cuts seed-fluff.

This conqueror unresisted
Will conquer no longer: a posturer
Beating his blows upon burdocks—
Shifting his guard against shadows.
Snickers will sound among road-menders:
Titters be stifled by laundresses:
Coarse guffaws among chambermaids.
Reddened with rage he will roar.
He will sweat in his uniform foolishly.
He will disappear, no one hear of him!

There is a weapon, my friends.
Scorn conquers!

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER (the Orator's voice unintelligible under it)

I wish you could all see this as we do—
The whole plaza full of these people—
Their colorful garments—the harsh sunlight—
The water-sellers swinging enormous gourds—
The orator there on the stone platform—
The temple behind him: the high pyramid—
The hawks overhead in the sky teetering
Slow to the windward; swift to the down-wind—
The houses blind with the blank sun on them. . . .

THE VOICE OF THE ORATOR

There is a weapon.
Reason and truth are that weapon.

Let this conqueror come!
Show him no hindrance!
Suffer his flag and his drum!
Words . . . win!

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

There's the shout now: he's done:
He's climbing down, a great speech:
They're all smiling and pressing around him:
The women are squatting in full sunlight:
They're opening packages: bread we'd say by the look—
Yes: bread, bread wrapped between corn leaves:
They're squatting to eat: they're quite contented and happy:
Women are calling their men from the sunny stones:
There are flutes sounding away off:

We can't see for the shifting and moving—
 Yes: there are flutes in the cool shadow:
 Children are dancing in intricate figures.

(A drum and flute are heard under the voice.)

Even a few old men are dancing.
 You'd say they'd never feared to see them dancing.
 A great speech! really great!
 Men forget these truths in passion:
 They oppose the oppressors with blind blows:
 They make of their towns tombs: of their roofs burials:
 They build memorial ruins to liberty:
 But liberty is not built from ruins:
 Only in peace is the work excellent. . . .

That's odd! The music has stopped. There's something—
 It's a man there on the far side: he's pointing:
 He seems to be pointing back through the farthest street:
 The people are twisting and rising: bread in their fists. . . .
 We can't see what it is. . . . Wait! . . . it's a messenger.
 It must be a messenger. Yes. It's a message—another.
 Here he is at the turn of the street trotting:
 His neck's back at the nape: he looks tired:
 He winds through the crowd with his mouth open: laboring:
 People are offering water he pushes away from them:
 Now he has come to the stone steps: to the ministers:
 Stand by: we're edging in. . . .

(There are sounds of people close by: coughs. murmur. The Announcer's voice is lowered.)

Listen: he's leaning on the stone: he's speaking.

THE VOICE OF THE MESSENGER

There has come . . . the Conqueror. . . .

I am to tell you . . .

I have run over corn land:
 I have climbed over cone land:
 I have crossed over mountains. . . .

It was laid on my shoulders
 By shall and by shan't
 That standing by day
 And staying by night
 Were not for my lot
 Till I came to the sight of you. . . .

Now I have come.

I bear word:
Beware of this conqueror!

The fame of his story
Like flame in the winter-grass
Widens before him.
Beached on our shore
With the dawn over shoulder
The lawns were still cold
When he came to the sheep meadows:—
Sun could not keep with him
So was he forward.
Fame is his sword.

No man opposing him
Still grows his glory.
He needs neither foeman nor Thickset of blows to Gather his victories—
Nor a soc's match
To earn him his battles.

He brings his own enemy!

He baggages with him
His closet antagonist—
His private opposer.
He's setting him up
At every road corner—
A figure of horror
With blood for his color:
Fist for his hand:
Reek where he stands:
Hate for his heat:
Sneers for his mouth:
Clouts for his clothes:
Oaths if he speak:—
And he's knocking him down
In every town square
Till hair's on his blade
And blood's all about
Like dust in a drouth
And the people are shouting
Flowers him flinging
Music him singing
And bringing him gold
And holding his heels
And feeling his thighs
Till their eyes start
And their hearts swell
And they're telling his praises
Like lays of the heroes
And chiefs of antiquity.

Such are his victories!
So does he come:
So he approaches. . . .

(A whisper rustles through the crowd.)

No man to conquer
Yet as a conqueror
Marches he forward. . . .

(The whisper is louder.)

Stands in your mountains. . . .

(A murmur of voices.)

Soon to descend on you!

(A swelling roar.)

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

That touched them! That frightened them!
Some of them point to the east hills:
Some of them mock at the ministers: 'Freedom!'
'Freedom for what? To die in a rat trap'
They're frantic with anger and plain fear.
They're sold out they say. You can hear them.
'Down with the government! Down with the orators!
'Down with liberal learned minds!
'Down with the mouths and the loose tongues in them!
'Down with the lazy lot! They've sold us!
'We're sold out! Talking has done for us!' . . .
They're boiling around us like mullet that smell shark.
We can't move for the mob: they're crazy with terror. . . .

A LOUD VOICE (distant)

God-lovers!
Think of your gods!

Earth-masters!
Taste your disasters!

Men!
Remember!

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

There's a voice over the crowd somewhere.
They hear it: they're quieting down. . . . It's the priests!
We see them now: it's the priests on the pyramid!
There might be ten of them: black with their hair tangled.
The smoke of their fire is flat in the quick wind:

They stand in the thick of the smoke by the stone of the victims:
 Their knives catch in the steep sun: they are shouting:
 Listen!—

VOICES OF THE PRIESTS

Turn to your gods rememberers!

A SINGLE VOICE

Let the world be saved by surrendering the world:
 Not otherwise shall it be saved.

VOICES OF THE PRIESTS

Turn to your gods rememberers!

A SINGLE VOICE

Let evil be overcome by the coming over of evil:
 Your hearts shall be elsewhere.

VOICES OF THE PRIESTS

Turn to your gods rememberers!

VOICES OF THE PRIESTS (antiphonally)

Turn to your gods!
 The conqueror cannot take you!

Turn to your gods!
 The narrow dark will keep you!

Turn to your gods!
 In god's house is no breaking!

Turn to your gods!
 In god's silences sleep is!

Lay up your will with the gods!
 Stones cannot still you!

Lay up your mind with the gods!
 Blade cannot blind you!

Lay up your heart with the gods!
 Danger departs from you!

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

It's a wonderful thing to see this crowd responding.
 Even the simplest citizens feel the emotion.
 There's hardly a sound now in the square. It's wonderful:
 Really impressive: the priests there on the pyramid:
 The smoke blowing: the bright sun: the faces—

A SINGLE VOICE

In the day of confusion of reason when all is delusion:
 In the day of the tyrants of tongues when the truth is for hire:
 In the day of deceit when ends meet:
 Turn to your gods!
 In the day of division of nations when hope is derision:
 In the day of the supping of hate when the soul is corrupted:
 In the day of despair when the heart's bare:
 Turn to your gods!

(A slow drum beat.)

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

A kind of dance is beginning: a serpent of people:
 A current of people coiling and curling through people:
 A circling of people through people like water through water. . . .

CHANTING VOICES (to the drums)

Out of the stir of the sun
 Out of the shout of the thunder
 Out of the hush of the star . . .
 Withdraw the heart.

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER (the chant and drums under)

A very young girl is leading them:
 They have torn the shawl from her bare breast:
 They are giving her flowers: her mouth laughs:
 Her eyes are not laughing. . . .

CHANTING VOICES

Leave now the lovely air
 To the sword and the sword-wearer—
 Leave to the marksman the mark—
 Withdraw the heart.

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER (the chant and drums louder)

She's coming . . . the drums pound . . . the crowd
 Shrieks . . . she's reaching the temple . . . she's climbing it. . . .
 Others are following: five: ten . . .
 Hundreds are following . . . crowding the stairway. . . .
 She's almost there . . . her flowers have fallen . . .
 She looks back . . . the priests are surrounding her. . . .

(The drums suddenly stop: there is an instant's silence. then an angry shout from the crowd.)

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

Wait! Wait! Something has happened!
 One of the ministers: one of the oldest:
 The general: the one in the feathered coat:—
 He's driving them down with the staff of a banner:
 He's climbed after them driving them down:
 There's shouting and yelling enough but they're going:
 He's telling them off too: you can hear him—

A DEEP VOICE (chatter of the crowd under it)

Men! Old men! Listen!
 Twist your necks on your nape bones!
 The knife will wait in the fist for you.
 There is a time for everything—
 Time to be thinking of heaven:
 Time of your own skins!

Cock your eyes to the windward!

Do you see smoke on those mountains?
 The smoke is the smoke of towns.
 And who makes it? The conqueror!
 And where will he march now? Onward!
 The heel of the future descends on you!

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

He has them now: even the priests have seen it:
 They're all looking away here to the east.
 There's smoke too: filling the valleys: like thunderheads! . . .

THE VOICE OF THE GENERAL

You are foolish old men.

You ought to be flogged for your foolishness.

Your grandfathers died to be free
 And you—you juggle with freedom!
 Do you think you're free by a law
 Like the falling of apples in autumn?

You thought you were safe in your liberties!
 You thought you could always quibble!
 You can't! You take my word for it.
 Freedom's the rarest bird!
 You risk your neck to snare it—
 It's gone while your eyeballs stare!

Those who'd lodge with a tyrant
 Thinking to feed at his fire
 And leave him again when they're fed are Plain fools or were bred to it—
 Brood of the servile races
 Born with the hang-dog face. . . .

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

They're all pointing and pushing together:
 The women are shouldering baskets: bread: children. . . .
 They smell smoke in the air: they smell terror. . . .

THE VOICE OF THE GENERAL (louder over the increasing sound)

There's nothing in this world worse—
 Empty belly or purse or the Pitiful hunger of children—
 Than doing the Strong Man's will!

The free will fight for their freedom.
 They're free men first. They feed
 Meager or fat but as free men,
 Everything else comes after—
 Food: roof: craft—
 Even the sky and the light of it!

(The voices of the crowd rise to a tumult of sounds—drums: shouts: cries.)

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

The sun is yellow with smoke . . . the town's burning. . . .
 The war's at the broken bridge. . . .

THE VOICE OF THE GENERAL (shouting)

You! Are you free? Will you fight?
 There are still inches for fighting!

There is still a niche in the streets!
 You can stand on the stairs and meet him!
 You can hold in the dark of a hall!
 You can die!
 —or your children will crawl for it!

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER (over the tumult)

They won't listen They're shouting and screaming and circling.
 The square is full of deserters with more coming
 Every street from the bridge is full of deserters.
 They're rolling in with the smoke blowing behind them.
 The plaza's choked with the smoke and the struggling of stragglers.
 They're climbing the platform: driving the ministers: shouting—
 One speaks and another:

THE VOICES OF CITIZENS

The city is doomed!
 There's no holding it!

Let the conqueror have it! It's his!

The age is his! It's his century!

Our institutions are obsolete.
 He marches a mile while we sit in a meeting.

Opinions and talk!
 Deliberative walks beneath the ivy and the creepers!

The age demands a made-up mind.
 The conqueror's mind is decided on everything.

His doubt comes after the deed or never.

He knows what he wants for his want's what he knows.
 He's gone before they say he's going.
 He's come before you've barred your house.

He's one man: we are but thousands!

Who can defend us from one man?

Bury your arms! Break your standards!

Give him the town while the town stands!

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

They're throwing their arms away: their bows are in bonfires.
The plaza is littered with torn plumes: spear-handles. . . .

THE VOICES OF CITIZENS

Masterless men! . . .

Masterless men
Must take a master! . . .

Order must master us! . . .

Freedom's for fools:
Force is the certainty!

Freedom has eaten our strength and corrupted our virtues!

Men must be ruled!

Fools must be mastered!

Rigor and fast
Will restore us our dignity!

Chains will be liberty!

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER

The last defenders are coming: they whirl from the streets like
Wild leaves on a wind: the square scatters them.

Now they are fewer—ten together or five:
They come with their heads turned: their eyes back.

Now there are none. The street's empty—in shadow.
The crowd is retreating—watching the empty street:
The shouts die.

The voices are silent.

They're watching. . . .

They stand in the slant of the sunlight silent and watching.
The silence after the drums echoes the drum beat.

Now there's a sound. They see him. They must see him!
They're shading their eyes from the sun: there's a rustle of whispering:
We can't see for the glare of it. . . . Yes! . . . Yes! . . .
He's there in the end of the street in the shadow. We see him!
He looks huge—a head taller than anyone:
Broad as a brass door: a hard hero:

Heavy of heel on the brick: clanking with metal:
The helm closed on his head: the eyeholes hollow.

He's coming! . . .

He's clear of the shadow! . . .

The sun takes him.

They cover their faces with fingers. They cower before him.
They fall: they sprawl on the stone. He's alone where he's walking.
He marches with rattle of metal. He tramples his shadow.
He mounts by the pyramid—stamps on the stairway—turns—
His arm rises—his visor is opening. . . .

(There is an instant's breathless silence: then the voice of the Announcer low—almost a whisper.)

There's no one! . . .

There's no one at all! . . .

No one! . . .

The helmet is hollow!

The metal is empty! The armor is empty! I tell you
There's no one at all there: there's only the metal:
The barrel of metal. the bundle of armor. It's empty!

The push of a stiff pole at the nipple would topple it.

They don't see! They lie on the paving. They lie in the Burnt spears: the ashes of arrows. They lie there . . .
They don't see or they won't see. They are silent. . . .

The people invent their oppressors: they wish to believe in them.
They wish to be free of their freedom: released from their liberty:—
The long labor of liberty ended!

They lie there!

(There is a whisper of sound. The Announcer's voice is louder.)

Look! It's his arm! It is rising! His arm's rising!
They're watching his arm as it rises. They stir. They cry.
They cry out. They are shouting. They're shouting with happiness.
Listen! They're shouting like troops in a victory. Listen—
'The city of masterless men has found a master'
You'd say it was they were the conquerors: they that had conquered.

A ROAR OF VOICES

The city of masterless men has found a master!
The city has fallen!
The city has fallen!

THE VOICE OF THE ANNOUNCER (flat)

The city has fallen. . . .

Elizabeth J. Coatsworth

ELIZABETH J. COATSWORTH was born in 1893 in Buffalo, New York. After extended travels she returned to America, where she divides her time between a cottage in Maine and an old house overlooking the harbor of Hingham, Massachusetts. She married Henry Beston, author of Outermost House and other books, in 1929.

Miss Coatsworth made her débüt with Fox Footprints (1921), a group of images and studies in the Oriental mood. Atlas and Beyond (1924) is a far more original piece of work. Although it, too, finds its subjects overseas, there is nothing of the ordinary travel-book flavor in any poem.

Compass Rose (1929) has, as the title suggests, something of that mixture of accuracy and fancy, of explicit direction and charming vagueness characteristic of the old animated maps. As a rhyming explorer, Miss Coatsworth must be numbered among the more observant mariners. She is one for whom the fact is but the beginning of the story; to observation she adds imagination, and so brings home an unusually colorful report. Not that her level is always serene; Miss Coatsworth frequently announces a theme of prime significance, but fails to develop it. When the poet is least ambitious she is most successful; her imaginative ballads are pointed and persuasive. She sounds the mysteriously macabre in "A Lady Comes to an Inn," the muffled heroic in "Daniel Webster's Horses." But it is in the animal poems that she is happiest and seems most herself. In "The Old Mare," "The Circus-Posted Barn," "On a Night of Snow" she minglest humor, pity, and a faint satire.

Miss Coatsworth developed a charming vein in her books for young people, prose fantasies liberally interspersed with verse. The Cat that Went to Heaven (1930) and Away Goes Sally (1934) are perhaps the most winning.

THE OLD MARE

Gray despair
Was on the old mare,
Grass turned bitter,
Sky a-glare,
And gnats like thoughts,
And thoughts like gnats,
Everywhere.

Her underlip
Hung pendulous wide,
Her ears twitched back,
Her dusty hide
Heaved with her heavy breathing
And her eyes rolled ominously
To one side.

The mule colt lay
In trampled grass,
Slick-tailed, long-eared,

Bespeaking the ass
Carried so long in her body,
Born in travail and sweat—
Alien, alas.

But staggering
To unsteady feet
The mule colt fumbles
An unknown teat;
And the old mare relaxes and sighs,
Finding any motherhood
Most sweet.

DANIEL WEBSTER'S HORSES

If when the wind blows
Rattling the trees,
Clicking like skeletons'
Elbows and knees,

You hear along the road
 Three horses pass—
 Do not go near the dark
 Cold window-glass.

If when the first snow lies
 Whiter than bones
 You see the mark of hoofs
 Cut to the stones,

Hoofs of three horses
 Going abreast—
 Turn about, turn about,
 A closed door is best!

Upright in the earth
 Under the sod

They buried three horses
 Bridled and shod,

Daniel Webster's horses—
 He said as he grew old,
 "Flesh, I loved riding,
 Shall I not love it, cold?

"Shall I not love to ride
 Bone astride bone,
 When the cold wind blows
 And snow covers stone?

"Bury them on their feet
 With bridle and bit
 They were fine horses—
 See their shoes fit."

THE CIRCUS-POSTERED BARN

When Dobbin and Robin, unharnessed from the plow,
 Stamp smoking to their stalls,
 They pass beneath white horses with long manes
 Shining upon the walls,
 White horses airily leaping through great hoops
 Along applauding tracks
 Or carrying princesses in rosy tights
 Upon their backs.

And Daisy, Madge and Buttercup
 Raise their soft eyes,
 Where through the darkness of the web-hung stable
 Hippopotami arise,
 Shaking the water from their enormous shoulders
 Floundering in savage mud,
 Showing those muzzles huge enough to ponder
 An epic cud.

And Tom beside a rat-hole in the boarding
 Meets the still stare
 Of eyes fiercer than his eyes and a large lithe body
 Above him there—
 Despondent grow the inmates of the barnyard;
 Not one achieves
 The super-powers of those super-mammals
 Beneath the eaves!

ON A NIGHT OF SNOW

Cat, if you go outdoors you must walk in the snow.
 You will come back with little white shoes on your feet,
 Little white slippers of snow that have heels of sleet.

Stay by the fire, my Cat. Lie still, do not go.
 See how the flames are leaping and hissing low,
 I will bring you a saucer of milk like a marguerite,
 So white and so smooth, so spherical and so sweet—
 Stay with me, Cat. Out-doors the wild winds blow.

Out-doors the wild winds blow, Mistress, and dark is the night
 Strange voices cry in the trees, intoning strange lore,
 And more than cats move, lit by our eyes' green light,
 On silent feet where the meadow grasses hang hoar—
 Mistress, there are portents abroad of magic and might,
 And things that are yet to be done. Open the door!

A LADY COMES TO AN INN

Three strange men came to the inn,
 One was a black man pocked and thin,
 One was brown with a silver knife,
 And one brought with him a beautiful wife.

That lovely woman had hair as pale
 As French champagne or finest ale,
 That lovely woman was long and slim
 As a young white birch or a maple limb.

Her face was like cream, her mouth was a rose,
 What language she spoke nobody knows,
 But sometimes she'd scream like a cockatoo
 And swear wonderful oaths that nobody knew.

Her great silk skirts like a silver bell
 Down to her little bronze slippers fell,
 And her low-cut gown showed a dove on its nest
 In blue tattooing across her breast.

Nobody learned the lady's name
 Nor the marvelous land from which they came,
 But no one in all the countryside
 Has forgotten those men and that beautiful bride.

Donald Davidson

DONALD DAVIDSON was born August 18, 1893, in Campbellsville, Tennessee, was educated in his native state, and received his B.A. and M.A. degrees at Vanderbilt University. The son of a schoolteacher, he has taught, first in high schools and later at Vanderbilt University. He was one of the group which founded The Fugitive, that provocative little monthly which put Nashville on the literary map; in his turn he acted as editor of that magazine, and, later, as literary editor of the Nashville Tennessean.

His first volume, An Outland Piper, was published in 1924. The diversity of its contents discloses, beneath a certain amount of echoing, a surplus of poetic energy. Although it is evident that Davidson is still "emerging," a fresh voice rises from the verses, even the most derivative. The Tall Men (1927) is a work on a much larger canvas than anything previously attempted by Davidson. It testifies to an interesting phenomenon: that the Tennessee group was not at all "South-conscious" while it was publishing The Fugitive, but became very much so immediately upon the demise of its organ. This sectional consciousness may be seen in Ransom's later essays, in Tate's Stonewall Jackson, in Davidson's own belligerent prose. The Tennessee group was concerned with a crisis gathering through the South: the division between those intent on agrarianizing perished backgrounds and those who favor a "new South," a South obviously dominated by the North. The Tall Men is an expansion of this dichotomy in which Davidson (in a framework derived from Eliot on one hand and Masters on the other) contrasts the Tennessee of the hunters and soldiers with the Tennessee of the Buick-drivers. "Fire on Belmont Street," perhaps Davidson's finest poem, synthesizes The Tall Men, Davidson having built up, as Stephen Vincent Benét wrote, "A people, a State, a passage of time, and one man's mind." Lee in the Mountains and Other Poems (1938) includes many of the earlier poems with the addition of some significant later work.

Since 1930 Davidson has been chiefly occupied with the agrarian movement; he has helped direct its controversies and prepare its symposiums. His point of view is revealed in I'll Take My Stand (1930) and The Attack on Leviathan (1938), a study of regionalism and nationalism in the United States.

CROSS SECTION OF A LANDSCAPE

Here is the ice that girdles joyless ocean;
Water girdling a sphere of quiet slime;
Under it rock that has no light or motion
Save from the twirl, the eternal pantomime.

Under the rock is fire that dies by inches
Over the slag and ash of old decay.
Finally, what? The mathematician pinches
Space to a point, in his ponderable way.

But when I was a boy I searched from pole to pole
Of a gaudy globe, a rainbow-colored ball,
Pealed the cover, unraveled the shiny whole
And was vexed to find at center nothing at all.

SPOKEN AT A CASTLE GATE

Before you touch the bolt that locks this gate
Be warned. There's no return where you are going.
A sword is tinder at the touch of fate
And crumbles in a way beyond your knowing.

Something I've heard, but something less I tell.
An old man knows, advises; young men smile,

Blow slug-horns, chink a latch, or clank a bell.
I've watched a many a one this weary while.

You can hear the nightingales, I won't deny.
They always sing for eager souls like you,
Perched on their boughs of possibility,
Most vaguely heard and still more vaguely true.

And they are more, perhaps, than mere tradition.
They must exist, though none come back to say
How they are feathered, or what rare nutrition
Keeps them piping their sad peculiar lay.

Gardens there are, and Queens, no doubt, a-walking,
White blooms adrift on gold and marvelous hair.
Young men in murmurous dreams have heard them talking,
Leaped up, like you, and entered . . . vanished . . . where?

For all I know, the castle's just a dream,
A shadow piled to mask a dangerous ledge,
A fantasy blown from devils' lungs in steam,
Made permanent here, just on a chasm's edge,

Where you will plunge, forever, ever falling,
For infinite days and nights, a dark lump whirled
That hears or thinks it hears an old voice calling
Beyond the stars that cluster near this world;

A voice that follows you past endless night,
Familiar, yet not quite half-known or named,
The last and sorry remnant of delight
That you lived for, pursued, and touched, and claimed,

Even as you touch the bolt that locks this gate,
Smiling, with patience such as fits old men
Who prophesy. Ah, yes, what you create
Perhaps you'll find,—but never come back again.

FIRE ON BELMONT STREET

(Epilogue to "The Tall Men")

He was a worthy citizen of the town.
"Where is the fire?" he babbled as he ran.
"The fire! The fire!" spat between pursy breaths.
He dropped his question, stuck his gross right hand
Against his watch-chain, ran, and stared, and sobbed,
Out Belmont Street? My God, that's where I live!
Stumbling with slow fat feet and tragic breath
While roaring sirens passed upon the wind.
And then I heard (what laughter!) blobs of heels
Pecking the night with hurry. Poor staccato,
Dragging a million feeble stumps across
The easy pavements while the flames went up,
Gobbling the roofs and sky. Beneath was earth.

Steady against all shouting, ground was waiting
 Forever subtle, old. But walls dissolved
 And houses quaked with Fire until I could Endure no more, but ran, as clamorous
 As all the plump mad mob, shouting like them:
 "The fire," I cried. What fire? No gables burn,
 Nor is that redness some unusual dawn
 Sprawled against moonrise, nor a dragon's breath
 Spurted from some old sewer you forgot,
 Nor ghosts of the Red Men that your fathers knew,
 Come back with devil-medicine to bombard
 Your bungalows. Choctaw and Cherokee
 Lie where the spitting Decherd rifles planted
 Under the Tennessee grass, their tired bones.
 The fire! What fire? Why, God has come alive
 To damn you all, or else the smoke and soot
 Have turned back to live coals again for shame
 On this gray city, blinded, soiled, and kicked
 By fat blind fools. The city's burning up?
 Why, good! Then let her burn!

But I'll say more,

Remembering other odds, a narrow place,
 A shock of arms, a cry of gables burning,
 And there were gathered in that long grim room
 Of warriors sixty who called Ilnaef their lord,
 Who saw the gray wolf creeping in the wood
 And heard the grind of linden shields afar;
 Surrounded were, yet held the door and died
 While the strange light of swords and helmets made
 The place like day.

But who will stand tonight,
 Holding this other door against the press
 Of brazen muscles? Who can conquer wheels
 Gigantically rolled with mass of iron
 Against trail human fingers? Who can quench
 The white-hot fury of the timeless atoms
 Bursting the secret jungle of their cells?
 Oh, who can stay or ever chain the dull
 Gnaw of the fiery smoke, eternally settling
 Into the beating heart? There is no fire?
 Only, perhaps, the breath of a Southern wind
 That I have known too well in many a summer,
 Drying the pulse, stopping the weary pulse,
 Blowing the faint blood back in the curdled veins
 Till there is no way to think of what might be Better or worse. Yet maybe it were better
 Climbing the tallest hill to cry at night:
 "Citizens, awake! Fire is upon you, fire
 That will not rest, invisible fire that feeds
 On your quick brains, your beds, your homes, your steeples,
 Fire in your sons' veins and in your daughters',
 Fire like a dream of Hell in all your world.

Rush out into the night, take nothing with you,
 Only your naked selves, your naked hearts.
 Fly from the wrath of fire to the hills
 Where water is and the slow peace of time."

There is a place where beech-trees droop their boughs
 Down-slanting, and where the dark cedars grow
 With stubborn roots threading the lichenèd rocks.
 There the smooth limestone benches, rubbed
 By warm primeval streams, yet hold the crystal
 Forms of dead life. There on a summer's evening
 The screech-owl quavers and unseen July-flies
 Trill their thin songs. And there my father said,
 Pointing a low mound out to me, "My son,
 Stand on this Indian's grave and plainly ask,
Indian, what did you die for? And he'll say, Nothing!"

So was it! So it is!
 What did you die for? Nothing, indeed nothing!
 The seed of the white man grows on Indian graves,
 Waxing in steel and stone, nursing the fire
 That eats and blackens till he has no life
 But in the fire that eats him. White man, remember,
 Brother, remember Hnaef and his sixty warriors
 Greedy for battle-joy. Remember the rifles
 Talking men's talk into Tennessee darkness
 And the long-haired hunters watching the Tennessee hills
 In the land of big rivers for something.

APPLE AND MOLE

For a heavy long time on the long green bough
 Hangs the apple of a summer that is shaken
 From its flat hot road to its apple-topped hill
 With the scraping of a mole that would awaken.

He is under the turf of the long green meadow,
 Snuffling under grass and lusty clover
 With a sure blunt snout and capable paws
 Up the long green slope past the beeches and the haws,
 For the summer must be shaken and over.

It's a heavy long time that an apple must hang.
 He is butting out a path; he is shoveling a furrow,
 Till the tree will be a-quiver, feeling mole at the root,
 It is tall, it is green, but he will burrow,

 Till the root will be sapless and the twig will be dry,
 And the long green bough will be shaken.
 The apple is too old, it has worms at the core,
 And the long green summer will be green no more.
 The apple will fall and not awaken.

Mark Van Doren

MARK VAN DOREN was born at Hope, Illinois, June 13, 1894, and was educated at the University of Illinois and at Columbia. He taught English at Columbia, and became literary editor of The Nation. Since 1920 he has lived in New York except for the part of the year that he spends on his farm in Cornwall, Connecticut.

Besides his verses, he has published four volumes of criticism. Henry David Thoreau, A Critical Study (1916) and The Poetry of John Dryden (1920) are the best of his analytical appraisals. He took upon himself the huge labor of editing An Anthology of World Poetry (1928), which assembles the world's best poetry in the best English versions, and compiled American Poets 1630-1930 (1932) and The Oxford Book of American Prose (1932). A novel called The Transients (1935) succeeded only in puzzling most of its readers.

Spring Thunder and Other Poems appeared in 1924. A glance through its pages reveals that Van Doren has been influenced by Robert Frost. He, too, writes of homely bucolic things: of water wheels which need mending, a mountain house in December, the coming of alfalfa, river snow, and dry meadows. His emotion, like Frost's, is restrained. But if neither his subjects nor his point of view is particularly individualized, his mellowness is his own, and the spirit which moves beneath the contours of his verse personifies even the simplest of his quatrains.

Now the Sky (1928) reveals Van Doren as a more metaphysical poet. He is still concerned with ferns, dark barns, deserted hollows, but he grows more and more preoccupied with "the crumbling away of former bright edges of courage and causeless decay." Jonathan Genty (1933) is an impressive chronicle of five generations, interspersed with lyrics. It is a narrative poem which just misses being a great work, chiefly because of its author's unrestrained facility.

A Winter Diary (1935) is Van Doren's richest volume, even though the book represents an alternation of tradition and technical experiment. The title poem is a genre picture in precise heroic couplets; the following group is a sequence of Shakespearean sonnets, complete to the slightest Elizabethan conceit; the lyrics range from the most formal designs to unexpected arrangements, from the inevitable pairings of vowels to consonance, even to lyrics with no rhyme at all. Apart from their novelty, the lyrics represent Van Doren at his best. The title-poem is the finest sustained piece of writing Van Doren has accomplished. It is nearly twelve hundred lines long, yet there is not a forced or flat couplet. It is rich in accurate observation, spiced with wit, and sensitive to the details of daily life on a northern winter farm; for sympathetic landscape and portrait painting there has been nothing like it in American poetry since Whittier's "Snow Bound."

In 1939 Van Doren published Shakespeare, a persuasive study which cut through the heavy accumulation of research and penetrated to the power of the writing itself, and Collected Poems: 1922-1938. The latter volume received the Pulitzer poetry prize, and the award was applauded. Critics who had neglected Van Doren's verse acknowledged its lean-whittled power and its unornamented firmness. Spare though this verse is, it suggests large horizons; an American mythology is adumbrated in such lines as

America's great gods live down the lane;
 Or up the next block blend their bulk with stone;
 Or stand upon the ploughed fields in the rain;
 Or watch a mountain cabin left alone.

FORMER BARN LOT

Once there was a fence here,
 And the grass came and tried—
 Leaning from the pasture—
 To get inside.

But colt feet trampled it,
 Turning it brown;
 Until the farmer moved
 And the fence fell down;

Then any bird saw,
 Under the wire,
 Grass nibbling inward
 Like green fire.

IMMORTAL

The last thin acre of stalks that stood
 Was never the end of the wheat.
 Always something fled to the wood
 As if the field had feet.

In front of the sickle something rose—
 Mouse, or weasel, or hare;
 We struck and struck, but our worst blows
 Dangled in the air.

Nothing could touch the little soul
 Of the grain. It ran to cover,
 And nobody knew in what warm hole
 It slept till the winter was over,

And early seeds lay cold in the ground.
 Then—but nobody saw—
 It burrowed back with never a sound,
 And awoke the thaw.

THE PULSE

One thing is sure
 When most are not:
 That there is cold,
 That there is hot,

That winter stars
 Are swollen blue
 And that bright summer
 Bulges too—

Getting the same
 Black sky with child;
 And both are big,
 And both are wild.

There is no error
 In the frost;
 With warmth away
 No warmth is lost;

Waves are coming
 Of a time
 That has been written
 In slow rhyme:

Hot and cold,
 And cold and hot—
 All things may fail,
 But this one not.

Though hate and love
 And mercy cease,
 Under the rippling
 Vapor-fleece

Of earth goes warmth
 Pursuing cold
 And neither is young
 And neither is old,

THE DISTANT RUNNERS

Six great horses of Spain, set free after his death by De Soto's men, ran West and restored to America the wild race lost there some thousands of years ago

—A legend.

Ferdinand De Soto lies
 Soft again in river mud.
 Birds again, as on the day
 Of his descending, rise and go
 Straightly West, and do not know
 Of feet beneath that faintly thud.

If I were there in other time,
Between the proper sky and stream;
If I were there and saw the six
Abandoned manes, and ran along,
I could sing the fetlock song
That now is chilled within a dream.

Ferdinand De Soto, sleeping
In the river, never heard
Four-and-twenty Spanish hooves
Fling off their iron and cut the green,
Leaving circles new and clean
While overhead the wing-tips whirred.

Neither I nor any walker
By the Mississippi now
Can see the dozen nostrils open
Half in pain for death of men—
But half in gladness, neighing then
As loud as loping would allow.

On they rippled, tail and back,
A prairie day, and swallows knew
A dark, uneven current there.
But not a sound came up the wind,
And toward the night their shadow thinned
Before the black that flooded through.

If I were there to bend and look,
The sky would know them as they sped
And turn to see. But I am here,
And they are far, and time is old.
Within my dream the grass is cold;
The legs are locked; the sky is dead.

THE ESCAPE

Going from us at last,
He gave himself forever
Unto the muddled nest,
Unto the dog and the beaver.

Sick of the way we stood,
He pondered upon flying,
Or envied the triple thud
Of horses' hooves; whose neighing

Came to him sweeter than talk,
Whereof he too was tired.

No silences now he broke,
No emptiness explored.

Going from us, he never
Sent one syllable home.
We called him wild; but the plover
Watched him, and was tame.

THE WHISPERER

Be extra careful by this door,
No least, least sound, she said.
It is my brother Oliver's,
And he would strike you dead.

Come on. It is the top step now,
And carpet all the way.
But wide enough for only one,
Unless you carry me.

I love your face as hot as this.
Put me down, though, and creep.
My father! He would strangle you,
I think, like any sheep.

Now take me up again, again;
We're at the landing post.
You hear her saying Hush, and Hush?
It is my mother's ghost.

She would have loved you, loving me.
She had a voice as fine—
I love you more for such a kiss,
And here is mine, is mine.

And one for her—O, quick, the door!
I cannot bear it so.
The vestibule, and out—for now
Who passes that would know?

Here we could stand all night and let
Strange people smile and stare.
But you must go, and I must lie
Alone up there, up there.

Remember? But I understand.
More with a kiss is said.
And do not mind it if I cry,
Passing my mother's bed.

Raymond Holden

RAYMOND HOLDEN was born in New York City in 1894 and educated at Princeton. He was, after several years of free-lancing, managing editor of Travel Magazine from 1923 to 1925, and on the staff of The New Yorker and Fortune.

His first volume, Granite and Alabaster (1922), is full of intellectual strength; even the lyrics have philosophic undertones. It is New England which Holden projects in this volume—a world of questioning skies and ghostly prospects, of brooding uncertainties and somber speculations. This “wind-walled quietness,” this freighting of lyrics with oblique philosophy, recalls the work of Robert Frost, to whom Holden is obviously indebted. There are moments when it is Frost’s rather than Holden’s voice which is heard in these poems. But, except for half a dozen pages, Holden maintains himself even when he is most under the spell of his teacher. His intonation falters, but not his intensity.

Natural History (1938), fifteen years in the making, is a far more integrated collection than Holden’s first volume. The ideas as well as the technique are tenser; they combine cool examination with warm sensuousness. The Arrow at the Heel (1940) emphasizes Holden’s objective reticence, but it does not lack individuality. It is a poetry which builds itself up slowly. If there is such a thing as astringent lyricism, Holden accomplishes it; his lyrics achieve an unusual blend of music and intellectuality, of feeling and analysis of feeling.

Turning biographer, Holden published Abraham Lincoln, which is specially interesting as a picture of the growth of the frontier politician from man to myth. He is also the author of several detective novels (two of them written under a pseudonym) and two novels, Chance Has a Whip (1935) and Believe the Heart (1939).

DEAD MORNING

When sleep, the supposed guardian,
 That had its hands upon my eyes,
 Dissolved in moistened light and ran
 Among the grasses, water-wise,
 I saw above my head a sun
 And near me, in a breathless oak,
 Two bitter crows and on a stone
 A third, wing-deep in silver smoke.
 I suddenly knew that this was death
 And burial in bodiless air,
 And that I should not feel your breath
 Against my throat, nor have your hair
 Pile at my cheek its sea-sweet smell,
 Nor have your body’s dolphin length
 Balance its curve against my strength.
 I knew that I had waked in hell.

GEESE IN THE RUNNING WATER

The geese in the running water, among the snowy stones,
 Matching their feet with the geese in the mirror brook,
 Stand preening, rustling the feathers that grow on their hollow bones,
 And a man stares from the field with the slowness of sleep in his look.

The arm of the rising dawn, flung over the eastern cloud,
 The coming of day which none were sure would come back,
 Caught in the eddies among the wide feet of the proud,
 Spreads its deep change of light on the changing shallow of black.

The grave, web-footed birds look down at their images,
 At the five white-breasted geese left in the ebb of the shadow.
 Time that was hurrying over is torn by the crowns of the trees
 And thrown to the ground at the feet of the man who crosses the meadow.

WINTER AMONG THE DAYS

O flavorless white hour
 That like a drift of snow
 Has cold tongues to devour
 The warmth of mind we know,
 How shall man take his rest
 Between your surfaces?
 Blood goes thin in the breast
 And pride is on its knees.
 He must lie, taking tally,
 On an unfriendly bed,
 Of days continually
 Leaping with hoof and head,
 Falling with many a bleat
 Back to their level flock
 As if their heart-shaped feet
 Could shake the iron rock.
 This winter-crackled doze
 Watching ram after ewe
 Is all the sleep man knows,

The sleep that must renew
 The mind which like a hand
 Holds the mere body hung
 Upon another land
 Older than this, yet young.

LIGHT THE LAMP EARLY

Wide flocks of narrow birds have fled
 The glaze of frost-embittered air.
 On burrows where the woodchucks sleep
 The curled and colored leaves are deep.
 The worm winds in the fallen pear.
 The ewe that bore the lamb lies dead.

Light the lamp early. Billow breath
 Festoons with fog the chilly pane.
 Ladder the lighted hearth with logs,
 That, as dreams ruffle sleeping dogs,
 Warmth in this room may help maintain
 This precious life, this twitch in death.

PROUD, UNHOPED-FOR LIGHT

"Because, because," the sound of the hard road said
 Stepping up into my brain as I went downhill.
 But it was only a sound that shook in my head
 And the tongue of my mouth let the cold bright air be still.

Out of the pasture, rotten with apples, the cows
 Swung their smooth necks, moving as if they swam.
 The breath of the thin light parted the apple boughs
 And ruffled the flanks of the filly and her dam.

There was no answer to be spoken and no need
 To cry out through the quietness to ask and protest.
 The proud, unhoped-for light, without fear or heed,
 Eager and kind, lay down with the heart in my breast.

E. E. Cummings

E(DWARD) E(STLIN) CUMMINGS was born October 14, 1894, in Cambridge, Massachusetts. The son of Edward Cummings, who taught English at Harvard and became prominent as a minister of Old South Church in Boston, Cummings was educated at Harvard, took his B.A. in 1915 and his M.A. in 1916. During the first World War he served with the Ambulance Corps, and, because of an error of the military censor's, he was thrown into a detention camp for three months—an experience which formed the basis of his novel The Enormous Room (1922). After 1920 he lived in Paris where he secured recognition as painter and draftsman as well as a writer. Returning to America, his versatility emphasized his violence as irreconcilable experimenter.

From the beginning Cummings seemed to be preoccupied with typographical arrangements. This is a pity, for much of his work suffers because of the distortions; that part of it which succeeds is often successful in spite of, and not because of, its form. Cummings is incapable of self-criticism; in middle age he resolutely continued the verve and brashness of adolescence.

His first book, Tulips and Chimneys, is as "advanced" as his later work; it is a jumble of exuberance, cool precision, and archaic affectations. Beneath the surface eccentricities which are responsible for his notoriety, Cummings' emotions are not at all bizarre; often they are actually banal. Cummings' technique is not as perverse as it seems; it combines canny method with determined madness. Just as the advertising artist arranges his "layout" to catch the eye, Cummings arrests the reader's attention not only by distributing his type in attenuated patterns but by breaking up the words themselves. At the best, it is a manner which succeeds in making the reader an amused if only half-willing collaborator; at the worst it is a mannerism which completely fails. Too often it conceals a weak fantasy, childishness, a flat sneer or an inflated sentimentality. It seems carrying an attention-getting device too far to devote an entire page of twenty lines to such a stereotyped image: "Black against white sky, trees from which a dropped leaf goes whirling"—particularly when seven of the lines are devoted to single letters and one whole line is composed of an isolated comma.

But the critic must be wary in his eagerness to dispose of Cummings. Let the critic deride the poet as a sentimentalist, and he is faced by "Poem, or Beauty Hurts Mr. Vinal," one of the period's most savage thrusts against sentimental versifying. Let him dismiss Cummings as a cheapjack, and he is confronted with pieces as purely lyrical as "Somewhere I have never travelled," "Since feeling is first," "O sweet spontaneous earth."

Cummings' seven volumes of verse were assembled in Collected Poems (1938) and followed by Fifty Poems (1941). The work published in his forty-seventh year shows no perceptible advance over the poems published in his early thirties. There is the same combination of persuasive phrases and precious rhetoric, of charm and wit. But the charm is marred by a determinedly scrambled syntax which, attempting to establish an individual language, only registers a prolonged caprice; and the wit is strained through a trick typography which, intended to arrest the eye, merely irritates it. Robbed of typographical oddities, reduced to essential statements, most of this verse is not so spectacular as it first appears. It plays a set of vague changes on the untroubled repetition of favorite words ("love," "life," "roses," "spring") and pits them against the power of the troublesome intelligence. Thus Cummings' celebration of physical existence and his satirical and often obscene scorn of "culture" are neither passionate nor ironic, but "poetic."

Yet, if Cummings is undistinguished as a thinker, he is always surprising as a creative craftsman. He is simultaneously the skillful draftsman, the leg-pulling clown, the sensitive commentator and the ornery boy. The nose-thumbing satirist is continually interrupted by the singer of brazenly tender lyrics. A modern of the moderns, he displays a seventeenth century obsession with desire and death; part Cavalier, part metaphysician, he is a shrewd manipulator of language, and his style—gracefully erotic or downright indecent—is strictly his own. It is a likely irony that Cummings will finally be appraised not as a typographical eccentric or as a startling exhibitionist, but as a thinly disguised and wholly unashamed romantic poet.

WHEN GOD LETS MY BODY BE

when god lets my body be
 From each brave eye shall sprout a tree fruit that dangles therefrom the purpled world will dance upon Between my lips which did sing

 that maidens whom passion wastes will lay between their little breasts
 My strong fingers beneath the snow into strenuous birds shall go my love walking in the grass their wings will touch with her face and all the while shall my heart be
 With the bulge and nozzle of the sea

ALWAYS BEFORE YOUR VOICE

Always before your voice my soul half-beautiful and wholly droll is as some smooth and awkward foal, whereof young moons begin
the newness of his skin,

so of my stupid sincere youth
the exquisite failure uncouth discovers a trembling and smooth
Unstrength, against the strong silences of your song;

or as a single lamb whose sheen of full unsheared fleece is mean beside its lovelier friends, between your thoughts more white than wool
My thought is sorrowful;

but my heart smote in trembling thirds of anguish quivers to your words,
As to a flight of thirty birds shakes with a thickening fright
the sudden fooled light.

it is the autumn of a year:
When the thin air is stooped with fear,
across the harvest whitely peer empty of surprise
death's faultless eyes

(whose hand my folded soul shall know while on faint hills do frailly go
The peaceful terrors of the snow, and before your dead face which sleeps, a dream shall pass)

and these my days their sounds and flowers
Fall in a pride of petaled hours, like flowers at the feet of mowers whose bodies strong with love through meadows hugely move.

yet what am i that such and such mysteries very simply touch me, whose heart-wholeness overmuch
Expects of your hair pale,
a terror musical?

while in an earthless hour my fond soul seriously yearns beyond this fern of sunset frond on frond opening in a rare
Slowness of gloried air. . . .

The flute of morning stilled in noon—
noon the implacable bassoon—
now Twilight seeks the thrill of moon, washed with a wild and thin despair of violin.

SONG

Thy fingers make early flowers of all things.

thy hair mostly the hours love:
a smoothness which sings, saying
(though love be a day)
do not fear, we will go amaying.

thy whitest feet crisply are straying.
Always
thy moist eyes are at kisses playing, whose strangeness much says; singing
(though love be a day)
for which girl art thou flowers bringing?

To be thy lips is a sweet thing and small.
Death, thee i call rich beyond wishing if this thou catch,
else missing.
(though love be a day
and life be nothing, it shall not stop kissing).

this is the garden: colors come and go,
 frail azures fluttering from night's outer wing,
 strong silent greens serenely lingering,
 absolute lights like baths of golden snow.
 This is the garden: purséd lips do blow upon cool flutes within wide glooms, and sing
 (of harps celestial to the quivering string) invisible faces hauntingly and slow.

This is the garden. Time shall surely reap, and on Death's blade lie many a flower curled,
 in other lands where other songs be sung;
 yet stand They here enraptured, as among the slow deep trees perpetual of sleep
 some silver-fingered fountain steals the world.

H. Phelps Putnam

H. PHELPS PUTNAM was born in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1894. He attended Phillips Exeter Academy and Yale College, worked in an Arizona copper mine, in Washington as a government historian, in the importing business in New York, and as an editorial assistant in Boston. In 1923, he spent the year in Provence. Returning to America, he endeavored to make a serious profession out of what was a serious avocation; his first book, Trinc, appeared in 1927.

Trinc is sharply divided by its two sections. The first ("Green Wine") is straightforward and lyrical, a set of frankly youthful reactions. The second half ("Brandy") is built about an impressionistic structure in which myth and modernity combine. The symbols used by Phelps are archaic, but the expression is distinctly of the moment. If, as Allen Tate wrote, "his attitude springs, in part, from the current romanticism of the 'hard-boiled,' the main feature of which is the worship of the crude, the barbaric, the 'un-intellectual,'" his Bill Williams, Hasbrouck, Jack Chance are figures in a new cosmogony. These heroes, presenting a latter-day scorn of the intelligence, are usually drunk (Trinc, according to Panurge, being "a Panompean Word, signifying Drink") and always rugged; nevertheless their disintegrated sensitivities move in an undoubted atmosphere of poetry.

"Ballad of a Strange Thing" is such a poem. Translating Daphne from Thessaly to the township of Pollard Mill and Apollo into a bawdy harvester, Putnam accomplishes something more than surprise. In what is one of the most interesting of contemporary ballads, he makes an old myth immediate and gives backwoods America a nimbus of antique legend.

The Five Seasons (1933) is a philosophical-narrative poem in which the central figure struggles to find a basis for action. It is a not wholly successful but extremely interesting study of cross-purposes.

BALLAD OF A STRANGE THING<sup>1</sup>

His name was Chance, Jack Chance, he said,
And that his family was dead.
He was a lucid fool, his eyes
Were cool and he beyond surprise.

<sup>1</sup> It is interesting to compare this treatment of a myth with Elizabeth Madox Roberts' use of a similar theme in "Orpheus," page 322.

Into the township Pollard Mill
He came in autumn alone one day,
Loafing along those roads which still,
Though dying in the grass, report
That lumber-sledges went that way.
He came idly and in our town
He raised a flight of birds, a brown
And silver flock, and underneath

Their wings were tinged with gold; his breath
Blew and the birds dipped and rose
As if they surely lived, which were
But lies of the calm sorcerer.

Autumn came bringing free
Melancholy, but to me
Brought Jack, when I was sitting there
In the open barn door-way where
The sun moved in and I could get,
Drifting by, the sound and smell
Of late bees and of mignonette
From the dying garden by the wall,
And hear the thin defeated bell
Of distant time, and see the tall
Elms beyond the orchard slopes
Rising improbably, like hopes
Swaying above the mind, and I
Was sitting there and he came by.

Under his hat I saw his eyes
Measuring without disguise
The ripeness of my house,
And measuring myself, and he Turned in, approached and spoke to me.
He had decided undismayed
This was the place for Chance, and I
The boy for him; and so he stayed.

And then the days moved gravely by,
Time drowned in fluent clarity
Flowing between him and me,
Who only lay along the walls
Unashamed of indolence, and heard
The dusty harvesters' harsh calls
To sweating teams, loading the sheaves
On the steep withered fields—their care
Was none of ours; or reasoned there
Where the mill-pond burned with leaves
And rustled at the dam, on those
Stark thoughts that rose
Out of cool spoken words, or we
Loafing in the arbor ate
Slowly the warm grapes, the rusty
Creaking swallows skimmed
The long ridgepoles, the day grew late
Easily, and dimmed.

At night we made a fire to mark
A spot of mirth against the dark,
There in a pasture which lay high
On the nearness of the sky.

Other countrymen would come,
Young farmers, farmers' men, and sons,
One after one they learned to come
And laugh with Chance and tap the old
Keg of cider, acrid gold,
Which we had borne carefully
Out of the cellar where it lay,
Drowsing wickedly it lay
Waiting for us to set free
Its vigor and its treachery.
Then Jack would sing his bawdy songs:
That old ballad which belongs
To timelessness, The Bastard King,
Or Doctor Tanner, or Mademoiselle,
Or Lil who died of lechering.
She died with her boots on, as they tell,
With a champion lad between her knees;
Or he would sometimes please,
If drinking brought delusion near,
To tell corrosive tales, the mere
Garments of lies, the cunning kind
Which echo somewhat in the mind,
And then they go, and you are more
Dull and baffled than before.

There went by then, in such a way,
Serene October; the last day
Came and the night was newly cold.
But the fire was high and the old
Cider burned within and we,
A dozen foolish farmers, kept
Alive the late hilarity
Of autumn, and the township slept.
Then Chance arose from where he sat
Against the keg and cocked his hat
Sideways and, walking slow around
The fire, said—"I have always found
Nothing new among much change;
But this I tell you now is strange:

It was at noon, the hour of sleep
For those who use their nights
In the deluding piracy
Of shadowy delights.

And so I slept, above the bank
Above the River Still,
Under an oak, the least of two
That rose under the hill.

But a sound crept through my nerves
And I woke and I could hear

Feet running fast and close,
Down the hill and near,

Then stop; and heard a noise like sobs
And stood up quietly
And peering saw that a breathless girl
Was clutching the other tree.

And then a man came following,
Loping leisurely,
And when he stood beside her said,
'I knew you would wait for me.'

And then she turned at bay; she was Astonishingly rare,
A young ascetic fury she
Was something almost strange to me
With her honey fallen hair.

'Yes—and have waited even too long,
Before now, to be glad,
Watching your insolence too long—
Oh, you were the gorgeous lad
With your dark lovely face and all
'The women you have had.

I have seen the rabbits follow you
Unasked and eagerly;
O ladies, you should see him now,
Begging a kiss of me.'

She ceased, and we all three were still
While he admired her,
And I kept hidden watching them,
For I have that character.

He did not knock her when he spoke,
'Where do they get these dull
Flash melodramas in their skulls?
And such a dainty skull.

Listen, I keep no list of names
For vanity; and I
Dislike the names and odors and ways
Of women; I am shy
Of their domestic wills; and I
Am tired of the melting lie.

But there you are—and sometimes love
Is more than remembered skill.'
'Love,' she said, 'is the rust which ate
The clean rancor of my will.'

He raised his quiet hand to touch
Her hair, but she

Turned sharply down the bank and he
Now followed instantly.

And there below the godly stream
Was whispering in its beard,
And she cried, 'Save me, River Stull!'
Then stepped and disappeared.

Well—so far nothing strange;
But after that the queer
Began, and I have seen these things,
And I, the bastard son of change,
Would dare to call them queer.

I saw the girl had gone entirely,
And in her place a dry
Shivering graceful sheath of reeds
Sprang up, suddenly high;
And that he, following so close
That her hair was in his face,
Clutched and had no girl but had
Sharp reeds in his embrace.

He stepped back, looking at his hands
All laced with blood; a spike
Broke short and stood between his ribs
Most murderous like.

This feller was not eager now,
But only dazed,
And pulled the wet spike from his side,
Fumbling and amazed.

He stooped slowly to bathe his hands,
Then from his pocket drew
A folded knife and cut one reed,
Murmuring, 'This will do.'

Sometimes there's music in these girls,
Sometimes,' and sitting then
He made a whistle which he tried
And changed and tried again.

He blew five even notes and stopped,
But the sound rippled away
Slowly, as if a sweet clang came
From the leaves and hummed away.

And then there came along the bank
A black majestic goat
With yellow eyes and gilded horns
And a white beard at its throat.

The goat lay down before his feet
Respectfully, dipping its head,
And the man laughed and, 'Can this be
A messenger?' he said.

And played again and now more wild
And cloudily intricate,
And the goat arose and danced like one
Hieratic and sedate.

And that is all," said Chance, and then
He said, "So long," and walked away
Casually, as if the night were day.
And we jumped up calling, and then
Stood silent for over us coldly fell
Five piercing notes, each like a spark;
We stood there stiffly and immersed,
Hearing laughter in the dark,
Until I spoke, being the first,
"We had better go home now to bed;
We have drunk too much," I said.

Thereafter the rains beat down
The autumn, the drenched leaves came down
From the black trees, choking the ditches,
And over the sea came sons-of-bitches
With a hollow quarrel, the talking rats
Of England and of Europe slithered
Down the hawsers, doffed their hats
And squealed; and the plague spread and came,
Taking the cleanly name
Of honor for its strange device,
Even to our town; the conscript lice
Played soldiers over Pollard Mill
And pitched their camp on the River Still;

But no more Jack, and we were more
Dull and baffled than before.

ABOUT WOMEN

Fair golden thoughts and lovely words—
Away, away from her they call,
For women are the silly birds,
And perching on a sunny wall
They chirp the answer and the all;
They hold for true all futile things—
Life, death, and even love—they fall
To dreaming over jeweled rings.

Their bodies are uncouthly made,
And heavy swollen like a pear,
And yet their conquered, undismayed
And childish lovers call them fair.
Their honor fills them full of care,
Their honor that is nothingness,
The mystery of empty air,
The veil of vain delightfulness.

Their subtleties are thin and pale,
Their hearts betray them in their eyes:
They are a simple flute, and frail,
With triple stops for playing lies.
These poor machines of life are wise
To scorn the metaphysic glow,
The careless game that laughs and dies,
The heady grace they cannot know.

Well, give them kisses, scatter flowers,
And whisper that you cannot stay;
We shall have clarity and hours
Which women shall not take away.

Genevieve Taggard

GENEVIEVE TAGGARD was born November 28, 1894, on an apple farm at Waitsburg, Washington. At the age of two she was taken by her parents to Hawaii, where she remained, with one brief interval, for the next eighteen years. She attended the University of California, edited the college literary magazine, and graduated in 1919. Two years later, in New York, with a group of other poets, she helped found The Measure, that journal of poetry which was particularly hospitable to the modern lyric. She taught at Bennington College, in Vermont, beginning in 1931 and, beginning in 1935, at Sarah Lawrence College.

Her first volume, For Eager Lovers, was published in 1922. In spite of the banal title, Miss Taggard's lines are unaffected and her general statements have almost personal definiteness. It is always a sensitive artist speaking through such melodies as "The Enamel Girl," and "With Child." Hawaiian Hilltop, a leaflet of poems about her childhood in the tropics, was published in 1923. It proved that Miss Taggard was at her best in the more extended lyric; such a poem as "Solar Myth" is more vivid, more richly delineated than most of her shorter melodies.

Words for the Chisel (1926) is notable for the long narrative "Poppy Juice" which opens the volume. Two years later Miss Taggard made a selection from her previously published volumes and, after ten years' work, retained exactly twenty-eight poems for Travelling Standing Still (1928). The title is more appropriate than the one immediately preceding it in date of publication, for Miss Taggard's manner is far from stony. Such poems as "With Child" and "Dilemma of the Elm" proceed from experiences which are common and yet freshly observed.

Not Mine to Finish (1934) is as undetermined as its title. It is a curious mixture, or, rather, a contradiction of moods, styles, and effects. Such a poem as "Try Tropic" is both sensuous and scrupulous; many of the other verses are either careless or shrill. The poet seems unhappily split, shifting, as Louise Bogan wrote, "between the high romantic desire to be struck dead by delight and the high revolutionary ambition to write songs for the people." Calling Western Union (1936), another interim book, was followed by a representative Collected Poems: 1918-1938, a fully rounded volume.

In 1936 Miss Taggard became greatly interested in the problem of writing for music; such modern American composers as Aaron Copland and Roy Harris have collaborated with her. Circumference, a collection exhibiting "varieties of metaphysical verse" from Donne to E. E. Cummings, was edited by Miss Taggard and published in a distinguished format in 1930. She is also author of The Life and Mind of Emily Dickinson (1930), a sensitive if somewhat too fanciful combination of biography and speculation.

WITH CHILD

Now I am slow and placid, fond of sun,
Like a sleek beast, or a worn one:
No slim and languid girl—not glad
With the windy trip I once had,
But velvet-footed, musing of my own,
Torpid, mellow, stupid as a stone.

You cleft me with your beauty's pulse, and now
Your pulse has taken body. Care not how .
The old grace goes, how heavy I am grown,
Big with this loneliness, how you alone
Ponder our love. Touch my feet and feel
How earth tingles, teeming at my heel!
Earth's urge, not mine—my little death, not hers;
And the pure beauty yearns and stirs.

It does not heed our ecstasies, it turns
With secrets of its own, its own concerns,
Toward a windy world of its own, toward stark
And solitary places. In the dark,
Defiant even now, it tugs and moans
To be untangled from these mother's bones

THE ENAMEL GIRL

Fearful of beauty, I always went
Timidly indifferent:

Dainty, hesitant, taking in
Just what was tiniest and thin;

Careful not to care
For burning beauty in blue air;

Wanting what my hand could touch—
That not too much;

Looking not to left or right
On a honey-silent night;

Fond of arts and trinkets, if
Imperishable and stiff.

They never played me false, nor fell
Into fine dust. They lasted well.

They lasted till you came, and then
When you went, sufficed again.

But for you, they had been quite
All I needed for my sight.

You faded. I never knew
How to unfold as flowers do,

Or how to nourish anything
To make it grow. I wound a wing

With one caress; with one kiss
Break most fragile ecstasies . . .

Now terror touches me when I
Dream I am touching a butterfly.

SOLAR MYTH

(Maui, the dutiful son and great hero, yields to his mother's entreaty and adjusts the center of the universe to her convenience. The days are too short for drying tapa. He is persuaded to slow down the speed of the spider-sun with a lasso of sisal rope.)

The golden spider of the sky
Leaped from the crater's rim;
And all the winds of morning rose
And spread, and followed him.

The circle of the day swept out,
His vast and splendid path;
The purple sea spumed in the west
His humid evening bath.

Thrice twenty mighty legs he had,
And over earth there passed
Shadows daily whipping by,
Faster, faster, fast . . .

For daily did he wax more swift,
And daily did he run
The span of heaven to the sea,
A lusty, rebel sun.

Then Maui's mother came to him
With weight of household woes:
"I cannot get my tapa dry
Before the daylight goes.

"Mornings I rise and spread with care
My tapa on the grass;
Evenings I gather it again,
A damp and sodden mass."

Then Maui rose and climbed at night
The mountain. Dim and deep
Within the crater's bowl he saw
The sprawling sun asleep.

He looped his ropes, the mighty man,
He whirled his sisal cords;
They whistled like a hurricane
And cut the air like swords.

Up sprang the spider. Maui hurled
His lasso after him.
The spider fled. Great Maui stood
Firm on the mountain-rim.

The spider dived and swerved and pulled
But struggled as he might,
Around one-half his whirl of legs
The sisal ropes cut tight.

He broke them off, the mighty man,
He dropped them in the sea,
Where there had once been sixty legs
There now were thirty-three.

Maui counted them, and took
The pathway home; and came Back to his mother, brooding,—strode
Like a lost man, and lame.

The tarnished spider of the sky
Limped slowly over heaven,
And with his going mourned and moaned
The missing twenty-seven.

On with a hollow voice he mourned,
Poured out his hollow woe;
Over each day the sound of him
Bellowing, went below.

Maui saw the gulls swarm up
And scream and settle on
The carcass of the limping thing
That once had been the sun.

But still he thought at length to have
His mother satisfied.
"Can't you put back his legs again
Now all my tapa's dried?"

"The days are long and dull," she said,
"I loved to see them skim." . . .
Wearily the old sun shook
The black birds off of him.

DOOMSDAY MORNING

Deaf to God, who calls and walks
Until the earth aches with his tread
Summoning the sulky dead,
We'll wedge and stiffen under rocks
Or be mistaken for a stone,
And signal as children do, "Lie low,"
Wait and wait for God to go.

The risen will think we slumber on
Like slug-a-beds. When they have gone
Trouped up before the Judgment Throne
We in the vacant earth, alone,—
Abandoned by ambitious souls,
And deaf to God, who calls and walks
Like an engine overhead
Driving the disheveled dead,—
We will rise and crack the ground,
Tear the roots and heave the rocks,
And billow the surface where God walks,
And God will listen to the sound
And know that lovers are below
Working havoc, till they creep
Together, from their sundered sleep.

Then end, world! Let your final darkness fall!
And God may call . . . and call . . . and call.

TRY TROPIC

On the Properties of Nature for Healing an Illness

Try tropic for your balm,
Try storm,
And after storm, calm.
Try snow of heaven, heavy, soft, and slow,
Brilliant and warm.
Nothing will help, and nothing do much harm

Drink iron from rare springs; follow the sun;
Go far
To get the beam of some medicinal star;
Or in your anguish run
The gauntlet of all zones to an ultimate one.
Fever and chill
Punish you still,
Earth has no zone to work against your ill.
Burn in the jeweled desert with the toad.
Catch lace
In evening mist across your haunted face;
Or walk in upper air the slanted road.
It will not lift that load,
Nor will large seas undo your subtle ill.
Nothing can cure and nothing kill
What ails your eyes, what cuts your pulse in two,
And not kill you.

DILEMMA OF THE ELM

In summer elms are made for me.
I walk ignoring them and they
Ignore my walking in a way
I like in any elegant tree.

Fountain of the elm is shape
For something I have felt and said. . . .
In winter to hear the lonely scrape
Of rooty branches overhead

Should make me only half believe
An elm had ever a frond of green—
Faced by the absence of a leaf
Forget the fair elms I have seen.

(A wiry fountain, black upon
The little landscape, pale-blue with snow—
Elm of my summer, obscurely gone
To leave me another elm to know.)

Instead, I paint it with my thought,
Not knowing, hardly, that I do;
The elm comes back I had forgot
I see it green, absurdly new,

Grotesquely growing in the snow.
In winter an elm's a double tree;
In winter all elms trouble me.

But in summer elms are made for me
I can ignore the way they grow.

LONG VIEW

Never heard happier laughter.

Where did you hear it?

Somewhere in the future.

Very far in the future?

Oh no. It was natural. It sounded

Just like our own, American, sweet and easy.

People were talking together. They sat on the ground.

It was summer.

And the old told stories of struggle.

The young listened. I overheard

Our own story, retold. They looked up at the stars

Hearing the serious words. Someone sang.

They loved us who had passed away.

They forgot all our errors. Our names were mixed. The story was long.

The young people danced. They brought down

New boughs for the flame. They said, Go on with the story now.

What happened next?

For us there was silence

Something like pain or tears. But they took us with them.

Their laughter was peace. I never heard happier.

Their children large and beautiful. Like us, but new-born.

This was in the mountains of the west.

They were resting. They knew each other well.

The trees and rivers are on the map, but the time

Is not yet. I listened again. Their talk was ours

With many favorite words. I heard us all speaking.

But they spoke of better things, soberly. They were wise

And learned. They sang not only of us.

They remembered thousands, and many countries, far away.

One poet who sat there with them began to talk of the future.

Then they were silent again. And they looked at the sky.

And then in the light of the stars they banked their fire as we do,

Scuffing the ground, and said goodnight.

This poem I bring back to you

Knowing that you wonder often, that you want

Word of these people.

Robert Hillyer

ROBERT (SILLIMAN) HILLYER was born in East Orange, New Jersey, June 3, 1895. He attended Kent School and Harvard College. After graduating from the latter, he was an ambulance driver with the French army from 1917 to 1919, was at Copenhagen as Fellow of the American-Scandinavian foundation in 1921, and since that time has been Assistant Professor of English at Trinity College (from which he received the honorary degree of A.M.), and Professor of English at Harvard.

Hillyer's first book was as innocuous as its title, Sonnets and Other Lyrics (1917), following which came six volumes of varying merit. Hillyer's seventh, entitled with an appropriateness suspiciously like a pun The Seventh Hill (1928), is one of his best. On the surface the verse seems to lack that sense of discovery which distinguishes poetry from versification. But this is only because Hillyer's technique and idiom are traditional. Possibly because there is nothing local in his subject-matter or treatment, Hillyer's work found more favor in England than in America. The Halt in the Garden (1925) had a foreword by Arthur Machen and elicited high praise from Middleton Murry. Though the contours of this poetry are delicate to the point of elegance, the spirit upholding them has a sustaining strength. "Prothalamion," which is the peak of the volume, is typical. Upon a theme which has done duty since the beginning of art, in a form which is uncompromisingly classical, Hillyer has constructed twenty-six stanzas, not one of which falls below a high seriousness.

The Collected Verse of Robert Hillyer (1933) confirms the praise of those critics who found Hillyer's poetry conventional in form but "colored by something from within." It received the Pulitzer Prize in 1934, and the award drew attention to the longer poems as well as to the shorter lyrics. One of his most recent works, "Variations on a Theme," reveals (as Hillyer wrote of Santayana) "dignity and sumptuousness of phrasing" and sureness of technique. In the version printed here, the last section (the recapitulation) has been omitted.

A Letter to Robert Frost and Others (1937) contains the best writing and thinking that Hillyer has done. The measures are disciplined, even "classical," the rhymes are precise, the couplets are as polished as Pope's. But the tone is the tone of the twentieth century with its abrupt address and its edged disposals of current shibboleths and frauds. Pattern of a Day (1940) is a further advance, a book of unpretentious but pointed connections. Hillyer's idiom is not startling, but he wears it with a difference. His is a deceptively quiet voice; beneath its suavity he says things which are quick and keen and far from soothing. Such a poem as "The Assassination" is skilfully modulated and dramatically surprising. The limitations of Hillyer's work are implicit in his training, in his deliberate cultivation of tradition. But the best of his work avoids argument and surpasses fashion, being not only clear but clairvoyant.

AS ONE WHO BEARS BENEATH HIS NEIGHBOR'S ROOF

As one who bears beneath his neighbor's roof
 Some thrust that staggers his unready wit
 And brooding through the night on such reproof
 Too late conceives the apt reply to it,
 So all our life is but an afterthought,
 A puzzle solved long past the time of need,
 And tardy wisdom that one failure bought
 Finds no occasion to be used in deed.

Fate harries us; we answer not a word,
 Or answering too late, we waste our breath;
 Not even a belated quip is heard
 From those who bore the final taunt of death;

And thus the Jester parries all retort:
His jest eternal, and our lives so short.

PASTORAL

So soft in the hemlock wood
The phoenix sang his lullaby,
Shepherds drowsed where they stood,
Slumber felled each passerby,
And lovers at their first caress
Slept in virgin loneliness.

Not for mortal eye to see
Naked life arise from embers;
Only the dark hemlock tree
Evergreen itself, remembers
How the Word came into being,
No man hearing, no man seeing.

From the taut bow of sleep
Shoots the phoenix toward the day,
Shepherds wake and call their sheep,
Wanderers go on their way.
Unaware how death went by,
Lovers under the hemlocks lie.

PROTHALAMION

(Second Section)

The hills turn hugely in their sleep
With sound of grinding rock and soil
While down their granite shoulders leap
The waterbrooks in white turmoil.
The vigil of Good Friday done,
Our second spring ascends the height;
The earth turns southward toward the sun,
And trees which guard the pascal door,
In leaf once more,
Once more are murmurous with strange delight.

For now is the world's Eastertide,
And born that they may die again
Arise from death the gods who died.
Osiris, slender as young grain,
Comes back to Isis; the shy lad
Adonis wakens by the stream;
And Jesus, innocently clad
In samite, walks beneath the trees,
Half ill-at-ease
That Judas and the Cross were but a dream.

And thou art she whom I have seen
Always, but never understood,
In broken shrines festooned with green,
In twilight chapels of the wood;
Or on the hills a shepherdess
Walked with the sun full on her face,
And though her body and her dress
Appareled her in meek disguise,
I dropped my eyes,
For still I knew the goddess by her pace.

I know thee now in morning light
Though thou art wrought of flesh and blood,
And though the mother of the night
Resumes at dawn her maidenhood;
And though love severed with his knife
The girdle of the million years
And yielded to importunate life
The toll she asks of those who still
Would journey, till
They pass her known and visible frontiers.

The children from beyond the sun
Come bounding down the hillside grass,
And in the joyous rout is one
Who smiles and will not let us pass.
He stands, the fairest of them all,
And in his loveliness I trace
Thy loveliness. His light footfall
Bends not the grass he treads upon;
But he is gone
Before my eyes have feasted on his face.

Let him go back beyond the air;
This spring is ours, it is not his;
Those eager lips would take their share
Of love's yet undiminished kiss.
Fairer than he, as young, as gay,
As much a child, forget all things,
All but this transitory day
Of love, all things but love, and give Thy fugitive
Delights to me who fly but with thy wings

In undulant desire we merge,
On tides of light we sport and rest;
We swerve up from the deeper surge
To hover on the trembling crest
Of joy, and when the wave has passed,
Then smooth is the wing to the abyss

Of quietness, where with a last
Eye-darkening smile, we say farewell
Until the spell
Shall be renewed. Forget all things but this.

No grass-blade bends, no shadow stirs;
Love mounted high, slumber is deep;
Deep is the spring beneath the firs,
A sweet and lonely place for sleep.
And waking, we shall cool our flesh
In depths so clear they seem as air;
Twofold in beauty, thou refresh
Thy body in that water, bright
With muted light,
And brighter still for thy reflection there.

While I along the bank shall find
The flowers that opened with the day
Still dew-drenched, and with these entwined
New fronds of fern or darker bay.
Or pausing in a shaft of sun
That strikes across the mottled glade
Watch thee too long, beloved one,
Watch thee with eyes grown big with tears
Because the years
Suddenly spoke and made my heart afraid.

Giver 'of immortality—
That was thy name within the shrine—
The Mighty Mother, Star of the Sea,

All syllables of love were thine
To wear as lesser women wear
The garlands of their fragile spring;
Why then within my heart this fear
Of time? why then amid the shout
Of life, this doubt
That clouds the new sun like an outspread wing?

We must not to a foe like time
Yield up our present. Take my hand
And up the morning we shall climb
Until the wooded valley land
Lies all beneath us in the drowse
Of love's meridial aftermath;
The trellis of entwining boughs
Trembles in the great joy of green,
But does not screen
The comfortable glimpse of homeward path.

We will not to our ancient foe
Yield all this happiness; it lies
Shielded from sickle and from snow
And all the menace of the skies.
At night I shall watch over thee,
The future safe beneath thy breast,
And after autumn there shall be Dayspring, when for each other's sake
We shall awake
And follow Love beyond the unknown west.

NIGHT PIECE

There is always the sound of falling water here;
By day, blended with birdsong and windy leaves,
By night, the only sound, steady and clear
Through the darkness and half-heard through sleepers' dreams.
Here in the mottled shadow of glades, the deer,
Unstartled, waits until the walker is near,
Then with a silent bound, without effort is gone,
While the sound of falling water goes on and on.

Those are not stars reflected in the lake,
They are shadows of stars that were there aeons ago;
When you walk by these waters at night, you must forsake
All you have known of time; you are timeless, alone,
The mystery almost revealed, like the breath you take
In the summer dawn before the world is awake,
Or the last breath, when the spirit beyond recalling
Goes forth to the sound of water for ever falling.

Swift as deer, half-thoughts in the summer mind
Flash with their hints of happiness and are gone;
In the dark waters of ourselves we find

No stars but shadows of stars which memory lost.
 Dark are the waters under the bridge we crossed,
 And the sound of their falling knows neither end nor start.
 Frail are your stars, deep are your waters, mind;
 And the sound of falling water troubles my heart.

VARIATIONS ON A THEME

I

You walk up a deep roadbed to a hilltop,
 The trees are splintered and the sun is gray,
 Shells rip the cheese-cloth air, and curling gas
 That smells of death, out of the lungs of death
 Breathes, it is like the sap of slaughtered poplars
 Rancid with spring, it is like the breath of old men
 Who have been dead a long time but still breathe.
 Shell by shell you note the approaching range,
 Methodical,—no doubt after a graph
 Devised by the professors in Berlin,
 And thus defeated by its own precision.
 A scattered fire might, by a random chance,
 Drape you like garlands on a broken tree,
 But this! it is to laugh. You need not wince
 Or fling yourself face down in mud until—
 Well, until then! By God, they broke the rules;
 That nearly got you. You must telegraph
 Berlin and file complaints with the professors.
 Euclid was wrong. The parallels have met.
 But you're all right, stop jabbering the Lord's Prayer,
 Since it was answered, and go on with Mozart,
 G-minor Symphony, the second movement.
 And now with Mozart playing in your skull
 Tread daintily among the rats and shell-holes,
 Pick your way up the hill between the fragments
 Of men and horses, let the blue gas curl.
 Listen, that pizzicato on the 'cellos.
 Lovelier always with the increasing beauty
 Of spring, which to an adolescent rapture
 Yields not one half its glories, saving all
 For those whose spring finds winter in their hearts.
 Plucked strings are louder, if you listen for them,
 Than shells exploding, and dead suns are brighter
 Than Very lights or fear. Death is no rampart
 From which, methodical, the fusillades
 Of hidden foes come nearer and yet nearer
 Until you gauge their range and duck. It is Not as you think it, not dead breath of poplars;
 It is a chance that after sundry warnings
 Plotted methodically by distant science,
 The shell will miss you, and you will arrive
 Up on the hillcrest after lonely walking,

The sun grown splendid for the sunset glory
 Hanging above a land ruined but quiet,
 And friends whose voices waken you from nightmare,
 Singing amid your tangled strands of Mozart:
 "The Armistice! We have signed the truce with Death!"

II

"What! you were in the war! I'd never guess it
 Reading your books. What a strange man you are.
 Think of dear Brooke and Seeger and Joyce Kilmer,—
 Of course, they all met heroes' deaths,—but still
 How can experiences so profound
 Have failed to leave one comma on your verses?"
 "Bird droppings, madam, are not punctuation,
 However fair the bird, you do but join
 The illimitable clamor of bad causes
 Which deafen poetry. I must confess
 Though born an Anglo-Catholic, I am
 Lazy but not a skeptic, and although Romantically I take the side of kings
 I am no Royalist, and neither am I
 Enamored of Moscow, for within her streets
 I find not even so faint a trace of verse
 As metric crowsfeet in the bloodstained snow.
 These causes! You will find ten thousand of them
 If you read Gibbon. The damned things are dead.
 Search Shakspere and prepare for me a list
 Of his outpourings on the Spanish menace
 With rhetoric reserved for the Armada."
 "But first, Shakspere was not aboard that flagship
 Of Effingham's; and second, you're not Shakspere."
 "True! True, and thirdly, there is a landscape
 Where green Connecticut shrouds Massachusetts
 In haze on haze on hills falling away,
 Like lovely lies obscuring ugly fact.
 I fear—to use geography as figure—
 I am Connecticut. I face the ocean,
 Yet of its turmoils hear but far-off surf;
 I face the mountains yet climb never to them;
 I face the mills of booming Massachusetts
 Yet do not sweat nor jingle coin in pocket;
 I face New York and let her lights be distant,
 As seasonable shifts on pine and oak
 Show the sun changing after winter solstice.
 I listen always in my mind to music
 That sings away my worries and the world."

III

However much you love your wife, your child,
 Time will divide you, and however much
 You love yourself, time will divide you also
 Into the many parts you have forgotten.
 It is triumphant that the mortal man

Remembering so many deaths, can still
 Sing in the twilight and take heart at dawn
 And lift his cup and say: You, my beloved.
 Surely beyond that moment's apprehension,
 Beyond his conscious thought, beyond the depths
 Of his unconscious where the false Messiahs
 Bungle amid the delicate corals, and blow
 Foul-smelling bubbles to the surface world
 And signal with dream-cables: Watch my breath!
 Surely beyond thought and all pseudo-science
 Of the mind's last profundities, where Faith
 Alone is Sea King, surely the soul dwells,
 Timeless, immortal, alert to songs of earth
 And knowing that when he says: You, my beloved,
 Echoes start out and ring the golden spheres
 To meet in perfect circles beyond space
 And there to find again the voice they sprang from.
 This is good physics, you who disbelieve
 Acknowledge that your voice has also started
 Motion throughout the Universe, and never
 Though you should chase it through Paolo's whirlwind
 Shall you catch up with it. You'd eat your words
 But cannot, while throughout resounding space
 The syllables of love clap laughing hands.
 Whatever starts in time cannot be stopped.
 Wherefore lift up your hearts all you that love
 Gravely as well as passionately; wherefore
 Take heed, you wastrels of the sacred word.
 For time bequeaths her patience to eternity
 Wherein so many ages beyond counting
 Have poured what seemed immense and what was lost
 In immensity and found in new dimensions.
 However much you love your wife, your child,
 Time will divide you, and beyond division
 Eternity echoes: "You, you my beloved."

THE ASSASSINATION

"Do you not find something very strange
 About him?" asked the First Fate.
 "Very strange indeed," answered the Second Fate,
 "He is immune to change."
 "Yes, he is always young," complained the First Fate.
 "He never heeds us," said the Second,
 "I, for example, have often called and beckoned."
 "We must kill him while he sleeps."
 "He does not sleep."
 "Then we must make him weep."
 "He does not weep."
 "Or laugh?"
 "Only at his own epitaph,— Half tears and laughter half."

"Then how to death, that worst fate,
To doom him?" said the First Fate.
"Oh, he's a clever one, as we've long reckoned,"
Answered the Second.
"But we can cope
With such a fellow, can we not,
What?"
"Could we not, say with a falling girder, Carelessly cause an unintended murder?"
"Why not?"
"He's dead. Who said we could not cope
With this young fool. What was his name?"
"His name?"
"Of course that's not within our scope,
But just the same . . ."
"Hope was his name."
"How funny, Hope."

A LETTER TO ROBERT FROST

Our friendship, Robert, firm through twenty years,
Dares not command these couplets to your ears:
How celebrate a thing so rich and strange—
Two poets whose affection does not change;
Immune to all the perils Nature sends,
World war and revolution and kind friends.
Something there is that doesn't love a wall;<sup>1</sup>
Your apples and my pines knew none at all,
But grow together in that ghostly lot
Where your Vermont meets my Connecticut.
Ours is a startling friendship, because art,
Mother of quarrels who tears friends apart,
Has bound us ever closer, mind and heart.

Before the War, among those days that seem
Bathed in the slanting afterglow of dream,
Were happy autumn hours when you and I
Walked down that street still bright in memory.
I was a boy apprenticed to my rhymes,
Your fame already rose above our times,
Your shadow walking tall, my shorter gait,—
Both taller now, the difference as great.

Of wisdom I learned much, an artist's creed
Of work the flower, and worldly fame the weed;
I have forgotten phrases; it remains
As part of me, it courses in my veins.
From many conversations I remember
One on a windy day in late November.
The sly recluse of Amherst in those times
Moved me, in spite of questionable rhymes.
We talked of women poets, nothing else,

<sup>1</sup> See page 212.

From Sappho to our friend at Sevenels.<sup>2</sup>
 "Miss Dickinson is best!" You shook your head.
 "Perhaps a genius, but mad," you said.
 Alas for Emily, alas for me,
 That now I go much further than agree:
 Once irresistible, now merely coy,
 Her whims, her verbal airs and graces cloy.
 Taste changes. Candid Louis Untermeyer
 Consigns his past editions to the fire;
 His new anthology, refined and thrifty,
 Builds up some poets and dismisses fifty.
 And every poet spared, as is but human,
 Remarks upon his critical acumen.

Ah, could we know what vogue will be tomorrow,
 What plumes of Paradise our pens could borrow!

Yet not alone among the modern names
 Does Fashion choose; she rummages in Fame's.
 One poet to be praised—and sometimes read—
 She chooses, and the rest are safely dead.
 One must be sacrificed if one is praised,
 As Crashaw mounts, Shelley must be abased.
 With what astonishment we witnessed Donne,
 A poet we have always counted on,
 Whisked from his niche among the second shelves
 And placed with Chaucer, Shakespeare,—and ourselves!
 While Blake departs, abandoned by the vogue,
 To Beulah-land, where Reason is the rogue;
 And Hopkins, fashion's choice to follow Donne,
 Rattling his rusty iambs, climbs the sun.

Blest be thy name, O Vogue, that canst embalm
 A minor poet with a potted palm;
 Make me immortal in thy exegesis,—
 Or failing that, at least a Doctor's thesis.

Yet, Robert, through the charlatans who swarm
 Like blowing gnats before the social storm,
 The stout immortals stand in this our time,
 With manners, morals, metres,—even rhyme.
 Not every age can triumph over death
 In the bright train of Queen Elizabeth,
 And our ingenuous and cynic age
 Has not quite lost the better heritage.
 Take Robert Bridges, laureate forever,
 Calm as the sea and flowing as a river,
 Who knew his source and end, but also knew
 The homely country he meandered through.
 Who, when we thought his broadening current spent,
 Flung high that sun-capped wave, his testament,
 The Testament of Beauty. Of the few
 Titles he gave his poems, all are true.

<sup>2</sup> "Sevenels," Brookline, Massachusetts—the home of Amy Lowell.

And Robinson, what other age but this
 Has bred so classic an antithesis:
 Mild in his manner, mocking in his eye,
 Bold in appraisal, and in statement shy,
 He knew all men,—the Man against the Sky.
 And urbane Santayana, who alone
 Among philosophers still seeks their Stone;
 Whose irony, in golden prose alloyed
 With doubt, yet yields not to the acid Freud;
 Who after years of rightful fame defrauded,
 Wrote one bad book at last,<sup>3</sup>—and all applauded.

If gold get rusty, what shall iron do?
 If poets, prophets, critics, are untrue
 Why blame the statesmen, who in turn reflect
 On dusty mirrors the uncircumspect?
 When poets laugh at metres, with applause,
 Why punish citizens who laugh at laws?
 All follies regimented are akin—
 Free verse and Bolshevism and bad gin.
 Surely a subtle spring, in flow or drought,
 Waters one age or burns another out.
 When worlds go mad, all things go mad together,
 Nations, philosophers, the arts, the weather.

Betholding war, Nature, who brooks no rival
 In blind destruction, threatens Man's survival.
 While underground he plants his dynamite,
 She answers with an earthquake overnight.
 While from ingenious wings his bombs rain down,
 She rips the clouds apart and cities drown.
 Machine guns clatter, but her ticking worm
 Of death bombards his armies with a germ.
 Nor can the propaganda of slow doubt
 That one by one puts all faith's candles out
 Find Nature unprepared; her insect ranks
 For Man's destructive disbelief giv<sup>o</sup> thanks.
 The ant, the termite, and their brotherhood
 Wait busily, as all good soviets should,
 To crack his concrete and to gnaw his wood,
 And after war and storm have done their worst,
 To view the last man, as they viewed the first.

From such dark thoughts only Dark Ages come;
 I see not yet the end of Christendom;—
 And if an end? In cloistered minds like yours
 The classic wisdom of the past endures;
 The ancient learning from the ancient guilt
 Survives, and from slim chances worlds are built.
 Black-armored barons, after Rome declined,
 Warred on each other and on soul and mind;
 Yet while they slept, cell after lonely cell,
 Nearsighted eyes bent to the phant quill.

<sup>3</sup> Santayana's The Last Puritan.

The barons' mail adorns Park Avenue,
 Quite spurious;—the words remain as true
 As when, frail thread amid a mad sword-dance,
 They led men to the sunlit Renaissance.
 The things that make outlive the things that mar,
 Rome and Byzantium crashed,—but here we are;
 And even the dark spectre of dark ages
 Calls forth old warriors who shame our sages:
 Which would you choose, to put it in a word,—
 To die with Arthur? or to live with Ford?

Men are as cells within a mighty brain
 Swept with one thought of happiness or pain;
 Thus when the Thinker gazed beyond all time
 Egypt and China blossomed at their prime,
 Both worshipers of beauty and of peace.
 That mood resolved. He meditated Greece,
 Whose culture, wedded to the arts of war,
 Brought beauty forth and slew the thing it bore.
 Less fortunate we who brought forth the machine
 And dare not slay it, lest the truth be seen
 That we, now helplessly identified
 With the machine, would perish if it died.
 We watch each other, our fates intertwined:
 It feeds us canned goods and we feed it mind;
 It kills us and then calls us from the grave
 With new machines, lest it should lack a slave.
 In war, where no one wins but the machine,
 I pondered as I brought the wounded in:
 Of these three choices—death, deformity,
 Or patched for war again, who would not die?
 And now the final triumph: the star actor
 In "Steel: a Tragedy," makes God a tractor.
 Yet let us still believe, in thinking deeper,
 These are but twitchings of a troubled Sleeper
 In whom the nightmare rages, and who can Tomorrow dream the incredible—a Man.

Why, Robert, look! it's after midnight. Always
 At this hour I hear stirrings in the hallways.
 You would not mind. If I recall aright
 You and Miss Lowell would converse all night,
 Seldom agreeing, always the best friends,
 That poetry can shape to different ends;
 Myself, too sleepy then as now, would run
 To catch the last car back at half-past one.
 Heigh-ho, I've seen worse things than morbid youth
 Inscribes in his dark diary. The truth
 Remains that my few perfect moments seem
 Eternal, and the bad ones but a dream.
 Like Johnson's friend, I woo philosophy,
 But cheerfulness breaks in in spite of me.
 So does the spirit sift a life away

Into its best, preparing for the day
 When, from its golden nucleus, shall rise
 That happy part attuned to happier skies.

But happier skies? That phrase is fustian stuff,—
 This green Connecticut is good enough;
 My shining acres and the house I built,
 All mine, all earned, all mortgaged to the hilt.
 If I may make some changes here and there
 When halos play on my unhallowed hair,
 New England winters well might be curtailed—
 In May it snowed, and in July it hailed.
 Rosebugs should all be banished, and with those
 The people who see rosebugs on the rose.
 And yet I shrink from this celestial boom,
 Lest, with improvements, also I assume Responsibility for things in bloom.
 I might forget wax flowers of huckleberry,
 I might leave out the fragrance of wild cherry;
 In short, I am content to leave to God
 The natural world. O that our statesmen would!

And so good night with lullaby, my friend,
 Republics fall and even letters end,
 And Horace at one elbow sings of home
 Far more eternal than the hills of Rome;—
 Caesar, in fact, must marvel, looking down,
 To find an Ethiope in his Gallic crown.
 And Gibbon, at my other elbow, gives
 Wry testimony of what dies, what lives,—
 A secret not to be imparted, but
 Known to Vermont and to Connecticut:
 New as tomorrow's dawn, old as the Nile,
 In Nefertiti's<sup>4</sup> tears and Shakespeare's smile,
 And all so simple in an age of guile;
 For Horace on his acres has no fears,
 His empire grows through twenty hundred years.

Good night, I take unconscionable time
 A-dying, but in rhymeless years a rhyme
 Bids one converse beyond the crack of dawn,—
 It now has cracked, and dew is on the lawn.
 Since I write oftener than you, I vow
 Another letter twenty years from now.

Howard McKinley Corning

HOWARD MC KINLEY CORNING was born October 23, 1896, on a farm a few miles west of Lincoln, Nebraska. He spent the years of his youth in Ohio, but his schooling there was limited on account of ill-health. In 1919 his family journeyed to

"the epic greenland of Oregon," where he took up his residence on Mount Tabor on the edge of Portland. It was here that he became a florist by vocation, raised prize poultry, and composed most of his verse.

His first volume, These People (1926), placed Corning as the leader of the group of young Oregon poets, a group which expressed itself through the work of H. L. Davis (whose "Primapara" received one of the prizes awarded by Poetry: A Magazine of Verse), Borghild Lee, Charles Oluf Olsen, Ethel Romig Fuller. Corning's equipment was greater than those of his fellows. Strangely enough, though These People was strongly local and Western in character, it was not without its foreign—and New England— influences. The inflection of E. A. Robinson directs though it does not dominate Corning's periods; in the subsequent poems the bantering metaphysics of Robert Frost are apparent. These lift Corning's preoccupations above a too rigid reporting and save him from a tendency to fall into monotonous reflections of monotony.

The Mountain in the Sky (1930) fulfills the promise of Corning's first book. The faults are accentual and not basic, the substance of his work is solid; its competence and sincerity are confirmed.

PRUNING VINES

In February, when the sap's below
 The inattentive earth, I take my shears
 And prune away the too-audacious years
 It's grapes I want, and not mere leafy show.
 I trim the trailing year's growth to a span,
 With only laterals intact for crop;
 A snip or two and I know where to stop
 To bring a harvest where my hooks began.
 It takes some fortitude to cut a vine
 Half into dead ends for the cloying mold,
 Where growth takes profit as the shears take hold,
 Cutting the heart a little . . . as I cut mine.
 But since it's grapes I want, I understand
 How to rebuke the heart to fill the hand.

AUTUMN BIRD

In autumn pastures where a bird had flown
 I sought behind the curtains of the wind.
 It wasn't any bird that I had known.
 I followed it to leave my heart alone.

What bird it was it swiftly interlined
 The meadow fence, and lo,
 It left me thinking that my eyes were blind
 Losing a bird so quickly, undefined.

It may have been that autumn's waning glow
 Had scared my sight. It may have been that kind
 Of bird that is less bird than hint of snow.
 Perhaps it was the autumn I saw go.

FAREWELL TO FIELDS

Farewell; the dark is falling on the wind.
 Far off the lights of slumber lift and wane.
 From harvest fields our hands are gone; the kind
 Last grace is rain.

The little ends of stubble will not miss
 Our feet, astride; but drinking at the stem
 Be cool without a need, so kind is this
 That covers them.

Then farewell; let them drink. Let sleep
 Be outward bound for us, though deep the bed.
 We, who were the hands to sow and reap,
 We have been fed.

THE MEADOW BROOK RUNS OVER

Whatever intentions
 The brook had at first,
 It broke its dimensions:
 The meadow immersed.

The blade stood up silver,
 The flower wore pearl
 The bee could not pilfer
 Nor warm wind uncurl.

A temporal sea
 To the lark and the plover,
 The sky looked to be
 As under as over.

The oak stood a dwarf.
 The water-skate ran his
 Prow from the wharf
 Of the clover-side crannies.

A month, and new flowers
 Will never say here
 Lay water for hours . . .
 So heaven draws near,

Antiphonal, seen
 A seasonless season;
 Then lost in between
 The dream and the reason.

Louise Bogan

LOUISE BOGAN was born in Livermore Falls, Maine, August 11, 1897, and was educated in country schools through New England and at the Girls' Latin School in Boston. Except for a year in Vienna and another in Santa Fé, she has lived in New York State since 1919.

Body of This Death (1923) is one of the most brilliant first books of the period. The accent is not new; we have already heard it more crisply in Elinor Wylie's precise syllables. But if Miss Bogan lacks her forerunner's dazzling craftsmanship, she achieves effects not unworthy of her subtlety. There are less than thirty poems in her volume and only two of them cover more than a page. Yet every stanza gives evidence of a mind which is as sensitized as the eye is sharp, an intellect which, for all its burden of thought, expresses itself best in the lyric. The longer blank verse is only moderately interesting compared with such a vivid screen as "Decoration" or so cool and chiseled a piece as "Statue and Birds." Few of her contemporaries have surpassed the finesse of these—few indeed have equaled it—while the bright contempt of "Women" and the frozen imagery in "Medusa" seem destined for more than contemporary applause.

Dark Summer (1929) emphasizes the impression made by her first volume. The technique, no longer so scintillating, is simpler; the accents, deep, bell-like, vesperal, are more her own. The metaphysical note has strengthened, the beat of measured blood has become more pronounced. "Simple Autumnal" and "Come, Break with Time" suggest Léonie Adams without implying indebtedness. Miss Bogan's poems, rooted in observation, rich in implication, are swiftly intuitive and her spirit has confirmed her intuitions. The Sleeping Fury (1937) is a still greater refinement of her gifts. Sometimes her spare definiteness reminds one of the later Yeats; sometimes the slow pace is too gravely retarded. But, with scarcely an exception, mood and measure are joined to establish her strict if somber accuracy.

M E D U S A

I had come to the house, in a cave of trees,
Facing a sheer sky.
Everything moved,—a bell hung ready to strike,
Sun and reflection wheeled by.

When the bare eyes were before me
And the hissing hair,
Held up at a window, seen through a door.
The stiff bald eyes, the serpents on the forehead
Formed in the air.

This is a dead scene forever now.
Nothing will ever stir.
The end will never brighten it more than this,
Nor the rain blur.

The water will always fall, and will not fall,
And the tipped bell make no sound.
The grass will always be growing for hay
Deep on the ground.

And I shall stand here like a shadow
Under the great balanced day,
My eyes on the yellow dust that was lifting in the wind,
And does not drift away.

W O M E N

Women have no wilderness in them,
They are provident instead,
Content in the tight hot cell of their hearts
To eat dusty bread.

They do not see cattle cropping red winter grass,
 They do not hear
 Snow water going down under culverts
 Shallow and clear.

They wait, when they should turn to journeys,
 They stiffen, when they should bend.
 They use against themselves that benevolence
 To which no man is friend.

They cannot think of so many crops to a field
 Or of clean wood cleft by an ax.
 Their love is an eager meaninglessness
 Too tense, or too lax.

They hear in every whisper that speaks to them
 A shout and a cry.
 As like as not, when they take life over their door-sills
 They should let it go by.

DECORATION

A macaw preens upon a branch outspread
 With jewelry of seed. He's deaf and mute.
 The sky behind him splits like gorgeous fruit
 And claw-like leaves clutch light till it has bled.
 The raw diagonal bounty of his wings
 Scrapes on the eye color too chased. He beats
 A flattered tail out against gauzy heats;
 He has the frustrate look of cheated kings.
 And all the simple evening passes by:
 A gillyflower spans its little height
 And lovers with their mouths press out their grief.
 The bird fans wide his striped regality
 Prismatic, while against a sky breath-white
 A crystal tree lets fall a crystal leaf.

STATUE AND BIRDS

Here, in the withered arbor, like the arrested wind,
 Straight sides, carven knees,
 Stands the statue, with hands flung out in alarm
 Or remonstrances.

Over the lintel sway the woven bracts of the vine
 In a pattern of angles.
 The quill of the fountain falters, woods rake on the sky
 Their brusque tangles.

The birds walk by slowly, circling the marble girl,
 The golden quails,

The pheasants closed up in their arrowy wings,
Dragging their sharp tails.

The inquietudes of the sap and of the blood are spent.
What is forsaken will rest.
But her heel is lifted,—she would flee,—the whistle of the birds
Fails on her breast.

THE ALCHEMIST

I burned my life that I might find
A passion wholly of the mind,
Thought divorced from eye and bone,
Ecstasy come to breath alone.
I broke my life to seek relief
From the flawed light of love and grief.

With mounting beat the utter fire
Charred existence and desire.
It died low, ceased its sudden thresh.
I had found unmysterious flesh—
Not the mind's avid substance—still Passionate beyond the will.

SIMPLE AUTUMNAL

The measured blood beats out the year's delay.
The tearless eyes and heart forbidden grief,
Watch the burned, restless, but abiding leaf,
The brighter branches arming the bright day.

The cone, the curving fruit should fall away,
The vine-stem crumble, ripe grain know its sheaf.
Bonded to time, fires should have done, be brief,
But, serfs to sleep, they glitter and they stay.

Because not last nor first, grief in its prime
Wakes in the day, and knows of life's intent.
Anguish would break the seal set over time
And bring the baskets where the bough is bent.

Full seasons come, yet filled trees keep the sky,
And never scent the ground where they will lie.

CASSANDRA

To me, one silly task is like another.
I bare the shambling tricks of lust and pride.
This flesh will never give a child its mother,—
Song, like a wing, tears through my breast, my side,

And madness chooses out my voice again,
 Again. I am the chosen no hand saves:
 The shrieking heaven lifted over men,
 Not the dumb earth, wherein they set their graves.

COME, BREAK WITH TIME

Come, break with time,
 You who were lorded
 By a clock's chime
 So ill afforded.
 If time is allayed
 Be not afraid.

I shall break, if I will.
 Break, since you must.
 Time has its fill,
 Sated with dust.
 Long the clock's hand
 Burned like a brand.

Take the rocks' speed
 And earth's heavy measure.
 Let buried seed
 Drain out time's pleasure,
 Take time's decrees.
 Come, cruel ease.

Joseph Auslander

JOSEPH AUSLANDER was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, October 19, 1897. He attended St. Catherine's School in Philadelphia, the Eastern District High School in Brooklyn, Harvard University, and The Sorbonne. In 1922 he became a teacher at Harvard and in 1924 his first volume, Sunrise Trumpets, appeared with a foreword by Padraic Colum.

The outstanding feature of Sunrise Trumpets is its technique. Auslander is an adroit fashioner of polished phrases, of smoothly slipping terms of speech. The music which he employs is wholly traditional; he disdains none of the older properties no matter how often they have been repeated. But, if Auslander is a promiscuous lover rather than a critical connoisseur of words, his romantic and, it may be suspected, rather conscious intoxication scatters a profusion of arresting epithets and images. He hears a cricket "stitching the dark edge of dawn," a cock "rapping in four rickety words his challenge to the sluggard," a bell which "jargons like water dripping in a well." If his verse seems to force the emotion rather than to allow the emotion to direct it, one remembers poems like "Interval," "Dawn at the Rain's Edge," and bits of illumination like "the hawk-dark trees," "water torturing through frozen snow," "the sulky gradual querulous content of chickens puffed and blinky in the sun," "lone gulls blown about the sky," "the bronze rumor of bees."

Auslander's chief fault is his straining after effects which are not so much dramatic as theatrical. Verbal felicity becomes a coddled facility, and the simplest of objects is described with excess. There is something extraordinarily comic about picturing a cow in the pasture in such terms as

. . . fragrantly plunging
Down at the web-washed grass and the golden clover
Wrenching sideways to get the full tingle. . . .
Crushing a murmurous afternoon of late lush August to wine!

Cyclop's Eye (1926) has sharper edges. The poet, though still inclined to over-decorate, is less determined to make his strings quiver with a continual vibrato. He seeks for toughness and sometimes, as in "Knockout" and "Steel," attains it. Letters to Women (1929) is not so fortunate. Although some of the stanzas are shrewd, the book errs on the side of adulation and affectation. The author of these missives seems to have been so overcome by his subjects that he degenerates into the confused softness from which he had almost shaken himself free. He indulges in orgies of words—of words about words—and (in the "Letter to Elinor Wylie" for example) ties himself up in phrases and metaphors as hopelessly mixed as:

O restless heart! O deaf and ravenous brain
Whose diamond arithmetic devoured
Confusion—only to be lost again
After the stringent epithet had flowered!

When Auslander is not so preoccupied with overloading the strange or saccharine epithet his verse has more quality. Hell in Harness (1929) is an unsuccessful over-compensation. Attempting the brusque savagery of Joseph Moncure March's The Set-Up and The Wild Party, Auslander's exaggerations are as glaring in his strained patois as in his abuse of precious words.

No Traveller Returns (1935) suffers from the same affectations which marred Auslander's earlier volumes. Here, however, the romantic lyricist is at war with himself; he wages an inconclusive struggle against his desire to prettify his objects. He would like to become one of the prophetic poets, but he is tricked by an ineradicable impulse to rely on the frayed trappings of the poetic stock-room, on a blurred composite pattern of April willows, bees, sea-gulls, mist,

Weaving verses out of wind and rain
And mist and buds and early morning.

More Than Bread (1936) and Riders at the Gate (1938) glitter with bright, if not always appropriate, epithets. The poems begin resolutely, but soon become bogged down in a confusion of pretty verbiage and pretentious conceits. The poet dedicates himself to resounding abstractions and "the eternal verities," but chiefly he is in love with words, as he confesses in the revealing "Indolent Credo."

His appreciation of poetry of the past is shown in The Winged Horse (1927) and The Winged Horse Anthology (1929) in collaboration with Frank Ernest Hill.

INTERVAL

Water pulls nervously whispering satin across cool roots, cold stones;
 And a bird balances his soul on a song flash, a desperate outcry:
 These are the minor chords, the monotones;
 This the undefeated gesture against an armored sky.

The moment is metal; the sun crawling over it is a fly
 Head down on a bronze ceiling; the hot stillness drones:
 And you go sliding through green sea shafts and I
 Am an old mountain warming his tired bones.

ULYSSES IN AUTUMN

I, who knew Circe, have come back
 To sink a furrow in the loam;
 Left twilights bellowing and black
 For the soft glow of home:
 To hear instead of a guttural sea
 The needles of Penelope.

 Still in my heart the Trojan sack
 Hisses; and Helen's beauty goes
 Glimmering. . . . And I have come back
 To drink the stale cup of repose—
 I, who knew Circe, and the wine
 That turns men grunting into swine.

Can I forget Achilles' Fly
 For ever from Calypso's guile?
 The roaring red pit of that Eye
 Drown in some domestic smile?
 Cluck at a sweaty plow, who led
 The white-flanked stallions of Diomed?

No, for these nerves are iron yet,
 And in these veins, this caverned breast,

Echoes the howling parapet;
 The trumpets will not let me rest. . . .
 Think you Odysseus drowses so
 Who still can bend the terrible bow.

The lotus voices call my blood
 Implacable and rumorous:
 All night there drums a ghostly thud
 Of feet. . . . O young Telemachus,
 Plead with your mother to release
 My spirit fevered for the Fleece!

The trees are straining in the storm,
 Spattering gold; and from the sea
 The old tang creeps between the warm
 Breath of her lovely flesh and me:
 Each dank leaf dripping down in fire
 Fuels the dream of Troy and Tyre.

I know it will be some little thing
 Like wild geese in a streaming wedge
 Severely beautiful; a string
 Of bird-prints on the water's edge
 That suddenly shall crack galley whips
 And hurl me headlong to the ships!

DAWN AT THE RAIN'S EDGE

The drowsy, friendly, comfortable creak
 Of axles arguing and wet spokes gleanings,
 When old empty tumrels blunder dreaming, too sleepy to speak,
 Blunder down the road in the rain dreaming.

And the house-lights rub at the shining dripping shadows
 Over the windows; through the drenched silver willows; everywhere:
 In the sulphurous fluctuant marsh this side the steaming meadows
 Where black weeds trouble the moon's drowned hair.

There is a sudden fuss of draggled feathers and the swing
 Of winds in a hissing burst of raindrops; then a cry

Of color at the hill's rim; a strange bright glimmering;
And a lark talking madness in some corner of the sky.

TOUCH

I hear a cricket at my window sill
Stitching the dark edge of the dawn; and now
The climbing siren of a distant cow
Rouses the sun over the eastern hill.

A cock is rapping in four rickety words
His challenge to the sluggard; and a bell
Jargons like water dripping in a well;
And dew is in the throats of all the birds.

I need but outstretched hands and I embrace
The luxury of leaves: yet, while I lean
On their long coolness, I can feel the keen
Light of your fingers drift across my face!

ELEGY

Fled is the swiftness of all the white-footed ones
Who had a great cry in them and the wrath of speed:
They are no more among us; they and their sons
Are dead indeed.

So the river mews twist in long loops over the river,
Wheeling and shifting with the wind's and the tide's shift,
And pass in a black night—and nothing is left but a shiver
To show they were swift.

Whenever I hear a gull's throat throb in a fog,
Watch the owl's velvet swoop, the high hawk's lonely paces,
I think of the heels of him who lies like a log
And his friends under turf and the rain creeping down on their faces

And my heart goes sick and the hell in my heart could break
To the edge of my eyes for the mates I shall not be knowing Anywhere now though the ice booms loud in the lake
And the geese honk north again and the heron's going.

David McCord

DAVID (THOMPSON WATSON) MC CORD was born in New York City, November 15, 1897. His ancestry is Colonial, "brick end." He looks with some pride on his maternal forebears, particularly on Dr. John Morgan, First Surgeon-General, under Washington, of the Revolutionary Army, and discoverer of pus, though, as he says,

"I don't see how anybody could have missed it." He has lived at both extremes of the continent; he went to private schools on Long Island and public schools in Oregon. He entered Harvard in 1917; went to Plattsburg, where he was Second Lieutenant in the Field Artillery; returned to college, where he specialized in physics and mathematics, planning to be an engineer, and graduated from Harvard in 1921, taking an A.M. in literature the following year.

After graduating he traveled extensively and worked at different occupations, the most important being his critical reviews, musical and dramatic, under H. T. Parker, for The Boston Transcript. This determined McCord's career as a writer. After his thirtieth year he alternated with ease and growing distinction between prose and poetry, between poetry and verse. Oddly Enough (1926) is a volume of characteristic essays. Oxford Nearly Visited (1929) and Bay Window Ballads (1935) are dexterous light verse which (especially in "Sonnets to Baedeker") attempt to graft American freedom on English form. Floodgate (1927) is composed of serious poetry, as is The Crows (1934), a far more important volume.

With The Crows a writer of delicate verse and distinguished prose emerges definitely as a poet. Perhaps McCord's outstanding "difference" is his blending of two tones: he not only combines but fuses light verse and pronounced poetry. Themes which another might develop into portentous effects are nimbly varied and played with a supple hand.

This unusual blend of grace and gravity is sounded in the untitled prelude which begins "If I should find, in the dark mind," in the introductory "Hyladae," in the group of eight poems "To a Child," in the whimsical "Moment in Marmalade," and the concise "Themis." Such poems are proof of McCord's dexterity and his cool disposal of rhymes. Sometimes he forgets to preserve that balance between the unexpected and the inevitable which is the perfection of rhyme. In the excess pleasure he derives from the pairing of hitherto unmated words he sometimes lapses into cleverness; in his too easy triumphs over the recalcitrant rhyme the technician achieves nothing nobler than preciosity. But these are infrequent flaws, and they do not apply at all to the title-poem and "A Bucket of Bees," the two high notes of the volume. The first is a monologue of a city-dweller remembering the guarded fields and windward knolls of his youth, the wet beginnings of Spring, recalled by the querulous talk—"the cool critical catarrh"—of crows flying over the town. "A Bucket of Bees" lacks the integration of the title-poem—its colloquial asides echo the tone of Frost and the opening lines recall Eliot and MacLeish—but the material is wholly McCord's, and the poem, gathering force as it proceeds, expresses a complete personality. The lines abound with verbal vigor, communicating authority without pomposity, strength without strain, a boy's remembered fancies mingled with a mature philosophy.

And What's More (1941) assembles the trickiest and the most teasing of McCord's light verse.

THE CROWS

I

This morning, when I heard the crows
Blaming the rows

Of city houses, blaming the noise,
 I knew no boys
 Were chasing them from field to tree to field,
 Or that the sentry, his sharp eye peeled
 For danger from the farm,
 Had spread wings and alarm,
 And the whole flock, suddenly mutinous,
 Gone flying over us.
 There was no field nor acre
 Which the proud city-maker
 Had not dug to houses, set in stone,
 Or scraped to the brown bone.
 There was no traffic here
 For crows this time of year
 If not in summer when geranium pots
 Flower the standard lots.
 It must have been the spring that drew them by.
 Lying in bed I didn't see them fly
 In querulous talk
 Above the sparrows' walk:
 I only heard them cawing as you hear
 Them in the longbow of the year,
 When the dead chestnut breaks upon the hill,
 And the dark woods come darker still
 Because the light is younger where it shows
 The clearest meadow and the blackest crows.

II

They were not come to stay.
 Crows never caw that way,
 Trailing the sound behind them as if scare
 Pursued them down the altitudes of air,
 Except to say once more:
 March is outside the door
 Flaming some old desire
 As man turns uneasily from his fire.
 March in the sky, least in the ground, that is:
 The city is not his
 Who looks for blades on brick
 And the cold dead to quick.
 On heavy wing

they cleared us

in a file

Of wise old ministers who never smile.
 Perhaps we seemed to them
 Another theorem
 Of parallels and planes
 For corbel brains.
 Perhaps they saw in smoke
 The substituting oak,

And the last windward knoll
 In calculus of coal.
 We were the writhen horn
 Above the wasting corn,
 We were the western pass
 To the deep eastern grass;
 Perhaps they said:
                                 the landfall of great seas,
 Or to be feared, or to be tried as trees.
 Lying in bed, I didn't hear it all:
 They had to wake me through a city wall
 With still the same cool critical catarrh
 That I have heard afar
 In greening wood or yellowing grain,
 And knew that I should die just not to hear again.

III

Whatever it meant, they never came to rest.
 Their going (as I guessed)
 Had more the text of migratory souls
 Than wings for other springs and other goals.

We were too much a fact or too unreal
 To break the steel,
 The bullet-heart, that drove
 Home to the meadow and the maple grove.
 I might have tried to strip the cloudy dawn
 From the right sky to see where they had gone,
 As one will follow geese
 Disturbing the mind's peace;
 But I preferred the lack
 Of their long day flown slowly into night
 And the last crow blinding from my sight,
 Black into black
 It was enough that I should hear by name
 Mention of the spring before it came;
 Rumor, which is all a city has
 Of the seed's own grievance to be grass.
 March, April, goes . . .
 I heard the crows
 Who less than man or bird
 Beg the impending word.
 I saw the raven head,
 Questioning
                                 (from my bed)
 Searching horizons still
 Over the dusty sill,
 Leaving between two thoughts one consolate sign
 Of what, too, once was mine.

OF RED IN SPRING

The maple's bloom is red,
There's red in early spring;
Winter, we know, is dead,
And dead's the final thing.

Autumn, we saw, was done
Whose smoke is chilled to ash;
But still the red comes on,
And still the mountains flash.

Who lit these kindling flares,
Since winter stood between,
To take us unawares
Who thought the spring was green?

A BUCKET OF BEES

So the wind blew all that night,
Bringing the rain, and the rain
Brought back Vermont, tomorrow,
A tendril, a twig, a package of the young spring green.
And it blew in the five blade needles of the pine,
On the hard leaf of the oak,
On farmers' ground still littoral with the red swamp maple.
It blew now
Blowing under the window, blowing the night
Across a cool lax harbor of the mind.
Whatever woke you woke
The great swell solo manual of the rain,
Filling the pipes with silver,
And the wind blew steadily improving noise.
And all that night the rain
Brought back the flower, grass, the headlands in the gulf,
The silent growing round the edge of barns,
The longer days,
The slack,
The disinfection of the spring.

I was too young to remember,
But even then malaria and quinine split
The nerves on edge already. Fever
Burned at the roots of eagerness and faith.
It's dark. It's hot. I'm hot.
The world was wrong as upside down, and lightning
Flashed from a cold sky whenever you went out.
The people talked too loud,
They were always going,
The cereals they gave you tasted black.
It's dark. I'm hot!

One night was full of dreams and empty corners,
And down the well without the fireman's pole.
It's dark. I'm burning!
So,
When a storm blew up along the coast,
As it always did in summer,
The door slammed and the rain came in the window sharp,
But never cool.
The voices down the hall died out.
I want a drink!
And what we match with solving intellect
Shouted for terror.
Why?
Or were you gone?

In the morning we all went for a long walk
On a country road in shining pools of water,
And I remembered remembering another storm.
The air was fine now,
And a warm sun worrying April out of March.
We saw what the wind had done: Where it snapped the ends
Of branches it should have snapped the year they died:
Old leaves blown out to new and leafless places.
Someone, we said, was raking in our woods
And ran away. But that was talk,
Though I could swear it so.
Most of the pools had sky in them, like mirrors
In an old room smiling to themselves;
Or some had trees and clouds, and some were cloudy,
Scored by the breeze that touched too near the ground.
Wearing stout shoes won't mean you won't get muddy;
But you don't mind it then, and just a step
In the clear water is stepping in the sky.
You break the image, and I'll argue
One blue splinter fastens to the sole
We walked on half an hour until the road
Managed it better where there was more view,
More cloud, less water. Round the bend
We could see just where a tree had fallen,
But not (and we were sorry) across our path.
It had gone left and down hill, or the way
The wind went. Down, we said,
And still, why should it break?
It broke off close. An oak.
Why not? The stump is rotten.
Well, if it's rotten it was done to die.
It's not just hollow.
Why not? I found a flying
Squirrel in one once, but you won't find one now.
No, I've found something better. Look in here!
Bees!

Honey! There
 In the shell
 (Like an old dugout at Ticonderoga)
 Terraces and tiers of wax.
 How many bees!
 All anxious, crawling,
 Tentative with cold,
 Sensing
 Disaster at the back of so much light.

If you had asked me once
 Where the great world was:
 Its limits, heart, earth, sky,
 And all that is,
 I should have said, 'The Garden'
 Which was home, my universe,
 Life bounden, A to Z.

That's aster now, to zinnia, I find;
 But flowers grew beyond their names, as gardens
 Grow beyond the sunshine, as the birds
 Fly beyond singing and our empty sight.

Someone had planted it before me, sowing
 Color with one hand, with the other scent.
 And color mixed with color,
 Smell with smell.

The apple blossom at the jonquil stem,
 And lavender upon the wane of thyme.

Flowers don't move, they said, but they were wrong.
 Stirring the roots with water, the rainy soil
 Raised to the bud their capillary powers,
 And then one morning in another May
 The winds shook out new blossoms, and they sailed
 Into the dendron sea of I'll forget.

The winds do that, but summer wears the tidy
 Rhythm of standing still and bending down.
 The humming bird, whose tongue has split a needle,
 Darts from the white arid voluntary bell,
 Savors the rose, and sucks the bindweed dry.
 His small obstructionist, the bee, climbs down
 The little chalice, opening style and anther,
 Bagged with the pollen, drunken of his find.

If you had asked me once, I should have said:
 Flower to flower, summer to summer, over
 And over, living and dying,
 Live and dead.

Back at the house we found a bucket
 To put the bees in, and the lid
 To keep them there until we found a hive.
 Some of them were dead, we thought,

And some half frozen. None
 (I thought) would do much stinging soon.
 I used the canvas country gloves
 That smelled of zwieback, and the bees were taken.
 One of them climbed up inside my sleeve.
 He acted for the others: Mind us, now.
 I pinched him at the elbow and got burned,
 But that was all. We killed the cripples.
 I hate to kill a bee.
 There was no queen,
 Or else we couldn't find her.

That was odd.

To put the broken honey in a pan,
 We had to take the tree-dust with it too;
 Cutting it loose there with a knife, and shaking
 A bee or another off from the under side.
 Professional store honey comes in squares,
 As though the bees bled antiseptic flowers,
 But this was some
 The Greeks found once in Thessaly; or bears
 In plunder, say as lucky as our own.
 You try it with a finger when the spring
 Is in the blood, and sorrow at the bone.
 The little well, the hexagon of wax,
 Interns a thimble of the blossom gone,
 The wild bright summer stolen as the birds
 Sang, and a man put whetstone to his scythe.
 The bucket had a heat now of itself,
 But we must set it carefully near the stove.
 The bees would want their strength,
 And need it more,
 To start again in a new hive,
 Captive, with another queen.

They'd come

To life a month too soon: a little
 Seething knot, explosive in the hand,
 And the ground dead cold outside. . . .

So wait till morning.
 There was no wind that night:
 The bees swarmed dark above the pillow,
 Threatening, in a fashion, as I dreamed.

It was exciting then to see the city:
 You went up in the morning on a train,
 Played in a toyshop, had éclairs and chocolate,
 Saw the great stores by holding to a hand,
 And woke up with the brakeman shouting. . . .
 Now you were going there forever. Monday
 Was the last good-by.

Good-by, green fields.

Gray stone, tall trees, wet leaves;
 Good-by, hill, brook, white fence;
take care, good-by.

Monday was the last day, and the farm
 Looked very small and lonely, and inside
 The rooms could empty with us standing talking.

There were so many things we might have done:
 The meadow lark had eggs,

but making butter

Needed cream of the cold crocks in the dark.
 Why were they cutting down the pleasant wood?

Why on a Sunday?

With the right light, now, and very careful,
 You could just see the trout swirl in the well.

Monday was the last day.

but the turtle

Walked in the yard the figures nineteen hundred.

Silence follows sound, and the green forest
 Follows the countryman and heels him down.
 When all is said, we know the number Vale!
 Wave us good-by: A century tomorrow
 Shatters the still steeled waters of what is now.

There was a man who raised bees for the queen:
 Her Majesty, long, wiry-legged, worth money.
 He raised them on a roof up-town, but social
 With blue dust, the soots of inland air.
 The roof was flat, the hives stood in a row
 From left to right in urban draft or weather,
 And didn't wear the name of apiary:
 But to the bees they seemed the size of home.
 Down stairs a clack of men, the strain of wheels,
 Or presses run by night, made cheap with sound
 A counterfut of August in the grasses.
 Other buildings, windows, smoke, brick towers,
 Higher, and deadly in a prison scheme,
 Robbed the shrill colony of dawn and dusk.
 That was a bee tree in a bonded wood,
 A company whose stocks were liquid gold.

We took the bucket in, the morning after,
 Like a skilled workman starting with his lunch.
 "These are the bees," we said, "the pioneers;
 They don't know cities, but they do a flower—
 Cockscomb and a honeysuckle vine.
 You keep them here and tell them this is theirs.
 Give them the ablest town queen of the roof.
 You want new blood, and bees' blood if it's wild
 Runs like a gypsy's in the swelt of summer."

He put them in, and shutting down the lid
 He shut the anger of that stormy day

Into a cubic foot of bee-black night.
 "I guess they'll keep," he said. "They're better off,
 They'll get more room than back in hollow stumps.
 I tell you, son, I've got some workers here
 Have been commuting longer than your dad;
 They fly way out, up country now, that's where.
 Taste the first drop, and I can name the field.
 It's wicked what these animals can do.
 They'll come straight down that single shaft of sun,
 Straight as an arrow, yes, a whole lot straighter,
 Their furry legs all tangled up with pollen.
 The bread of life was good clean Christian flour,
 But I've a notion bee-bread is the stuff
 With finer spirit; leastwise there's a strength
 And beauty to it for an evil city,
 As if the bees went after more than clover
 And brought us home free particles of God."

The bee goes out to flower
 And the mind
 Returns to youth his fountains or the slain.
 Between us and the truce of foreign hills
 Each day renews but life renewed before.
 Cut down the clover, cut the heart-strings too!
 The bee will find the blossom while the snath
 Is sickling at the stem, and we shall hear
 The heartbeats dying even as our death,
 But not too soon.

Life borders on the joy

Of joyful things.
 If we grow old, it is not with our age
 But with our youth: the hive too full,
 The soul too mattered with divine content.
 I take the red lance of the westerly sun
 And break my shield upon it. who shall say
 I am not victor? only that the wound
 Heals not, and that I fall again.

O lovely land and ancient upright wood,
 Call home thy servant, the conscriptive bee.
 His life is thine, his work; the geometric field
 An humble hire for fertilizing flowers.
 Call home the child, whose credulous first hours
 Burn at the heart of living, and surprise
 'The better reason with unbidden truth.
 Call home the man. He will not come.
 But in the closing dark his eyes may sometime
 Circle the lost last rim of his own world:
 "I walked there once. What turned my face away?"

REFLECTION IN BLUE

Blue sea, blue sky, blue eggs:
 O bird of yellow legs,
 Which is the bluest blue
 Of all you lead me to?

The sea is blue with sky
 As iris is with eye;
 The egg is blue with each,
 Though far from either's reach.

Since Eve in Eden fell
 The miracle of shell
 Has been of sea and air
 In all the blue that's there:

One shell has held the sea,
 The life that's given me;
 The sky's a shell as clear
 As all you've nested here.

Stephen Vincent Benét

STEPHEN VINCENT BENÉT, the younger brother of William Rose Benét, was born at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, in July, 1898. He was educated in various parts of the country, and graduated from Yale in 1919.

At seventeen he published a small book containing six dramatic portraits, Five Men and Pompey (1915), a remarkable set of monologues which, in spite of distinct traces of Browning and Kipling, was little short of astounding, coming from a schoolboy. In Benét's next volume, Young Adventure (1918), published before he was twenty, one hears something more than the speech of an infant prodigy; the precocious facility has developed into a keen and individual vigor. Heavens and Earth (1920) charts a greater imaginative sweep. Like his brother, the younger Benét is at his best in the decoratively grotesque; his fancy exults in running the scales between the whimsically bizarre and the lightly diabolic.

For a while Stephen Benét was too prolific to be self-critical. He published several novels (the best of which are Jean Huguenot and Spanish Bayonet), collaborated on two plays which flickered a few nights in New York, and, unconsciously perhaps, began imitating his contemporaries. King David, published in book form a few months after it won The Nation's poetry prize for 1923, is less Benét than usual; it seems unjust that at least half the prize for this poem was not awarded to Vachel Lindsay. Tiger Joy (1925) betrays haste; the poet allows his rhymes to dictate and often to blur the course of his imagery. But though Tiger Joy is padded out with negligible verse, it contains "The Golden Corpse," a splendid octave of sonnets, "The Mountain Whippoorwill" and "The Ballad of William Sycamore," two vigorous and thoroughly American ballads.

Stephen Benét's faculty for ballad-making stood him in good stead when he came to reconstruct the Civil War period in John Brown's Body (1928). With this work, the author, hitherto known only to a small circle, leaped into instant popularity. Within a few months, the book had reached more than one hundred thousand people, and Benét had proved that a long narrative poem if skillfully blended could hold attention as easily as a novel. It was awarded the Pulitzer Prize the year following its publication.

The weakness of John Brown's Body is in the treatment. Although his canvas is epic, the author sacrifices the unity of the epic by abruptly changing meters, by a cinematographic switching from one character to another, by interluding his narrative with lyrics, ballads, elegies, and even prose. Nor, in this intermingling, has he perfected a style of his own; the long cadences of Sandburg and the jingling beat of Lindsay occur throughout. It is, frankly, a work of assimilation rather than creation. Yet its virtues compensate for its defects. The historical events have been more powerfully projected by others, the battle-pictures are inferior to the fictional episodes—the forgotten George Parsons Lathrop has done better in "Keenan's Charge"—but the composite is so new, the issues so impartially treated, that the struggle takes on a vitality barely suggested by orthodox histories. Benét's achievement of showing the war through its impact on a large number of dramatis personae—of Jake Diefen, who sees the war in terms of his Pennsylvania farmland, of Spade, the runaway slave, of Breckenridge, the Tennessee mountaineer, of Connecticut born Jack Ellyat—is no small triumph. If Benét sacrifices unity, he gains speed, sudden interest and the nervous contrasts which are continually stimulating. If no single passage contains that unanalyzable but unmistakable quality which permeates great poetry, the originality of the work, the vigor of its portraits, the interpolated lyrics, and the unflagging pace reveal an unusually rich talent.

With his wife Rosemary, Benét wrote A Book of Americans (1933), a set of fifty-six verses about famous pilgrims, pioneers, and presidents, obviously designed for uncritical young readers, although the slender "Nancy Hanks" has a charm which is not only captivating but memorable.

Burning City (1936) is a strangely mixed collection; hortatory prophecies, nimble whimsicalities, and impassioned lyrics reveal a candor and conviction, but little sense of integration. The long "Litany for Dictatorships" is the most dramatic of the larger poems; it rises above the indebtedness to MacLeish and that poet's suspended conjunctions and characteristically dangling participles. The best of Benét's verse, however, is neither forensic nor inflated; it is nimbly lyrical and dexterously macabre. The nightmares of metropolitan life in the machine age are most effective; they combine whimsical mischief and genuine horror.

Thirteen O'Clock (1937) is an assembly of Benét's best short stories. Among other fantasies, it contains "The Devil and Daniel Webster," which has become a classic in its own time, and which has been made into a play, an opera (with music by Douglas Moore), and a moving picture, the last having been retitled All That Money Can Buy. The vein of tall tales and pseudo-folklore was continued in Johnny Pye and the Fool-Killer (1938).

RAIN AFTER A VAUDEVILLE SHOW

The last pose flickered, failed. The screen's dead white
 Glared in a sudden flooding of harsh light
 Stabbing the eyes; and as I stumbled out
 The curtains rose. A fat girl with a pout
 And legs like hams, began to sing "His Mother."
 Gusts of bad air rose in a choking smother;
 Smoke, the wet steam of clothes, the stench of plush,
 Powder, cheap perfume, nungled in a rush.
 I stepped into the lobby—and stood still,
 Struck dumb by sudden beauty, body and will.—
 Cleanliness and rapture—excellence made plain—
 The storming, thrashing arrows of the rain!
 Pouring and dripping on the roofs and rods,
 Smelling of woods and hills and fresh-turned sods,
 Black on the sidewalks, gray in the far sky,
 Crashing on thirsty panes, on gutters dry,
 Hurrying the crowd to shelter, making fair
 The streets, the houses, and the heat-soaked air,—
 Merciful, holy, charging, sweeping, flashing,
 It smote the soul with a most iron clashing!
 Like dragons' eyes the street-lamps suddenly gleamed,
 Yellow and round and dim-low globes of flame.
 And, scarce-perceived, the clouds' tall banners streamed.
 Out of the petty wars, the daily shame,
 Beauty strove suddenly, and rose, and flowered. . . .
 I gripped my coat and plunged where awnings lowered.
 Made one with hissing blackness, caught, embraced,
 By splendor and by striving and swift haste—
 Spring coming in with thunderings and strife—
 I stamped the ground in the strong joy of life!

WINGED MAN

The moon, a sweeping scimitar, dipped in the stormy straits,
 The dawn, a crimson cataract, burst through the eastern gates,
 The cliffs were robed in scarlet, the sands were cinnabar,
 Where first two men spread wings for flight and dared the hawk afar.

There stands the cunning workman, the crafty, past all praise,
 The man who chained the Minotaur, the man who built the Maze.
 His young son is beside him and the boy's face is a light,
 A light of dawn and wonder and of valor infinite.

Their great vans beat the cloven air, like eagles they mount up,
 Motes in the wine of morning, specks in a crystal cup,
 And lest his wings should melt apace old Daedalus flies low,
 But Icarus beats up, beats up, he goes where lightnings go.

He cares no more for warnings, he rushes through the sky,
 Braving the crags of ether, daring the gods on high,
 Black 'gainst the crimson sunset, gold over cloudy snows,
 With all Adventure in his heart the first winged man arose.

Dropping gold, dropping gold, where the mists of morning rolled,
 On he kept his way undaunted, though his breaths were stabs of cold,
 Through the mystery of dawning that no mortal may behold.

Now he shouts, now he sings in the rapture of his wings,
 And his great heart burns intenser with the strength of his desire,
 As he circles like a swallow, wheeling, flaming, gyre on gyre.

Gazing straight at the sun, half his pilgrimage is done,
 And he staggers for a moment, hurries on, reels backward, swerves
 In a rain of scattered feathers as he falls in broken curves.

Icarus, Icarus, though the end is piteous,
 Yet forever, yea forever, we shall see thee rising thus,
 See the first supernal glory, not the ruin hideous.

You were Man, you who ran farther than our eyes can scan,
 Man absurd, gigantic, eager for impossible Romance,
 Overthrowing all Hell's legions with one warped and broken lance.

On the highest steeps of Space he will have his dwelling-place
 In those far, terrific regions where the cold comes down like Death
 Gleams the red glint of his pinions, smokes the vapor of his breath.

Floating downward, very clear, still the echoes reach the ear
 Of a little tune he whistles and a little song he sings,
 Mounting, mounting still, triumphant, on his torn and broken wings!

THE BALLAD OF WILLIAM

SYCAMORE

(1790-1871)

My father, he was a mountaineer,
 His fist was a knotty hammer;
 He was quick on his feet as a running deer,
 And he spoke with a Yankee stammer.

My mother, she was merry and brave,
 And so she came to her labor,
 With a tall green fir for her doctor grave
 And a stream for her comforting neighbor.

And some are wrapped in the linen fine,
 And some like a godling's scion;
 But I was cradled on twigs of pine
 In the skin of a mountain lion.

And some remember a white, starched lap
 And a ewer with silver handles;
 But I remember a coonskin cap
 And the smell of bayberry candles.

The cabin logs, with the bark still rough,
 And my mother who laughed at trifles,
 And the tall, lank visitors, brown as snuff,
 With their long, straight squirrel-rifles.

I can hear them dance, like a foggy song,
 Through the deepest one of my slumbers,
 The fiddle squeaking the boots along
 And my father calling the numbers.

The quick feet shaking the puncheon-floor,
 The fiddle squeaking and squealing,
 Till the dried herbs rattled above the door
 And the dust went up to the ceiling.

There are children lucky from dawn till dusk,
But never a child so lucky!
For I cut my teeth on "Money Musk"
In the Bloody Ground of Kentucky!

When I grew tall as the Indian corn,
My father had little to lend me,
But he gave me his great, old powder-horn
And his woodsman's skill to befriend me.

With a leather shirt to cover my back,
And a redskin nose to unravel
Each forest sign, I carried my pack
As far as a scout could travel.

Till I lost my boyhood and found my wife,
A girl like a Salem clipper!
A woman straight as a hunting-knife
With eyes as bright as the Dipper!

We cleared our camp where the buffalo feed,
Unheard-of streams were our flagons;
And I sowed my sons like apple-seed
On the trail of the Western wagons.

They were right, tight boys, never sulky or slow,
A fruitful, a goodly muster.
The eldest died at the Alamo.
The youngest fell with Custer.

The letter that told it burned my hand.
Yet we smiled and said, "So be it!"
But I could not live when they fenced the land,
For it broke my heart to see it.

I saddled a red, unbroken colt
And rode him into the day there;
And he threw me down like a thunderbolt
And rolled on me as I lay there.

The hunter's whistle hummed in my ear
As the city-men tried to move me,
And I died in my boots like a pioneer
With the whole wide sky above me.

Now I lie in the heart of the fat, black soil,
Like the seed of a prairie-thistle;
It has washed my bones with honey and oil
And picked them clean as a whistle.

And my youth returns, like the rains of
Spring,
And my sons, like the wild-goose flying;
And I lie and hear the meadow-lark sing
And have much content in my dying.

Go play with the towns you have built of blocks
The towns where you would have bound me!
I sleep in my earth like a tired fox,
And my buffalo have found me.

LOVE CAME BY FROM THE RIVERSMOKE

(from "John Brown's Body")

Love came by from the riversmoke,
When the leaves were fresh on the tree,
But I cut my heart on the blackjack oak
Before they fell on me.

The leaves are green in the early spring,
They are brown as linsey now,
I did not ask for a wedding-ring
From the wind in the bending bough.

Fall lightly, lightly, leaves of the wild,
Fall lightly on my care,
I am not the first to go with child
Because of the blowing air.

I am not the first nor yet the last
To watch a goosefeather sky,
And wonder what will come of the blast
And the name to call it by.

Snow down, snow down, you whitefeather bird,
. Snow down, you winter storm,
Where the good girls sleep with a gospel word
To keep their honor warm.

The good girls sleep in their modesty,
The bad girls sleep in their shame,
But I must sleep in a hollow tree
Till my child can have a name.

I will not ask for the wheel and thread
To spin the labor plain,
Or the scissors hidden under the bed
To cut the bearing-pain.

I will not ask for the prayer in church
 Or the preacher saying the prayer,
 But I will ask the shivering birch
 To hold its arms in the air.

Cold and cold and cold again,
 Cold in the blackjack limb,
 The winds in the sky for his sponsor-men
 And a bird to christen him.

Now listen to me, you Tennessee corn,
 And listen to my word,

This is the first child ever born
 That was christened by a bird.

He's going to act like a hound let loose
 When he comes from the blackjack tree,
 And he's going to walk in proud shoes
 All over Tennessee.

I'll feed him milk out of my own breast
 And call him Whistling Jack.
 And his dad'll bring him a partridge nest,
 As soon as his dad comes back.

SONG OF THE RIDERS

(from "John Brown's Body")

The years ride out from the world like couriers gone to a throne
 That is too far for treaty, or, as it may be, too proud;
 The years marked with a star, the years that are skin and bone.
 The years ride into the night like envoys sent to a cloud.

Perhaps they dismount at last, by some iron ring in the skies,
 Dismount and tie their stallions and walk with an armored tread
 Where an outlaw queen of the air receives strange embassies
 Under a tree of wisdom between the quick and the dead.

Perhaps they are merely gone, as the white foam flies from the bit,
 But the sparkling noise of their riding is ever in our ears —
 The men who came to the maze without foreknowledge of it,
 The losers and the finders, under the riding years

They pass, and the finders lose, the losers find for a space.
 There are love and hate and delusion and all the tricks of the maze.
 There are always losers and finders. There is no abiding place
 And the years are unreturning. But, here and there, there were days.

Days when the sun so shone that the statue gave its cry
 And a bird shook wings or a woman walked with a certain mirth,
 When the staff struck out a spring from the leaves that had long been dry,
 And the plow as before moved on from the hilltop, but its share had opened the earth.

So the bird is caught for an instant, and so the bird escapes.
 The years are not halted by it. The losers and finders wait.
 The years move on toward the sunset, the tall far-trafficking shapes,
 Each with a bag of news to lay at a ghostly gate.

Riders shaking the heart with the hoofs that will not cease,
 Will you never lie stretched in marble, the hands crossed over the breast,
 Some with hounds at your feet to show that you passed in peace,
 And some with your feet on lions? It is time that you were at rest.

1935

All night they marched, the infantrymen under pack,
 But the hands gripping the rifles were naked bone
 And the hollow pits of the eyes stared, vacant and black,
 When the moonlight shone.

The gas mask lay like a blot on the empty chest,
 The slanting helmets were spattered with rust and mold,
 But they burrowed the hill for the machine-gun nest
 As they had of old.

And the guns rolled, and the tanks, but there was no sound,
 Never the gasp or rustle of living men
 Where the skeletons strung their wire on disputed ground. . . .
 I knew them, then.

"It is seventeen years," I cried. "You must come no more.
 We know your names. We know that you are the dead.
 Must you march forever from France and the last, blind war?"
 "Fool! From the next!" they said.

Horace Gregory

HORACE GREGORY was born April 10, 1898, in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, of English, Irish, and German descent. He attended the Milwaukee School of Fine Arts and, after a year of study under a tutor, went to the German English Academy, and then to the University of Wisconsin, from which he graduated in 1923. Then came six years of free lance writing, chiefly book-reviewing, in New York, where he married Marya Zaturenska, the poet. He has been on the English faculty at Sarah Lawrence College since 1933.

Gregory at first was entirely under the spell of the classics; after reading Byron, he turned to Landor, Pope, and Dryden. At college his interests became completely Latinized, and, though he dropped his classicism after seeing the tenements and poverty-ridden alleys of the sodden Chelsea section of Whitman's "glorious Manna-hatta," enough persisted so that he translated The Poems of Catullus (1931), rendering them, however, in the American idiom. There was a "first" book of traditional lyrics which Gregory destroyed upon his arrival in New York; a few years later he published Chelsea Rooming House.

Chelsea Rooming House (1930) is a half-detached, half-indignant work; a set of monologues dramatizing the lives of those crowded into the slums of New York's lower west side. Its observation is keen to the point of penetration; its sense of sympathy is surpassed only by the faintly restrained sense of outrage. There is no doubt about Gregory's social sentiments nor his political preferences, but he does not resort to polemics or propaganda. He persuades the reader by the integrity of his poetry. No Retreat (1933) is a more lyrical collection. "Poems for My Daughter" and "Good Friday" owe something to T. S. Eliot's juxtaposition of the classic-rhetorical and the sharply colloquial, but the basic tone is Gregory's, and "Valediction to My Contemporaries" is both biographically and esthetically authentic.

Chorus for Survival (1935) is the most frankly personal of Gregory's volumes. The intense self-participation is declared in the eloquent "Prologue," which is a sort of Prothalamion-1935 Model, with its nervous music. It lifts itself vividly in "Ask no return," nostalgically in the poems recalling the poet's youth by the Great Lakes, symbolically in the section in which Emerson points an American panorama, gravely in the concluding lines "For you, my son." Some may object to a certain obscurity of utterance, a confusion of image and effect. But such obscurity (where it exists) is not willful. Nor does it proceed from a desire to over-compensate for a paucity of the imagination. The figures follow so rapidly that the poet's mind leaps from one to the other, taking the ellipses in his stride, and the reader is sometimes unable to take the leap with him.

Poems 1930-1940 (1941) is a selection from Gregory's other volumes with the addition of a new group of poems. The book is not a mere assembly of verses for various occasions, but a set of recurrent themes with clarifying key poems. Few of the poems can be read as straight narratives, for they indulge in a freedom of form and effect; they employ the montage of cinema, the interrupting voice of the radio, the summons of the quick-changing telephone dial. Like Eliot, Gregory is fond of the dissonant chord and the unresolved suspense; like Hart Crane, he crowds image upon image to increase sensation and suggest new perspectives. But he does not share Eliot's disillusionments or Crane's disorganization. There is constant control as well as positive belief in Gregory's poetry; his faith is a social faith. Plain statement and elliptical suggestion are employed to create characters and dramas of quiet violence. The intensity disturbs continuity, but (the poet might well insist) so does modern life; the tone is appropriately tough and complex and strictly contemporary. Gregory's "M'Phail," like Eliot's "Pruferk" and Robinson's "Miniver Cheevy," is a symbol of the lost man, the failure who escapes from the actual world into a dream-world of feeble excitement and false grandeur. The later poems round out the earlier verse and give it a growing design; they reflect the forces of the past focussed upon the present.

Besides his poetry, Gregory has written Pilgrim of the Apocalypse (1933), an important critical study of D. H. Lawrence, his symbols and his significance.

THEY FOUND HIM SITTING IN A CHAIR

They found him sitting in a chair;
 continual and rigid ease
 poured downward through his lips and heart, entered the lungs and spread until paralysis possessed his knees.

The evanescent liquid still bubbling overflows the glass and no one heard the telephone ringing while friends and strangers pass.

(Call taxis, wake the coroner, police; the young ex-millionaire is dead.) Examine unpaid bills, insurance blanks and checks unfold from refuse in a right-hand drawer
to read before the body's cold,

Lifelike, resembling what we were,
erect, alert the sun-tanned head:
polo or golf this afternoon?
And night, the country club or bar?

—drink down to end all poverty,
two millions gone,
and stir no more.

Because I know his kind too well, his face is mine, and the release of energy that spent his blood is no certificate of peace,
but like a first shot heard in war.

And not for him, nor you, nor me that safe oblivion, that cure to make our lives intact immure old debts and keep old friends.

Even in death, my lips the same whisper at midnight through the door and through storm-breaking hemisphere, rise at that hour and hear my name.

POEMS FOR MY DAUGHTER

Tell her I love
she will remember me always, for she is of my tissues made;
she will remember
these streets where the moon's shade falls and my shadow mingle with shadows sprung
from a midnight tree.
Tell her I love that I am neither in earth nor sky,
stone nor cloud,
but only this walled garden she knows well and which her body is.

Her eyes alone shall make me blossom for her sake;
contained within her, all my days shall flower or die, birthday or funeral concealed where no man's eye finds me unless she says:
He is my flesh and I am what he was.

VALEDICTION TO MY CONTEMPORARIES

*The return after ten years New York, Chicago,
Madison*

Entrain airport New York Chicago west piercing the sunset's terminal where day breaks midnight into stars before the dawn
Superior Lake Erie Michigan:
seawind but no saltsea in this lake spray clear eyes and nostrils: drink on health: the sand our shores.

Stop signals home again!

Awake at morning, spring coiled in the body
and at the narrow window slit in stone, skylight and sun.

Tilt the horizon down,
ride windward through Wisconsin miles of corn,
grazing the shallow valley and long plains.

O Alma Mater on the hill! What green hills, Cicero, vanish, return. What stone embankments of hope, desire, what little almost islands Sirmio anchored within us rest, flower in sleep, Catullus, welcomed home.

II

The University of Wisconsin 1919

Here was the campus of our hearts, my friends,
Plato's green-treed republic of the air:
see what miraculous fruit its branches bear, oceans of maple spray, green harbored, flowing against the sky: and from these shores Greek towers . . .

See how the white dome trembles in the sun,
dissolves at noon three thousand years away
where the antique nightingale engraved in bronze still sways unheard forever, now entwined within the steel crescendos of the mind.

The indecisive peace after war which lasted until 1929

III

Those who return, return to empty halls, the crystal image in the sky, pellucid
limbs that fade in shadows on these walls:

This peace was ours: the slow guns still resounding peace: drive homeward angels from Versailles
in limousines sunk under no man's land.
Run the machine guns through the arras—dead?
Not dead but much alive.

How shall we find
the bodies of those unslain, exiled from war but now returned, furloughs of exile signed from all green ports on earth?

The birth certificate of love declared obscene: Faith of no faith, Our Father, do not destroy this faithlessness to friend or enemy, lest we perish to no end.

IV

Alternate speeches individual lovers walking in the shadow of Lucretius

Measure the atoms of our souls, O Roman death's astronomer Lucretius.

Spires of light ascend incarnate memories: the four years spanned by the quick, sinewy shadow of his hand:

(And in this shadow where she stood,
flight in her hair!
the limbs reveal undress that virgins wear
to meet the bridegroom on the wedding stair, do not unsay her testament, O love.

"Live for this hour and we who die today kiss lips that bloom forever underground."
And did you call me by his name who died naked, Parian attitudes of death entwined your limbs and his: kiss and restore his body's heat in mine, this earth his grave:
sleepless, his blood drives home niagaras in our veins)

—O Mors Aeterna,
lean from the fiery ramparts of world's end,
time's end and love's last image scrolled in quicksilver across the mind—descend voice of a million tongues, your elegies
(some say that suicide usurped his blood) resound no more. . . .

Mount stairways to the sun!
We have survived your heritage, these years consuming time toward death too swift for tears.

v

The valediction

The course of empire westward to Cathay rides in the east: the circle breaks in fire:
 these charred remains of what we were expire,
 (O incandescent speed!) the hands, lips, eyes anonymous. Rise atque vale, rise—another generation shall disown
 these years in darkness each to four winds blown
 (the deeds are obsolete as Helen's war) . . .

Good-by, Il Penseroso of our spring,
 forgive our ashes and destroy the urn:
 unwind the clock, empty the seasons down rivers of memory—do not return!

ASK NO RETURN

Ask no return for love that's given embracing mistress, wife or friend,
 ask no return:
 on this deep earth or in pale heaven,
 awake and spend
 hands, lips and eyes in love,
 in darkness burn,
 the limbs entwined until the soul ascend.

Ask no return of seasons gone:
 the fire of autumn and the first hour of spring,
 the short bough blossoming through city windows when night's done, when fears adjourn

backward in memory where all loves end in self again, again the inward tree growing against the heart and no heart free.

From love that sleeps behind each eye in double symmetry

ask no return,
 even in enmity, look! I shall take your hand;
 nor can our limbs disjoin in separate ways again,
 walking, even at night on foreign land
 through houses open to the wind, through cold and rain, waking alive, meet, kiss and understand.

FOR YOU, MY SON

For you, my son,
 I write of what we were:

Under cool skies, Wisconsin's April weather:
 The lilac fragrance on our lips and hair,

Field and the lake where memories restore
Westward the wave to India, the passage
Chartered through night and the returning dawn

Over the mast-head, spars:
                                New York,
Green Castle Gardens at thy side:
Brooklyn, the Battery, wide-breasted Whitman there,
Hand to the shoulder of the pioneer:
O many-footed echoing Manhattan,
Thy ships at harbor swaying with the tide.
Break here the lilac bough in April's weather,
Gather, foregather
                                in the pale mist of Juneau's city,
And in the valley, dry Menominee
(Where forests were, clay-banked the silver river:
The trail in memory across the plain)

Turn where the earth's plowed under,
There at the root, the lilac flowering
In tombs that open when remembered spring
Comes home again beneath the pine roof-tree.

And did you hear the voices
Out of sand beach, lake waves?
Leaping in the dark:
Pacing the forest to the inland sea.

Know what we were:
Our father's father
Ex-Dubliner, the tired eyes, bright laughter
Where the cold heart concealed disaster:

"How many times before we fall,
We fail.
I am a tall man, handsome for my years,

Erect three score, the six foot two and three hands taller
Mounting to steer the horses beggars ride.
And over Michigan the space too small
For any man my size:
Ex-patriarch, astronomer, engineer
From the black-green growing turf where I was born
The black-bird army wheeling close through cloud

(breaking the sky through sunlight, rain until the violet, long archaic twilight empties its shadow over hills again)

Building my bridges to oblivion,
 Even here, across the lake, across the sea.
 See the cold island where I was born,
 Peace where there is no peace, always the blind
 Violent war behind each blinded eye,
 And darling Emmett dead, the cause in blood
 Against gray walls.

Priest over priest,
 Walking in prayer to soothe the dead,
 Over each friend betraying friend,
 The dark stain spreading is a blood-clot in the mind.
 Wherever I go now and even here
 (Seeing sky break in spring new hemisphere)
 There is no rest for me in the new land."

Know what we were; this is the hour

White-haired millionaire

Starts from the dream:

"The banks are broken, Gas has fallen;
 Consolidated Ice and Frigidaire
 Dropped down Chicago River;
 River swimming with rats, the poor:
 No virgin safe tonight, pack up your girls,
 Call the militia, ride
 Down blackened streets in hell
 Machine-gun fire until the pickets fall.
 Pity the poor, but not the undeserving poor,
 The right arm raised in blood,
 Whose hand is bleeding at my door,
 The million strong
 Army at my door and the lock sprung."

Turn here, my son

(No longer turn to what we were)

Build in the sunlight with strong men,

Beyond our barricade:

For even I remember the old war

And death in peace:

The neon sign 'Success' across our foreheads.

(Under the earth, shaken, as I am trembling now:
 The small room where the body moves alone:

sleepless I saw the dream;
 I saw my head upon the pillow and the blood)

*the naked bed, the folding chair
 Voiceless we smile; we are not violent.*

And this is fear, fear,
 The empty heart and the closed lung,

The broken song:
My classmates a republic of old men,

Yet even here, my hand to you, my son.

I tell you love returns
Changing the hour:
                        break here the lilac bough,
Scatter the ashes in the tomb before the slow
Wind gathers into storm.
Over the cities and the yellowing plain
In bitter drought:
                        wait for new rain, welcome the men
Who shall survive, outface despair,
Terror and hate
                        to build new fire
At an empty hearth,
Burn doubt and fear.

As the map changes, through the cold sky,
Lean from the cockpit, read
The flower of prairie grass in seed (Though here is war
  my hand points where the body
Leaps its dead, the million poor,
Steel-staved and broken and no grave shall hold them
Either in stone or sea; nor urn nor sand,
Skyline of city walls, their monument,
And on this field, lockstep in millions joined,
New world in fire opens where they stand.)

THE POSTMAN'S BELL IS ANSWERED EVERYWHERE

God and the devil in these letters, stored in tin trunks, tossed in wastebaskets,
or ticketed away in office files:
love, hate, and business, mimeograph sheets, circulars,
bills of lading, official communiqués, accounts rendered. Even the anonymous letter says,
Do not forget.

And in that long list, Dean Swift to Stella,
Walpole to Hannah More, Carlyle to Jane—and what were Caesar's "Gallic Wars" other than letters of credit for future empire?

Do not forget me.

I shall wear laurels to face the world;
you shall remember the head in bronze,
profile on coin.

As the bell rings, here is the morning paper and more letters,
the post date 10 P.M. "It is an effort
for me to write; I have grown older.
I have two daughters and a son, and business prospers,
but my hair is white; why can't we meet for lunch?
It has been a long time since we met;
I doubt if you would know me if you glanced quickly at my overcoat and hat, and saw them vanish in a crowded street. . . ."

Do not forget. . . . "Oh, you must not forget you held me in your arms while the small room trembled in darkness; do you recall the slender, violet light between the trees next morning through the park?
Since I'm a woman, how can I unlearn
the arts of love within a single hour,
how can I close my eyes before a mirror,
believe I am not wanted, that hands, lips, breast are merely deeper shadows behind the door
where all is dark? . . ."

Or, "Forgive me if I intrude; the dream I had last night was of your face; it was a child's face, wreathed with the sun's hair, or pale in moonlight,
more of a child than woman; it followed me
wherever I looked, pierced everything I saw, proved that you could not leave me, that I am always at your side. . . ."

Or, "I alone am responsible for my own death." Or,
"I am White, Christian, Unmarried, 21." Or, "I am happy to accept your invitation." Or, "Remember that evening at the Savoy-Plaza?" Or, "It was I who saw the fall of France."

As letters are put aside, another bell rings in another day; it is, perhaps, not too late to remember the words that leave us naked in their sight,
the warning,

"You have not forgotten me;
these lines were written by an unseen hand twelve hours ago. Do not reply at this address; these are the last words I shall write."

THIS IS THE PLACE TO WAIT

(from "The Passion of M'Phail")

When you are caught breathless in an empty station and silence tells you that the train is gone, as though it were something for which you alone were not prepared and yet was here and could not be denied,
when you whisper, Why was I late, what have I done?,
you know the waiting hour is at your side.

If the time becomes your own, you need not fear it;
if you can tell yourself the hour is not the thing that takes you when you sit staring through clinic waiting-room white walls into the blank blue northern sky
frozen a quarter-mile above the street, and you are held there by your veins and nerves spreading and grasping as a grapevine curves through the arms and back of an enamelled iron riverside park seat, you need not think, Why must I wait until the doctors say:

"We have come to lock you up.
It's the psychology of things that has got you down;
if you complain, we shall take care of you until you know at last you can't escape.

Is your dream
the dream of a child kept after school, made to write a hundred times
what three times seven means,
while in your sleep, before you get the answer,
the blackness fills and swells with pictures of Technicolor inkstain butterflies?

Is that ink blot a tiger in a bonfire? Are these the spines of ancient caterpillars?
Is this the shadow of a wildwood, leaping deer?

Is that what you see, or what you think you see?
Then we can tell you what you are,
what you can do, and what you ought to be,
as though your life were written down in court,
your name the last word on a questionnaire.
There is nothing private that we do not know;
you can't deny these figures on a chart
that follow you no matter where you go.
Each zero is an open, sleepless eye piercing the hidden chambers of the heart,
and if you fail, or if you kill yourself,
we shall know why."

It is when the waiting forces you to stop in stillness that you wish would not return that you say, I am not the same as other men;
I must live to wake beyond the tears of hope into an hour that does not quite arrive. . . .

And in that quiet, lost in space, almost remember the difficult, newborn creature you once were,
in love with all the wonders of the world,
seeing a girl step, white and glittering as a fountain,
into cool evening air,
knowing you could not touch her,
or dare to still the floating, flawless motion
of that pale dress above its glancing knees, bright as the sight of sun on Easter morning dancing its joy of earth and spring and heaven over the sleeping bodies of men in cities and between the branches of the tallest trees.

It is then you tell yourself,
Everything I live for is not quite lost.
Even if you've waited someplace far too long,
if you can't call it peace, you call it rest;
if you can't call it luck, you call it fate;
you then know that when anything goes wrong,
perhaps it also happened in the past.

You light a cigarette, you carefully blow out the match.

You know again you have to wait.

Malcolm Cowley

MALCOLM COWLEY was born August 24, 1898, at Belsano in the valley between Laurel Hill and Chestnut Ridge, Pennsylvania. He was educated in the Pittsburgh public schools, at Harvard University, and the University of Montpellier. After going abroad he became identified for a while with the "left wing" group, helped edit "Secession," and contributed sporadically to the less popular magazines. Later he became one of the editors of The New Republic. Unrecognized as a creator, he became known for his translations from the French, and received especial praise for his version of Paul Valéry's Variety and Maurice Barrés' The Sacred Hill. It was not until his thirty-first year that he received serious appraisal as a critic and as an author of original gifts.

Blue Juniata (1929) traces, more or less chronologically, the genesis and growth of a poet. It begins in Cowley's west-central Pennsylvania and accompanies him on a fancied escape to Greenwich Village, through a further retreat (this time to Europe during the Valuta years of 1920-1924), a revulsion from self-imposed exile, to the final return. It has, therefore, the round development characteristic of the novel, a continuity and expansion one seldom finds in a book of poems. The first and, in many ways, the best section is sensitive and even lyrical; the second records that sentimental attachment to the sordid which, appropriate to youth, is a feverish and inverted nostalgia; the third registers a natural though somewhat elegant scorn for the Valutaschweine and the unrealities of a life which "ceased to have any values, only prices"; the fourth is a mixed paeon and protest, a reaction to the speeded-up, machine-jazz-driven, overstimulated metropolis of "lasting impermanences"; the fifth and concluding section is the coda, self-described by its subtitle "Old Melodies: Love and Death."

Here is the material for a searching work and, even in the most experimental pages, there is nothing superficial about Cowley. But, except in the first section and parts of the last, Cowley penetrates fewer surfaces than he leaves undisturbed. This is chiefly due to a method which is disruptive and to an idiom which is staccato and often feverish. Cowley himself is quick to forestall his critics, saying in one instance, "I have ceased to value many of these poems; their emotions and their technique are too impermanent," and in another, "Our writings . . . had other qualities that were more questionable—a sort of crooked sentiment, a self-protective smirk." Much of this is the poetry of adolescence, but the adolescent who was responsible for "Kelly's Barroom," "Nocturne," and "Free Clinic" could turn, a few years later, to expression as ripe as "Three Hills" and as simple-startling as "Two Swans."

The title-poem, "Mine No. 6" and "The Farm Died," are further advances. They mark, with increasing confidence, the poet's attempt to record the conflict between time and timelessness, an accomplishment emphasized by the double sonnet "Winter."

BLUE JUNIATA

Farmhouses curl like horns of plenty, hide lean paintless shanks against a barn, or crouch empty in the shadow of a mountain. Here there is no house at all—

Only the bones of a house,
lilacs growing beside them,
roses in clumps between them,
honeysuckle over;
a door, a crooked chimney,
mud-chinked, a yawning fireplace,
the skeleton of a pine;

a railroad thirty yards from the empty door.

I heard a railroad section-man playing on a jew's-harp,
Where is now that merry party I remember long ago?
Nelly was a lady . . . twice . . . Old Black Joe,
as if he laid a hand upon my shoulder,
saying:

“Your father lived here long ago;
your father's father built the house, lies buried under the pine—”

Sing Nelly was a lady
. . . Blue Juniata . . . Old Black Joe.

For sometimes a familiar music hammers like blood against the eardrums, paints a mist across the eyes, as if the smell of lilac, moss-roses and the past became a music
made visible, a monument of air.

THE FARM DIED

I watched the agony of a mountain farm,
a gangrenous decay:
the farm died with the pines that sheltered it;
the farm died when the woodshed rotted away.

It died to the beat of a loose board on the barn
that flapped in the wind all night;
nobody came to drive a nail in it.
The farm died in a broken window-light,

a broken pane upstairs in the guest bedroom,
through which the autumn rain
beat down all night upon the Turkey carpet;
nobody thought to putty in a pane.

Nobody nailed another slat on the corncrib;
nobody mowed the hay;
nobody came to mend the rusty fences.
The farm died when the two boys went away,

or maybe lived till the old man was buried,
but after it was dead I loved it more,
though poison sumac grew in the empty pastures,
though ridgepoles fell, and though November winds came all night whistling through an open door.

MINE NO. 6

They scoured the hill with steel and living brooms
of fire, that nothing living might persist;
here crouch their cabins; here the tipple looms uncompromising, black against the mist.

All day the wagons lumber past, the wide squat wheels hub deep, the horses strained and still;
the headlong rain pours down all day to hide
the blackened stumps, the ulcerated hill.

Beauty, perfection, I have loved you fiercely
—even in this windy slum, where fear drips from the eaves like August rain, and scarcely a leaf sprouts, and a universe of pain labors to bear its stillborn fruit—even here
. . . your long white cruel fingers at my brain.

WINTER: TWO SONNETS

I

The year swings over slowly, like a pilot southward now driving from the cold and dark toward vertical suns and days of briefer twilight and lights less promptly lighted in the park,

more definite nights, and days more sharply ending.
. . . How shrouded, empty of voice, the streets appear in these December dusks, their skies distending till Snow falls at the turning of the year.

Only in a dead city one man waking,
who tried to read the city by the glow of towers feebly luminous and seeking
God in the skies grown suddenly bright with snow, who listened, till he heard the city speaking in mortuary whispers to the snow.

II

When little daily winds have died away,
and turkeys climb to roost in the apple tree,
across the snow night creeps so gradually
no eye can mark the cornerstone of day.

Now tightly draw the blinds against the dark and see in lamplight how the room awakes,
Listen . . . through the tangible silence breaks,
out of the woodlot, a dog-fox's bark.

A creak of rusty hinges in the wind:
his voice was like the rasping of a door,
and when it ceased the darkness instantly became so hugely silent that behind a final range of hills we heard the sea growling with all his voices at the shore.

Hart Crane

HAROLD HART CRANE was born in Garrettsville, Ohio, July 21, 1899. From the beginning his life was unhappy. In youth his parents quarreled and separated; he sided with his mother, regarded his father as his enemy, and considered himself doomed by the "curse of sundered parentage." He never finished high school; he left home but was unable to find a place for himself. Sporadically he tried to earn a living. He was employed in a print shop; wrote copy in advertising offices; packed candy in his father's warehouse; worked briefly as a riveter in a Lake Erie ship-yard, a reporter on the Cleveland Plain Dealer, and manager of a tea-room. But it was impossible for him to stabilize himself. He began to live recklessly, love indiscriminately, and drink violently. He traveled to Europe and Mexico, hounding himself wherever he went with a sense of guilt and (as though in compensation) a mania of persecution. His genius did not go unrecognized, but he fought the very friends who appreciated him most. He had periods of great fecundity when his felicity with words was dazzling, but these times were followed by periods of agonizing sterility, neurotic behavior, and self-destructiveness. Emotional instability was increased by economic insecurity and sexual irregularity. He became a chronic alcoholic, purposely blunting his sensibilities, driving himself to disintegration. The death-wish was fulfilled in his thirty-third year. Having temporarily escaped his problem in Mexico, he could not face returning to an America which meant a return to responsibility. He jumped from a north-bound steamer in the Gulf of Mexico, April 28, 1932. The body was never recovered.

Crane's first poem was printed when he was seventeen; his first book, White Buildings (1926) appeared almost ten years later. Its verbal ingenuity was at once apparent; even those who found the book bizarre were forced to acknowledge its startling imagery and power of phrase. Much of it was roundly rhetorical, but it was rhetoric of a new order. It was influenced by Rimbaud, Poe, Eliot, and Wallace Stevens—experimenters in tonal allusiveness and the color value of words—but Crane often transcended his ingenuities. The very first lines of the book were illuminating:

As silent as a mirror is believed
Realities plunge in silence by . . .

This, wrote Waldo Frank, was "a superb expression of chaos, and of the poet's need to integrate this chaos within the active mirror of self." The realities "plunge by" accompanied by such flashes of vision as "The seal's wide spindrift gaze toward Paradise," "where the cedar leaf divides the sky," "in sapphire arenas of the hills" and (writing of the sea) "this great wink of eternity." Alternating between delineation and complete departure from representation, the verse approximates and sometimes attains an "absolute" poetry, a poetry which lives on its own music, a music in which meaning is often incidental.

One of the sources of this verbal "absolutism" was not realized until some years after Crane's death. Recently, however, there was recovered the manuscript of an uneducated, poverty-stricken, and completely unknown poet, Samuel Greenberg. Greenberg had died in 1916, at the age of twenty-three, destitute and tubercular on Wards Island, New York. Through a friend, Crane saw Greenberg's notebooks; he was immediately excited by the elastic phraseology, the strange and often unintelligible eruption of words. He was enthralled by the uncontrolled rush of effects, particularly fascinated by the sea and flower images; he copied out many of the verses. Crane's preoccupation with sea and flowers may well date from that time; fragments of Greenberg's lines are paralleled and reconstructed in several of Crane's poems, notably in "Emblems of Conduct" and "Voyages II."

Although Crane did not object to being called an "absolutist," he was quick to defend himself from the charge of obscurity. The often-quoted letter to Harriet Monroe goes to considerable length to justify his odd syntax, his grammatical audacities, his complex and elliptical symbols. Admitting that he preferred suggestion to statement, he pushed suggestibility to the limit of communication. He believed that there was a "logic of metaphor" which antedated "our so-called pure logic, and which is the genetic basis of all speech." He cited a phrase from "Voyages II" as an example of his method, a composite of direct forcefulness and indirect allusion.

When I speak of "adagios of islands," the reference is to the motion of the boat through islands clustered thickly, the rhythm of the motion, etc. And it seems a much more direct and creative statement than any more "logical" employment of words such as "coasting slowly through the islands," besides ushering in a whole world of music.

In his mid-twenties Crane was groping toward a unifying theme, but it eluded him; more than most poets, he needed unity as well as economic security. In 1926 he found both: a centralizing idea and a philanthropist, the art patron Otto H. Kahn, who made it possible for him to create his largest work. The Bridge (1930) is a set of disparate poems united by national figures, legends, early history, modern inventions—all interwoven to express the "Myth of America." It was, in more ways than one, an answer to The Waste Land; for Crane, fascinated by Eliot's technique, fought Eliot's philosophy. "After this perfection of death," Crane wrote, "nothing is possible but a motion of some kind." It is significant that Crane turned to Eliot's opposites; the visions, the very mottoes, of The Bridge are those of Blake, The Book of Job, Emily Dickinson, and Walt Whitman. Strangeness of color and surprise of contrasts are still dominating principles, but a discipline which Crane never achieved in actual life controls singularity; a finer rhetoric, severe and mystical, plays about the central object.

The central theme, as Crane wrote in a letter to Otto Kahn, is an "organic panorama, showing the continuous and living evidence of the past in the inmost vital substance of the present." Although Crane was defeated by the problem of form, and his long poem lacks final integration, some of the individual sections are among the most eloquent poems of the period. Of "Van Winkle" Crane wrote:

The protagonist has left the room with its harbor sounds, and is walking to the subway. The rhythm is quickened; it is a transition between sleep and the imminent tasks of the day. Space is filled with the music of a hand organ and fresh sunlight, and one has the impression of the whole continent—from Atlantic to Pacific—freshly arisen and moving. The walk to the subway arouses reminiscences of childhood, also the "childhood" of the continental conquest, viz., the Conquistadores, Priscilla, Capt. John Smith, etc. These parallelisms unite in the figure of Rip Van Winkle (indigenous "Muse of Memory"), who finally becomes identified with the protagonist, and who boards the subway with the reader. He becomes the "guardian angel" of the journey into the past.

Concerning "The River," which, "past the din and slogans of the year," will take its place among the richest and most kaleidoscopic of contemporary poems, Crane declared:

The subway is simply a figurative, psychological "vehicle" for transporting the reader to the Middle West. He lands on the railroad tracks in the company of several tramps in the twilight. The extravagance of the first twenty-three lines of this section is an intentional burlesque on the cultural confusion of the present—a great conglomeration of noises analogous to the strident impression of a fast express rushing by. The rhythm is jazz. Thenceforward the rhythm settles down to a steady pedestrian gait, like that of wanderers plodding along. My tramps are psychological vehicles, also. Their wanderings, as you will notice, carry the reader into interior after interior, all of it funneled by the Mississippi. They are the left-overs of the pioneers in at least this respect—that abstractly their wanderings carry the reader through certain experiences roughly parallel to that of the traders, adventurers, Boone and others. I think I have caught some of the essential spirit of the Great Valley here, and in the process have approached the primal world of the Indian, which emerges with a full orchestra in the succeeding "Dance."

The river of steel, which begins in jagged syncopation and develops into gravely measured quatrains, turns into the "Father of Waters." It carries the poet to the primal American myth, with Pocahontas as the traditional nature-symbol representing the body of the continent. As Crane put it, describing the section called "The Dance":

Here one is on the pure mythical and smoky soil at last! Not only do I describe the conflict between the two races in this dance—I also become identified with the Indian and his world before it is over, which is the only method possible of ever really possessing the Indian and his world as a cultural factor. . . . Pocahontas (the continent) is the common basis of our meeting, she survives the extinction of the Indian, who finally, after being assumed into the elements of nature (as he understood them) persists only as a kind of "eye" in the sky, or as a star that hangs between day and night—"the twilight's dim perpetual throne."

"The Tunnel" and "Cape Hatteras" come close to realizing Crane's dream of accustoming poetry to images from contemporary life, of "acclimatizing" the machine with its "nasal whine of power." Crane spoke of "The Tunnel" as "the encroachment of machinery on humanity; a kind of purgatory in relation to the open sky"; "Cape Hatteras" was to be "a kind of ode to Whitman." In short Crane was attempting to write "an epic of the modern consciousness." In this attempt he failed; temperamentally as well as technically he was unable to resolve the too complicated factors.

But if The Bridge fails as a panoramic unit, it succeeds magnificently in many of its parts. Even its failures are failures of excess, of eagerness, sensationalism, and hysteria, but not impoverishment. Often it accomplishes the paradox of being both suggestive and factual; one moment it is flashy to the point of absurdity, the next moment it is brilliantly exact. The Collected Poems of Hart Crane, with an informative if somewhat rapt preface by Waldo Frank, was published posthumously in 1933. It includes a set of hitherto unpublished poems which are more representational than most of his other work. Crane was particularly fond of the Key West poems; he stressed their "happy impersonality."

Critics are still divided in their estimates of Crane. There are many who believe he hypnotized himself with drink and verbal intoxication. There are those who consider The Bridge his greatest accomplishment. And there are those who believe the early short poems, such as "Voyages" and "Praise for an Urn" his best. Speaking of the latter, Allen Tate wrote in his memoir, "Although his later development gave us a poetry that the period would be much the less rich for not having, he never again had such perfect mastery of his subject. And I think this was because he never afterwards knew precisely what his subject was. . . . Crane was the archetype of the modern American poet whose fundamental mistake lay in thinking that an irrational surrender of the intellect to the will would be the basis of a new mentality."

Philip Horton's Hart Crane: The Life of an American Poet (1937) is devoted not only to the facts but to the critical and esthetic theories which compelled Crane. Candid without being sensational, sympathetic but not uncritical, it is a model of what a biography should be.

VOYAGES : II

—And yet this great wing of eternity,
Of rimless floods, unfettered leewardings,
Samite sheeted and processioned where
Her undinal vast belly moonward bends,
Laughing the wrapt inflections of our love;

Take this Sea, whose diapason knells
On scrolls of silver snowy sentences,
The sceptered terror of whose sessions rends
As her demeanors motion well or ill,
All but the pieties of lovers' hands.

And onward, as bells off San Salvador
Salute the crocus lusters of the stars,

In these poinsettia meadows of her tides,—
 Adagios of islands, O my Prodigal,
 Complete the dark confessions her veins spell.

Mark how her turning shoulders wind the hours,
 And hasten while her penniless rich palms
 Pass superscription of bent foam and wave,—
 Hasten, while they are true,—sleep, death, desire,
 Close round one instant in one floating flower.

Bind us in time, O seasons clear, and awe.
 O minstrel galleons of Carib fire,
 Bequeath us to no earthly shore until
 Is answered in the vortex of our grave
 The seal's wide spindrift gaze toward paradise.

VOYAGES : VI

Where icy and bright dungeons lift
 Of swimmers their lost morning eyes,
 And ocean rivers, churning, shift
 Green borders under stranger skies,

Steadily as a shell secretes
 Its beating leagues of monotone,
 Or as many waters trough the sun's
 Red kelson past the cape's wet stone;

O rivers mingling toward the sky
 And harbor of the phoenix' breast—
 My eyes pressed black against the prow,
 —Thy derelict and blinded guest

Waiting, afire, what name, unspoke,
 I cannot claim: let thy waves rear
 More savage than the death of kings,
 Some splintered garland for the seer.

Beyond siroccos harvesting
 The solstice thunders, crept away,
 Like a cliff swinging or a sail
 Flung into April's inmost day—

Creation's blithe and petaled word
 To the lounged goddess when she rose
 Conceding dialogue with eyes
 That smile unsearchable repose—

Still fervid conveant, Belle Isle,
 —Unfolded floating dais before
 Which rainbows twine continual hair—
 Belle Isle, white echo of the oar!

The imaged word, it is, that holds
 Hushed willows anchored in its glow.
 It is the unbetrayable reply
 Whose accent no farewell can know.

PRAISE FOR AN URN

It was a kind and northern face
 That mingled in such exile guise
 The everlasting eyes of Pierrot
 And, of Gargantua, the laughter.

His thoughts, delivered to me
 From the white coverlet and pillow,
 I see now, were inheritances—
 Delicate riders of the storm.

The slant moon on the slanting hill
 Once moved us toward presentiments
 Of what the dead keep, living still,
 And such assessments of the soul

As, perched in the crematory lobby,
 The insistent clock commented on,
 Touching as well upon our praise
 Of glories proper to the time.

Still, having in mind gold hair,
 I cannot see that broken brow
 And miss the dry sound of bees
 Stretching across a lucid space.

Scatter these well-meant idioms
 Into the smoky spring that fills
 The suburbs, where they will be lost.
 They are no trophies of the sun.

VAN WINCKLE

(from "The Bridge")

Macadam, gun-gray as the tunny's belt,
 Leaps from Far Rockaway to Golden Gate:
 Listen! the miles a hurdy-gurdy grinds—
 Down gold arpeggios mile on mile unwinds.

Times earlier, when you hurried off to school,
 —It is the same hour though a later day—
 You walked with Pizarro in a copybook,
 And Cortes rode up, reining tautly in—
 Firmly as coffee grips the taste,—and away!

There was Priscilla's cheek close in the wind,
 And Captain Smith, all beard and certainty,

And Rip Van Winkle, bowing by the way,—
“Is this Sleepy Hollow, friend—?” And he—

*And Rip forgot the office hours,
and he forgot the pay;
Van Winkle sweeps a tenement down town on Avenue A,—*

The grind-organ says . . . Remember, remember
The cinder pile at the end of the backyard
Where we stoned the family of young
Garter snakes under . . . And the monoplanes
We launched—with paper wings and twisted
Rubber bands. . . . Recall—the rapid tongues

That fluttered from under the ash heap day
After day whenever your stick discovered
Some sunning inch of unsuspecting fiber—
It flashed back at your thrust, as clean as fire.

*And Rip was slowly made aware that he, Van Winkle, was not here
Nor there. He woke and swore he'd seen Broadway a Catskill daisy chain in May—*

So memory, that strikes a rhyme out of a box,
Or splits a random smell of flowers through glass—
Is it the whip stripped from the lilac tree
One day in spring my father took to me,
Or is it the Sabbatical, unconscious smile
My mother almost brought me once from church
And once only, as I recall—?

It flickered through the snow screen, blindly
It forsook her at the doorway; it was gone
Before I had left the window. It
Did not return with the kiss in the hall.

Macadam, gun-gray as the tunny's belt,
Leaps from Far Rockaway to Golden Gate . . .
Keep hold of that nickel for car-change, Rip,—
Have you got your paper—?
And hurry along, Van Winkle—it's getting late!

THE RIVER

(from “The Bridge”)

Stick your patent name on a signboard brother—all over—going west—young man
Tintex—Japalac—Certain-teed Overalls ads and lands sakes! under the new playbill ripped in the guaranteed corner—see Bert Williams what?

Minstrels when you steal a chicken just save me the wing, for if it isn't
Erie it ain't for miles around a
Mazda—and the telegraphic night coming on Thomas a Ediford—and whistling down the tracks

a headlight rushing with the sound—can you imagine—while an express makes time like
SCIENCE—COMMERCE and the HOLYGHOST
RADIO ROARS IN EVERY HOME WE HAVE THE NORTHPOLE
WALLSTREET AND VIRGINEIRTH WITHOUT STONES OR WIRES OR EVEN RUNNING brooks connecting ears and no more sermons windows flashing roar
Breathtaking—as you like it . . . eh?

So the 20th Century—so whizzed the Limited—roared by and left three men, still hungry on the tracks, ploddingly watching the tail lights wizen and converge, slipping gimleted and neatly out of sight.
The last bear, shot drinking in the Dakotas,
Loped under wires that span the mountain stream.
Keen instruments, strung to a vast precision
Bind town to town and dream to ticking dream.
But some men take their liquor slow—and count
—Though they'll confess no rosary nor clue—
The river's minute by the far brook's year.
Under a world of whistles, wires and steam
Caboose-like they go ruminating through
Ohio, Indiana—blind baggage—
To Cheyenne tagging . . . Maybe Kalamazoo.

Time's renderings, time's blendings they construe
As final reckonings of fire and snow;
Strange bird-wit, like the elemental gist
Of unwalled winds they offer, singing low
My Old Kentucky Home and Casey Jones,
Some Sunny Day. I h̄ard a road-gang chanting so.
And afterwards, who had a colt's eyes—one said,
“Jesus! Oh I remember watermelon days!” And sped
High in a cloud of merriment, recalled
“—And when my Aunt Sally Simpson smiled,” he drawled—
“It was almost Louisiana, long ago.”

“There's no place like Booneville though, Buddy,”
One said, excising a last burr from his vest,
“—For early troutng.” Then peering in the can,
“—But I kept on the tracks.” Possessed, resigned,
He trod the fire down pensively and grinned,
Spreading dry shingles of a beard. . . .

Behind
My father's cannery works I used to see

Rail-squatters ranged in nomad raillery,
 The ancient men—wifeless or runaway
 Hobo-trekkers that forever search
 An empire wilderness of freight and rails.
 Each seemed a child, like me, on a loose perch,
 Holding to childhood like some timeless play.
 John, Jake, or Charley, hopping the slow freight
 —Memphis to Tallahassee—riding the rods,
 Blind fists of nothing, humpty-dumpty clods.

Yet they touch something like a key perhaps.
 From pole to pole across the hills, the states
 —They know a body under the wide rain;
 Youngsters with eyes like fjords, old reprobates
 With racetrack jargon,—dotting immensity
 They lurk across her, knowing her yonder breast
 Snow-silvered, sumac-stained or smoky blue,
 Is past the valley-sleepers, south or west.
 —As I have trod the rumorously midnights, too.

And past the circuit of the lamp's thin flame
 (O Nights that brought me to her body bare!)
 Have dreamed beyond the print that bound her name.
 Trains sounding the long blizzards out—I heard
 Wail into distances I knew were hers.
 Papooses crying on the wind's long mane
 Screamed redskin dynasties that fled the brain,
 —Dead echoes! But I knew her body there,
 Time like a serpent down her shoulder, dark,
 And space, an eaglet's wing, laid on her hair.

Under the Ozarks, domed by Iron Mountain,
 The old gods of the rain lie wrapped in pools
 Where eyeless fish curvet a sunken fountain
 And re-descend with corn from querulous crows.
 Such pilferings make up their timeless eatage,
 Propitiate them for their timber torn
 By iron, iron—always the iron dealt cleavage!
 They doze now, below axe and powder horn.

And Pullman breakfasters glide glistening steel
 From tunnel into field—iron strides the dew—
 Straddles the hill, a dance of wheel on wheel.
 You have a half-hour's wait at Siskiyou,
 Or stay the night and take the next train through.
 Southward, near Cairo passing, you can see
 The Ohio merging,—borne down Tennessee;
 And if it's summer and the sun's in dusk
 Maybe the breeze will lift the River's musk
 —As though the waters breathed that you might know
Memphis Johnny, Steamboat Bill, Missouri Joe.
 Oh, lean from the window, if the train slows down,

As though you touched hands with some ancient clown,
—A little while gaze absently below
And hum Deep River with them while they go.

Yes, turn again and sniff once more—look see,
O Sheriff, Brakeman and Authority—
Hitch up your pants and crunch another quid,
For you, too, feed the River timelessly.
And few evade full measure of their fate;
Always they smile out eerily what they seem.
I could believe he joked at heaven's gate—
Dan Midland—jolted from the cold brake-beam.

Down, down—born pioneers in time's despite,
Grimed tributaries to an ancient flow—
They win no frontier by their wayward plight,
But drift in stillness, as from Jordan's brow.

You will not hear it as the sea; even stone
Is not more hushed by gravity . . . But slow,
As loth to take more tribute—sliding prone
Like one whose eyes were buried long ago

The River, spreading, flows—and spends your dream.
What are you, lost within this tideless spell?
You are your father's father, and the stream—
A liquid theme that floating niggers swell.

Damp tonnage and alluvial march of days—
Nights turbid, vascular with silted shale
And roots surrendered down of moraine clays:
The Mississippi drinks the farthest dale.

O quarrying passion, undertowed sunlight!
The basalt surface drags a jungle grace
Ochreous and lynx-barred in lengthening might;
Patience! and you shall reach the biding place!

Over De Soto's bones the freighted floors
Throb past the City storied of three thrones.
Down two more turns the Mississippi pours
(Anon tall iron-sides up from salt lagoons)

And flows within itself, heaps itself free.
All fades but one thin skyline 'round . . . Ahead
No embrace opens but the stinging sea;
The River lifts itself from its long bed,

Poised wholly on its dream, a mustard glow,
Tortured with history, its one will—flow!
—The Passion spreads in wide tongues, choked and slow,
Meeting the Gulf, hosannas silently below.

THE DANCE

(from "The Bridge")

The swift red flesh, a winter king—
Who squired the glacier woman down the sky?
She ran the neighing canyons all the spring;
She spouted arms; she rose with maize—to die.

And in the autumn drouth, whose burnished hands
With mineral wariness found out the stone
Where prayers, forgotten, streamed the mesa sands?
He holds the twilight's dim, perpetual throne.

Mythical brows we saw retiring—loth,
Disturbed and destined, into denser green.
Greeting they sped us, on the arrow's oath:
Now lie incorrigibly what years between. . . .

There was a bed of leaves, and broken play;
There was a veil upon you, Pocahontas, bride—
O Princess whose brown lap was virgin May;
And bridal flanks and eyes hid tawny pride.

I left the village for dogwood. By the canoe
Tugging below the mill-race, I could see
Your hair's keen crescent running, and the blue
First moth of evening take wing stealthily.

What laughing chains the water wove and threw!
I learned to catch the trout's moon whisper; I
Drifted how many hours I never knew,
But, watching, saw that fleet young crescent die,—

And one star, swinging, take its place, alone,
Cupped in the larches of the mountain pass—
Until, immortally, it bled into the dawn.
I left my sleek boat nibbling margin grass. . . .

I took the portage climb, then chose
A further valley-shed; I could not stop.
Feet nozzled watery webs of upper flows;
One white veil gusted from the very top.

O Appalachian Spring! I gained the ledge;
Steep, inaccessible smile that eastward bends
And northward reaches in that violet wedge
Of Adirondacks!—wispèd of azure wands,

Over how many bluffs, tarns, streams I sped!
—And knew myself within some boding shade:

Grey tepees tufting the blue knolls ahead,
Smoke swirling through the yellow chestnut glade. . . .

A distant cloud, a thunder-bud—it grew,
That blanket of the skies: the padded foot
Within,—I hear it; 'til its rhythm drew,
—Siphoned the black pool from the heart's hot root!

A cyclone threshes in the turbine crest,
Swooping in eagle feathers down your back;
Know, Maquokeeta, greeting; know death's best;
—Fall, Sachem, strictly as the tamarack!

A birch kneels. All her whistling fingers fly.
The oak grove circles in a crash of leaves;
The long moan of a dance is in the sky.
Dance, Maquokeeta: Pocahontas grieves. . . .

And every tendon scurries toward the twangs
Of lightning deltaed down your saber hair.
Now snaps the flint in every tooth; red fangs
And splay tongues thinly busy the blue air. . . .

Dance, Maquokeeta! snake that lives before,
That casts his pelt, and lives beyond! Sprout, horn!
Spark, tooth! Medicine-man, relent, restore—
Lie to us—dance us back the tribal morn!

Spears and assemblies: black drums thrusting on—
O yelling battlements,—I, too, was liege
To rainbows currying each pulsant bone:
Surpassed the circumstance, danced out the siege!

And buzzard-circled, screamed from the stake;
I could not pick the arrows from my side.
Wrapped in that fire, I saw more escorts wake—
Flickering, sprint up the hill, groins like a tide.

I heard the hush of lava wrestling your arms,
And stag teeth foam about the raven throat;
Flame cataracts of heaven in seething swarms
Fed down your anklets to the sunset's moat.

Oh, like the lizard in the furious noon,
That drops his legs and colors in the sun,
—And laughs, pure serpent, Time itself, and moon
Of his own fate, I saw thy change begun!

And saw thee dive to kiss that destiny
Like one white meteor. sacrosanct and blent

At last with all that's consummate and free
There, where the first and last gods keep thy tent.

* * *

Thewed of the levin, thunder-shod and lean,
Lo, through what infinite seasons dost thou gaze—
Across what bivouacs of thine angered slain,
And see'st thy bride immortal in the maize!

Totem and fire-gall, slumbering pyramid—
Though other calendars now stack the sky,
Thy freedom is her largesse, Prince, and hid
On paths thou knewest best to claim her by.

High unto Labrador the sun strikes free
Her speechless dream of snow, and stirred again,
She is the torrent and the singing tree;
And she is virgin to the last of men. . . .

West, west and south! winds over Cumberland
And winds across the llano grass resume
Her hair's warm sibilance. Her breasts are fanned—
O stream by slope and vineyard—into bloom!

And when the caribou slant down for salt
Do arrows thirst and leap? Do antlers shine
Alert, star-triggered in the listening vault
Of dusk?—And are her perfect brows to thine?

We danced, O Brave, we danced beyond their farms,
In cobalt desert closures made our vows . . .
Now is the strong prayer folded in thine arms,
The serpent with the eagle in the boughs.

POWER : CAPE HATTERAS

(from "The Bridge")

The nasal whine of power whips a new universe . . .
Where spouting pillars spoor the evening sky,
Under the looming stacks of the gigantic power house
Stars prick the eyes with sharp ammoniac proverbs,
New verities, new inklings in the velvet hummed
Of dynamos where hearing's leash is strummed . . .
Power's script,—wound, bobbin-bound, refined—
Is stropped to the slap of belts on booming spools, spurred
Into the bulging bouillon, harnessed jelly of the stars.
Towards what? The forked crash of split thunder parts
Our hearing momentwise; but fast in whirling armatures,
As bright as frogs' eyes, giggling in the girth
Of steely gizzards—axle-bound, confined
In coiled precision, bunched in mutual glee
The bearings glint—O murmurless and shined
In oilrinsed circles of blind ecstasy!

Stars scribble on our eyes the frosty sagas,
 The gleaming cantos of unvanquished space. . . .
 O sinewy silver biplane, nudging the wind's withers!
 There, from Kill Devils Hill at Kitty Hawk
 Two brothers in their twinship left the dune;
 Warping the gale, the Wright windwrestles veered
 Capeward, then blading the wind's flank, banked and spun
 What ciphers risen from prophetic script,
 What marathons new-set between the stars!
 The soul, by naphtha fledged into new reaches
 Already knows the closer clasp of Mars,—
 New latitudes, unknotting, soon give place
 To what fierce schedules, rife of doom apace!

Behold the dragon's covey—amphibian, ubiquitous
 To hedge the seaboard, wrap the headland, ride
 The blue's unfeathered districts unto aether. . . .
 While Iliads glimmer through eys raised in pride
 Hell's belt springs wider—into heaven's plumed side.
 O bright circumferences, heights employed to fly
 War's fiery kennel masked in downy offings,—
 This tournament of space, the threshed and chiseled height,
 Is baited by marauding circles, bludgeon flail
 Of rancorous grenades whose screaming petals carve us
 The wounds we wrap with theorems sharp as hail!

Wheeled swiftly, wings emerge from larval-silver hangars
 Taut motors surge, space-gnawing, into flight;
 Through sparkling visibility, outspread, unsleeping
 Wings clip the last peripheries of light. . . .
 Tellurian wind-sleuths on dawn patrol,
 Each plane a hurtling javelin of winged ordnance,
 Bristle the heights above a screeching gale to hover;
 Surely no eye that Sunward Escadrille can cover!
 There, meaningful, fledged as the Pleiades
 With razor sheen they zoom each rapid helix!
 Up-chartered choristers of their own speeding
 They, cavalcade on escapade, shear Cumulus—
 Lay siege and hurdle Cirrus down the skies!
 While Cetus-like, O thou Dirigible, enormous Lounger
 Of pendulous auroral beaches,—satellited wide
 By convoy planes, moonferrets that rejoin thee
 On fleecing balconies as thou dost glide,
 —Hast splintered space!

THE TUNNEL

(from "The Bridge")

*To find the Western path
 Right thro' the Gates of Wrath*
 —BLAKE.

Performances, assortments, résumés—
 Up Times Square to Columbus Circle lights

Channel the congresses, nightly sessions,
 Refractions of the thousand theaters, faces—
 Mysterious kitchens . . . You shall search them all.
 Some day by heart you'll learn each famous sight
 And watch the curtain lift in hell's despite;
 You'll find the garden in the third act dead,
 Finger your knees—and wish yourself in bed
 With tabloid crime-sheets perched in easy sight.

Then let you reach your hat and go.
 As usual, let you—also walking down—exclaim to twelve upward leaving a subscription praise for what time slays . . .

Or can't you quite make up your mind to ride;
 A walk is better underneath the L for a brisk
 Ten blocks or so before? But you find yourself
 Preparing penguin flexions of the arms—
 As usual you will meet the scuttle yawn:
 The subway yawns the quickest promise home.

Be minimum then, to swim the hiving swarms
 Out of the Square, the Circle burning bright—
 Avoid the glass doors gyring at your right,
 Where boxed alone a second, eyes take fright
 —Quite unprepared rush naked back to light:
 And down beside the turnstile press the coin
 Into the slot. The gongs already rattle.

And so
 of cities you bespeak
 subways, rivered under streets and rivers . . . In the car the overtone of motion underground, the monotone of motion is the sound of other faces, also underground—

“Let's have a pencil Jimmy—living now at Floral Park
 Flatbush—on the fourth of July—like a pigeon's muddy dream—potatoes to dig in the field—travlin' the town too—night after night—the Culver line—the girls all shaping up—it used to be—”

Our tongues recant like beaten weather vanes.
 This answer lives like verdigris, like hair

Beyond extinction, surcease of the bone;
 And repetition freezes—"What what do you want? getting weak on the links?
 fandaddle daddy don't ask for change—is THIS FOURTEENTH? it's half-past six she said—if you don't like my gate why did you swing on it, why didja swing on it anyhow—"

And somehow anyhow swing—

The phonographs of hades in the brain
 Are tunnels that re-wind themselves, and love
 A burnt match skating in a urinal—
 Somewhere above Fourteenth TAKE THE EXPRESS
 To brush some new presentiment of pain—

"But I want service in this officc SERVICE
 I said—after the show she cried a little afterwards but—"

Whose head is swinging from the swollen strap?
 Whose body smokes along the bitten rails,
 Bursts from a sinoldering bundle far behind
 In back forks of the chasms of the brain—
 Puffs from a riven stump far out behind
 In interborough fissures of the mind . . . ?

And why do I often meet your visage here,
 Your eyes like agate lanterns—on and on
 Below the toothpaste and the dandruff ads?
 —And did their riding eyes right through your side,
 And did their eyes like unwashed platters ride?
 And Death, aloft—gigantically down
 Probing through you toward me, O Evermore!
 And when they dragged your retching flesh,
 Your trembling hands that night through Baltimore—
 That last night on the ballot rounds, did you,
 Shaking—did you deny the ticket, Poe?

For Gravesend Manor change at Chambers Street.
 The platform hurries along to a dead stop.
 The intent escalator lifts a serenade
 Stilly
 Of shoes, umbrellas, each eye attending its shoe, then
 Bolting outright somewhere above where streets
 Burst suddenly in rain . . . The gongs recur:
 Elbows and levers, guard and hissing door.
 Thunder is galvothermic here below . . . The car

Wheels off. The train rounds, bending to a scream,
Taking the final level for the dive
Under the river—

And somewhat emptier than before,
Demented, for a hitching second, humps; then
Lets go . . . Towards corners of the floor
Newspapers wing, revolve and wing.
Blank windows gargle signals through the roar.

And does the Daemon take you home, also,
Wop washerwoman, with the bandaged hair?
After the corridors are swept, the cuspidors—
The gaunt sky-barracks cleanly now, and bare,
O Genoese, do you bring mother-eyes and hands
Back home to children and to golden hair?

Daemon, demurring and eventful yawn!
Whose hideous laughter is the bellows mirth
—Or the muffled slaughter of a day in birth—
O cruelly to inoculate the brinking dawn
With antennae toward worlds that spark and sink—
To spoon us out more liquid than the dim
Locution of the eldest star, and pack
The conscience naveled in the plunging wind,
Umbilical to call—and straightway die!
O caught like pennies beneath soot and steam,
Kiss of our agony thou gatherest;
Condensed, thou takest all—shrill ganglia
Impassioned with some song we fail to keep.

And yet, like Lazarus, to feel the slope,
The sod and billow breaking—lifting ground,
—A sound of waters bending astride the sky
Unceasing with some word that will not die!

A tugboat, wheezing wreaths of steam,
Lunged past, with one galvanic blare stove up the river.
I counted the echoes assembling, one after one,
Searching, thumbing the midnight on the piers.
Lights, coasting left the oily tympanum of waters;
The blackness somewhere gouged glass on a sky.

And this thy harbor, O my City, I have driven under,
Tossed from the coil of ticking towers . . . Tomorrow,
And to be . . . Here by the River that is East—
Here at the waters' edge the hands drop memory;
Shadowless in that abyss they unaccounting lie.
How far away the star has pooled the sea—
Or shall the hands be drawn away, to die?

Kiss of our agony Thou gatherest,
 O Hand of Fire
 gatherest—

ROYAL PALM

Green rustlings, more-than-regal charities
 Drift coolly from that tower of whispered light.
 Amid the noontide's blazed asperities
 I watched the sun's most gracious anchorite

Climb up as by communings, year on year
 Uneaten of the earth or aught earth holds,
 And the gray trunk, that's elephantine, rear
 Its frondings sighing in aetherial folds.

Forever fruitless, and beyond that yield
 Of sweat the jungle presses with hot love
 And tendril till our deathward breath is sealed—
 It grazes the horizons, launched above

Mortality—ascending emerald-bright,
 A fountain at salute, a crown in view—
 Unshackled, casual of its azured height,
 As though it soared suchwise through heaven too.

THE AIR PLANT

(Grand Cayman, W. I.)

This tuft that thrives on saline nothingness,
 Inverted octopus with heavenward arms
 Thrust parching from a palm-bole hard by the cove—
 A bird almost—of almost bird alarms,

Is pulmonary to the wind that jars
 Its tentacles, horrific in their lurch.
 The lizard's throat, held bloated for a fly,
 Balloons but warily from this throbbing perch.

The needles and hacksaws of cactus bleed
 A milk of earth when stricken off the stalk;
 But this—defenseless, thornless, sheds no blood,
 Scarce shadow even—but the air's thin talk.

Angelic Dynamo! Ventriloquist of the Blue!
 While beachward creeps the shark-swept Spanish Main.
 By what conjunctions do the winds appoint
 Its apotheosis, at last—the hurricanel

THE HURRICANE

Lo, Lord, Thou ridest!
 Lord, Lord, Thy swifting heart

 Naught stayeth, naught now bideth
 But's smitherened apart!

 Ay! Scripture flee'th stone!
 Milk-bright, Thy chisel wind

 Rescindeth flesh from bone
 To quivering whittlings thinned—

 Swept—whistling straw! Battered,
 Lord, e'en boulders now out-leap

 Rock sockets, levin-lathered!
 Nor, Lord, may worm out-deep

 Thy drum's gambade, its plunge abscond!
 Lord God, while summits crashing

 Whip sea-kelp screaming on blond
 Sky-seethe, high heaven dashing—

 Thou ridest to the door, Lord!
 Thou bidest wall nor floor, Lord!

Allen Tate

ALLEN TATE (whose full name, not often admitted, is John Orley Allen Tate) was born November 19, 1899, in Winchester, Clark County, Kentucky, and was educated in public and private schools in Louisville, Nashville, and Washington, D. C., and after some tergiversation was graduated from Vanderbilt University in 1922. Immediately thereafter, he engaged in free-lance literary criticism for which he is as well known as for his poetry. He was one of the founders, in 1922, of The Fugitive, sharing that distinction with John Crowe Ransom, Donald Davidson, and a few others. An avowed believer in sectionalism, his critical acumen runs parallel to his predilections in Stonewall Jackson: The Good Soldier (1928) and Jefferson Davis: His Rise and Fall (1929). Both biographies are skillfully constructed mosaics of fact and interpretation. His reviews and essays are among the most brilliant and provocative of his generation.

Mr. Pope and Other Poems (1928) reveals a mind that is critical and complex. His Ignis Fatuus, as acknowledged in Tate's Epilogue, has a "fierce latinity," and the adjective gives us an inkling of the paradox at the heart of his verse. Here Donne wrestles with Vergil; an essentially Gothic foundation shoots up into baroque efflores-cences; the cultural tradition battles with vulgar aggressiveness. This clash between classicism and modernity—sublimated by Tate's transposition of romantic South and realistic North—strains to achieve a kind of harassed unity in Mr. Pope and Other Poems. A finesse of satire and a dissection of emotion combine to place most of the volume in the literature of wit, but poems like "Death of Little Boys" and "Ode to the Confederate Dead" are compact with feeling and so escape the category.

The more mature Poems: 1928-1931 (1932) owes less to the intellectualist's conflict. Structure is still preeminent, but the poet emphasizes form without being a slave to it. Tate himself has said his method consists in playing the rôle of a hawk, "gradually circling round the subject, threatening it, filling it with suspense, and finally accomplishing its demise without ever quite using the ultimate violence upon it." The method has the disadvantages inherent in its aim. The reader waiting for forthright ideas expressed in the key of conversation, however heightened and intensified, will wait in vain. Tate is not concerned with the impulse that extends from Wordsworth to Frost, supplying "the charm of novelty to things of everyday"; he cannot flourish a finality or bring an emotion simply to the surface. In his circumlocutory, or circumambient, manner he is likely to leave the climax unsolved; the reader is not always certain that, in Tate's hawk-like swoop, the final capture is accomplished—not even in such poems as "Mother and Son" and "The Mediterranean," eloquent though they are.

Circulating "about" his subject, the poet gains a perspective, but loses a definiteness, even, at times, a direction which the reader is likely to require. The lines frequently suffer from excessive subjectivity, from a critical introspection at war with the lyric impulse. Thus Tate rewrites his poems so often that the original edge is sometimes lost. "His art," writes John Gould Fletcher, "is that of the lapidary, polishing and repolishing his work till it, literally, in many cases, has no life left." Although this is an exaggeration, it is true that such a fine poem as "Ode to the Confederate Dead" has been so much revised that where the new version gains in allusiveness, it loses in speed and directness. The new conclusion, however, is clearly superior, and it is the latest version which is given here.

In 1930, after two years abroad on a Guggenheim Foundation award, Tate returned to Tennessee, to an old estate a few miles from Clarksville on the Cumberland River. In 1934 he lectured at Southwestern College; in 1939 he came to Princeton where he acted as a keen creative stimulus. Reactionary Essays on Poetry and Ideas (1936) and Reason in Madness (1941) are collections of articles, addresses, and critical examinations. A severely revised Selected Poems appeared in 1937.

ODE TO THE CONFEDERATE DEAD

Row after row with strict impunity
 The headstones yield their names to the element,
 The wind whirrs without recollection;
 In the riven troughs the splayed leaves
 Pile up, of nature the casual sacrament
 To the seasonal eternity of death,
 Then driven by the fierce scrutiny
 Of heaven to their business in the vast breath,
 They sought the rumor of mortality.

Autumn is desolation in the plot
 Of a thousand acres, where these memories grow
 From the inexhaustible bodies that are not Dead, but feed the grass low after rich row:
 Remember now the autumns that have gone—
 Ambitious November with the humors of the year.
 With a particular zeal for every slab,
 Staining the uncomfortable angels that rot
 On the slabs, a wing chipped here, an arm there:
 The brute curiosity of an angel's stare
 Turns you like them to stone,
 Transforms the heaving air,
 Till plunged to a heavier world below
 You shift your sea-space blindly,
 Heaving, turning like the blind crab.

Dazed by the wind, only the wind
 The leaves flying, plunge

You know who have waited by the wall
 The twilit certainty of an animal;
 Those midnight restitutions of the blood
 You know—the immittigable pines, the smoky frieze
 Of the sky, the sudden call; you know the rage—
 The cold pool left by the mounting flood—
 The rage of Zeno and Parmenides.
 You who have waited for the angry resolution
 Of those desires that should be yours tomorrow,
 You know the unimportant shrift of death
 And praise the vision
 And praise the arrogant circumstance
 Of those who fall
 Rank upon rank, hurried beyond decision—
 Here by the sagging gate, stopped by the wall.

Seeing, seeing only the leaves
 Flying, plunge and expire

Turn your eyes to the immoderate past
 Turn to the inscrutable infantry rising
 Demons out of the earth—they will not last.
 Stonewall, Stonewall—and the sunken fields of hemp,
 Shiloh, Antietam, Malvern Hill, Bull Run.
 Lost in that orient of the thick and fast
 You will curse the setting sun.

Cursing only the leaves crying
 Like an old man in a storm

You hear the shout—the crazy hemlocks point
 With troubled fingers to the silence which Smothers you, a mummy, in time. The hound bitch

Toothless and dying, in a musty cellar
Hears the wind only.

Now that the salt of their blood
Stiffens the saltier oblivion of the sea,
Seals the malignant purity of the flood,
What shall we, who count our days and bow
Our heads with a commemorial woe,
In the ribboned coats of grim felicity,
What shall we say of the bones, unclean—
Their verdurous anonymity will grow—
The ragged arms, the ragged heads and eyes
Lost in these acres of the insane green?
The gray lean spiders come; they come and go;
In a tangle of willows without light
The singular screech-owl's bright
Invisible lyric seeds the mind
With the furious murmur of their chivalry.

We shall say only, the leaves
Flying, plunge and expire

We shall say only, the leaves whispering
In the improbable mist of nightfall
That flies on multiple wing:
Night is the beginning and the end,
And in between the ends of distraction
Waits mute speculation, the patient curse
That stones the eyes, or like the jaguar leaps
For his own image in a jungle pool, his victim.

What shall we say who have knowledge
Carried to the heart? Shall we take the act
To the grave? Shall we, more hopeful, set up the grave
In the house? The ravenous grave?

Leave now

The turnstile and the old stone wall:
The gentle serpent, green in the mulberry bush,
Riots with his tongue through the hush—
Sentinel of the grave who counts us all!

M R . P O P E

When Alexander Pope strolled in the city
Strict was the glint of pearl and gold sedans.
Ladies leaned out, more out of fear than pity;
For Pope's tight back was rather a goat's than man's.

One often thinks the urn should have more bones
Than skeletons provide for speedy dust;
The urn gets hollow, cobwebs brittle as stones
Weave to the funeral shell a frivolous rust.

And he who dribbled couplets like the snake
 Coiled to a lithe precision in the sun,
 Is missing. The jar is empty; you may break
 It only to find that Mr. Pope is gone.

What requisitions of a verity
 Prompted the wit and rage between his teeth
 One cannot say: around a crooked tree
 A mortal climbs whose name should be a wreath.

DEATH OF LITTLE BOYS

When little boys grow patient at last, weary,
 Surrender their eyes immeasurably to the night,
 The event will rage terrific as the sea;
 Their bodies fill a crumbling room with light.

Then you will touch at the bedside, torn in two,
 Gold curls now deftly intricate with gray
 As the windowpane extends a fear to you
 From one peeled aster drenched with the wind all day.

And over his chest the covers, in an ultimate dream,
 Will mount to the teeth, ascend the eyes, press back
 The locks—while round his sturdy belly gleam
 The suspended breaths, white spars above the wreck:

Till all the guests, come in to look, turn down
 Their palms; and delirium assails the cliff
 Of Norway where you ponder, and your little town
 Reels like a sailor drunk in his rotten skiff. . . .

The bleak sunshine shrieks its chipped music then
 Out to the milkweed amid the fields of wheat.
 There is a calm for you where men and women
 Unroll the chill precision of moving feet.

MOTHER AND SON

Now all day long the man who is not dead
 Hastens the dark with inattentive eyes,
 The lady of the white hand, of the erect head
 Stares at the cover, leans for the son's replies
 At last to her importunate womanhood—
 That hand of death laid on the living bed;
 Such is the fierce composito[r] of blood.

She waits; he lies upon the bed of sin
 Where greed, avarice, anger writhed and slept
 Till to their silence they were gathered in;
 There, fallen with time, his tall and wicked kin

Once fired the passions that were never kept
 In the permanent heart, and there his mother lay
 To bear him on the impenetrable day.

Because of this she cannot will her hand
 Up to the bed nor break the manacle
 Her exile sets upon her harsh command
 That he should say the time is beautiful,
 Transfigured with her own devouring light:
 The sick man craves the impalpable night.

Loosed betwixt eye and lid, the swimming beams
 Of memory, that school of cuttlefish
 Rise to the air, plunge to the cold streams,
 Rising and plunging the half-forgotten wish
 To tear his heart out in some slow disgrace
 And freeze the hue of terror to her face.

Hate, misery and fear beat off his heart
 To the dry fury of the woman's mind;
 The son prone in his autumn, moves apart
 A seed blown upon a returning wind:
 O child, be vigilant till towards the South
 On the flowered wall all the sweet afternoon
 That reach of sun, swift as the cottonmouth
 Strikes at the black crucifix on her breast
 Where the cold dusk comes suddenly to rest—
 Mortality will speak the victor soon!

The dreary flies lazy and casual
 Stick to the ceiling, buzz along the wall—
 O heart, the spider shuffles from the mold
 Weaving between the pinks and grapes his pall.
 The bright wallpaper imperishably old
 Uncurls and flutters; it will never fall.

THE CROSS

There is a place that some men know,
 I cannot see the whole of it,
 Nor how men come there. Long ago
 Flame burst out of a secret pit
 Crushing the world with such a light
 The day sky fell to moonless black,
 The kingly sun to hateful night
 For those, once seeing, turning back:
 For love so hates mortality,
 Which is the providence of life,
 She will not let it blessed be
 But curses it with mortal strife,

Until beside the blinding rood
 Within that world-destroying pit
 —Like young wolves that have tasted blood,
 Of death, men taste no more of it:
 So blind in so severe a place
 (All life before in the black grave)
 The last alternatives they face
 Of life, without the life to save,
 Being from all salvation weaned—
 A stag charged both at heel and head:
 Who would come back is turned a fiend
 Instructed by the fiery dead.

THE MEDITERRANEAN

Quem das finem, rex magne, dolorum?

Where we went in the boat was a long bay
A sling-shot wide walled in by towering stone—

Peaked margin of antiquity's delay,
And we went there out of time's monotone:

Where we went in the black hull no light moved
But a gull white-winged along the feckless wave;
The breeze unseen but fierce as a body loved,
That boat drove onward like a willing slave.

Where we went in the small ship the seaweed
Parted and gave to us the murmuring shore
And we made feast and in our secret need
Devoured the very plates Aeneas bore:

Where derelict you see through the low twilight
The green coast that you thunder-tossed would win,
Drop sail, and hastening to drink all night
Eat dish and bowl—to take that sweet land in!

Where we feasted and caroused on the sand-less

Pebbles, affecting our day of piracy,
What prophecy of eaten plates could landless
Wanderers fulfill by the ancient sea?

We for that time might taste the famous age
Eternal here yet hidden from our eyes
When lust of power undid its stuffless rage;
They, in a wineskin, bore earth's paradise.

—Let us lie down once more by the breathing side
Of ocean, where our live forefathers sleep
As if the Known Sea still were a month wide—
Atlantis howls but is no longer steep!

What country shall we conquer, what fair
land
Unman our conquest and locate our blood?
We've cracked the hemispheres with careless hand!

Now, from the Gates of Hercules we flood
Westward, westward till the barbarous brine
Whelms us to the tired world where tasseling corn,
Fat beans, grapes sweeter than muscadine
Rot on the vine: in that land were we born.

Léonie Adams

LÉONIE ADAMS was born in Brooklyn, New York, December 9, 1899. After a public school preparation she became a member of the class of 1922 at Barnard College, supported herself in New York in various capacities for five years, was awarded a "traveling fellowship" by the Guggenheim Foundation, and went abroad for two years in 1928. After her return she taught for a while at New York University.

At Barnard she wrote her first published poems "in secret." While still an undergraduate, her remarkable "April Mortality" was printed in The New Republic, but, although this would have been sufficient stimulus for most young authors to rush into print, Miss Adams remained more reticent than ever and rarely submitted any of her verse for publication.

It was only through the persuasion of two or three friends that her volume, Those Not Elect (1925), was made ready for the press. The author's evasion of "realism" is apparent in all of her poetry. The poems themselves are of two sorts: the younger and simpler verses, full of a shy ecstasy, and the later, more metaphysical expressions of a rare and not lightly communicated wonder. Without imitating the Elizabethans, Miss Adams has caught something of the quality of Webster and Vaughan. But whatever her style, whether she is direct as in "Home-Coming" or more difficult as in "The Horn," her sensitivity makes even the obscure passages a succession of inevitable images. Few poets have fixed the changing aspects of earth and sky, the fluid seasons, the constant variability of light with such natural certainty. Her most candid descriptions take on an unearthly and intensified air; even her statement of a landscape, or the performance of a tragedy, or "the pointed grass" drinking the light "till light brimmed even," or the old cheating of the sun is translated in lines both pure and suggestive. One may sometimes mistake her meaning; there is no mistaking the beauty of her imagination which lifts emotion, holding it, as it were, in suspense. There is not a line in her first book which is without distinction.

The same is true of High Falcon (1929). This is abstract poetry in the highest sense; the word is more than a word; the letter is uplifted by pure spirit. The lyrical line, carried on wave after wave of music, transcends personality. The ecstasy, however, is no less ecstatic for being disembodied; every phrase carries its import of intensities, of vistas larger than the scene, of meaning beyond meaning. It is a rarefied atmosphere which Miss Adams breathes and only a height-loving reader can venture with her into that fine air. "Twilit Revelation," "Bell Tower," "Sundown," "Country Summer" are a few of the poems in which the heart "extracts the spirit of the temporal." Neither sense nor the senses can wholly interpret this poetry, but every figure and accent compel us with authority. What, at first glance, seems obscurely metaphysical is resolved into a spiritual clarity that approaches clairvoyance. Here, we are in the presence of greatness, here matter is sanctified, "dipped in a gold stain."

"The Mount" synthesizes Miss Adams' qualities. One of her finest poems, it creates a new symbol of time; the sense of continuity is expressed through an image which is a little remote but quickly recognizable, holding a nice balance between the strange and the familiar. As Miss Adams wrote, "It seems to me to bear a special relation to most of the other verses in High Falcon; with respect to some it repeats what they have essentially to say with greater decision; and, with respect to others, expresses a resolution of much that is in them at loose ends."

Her utterance is unique, but it is no posture of "difference," no straining singularity. On the contrary, this is verse of the most reticent dignity, in which nothing, not even the mystical note, is overstressed. Herein lies Miss Adams' danger—or rather the danger to her imitators, for, since she is obviously "a poet's poet," imitated she will be. The surface pattern is easy enough to master: the withdrawn loveliness, the muted music, the faint Elizabethanism; but, lacking her rapt and actually reverent touch, the result would be only an echo of delicate diction. Miss Adams would undoubtedly gain a wider audience were she to mix a little more flesh with her spirit, but she would lose that virginal radiance which rises from springs more profound than those of the too nimbly gushing heart.

APRIL MORTALITY

Rebellion shook an ancient dust,
And bones bleached dry of rottenness
Said: Heart, be bitter still, nor trust
The earth, the sky, in their bright dress.

Heart, heart, dost thou not break to know
 This anguish thou wilt bear alone?
 We sang of it an age ago,
 And traced it dimly upon stone.

With all the drifting race of men
 Thou also art begot to mourn
 That she is crucified again,
 The lonely Beauty yet unborn.

And if thou dreamest to have won
 Some touch of her in permanence,
 'Tis the old cheating of the sun,
 The intricate lovely play of sense.

Be bitter still, remember how
 Four petals, when a little breath
 Of wind made stir the pear-tree bough,
 Blew delicately down to death.

HOME-COMING

When I stepped homeward to my hill
 Dusk went before with quiet tread;
 The bare laced branches of the trees
 Were as a mist about its head.

Upon its leaf-brown breast, the rocks
 Like great gray sheep lay silent-wise;
 Between the birch trees' gleaming arms
 The faint stars trembled in the skies.

The white brook met me half-way up
 And laughed as one that knew me well,
 To whose more clear than crystal voice
 The frost had joined a crystal spell.

The skies lay like pale-watered deep.
 Dusk ran before me to its strand
 And cloudily leaned forth to touch
 The moon's slow wonder with her hand.

THOUGHT'S END

I watched the hills drink the last color of light,
 All shapes grow bright and wane on the pale air.
 Till down the traitorous east there came the night,
 And swept the circle of my seeing bare.
 Its intimate beauty like a wanton's veil
 Tore from the void as from an empty face.
 I felt at being's rim all being fail,
 And my one body pitted against space.

O heart more frightened than a wild bird's wings,
 Beating at green, now is no fiery mark
 Left on the quiet nothingness of things.
 Be self no more against the flooding dark:
 There thousandwise sown in that cloudy blot
 Stars that are worlds look out and see you not.

DEATH AND THE LADY

Their bargain told again

Death to the Lady said
 While she to dancing-measures still
 Would move, while beauties on her lay,
 Simply as dews the buds do fill,
 Death said: "Stay!
 Tell me, Lady,
 If in your breast the lively breath
 May flicker for a little space,
 What ransom will you give to death,
 Lady?" he said.
 "O not one joy, O not one grace,
 And what is your will to my will?
 I can outwit parched fancies still."
 To Death said the Lady.

Death to that Lady said,
 When blood went numb and wearily,
 "In innocency dear breath you drew,
 And marrow and bloom you rendered me,"
 She said: "True."
 "How now, Lady?"
 "My heart sucked up its sweet at will,
 Whose scent when substance' sweet is past,
 Is lovely still, is lovely still,
 Death," she said.
 "For bones' reprieve the dreams go last:
 Soon, soon your flowery show did part,
 But preciously I cull the heart,"
 Death said to the Lady.

Death to that Lady said:
 "Is then not all our bargain done?
 Or why do you beckon me so fast
 To chaffer for a skeleton
 Flesh must cast,
 Ghostly Lady?"
 "For, Death, that I would have you drain
 From my dead heart the blood that stands
 So chilly in the withered vein.
 And, Death," she said,

"Give my due bones into your hands."
 "Beauties I claim at morning-prime,
 But the lack-luster in good time,"
 Death said to the Lady.

TWILIT REVELATION

This hour was set the time for heaven's descent
 Come drooping toward us on the heavy air,
 The sky, that's heaven's seat above us bent,
 Blue faint as violet-ash, you near me there
 In nether space so drenched in goblin blue,
 I could touch Hesperus as soon as you.

Now I perceive you lapt in singling light,
 Washed by that blue which sucks whole planets in,
 And hung like those top jewels of the night,
 A mournful gold too high for love to win.
 And you, poor brief, poor melting star, you seem
 Half sunk, and half to brighten in that stream.

And these rich-bodied hours of our delight
 Show like a moth-wing's substance when the fall
 Of confine-loosing, blue unending night
 Extracts the spirit of this temporal.
 So space can pierce the crevice wide between
 Fast hearts, skies deep-descended intervene.

GHOSTLY TREE

O beech, unbind your yellow leaf, for deep
 The honeyed time lies sleeping, and lead shade
 Seals up the eyelids of its golden sleep
 Long are your flutes, chimes, little bells at rest,
 And here is only the cold scream of the fox,
 Only the hunter following on the hound,
 And your quaint-plumaged,
 The bird that your green happy boughs lapped round,
 Bends south its soft bright breast.

Before the winter and the terror break,
 Scatter the leaf that broadened with the rose,
 Not for a tempest, but a sigh to take.
 Four nights to exorcise the thing that stood,
 Bound by these frail which dangle at your branch,
 They ran a frosty dagger to its heart,
 And it, wan substance,
 No more remembered it might cry, or start,
 Or stain a point with blood.

THE HORN

In coming to the feast I found
 A venerable silver-throated horn,
 Which were I brave enough to sound,
 Then all as from that moment born
 Would breathe the honey of this clime,
 And three times merry in their time,
 Would praise the virtue of that horn.

The mist is risen like thin breath,
 The young leaves of the ground smell chill,
 So faintly are they strewn on death,
 The road I came down a west hill.
 But none can name as I can name
 A little golden-bright thing flame,
 Since bones have caught their marrow chill.

And in a thicket passed me by,
 In the black brush a running hare,
 Having a specter in his eye,
 That sped in darkness to the snare;
 And who but I can know in pride,
 The heart set beating in the side
 Has but the wisdom of a hare?

THE RIVER IN THE MEADOWS

Crystal parting the meads,
 A boat drifted up it like a swan,
 Tranquil, lovely, its bright front to the waters,
 A slow swan is gone.

Full waters, O flowing silver,
 Pure, level with the clover,
 It will stain drowning a star,
 With the moon it will brim over.

Running through lands dewy and shorn,
 Cattle stoop at its brink,
 And every fawny-colored throat
 Will sway its bells and drink.

I saw a boat sailing the river
 With a tranced gait; it seemed
 Loosed by a spell from its moorings,
 Or a thing the helmsman dreamed.

They said it would carry no traveler,
 But the vessel would go down,

If a heart were heavy-winged,
 Or the bosom it dwelt in, stone.

COUNTRY SUMMER

Now the rich cherry whose sleek wood
 And top with silver petals traced,
 Like a strict box its gems encased,
 Has spilt from out that cunning lid,
 All in an innocent green round,
 Those melting rubies which it hid;
 With moss ripe-strawberry-encrusted,
 So birds get half, and minds lapse merry
 To taste that deep-red lark's-bite berry,
 And blackcap-bloom is yellow-dusted.

The wren that thieved it in the eaves
 A trailer of the rose could catch
 To her poor droopy sloven thatch,
 And side by side with the wren's brood,—
 O lovely time of beggars' luck—
 Opens the quaint and hairy bud.
 And full and golden is the yield
 Of cows that never have to house.

But all night nibble under boughs,
Or cool their sides in the moist field.

Into the rooms flow meadow airs,
The warm farm-baking smell blows round;
Inside and out and sky and ground
Are much the same; the wishing star,
Hesperus, kind and early-born,
Is risen only finger-far.
All stars stand close in summer air,
And tremble, and look mild as amber;
When wicks are lighted in the chamber
You might say stars were settling there.

Now straightening from the flowery hay,
Down the still light the mowers look;
Or turn, because their dreaming shook,
And they waked half to other days,
When left alone in yellow-stubble,
The rusty-coated mare would graze.
Yet thick the lazy dreams are born;
Another thought can come to mind,
But like the shivering of the wind,
Morning and evening in the corn.

THE MOUNT

"No, I have tempered haste,"
The joyous traveler said,
"The steed has passed me now
Whose hurrying hooves I fled.
My specter rides thercon,
I learned what mount he has,
Upon what summers fed;
And wept to know again,
Beneath the saddle swung,
Treasure for whose great theft
This breast was wrung.
His bridle bells sang out,
I could not tell their chime,
So brilliantly he rings,
But called his name as Time.
His bin was morning light,
Those straws which gild his bed
Are of the fallen West.
Although green lands consume
Beneath their burning tread,
In everlasting bright
His hooves have rest."

THIS MEASURE

This measure was a measure to my mind,
Still musical through the unlikely hush.
The cold goes wide as doors, and in will come
Those notes of May set ringing through the brush,
Where every voice by natural law is dumb.

How many seasons I have watched the boughs,
That first are happy-tongued and happy-leaved,
Then bleed, as though an autumn were the last,
While that great life was with them undeceived,
Which all a wintering world seals home more fast.

Now visibly indeed I am assailed,
Yct I seem come clap on my very thing;
And now I learn I only asked as much:
It was in blooming weeks I lacked a spring
Rooted and blowing beyond sense or touch.

BELL TOWER

I have seen, O desolate one, the voice has its tower,
The voice also, builded at secret cost,
Its temple of precious tissue; not silent then,
Forever. Casting silence in your hour.

There marble boys are leant from the light throat,
 Thick locks that hang with dew, and eyes dew-lashed,
 Dazzled with morning,—angels of the wind,
 With ear a-point for the enchanted note.

And these at length shall tip the hanging bell,
 And first the sound must gather in deep bronze,
 Till, rarer than ice, purer than a bubble of gold,
 It fill the sky to beat on an airy shell.

KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

Bleak the February light
 On the dark threshold spread,
 The frost stood thick against the lock,
 The clock for the great cold stopped dead,
 When old wits idle with their luck
 Lay singing in the bed,
 That heard, while white frost span by night,
 A pigeon happy with its bread.

And sang: I wakened to a sound
 Which the streams make at thaw,
 And pity on the shape I found
 Inside a looking-glass with light.
 For looking on my heart I saw,
 A time before the break of day,
 And looking won to second-sight,
 And cast my character away.

The fields lie bound beneath the sky,
 The hedge-top and the furrow freeze,
 And still old plow-wheels sigh,
 As sweet as bones which stretch from sleep,
 And sooner than their sound is by,
 Will come a noise of yellow bees
 When the hay is nodding deep,
 And some wise throat that laughs for ease.

Till there was a soft voice which spoke:
 Hush, for every sound you tell
 Is out of an old horn I blew.
 I have come down to see who woke
 On earth's cold brink when night was through.
 No wilder chance befell,
 Than the starry breath I drew.
 I am Gabriel.

SUNDOWN

This is the time lean woods shall spend
 A steeped-up twilight, and the pale evening drink,
 And the perilous roe, the leaper to the west brink,
 Trembling and bright, to the caverned cloud descend.

Now shall you see pent oak gone gusty and frantic,
 Stooped with dry weeping, ruinously unloosing
 The sparse disheveled leaf, or reared and tossing
 A dreary scarecrow bough in funeral antic.

Aye, tatter you and rend,
 Oak heart, to your profession mourning, not obscure
 The outcome, not crepuscular, on the deep floor,
 Sable and gold match lusters and contend.

And rags of shrouding will not muffle the slain.
 This is the immortal extinction, the priceless wound
 Not to be staunched; the live gold leaks beyond,
 And matter's sanctified, dipped in a gold stain.

NIGHT-PIECE

The moon above the milky field
 Gleaning moves her one slant light,
 The wind weeps from the cloud:
 Then, weeping wind, unshroud
 Pale Cassiopeia, blow
 The true-swung pole-lamp bright.
 To this room a midnight's come
 Which speaks but with the beating clock,
 While on glistening paws the mouse
 Creeps night-master of the house.
 Rust shall eat away the lock,
 The door sag from the garner hoard,
 And the sleeper lie unsphered.
 Time's wheel frets on his finger still,
 He bends no more his weight with time's.
 He wept as long as wind,
 And sleeps with an indifferent will.
 Not airs, not climes unclose, behind
 The lashes' scarcely faltering jet,
 Which star he sees since Hesper set.

LULLABY

Hush, lullay,
 Your treasures all
     Encrust with rust.
 Your trinket pleasures
     Fall
     To dust.
 Beneath the sapphire arch
 Upon the grassy floor
 Is nothing more
     To hold,
 And play is over old.
 Your eyes
     In sleepy fever gleam,
 Your lids droop
     To their dream.
 You wander late alone,
 The flesh frets on the bone,
 Your love fails
     In your breast.
 Here is the pillow.
     Rest.

Langston Hughes

LANGSTON HUGHES was born February 1, 1902, in Joplin, Missouri. He was brought up in cities in the Middle West, graduated from Central High School in Cleveland, and at eighteen became a teacher of English in Mexico, where he lived for a year and a half. He spent a year at Columbia University and some time as a worker on the high seas. Hughes' next move was a foreign hegira to Paris in midwinter with seven dollars in his pocket. He stayed in France ten months, worked his way through Italy and Spain, and returned to New York with twenty-five cents. Working as a busboy in Washington, he was discovered by Vachel Lindsay, who read several of his poems to a fashionable audience in the very hotel in which Hughes carried trays of dishes.

The Weary Blues, Hughes' first volume, appeared in January, 1926. One of the poems had already won first prize in a contest conducted by Opportunity, a magazine which did great service in fostering creative work by Negroes. Hughes' poetry appearing at the same time as Countee Cullen's justified those who claimed we were witnessing a revival of Negro art. The Negroes themselves began to prove the quality of their inheritance. Johnson's The Book of American Negro Poetry appeared, three collections of American Negro spirituals disclosed the melodic fertility of the black singers, and various collections of "blues" revealed how greatly contemporary American composers were indebted to the complicated rhythms of the dark musicians. Hughes was the first to express the spirit of these blues in words. In his note to his second volume, Fine Clothes to the Jew (1927), he writes, "The Blues, unlike the Spirituals, have a strict poetic pattern: one long line repeated and a third line to rhyme with the first two. Sometimes the second line in repetition is slightly changed and sometimes, but very seldom, it is omitted. The mood of the Blues is almost always despondency, but when they are sung people laugh."

Although at least half of Hughes' work centers about the blues, much of his poetry is grim in an essentially urban manner. His portraits of Negro workmen (as evidenced in the remarkable "Brass Spittoons" with its similarity in symbols to Anna Hempstead Branch's "The Monk in the Kitchen") are more memorable than those produced by any of his compatriots. Beneath the physical struggle one senses the more suffering spirit. Dear Lovely Death (1931), privately printed, is a proof that Hughes can turn from the "popular" to the proletarian and still remain on the level of poetry. Mulatto (1936) was intensified by Shakespeare in Harlem (1941).

HOMESICK BLUES

De railroad bridge's
A sad song in de air.
De railroad bridge's
A sad song in de air.
Ever' time de trains pass
I wants to go somewhere.

I went down to de station;
Ma heart was in ma mouth.
Went down to de station;
Heart was in ma mouth.
Lookin' for a box car
To roll me to de South.

Homesick blues, Lawd,
'S a terrible thing to have.
Homesick blues is
A terrible thing to have.
To keep from cryin'
I opens ma mouth an' laughs.

BRASS SPITTOONS

Clean the spittoons, boy.
Detroit,
Chicago,
Atlantic City,
Palm Beach.
Clean the spittoons.
The steam in hotel kitchens,
And the smoke in hotel lobbies,
And the slime in hotel spittoons:

Part of my life.

Hey, boy!
A nickel,
A dime,
A dollar,
Two dollars a day.
Hey, boy!
A nickel,
A dime,
A dollar,
Two dollars
Buys shoes for the baby.
House rent to pay.
Church on Sunday.
My God!

Babies and church
and women and Sunday
all mixed up with dimes and dollars and clean spittoons and house rent to pay.
Hey, boy!

A bright bowl of brass is beautiful to the Lord.

Bright polished brass like the cymbals
Of King David's dancers,
Like the wine cups of Solomon.
Hey, boy!
A clean spittoon on the altar of the Lord.
A clean bright spittoon all newly polished,—
At least I can offer that.
Com'mere, boy!

SATURDAY NIGHT

Play it once.
 O, play it some more.
 Charlie is a gambler
 An' Sadie is a whore.
 A glass o' whiskey
 An' a glass o' gin:
 Strut, Mr. Charlie,
 Till de dawn comes in.
 Pawn yo' gold watch
 An' diamond ring.
 Git a quart o' licker.
 Let's shake dat thing!
 Skec-de-dad! De-dad!
 Doo-doo-doo!
 Won't be nothin' left
 When de worms git through.
 An' you's a long time
 Dead
 When you is Dead, too.
 So beat dat drum, boy!
 Shout dat song:
 Shake 'em up an' shake 'em up
 All night long.
 Hey! Hey!
 Ho . . . Hum!
 Do it, Mr. Charlie,
 Till de red dawn come.

JAZZ BAND IN A PARISIAN CABARET

Play that thing,
 Jazz band!
 Play it for the lords and ladies,
 For the dukes and counts,
 For the whores and gigolos,
 For the American millionaires,
 And the schoolteachers
 Out for a spree.
 Play it,
 Jazz band!
 You know that tune
 That laughs and cries at the same time.
 You know it.
 May I?
 Mais oui.
 Mein Gott!
 Parece una rumba.

Play it, jazz band!
 You've got seven languages to speak in
 And then some,
 Even if you do come from Georgia.
 Can I go home wid yuh, sweetie?
 Sure.

DRUM

Bear in mind
 That death is a drum
 Beating for ever
 Till the last worms come
 To answer its call,
 Till the last stars fall,
 Until the last atom
 Is no atom at all,
 Until time is lost
 And there is no air
 And space itself
 Is nothing nowhere.
 Death is a drum,
 A signal drum,
 Calling all life
 'To Come! Come!
 Come!'

FLORIDA ROAD WORKERS

I'm makin' a road
 For the cars
 To fly by on.
 Makin' a road
 Through the palmetto thicket
 For light and civilization
 To travel on.

Makin' a road
 For the rich old white men
 To sweep over in their big cars
 And leave me standin' here.

Sure,
 A road helps all of us!
 White folks ride—
 And I get to see 'em ride.
 I ain't never seen nobody
 Ride so fine before.
 Hey buddy!
 Look at me.
 I'm making a road!

Kenneth Fearing

KENNETH FEARING was born in Chicago in 1902 and was graduated from the University of Wisconsin. After graduation, he worked in many capacities; he became a salesman, a millhand, a newspaper reporter, and a free-lance writer. In 1939 he taught poetry technique at the League of American Writers.

His first book of poems, Angel Arms (1929), flashes before the reader a set of close-ups of the contemporary scene in which "hatred and pity are exactly mixed." Poems (1935) and Dead Reckoning (1938) mark a further advance in swiftly paced and provocative verse. Fearing is not unaware of the provocation. In an introduction to his Collected Poems (1940) he says: "The idea underlying my poetry, as well as anything I write, is that it must be exciting." Fearing knows what he is about; if it does nothing else, his poetry excites. Its fault is a self-imposed restriction of tone; Fearing has purposely discarded "the entire bag of conventions and codes usually associated with poetry." While this is commendable (if possible), it forces upon the poet a limitation even more severe than the traditional demands. Worse, it makes for a prescribed attitude and a sense of final flatness. To save his work from monotony, Fearing ranges widely for his material; charwomen, gangsters, presidents of the Browning Writing League, Harry from the warehouse, Myrtle from the Five and Dime, checkers at the morgue, coupon-clippers, high-diving queens, fifth columnists, big business executives, and crystal-gazers are exposed against the modern setting. The idiom which Fearing uses is savagely appropriate: it is the glaring script of neon lights, the language of locked hotel rooms and casual death, the brusque statement of headlines, the jargon of advertising patter, the slang of the streets, chatter of pent-houses and hospitals, dialectics in the boiler-room, patois of mortgages and the movies. Fearing satirizes big business by his wry employment of metropolitan images and ironically twisted slogans. "Portrait" is a minor masterpiece of composite delineation; it is a bitter cartoon, but a broadly humorous and recognizable picture. "American Rhapsody (4)," far from comic, is as poignant as it is shrewd.

If this poetry does not achieve emphasis as poetry, it gains tension by its very pitch and tempo. Fearing is at his worst when he attempts the mystical-oracular; he loses himself and his reader in a blur of mumbled implications and vague, unfinished gestures. He is at his best in his characters and caricatures, in his ominous pictures of the depression, in the sense of spiritual estrangement, in the maladjusted terrors and the doomed suspense of a speeded-up civilization. The varied elements are brought to a climax in "Readings, Forecasts, Personal Guidance," a poem which combines vision and hard anguish. It is this blend of pathetic insight and tragedy which is characteristic of a poet who, even when he fails, never flinches.

Fearing has written in other mediums besides verse. The Hospital (1939), his first novel, draws on his own experiences as a hospital worker. Dagger of the Mind (1941) is a tale of murder which departed from the conventional mystery formula and caused a small but violent controversy.

PORTRAIT

The clear brown eyes, kindly and alert, with 12-20 vision, give confident regard to the passing world through R. K. Lampert & Company lenses framed in gold; His soul, however, is all his own; Arndt Brothers necktie and hat (with feather) supply a touch of youth.

With his soul his own, he drives, drives, chats and drives,
The first and second bicuspids, lower right, replaced by bridge-work, while two incisors have porcelain crowns;

(Render unto Federal, state and city Caesar, but not unto time;
Render nothing unto time until Amalgamated Death serves final notice, in proper form;

The vault is ready;
The will has been drawn by Clagget, Clagget, Clagget & Brown;
The policies are adequate, Confidential's best, reimbursing for disability, partial or complete, with double indemnity should the end be a pure and simple accident)

Nothing unto time,
Nothing unto change, nothing unto fate,
Nothing unto you, and nothing unto me, or to any other known or unknown party or parties, living or deceased;

But Mercury shoes, with special arch supports, take much of the wear and tear;
On the course, a custombuilt driver corrects a tendency to slice;
Love's ravages have been repaired (it was a textbook case) by Drs. Schultz, Lightner, Mannheim, and Goode,

While all of it is enclosed in excellent tweed, with Mr. Baumer's personal attention to the shoulders and the waist;
And all of it now roving, chatting amiably through space in a Plymouth 6,
With his soul (his own) at peace, soothed by Walter Lippmann, and sustained by Haig & Haig.

AMERICAN RHAPSODY (4)

First you bite your fingernails. And then you comb your hair again. And then you wait. And wait.
(They say, you know, that first you lie. And then you steal, they say. And then, they say, you kill.)

Then the doorbell rings. Then Peg drops in. And Bill. And Jane. And Doc.
And first you talk, and smoke, and hear the news and have a drink. Then you walk down the stairs.
And you dine, then, and go to a show after that, perhaps, and after that a night spot, and after that come home again, and climb the stairs again, and again go to bed.

But first Peg argues, and Doc replies. First you dance the same dance and you drink the same drink you always drank before.
And the piano builds a roof of notes above the world.

And the trumpet weaves a dome of music through space. And the drum makes a ceiling over space and time and night.

And then the table-wit. And then the check. Then home again to bed.
But first, the stairs.

And do you now, baby, as you climb the stairs, do you still feel as you felt back there?

Do you feel again as you felt this morning? And the night before? And then the night before that?

(They say, you know, that first you hear voices. And then you have visions, they say. Then, they say, you kick and scream and rave.)

Or do you feel. What is one more night in a lifetime of nights?

What is one more death, or friendship, or divorce out of two, or three? Or four?
Or five?

One more face among so many, many faces, one more life among so many million lives?

But first, baby, as you climb and count the stairs (and they total the same) did you, sometime or somewhere, have a different idea?

Is this, baby, what you were born to feel, and do, and be?

READINGS, FORECASTS, PERSONAL GUIDANCE

It is not—I swear it by every fiery omen to be seen these nights in every quarter of the heavens, I affirm it by all the monstrous portents of the earth and of the sea—It is not that my belief in the true and mystic science is shaken, nor that I have lost faith in the magic of the cards, or in the augury of dreams, or in the great and good divinity of the stars.

No, I know still whose science fits the promise to the inquirer's need, invariably, for a change: Mine. My science foretells the wished-for journey, the business adjustment, the handsome stranger. (Each of these is considered a decided change.)

And I know whose skill weighs matrimony, risks a flyer in steel or wheat against the vagaries of the moon.

(Planet of dreams, of mothers and of children, goddess of sailors and of all adventurers, forgive the liberty. But a man must eat.) My skill, Mine, and the cunning and the patience. (Two dollars for the horoscope in brief and five for a twelve months' forecast in detail.)

No, it is this: The wonders that I have seen with my own eyes.

It is this: That still these people know, as I do not, that what has never been on earth before may still well come to pass,

That always, always there are new and brighter things beneath the sun,

That surely, in bargain basements or in walk-up flats, it must be so that still from time to time they hear wild angel voices speak.

It is this: That I have known them for what they are,

Seen thievery written plainly in their planets, found greed and murder and worse in their birth dates and their numbers, guilt etched in every line of every palm;

But still a light burns through the eyes they turn to me, a need more moving than the damned and dirty dollars (which I must take) that form the pattern of their larger hopes and deeper fears.

And it comes to this: That always I feel another hand, not mine, has drawn and turned the card to find some incredible ace,
Always another word I did not write appears in the spirit parchment prepared by me,
Always another face I do not know shows in the dream, the crystal globe, or the flame.

And finally, this: Corrupt, in a world bankrupt and corrupt, what have I got to do with these miracles?
If they want miracles, let them consult someone else.
Would they, in extremity, ask them of a physician? Or expect them, in desperation, of an attorney? Or of a priest? Or of a poet?

Nevertheless, a man must eat.

Mrs. Raeburn is expected at five. She will communicate with a number of friends and relatives long deceased.

Marya Zaturenska

MARYA ZATURENSKA was born in September, 1902, in Kiev, Russia. Her father came here after the Russo-Japanese War but had difficulty bringing over his wife and two children. The child Marya was eight years old when she came to the United States, and conditions were such that at thirteen she had to leave school and find work. Since she had no training of any kind, she had to accept all sorts of odd jobs in factories and department stores. Starting to write poetry in her early teens, she attended night high school, secured several scholarships, attended the University of Wisconsin, and qualified as a librarian. In 1925 she married the poet Horace Gregory.

Marya Zaturenska's earliest verse was readily accepted by the magazines, but the poet's critical instinct prevented exploitation as an infant prodigy. Her insights, fresh and vivid, are apparent in Threshold and Hearth (1934). Fluid though this writing is, it is never facile; it moves with a power which is highly imaginative but always restrained. The restraint is so characteristic that it misled the critics. Even when Cold Morning Sky (1937) won the Pulitzer Prize for poetry the reviewers spoke of her precision as "detached," "abstract," and "removed from the immediate world." In spite of its distinction, her work was so little known that her name was not even listed in the 1940 edition of Millett's comprehensive Contemporary American Authors.

The Listening Landscape (1941) is the very best of her verse, richest in feeling, ripest in expression. In common with the preceding volumes it is deceptive in its smoothness; beneath the calm exterior there is a prevailing and penetrative glow. Here the quick communication and sure craft go hand in hand. "Interview in "Midsummer" is an uncanny trance-like monolog, but what is unsaid is envisioned in any woman's universe; "The White Dress" is an extraordinary evocation, the growth of a symbol from haunting beauty to horrible possession; "The Lovers" is, in skillful repetitions and contrapuntal images, one of the most musical love-poems of our time. Even the "classical" poems, such as the "Head of Medusa," bring full life to mythological figures, not only reanimating a legend but creating a new and complex character.

There is in this poetry a combination which no contemporary has quite achieved: a fusion of definite picture and indefinite symbolism, of word-music and parable. Experience is transmuted, resolved, and transcended; "The Daisy" is only one example of subtlety resolved into simplicity. The lyrical impulse is extended in individualized images and personal landscapes; it searches but it never forgets to sing. If the tone is sometimes faraway, it is because this poet is occupied with a sense of timelessness.

Hers is an art of vivid condensation, of wide allusions in compact phrases: "the swan-feathered snow," "the heart's best weather," "the grass blade's thin precision," "the lip-red poppy scenting earth with sleep," "the intricate unholiness of pain." Superficially these lyrics may seem to be pastoral-historical—the tradition of Marvell, Waller, and Clare—but the synthesis is as remarkable as it is new: a combination of shining observation and shadowed allegory. In spirit as well as substance this verse has a form of its own, a shape delicate and pure. But it is not the cold purity of crystal. It is the purity of quiet but intensely burning flame.

THE DAISY

Having so rich a treasury, so fine a hoard
Of beauty water-bright before my eyes,
I plucked the daisy only, simple and white
In its fringed frock and brooch of innocent gold.

So is all equilibrium restored:
I leave the noontide wealth of richer bloom
To the destroyer, the impatient ravisher,
The intemperate bee, the immoderate bird.

Of all this beauty felt and seen and heard
I can be frugal and devout and plain,
Deprived so long of light and air and grass,
The shyest flower is sweetest to uncover.

How poor I was: and yet no richer lover
Discovered joy so deep in earth and water;
And in the air that fades from blue to pearl,
And in a flower white-frocked like my small daughter.

THE LOVERS

My glittering sky, high, clear, profound,
Be thou my Alas. I'll be thy summer.

I'll be thy summer and the ground
 Where all thy garlands, all thy honors found
 In the sky's mirror, fire and dew contend,
 Which shall excel, which shall transcend.

Be thou my mountain heights, I'll be the plain,
 Warm, simple, sweet, complaisant to the rain,
 Complaisant to the rain and wind, the common day.
 I'll be the daisy field where happy children play,
 Where happy children play, where the world's voice is heard
 In a tree, in the grass, in the storm, in a bird.

Be thou the diamond water-crisp, and I the fire
 Rosy and quick within the ruby's flame,
 Within the ruby's flame inscribe my name
 Sensitive on the spirit's delicate wire,
 Send occult messages no human tongue can say.
 Be thou the night, I'll be the day.

I'll be the day, so fresh, so morning bright,
 And thy youth's dawning and the fields of light,
 The fields of light that change dark to bright.
 Thou my tranquillity, I thy delight,
 Thou the thin light of opals on my wrist
 And I the evening tinted heaven brooding amethyst.

Be thou the waterbrook and I the hart
 Drinking in coolness from rain moistened heat,
 Drinking in coolness where the willows part,
 And where the willows part, two diverse shadows meet.
 Be thou the sheltered pool, and I the busy street
 And we the shades that one another greet.

Change then forever, be forever the same,
 Who have one road, one destiny, one name,
 One destiny, one name, jewel, dew, fire (never the same),
 The mountain and the river, city and plain.
 Separate, distinct, divided, parted, meeting ever
 What the eye loses, let the heart recover.

THE WHITE DRESS

Imperceptively the world became haunted by her white dress.
 Walking in forest or garden, he would start to see,
 Her flying form; sudden, swift, brief as a caress
 The flash of her white dress against a darkening tree.

And with forced unconcern, withheld desire, and pain
 He beheld her at night; and when sleepless in his bed,
 Her light footfalls seemed loud as cymbals; deep as his disdain,
 Her whiteness entered his heart, flowed through from feet to head.

Or it was her face at a window, her swift knock at the door,
 Then she appeared in her white dress, her face as white as her gown;
 Like snow in midsummer she came and left the rich day poor;
 And the sun chilled and grew higher, remote, and the moon slipped down.

So the years passed; more fierce in pursuit her image grew;
 She became the dream abjured, the ill uncured, the deed undone,
 The life one never lived, the answer one never knew,
 Till the white shadow swayed the moon, stayed the expiring sun,

Until at his life's end, the shadow of the white face, the white dress
 Became his inmost thought, his private wound, the word unspoken,
 All that he cherished in failure, all that had failed his success;
 She became the crystal orb, half-seen, untouched, unbroken.

There on his death bed, kneeling at the bed's foot, he trembling saw,
 The image of the Mother-Goddess, enormous, archaic, cruel,
 Overpowering the universe, creating her own inexorable law,
 Molded of stone, but her fire and ice flooded the room like a pool.

And she was the shadow in the white dress, no longer slight and flying,
 But solid as death. Her cold, firm, downward look,
 Brought close to the dissolving mind the marvellous act of dying,
 And on her lap, the clasped, closed, iron book.

HEAD OF MEDUSA

How long she waited for her executioner!
 She who froze life to stone, whose hissing hair
 Once grew as waved and flowing as the sea,
 Ash-damp and dreadful now. The fabulous mystery, the shame,
 Forever in that cave where man nor beast came

Came and returned to life; so great the curse
 Of the invulnerable enemy whose eyes immerse
 Medusa's soul in this foul universe,
 Turns her warm body passionate, fleshed with fire,
 Into this loathsome thing no men desire.

Cast in the final loneliness she must lie
 Knowing that all who look on her will die
 (The savage sorrow frozen in her sigh)
 Even as she meets the look of fear and hate.
 Their blood dries and their flesh must expiate.

But now her Perseus comes, foe or deliverer?
 Bringing the welcome end. For whom her serpents stir,
 Brute force and animal terror, the soul's tormentor
 Subside; low-water calm, slow, unperceptively
 Comes he who sets her free.

And now the end nears. Through steelpoint warm blood
 Shall flow in purification. Her world made clean and good,
 Through pain the Immortal's hatred is withheld.
 Even now in the gold shield
 One faces her, his life-blood uncongealed,

Prepares for the quick stroke that sets her free
 From the cold terror in all eyes that see.
 Even now the slayer's hand displays the mystery
 That once vainglorious and guilty head,
 Emptied of all its sorrow and its dread!

WOMAN AT THE PIANO

Rippling in the ocean of that darkening room,
 The music poured from the thin hands, widening, gathering
 The floods of descending night; flying from the keys
 The sound of memory, then the woman singing
 Vibrant and full, the resonant echoes scattered
 Into a stranger's language, into a foreign country.

The rococo clock on the mantel strikes out its chimes
 The night wind sighing through the open windows,
 Sends in its signals, wishes, memories.
 The withdrawn room grows immense with hallucination
 Clear woman's voice, long fingers whitely straying
 Over the speaking keys do you hear the answer?
 Will the male voice answer? see stirring through the walls
 Behind the rustling curtains in the declining light
 How another voice still silent seems to tremble.

Patience is all. Unloved, unlovable, lonely,
 It sits on the neglected sofa, watches the fingers
 Draw out the significant music, hears the finale
 Shatter the torpor of the dying room.
 Now the trees through open windows aspire and flame
 Now there are footsteps, echoes, reveries
 Now two voices sound in the room where only one
 Wove intricate sweetness from the simple keys.
 Two voices ring in the dawn, the morning enters.

THE TEMPEST

As in a Watteau fete of rose and silver blue,
 The intense colors lift the dreamy world
 Into a sharper vision than it knew,
 The graceful figures vast in miniature.

And deepens overhead the dainty, sweeping azure.

So in the cold and limpid morning air,
 When but a hint of sun was felt, we breathed the storm

Companiced by June light. It tinged the warm,
Half-sleeping flowers. Unseen, but everywhere
We felt the tempest's uncreated form,

Gathering its might, its bright and nervous flare.

Sec how its silver hand disturbs the clouds
And the soul's solitude in anger wakes
The waving revery of grass, and whispering shakes
The airy heavens into the drifting lakes,

While rain falls gently from the savage eyes.

And silken-sharp the dazzling thunder falls
Upon the startled land. The rising, falling dart
Sudden and piercing on the summer's heart;
And while from tree to tree the voice of fire calls

The unleashed tempest shakes the garden walls.

Ogden Nash

OGDEN NASH was born August 6, 1903, in Rye, New York, of a distinguished and seemingly ubiquitous family. He claims to have had ten thousand cousins in North Carolina; his great-great-grandfather was Revolutionary Governor of the state, and the latter's brother, General Francis Nash, gave his name to Nashville, Tennessee. Ogden Nash spent a year at St. George's School in Rhode Island, where, he says, he lost his entire nervous system carving lamb for a table of fourteen-year-olds. He entered Harvard in the class of 1924, but left after one year.

To continue his biography in his own words: "Came to New York to make my fortune as a bond salesman; in two years I sold one bond—to my godmother. However, I saw a lot of good movies. Next went to work writing car cards. After two years of that I landed in the advertising department of Doubleday. That was 1925, and I doubledayed until 1931." After 1931, Nash engaged in a succession of varied activities: he was on the staff of The New Yorker; became associated with two publishing firms; married and lived in Baltimore; had two daughters and moved to Hollywood, where he wrote—or rewrote—scenarios.

Nash's liveliest effects are in Free Wheeling (1931), The Bad Parent's Garden of Verse (1936), and I'm a Stranger Here Myself (1938), but all his volumes are characterized by rollicking spirits, easy satire, and a slightly insane manner. The style is bantering, deceptively haphazard, but the end is often a kind of social criticism. For most readers, however, Nash's charm lies in his irresponsible absurdities, in the impudent rhymes which do not quite rhyme, in his way of giving a new twist to an old subject. He can be surprisingly shrewd and nonsensical at the same time.

The Face Is Familiar (1940) contains two hundred eighty poems selected from Nash's six preceding volumes and includes thirty poems never before published. It is a notable omnibus, a storehouse of wry laughter, penetrating appraisal, and inspired lunacy comparable to nothing written in the period—a collection which has already been admirably called The Golden Trashery of Ogden Nashery.

THE RHINOCEROS

The rhino is a homely beast,
 For human eyes he's not a feast,
 But you and I will never know
 Why nature chose to make him so.
 Farewell, farewell, you old rhinoceros,
 I'll stare at something less preocious!

ADVENTURES OF ISABEL

Isabel met an enormous bear;
 Isabel, Isabel, didn't care.
 The bear was hungry, the bear was ravenous,
 The bear's big mouth was cruel and cavernous.
 The bear said, Isabel, glad to meet you,
 How do, Isabel, now I'll eat you!
 Isabel, Isabel, didn't worry;
 Isabel didn't scream or scurry.
 She washed her hands and she straightened her hair up,
 Then Isabel quietly ate the bear up.

Once on a night as black as pitch
 Isabel met a wicked old witch.
 The witch's face was cross and wrinkled,
 The witch's gums with teeth were sprinkled.
 Ho, ho, Isabel! the old witch crowed,
 I'll turn you into an ugly toad!
 Isabel, Isabel, didn't worry;
 Isabel didn't scream or scurry.
 She showed no rage and she showed no rancor,
 But she turned the witch into milk and drank her.

Isabel met a hideous giant,
 Isabel continued self-reliant.
 The giant was hairy, the giant was horrid,
 He had one eye in the middle of his forehead.
 Good morning, Isabel, the giant said,
 I'll grind your bones to make my bread.
 Isabel, Isabel, didn't worry;
 Isabel didn't scream or scurry.
 She nibbled the zwieback that she always fed off,
 And when it was gone, she cut the giant's head off.

Isabel met a troublesome doctor,
 He punched and poked till he really shocked her.

The doctor's talk was of coughs and chills,
 And the doctor's satchel bulged with pills.
 The doctor said unto Isabel,
 Swallow this, it will make you well.
 Isabel, Isabel, didn't worry;
 Isabel didn't scream or scurry.
 She took those pills from the pill-concoctor,
 And Isabel calmly cured the doctor.

GOLLY, HOW TRUTH WILL OUT!

How does a person get to be a capable liar?
 That is something that I respectfully inquar,
 Because I don't believe a person will ever set the world on fire
 Unless they are a capable lire.
 Some wise man said that words were given to us to conceal our thoughts,
 But if a person has nothing but truthful words why their thoughts haven't even the protection of a pair of panties or shoughts,
 And a naked thought is ineffectual as well as improper,
 And hasn't a chance in the presence of a glib chinchilla-clad whopper.
 One of the greatest abilities a person can have, I guess,
 Is the ability to say Yes when they mean No and No when they mean Yes.
 Oh to be Machiavellian, oh to be unscrupulous, oh, to be glib!
 Oh to be ever prepared with a plausible fib!
 Because then a dinner engagement or a contract or a treaty is no longer a fetter,
 Because liars can just logically lie their way out of it if they don't like it or if one comes along that they like better;
 And do you think their conscience prickles?
 No, it tickles.
 And please believe that I mean every one of these lines as I am writing them Because once there was a small boy who was sent to the drugstore to buy some bitter stuff to put on his nails to keep him from biting them,
 And in his humiliation he tried to lie to the clerk
 And it didn't work,
 Because he said My mother sent me to buy some bitter stuff for a friend of mine's nails that bites them, and the clerk smiled wisely and said I wonder who that friend could be,
 And the small boy broke down and said Me,
 And it was me, or at least I was him,
 And all my subsequent attempts at subterfuge have been equally grim,
 And that is why I admire a suave prevarication because I prevaricate so awkwardly and gauchely,
 And that is why I can never amount to anything politically or socially.

SONG TO BE SUNG BY THE FATHER OF INFANT FEMALE CHILDREN

My heart leaps up when I behold
 A rainbow in the sky;
 Contrariwise, my blood runs cold
 When little boys go by.

For little boys as little boys,
 No special hate I carry,
 But now and then they grow to men,
 And when they do, they marry.
 No matter how they tarry,
 Eventually they marry.
 And, swine among the pearls,
 They marry little girls.

Oh, somewhere, somewhere, an infant plays,
 With parents who feed and clothe him.
 Their lips are sticky with pride and praise,
 But I have begun to loathe him.
 Yes, I loathe with a loathing shameless
 This child who to me is nameless.
 This bachelor child in his carriage
 Gives never a thought to marriage,
 But a person can hardly say knife
 Before he will hunt him a wife.

I never see an infant (male),
 A-sleeping in the sun,
 Without I turn a trifle pale
 And think, is he the one?
 Oh, first he'll want to crop his curls,
 And then he'll want a pony,
 And then he'll think of pretty girls
 And holy matrimony.
 He'll put away his pony,
 And sigh for matrimony.
 A cat without a mouse
 Is he without a spouse.

Oh, somewhere he bubbles, bubbles of milk,
 And quietly sucks his thumbs;
 His cheeks are roses painted on silk,
 And his teeth are tucked in his gums.
 But alas, the teeth will begin to grow,
 And the bubbles will cease to bubble;
 Given a score of years or so,
 The roses will turn to stubble.
 He'll sell a bond, or he'll write a book,
 And his eyes will get that acquisitive look,
 And raging and ravenous for the kill,
 He'll boldly ask for the hand of Jill.
 This infant whose middle
 Is diapered still
 Will want to marry
 My daughter Jill.

Oh sweet be his slumber and moist his middle!
 My dreams, I fear, are infanticiddle.
 A fig for embryo Lohengrins!

I'll open all of his safety pins,
 I'll pepper his powder, and salt his bottle,
 And give him readings from Aristotle.
 Sand for his spinach I'll gladly bring,
 And Tabasco sauce for his teething ring,
 And an elegant, elegant alligator
 To play with in his perambulator.
 Then perhaps he'll struggle through fire and water
 To marry somebody else's daughter.

Countee Cullen

COUNTEE CULLEN was born in New York City, May 30, 1903. He was educated in the New York schools and at New York University, and was graduated with the class of 1925. A year later he received his M.A. at Harvard (1926).

Color (1925) and Copper Sun (1927) suffer not only from the poet's influences but from his own juvenilia. There is, however, no gainsaying his gift of epigram and the neatness of his execution. Lacking the deep racial quality of Langston Hughes, Cullen's is a more literary accomplishment. If his verse is not as black as it might be painted, it is bold in concept and metaphor. "Heritage," which, in spite of reminiscences of Ralph Hodgson and Edna Millay, marks the peak of his first volume, still stands as one of the finest poems produced by an American Negro.

The Ballad of the Brown Girl (1927) appeared in the same year as his comprehensive anthology of Negro verse, Caroling Dusk, in which Cullen showed unexpected editorial acumen. The Black Christ (1930) suffers from the double handicap of formula in style and formula in feeling. Its program is ambitious and promises force; but here is no fire, only fluency. The poet seems to be victimized by his own epithets, and these lack surprise or conviction. As Harry Alan Potamkin wrote, reviewing the preceding volume, "Mr. Cullen has capitalized the fact of race without paying for such capitalization by the exploitation of the material and the essence of race. Once race becomes to him more than capital and its poetic form more than the statement of its fact, he will create, upon what are undoubtedly unusual gifts, poems of import."

The Medea and Some Poems (1935) contains an adequate but not inspired version of the poetic drama with several other verses.

SIMON THE CYRENIAN SPEAKS

He never spoke a word to me,
 And yet He called my name.
 He never gave a sign to see,
 And yet I knew and came.

At first I said, "I will not bear
 His cross upon my back—
 He only seeks to place it there
 Because my skin is black."

But He was dying for a dream,
 And He was very meek;
 And in His eyes there shone a gleam
 Men journey far to seek.

It was Himself my pity bought;
 I did for Christ alone
 What all of Rome could not have wrought:
 With bruise of lash or stone.

THREE EPITAPHS

For My Grandmother

This lovely flower fell to seed.
Work gently, sun and rain—
She held it as her dying creed
That she would grow again.

For a Virgin Lady

For forty years I shunned the lust
Inherent in my clay:
Death only was so amorous
I let him have his way.

A Lady I Know

She thinks that even up in heaven
Her class lies late and snores,
While poor black cherubs rise at seven
To do celestial chores.

HERITAGE

What is Africa to me:
Copper sun or scarlet sea,
Jungle star or jungle track,
Strong bronzed men, or regal black
Women from whose loins I sprang
When the birds of Eden sang?
One three centuries removed
From the scenes his fathers loved,
Spicy grove, cinnamon tree,
What is Africa to me?

So I lie, who all day long
Want no sound except the song
Sung by wild barbaric birds
Goading massive jungle herds,
Juggernauts of flesh that pass
Trampling tall defiant grass
Where young forest lovers lie,
Plighting troth beneath the sky.
So I lie, who always hear,
Though I cram against my ear
Both my thumbs and keep them there,
Great drums throbbing through the air.
So I lie, whose fount of pride,
Dear distress, and joy allied,
Is my somber flesh and skin,
With the dark blood dammed within
Like great pulsing tides of wine
That, I fear, must burst the fine

Channels of the chafing net
Where they surge and foam and fret.

Africa? A book one thumbs
Listlessly, till slumber comes.
Unremembered are her bats
Circling through the night, her cats
Crouching in the river reeds,
Stalking gentle flesh that feeds
By the river brink; no more
Does the bugle-throated roar
Cry that monarch claws have leapt
From the scabbards where they slept.
Silver snakes that once a year
Doff the lovely coats you wear,
Seek no covert in your fear
Lest a mortal eye should see;
What's your nakedness to me?
Here no leprous flowers rear
Fierce corollas in the air;
Here no bodies sleek and wet,
Dripping mingled rain and sweat,
Tread the savage measures of Jungle boys and girls in love.

What is last year's snow to me,
Last year's anything? The tree
Budding yearly must forget
How its past arose or set—
Bough and blossom, flower, fruit,
Even what shy bird with mute
Wonder at her travail there,
Meekly labored in its hair.
One three centuries removed
From the scenes his fathers loved,
Spicy grove, cinnamon tree,
What is Africa to me?

So I lie, who find no peace
Night or day, no slight release
From the unremitting beat
Made by cruel padded feet
Walking through my body's street.
Up and down they go, and back,
Treading out a jungle track.
So I lie, who never quite Safely sleep from rain at night—
I can never rest at all
When the rain begins to fall;
Like a soul gone mad with pain
I must match its weird refrain;

Ever must I twist and squirm,
Writhing like a baited worm,
While its primal measures drip
Through my body, crying, "Strip!
Doff this new exuberance.
Come and dance the Lover's Dance!"
In an old remembered way
Rain works on me night and day.

Quaint, outlandish heathen gods
Black men fashion out of rods,
Clay and brittle bits of stone,
In a likeness of their own,
My conversion came high-priced;
I belong to Jesus Christ,
Preacher of humility;
Heathen gods are naught to me.
Father, Son and Holy Ghost,
So I make an idle boast;
Jesus of the twice-turned cheek,
Lamb of God, although I speak
With my mouth thus, in my heart
Do I play a double part.
Even at Thy glowing altar
Must my heart grow sick and falter
Wishing He I served were black,
Thinking then it would not lack

Precedent of pain to guide it,
Let who would or might deride it;
Surely then this flesh would know
Yours had borne a kindred woe.
Lord, I fashion dark gods, too,
Daring even to give You
Dark despairing features where,
Crowned with dark rebellious hair,
Patience wavers just so much as
Mortal grief compels, while touches
Quick and hot, of anger, rise
To smitten cheek and weary eyes.
Lord, forgive me if my need
Sometimes shapes a human creed.

*All day long and all night through,
One thing only must I do.
Quench my pride and cool my blood,
Lest I perish in the flood.
Lest a hidden ember set
Timber that I thought was wet
Burning like the dryest flax,
Melting like the mcrest wax,
Lest the grave restore its dead.
Not yet has my heart or head
In the least way realized
They and I are civilized.*

Merrill Moore

MERRILL MOORE was born in Columbia, Tennessee, September 11, 1903. Although he served an internship in Boston and practices there, his backgrounds are entirely Southern: his father, John Trotwood Moore, the historian, was from Alabama; his mother from Missouri. He was educated in Nashville, received his B.A. at Vanderbilt University in 1924, his M.D. in 1928, and he was one of the group which made The Fugitive so provocative a periodical.

His work is vividly modern and it seems, at first glance, a paradox that this experimental poet has chosen the most classic form as his medium. Typography and tradition notwithstanding, The Noise That Time Makes (1929) is composed entirely of sonnets—and it is an open secret that Merrill Moore at the age of twenty-five had composed no less than nine thousand such sonnets. Nor is it a fiction that Moore learned shorthand in order to get more of his fourteen-liners done between classroom and laboratory. It should be said that neither Wyatt nor Philip Sidney would have sponsored had they even recognized Moore's employment of the key with which Shakespeare is supposed to have unlocked his heart. The Noise That Time Makes bears the first fruits of what might be considered a new hybrid: the American sonnet.

The characterization is not far-fetched, for Moore's cis-Atlantic accent, the native syncopated speed—so different from English and Italian tempi—the abrupt approach and swift abandonment are not only occasioned by local backgrounds but are the very essence of these poems. As a sonneteer in the strict sense, Moore commits every known heresy and invents several new ones. His rhyme-schemes seem as haphazard as they are numerous—the rhymes themselves are suspiciously unorthodox. His lines, instead of conforming to a precise meter, stretch themselves flexibly as their author throws in four or five extra syllables with prodigal nonchalance. His stanzas, instead of splitting neatly into customary octave and sestet, divide themselves anywhere with what seems sheer perversity. But there is nothing arbitrary about these "American sonnets." The innovations are essentially reasonable, and the reasons for them are quite simple. Merrill Moore's sonnets are, in some ways, the most spontaneous ever written in America, and their "naturalness" is reflected in their structure. The rhythms are based on the rise and fall of the breath rather than on the beat of the metronome. It is not scansion but stress which determines the line-length.

The charm of such poetry is the continual freshness which gives it the quality of improvisation. This is, likewise, a danger; for when Moore, seated before his instrument, lets his fingers wander as they list, his spontaneous playing extends itself into a fluency which is neither a virtue nor virtuosity. But the best of his lines reveal the serious eye and sensitive touch. "What if small birds are peppering the sky," "allowing fish-like thoughts to escape in thin streams trickling through the mind," "birds' indeclinable twitter"—the sonnets are full of such swift exactitudes. Suiting their pace to subjects limited only by a seemingly unlimited imagination, scarcely two of these poems are alike in shape or theme. "Shot Who? Jim Lane" is as realistic as it is sectional; "Warning to One" is a tribute etched with acid; "How She Resolved to Act" is intuitive as it is whimsical; "The Book of How" quietly mingles the casual and the colossal.

Six Sides to a Man (1935), like its predecessor, presents no sequence but, with kaleidoscopic changes, a set of unrelated patterns. It is as if a flood of quickly igniting thoughts were impelled by recollections, sights, sounds, smells, the look and feel of words, with all their complex associations. These associations, intuitions, and memories both help and hinder each other, and in the clash the poem appears. This paradox of creation and conflict, this order out of chaos, is common to every poet; in Moore's case the process is somewhat more self-revealing. The factor that frequently deranges his aim is probably that his intuitions and unconscious associations are not in league with and often even opposed to his conscious intention.

M (1938), as the title indicates, actually includes one thousand poems, one thousand autobiographical sonnets. Using the sonnet as a focusing lens, the greatest mass production poet of his age directs the camera-eye, and presents a multitude of allusions, fantasies, case histories, brilliant pictures, and psychological shadows.

This, obviously, is not a poetry of perfection but of casual disassociation. It attains diverse and sometimes dazzling effects rather than integrated finish. It pushes its way through experience and dreams; it cannot stop to correct errors in taste and proportion. But Moore's mind is expansive, almost explosive—at thirty-seven he had published only a small part of the 50,000 sonnets he had written Incredibly energetic, Merrill Moore derives from no one, a multiple and bewildering phenomenon.

OLD MEN AND OLD WOMEN GOING HOME
ON THE STREET CAR

Carrying their packages of groceries in particular
With books under their arms that maybe they will read
And possibly understand, old women lead
Their weaker selves up to the front of the car.

And old men who for thirty years have sat at desks
Survey them harmlessly.

They regard each other
As forgotten sister looks at forgotten brother
On their way between two easily remembered tasks
And that is positively all there is to it.

But it was not that way thirty years ago!
Before desks and counters had tired their backs and feet,

When life for them was a bowl of odorous fruit
That they might take their pick of, then turn and go,
Saying, "This tastes so good!" or, "This smells so sweet!"

IT IS WINTER, I KNOW

What if small birds are peppering the sky,
Scudding south with the clouds to an ultimate tip on lands
Where they may peck worms and slugs from moist sands
Rather muddily mixed with salt?

Or if wind dashes by
Insufferably filled with birds' indeclinable twitter
Not deigning to toy with the oak-twigs that it passes
And treading but lightly on all the delicate grasses
Under trees where crickets are silent, where mad leaves flutter?

It is winter, I know, there are too many Nays now confronting
The obdurate soul that would trick itself into believing
That buds are still ripe, that cells are all ready for cleaving;
It can only be winter, winter alone, when blunting
Winds rush over the ice, scattering leaves from their weeds
To rattle the sycamore tree's dry-shriveled seeds.

SHOT WHO? JIM LANE!

When he was shot he toppled to the ground
As if the toughened posts that were his thighs
Had felt that all that held them up were lies,
Weak lies, that suddenly someone had found

Out all that was true about them.

It did not seem
Like the crashing of a stalwart forest oak
But like a frail staff that a sharp wind broke
Or something insubstantial in a dream.

I never thought Jim Lane would fall like that.

He'd sworn that bullets must be gold to find him;
That when they came toward him he made them mind him
By means he knew,
just as a barn-yard cat
Can keep a pack of leaping dogs at bay
By concentrating and looking a certain way.

WARNING TO ONE

Death is the strongest of all living things
And when it happens do not look in the eyes
For a dead fire or a lack-luster there,
But listen for the words that fall from lips
Or do not fall. Silence is not death;
It merely means that the one who is conserving breath
Is not concerned with tattle and small quips.

Watch the quick fingers and the way they move
During unguarded moments—words of love
And love's caresses may be cold as ice
And cold the glitter of engagement rings;
Death is the sword that hangs on a single hair,
And that thin tenuous hair is no more than love
And yours is the silly head it hangs above

HOW SHE RESOLVED TO ACT

"I shall be careful to say nothing at all
About myself or what I know of him
Or the vaguest thought I have—no matter how dim,
Tonight if it so happen that he call."

And not ten minutes later the door-bell rang
And into the hall he stepped as he always did
With a face and a bearing that quite poorly hid
His brain that burned and his heart that fairly sang
And his tongue that wanted to be rid of the truth.

As well as she could, for she was very loath
To signify how she felt, she kept very still,
But soon her heart cracked loud as a coffee mill
And her brain swung like a comet in the dark
And her tongue raced like a squirrel in the park.

PANDORA AND THE MOON

Minds awake in bodies that were asleep
 Caused the winged troubles to be born
 That made Pandora one time feel forlorn,

Because, in spite of the box, she could not keep
 Her troubles there, the worrisome animalcules
 Fluttered out never to be regained,
 For every method of evil especially trained
 And subject neither to God's nor the devil's rules.

What shall she do? Nothing; sit and ponder,
 Watch the dying leaves drop from the tree
 Until they all are gone and she may see
 The same moon then that used to make her wonder
 At the unbelievable stories she sits and reads.

And if she succeeds in that then she succeeds.

VILLAGE NOON: MID-DAY BELLS

When both hands of the town clock stood at twelve
 Eve ceased spinning, Adam ceased to delve.

A lusty cockerel crowed that noon had come,
 The shadows stood beneath the trees and some
 Were motionless a moment—then the people
 Busied themselves for food, and in the steeple
 Ubiquitous pigeons roucoulayed and slept
 Above the watch the dogs below them kept
 For nothing—or a dust cloud down the road
 That might mean feet or might mean wheels or not.

Then as the noon sun with its ardor glowed
 On man and beast and field and dwelling place
 The hands moved past noon to another spot
 And Time moved on a little way in Space.

UNKNOWN MAN IN THE MORGUE

Tortured body, lie at rest alone
 Finally on the long and merciless
 Slab of now cool lava-molten stone,
 And wait our mutual and final guess
 At your identity, nameless, homeless one.

No suburb avenue, no numbered house
 We know for you; no date of birth nor death
 Are yours, though somewhere visitors may carouse
 In a forgotten room where once you lived,
 Fathered, soned and brothered, lovered, wived.

But here you come unfollowed to this place,
 With an anonymous grimace on your face
 In death, whose last name and whose last address
 Will now be yours in your last loneliness.

THE BOOK OF HOW

After the stars were all hung separately out
 For mortal eyes to see that care to look
 The one who did it sat down and wrote a book
 On how he did it.

It took him about
 As long to write the book as to do the deed
 But he said, "It's things like this we mostly need."
 And the angels approved but the devils screamed with laughter
 For they knew exactly what would follow after.

For somehow he managed entirely to omit
 The most important facts in accomplishing it,

Where he got the ladder to reach the stars
 And how he lighted them, especially Mars,

And what he hung them on when he got them there
 Eternally distant and luminous in the air.

AND TO THE YOUNG MEN

And to the young men awaiting their sacrifice
 You brought water in an invisible pail
 And promised them the plans would surely fail
 That were written against them, recorded in the stars.
 And you brought straw and padded the cold bars
 Of the prison beds whereon the young men lay,
 And sung to some at night and fanned by day
 Those who were fevering into paradise.

But even then you did not do enough.
 For you remember a boy, the silent one?
 With a silent eye, who scarcely loved the sun,
 And felt too keenly the winter wind's dry sough?
 Well, you should have brought him cresses from a far stream
 Over which nymphs and under which naiads dream.

AND THEN HER BURIAL

Motionless, gentle as it always was,
 The earth is opened all upon the cause
 Of her mere dying, and it is prepared
 To cushion her as soon as it is bared.

Now, musicians, if you ever played,
Deafen us to grief, who are afraid
Of weeping at her parting, for we stand
Wringing useless hand with useless hand.

We fan our face that parches in the sight
Of all her beauty billowing too bright
In radiant waves against the saddest eye
Our face has ever matched our feeling by.

Gone, gone her smile, unless we can recall
Her friendly face beneath the lily-pall.

"FINAL STATUS NEVER ASCERTAINED" LLOYDS REGISTRY

Where the drift went the waters answered it,
Where the drift went the lonely waters called
To cliffs along the shore grown gray and bald

As loudly crying scabirds used to flit
Over the headlands of that noisy coast
Where the Aphis and her crew were lost.

Humble, patient carpenters had made
Her hull, and simple sailors made her sails.

But what hands made the rocky reefs and gales
That tore the ship apart and picked the meat
Completely from her bones and far too neat
Swept the crew and carried them away
Into green chambers where they had to stay
And had no choice, nor ever a word to say?

Robert Penn Warren

ROBERT PENN WARREN was born in Kentucky in 1905. His education was widely scattered: he received his B.A. at Vanderbilt University and his M.A. at the University of California. He attended Yale Graduate School for a time and, in 1929, New College, Oxford. He was the youngest of The Fugitive group, sharing their sectional differences, though less pronouncedly local than most. Upon his return to America he began teaching, first at Vanderbilt, later in Louisiana State University at Baton Rouge, besides conducting conferences in writing at the universities of Montana and Colorado. With Cleanth Brooks, Jr., he became one of the managing editors of The Southern Review.

John Brown (1929) is a biography in prose, differing radically in tone and treatment from Benét's John Brown's Body. Warren's poetry is more certain; it has iron beneath its grace. Intellectual in its origins, Warren's verse remains closer to the earth than the work of his confrères; fertile in strong images, its strength no less than its fecundity rises from Kentucky soil. The critical mind is always at work here, but not so insistently as to inhibit the creative imagination. In his early twenties, Warren had already accomplished a fusion: in his lime-tintured phrases, form and feeling are one.

A volume, Pondy Woods and Other Poems, was announced as early as 1929, but never published. His best work appeared in Thirty-Six Poems (1935). Such poems as "Letter to a Friend," "Aubade for Hope," "The Owl," and others may not be as sharply delineated as the early "Pondy Woods" and "History Among the Rocks," but their more rounded contours reveal Warren's development, and his growing power. "The Return—An Elegy" confirms the vigor of "Pro Sua Vita" and reveals a poet who can combine the latest devices with an almost Saxon strength. A novel, Night Rider (1939), vibrates with an energy tense and keen, like his verse, it is "strung with the bitter tendons of the stone."

PONDY WOODS

The buzzards over Pondy Woods
 Achieve the blue tense altitudes,
 Black figments that the woods release,
 Obscenity in form and grace,
 Drifting high through the pure sunshine
 Till the sun in gold decline.

Big Jim Todd was a slick black buck
 Laying low in the mud and muck
 Of Pondy Woods when the sun went down
 In gold, and the buzzards tilted down
 A windless vortex to the black-gum trees
 To sit along the quiet boughs,
 Devout and swollen, at their ease.

By the buzzard roost Big Jim Todd
 Listened for hoofs on the corduroy road
 Or for the foul and sucking sound
 A man's foot makes on the marshy ground.
 Past midnight, when the moccasin
 Slipped from the log and, trailing in
 Its obscured waters, broke
 The dark algae, one lean bird spoke.

"Nigger, you went this afternoon
 For your Saturday spree at the Blue Goose saloon,
 So you've got on your Sunday clothes,
 On your big splay feet got patent-leather shoes.
 But a buzzard can smell the thing you've done;
 The posse will get you—run, nigger, run—
 There's a fellow behind you with a big shot-gun.

Nigger, nigger, you'll sweat cold sweat
 In your patent-leather shoes and Sunday clothes
 When down your track the steeljacket goes
 Mean and whimpering over the wheat.

"Nigger, your breed ain't metaphysical."
 The buzzard coughed His words fell
 In the darkness, mystic and ambrosial.
 "But we maintain our ancient rite,
 Eat gods by day and prophesy by night.
 We swing against the sky and wait;
 You seize the hour, more passionate
 Than strong, and strive with time to die—
 With Time, the beaked tribe's astute ally.

"The Jew-boy died. The Syrian vulture swung Remotely above the cross whereon he hung
 From dinner-time to supper-time, and all
 The people gathered there watched him until
 The lean brown chest no longer stirred,
 Then idly watched the slow majestic bird
 That in the last sun above the twilit hill
 Gleamed for a moment at the height and slid
 Down the hot wind and in the darkness hid.
 Nigger, regard the circumstance of breath:
 'Non omnis moriar,' the poet saith."

Pedantic, the bird clacked its gray beak,
 With a Tennessee accent to the classic phrase;
 Jim understood, and was about to speak,
 But the buzzard drooped one wing and filmed the eyes.

At dawn unto the Sabbath wheat he came,
 That gave to the dew its faithless yellow flame
 From kindly loam in recollection of
 The fires that in the brutal rock once strove.
 To the ripe wheat fields he came at dawn.
 Northward the printed smoke stood quiet above
 The distant cabins of Squiggtown.
 A train's far whistle blew and drifted away
 Coldly; lucid and thin the morning lay
 Along the farms, and here no sound
 Touched the sweet earth miraculously stilled.
 Then down the damp and sudden wood there belled
 The musical white-throated hound.

In Pondy Woods in the August drouth
 Lurks fever and the cottonmouth.
 And buzzards over Pondy Woods
 Achieve the blue tense altitudes,

Drifting high in the pure sunshine
 Till the sun in gold decline;
 Then golden and hieratic through
 The night their eyes burn two by two.

PRO SUA VITA

Nine months I waited in the dark beneath
 Her tired heart for this precious breath,

And month by month since I left her breast
 Her breath and blood I have given in waste,

Till now at length some peace she has got
 That her breath and blood in me have not.

In the strictured nights of glimmering snow
 The blood drives quick though breath is slow,

And through the August afternoon
 Flees the breath faintly but too soon.

So blood is lost to the brutal gardens
 Where the iron petal of dark frost hardens,

And breath, when the storm-black trees bowed under,
 Waited the fanged astounding thunder.

Shall I say to my father then
 Among the belted best of men:

“Fellow, you tugged her years ago
 That tonight my boots might crunch the snow.

“And, woman, you show your son to wait
 Till the breath and distraught blood abate;

“As my father began the tale of waste
 When the sullen head slept on your breast,

“So the rigid hills had been forgot
 In darkness, if God had wasted not.”

LETTER OF A MOTHER

Under the green lamp-light her letter there
 Lies among cluttered papers, rusted pens,
 Books and handkerchiefs, tobacco tins.
 Shuffle of feet ascends the darkened stair.

The son, defined upon the superscription,
 Inherits now his cubiced domain,
 And reads. Indeed, should he possess again
 The loneliness of time's slow mitigation?

Or spell the name, which is himself, and say:
 "By now this woman's milk is out of me.
 I have a debt of flesh, assuredly,
 Which score the mintage of the breath might pay. . . .

"A certain weight of cunning flesh devised
 So hunger is bred in the bitter bone
 To cleave about his precious skeleton
 Held mortmain of her womb and merchandised

"Unto the dark: a subtile engine, propped
 In the sutured head beneath the coronal seam,
 Whose illegal prodigality of dream
 In shaking the escheat heart is quick estopped.

"Such is the substance of this legacy:
 A fragile vision fed of acrid blood,
 Whose sweet process may bloom in gratitude
 For the worthier gift of her mortality."

But still the flesh cries out unto the black
 Void, across the plains insistently
 Where rivers wash their wastage to the sea. . . .
 The mother flesh that cannot summon back

The tired child it would again possess
 As shall a womb more tender than her own
 That builds not tissue or the little bone,
 But dissolves them to itself in weariness.

HISTORY AMONG THE ROCKS

(from "Kentucky Mountain Farm")

There are many ways to die
 Here among the rocks in any weather:
 Wind, down the eastern gap, will lie
 Level along the snow, beating the cedar,
 And lull the drowsy head that it blows over
 To startle a crystalline, cold dream forever.

The hound's black paw will print the grass in May,
 And sycamores rise down a dark ravine,
 Where a creek in flood, sucking the rock and clay,
 Will tumble the sycamore, the laurel, away.
 Think how a body, naked and lean

And white as the splintered sycamore, would go
 Tumbling and turning, hushed in the end,
 With hair afloat in waters—that gently bend
 To ocean where the blind tides flow.

Under the shadow of ripe wheat,
 By flat limestone, will coil the copperhead,
 Fanged as the sunlight, hearing the reaper's feet.
 But there are other ways, the lean men said:
 In these autumn orchards once young men lay dead—
 Gray coats, blue coats. Young men on the mountainside
 Clambered, fought. Heels muddied the rocky spring.
 Their reason is hard to guess, remembering
 Blood on their black mustaches in moonlight,
 Cold musket-barrels glittering with frost.
 Their reason is hard to guess and a long time past;
 The apple falls, falling in the quiet night.

LETTER FROM A COWARD TO A HERO

What did the day bring?
 The sharp fragment,
 The shard,
 The promise half-meant,
 The impaired thing,
 At dusk the hard word,
 Good action by good will marred . . .
 All
 In the trampled stall:

*I think you deserved better;
 Therefore I am writing you this letter.*

The scenes of childhood were splendid,
 And the light that there attended,
 But is rescinded:
 The cedar,
 The lichenized rocks,
 The thicket where I saw the fox,
 And where I swam, the river.
 These things are hard
 To reconstruct:
 The word
 Is memory's gelded usufruct.
 But piety is simple,
 And should be ample.

*Though late at night we have talked,
 I cannot see what ways your feet in childhood walked.
 In what purlieus was courage early caulked?*

Guns blaze in autumn and
 The quail falls and

Empires collide with a bang
 That shakes the pictures where they hang
 And democracy shows signs of dry rot
 And Dives has and Lazarus not
 And the time is out of joint:
 But a good pointer holds the point
 And is not gun-shy;
 But I
 Am gun-shy.

Though young, I do not like loud noise:
 The sudden backfire,
 The catcall of boys,
 Drums beating for
 The big war,
 Or clocks that tick at night, and will not stop.
 If you ever lose your compass and map
 Or a mouse gets in the wall,
 For sleep try love or veronal,
 Though some prefer, I know, philology.
 Does the airman scream in the flaming trajectory?

You have been strong in love and hate.
 Disaster owns less speed than you have got,
 But he will cut across the back lot
 To lurk and lie in wait.
 Admired of children, gathered for their games,
 Disaster, like the dandelion, blooms,
 And the delicate film is fanned
 To seed the shaven lawn.
 Rarely, you've been unmanned;
 I have not seen your courage put to pawn.

At the blind hour of unaided grief,
 Of addition and subtraction,
 Of compromise,
 Of the smoky lecher, the thief,
 Of regretted action,
 At the hour to close the eyes,
 At the hour when lights go out in the houses . . .
 Then wind rouses
 The kildees from their sodden ground:
 Their commentary is part of the wind's sound.
 What is that other sound,
 Surf or distant cannonade?
 You are what you are without our aid.
 No doubt, when corridors are dumb
 And the bed is made,
 It is your custom to recline,
 Clutching between the forefinger and thumb
 Honor for death thy valentine.

THE OWL

Here was the sound of water falling only,
 Which is not sound but silence musical
 Tumbling forever down the gorge's wall.
 Like late milkweed that blooms beside the lonely
 And sunlit stone, peace bloomed all afternoon.
 Where time is not is peace; and here the shadow,
 That crept to him across the Western meadow
 And climbed the hill to mark the dropping sun,
 Seemed held a space, washed downward by the water
 Whose music flowed against the flow of time.
 It could not be. Dark fell along the stream,
 And like a child grown suddenly afraid,
 With shaking knees, hands bloody on the stone,
 Toward the upland gleaming fields he fled.
 Light burned against their rim, was quickly gone.

Later he would remember this, and start.
 And once or twice again his tough old heart
 Knew sickness that the rabbit's heart must know,
 When star by star the great wings float,
 And down the moonlit track below
 Their mortal silken shadow sweeps the snow.
 O scaled bent claw, infatuate deep throat!

LETTER TO A FRIEND

Our eyes have viewed the burnished vineyards where
 No leaf falls, and the grape, unripening, ripes.
 It was a dream without fruition as Without our terror. We have seen it;

And seen the ever-rounding vaulty-structured
 Ocean moveless, and the mortised keel
 Unmoving o'er the sunlit lichenized wave.
 That voyage, then each to each we said, had rendered

Courage superfluous, hope a burden.
 But living still, we live by them, and only
 Thus, or thus, stuttering, eke them out,
 Our huddled alms to crammed Necessity.

Fears rise, old wranglers out of sleep, and go:
 The caterpillar knows its leaf, the mole
 Its hummock, who has known his heart, or knows
 The trigger of this action, set and sprung?

In this, the time of toads' engendering,
 I write to you, to you unfrighted yet
 Before the blunt experiment of Time.
 Your triumph is not commensurate with stone.

AUBADE FOR HOPE

Dawn: and foot on the cold stair treading or Thump of wood on the unswept hearth-stone is
 Comment on the margin of consciousness,
 A dirty thumb-smear by the printed page.

Thumb-smear: nay other, for the blessed light
 Acclaimed thus, as a ducal progress by
 The scared cur, wakes them who wallowed in
 The unaimed faceless appetite of dream.

All night the ice sought out the rotten bough:
 In sleep they heard. And now they stir, as east
 Beyond the formal gleam of landscape sun
 Has struck the senatorial hooded hill.

Light; the groaning stair; the match aflame;
 The negro woman's hand, horned gray with cold,
 That lit the wood; a child's eyes sullen
 In the August street . . . I name some things that shall,

As voices speaking from a farther room,
 Muffled, bespeak us yet for time and hope:
 For I hope that like a blockhead grandam ever
 Above the ash and spittle croaks and leans.

George Dillon

GEORGE DILLON was born November 12, 1906, in Jacksonville, Florida, and spent most of his childhood in Kentucky, his mother's region. He went to school in the Middle West and was graduated from the University of Chicago in 1927.

While still an undergraduate, his verses began to attract attention beyond the borders of Illinois; he was made president of the Poetry Club of his University, and in 1925 was given the John Billings Fiske Prize as well as the Young Poet's Prize awarded by Poetry. A Magazine of Verse. In the same year he joined the Poetry staff as Associate Editor.

Boy in the Wind (1927) is distinguished by much more than precocity; always musical, there is an edge to these water-color contours. Dillon is essentially a lyricist of half-tones, but he puts suavity to measures firm in outline.

The Flowering Stone (1931) was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1932. Here the poetry is less insistently dulcet. Maturity begins to underline his soft lights with shadows. But Dillon does not fall into a "daybreak of anguish"; he still declares for "the noble wave, the affluent wind." His defect is his fluency; he is sure of his craftsmanship, a little too sure. The subject-matter is conventional to the point of being stereotyped and the tone in the sonnets is a shade too pompous. Yet the verse is unusually flexible and few will question his gift of song.

IN TWO MONTHS NOW

In two months now or maybe one
 The sun will be a different sun
 And earth that stretches white as straw
 With stony ice will crack and thaw
 And run in whistling streams and curve
 In still blue-shadowed pools. The nerve
 Of each pink root will quiver bare
 And orchards in the April air
 Will show black branches breaking white.
 Red roses in the green twilight
 Will glimmer ghostly blue and swell
 Upon their vines with such a smell
 As only floats when the breeze is loud
 At dusk from roses in a crowd.
 I know that there will be these things,
 Remembering them from other springs.
 All these and more shall soon be seen,
 As beautiful as they have been;
 But not so beautiful as they Seem now to be, a month away.

BOY IN THE WIND

How came this troubled one to stray
 With fire and song in the wind's way?
 Indifferent and dumb and sweet,
 The seasons fall about his feet.
 Frail flames are set behind his eyes,
 And under his ribs his heart makes moan
 Like a pent bird who throbs and dies.
 He walks in the windy night alone.

And who would know if he should sing
 Whose song is less than the murmuring
 Of the wind full of the ruin of spring?

And who could say if he had flown
 Like a flame blown out or a bird up-blown?
 Or if his heart cries out in pain
 Who hears the cry through wind and rain?
 He wanders east. He wanders west.

Where will he ever come to rest,
 With that fire blowing in his brain,
 And that bird grieving in his breast?

APRIL'S AMAZING MEANING

April's amazing meaning doubtless lies
 In tall hoarse boys and slips
 Of slender girls with suddenly wider eyes
 And parted lips;

For girls will wander pensive in the spring
 When the green rain is over,
 Doing some slow, inconsequential thing,
 Plucking clover;

And any boy alone upon a bench
 When his work's done will sit
 And stare at the black ground and break a branch
 And whittle it

Slowly; and boys and girls, irresolute,
 Will curse the dreamy weather
 Until they meet past the pale hedge and put Their lips together.

MEMORY OF LAKE SUPERIOR

I know a country of bright anonymous beaches
 Where the sand may sleep unprinted till it is stone.
 Granite grows loud among the hills and ditches
 Of the blown water when the water is blown.

Up on the mountain the sky is everywhere,
 The lake fallen hugely underfoot as if
 Into the bottom of a well of air,
 The island upon it little as a leaf.

The woods are dark with the rank lace of hemlock and pine,
 Beech, birch, and balsam, and the shadow of these.
 There are mushrooms, and thimbleberries sweeter than wine,
 And a far noise of wind in the tops of the trees.

That country was all the knowledge I shall ever learn;
 It was all the wisdom I shall ever have.
 It was there I looked for the driftwood boughs that burn
 In colors like the memory of a wave

It was there I looked along the forest floor
 For the gray feather of the grouse's wing.
 It was there I learned to look for nothing more,
 Looking into the sea-blue eyes of spring.

ONE BEAUTY STILL

One beauty still is faultless, not
 Deflowered in the bed of thought:
 It is a sound of sunken seas.
 It is an avid wish for ease.
 It is the earth, it is the sky
 When passion is a lute put by,
 And like a dancer out of breath.
 It is the lovely face of death,
 Adored and guessed at—never once
 Beheld in chrysoprase or bronze;
 Not in the temple or the grove,
 Not in a hundred nights of love.

This was the morning sun, the wild
 Daybreak of anguish in the child.
 This is the sun at noon no less,
 Deep in the dome of nothingness.
 Wherefore, impoverished heart, be proud
 To wear the purple of the shroud.
 If you are friendless, take for friend
 The noble wave, the affluent wind.
 If you are homeless, do not care:
 Inhabit the bright house of air.
 If you are worn with wayfaring,
 Lie down within the arms of spring.

James Agee

JAMES AGEE was born in Knoxville, Tennessee, November 27, 1909. Although his early schooling was in Franklin County, Tennessee, the center of "The Fugitives," Agee did not enter Vanderbilt and never came under the influence of the Nashville group. Instead he came north, attended Exeter for three years and spent four years at Harvard. Subsequently he came to New York, where he worked on Fortune, where his chief "namable" interests were "music, words, the present, the future, and 'documentary' movies."

His first book, Permit Me Voyage (1934), with a foreword by Archibald MacLeish, was published in Agee's twenty-fifth year. It is an unusual book, remarkable in its vigor and its unevenness. The defects are obvious. The long "Dedication" is interesting as an exposé of the young poet's admirations, naïve in tone and almost comic in its incongruities. "Epithalamium" is an undergraduate's solemn exercise in the grand manner; the long and turgid "Ann Garner," written while Agee was still at school, is an unfortunate attempt to combine the subject matter of Robinson Jeffers with the tone and background of Robert Frost. But these failures, once dismissed, cannot obscure the originality of Agee's poetry. The title-poem alone proves the firmness and sentiency of his work; the title, taken from a poem by Hart Crane, suggests an indebtedness as well as sensitivity, but Agee makes the lines authentically his own.

The title-poem, the opening group of lyrics, and the twenty-five sonnets are the book's real reason for being. All of them are interesting and many are admirable; they show a dexterous balance of passion and restraint, of novelty and authority. Most of them are classical in tone, Elizabethan rather than experimental, declaring the influence of Donne and Shakespeare with an infusion of Hopkins. The lyrics suffer from occasional constriction; the images are almost too spare, the phrasing too tight. But they are rarely without charm, a charm that does not hesitate to employ humor and a purposeful awkwardness. The poems written after publication of Permit Me Voyage (three examples of the more recent work are here reprinted) emphasize the emotional tensity half hidden by the tart grace. Although the work does not, as yet, achieve an indisputable importance, it reveals a clear control, a personal vocabulary and, as Archibald MacLeish concludes, "the one poetic gift which no amount of application can purchase and which no amount of ingenuity can fake—a delicate and perceptive ear."

LYRICS

No doubt left. Enough deceiving.
 Now I know you do not love.
 Now you know I do not love.
 Now we know we do not love.
 No more doubt. No more deceiving.

Yet there is pity in us for each other
 And better times are almost fresh as true.
 The dog returns. And the man to his mother.
 And tides. And you to me. And I to you.
 And we are cowardly kind the cruelest way,
 Feeling the cliff unmorsel from our heels
 And knowing balance gone, we smile, and stay
 A little, whirling our arms like desperate wheels.

Not met and marred with the year's whole turn of grief,
 But easily on the mercy of the morning
 Fell this still folded leaf:

Small that never Summer spread
Demented on the dusty heat;
And sweet that never Fall
Wrung sere and tarnished red;
Safe now that never knew
Stunning Winter's bitter blue
It fell fair in the fair season;

Therefore with reason
Dress all in cheer and lightly put away
With music and glad will
This little child that cheated the long day
Of the long day's ill:
Who knows this breathing joy, heavy on us all,
Never, never, never.

SONNETS

I

So it begins. Adam is in his earth
Tempted, and fallen, and his doom made sure,
O, in the very instant of his birth:
Whose deathly nature must all things endure.
The hungers of his flesh, and mind, and heart,
That governed him when he was in the womb,
These ravenings multiply in every part:
And shall release him only to the tomb.
Meantime he works the earth, and builds up nations,
And trades, and wars, and learns, and worships chance,
And looks to God, and weaves the generations
Which shall his many hungerings advance
When he is sunken dead among his sins.
Adam is in this earth. So it begins.

11

Our doom is in our being. We began
In hunger eager more than ache of hell:
And in that hunger became each a man
Ravened with hunger death alone may spell:
And in that hunger live, as lived the dead,
Who sought, as now we seek, in the same ways,
Nobly, and hatefully, what angel's-bread
Might ever stand us out these short few days.

So is this race in this wild hour confounded:
 And though you rectify the big distress,
 And kill all outward wrong where wrong abounded,
 Your hunger cannot make this hunger less
 Which breeds all wrath and right, and shall not die
 In earth, and finds some hope upon the sky.

xix

Those former loves wherein our lives have run
 Seeing them shining, following them far,
 Were but a hot deflection of the sun,
 The operation of a migrant star.
 In that wrong time when still a shape of earth
 Severed us far and stood our sight between,
 Those loves were effigies of love whose worth
 Was all our wandering nothing to have seen:
 So toward those steep projections on our sky
 We toiled though partners to their falsity
 Who faintly in that falseness could descry
 What now stands forth too marvelous to see.
 Who one time loved in them the truth concealed:
 And now must leave them in the truth revealed.

xx

Now stands our love on that still verge of day
 Where darkness loiters leaf to leaf releasing
 Lone tree to silvering tree: then slopes away
 Before the morning's deep-drawn strength increasing
 Till the sweet land lies burnished in the dawn:
 But sleeping still: nor stirs a thread of grass:
 Large on the low hill and the spangled lawn
 The purleaved air dwells passionless as glass:
 So stands our love new found and unaroused,
 Appareled in all peace and innocence,
 In all lost shadows of love past still drowsed
 Against foreknowledge of such immanence
 As now, with earth outshone and earth's wide air,
 Shows each to other as this morning fair.

PERMIT ME VOYAGE

Take these who will as may be: I
 Am careless now of what they fail:
 My heart and mind discharted lie
 And surely as the nervèd nail

 Appoints all quarters on the north
 So now it designates him forth
 My sovereign God my princely soul
 Whereon my flesh is priestly stole:

 Whenceforth shall my heart and mind
 To God through soul entirely bow,

Therein such strong increase to find
 In truth as is my fate to know:

Small though that be great God I know
 I know in this gigantic day
 What God is ruined and I know
 How labors with Godhead this day:

How from the porches of our sky
 The crested glory is declined:
 And hear with that translated cry
 The stridden soul is overshined:

And how this world of wildness through
True poets shall walk who herald you:
Of whom God grant me of your grace
To be, that shall preserve this race.

Permit me voyage, Love, into your hands.

SONG WITH WORDS

When Eve first saw the glistening day
Watch by the wan world side
She learned her worst and down she lay
In the streaming land and cried.

When Adam saw the mastering night
First board the wan world's lifted breast
He climbed his bride with all his might
And sank to tenderest rest.

And night took both and day brought high
The children that must likewise die:

And all our grief and every joy
To time's deep end shall time destroy:

And weave us one and wave us under
Where is neither faith nor wonder.

TWO SONGS ON THE ECONOMY OF ABUNDANCE

Temperance Note and Weather Prophecy
Watch well The Poor in this late hour
Before the wretched wonder stop:

Who march among a thundershower
And never touch a drop.

Red Sea

How long this way: that everywhere
We make our march the water stands
Apart and all our wine is air
And all our ease the emptied sands?

IN HEAVY MIND

In heavy mind I strayed the field
The chilly damp and devious air
The restiveness the rags of snow
The mulled and matted blackness where

The summer overthrown with leaves
Had shown its cloudy loveliest
And I had lain along the shade
In tears that fully undistressed

Me among men upon the earth
In flowering sky of every doubt
But only so much natural joy
Might flare the flesh, thaw the wick out:

But now was logy with the weight of brain,
Flat in the eyes and of my love most low,
Hate toward, and clambering thought, and
Failure sure,
And life a lean long while, the starving slow:

When, not to see, some previous bird
Made whistling from a bramble tree:
And all my will was not enough
To hold the heavens out of me.

RAPID TRANSIT

Squealing under city stone
The millions on the millions run,
Every one a life alone,
Every one a soul undone:

There all the poisons of the heart
Branch and abound like whirling brooks,
And there through every useless art
Like spoiled meats on a butcher's hooks

Pour forth upon their frightful kind
The faces of each ruined child:
The wrecked demeanors of the mind
That now is tamed, and once was wild.

Kenneth Patchen

KENNETH PATCHEN was born December 13, 1911, in Niles, Ohio. When he was four his parents (Scotch-French-English) moved to near-by Warren, where he was raised and attended high school. At seventeen Patchen went to work with his father's crew in the steel-mills; most of his relatives worked either in the mills of the Mahoning Valley or in the coal mines of Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Out of work and briefly "schooled" at Alexander Meiklejohn's Experimental College, University of Wisconsin, Patchen spent several years drifting from one end of the country to the other, working at anything that came to hand. He was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1936.

His first volume, Before the Blare (1936), was crammed with revolutionary fervor and technical experiment. Unfortunately its ardor was overinsistently strained and too often its oratory was a crescendo of screams. It was succeeded by a richer and far more genuinely startling volume, Fist Will & Testament (1939), which included about one hundred poems, three surrealistic dramas, and the beginning of a projected epic planned to fill several volumes. Fist Will & Testament is sensational in its tempo, amazing in its gusto, and unique in its uncanny combination of delicacy and disorganization. The tone is savage disillusionment, but not apathy; it is rebellious and ribald, indignant and desperate, but clean-cut even in its fury.

Much of Patchen's work is conceived in the limbo of nightmare, in a world where the humor is worse than the horror. Frenzy rules here; phantasmagoria triumphs in slapstick satire, casual killings, and sinister obscenity. But there is more to Patchen than his power to evoke ugliness, violence, and nonchalant treachery. Only a poet of unusual sensibility could have fashioned the nuances of "In Memory of Kathleen," "Do the Dead Know What Time It Is?", "The Deer and the Snake," and the cold terror of "Street Corner College."

The contradictions in Patchen's work are obvious. His poetry is determinedly "hard-boiled" and yet (possibly as a compensation) it often turns naively sentimental; it is elaborately simple, but it speaks the language of the street interspersed with literary allusions. In its breathless candor, its grim juxtaposition of dignity and disgust, this is the poetry of a generation "born in one war and seemingly destined to perish in another."

The Journal of Albion Moonlight, a many-voiced prose work comparable in polyphony to James Joyce's Ulysses, was published in 1941.

IN MEMORY OF KATHLEEN

How pitiful is her sleep.
 Now her clear breath is still.
 There is nothing falling tonight,
 Bird or man,
 As dear as she;
 Nowhere that she should go

Without me. None but my calling.
Nothing but the cold cry of the snow.

How lonely does she seem.
I, who have no heaven,
Defenseless, without lands,
Must try a dream
Of the seven
Lost stars and how they put their hands
Upon her eyes that she might ever know
Nothing worse than the cold cry of snow.

DO THE DEAD KNOW WHAT TIME IT IS?

The old guy put down his beer.
Son, he said,
(and a girl came over to the table where we were:
asked us by Jack Christ to buy her a drink )
Son, I am going to tell you something
The like of which nobody ever was told.
(and the girl said, I've got nothing on tonight;
how about you and me going to your place?)
I am going to tell you the story of my mother's Meeting with God.
(and I whispered to the girl: I don't have a room, but maybe . . .)
She walked up to where the top of the world is
And He came right up to her and said
So at last you've come home.
(but maybe what?
I thought I'd like to stay here and talk to you.)
My mother started to cry and God
Put His arms around her.
(about what?
Oh, just talk . . . we'll find something.)
She said it was like a fog coming over her face
And light was everywhere and a soft voice saying
You can stop crying now.
(what can we talk about that will take all night?
and I said that I didn't know )
You can stop crying now.

THE DEER AND THE SNAKE

The deer is humble, lovely as God made her
I watch her eyes and think of wonder owned
These strange priests enter the cathedral of woods
And seven Marys clean their hands to woo her
Foot lifted, dagger-sharp—her ears
Poised to their points like a leaf's head.

But the snake strikes, in a velvet arc
Of murderous speed—assassin beautiful

As mountain water at which a fawn drank.
Stand there, forever, while the poison works

While I stand counting the arms' of your Cross
Thinking that many Christs could hang there, crying.

S T R E E T C O R N E R C O L L E G E

Next year the grave grass will cover us.
We stand now, and laugh;
Watching the girls go by;
Betting on slow horses; drinking cheap gin
We have nothing to do; nowhere to go; nobody.

Last year was a year ago; nothing more.
We weren't younger then; nor older now.

We manage to have the look that young men have;
We feel nothing behind our faces, one way or other.

We shall probably not be quite dead when we die.
We were never anything all the way; not even soldiers.

We are the insulted, brother, the desolate boys.
Sleepwalkers in a dark and terrible land,
Where solitude is a dirty knife at our throats.
Cold stars watch us, chum,
Cold stars and the whores.

L I K E A M O U R N I N G L E S S C H I L D

The rescuing gate is wide
On villages that drift through the sun.
I do not listen to sleep anymore.
Cows pasture on stalks of green hours
And a haze of joyous deer drinks eternity.
Bells make blue robes for the wind to wear.
Summer whistles for his dogs of tree and flower.
The old faith plays jacks with idiots on church lawns.
I am so close to good, I have no need to see God.

Nathalia Crane

NATHALIA CLARA RUTH CRANE was born in New York City August 11, 1913. Through her father she is descended from John and Priscilla Alden, Stephen Crane being a not distant kinsman; on her mother's side she inherits the varied gifts of the Abarbanels, that famous family of Spanish Jews which counts among its members poets, musicians, and ministers of state.

Nathalia began to write when she was little more than eight years old. At nine she sent some of her verses to The New York Sun and they were accepted wholly on their merit, the editor having no idea that the lines were written by a child. For six years her volumes appeared in rapid succession. During her attendance at New Jersey College for Women and at Barnard she was kept from publishing, but at twenty-two she assembled another collection of her half-childish, half-pedantic verses, Swear by the Night (1936), with a foreword by the editor.

Nathalia's first volume, The Junitor's Boy, appeared when its author was ten and a half, in 1924. It went rapidly through six editions, and became one of the most discussed publications of the year. Some of the critics explained the work by insisting that the child was some sort of medium, an instrument unaware of what was played upon it; others, considering the book a hoax, scorned the fact that any child could have written verses so smooth in execution and so remarkable in spiritual overtones.

The verse is sharply divided into two kinds: the light and childish jingle—the sort of thinking native to most children but which most of them are unable to compress into such facile rhyme—and the grave and cryptic poetry. Even in the first division there is a quality unusual to child verse; in such merry stanzas as "The Flathouse Roof," "Love," "Oh, Roger Jones" there is a sophistication which lifts them above Eugene Field's rhymes on similar themes. The other division of Nathalia's work reveals that Nathalia has read much not only in books of legends but in the dictionary. This juvenile mystic is as fond of archaic terms as Francis Thompson (she collects unusual words as other children postage stamps), and she enjoys using a string of glistening alliterations to express an intuition or a mere mathematical fact. But the fact rises from its foundations on an imaginative sweep which any poet might envy.

Other volumes followed swiftly: Lava Lane (1925), The Singing Crow (1926), Venus Invisible (1928), three volumes of poetry more sedate than her first book. Prose paralleled her verse: The Sunken Garden (1926) showed her curiously pompous style in a long alliterative account of the Children's Crusade; An Alien from Heaven (1929) is a novel on a more unusual theme in which the symbolism is seemingly autobiographical if suspiciously mature and dry in tone.

To her defects one might add Nathalia's dependence on roses were it not that some of her finest verse uplifts the flower-cliché. The mingling of pathos and humor in "The Dead Bee" recalls Emily Dickinson. As a rule, there is little evidence of derivations, and finally one ceases to question whether the author is a conscious child or an influenced medium; one forgets who may have written the phrases and listens only to the long implication which "challenges the crypt, and quotes millenniums against the grave." The appeal of such lines is not that they have been written by a child but by a poet.

THE BLIND GIRL

In the darkness, who would answer for the color of a rose,
Or the vestments of the May moth and the pilgrimage it goes.

In the darkness who would answer, in the darkness who would care,
If the odor of the roses and the wingèd things were there.

In the darkness who would cavil o'er the question of a line,
Since the darkness holds all loveliness beyond the mere design.

Oh, night, thy soothing prophecies companion all our ways,
Until releasing hands let fall the catalogue of days.

In the darkness, who would answer for the color of a rose,
Or the vestments of the May moth and the pilgrimage it goes?

In the darkness who would answer, in the darkness who would care,
If the odor of the roses and the wingèd things were there.

THE VESTAL

Once a pallid vestal
Doubted truth in blue;
Listed red as ruin,
Harried every hue;

Barricaded vision,
Garbed herself in sighs;
Ridiculed the birth marks
Of the butterflies.

Dormant and disdainful,
Never could she see
Why the golden powder
Decorates the bee;

Why a summer pasture
Lends itself to paint;
Why love unappareled
Still remains the saint.

Finally she faltered;
Saw at last, forsooth,
Every gaudy color
Is a bit of truth.

Then the gates were opened;
Miracles were seen;
That instructed damsel
Donned a gown of green;

Wore it in a churchyard,
All arrayed with care;
And a painted rainbow
Shone above her there.

DESIRE

Oh, I would like to be a ghoul
And ruffle the poet's mound,
To dig up the rhymes he laid aside
For the sake of another sound.

And otherwise, if that were vain,
A diver I would be,
To pick up the rings the doges dropped
Whenever they married the sea.

THE DEAD BEE

Beside me there is resting
A great biography,
That crumpled panorama—

The history of the bee.
 A husk of ebon velvet,
   A powdering of gold,
 Lies, at the end, a bankrupt
   With honey still unsold.
 What an extensive failure—
   (Sheriffs are in the air)
 Barrels of good wild honey—
   Nobody knows just where;
 Only a little bankrupt,
   Truly too tired to care.

SONG

(from "Tadmor")

Great is the rose
 Infected by the tomb,

Yet burgeoning
 Indifferent to death.

Where dawn on dawn
 Did stumble to fulfill,
 The rose has told
 In one simplicity

That never life
 Relinquishes a bloom
 But to bestow
 An ancient confidence.

Great is the rose
 That challenges the crypt,
 And quotes millenniums
 Against the grave.

REQUIEM

(from "The Death of Poetry")

Perhaps she hears the breath of kneelers here,
   Willing to wait until all time elapse;
 Perhaps she listens, knowing strangers near.
   Perhaps, perhaps, and if not that, perhaps.

Perhaps against her cheek the tactful rose
   May tell her, minding not those snowy wraps:
 The hour is late, too long do you repose.
   Perhaps, perhaps, and yet again perhaps.

Perhaps the lilies at her side may say:
   Awake, new converts emptying their laps;
 Will you not rise? They are not far away.
   Perhaps, perhaps. Now let it be perhaps.

Delmore Schwartz

DELMORE SCHWARTZ was born December 8, 1913, in Brooklyn, New York. Most of his education was spent in studying philosophy at the University of Wisconsin, New York University, and Harvard; he became a teacher and began his pedagogical career as Instructor in English Composition at Harvard University. He was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship in his twenty-sixth year.

Schwartz had already published in the more advanced monthlies and the critical quarterlies, but his first volume came as something of a sensation. In Dreams Begin Responsibilities (1938) combined a versatility and technical surety which occasioned a spontaneous salvo of enthusiasm from critics not usually given to superlatives. Allen Tate wrote that Schwartz's poetic style was "the only genuine innovation since Pound and Eliot came upon the scene twenty-five years ago." F. O. Matthiessen spoke of his "fertility of invention, his energy and ambitious resourcefulness."

In Dreams Begin Responsibilities is made up of a short story, a long philosophical poem ("Coriolanus and his Mother: The Dream of One Performance"), a play in prose and verse, and two groups which the author modestly called "Poems of Experiment and Imitation." The long poem is an eloquent and searching effort; the lyrics are almost continuously successful. Here Schwartz moves among the complexities of his material with extraordinary ease. In verse that is both intellectual and musical he presents a rounded portrait of a young man shaken by the war between brute fact and bewildering fantasy, between intellect and emotion. No young poet, perhaps no poet of the period, has so skilfully registered the threat of change and the cruelty of time. Schwartz's poems are variations on the leading theme:

Time is the school in which we learn,
Time is the fire in which we burn.

And again:

We cannot stand still: Time is dying;
We are dying: Time is farewell!

The original idiom, the personal gesture which is unmistakable, commands with increased certainty Shenandoah (1941), a play in which the speaker-chorus addresses the audience in verse while the characters in the drama discuss the action in prose. Shenandoah is a fusion of allegory, philosophy, and autobiographical overtones, although the action is almost entirely fictive. Once more the central motif is the conflict between time and the individual; the lines beginning "Let us consider where the great men are" present a condensed cultural background of the period. They are, moreover, an impressionistic statement of a poet growing up in the 1930s, studying modern literature, and emerging from his influences. Here again is natural eloquence without the support of induced rhetoric.

A volume of criticism, sensitive and alert, appropriately entitled The Imitation of Life (1942) appeared shortly after Schwartz's most extended effort. This was a long poem, "Genesis," in which the desperate concern with time is crossed by the struggle of the ego to maintain its unique selfhood. This motif was already sounded in "Coriolanus and his Mother"; in "Genesis" the poet tries to track down the multiple and remote causes which determine any event in life. Schwartz writes of these causes as if they were divinities, but divinities which are not necessarily mythological. Thus when the protagonist as young boy reads Tarzan of the Apes, Darwin and Huxley are summoned as two of the cultural divinities who have caused such a book as Tarzan to be written. Here, in a kind of translated theology, is an attempt to discover and cope with the complex and international forces that shape an individual life.

FOR RHODA

Calmly we walk through this April's day,
 Metropolitan poetry here and there,
 In the park sit pauper and gentier,
 The screaming children, the motor car
 Fugitive about us, running away,
 Between the worker and the millionaire.
 Number provides all distances,
 It is Nineteen Thirty-Seven now,
 Many great dears are taken away,
 What will become of you and me
 (This is the school in which we learn . . .)
 Besides the photo and the memory?
 (. . . that time is the fire in which we burn.)

(This is the school in which we learn . . .)
 What is the self amid this blaze?
 What am I now that I was then
 Which I shall suffer and act again,
 The theodicy I wrote in my high school days
 Restored all life from infancy,
 The children shouting are bright as they run
 (This is the school in which they learn . . .)
 Ravished entirely in their passing play!
 (. . . that time is the fire in which they burn.)

Avid its rush, that reeling blaze!
 Where is my father and Eleanor?
 Not where are they now, dead seven years,
 But what they were then?

No more? No more?
 From Nineteen-Fourteen to the present day,
 Bert Spira and Rhoda consume, consume
 Not where they are now (where are they now?)
 But what they were then, both beautiful;
 Each minute bursts in the burning room,
 The great globe reels in the solar fire,
 Spinning the trivial and unique away.
 (How all things flash! How all things flare!)
 What am I now that I was then?
 May memory restore again and again
 The smallest color of the smallest day:
 Time is the school in which we learn,
 Time is the fire in which we burn.

TIRED AND UNHAPPY, YOU THINK OF HOUSES

Tired and unhappy, you think of houses
 Soft-carpeted and warm in the December evening,
 While snow's white pieces fall past the window,
 And the orange firelight leaps.

A young girl sings
 That song of Gluck where Orpheus pleads with Death;
 Her elders watch, nodding their happiness
 To see time fresh again in her self-conscious eyes:
 The servants bring the coffee, the children retire,
 Elder and younger yawn and go to bed,
 The coals fade and glow, rose and ashen,
 It is time to shake yourself! and break this
 Banal dream, and turn your head
 Where the underground is charged, where the weight
 Of the lean buildings is seen,
 Where close in the subway rush, anonymous
 In the audience, well-dressed or mean,
 So many surround you, ringing your fate,
 Caught in an anger exact as a machine!

FOR THE ONE WHO WOULD TAKE MAN'S LIFE
 IN HIS HANDS

Tiger Christ unsheathed his sword,
 Threw it down, became a lamb.
 Swift spat upon the species, but
 Took two women to his heart.
 Samson who was strong as death
 Paid his strength to kiss a slut.
 Othello that stiff warrior
 Was broken by a woman's heart.
 Troy burned for a sea-tax, also for Possession of a charming whore.
 What do all examples show?
 What must the finished murderer know?

You cannot sit on bayonets,
 Nor can you eat among the dead.
 When all are killed, you are alone,
 A vacuum comes where hate has fed.
 Murder's fruit is silent stone,
 The gun increases poverty.
 With what do these examples shine?
 The soldier turned to girls and wine.
 Love is the tact of every good,
 The only warmth, the only peace.

"What have I said?" asked Socrates,
 "Affirmed extremes, cried yes and no,
 Taken all parts, denied myself,
 Praised the caress, extolled the blow,
 Soldier and lover quite deranged
 Until their motions are exchanged.
 —What do all examples show?
 What can any actor know?
 The contradiction in every act,
 The infinite task of the human heart."

IN THE NAKED BED, IN PLATO'S CAVE

In the naked bed, in Plato's cave,
 Reflected headlights slowly slid the wall,
 Carpenters hammered under the shaded window,
 Wind troubled the window curtains all night long,
 A fleet of trucks strained uphill, grinding,
 Their freights covered, as usual.
 The ceiling lightened again, the slanting diagram
 Slid slowly forth.

Hearing the milkman's chop,
 His striving up the stair, the bottle's chink,
 I rose from bed, lit a cigarette,
 And walked to the window. The stony street
 Displayed the stillness in which buildings stand,
 The street-lamp's vigil and the horse's patience.
 The winter sky's pure capital
 Turned me back to bed with exhausted eyes

Strangeness grew in the motionless air. The loose
 Film grayed Shaking wagons, hooves' waterfalls,
 Sounded far off, increasing, louder and nearer.
 A car coughed, starting. Morning, softly
 Melting the air, lifted the half-covered chair
 From underseas, kindled the looking-glass,
 Distinguished the dresser and the white wall.
 The bird called tentatively, whistled, called,
 Bubbled and whistled, so! Perplexed, still wet
 With sleep, affectionate, hungry and cold. So, so,
 O son of man, the ignorant night, the travail
 Of early morning, the mystery of beginning
 Again and again,

While Time is unforgiven.

LET US CONSIDER WHERE THE GREAT MEN ARE

(from "Shenandoah")

Let us consider where the great men are
 Who will obsess the child when he can read:
 Joyce teaches in Trieste in a Berlitz school,
 Learns to pronounce the puns in Finnegan's Wake—
 Eliot works in a bank, and there he learns
 The profit and the loss,
the death of cities—
 Pound howls at him, finds what expatriates
 Can find,
culture in chaos all through time,
 Like a Picasso show.
 Rilke endures
 Of silence and of solitude the unheard music
 In empty castles which great knights have left

(Like Beethoven, hewing in memory
 The ineffable forests of the last quartets)—
 Trotzky in exile, too, in London walks
 With Lenin, hears him speak exile's half-truth:
 "Look: that's then Westminster there," as if
 The father's features were the son's whole soul—
 Yeats too, like Rilke, on old lords' estates,
 Seeks for the permanent amid the loss,
 Daily and desperate, of love, of friends,
 Of every thought with which his age began—
 Kafka in Prague works in an office, learns
 How bureaucratic Life,
 how far off God,
 A white-collar class theology—
 Perse is in Asia as a diplomat,
 Finding the violent energy with which Civilization creates itself and moves—
 Yet with these images he cannot see
 The moral apathy after the Munich Pact,
 The unnatural silence on the Maginot Line,
 Yet he cannot foresee the Fall of France—
 Mann too, in Davos-Platz, finds in the sick
 The triumph of the artist and the intellect—
 All over Europe these exiles find in art
 What exile is: art becomes exile too,
 A secret and a code studied in secret,
 Declaring the agony of modern life:
 This child will learn of life from these great men,
 He will participate in their solitude,
 And maybe in the end, on such a night
 As this, return to the starting-point, his name,
 Showing himself as such, among his friends.

Muriel Rukeyser

MURIEL RUKEYSER was born in New York City, December 15, 1913. She began her education in Ethical Culture and Fieldston School, entered Vassar with the class of 1934, left college after two years, and attended summer sessions at Columbia for two years more. In 1932 she became literary editor of The Student Review and a member of committees investigating Negro and labor problems; she was arrested during the second Scottsboro trial in Alabama. She worked her way through the ground-course at Roosevelt Aviation School, but was not allowed to pilot a plane as her parents refused to sign a contract permitting a minor to fly. It was at this time that she wrote her first important long poem, "Theory of Flight," which became the title-poem of her first volume. Work in statistics took her in 1936 to England, from where a London magazine sent her to report the People's Olympics in Barcelona, which were to open on the day the Spanish Civil War began. In 1941 she joined the staff of the monthly Decision.

Theory of Flight (1935) is startling without being theatrical, intense yet governed, alternating between autobiography and impersonality. This poet not only uses the material of modern life, but uses it without self-consciousness. For her the trucks rumbling along the city streets are a more native, a more natural, prelude to day than the lark at heaven's gate; the airplane is a more legitimate if more ominous symbol of man's longing for freedom than fluttering Psyches, butterflies, and picturesquely released doves. Her images, dramatic and often militant, are appropriate to one born in a period of national struggle and economic warfare. The very poignance of her dialogues—"Effort at Speech Between Two People" was written when she was a sophomore—reveals the tension and terror of the contemporary world.

U. S. I (1938) is an assimilation of influence and an effort at difficult integration. Echoes can be recognized—chiefly reminders of Hart Crane and W. H. Auden—but the poet's own voice comes through with conviction if not always with clarity. Intentness and originality progress further in A Turning Wind (1939); written between her twenty-third and twenty-fifth years, the book indicates continuing growth and complexity. The power of the communication is perceived even before it is understood; the meaning, sometimes muffled by the very rush of words, declares itself in the shifting tempi, the abrupt change of mood and action, the hurtling emotion in runaway fever.

Continuing the series of "Lives" sketched in the preceding volume, Miss Rukeyser turned to John Brown as a symbol of the American past and a manifesto for her generation. The motto of The Soul and Body of John Brown (1940) is from Joel: "Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision." It is a quotation which has a terrible choice of meanings, for the chapter from which it is taken is a prologue to the Day of Judgment—and it is our day which will be judged, judged by our own multitudes "in the valley of decision." The symbolism is emphasized with the entry of another Hebrew prophet, Ezekiel; for Ezekiel, thundering about the doom of nations, foretold the end of slavery and foreshadowed a spiritual resurrection. Joel . . . Ezekiel . . . John Brown . . . Miss Rukeyser synthesizes their apocalyptic visions, repudiates the self-willed doom of the appeasers and defeatists, and, feeling the line of the past, urges more freedom. She calls valiantly for reawakened life. The cry is to the spirit of Joel-John Brown-Ezekiel: "Threaten us alive!" Imposing 1940 upon 1859, the poem becomes a chorale in contrasts. The prophetic voices, echoed in the buzz of guitar (a truer symbol of American song than the traditional lute or classic lyre) call for more life: "in all the harm, calling . . . challenging this hatred—

a wish to be again
threatened alive, in agonies of decision,
part of our nation, of a fanatic sun.

Miss Rukeyser's recent poems are more frankly lyrical; they experiment in shifting rhymes and suspended music. Reversing the poet's usual progress, she has moved from the larger panorama to the smaller and more precise design. Most important, she affirms the life of the spirit which is the answer to living slavery and the wish for quick escape, soft and comforting death. She affirms that climax "When the brain acknowledges the world, all values extended into the blood awake."

CEILING UNLIMITED

The cattle-trains edge along the river, bringing morning on a white vibration breaking the darkness split with beast-cries: a milk-wagon proceeds down the street leaving the cold bottles: the Mack truck pushes around the corner, tires hissing on the washed asphalt. A clear sky growing candid and later bright.

Ceiling unlimited. Visibility unlimited.

They stir on the pillows, her leg moving, her face swung windowward vacant with sleep still, modeled with light's coming; his dark head among the softness of her arm and breast, nuzzled in dreams, mumbling the old words, hardly roused. They return to silence.

At the airport, the floodlights are snapped off.

Turning, he says, "Tell me how's the sky this morning?" "Fair," she answers,
"no clouds from where I lie; bluer and bluer." "And later and later—
god, for some sleep into some noon, instead of all these mornings with my mouth going stiff behind the cowling and wind brushing away from me and my teeth freezing against the wind."

Light gales from the northwest: tomorrow, rain.

The street is long, with a sprinkling of ashcans; panhandlers begin to forage among banana-peels and cardboard boxes.
She moves to the window, tall and dark before a brightening sky,
full with her six months' pregnancy molded in ripeness.

Stands, watching the sky's blankness.

Very soon: "How I love to see you when I wake," he says.
"How the child's meaning in you is my life's growing."
She faces him, hands brought to her belly's level, offering, wordless, looking upon him. She carries his desire well.

Sun rises: 6:38 A.M. Sun sets. . . .

"Flying is what makes you strange to me, dark as Asia, almost removed from my world even in your closenesses:
that you should be familiar with those intricacies and a hero in mysteries which all the world has wanted."

Wind velocity changing from 19 to 30.

"No, that's wrong," and he laughs, "no personal hero's left to make a legend. Those centuries have gone. If I fly, why, I know that countries are not map-colored, that seas belong to no one, that war's a pock-marking on Europe:"

The Weather Bureau's forecast, effective until noon.

"Your friends sleep with strange women desperately,
drink liquor and sleep heavily to forget those skies.
You fly all day and come home truly returning to me who know only land. And we will have this child."

New York to Boston: Scattered to broken clouds.

"The child will have a hard time to be an American," he says slowly, "fathered by a man whose country is air, who believes there are no heroes to withstand wind, or a loose bolt, or a tank empty of gas."

To Washington: Broken clouds becoming overcast.

"It will be a brave child," she answers, smiling.

"We will show planes to it, and the burns in the street.

You will teach it to fly, and I will love it very much." He thinks of his job, dressing.

Strong west northwest winds above 1000 feet.

He thinks how many men have wanted flight.

He ties his tie, looking into his face.

Finishes breakfast, hurrying to be gone, crossing the river to the airport and his place.

To Cleveland: Broken clouds to overcast.

She does not imagine how the propeller turns in a blinding speed, swinging the plane through space; she never sees the cowling rattle and slip forward and forward against the grim blades' grinding.

Cruising speed 1700 R.P.M.

Slipping, a failing desire; slipping like death insidious against the propeller, until the blades shake, bitten by steel, jagged against steel, broken, and his face angry and raked by death, staring.

Strong west northwest or west winds above 2000 feet,

She watches the clock as his return time hurries, the schedule ticking off, eating the short minutes.

She watches evening advance; she knows the child's stirring.

She knows night. She knows he will not come.

Ceiling unlimited. Visibility unlimited.

E F F O R T A T S P E E C H B E T W E E N T W O P E O P L E

Speak to me. Take my hand. What are you now? I will tell you all. I will conceal nothing.

When I was three, a little child read a story about a rabbit who died, in the story, and I crawled under a chair: a pink rabbit: it was my birthday, and a candle burnt a sore spot on my finger, and I was told to be happy.

Oh, grow to know me. I am not happy. I will be open: Now I am thinking of white sails against a sky like music, like glad horns blowing, and birds tilting, and an arm about me. There was one I loved, who wanted to live, sailing.

Speak to me. Take my hand. What are you now? When I was nine, I was fruitily sentimental, fluid: and my widowed aunt played Chopin, and I bent my head on the painted woodwork, and wept.

I want now to be close to you. I would link the minutes of my days close, somehow, to your days.

I am not happy. I will be open.
I have liked lamps in evening corners, and quiet poems.
There has been fear in my life. Sometimes I speculate
On what a tragedy his life was, really.

Take my hand. Fist my mind in your hand. What are you now?
When I was fourteen, I had dreams of suicide,
and I stood at a steep window, at sunset, hoping toward death:
if the light had not melted clouds and plains to beauty,
if light had not transformed that day, I would have leapt.
I am unhappy. I am lonely. Speak to me.

I will be open. I think he never loved me:
he loved the bright beaches, the little lips of foam
that ride small waves, he loved the veer of gulls:
he said with a gay mouth: I love you. Grow to know me.

What are you now? If we could touch one another,
if these our separate entities could come to grips,
clenched like a Chinese puzzle . . . yesterday
I stood in a crowded street that was live with people,
and no one spoke a word, and the morning shone.
Everyone silent, moving. . . . Take my hand. Speak to me.

THE SOUL AND BODY OF JOHN BROWN

Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision!
—JOEL, IV, 14

His life is in the body of the living.
When they hanged him the first time, his image leaped into the blackened air. His grave was the floating faces of the crowd, and he refused them in release, rose open-eyed to autumn, a fanatic beacon of fierceness leaping to meet them there,
match the white prophets of the storm,
the streaming meteors of the war.

Dreaming Ezekiel, threaten me alive!

Voices: Why don't you rip up that guitar?
Or must we listen to those blistering strings?

The trial of heroes follows their execution. The striding wind of western nations carried new rain, new lightning, destroyed in magnificence with noon shining straight down,
Swaying the fiery pines.—He wanted freedom. Could not himself be free until more grace reached a corroded world. Our guilt his own.
Under the cloak of the century drops the trap—
There in October's fruition-fire, three tall images of himself, one as he stood on the ground,

one as he stood on sudden air, and one standing to our fatal topmost hills faded through dying altitudes, and low through faces living under the dregs of the air, deprived childhood and thwarted youth and change:
 fantastic sweetness gone to rags
 and incorruptible anger blurred by age.

Compel the steps of lovers, watch them lie silvery attractive in naked embrace over the brilliant gorge, and open them to love: enlarge their welcome to sharp-faced countrysides, vicious familiar windows where lopped-off worlds say I am promise, holding the stopgap slogans of a thin season offering only the false initials, blind address, dummy name—enemies who reply in smiles, mild slavers, moderate whores.
 —There is a gorge to remember, where the soldiers came in a terrible answer of lechery after death.
 —He said at last, with a living perfect look,
 "I designed to have done the same thing again on a larger scale." Sleepless, he sees his tree grow in the land, a wish to leap these mountains.
 They are not mountains, but men and women sleeping.

O my scene! my mother!
 America who offers many births.

Over the tiers of barriers, compel the steps of armies who will arrive with horizon sharpness rising in quick embrace toward the people who greet them, love faltering in our hills among the symptoms of ice, small lights of the shifting winter, the rapid snow-blue stars.
 —This must be done by armies. Nothing is free.—He knows direct attacks, refuses to speak again,
 "If I tell them the truth,
 they will say I speak in symbols."

White landscapes emphasize his nakedness reflected in counties of naked who shiver and stare at fires, their backs to the face that unrolls new worlds around them.
 —They go down the valleys. They shamble in the streets.
 Blind to the sun-storming image echoed in their eyes.
 —They dread the surface of their victim life,
 lying helpless and savage in shade parks,
 asking the towers only what beggars dare:
 food, fire, water, and air.

Spring: the great hieroglyph: the mighty, whose first hour collects the winter invalids, whose cloudless pastures train swarms of mutable apple-trees to blond delusions of light, the touch of whiter more memorable breasts each evening, the resistant

male shoulders riding under sold terrible eyes.
 The soldier-face persists, the victorious head kissing those breasts asks for more miracles—
 Untarnished hair! Set them free! "Without the snap of a gun—" "More failures—but the season is a garden after sickness;

Then the song begins,
 "The clearing of the sky
 brings fulness to heroes—
 Call Death out of the city and ring the summer in."

Whether they sleep alone. Whether they understand darkness of mine or tunnel or store. Whether they lay branches with Western skill to entice their visions out of fire. Whether she lie awake, whether he walk in guilt down silenced corridors, leaving no fingerprints. Whether he weaken searching for power in pamphlets, or shut out every fantasy but the fragile eyelid to commemorate delight . . . They believe in their dreams.

They more and more, secretly, tell their dreams. They listen oftener for certain words, look deeper in faces for features of one remembered image. They almost forget the face. They cannot miss the look. It waits until faces have gathered darkness, and country guitars a wide and subtle music. It rouses love. It has mastered its origin: Death was its method. It will surpass its furious birth when it is known again.

Dreaming Ezekiel, threaten me alive!

Greengrown with the sun on it. All the living summer. They tell their dreams on the cool hill reclining, after a twilight daytime painting machines on the sky, the spite of tractors and the toothless cannon. —The cities of horror are down. These are called born, and Hungry Hill's to them a plain again. —They stand in the factory, deal out identical gestures of reaching—cathedral-color-rose resumes the bricks as the walls go leaning—bend away from the windows, blank in bellwavering air, reach out, mechanical cat's-claw reaping sky.

I know your face, deepdrowned prophet, and seablown eyes.

Darkflowing peoples. A tall tree, prophet, fallen, your arms in their flesh laid on the mountains, all your branches in the scattered valleys down. Your boughs lie broken in channels of the land, dim anniversaries written on many clouds.

—There is no partial help. Lost in the face of a child, lost in the factory repetitions, lost on the steel plateaus, in a ghost distorted.

—Calling More Life. In all the harm calling.
Pointing disaster of death and lifting up the bone,
heroic drug and the intoxication gone.

I see your mouth calling before the words arrive.

The strings repeat it, buzz of guitars, a streamy summernoon song, the whitelight of the meaning filling American valleys. More life, saying: this rich, this hatred, this Hallelloo—risk it upon yourselves.

—Free all the dangers of promise, clear the image of freedom for the body of the world.—

After the tree is fallen and has become the land, when the hand in the earth declined rises and touches air,
after the walls go down and all the faces turn,
the diamond shoals of eyes demanding life deep in the prophet eyes, a wish to be again
threatened alive, in agonies of decision
part of our nation of our fanatic sun.

A LEG IN A PLASTER CAST

When at last he was well enough to take the sun
he leaned on the nearest railing and summed up his sins, criminal weaknesses, deeds done and undone.

He knew he was healing. He guessed he was sane.

The convalescent gleam upon his skin,
with his supported leg and an unknown
recovery approaching let him block out pain.
The world promised recovery from his veins.

People said, "Sin"; in the park everyone
mentioned one miracle: "We must all be reborn."
Across an accidental past the horns blasted through stone and barriers of sense and the sound of a plaster cast knocking on stone.

He recognized the sound of fearful airmen
returning, forerunners, and he could not run.
He knew they were not flying home alone.

He stood in a down-torn town of men and women whose wasted days poured on their heads as rain, as sin, as fire—too lame, too late to turn,
for there, the air, everywhere full of planes.

THE MEETING

One o'clock in the letter-box
 very black and I will go home early.
 Now I have put off my dancing-dress and over a sheet of distance write my love.
 I walk in the city with my pride of theme while the lean girls at their betrayal smiling dance, do their sea-green dance, and laugh in dancing.
 And all the stars fade out of my sky.

Early in the morning on a windy ocean.
 My sleep opens upon your face to kiss and find and take diversion of the meeting waters,
 the flameless sky of peace, blue-sided white air.
 I leave you as the trivial birds careen
 in separation, a dream of easy parting.
 I see you through a door. The door sails away,
 and all the ships move into the real sea.

Let that far day arrive, that evening stain!
 Down the alleys of the night I trail a cloak;
 field-dusk and mountain-dusk and final darkness—
 each absence brings me nearer to that night when I stone-still in desire standing shall see the masked body of love enter the garden
 to reach the night-burning, the perpetual fountain.
 And all the birds fly out of my scene.

MAD BOY'S SONG

Fly down, Death : Call me :
 I have become a lost name.

One I loved, she put me away,
 Fly down, Death;
 Myself renounced myself that day,
 Fly down, Death.

My eyes in whom she looked so deep
 Long ago flowed away,
 My hands which slept on her asleep
 Withered away,
 My living voice I meant to keep,
 Faded and gray.

Fly down, Death : Call me :
 I have become a lost name.

Evening closes in whispers,
 Dark words buried in flame.
 My love, my mother, my sister,
 I know there is no blame;

But you have your living voice,
    Speak my forgotten name.

Fly down, Death : Call me :
I have become a lost name.

Don't come for me in a car
To drive me through the town;
Don't rise up out of the water,
Once is enough to drown;
Only drop out of the sky,
For I am fallen down.

Fly down, Death.

H O L Y F A M I L Y

A long road and a village.
A bloody road and a village.
A road away from war.
Born, born, we know how it goes.

A man and woman riding.
Riding, the new-born child.
White sky, clever and wild.
Born, born, we know how it goes.

A child rides into the forest
on its mother's arms.
The air screams the alarms.
Born, born, we know how it goes.

The wheel goes back.
How is it with the child?
How is it with the world?
Born, born, we know how it goes.

Never look at the child.
Give it to bloody ground.
By this dream we are bound.
Born, born, we know how it goes.

Riding between these hills, woman and man alone
enter the battle-line.
Born, born, we know how it goes.

They childless disappear
among the fighting men.
Two thousand years until they come again.
Born, born, we know how it goes.

A CRITICAL ANTHOLOGY

EDITED BY Louis Untermeyer

NEW YORK

FIFTH REVISED EDITION

HARCOURT, BRACE AND COMPANY

A Foreword

TO THE FIFTH REVISED EDITION

THE FIFTH revised edition of Modern British Poetry continues in the direction of the earlier editions. It presumes to be inclusive but also critical, aware of the latest expressions of taste and technique but not neglectful of the power of tradition. It is, in short, a work of appraisal as well as a compilation.

In order to make the summary as authoritative as possible, the entire field has been re-examined, the contributions by the outstanding authors have been emphasized, and the work of the younger poets has been given greater prominence. To do this, it has been necessary (as in the companion volume, Modern American Poetry) to omit several interesting poets. The editor regrets the omissions, but comforts himself with the thought that even a work of encyclopedic dimensions would fail to be sufficiently inclusive to satisfy every reader. Moreover, the severity of treatment has this advantage: though there are fewer names there are more poems to represent the poets and their range of accomplishment.

The new edition has been revised still further. The biographical and bibliographical notes have been brought sharply up to date. The preface has been amplified. Recent innovations which attempt to extend the domain of poetry have been recorded. More than ever, the volume hopes to reflect the variety of experience and vision, the sense of discovery which is the essential power of poetry.

Although the editor believes he has favored no group, movement, or tendency at the expense of any other, he admits that he is less impressed by the repetition of accepted subjects and generally approved poetic formulas, however skillful, than by a distinctive inflection, even though it may lead to oddity, as in the case of Hopkins. This personal idiom, this "difference," may be difficult to define but it is impossible to mistake.

The choice of poems may seem wilful to some, but the selection has not been arbitrary. The editor cannot pretend that he has infallibly chosen only the best; but he maintains that he has included nothing which does not represent some phase of the period and does not reveal some aspect of the poet. To accomplish this he has mingled the well-known with the unfamiliar. A good poem remains a good poem no matter how often it has been reprinted, but its presence in anthologies is not necessarily a proof of its goodness. New blood is needed not only to quicken the life-stream of culture but to keep it fresh and powerful.

It must be repeated that this collection is anything but a complete summary. Since the end of the Victorian era the work of the poets of England and

MODERN BRITISH POETRY

Thomas Hardy

THOMAS HARDY was born at Upper Bockhampton, near Dorchester, June 2, 1840, of parents in humble circumstances, his father being a stone-mason. His schooling was fitful. When sixteen, he was apprenticed to an ecclesiastical architect. Later, he left his native village and worked in London, where he won the prize offered by the Royal Institute of British Architects. This was in 1863. A few years after, he abandoned architecture and, in 1871, his first novel, Desperate Remedies, was published anonymously. It was a failure, little attention being paid to the author until the publication of Under the Greenwood Tree. From that time on his success as a writer was assured.

It was not until he was almost sixty—in 1898, to be precise—that Hardy abandoned prose and challenged attention as a poet, verse having been the form of expression with which he began and, as many (including the editor and Hardy himself) believe, the form by which he will be remembered longest. Technically considered, the rhythms of his verse are, at first reading, irritatingly rude; his syntax is often clumsy; his language involved. But, beneath the surface crudities—and many of them are efforts to achieve particular effects—Hardy's poetry is as disciplined as it is original. If its idiom is sometimes overweighted, it corresponds to the large design and complexities of his thought. "It has," says Dorothy Martin, in an essay on Hardy's lyrics, "an elemental power which, in its wide range of emotion, its sense of inner conflict between mind and heart, affords something like a counterpart in poetry to the art of Rodin in sculpture. To the horror of the orthodox, it has outwardly the same challenging roughnesses and acerbities; it has also the same profundity and stimulating power for those who, refusing to be put off by a difficult exterior, push on to the inner spirit of which this exterior is the vigorous, provocative but fitting expression."

As has been said, by Hardy himself, he "was compelled to give up verse for prose," but at no time did he prefer the many works of fiction which won him an international reputation. On the contrary, he was bitter that necessity had forced him to discontinue the creation of poetry for the writing of novels, and in private life would refer to the latter as "pot-boilers" and "wretched stuff." Nevertheless, between the ages of thirty-four and fifty-seven, Hardy published eleven novels and three collections of stories, of which The Return of the Native and The Mayor of Casterbridge are the sharpest in characterization although Tess of the D'Urbervilles (1891) and Jude the Obscure (1896) caused more comment. The former started a controversy which grew into an attack, chiefly because of the social criticism which had been implicit in his previous work but which was now openly expressed. With greater violence, almost with vituperation, Hardy was called to account for Jude the Obscure. This further example of critical stupidity hurt Hardy so deeply that he said it "cured him of all interest in novel-writing."

Two years later he turned definitely and exclusively to poetry, publishing Wessex Poems (1898) with his own drawings, and Poems of the Past and Present (1902). Both volumes were respectfully but unenthusiastically received. Then, when Hardy was sixty-four years old and critics had decided that his power had waned, he published the first part of The Dynasts (1904), that epic which was to spread itself on the largest canvas of his time. By 1908 the work was complete, a huge drama of the Napoleonic Wars in three books, nineteen acts, and one hundred and thirty scenes. This triumph is the apotheosis of the poet. Of it, the London Times wrote: "A work which combines as only a work of genius could combine, a poetic philosophy with minute historical knowledge and a shrewd eye for the tragical and comical ways of men and women." Lascelles Abercrombie, a most conservative appraiser, unhesitatingly called it "the biggest and most consistent exhibition of fatalism in literature." Hardy himself liked, so he informed the editor, two or three of the lyrics in The Dynasts (particularly "Trafalgar") as well as anything in his Collected Poems.

As Hardy grew older, his poems increased, and his powers with them. Explaining the large number of verses written after his sixtieth year, he said that he would merely "go to a drawer and take something out." But, although it is true that he resuscitated and refurbished many lyrics of an earlier period, Hardy continued to create new ones no less knotted, no less characteristically acrid, delicately nostalgic, pungently bitter-sweet, until he was almost ninety. When he was seventy-nine his Collected Poems (1919) displayed the range and fecundity but not the end of his gifts. As an octogenarian, he published Late Lyrics and Earlier (1922), Human Shows: Far Fantasies, Songs and Trifles (1925), and Winter Words in Various Moods and Metres, which, though appearing posthumously, had been arranged and selected by Hardy before his death.

Hardy's death in his eighty-eighth year on January 11, 1928, deprived contemporary England of its most honored author. Although his ashes were placed in Westminster Abbey, his heart (as requested in his Will) was buried in the churchyard of his own village, in the soil he loved so faithfully.

His work resists a pat synthesis. Hardy wrote in almost every manner, good and bad, in every meter, old and new, mixing novelty and banality, dropping heavy cacophonies into the lightest melodies, balancing the profound with the trivial, the cosmic with the comic. Most readers prefer him in that curiously lyric-narrative style which he perfected, but his intensities escape category. Each of his collections runs the gamut of life and its reflection in literature, and his style follows the scale. Modern and ancient, his technique is as advanced as the youngest contemporary's, as formal as a poetic ballet-master's. "In the Servants' Quarters" is a splendid instance of Hardy's talk-flavored verse, which ascends from casual speech on a crescendo of dramatic effect, to a half-expected yet startling climax. In quite another manner, his Satires of Circumstance (reminding an American reader of Masters' Spoon River Anthology, which it anticipated by a generation) are epigrammatic vignettes in which he condensed whole domestic dramas. "The Dark-Eyed Gentleman," on the other hand, is as simple-spontaneous as a folk-tune and quite unlike Hardy's other verse.

Hardy's resources are seemingly endless. At one moment he plays the pathetic fanciful as in "The Tree and the Lady," the next moment he strikes the ironically bizarre in "Ah, Are You Digging on My Grave?" "In Time of 'The Breaking of Nations'" packs an epic into twelve quiet-colored lines; "Snow in the Suburbs" is a purely objective delineation in black and white; "When I Set Out for Lyonnnesse" (one of Hardy's favorites among his own poems) is pure song; "The Oxen" turns a superstition to tender humor. And, though each of these is a lyric and all are straightforward in rhythm, each has its own dexterous difference in meter. It has passed unnoted, but Hardy even ventured into the French forms for occasional effects; "The Roman Road" is as neat a rondeau as Austin Dobson ever fashioned; "Winter in Durnover Field" and "Birds at Winter Nightfall" are thoroughly Hardy-esque and yet precise if unusual triplets.

Hardy's questioning the beneficence of Nature led to accusations of pessimism, a charge that he continually but ineffectually denied. Actually the poet was an unorthodox moralist whose heart went out to the things, people, and elements he loved. These elements—as he says ironically in "New Year's Eve," affirmatively in "The Subalterns"—are not actuated either by blind hate or blinder chance, but are subject to laws beyond the rules of logic. Hardy denied no God, but sensed design in chaos. Even when he could not rationalize a universe struggling to establish order in imperfection, he praised it, "hoping it might be so."

In the brief note preceding Hardy's contribution in Great Names (1926) Siegfried Sassoon wrote, "Without laboring the analogy between poetry and religion, it may be said that sham poetry is as pernicious as sham religion; and that for poets a merely poetical state of mind is as dangerous as a religious belief based on superficial religious emotion. That is why Hardy's poetry of experience is so significant. He records with microscopic exactitude, preserving a flawless artistic integrity. In his short poems he fuses all that he has learned from the past and endured in the present, in a supreme imaginative vision with masterly and original craft in words and subtle ironic sense. He realizes that the true satisfaction of life lies in imaginative conflict. Whatever their ultimate purpose, men are alive only while they struggle. When they grow aware of the futility of their effort, and yet strive to fashion something from it, they become noble and tragic. Such is Hardy; but his despair is mitigated by tenderness and pity for his fellows. . . . With a wistful understanding he surveys the human scene."

No consideration of Hardy could end on a finer coda. Throughout Hardy's work there shines a greater triumph than the technician's: a triumphant personality.

Three excellent studies of Hardy, presenting the novelist and poet from three distinctly different points of view, are those by Lionel Johnson (1894), Lascelles Abercrombie (1912), and Ernst Brennecke (1925).

IN TIME OF "THE BREAKING OF NATIONS"

Only a man harrowing clods
In a slow silent walk,
With an old horse that stumbles and nods
Half asleep as they stalk.

Only thin smoke without flame
From the heaps of couch grass:
Yet this will go onward the same
Though Dynasties pass.

Yonder a maid and her wight
Come whispering by;
War's annals will fade into night
Ere their story die.

THE DARKLING THRUSH

I leaned upon a coppice gate
When Frost was specter-gray,
And Winter's dregs made desolate
The weakening eye of day.

The tangled bine-stems scored the sky
Like strings from broken lyres,
And all mankind that haunted nigh
Had sought their household fires.

The land's sharp features seemed to be
The Century's corpse outlean;
His crypt the cloudy canopy,
The wind his death-lament.
The ancient pulse of germ and birth
Was shrunken hard and dry,
And every spirit upon earth
Seemed fervorless as I.

At once a voice burst forth among
The bleak twigs overhead
In a full-hearted evensong
Of joy illimitable;
An aged thrush, frail, gaunt and small,
In blast-beruffled plume,
Had chosen thus to fling his soul
Upon the growing gloom.

So little cause for carolings
Of such ecstatic sound
Was written on terrestrial things
Afar or nigh around,
That I could think there trembled through
His happy good-night air

Some blessed hope, whereof he knew
And I was unaware.

THE MAN HE KILLED

“Had he and I but met
By some old ancient inn,
We should have sat us down to wet
Right many a nipperkin!

“But ranged as infantry,
And staring face to face,
I shot at him as he at me,
And killed him in his place.

“I shot him dead because—
Because he was my foe,
Just so: my foe of course he was;
That's clear enough; although

“He thought he'd 'list, perhaps,
Off-hand-like—just as I—
Was out of work—had sold his traps—
No other reason why.

“Yes; quaint and curious war is!
You shoot a fellow down
You'd treat, if met where any bar is,
Or help to half-a-crown.”

IN THE SERVANTS' QUARTERS

“Man, you too, aren't you, one of these rough followers of the criminal?
All hanging hereabout to gather how he's going to bear Examination in the hall.” She flung disdainful glances on
The shabby figure standing at the fire with others there,
Who warmed them by its flare.

“No, indeed, my skipping maiden: I know nothing of the trial here,
Or criminal, if so he be.—I chanced to come this way,
And the fire shone out into the dawn, and morning airs are cold now;
I, too, was drawn in part by charms I see before me play,
That I see not every day.”

“Ha, ha!” then laughed the constables who also stood to warm themselves,
The while another maiden scrutinized his features hard,
As the blaze threw into contrast every knot and line that wrinkled them,
Exclaiming, “Why, last night when he was brought in by the guard,
You were with him in the yard!”

"Nay, nay, you teasing wench, I say! You know you speak mistakenly.
 Cannot a tired pedestrian who has legged it long and far
 Here on his way from northern parts, engrossed in humble marketings,
 Come in and rest awhile, although judicial doings are Afoot by morning star?"

"O come, come!" laughed the constables. "Why, man, you speak the dialect
 He uses in his answers; you can hear him up the stairs.
 So own it. We sha'n't hurt ye. There, he's speaking now! His syllables
 Are those you sound yourself when you are talking unawares,
 As this pretty girl declares."

"And you shudder when his chain clinks!" she rejoined. "O yes, I noticed it.
 And you winced, too, when those cuffs they gave him echoed to us here.
 They'll soon be coming down, and you may then have to defend yourself
 Unless you hold your tongue, or go away and keep you clear
 When he's led to judgment near!"

"No! I'll be damned in hell if I know anything about the man!
 No single thing about him more than everybody knows!
 Must not I even warm my hands but I am charged with blasphemies?" . . .
 —His face convulses as the morning cock that moment crows,
 And he droops, and turns, and goes.

NEUTRAL TONES

We stood by a pond that winter day,
 And the sun was white, as though chidden
     of God,
 And a few leaves lay on the starving sod;
     They had fallen from an ash, and were gray.

Your eyes on me were as eyes that rove
 Over tedious riddles solved years ago;
 And some words played between us to and fro
     On which lost the more by our love.

The smile on your mouth was the deadliest
     thing
 Alive enough to have strength to die;
 And a grin of bitterness swept thereby
     Like an ominous bird a-wing. . . .

Since then, keen lessons that love deceives,
 And wrings with wrong, have shaped to me
 Your face, and the God-curst sun, and a tree,
     And a pond edged with grayish leaves.

NEW YEAR'S EVE

"I have finished another year," said God,
     "In gray, green, white and brown;
 I have strewn the leaf upon the sod,
 Sealed up the worm within the clod,
     And let the last sun down."

"And what's the good of it?" I said,
     "What reasons made you call
 From formless void this earth we tread,
 When nine-and-ninety can be read
     Why nought should be at all?

"Yea, Sire; why shaped you us, 'who in
     This tabernacle groan'—
 If ever a joy be found herein,
 Such joy no man had wished to win
     If he had never known!"

Then he: "My labors—logicless—
     You may explain; not I:
 Sense-sealed I have wrought, without a guess
 That I evolved a Consciousness
     To ask for reasons why

"Strange that ephemeral creatures who
 By my own ordering are,
 Should see the shortness of my view,
 Use ethic tests I never knew,
 Or made provision for!"

He sank to raptness as of yore,
 And opening New Year's Day
 Wove it by rote as theretofore,
 And went on working evermore
 In his unweeting way.

THE NIGHT OF TRAFALGÁR

(from "The Dynasts")

In the wild October night-time, when the wind raved round the land,
 And the Back-sea met the Front-sea, and our doors were blocked with sand,
 And we heard the drub of Dead-man's Bay, where bones of thousands are,
 We knew not what the day had done for us at Trafalgár.

Had done,
 Had done,
 For us at Trafalgár!

"Pull hard, and make the Nothe, or down we go!" one says, says he.
 We pulled; and bedtime brought the storm; but snug at home slept we.
 Yet all the while our gallants after fighting through the day,
 Were beating up and down the dark, sou'-west of Cadiz Bay.

The dark,
 The dark,
 Sou'-west of Cadiz Bay!

The victors and the vanquished then the storm it tossed and tore,
 As hard they strove, those worn-out men, upon that surly shore;
 Dead Nelson and his half-dead crew, his foes from near and far,
 Were rolled together on the deep that night at Trafalgár!

The deep,
 The deep,
 That night at Trafalgár!

WEATHERS

This is the weather the cuckoo likes,
 And so do I;
 When showers betumble the chestnut spikes,
 And nestlings fly;
 And the little brown nightingale bills his best,
 And they sit outside the "Traveler's Rest,"
 And maids come forth sprig-muslin drest,
 And citizens dream of the South and West,
 And so do I.

This is the weather the shepherd shuns,
 And so do I;
 When beeches drip in browns and duns,
 And thresh, and ply;

And hill-hid tides throb, throe on throe,
 And meadow rivulets overflow,
 And drops on gate-bars hang in a row,
 And rooks in families homeward go,
 And so do I.

"AH, ARE YOU DIGGING ON MY GRAVE?"

"Ah, are you digging on my grave
 My beloved one?—planting rue?"
 —"No: yesterday he went to wed
 One of the brightest wealth has bred,
 'It cannot hurt her now,' he said,
 'That I should not be true.'"

"Then who is digging on my grave?
My nearest, dearest kin?"

—“Ah, no: they sit and think, ‘What use!
What good will planting flowers produce?
No tendance of her mound can loose
Her spirit from Death’s gin.’”

“But someone digs upon my grave?
My enemy?—prodding sly?”

—“Nay: when she heard you had passed the Gate

That shuts on all flesh soon or late,
She thought you no more worth her hate,
And cares not where you lie.”

“Then, who is digging on my grave?
Say—since I have not guessed!”

—“O it is I, my mistress dear,
Your little dog, who still lives near,
And much I hope my movements here
Have not disturbed your rest?”

“Ah, yes! You dig upon my grave. . . .
Why flashed it not on me

That one true heart was left behind!
What feeling do we ever find
To equal among human kind
A dog’s fidelity!”

“Mistress, I dug upon your grave
To bury a bone, in case
I should be hungry near this spot
When passing on my daily trot.
I am sorry, but I quite forgot
It was your resting-place.”

FIVE “SATIRES OF CIRCUMSTANCE”

In Church

“And now to God the Father,” he ends,
And his voice thrills up to the topmost tiles:
Each listener chokes as he bows and bends,
And emotion pervades the crowded aisles
Then the preacher glides to the vestry-door,
And shuts it, and thinks he is seen no more.

The door swings softly ajar meanwhile,
And a pupil of his in the Bible class,
Who adores him as one without gloss or guile,
Sees her idol stand with a satisfied smile
And reenact at the vestry-glass
Each pulpit gesture in deft dumb-show
That had moved the congregation so.

By Her Aunt’s Grave

“Sixpence a week,” says the girl to her lover,
“Aunt used to bring me, for she could confide
In me alone, she vowed. It was to cover
The cost of her headstone when she died.
And that was a year ago last June;
I’ve not yet fixed it. But I must soon.”

“And where is the money now, my dear?”
“O, snug in my purse. . . . Aunt was so slow
In saving it—eighty weeks, or near.” . . .
“Let’s spend it,” he hints. “For she won’t know.
There’s a dance tonight at the Load of Hay. ”
She passively nods. And they go that way.

At the Altar-rail

"My bride is not coming, alas!" says the groom,
 And the telegram shakes in his hand. "I own
 It was hurried! We met at a dancing-room
 When I went to the Cattle-Show alone,
 And then, next night, where the Fountain leaps,
 And the Street of the Quarter-Circle sweeps.

"Aye, she won me to ask her to be my wife—
 'Twas foolish perhaps!—to forsake the ways
 Of the flaring town for a farmer's life.
 She agreed. And we fixed it. Now she says:
*'It's sweet of you, dear, to prepare me a nest,
 But a swift, short, gay life suits me best.
 What I really am you have never gleaned;
 I had eaten the apple ere you were weaned.'*"

In the Restaurant

"But hear. If you stay, and the child be born,
 It will pass as your husband's with the rest,
 While, if we fly, the teeth of scorn
 Will be gleaming at us from east to west;
 And the child will come as a life despised.
 I feel an elopement is ill-advised!"

"O you realize not what it is, my dear,
 To a woman! Daily and hourly alarms
 Lest the truth should out. How can I stay here
 And nightly take him into my arms!
 Come to the child no name or fame,
 Let us go, and face it, and bear the shame."

At the Draper's

"I stood at the back of the shop, my dear,
 But you did not perceive me.
 Well, when they deliver what you were shown
I shall know nothing of it, believe me!"

And he coughed and coughed as she paled and said,
 "O, I didn't see you come in there—
 Why couldn't you speak?"—"Well, I didn't. I left
 That you should not notice I'd been there.

"You were viewing some lovely things. *'Soon required
 For a widow, of latest fashion'*;
 And I knew 'twould upset you to meet the man
 Who had to be cold and ashen

"And screwed in a box before they could dress you
 'In the last new note in mourning',
 As they defined it. So, not to distress you,
 I left you to your adorning."

AFTERWARDS

When the Present has latched its postern behind my tremulous stay,
 And the May month flaps its glad green leaves like wings,
 Delicate-filmed as new-spun silk, will the neighbors say,
 "He was a man who used to notice such things"?

If it be in the dusk when, like an eyelid's soundless blink,
 The dewfall-hawk comes crossing the shades to alight
 Upon the wind-warped upland thorn, a gazer may think,
 "To him this must have been a familiar sight."

If I pass during some nocturnal blackness, mothy and warm,
 When the hedgehog travels furtively over the lawn,
 One may say, "He strove that such innocent creatures should come to no harm,
 But he could do little for them; and now he is gone."

If, when hearing that I have been stilled at last, they stand at the door,
 Watching the full-starred heavens that winter sees,
 Will this thought rise on those who will meet my face no more,
 "He was one who had an eye for such mysteries"?

And will any say when my bell of quittance is heard in the gloom,
 And a crossing breeze cuts a pause in its outrollings,
 Till they rise again, as they were a new bell's boom,
 "He hears it not now, but used to notice such things"?

BIRDS AT WINTER NIGHTFALL

Around the house the flakes fly faster,
 And all the berries now are gone
 From holly and cotoneaster
 Around the house. The flakes fly!—faster
 Shutting indoors that crumb-outcaster
 We used to see upon the lawn
 Around the house. The flakes fly faster,
 And all the berries now are gone!

WINTER IN DURNOVER FIELD

SCENE.—A wide stretch of fallow ground recently sown with wheat, and frozen to iron hardness. Three large birds walking about thereon, and wistfully eying the surface. Wind keen from north-east. sky a dull gray.

- Rook:* Throughout the field I find no grain;
 The cruel frost encrusts the cornland!
Starling: Aye: patient pecking now is vain
 Throughout the field, I find . . . No grain!
Rook: I find no grain!
Pigeon: Nor will be, comrade, till it rain,
 Or genial thawings loose the lorn land
 Throughout the field.
Rook: I find no grain;
 The cruel frost encrusts the cornland!

THE ROMAN ROAD

The Roman Road runs straight and bare
 As the pale parting-line in hair
 Across the heath. And thoughtful men
 Contrast its days of Now and Then,
 And delve, and measure, and compare;

Visioning on the vacant air
 Helmed legionnaires, who proudly rear
 The Eagle, as they pace again
 The Roman Road.

But no tall brass helmed legionnaire
 Haunts it for me. Uprises there
 A mother's form upon my ken,
 Guiding my infant steps, as when
 We walked that ancient thoroughfare,
 The Roman Road.

MY SPIRIT WILL NOT HAUNT
THE MOUND

My spirit will not haunt the mound
 Above my breast,
 But travel, memory-possessed,
 To where my tremulous being found
 Life largest, best.

My phantom-footed shape will go
 When nightfall grays
 Hither and thither along the ways

THE DARK-EYED GENTLEMAN

I pitched my day's leazings<sup>1</sup> in Crimbercrock Lane,
 To tie up my garter and jog on again,
 When a dear dark-eyed gentleman passed there and said,
 In a way that made all o' me color rose-red,
 "What do I see—
 O pretty kneel!"

And he came and he tied up my garter for me.

'Twixt sunset and moonrise it was, I can mind:
 Ah, 'tis easy to lose what we nevermore find!—
 Of the dear stranger's home, of his name, I knew nought,
 But I soon knew his nature and all that it brought.
 Then bitterly
 Sobbed I that he Should ever have tied up my garter for me!

<sup>1</sup> "Leazings"; bundles of gleaned corn.

I and another used to know
 In backward days.

And there you'll find me, if a jot
 You still should care
 For me, and for my curious air;
 If otherwise, then I shall not,
 For you, be there.

WHEN I SET OUT FOR LYONNESSE

When I set out for Lyonnnesse,
 A hundred miles away,
 The rime was on the spray,
 And starlight lit my lonesomeness
 When I set out for Lyonnnesse
 A hundred miles away.

What could bechance at Lyonnnesse
 While I should sojourn there
 No prophet durst declare,
 Nor did the wisest wizard guess
 What would bechance at Lyonnnesse
 While I should sojourn there.

When I came back from Lyonnnesse
 With magic in my eyes,
 All marked with mute surmise
 My radiance rare and fathomless,
 When I came back from Lyonnnesse
 With magic in my eyes.

Yet now I've beside me a fine lissom lad,
 And my slip's nigh forgot, and my days are not sad;
 My own dearest joy is he, comrade, and friend,
 He it is who safe-guards me, on him I depend;
 No sorrow brings he,
 And thankful I be
 That his daddy once tied up my garter for me!

THE SUBALTERNS

"Poor wanderer," said the leaden sky,
 "I fain would lighten thee,
 But there be laws in force on high
 Which say it must not be."

"I would not freeze thee, shorn one," cried
 The North, "knew I but how
 To warm my breath, to slack my stride;
 But I am ruled as thou."

"Tomorrow I attack thee, wight,"
 Said Sickness. "Yet I swear
 I bear thy little ark no spite,
 But am bid enter there."

"Come hither, Son," I heard Death say;
 "I did not will a grave
 Should end thy pilgrimage today,
 But I, too, am a slave!"

We smiled upon each other then,
 And life to me wore less

Of that fell guise it wore ere when
 They owned their passiveness.

THE OXEN

Christmas Eve, and twelve of the clock,
 "Now they are all on their knees,"
 An elder said as we sat in a flock
 By the embers in hearthside ease.

We pictured the meek mild creatures where
 They dwelt in their strawy pen,
 Nor did it occur to one of us there
 To doubt they were kneeling then.

So fair a fancy few would weave
 In these years! Yet, I feel,
 If someone said on Christmas Eve,
 "Come; see the oxen kneel

"In the lonely barton<sup>1</sup> by yonder coomb<sup>2</sup>
 Our childhood used to know,"
 I should go with him in the gloom,
 Hoping it might be so.

THE TREE AND THE LADY

I have done all I could
 For that lady I knew! Through the heats I have shaded her,
 Drawn to her songsters when summer has jaded her,
 Home from the heath or the wood.

At the mirth-time of May,
 When my shadow first lured her, I'd donned my new bravery
 Of greenth: 'twas my all. Now I shiver in slavery,
 Icicles grieving me gray.

Plumed to every twig's end
 I could tempt her chair under me. Much did I treasure her
 During those days she had nothing to pleasure her;
 Mutely she used me as friend.

<sup>1</sup> Barton: farmyard.

<sup>2</sup> Coomb: valley, hollow.

I'm a skeleton now,
And she's gone, craving warmth. The rime sticks like skin to me;
Through me Arcturus peers; Nor'lights shoot into me;
Gone is she, scorning my bough!

SNOW IN THE SUBURBS

Every branch big with it,
Bent every twig with it;
Every fork like a white web-foot;
Every street and pavement mute:
Some flakes have lost their way, and grope back upward, when Meeting those meandering down they turn and descend again.
The palings are glued together like a wall,
And there is no waft of wind with the fleecy fall.

A sparrow enters the tree
Whereon immediately
A snow-lump thrice his own slight size
Descends on him and showers his head and eyes.
And overturns him,
And near inurns him,
And lights on a nether twig, when its brush
Starts off a volley of other lodging lumps with a rust.

The steps are a blanched slope,
Up which, with feeble hope,
A black cat comes, wide-eyed and thin;
And we take him in.

THE SELF-UNSEEING

Here is the ancient floor,
Footworn and hollowed and thin,
Here was the former door
Where the dead feet walked in.

She sat here in her chair,
Smiling into the fire;
He who played stood there,
Bowing it higher and higher.

Childlike, I danced in a dream;
Blessings emblazoned that day;
Everything glowed with a gleam,
Yet we were looking away!

A PLACID MAN'S EPITAPH

As for my life, I've led it
With fair content and credit:

It said: "Take this." I took it:
 Said: "Leave." And I forsook it.
 If I had done without it
 None would have cared about it,
 Or said: "One has refused it
 Who might have meetly used it."

WAITING BOTH

A star looks down at me,
 And says: "Here I and you
 Stand, each in our degree:
 What do you mean to do—
 Mean to do?"

I say: "For all I know,
 Wait, and let Time go by,
 Till my change come."—"Just so,"
 The star says: "So mean I—
 So mean I."

HAPPY

If but some vengeful god would call to me
 From up the sky, and laugh. "Thou suffering thing,
 Know that thy sorrow is my ecstasy,
 That thy love's loss is my hate's profiting!"

Then would I bear it, clench myself, and die,
 Steele'd by the sense of ire unmerited;
 Half-eased in that a Powerfuller than I
 Had willed and meted me the tears I shed.

But not so. How arrives it joy lies slain,
 And why unblooms the best hope ever sown?
 —Crass Casualty obstructs the sun and rain,
 And dicing Time for gladness casts a moan. . . .
 These purblind Doomsters had as readily strown
 Blisses about my pilgrimage as pain.

THE CONVERGENCE OF THE TWAIN

(Lines on the loss of the "Titanic")

I

In a solitude of the sea
 Deep from human vanity,
 And the Pride of Life that planned her, stilly couches she.

II

Steel chambers, late the pyres
 Of her salamandrine fires,
 Cold currents thrid, and turn to rhythmic tidal lyres.

III

Over the mirrors meant
 To glass the opulent
 The sea-worm crawls—grotesque, slimed, dumb, indifferent.

IV

Jewels in joy designed
 To ravish the sensuous mind
 Lie lightless, all their sparkles bleared and black and blind.

V

Dim moon-eyed fishes near
 Gaze at the gilded gear
 And query: "What does this vaingloriousness down here?"

VI

Well: while was fashioning
 This creature of cleaving wing,
 The Immanent Will that stirs and urges everything

VII

Prepared a sinister mate
 For her—so gaily great
 A Shape of Ice, for the time far and dissociate.

VIII

And as the smart ship grew
 In stature, grace, and hue,
 In shadowy silent distance grew the Iceberg too.

IX

Alien they seemed to be;
 No mortal eye could see
 The intimate welding of their later history,

X

Or sign that they were bent
 By paths coincident
 On being anon twin halves of one august event,

XI

Till the Spinner of the Years
 Said "Now!" And each one hears,
 And consummation comes, and jars two hemispheres.

Wilfrid Scawen Blunt

WIIFRID SCAWEN BLUNT was born at Petworth House, Crawley, Sussex, in 1840. He was educated at St. Mary's College, Oscott, and was a member of the diplomatic service from 1858 to 1870. He spent many years in the East, his observations making him strongly sympathetic to lesser nationalities and all the down-trodden. Traveling in North Africa, Asia Minor, and Arabia in the late seventies, all he saw caused him to support the Islamic movement (anticipating T. E. Lawrence) and to oppose the British government's control until his death. He favored the cause of the Egyptians; his voice was lifted for justice to Ireland; he joined Lloyd George in condemning the Boer War.

As a poet, he is best known by his The Love Sonnets of Proteus (1881) and The New Pilgrimage (1889). Both volumes reveal a deep, philosophical nature expressing itself in terms of high seriousness. A collected edition of his works was published in 1914, and Selected Poems, edited by Floyd Dell, was brought out in America in 1923.

His remarkable My Diaries [1888-1914] appeared when Blunt was an octogenarian, in 1921, a work which its British publisher quickly withdrew from the market because of its blunt revelations of British secret diplomacy. Shortly before his death, he wrote, "I have lived my life in full. No life is perfect that has not been lived youth in feeling, manhood in battle, old age in meditation." Blunt died in London, September 11, 1922.

Although Blunt produced a considerable body of verse, little of it survives. His experiments in assonance and echoing vowels are interesting mainly to the technician; his sonnet sequences, for all their attempts at dramatic narration, are sadly "dated." Five or six of his sonnets have the ring of true metal, and "The Desolate City" moves like an ebbing melody. However, says T. Earle Welby in A Popular History of English Poetry, "to have married Byron's granddaughter, bred Arab horses, and been admired by Henley and George Wyndham is to have made a great deal of life."

ON THE SHORTNESS OF TIME

If I could live without the thought of death,
Forgetful of time's waste, the soul's decay,
I would not ask for other joy than breath
With light and sound of birds and the sun's ray.

I could sit on untroubled day by day
Watching the grass grow, and the wild flowers range
From blue to yellow and from red to gray
In natural sequence as the seasons change.
I could afford to wait, but for the hurt
Of this dull tick of time which chides my ear.

But now I dare not sit with loins ungirt
And staff unlifted, for death stands too near.
I must be up and going—aye, each minute.
The grave gives time for rest when we are in it.

THE TWO HIGHWAYMEN

I long have had a quarrel set with Time
Because he robb'd me. Every day of life
Was wrested from me after bitter strife:
I never yet could see the sun go down
But I was angry in my heart, nor hear
The leaves fall in the wind without a tear
Over the dying summer. I have known

No truce with Time nor Time's accomplice,
Death.

The fair world is the witness of a crime
Repeated every hour. For life and breath
Are sweet to all who live; and bitterly
The voices of these robbers of the heath

Sound in each ear and chill the passer-by.
—What have we done to thee, thou monstrous Time?
What have we done to Death that we must die?

THE DESOLATE CITY

Dark to me is the earth. Dark to me are the heavens.
Where is she that I loved, the woman with eyes like stars?
Desolate are the streets. Desolate is the city.
A city taken by storm, where none are left but the slain.

Sadly I rose at dawn, undid the latch of my shutters,
Thinking to let in light, but I only let in love.
Birds in the boughs were awake; I listened to their chaunting;
Each one sang to his love; only I was alone.

This, I said in my heart, is the hour of life and of pleasure.
Now each creature on earth has his joy, and lives in the sun,
Each in another's eyes finds light, the light of compassion,
This is the moment of pity, this is the moment of love.

Speak, O desolate city! Speak, O silence in sadness!
Where is she that I loved in my strength, that spoke to my soul?
Where are those passionate eyes that appeal'd to my eyes in passion?
Where is the mouth that kiss'd me, the breast I laid to my own?

Groping I went, as blind. I sought her house, my beloved's.
There I stopp'd at the silent door, and listen'd and tried the latch.
Love, I cried, dost thou slumber? This is no hour for slumber,
This is the hour of love, and love I bring in my hand.

I knew the house, with its windows barr'd, and its leafless fig-tree,
Climbing round by the doorstep, the only one in the street;
I knew where my hope had climb'd to its goal and there encircled
All that those desolate walls once held, my beloved's heart.

There in my grief she consoled me. She loved me when I loved not.
She put her hand in my hand, and set her lips to my lips.
She told me all her pain and show'd me all her trouble.
I, like a fool, scarce heard, hardly return'd her kiss.

Weeping strangled my voice. I call'd out, but none answer'd;
Blindly the windows gazed back at me, dumbly the door;
She whom I love, who loved me, look'd not on my yearning,
Gave me no more her hands to kiss, show'd me no more her soul.

Therefore the earth is dark to me, the sunlight blackness,
Therefore I go in tears and alone, by night and day;
Therefore I find no love in heaven, no light, no beauty,
A heaven taken by storm, where none are left but the slain!

FAREWELL

Farewell, then. It is finished. I forgo
 With this all right in you, even that of tears.
 If I have spoken hardly, it will show
 How much I loved you. With you disappears
 A glory, a romance of many years.
 What you may be henceforth I will not know.
 The phantom of your presence on my fears
 Is impotent at length for weal or woe.
 Your past, your present, all alike must fade
 In a new land of dreams where love is not.
 Then kiss me and farewell. The choice is made
 And we shall live to see the past forgot,
 If not forgiven. See, I came to curse,
 Yet stay to bless. I know not which is worse.

FROM "ESTHER"

When I hear laughter from a tavern door,
 When I see crowds agape and in the rain
 Watching on tiptoe and with stifled roar
 To see a rocket fired or a bull slain,
 When misers handle gold, when orators
 Touch strong men's hearts with glory till they weep,
 When cities deck their streets for barren wars
 Which have laid waste their youth, and when I keep Calmly the count of my own life and see
 On what poor stuff my manhood's dreams were fed
 Till I too learned what dole of vanity
 Will serve a human soul for daily bread,
 —Then I remember that I once was young
 And lived with Esther the world's gods among.

LAUGHTER AND DEATH

There is no laughter in the natural world
 Of beast or fish or bird, though no sad doubt
 Of their futurity to them unfurled
 Has dared to check the mirth-compelling shout.
 The lion roars his solemn thunder out
 To sleeping woods. The eagle screams her cry.
 Even the lark must strain a serious throat
 To hurl his blest defiance at the sky.

Fear, anger, jealousy, have found a voice.
 Love's pain or rapture the brute bosoms swell.
 Nature has symbols for her nobler joys,
 Her nobler sorrows. Who has dared foretell
 That only man, by some sad mockery,
 Should learn to laugh who learns that he must die?

Austin Dobson

(Henry) Austin Dobson was born at Plymouth, in 1840, and was educated in Wales and on the Continent. In 1856, he received a clerkship in The Board of Trade and remained in official life a great part of his life.

His first collection, Vignettes in Rhyme (1873), attracted attention by the ease with which the author managed his dexterous and sometimes difficult effects. With Proverbs in Porcelain (1877), Old World Idylls (1883), and At the Sign of the Lyre (1885), it was evident that a new master of vers de société had arisen. The crispness and clean delicacy of his verse made Dobson the peer of Prior, Praed, and sometimes of Thomas Hood.

During the latter part of his life, he devoted himself to a type of semi-biographical essay, intended to preserve the spirit of some nearly or wholly forgotten celebrity. In this form, his prose is scarcely less distinctive than his verse; his detailed and charmingly dispensed knowledge of the time of Queen Anne gives to his writings its own special flavor of "archaic gentility."

His Complete Poetical Works, contained in a volume of over five hundred closely printed pages, display his resourcefulness in all modes, especially the French forms. Although most of his rhymes are charming rather than profound, certain pages, like the famous rondeaux "In After Days" and "Before Sedan," are memorable for their serious clarity. "Ars Victrix" is something more than an admonition; it is a craftsman's confession of faith which any artist might heed.

Once in a while, as in "The Prayer of the Swine to Circe" and "The Sick Man and the Birds," Dobson attempted a note wholly solemn, but in spite of the occasional pathos masked in graceful dominos, he is enjoyed most—and deservedly so—for the frivolous triplets made of rose-leaves, the lacy rondels, and the ballades compounded of nothing graver than "the ripple of laughing rhyme."

Dobson died just after having passed the height of popularity, September 3, 1921.

FAREWELL, RENOWN!

Farewell, Renown! Too fleeting flower,
That grows a year to last an hour;
Prize of the race's dust and heat,
Too often trodden under feet,—
Why should I court your "barren dower"?

Nay; had I Dryden's angry power,
The thews of Ben, the wind of Gower,
Not less my voice should still repeat
"Farewell, Renown!"

Farewell! Because the Muses' bower
Is filled with rival brows that lower;
Because, howe'er his pipe be sweet,
The Bard, that "pays," must please the street;

But most . . . because the grapes are sour— "Farewell, Renown!"

B E F O R E S E D A N

"The dead hand clasped a letter"
—SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Here in this leafy place
Quiet he lies,
Cold with his sightless face
Turned to the skies;
'Tis but another dead;
All you can say is said.

Carry his body hence,—
Kings must have slaves;

Kings climb to eminence
Over men's graves;
So this man's eye is dim;—
Throw the earth over him.

What was the white you touched,
There, at his side?
Paper his hand had clutched
Tight ere he died,—
Message or wish, may be;
Smooth the folds out and see.

Hardly the worst of us
Here could have smiled!
Only the tremulous
Words of a child;
Prattle, that has for stops
Just a few ruddy drops.

Look. She is sad to miss,
Morning and night,
His—her dead father's—kiss;
Tries to be bright,
Good to mamma, and sweet.
That is all. "Marguerite."

Ah, if beside the dead
Slumbered the pain!
Ah, if the hearts that bled
Slept with the slain!
If the grief died;—but no.
Death will not have it so.

ROSE-LEAVES

A Kiss

Rose kissed me today.
Will she kiss me tomorrow?
Let it be as it may,
Rose kissed me today

But the pleasure gives way
To a savor of sorrow.
Rose kissed me today,—
Will she kiss me tomorrow?

A Greek Gift

Here's a present for Rose,
How pleased she is looking!
Is it verse? Is it prose?
Here's a present for Rose!
"Plats," "Entrees," and "Rôts,"—
Why, it's "Gouflé on Cooking"!
Here's a present for Rose,
How pleased she is looking.

"Urceus Exit"

I intended an Ode,
And it turned to a Sonnet.
It began à la mode,
I intended an Ode;
But Rose crossed the road
In her latest new bonnet;
I intended an Ode;
And it turned to a Sonnet.

IN VAIN TODAY

In vain today I scrape and blot:
The nimble words, the phrases neat,
Decline to mingle or to meet;
My skill is all foregone—forgot.

He will not canter, walk nor trot,
My Pegasus. I spur, I beat,
In vain today!

And yet 'twere sure the saddest lot
That I should fail to leave complete
One poor . . . the rhyme suggests "conceit!"
Alas! 'Tis all too clear I'm not
In vein today.

THE BALLADE OF PROSE AND RHYME

When the ways are heavy with mire and rut,
In November fogs, in December snows,
When the North Wind howls, and the doors are shut,—
There is place and enough for the pains of prose;

But whenever a scent from the whitethorn blows,
 And the jasmine-stars at the casement climb,
 And a Rosalind-face at the lattice shows,
 Then hey!—for the ripple of laughing rhyme!

When the brain gets dry as an empty nut,
 When the reason stands on its squarest toes,
 When the mind (like a beard) has a “formal cut,”—
 There is place and enough for the pains of prose;
 But whenever the May-blood stirs and glows,
 And the young year draws to the “golden prime,”
 And Sir Romeo sticks in his ear a rose,
 Then hey!—for the ripple of laughing rhyme!

In a theme where the thoughts have a pedant-strut,
 In a changing quarrel of “Ayes” and “Noes,”
 In a starched procession of “If” and “But,”—
 There is place and enough for the pains of prose;
 But wherever a soft glance softer grows,
 And the light hours dance to the trysting-time,
 And the secret is told “that no one knows,”
 Then hey!—for the ripple of laughing rhyme!

Envoy

In the work-a-day world, for its needs and woes,
 There is place and enough for the pains of prose;
 But whenever the May-bells clash and chime,
 Then hey!—for the ripple of laughing rhyme!

IN AFTER DAYS

In after days when grasses high
 O’er top the stone where I shall lie,
 Though ill or well the world adjust
 My slender claim to honored dust,
 I shall not question or reply.

I shall not see the morning sky;
 I shall not hear the night-wind’s sigh;
 I shall be mute, as all men must
 In after days!

But yet, now living, fain were I
 That someone then should testify,
 Saying—“He held his pen in trust
 To Ait, not serving shame or lust.”
 Will none?—Then let my memory die
 In after days!

RONDEL: THE WANDERER

Love comes back to his vacant dwelling,—
 The old, old Love that we knew of yore!
 We see him stand by the open door,
 With his great eyes sad, and his bosom swelling.

He makes as though in our arms repelling,
 He fain would lie as he lay before,—
 Love comes back to his vacant dwelling,—
 The old, old Love that we knew of yore!

Ah, who shall help us from over-spelling
 That sweet, forgotten, forbidden lore!
 E'en as we doubt in our heart once more,
 With a rush of tears to our eyelids welling,
 Love comes back to his vacant dwelling.

ARS VICTRIX

(Imitated from Théophile Gautier)

Yes; when the ways oppose—
 When the hard means rebel,
 Fairer the work out-grows,—
 More potent far the spell.

O Poet, then, forbear
 The loosely sandaled verse,
 Choose rather thou to wear
 The buskin—strait and terse;

 Leave to the tyro's hand
 The lump and shapeless style,
 See that thy form demand
 The labor of the file.

Sculptor, do thou discard
 The yielding clay, consign
 To Paros marble hard
 The beauty of thy line;

 Model thy Satyr's face
 For bronze of Syracuse;
 In the veined agate trace
 The profile of thy Muse.

Painter, that still must mix
 But transient tints anew,
 Thou in the furnace fix
 The firm enamel's hue.

All passes. Art alone
 Enduring stays to us;
 The Bust outlasts the throne,
 The Coin, Tiberius:

Even the gods must go;
 Only the lofty Rhyme
 Not countless years o'erthrew,
 Not long array of time.

Paint, chisel, then, or write;
 But, that the work surpass,
 With the hard fashion fight,
 With the resisting mass.

FAME

Fame is a food that dead men eat,—
 I have no stomach for such meat.
 In little light and narrow room,
 They eat it in the silent tomb,
 With no kind voice of comrade near
 To bid the feaster be of cheer.

But friendship is a nobler thing,—
 Of friendship it is good to sing.
 For truly, when a man shall end,
 He lives in memory of his friend,
 Who doth his better part recall
 And of his fault make funeral.

Arthur O'Shaughnessy

THE IRISH-ENGLISH singer, Arthur (William Edgar) O'Shaughnessy, was born in London in 1844. He was connected, for a while, with the British Museum, and was transferred later to the Department of Natural History. His first literary success, Epic of Women (1870), promised a splendid future for the young poet, a promise strengthened by Music and Moonlight (1874). Always delicate in health, his hopes were dashed by periods of illness and an early death in London in 1881.

The poems here reprinted, like all of O'Shaughnessy's, owe much to their editors. The "Ode," which is one of the classics of his age, originally had nine verses, the last four being mediocre versifying. When Palgrave compiled his Golden Treasury, he recognized the difference between the first three inspired stanzas and the others,—and calmly and courageously dropped the final six.

William Alexander Percy performed a similar service for this singer who, nine-tenths of the time, was an undistinguished minor poet. It is a series of liberties taken in his Poems of Arthur O'Shaughnessy (1922), but the editorial omissions are justifiable. As Percy says, "In O'Shaughnessy's case, it is the only way to save him from himself and for posterity." One hesitates to approve such cavalier disposals; one would like to believe that a poet should be protected against editorial excisions. But no one ever called for the blue pencil more imperatively than O'Shaughnessy. He allowed his melodic stream, thin at the best, to trickle out into the merest flow of sound and all but disappear in rivulets of rhyme.

ODE

We are the music-makers,
And we are the dreamers of dreams,
Wandering by lone sea-breakers,
And sitting by desolate streams,
World-losers and world-forsakers,
On whom the pale moon gleams:
Yet we are the movers and shakers
Of the world for ever, it seems.

With wonderful deathless ditties
We build up the world's great cities,
And out of a fabulous story
We fashion an empire's glory:
One man with a dream, at pleasure,
Shall go forth and conquer a crown;
And three with a new song's measure
Can trample an empire down.

We, in the ages lying
In the buried past of the earth,
Built Nineveh with our sighing,
And Babel itself with our mirth;

And o'erthrew them with prophesying
To the old of the new world's worth;
For each age is a dream that is dying,
Or one that is coming to birth.

THE NEW LOVE AND THE OLD

I made another garden, yea,
For my new Love.
I left the dead rose where it lay
And set the new above.
Why did my Summer not begin?
Why did my heart not haste?
My old Love came and walk'd therein,
And laid the garden waste.

She enter'd with her weary smile,
Just as of old;
She look'd around a little while
And shiver'd with the cold:
Her passing touch was death to all,
Her passing look a blight;

She made the white rose-petals fall,
And turn'd the red rose white.
Her pale robe clinging to the grass
Seem'd like a snake
That bit the grass and ground, alas!
And a sad trail did make.
She went up slowly to the gate,
And then, just as of yore,
She turn'd back at the last to wait
And say farewell once more.

D O O M

In either mood, to bless or curse
God bringeth forth the breath of man;
No angel sire, no woman nurse
Shall change the work that God began.

One spirit shall be like a star,
He shall delight to honor one.
Another spirit he shall mar:
None shall undo what God hath done.

Gerard Manley Hopkins

GERARD MANLEY HOPKINS was born in 1844, became a Jesuit, and was an instructor in Greek and Greek meters at University College in Dublin. He was, in addition, a painter and a musician of no little ability, and his various gifts equipped him to be an innovator in poetic structure. Although he wrote much during an intensely spiritual life, none of his poetry appeared during his lifetime, and it was not until thirty years after his death that his extraordinary verse was collected. Hopkins died in 1889 and the world was not given the Poems of Gerard Hopkins, Now First Published, with Notes by Robert Bridges until 1919. Many of the verses in this posthumous volume were deciphered from manuscript by the Poet-Laureate and it is to him that one must be grateful for rescuing the work of a most original mind from oblivion.

A casual reader of Hopkins should expect obstacles; he must be prepared for difficulties that, at first, seem insuperable. He must be willing to accept a series of musical dissonances, compared to which the most cacophonous passages in Browning are limpid and bird-like. He must penetrate obscurities which are cloudy to the point of confusion. But he will be rewarded. Behind the tortured constructions and heaped-up epithets there is magnificence. In spite of the verbal excesses and idiomatic oddities there is an originality of vision which is nothing less than startling. In its intimate fancifulness, the imagery sometimes reminds one of the more controlled extravagances of Emily Dickinson. Like the New England poetess, Hopkins' poetry is sometimes eccentric, but it is always logical, never arbitrary or perverse.

Hopkins himself worked out a curious scheme of prosody (he even invented a system of signs to make plain the effects he wished to achieve) and his lines (as his own preface tells us) are "written in Running Rhythm, the common rhythm in English use, some in Sprung Rhythm (a free beat strongly suggestive of later vers libre) and some in a mixture of both." The peculiar beauty in his poems makes it lamentable that Hopkins (to quote his editor) "died when, to judge by his latest work, he was beginning to concentrate the force of all his luxuriant experiments in rhythm and diction, and castigate his art into a more reserved style." Even in the cloudiest of his effects there is a splendor, a rush of rhyme, a cataract of color, attained by scarcely any of his plainer-speaking contemporaries.

The most outspoken admirer of this highly imaginative and highly elliptical poetry must admit its structural awkwardness. Hopkins himself wrote, "No doubt my poetry errs on the side of oddness. I hope in time to have a more balanced and Miltonic style. But as air, melody, is what strikes me most of all in music, and design in painting, so design, pattern, or what I am in the habit of calling inscape is what above all I aim at in poetry. Now it is the virtue of design, pattern, or 'inscape' to be distinctive, and it is the vice of distinctiveness to become queer. This vice I cannot have escaped." Yet Dr. Robert Bridges has made too much of Hopkins' mannerisms. If these poems, Bridges comments, "were to be arraigned for errors of what might be called taste, they might be convicted of occasional affectation in metaphor, as where the hills are 'as a stallion stalwart, very-violet-sweet'" . . . As Robert Graves and Laura Riding inquire in A Survey of Modernist Poetry, "Why cannot what Dr. Bridges calls a fault of taste, an affectation, in the description of hills as 'a stallion stalwart, very-violet-sweet' be, with the proper sympathy for Hopkins' enthusiasm, appreciated as a phrase reconciling the two seemingly opposed qualities of mountains, their male, animal-like roughness and strength and, at the same time, their ethereal quality under soft light for which the violet in the gentle eye of the horse makes exactly the proper association?" That Bridges never understood Hopkins is proved by Bridges' other comments in the introduction, and emphasized by Hopkins' letters—Bridges having (significantly, it seems) destroyed his side of the correspondence.

Continually daring, Hopkins' work has never the note of ostentatious bravado. His boldness is instinctive; even such extraordinary departures as "Hurrahing in Harvest" and "Felix Randal" are extensions of the sonnet form but not violations of its spirit.

One of the more enthusiastic disciples (C. Day Lewis) has compared Hopkins to Shakespeare, not only because of Hopkins' continual "re-creation of word and image," but because of the exuberant quality of his images.

I caught this morning morning's minion, kingdom of daylight's Dauphin, dapple-dawn-drawn Falcon, in his riding
Of the rolling level underneath him steady air.

In such lines Hopkins explores the limbo which divides the ridiculous from the sublime. Here is a riotous alliteration which even the prodigal Swinburne might have hesitated to use, and yet Hopkins lifts the device into grandeur. Here, and almost everywhere in his poetry, is the concealed music, the subtle modulation, which breaks down the current poetic speech and forms it into a new language. "The poetic language of an age," Hopkins wrote, improving on Wordsworth, "should be the current language heightened, to any degree heightened and unlike itself, but not an obsolete one." Such heightening sometimes causes the reader to confess his inability to follow the poet's vision, but, as Day Lewis remarked in A Hope for Poetry, "what obscurity we may find is due, not to a clouded imagination or an unsettled intellect, but to his lightning dashes from image to image, so quick that we are unable at first to perceive the points of contact."

Hopkins' epithets may seem erratic but they are actually if oddly precise. As with his punctuation, he could give a rule for everything, even for the frequent and deliberate omission of the relative pronoun which he dropped not only "to crowd out every merely grammatical or toneless element" but to stress the heavy accents of his verse. "The Habit of Perfection," "The Starlight Night," "The Golden Echo," its companion piece, "The Leaden Echo," and "God's Grandeur" will not be shaken out of the mind. If "emphasis seems to oust euphony" in a struggle of intense contractions, his style, pushed by the extremities of his theories, is a triumph of elisions. Far from being a "fascinating failure" (T. Earle Welby's summary), his poetry lifts exact if unfamiliar verity of phrase to a burning beauty.

Hopkins having found an audience thirty-five years after his death, his least fragments were collated and an enlarged edition of his Poems was issued in 1930. A year later there appeared The Letters of Gerard Manley Hopkins to Robert Bridges (1935) and The Correspondence of Gerard Manley Hopkins and Richard Watson Dixon (1935), two volumes rich in delicate humor, insight, and discrimination, possibly the finest criticism written in English. Memorable are his dispossals of Dickens, Wordsworth, Tennyson—he called the Idylls "Charades of the Middle Ages"—and Swinburne of the "delirium-tremendous imagination." And who, after once reading his estimate of Browning, can forget that Browning has "a way of talking and making his people talk with the air and spirit of a man bouncing up from table with his mouth full of bread and cheese and saying that he meant to stand no blasted nonsense."

Gerard Manley Hopkins: A Biography (1930) by G. F. Lahey, and Three Friends, by Robert Bridges, memoirs of Digby Mackworth Dolben, Richard Watson Dixon and Henry Bradley, shed further light on this rich personality.

One of the most erudite critics and certainly the most inventive poet of his day—such was the man who refused to fight for fame because, as a Jesuit, he had vowed to serve God. Like the things he loved most, he, too, was "counter, original, spare, strange," possibly the most original genius of his generation. Everywhere in his work there is a new extravagance of metaphor. The opulence is not carefully built up; it is reckless, almost agonized, as though the poet could not lay his hands on figures rich and rapid enough to express the speed of his intuitions. To Hopkins everything was happy and magnificent. The world was not merely colorful but prodigal, "barbarous in beauty." Nature was a divine turmoil, and God was an eternal exuberance.

PIED BEAUTY

Glory be to God for dappled things—
 For skies as couple-colored as a brinded cow;
 For rose-moles all in stipple upon trout that swim;
 Fresh-firecoal chestnut-falls; finches' wings;
 Landscapes plotted and pieced—fold, fallow, and plow;
 And all trades, their gear and tackle and trim.
 All things counter, original, spare, strange;
 Whatever is fickle, freckled (who knows how?)
 With swift, slow; sweet, sour; adazzle, dim;
 He fathers-forth whose beauty is past change:
 Praise Him.

THE HABIT OF PERFECTION

Elected Silence, sing to me
 And beat upon my whorlèd ear,
 Pipe me to pastures still, and be
 The music that I care to hear.

Shape nothing, lips; be lovely-dumb;
 It is the shut, the curfew sent
 From there where all surrenders come
 Which only makes you eloquent.

Be shellèd, eyes, with double dark
 And find the uncreated light:
 This ruck and reel which you remark
 Coils, keeps, and teases simple sight.

Palate, the hutch of tasty lust,
 Desire not to be rinsed with wine:
 The can must be so sweet, the crust
 So fresh that come in fasts divine!

Nostrils, your careless breath that spend
 Upon the stir and keep of pride,
 What relish shall the censers send
 Along the sanctuary side!

O feel-of-primrose hands, O feet
 That want the yield of plushy sward,
 But you shall walk the golden street
 And you unhouse and house the Lord.

And, Poverty, be thou the bride
 And now the marriage feast begun,
 And lily-colored clothes provide
 Your spouse, not labored-at nor spun.

THE LEADEN ECCHO

How to keep—is there any, any, is there none such, nowhere known, some bow or brooch or braid or brace, lace, latch or catch or key to keep Back beauty, keep it, beauty, beauty, beauty, . . . from vanishing away?
 Oh, is there no frowning of these wrinkles, ranked wrinkles deep,
 Down? no waving-off of these most mournful messengers, still messengers, sad and stealing messengers of gray?
 No, there's none, there's none—oh, no, there's none!
 Nor can you long be, what you now are, called fair—
 Do what you may do, do what you may,
 And wisdom is early to despair:

Be beginning; since, no, nothing can be done
 To keep at bay
 Age and age's evils—hoar hair,
 Ruck and wrinkle, drooping, dying, death's worst, winding sheets, tombs and worms, and tumbling to decay;
 So be beginning, be beginning to despair.
 Oh, there's none—no, no, no, there's none:
 Be beginning to despair, to despair,
 Despair, despair, despair.

THE GOLDEN ECHO

Spare!

There is one, yes, I have one (Hush there!);
 Only not within seeing of the sun,
 Not within the singeing of the strong sun,
 Tall sun's tingeing, or treacherous the tainting of the earth's air,
 Somewhere elsewhere there is ah, well, where! one,
 One. Yes, I can tell such a key, I do know such a place,
 Where whatever's prized and passed of us, everything that's fresh and fast-flying of us, seems to us sweet of us and swiftly away with, done away with, undone,
 Undone, done with, soon done with, and yet dearly and dangerously sweet
 Of us, the wimpled-water-dimpled, not-by-morning-matched face,
 The flower of beauty, fleece of beauty, too too apt to, ah! to fleet,
 Never fleets more, fastened with the tenderest truth
 To its own best being and its loveliness of youth. it is an everlastingness of, O it is an all youth!
 Come then, your ways and airs and looks, locks, maiden gear, gallantry and gayety and grace,
 Winning ways, airs innocent, maiden manners, sweet looks, loose locks, long locks, lovelocks, gaygear, going gallant, girlgrace—
 Resign them, sign them, seal them, send them, motion them with breath,
 And with sighs soaring, soaring sighs deliver
 Them; beauty-in-the-ghost, deliver it, early now, long before death
 Give beauty back, beauty, beauty, back to God, beauty's self and beauty's giver.
 See; not a hair is, not an eyelash, not the least lash lost; every hair
 Is, hair of the head, numbered.
 Nay, what we had lighthanded left in surely the mere mold
 Will have waked and have waxed and have walked with the wind whatwhile we slept,
 This side, that side hurling a heavyheaded hundredfold
 What while we, while we slumbered.
 O then, weary then why should we tread? O why are we so haggard at the heart, so care-coiled, care-killed, so fagged, so fashed, so cogged, so cumbered,
 When the thing we freely forfeit is kept with fonder a care,
 Fonder a care kept than we could have kept it, kept
 Far with fonder a care (and we, we should have lost it) finer, fonder
 A care kept.—Where kept? Do but tell us where kept, where.— Yonder.—What high as that! We follow, now we follow.—Yonder, yes, yonder, yonder,
 Yonder.

GOD'S GRANDEUR

The world is charged with the grandeur of God.
 It will flame out, like shining from shook foil;
 It gathers to a greatness, like the ooze of oil
 Crushed. Why do men then now not reck his rod?
 Generations have trod, have trod, have trod;
 And all is scared with trade; bleared, smeared with toil;
 And wears man's smudge and shares man's smell. the soil
 Is bare now, nor can foot feel, being shod.

And for all this, nature is never spent;
 There lives the dearest freshness deep down things;
 And though the last lights off the black West went
 Oh, morning, at the brown brink eastward, springs—
 Because the Holy Ghost over the bent
 World broods with warm breast and with ah! bright wings.

THE STARLIGHT NIGHT

Look at the stars! look, look up at the skies!
 O look at all the fire-folk sitting in the air!
 The bright boroughs, the circle-citadels there!
 Down in dim woods the diamond delves! the elves'-eyes!
 The gray lawns cold where gold, where quickgold lies!
 Wind-beat whitebeam! airy abeles set on a flare!
 Flake-doves sent floating forth at a farmyard scare!
 Ah, well! it is all a purchase, all is a prize.
 Buy then! bid then!—What?—Prayer, patience, alms, vows.
 Look, look: a May-mess, like on orchard boughs!
 Look! March-bloom, like on mealed-with-yellow sallows!
 These are indeed the barn, withindoors house
 The shocks. This piece-bright paling shuts the spouse
 Christ home, Christ and his mother and all his hallows.

SPRING

Nothing is so beautiful as spring—
 When weeds, in wheels, shoot long and lovely and lush;
 Thrush's eggs look little low heavens, and thrush
 Through the echoing timber does so rinse and wring
 The ear, it strikes like lightning to hear him sing;
 The glassy pear-tree leaves and blooms, they brush
 The descending blue; that blue is all in a rush
 With richness; the racing lambs too have fair their fling.

What is all this juice and all this joy?
 A strain of the earth's sweet being in the beginning
 In Eden garden.—Have, get, before it cloy,
 Before it cloud, Christ, lord, and sour with sinning,
 Innocent mind and Mayday in girl and boy,
 Most, O maid's child, thy choice and worthy the winning.

HURRAHING IN HARVEST

Summer ends now; now, barbarous in beauty, the stooks rise
 Around; up above, what wind-walks! what lovely behavior
 Of silk-sack clouds! has wilder, willful-wavier
 Meal-drift molded ever and melted across skies?

I walk, I lift up, I lift up heart, eyes,
 Down all that glory in the heavens to glean our Saviour;
 And, eyes, heart, what looks, what lips yet gave you a
 Rapturous love's greeting of realer, of rounder replies?

And the azurous hung hills are his world-wielding shoulder
 Majestic—as a stallion stalwart, very-violet-sweet!--
 These things, these things were here and but the beholder
 Wanting; which two when they once meet,
 The heart rears wings bold and bolder
 And hurls for him, O half hurls earth for him off under his feet.

THE CAGED SKYLARK

As a dare-gale skylark scanted in a dull cage
 Man's mounting spirit in his bone-house, mean house, dwells—
 That bird beyond the remembering his free fells;
 This in drudgery, day-laboring-out life's age.

Though aloft on turf or perch or poor low stage,
 Both sing sometimes the sweetest, sweetest spells,
 Yet both droop deadly sometimes in their cells
 Or wring their barriers in bursts of fear or rage.

Not that the sweet-fowl, song-fowl, needs no rest—
 Why, hear him, hear him babble and drop down to his nest,
 But his own nest, wild nest, no prison.

Man's spirit will be flesh-bound when found at best,
 But unumbered: meadow-down is not distressed
 For a rainbow footing it nor he for his bones risen.

MOONRISE

I awoke in the Midsummer not to call night, in the white and the walk of the morning:

The moon, dwindled and thinned to the fringe of a finger-nail held to the candle,
 Or paring of paradisical fruit, lovely in waning but lusterless,
 Stepped from the stool, drew back from the barrow, of dark Maenfa the mountain;
 A cusp still clasped him, a fluke yet fanged him, entangled him, not quit utterly.
 This was the prized, the desirable sight, unsought, presented so easily,
 Parted me leaf and leaf, divided me, eyelid and eyelid of slumber.

FELIX RANDAL

Felix Randal the farrier, O he is dead then? my duty all ended,
 Who have watched his mold of man, big-boned and hardy-handsome Pining, pining, till time when reason rambled in it and some Fatal four disorders, fleshed there, all contended?

Sickness broke him. Impatient he cursed at first, but mended
 Being anointed and all; though a heavenlier heart began some Months earlier, since I had our sweet reprieve and ransom
 Tendered to him. Ah, well, God rest him all road ever he offended!

This seeing the sick endears them to us, us too it endears.
 My tongue had taught thee comfort, touch had quenched thy tears,
 Thy tears that touched my heart, child, Felix, poor Felix Randal;

How far from then forethought of, all thy more boisterous years,
 When thou at the random grim forge, powerful amidst peers,
 Didst fettle for the great gray drayhorse his bright and battering sandal!

TO HIS WATCH

(unfinished)

Mortal my mate, bearing my rock-a-heart
 Warm beat with cold beat company, shall I
 Earlier or you fail at our force, and lie
 The ruins of, rifled, once a world of art?
 The telling time our task is; time's some part,
 Not all, but we were framed to fail and die—
 One spell and well that one. There, ah, thereby
 Is comfort's carol of all or woe's worst smart.

Field-flown the departed day no morning brings
 Saying "This was yours" with her, but new one, worse,
 And then that last and shortest . . .

THE CUCKOO

Repeat that, repeat,
 Cuckoo, bird, and open ear wells, heart-springs, delightfully sweet,
 With a ballad, with a ballad, a rebound
 Off trundled timber and scoops of the hillside ground, hollow hollow hollow ground:
 The whole landscape flushes on a sudden at a sound.

HEAVEN-HAVEN

A Nun Takes the Veil

I have desired to go Where springs not fail, To fields where flies no sharp and sided hail, And a few lilies blow.	And I have asked to be Where no storms come, Where the green swell is in the havens dumb And out of the swing of the sea.
---	--

THE WINDHOVER

To Christ Our Lord

I caught this morning morning's minion, king-dom of daylight's dauphin, dapple-dawn-drawn Falcon, in his riding
 Of the rolling level underneath him steady air, and striding
 High there, how he rung upon the rein of a wimpling wing
 In his ecstasy! then off, off forth on swing,
 As a skat's heel sweeps smooth on a bow-bend: the hurl and gliding
 Rebuffed the big wind. My heart in hiding
 Stured for a bird,—the achieve of, the mastery of the thing!

Brute beauty and valor and act, oh, air, pride, plume, here
 Buckle! AND the fire that breaks from thee then, a billion
 Times told lovelier, more dangerous, O my chevalier!

No wonder of it: sheer plod makes plough down sillion
 Shine, and bluc-bleak embers, ah my dear,
 Fall, gall themselves, and gash gold-vermillion.

IN VERSNAID

This darksome burn, horseback brown,
 His rollrock highroad roaring down,
 In coop and in comb the fleece of his foam
 Flutes and low to the lake falls home.

A windpuff-bonnet of lawn-froth
 Turns and twindles over the broth
 Of a pool so pitchblack, fell-frowning,
 It rounds and rounds Despair to drowning.

Degged with dew, dappled with dew
 Are the groins of the braes that the brook treads through,
 Wiry heathpacks, slitches of fern,
 And the beadbonny ash that sits over the burn.

What would the world be, once bereft
 Of wet and of wildness? Let them be left,
 O let them be left, wildness and wet;
 Long live the weeds and the wilderness yet.

WHAT I DO IS ME

As kingfishers catch fire, dragonflies draw flame;
 As tumbled over rim in roundy wells
 Stones ring; like each tucked string tells, each hung bell's
 Bow swung finds tongue to fling out broad its name;
 Each mortal thing does one thing and the same:
 Deals out that being indoors each one dwells;

Selves—goes itself; myself it speaks and spells,
Crying What I do is me. for that I came.

I say more: the just man justices;
Keeps grace: that keeps all his goings graces;
Acts in God's eye what in God's eye he is—
Christ—for Christ plays in ten thousand places,
Lovely in limbs, and lovely in eyes not his
To the Father through the features of men's faces.

Robert Bridges

ROBERT (SHYMPUR) BRIDGES was born October 23, 1844. He was educated at Eton and Corpus Christi, Oxford, and, after having traveled, studied medicine, taking the post of Casualty Surgeon at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London. He retired from the medical profession in 1882 to devote himself entirely to literature. Although many more prominent poets were suggested for the office, the classic restraint of his verse won him the highest official honor: he became Poet Laureate in 1913. So often has the Laureateship been nothing more than a political prize that it is gratifying to observe that the award went to one distinguished for nothing more zealous than his art. As essayist, he wrote considerably for the Society of Pure English which, largely through his efforts, was founded in 1913. His interests were unusually varied and included cricket, hymnology (he collaborated in the editing of a hymnal), spoken English, reformed spelling, the encouragement of fellow poets (Hopkins, for example), and music, especially music for the harpsichord. He died, after a short illness, in his eighty-sixth year, on April 21, 1930.

The subjects of his many volumes are indicative of his expression; a few of the titles are Prometheus the Firegiver, Eros and Psyche; Achilles in Scyros, The Feast of Bacchus. Poems appeared as early as 1873. The distinguishing features of his Shorter Poems (1894) are a subtlety of rhythm, a precise command of metrical delicacies. It is, in fact, as a metrician that his work is most interesting; even his most academic lines bear a beauty of pattern. Apart from the skill of versification, there are many delights for the most casual reader in his collected Poetical Works (excluding the dramas) which appeared in 1913.

Robert Hillyer, the American poet and teacher, has made a study of Bridges' poems and a particularly delicate analysis of his major work. The following paragraphs are a summary of Mr. Hillyer's findings and have been prepared by him for this volume.

"Until the publication of The Testament of Beauty (1929)," writes Mr. Hillyer, "the genius of Robert Bridges was known to comparatively few. At the time of his appointment as Poet Laureate, The New York Times published a querulous editorial to the effect that Bridges was a nonentity. The same newspaper in recent editorials has more than once admiringly quoted the late laureate. In spite of the prolonged neglect of his earlier works on the part of the large public, most of the poets of England and a few in America recognized him as a master. W. B. Yeats devoted enthusiastic essays to the poetic dramas of Bridges, and the future laureate's Shorter Poems were accounted the height of lyric artistry. Some of these, such as 'A Passer-by,' 'London Snow,' and 'Awake, My Heart, to Be Loved,' found a more general audience; but, for the most part, Bridges remained a poet's poet until the publication of The Testament of Beauty.

"The reasons for this are simple. In the first place, Bridges, like Spenser before him, did not hesitate to employ archaic diction and syntax where he desired to gain a particular effect. In England the practice is frowned on (we are reminded of Ben Jonson's outburst against Spenser's 'Chaucerisms'), and in America it is taboo. Secondly, his diction is so simple and lucid that a casual reader might easily glance through one of his poems convinced that the work was merely conventional phrasing. Thirdly, in Bridges we find no violence—the mood most congenial to many today. To quote Mr. Charles Williams, whose essay on Bridges in Poetry at Present is well worth study: 'Love, diligence, wit, justice, courage, temperance, reason: these are the qualities Mr. Bridges praises and recommends to the young adventurer. They are, transmuted into poetry, the qualities of his verse; they are the analyzed elements of its beauty as it praises Beauty. Besides great art, a few things are preeminent in his poetic knowledge—the English landscape, man in society, Hellenism, solitude, piety. These things cause a profound and still delight. But it is a delight which may require a certain similarity of temperament or a certain prolonged discipline before it can be accepted, especially from a reader used to more violent effects.' Another obstacle between the careless or tone-deaf reader is yet one of the greatest virtues in the poetry of Bridges,—a muted, delicate music which yields its full loveliness only to one who is willing to study this verse as a virtuoso might study an intricate fugue.

"Both those who admire and those who dislike the poetry of Bridges agree on one point: that technically he was one of the masters of English verse. His experiments within the tradition are bolder and more informed than most of those outside it. His skill has often been cited against him by the school of modern critics who prefer verse to be slip-shod or, as they would express it, 'unacademic.' Starting early with Gerard Manley Hopkins and other friends a systematic study of what could be done in English meters without breaking down the instrument, he explored possibilities which, though not so obviously startling as Hopkins's 'sprung rhythm,' were subtly quite as adventurous. His main impulse came from Classical prosody, and his early adaptations of quantity to English metrics have never been equaled. In his later work, notably in the 'loose Alexandrines' of The Testament of Beauty, he combined with this strong quantitative influence an element wholly derived from our own ancient verse; that is, great liberty in the number of syllables within the single line. Professor Garrod, in his otherwise excellent essay on Bridges, makes one curious slip: he asserts that the versification of The Testament of Beauty was quite unprepared for in the earlier works. On the contrary, the volume just preceding, New Verse (a title to be taken quite literally as indicating a new technique), anticipates the loose rhythms of the Testament, though generally in a five-foot rather than a six-foot line. One superficial flaw mars Bridges's masterpiece. Like the sixteenth century poet Stanyhurst, Bridges had a notion that the length of syllables could be indicated by different spellings. The system is pedantic and sets up a typographical obstacle between the reader and the poem. (Quotation from the work is impossible, partly because of its character, partly because Bridges left instructions prohibiting the use of extracts.)

"Space forbids any detailed analysis of this great work. It has been compared to Wordsworth's Prelude and to Lucretius's De Rerum Natura. The main theme, based on Christian teleology, is the evolution of the human soul toward perfection, the reunion of all things in God through the growth of spiritual love. The poet shows how in Man the blind instincts of Nature become transformed, through influences such as that of beauty, into spiritual forces. Thus, the indiscriminate mating of lower forms of life rises to love inspired by the beauty of the beloved, and in higher natures becomes completely transmuted, as in Dante's love for Beatrice. The theme is developed by the high logic of poetry, which combines with the philosopher's learning and reasoning, the persuasion of beauty itself."

A PASSER-BY

Whither, O splendid ship, thy white sails crowding,
 Leaning across the bosom of the urgent West,
 That fearest nor sea rising nor sky clouding,
 Whither away, fair rover, and what thy quest?
 Ah! soon, when Winter has all our vales opprest,
 When skies are cold and misty, and hail is hurling,
 Wilt thou glide on the blue Pacific, or rest
 In a summer haven asleep, thy white sails furling.

I there before thee, in the country that well thou knowest,
 Already arrived am inhaling the odorous air:
 I watch thee enter unerringly where thou goest,
 And anchor queen of the strange shipping there,
 Thy sails for awnings spread, thy masts bare;
 Nor is aught from the foaming reef to the snow-capp'd, grandest
 Peak, that is over the feathery palms, more fair
 Than thou, so upright, so stately, and still thou standest.

And yet, O splendid ship, unhail'd and nameless,
 I know not if, aiming a fancy, I rightly divine
 That thou hast a purpose joyful, a courage blameless,
 Thy port assured in a happier land than mine.
 But for all I have given thee, beauty enough is thine,
 As thou, aslant with trim tackle and shrouding,
 From the proud nostril curve of a prow's line
 In the offing scatterest foam, thy white sails crowding.

AWAKE, MY HEART, TO BE LOVED

Awake, my heart, to be loved, awake, awake!
 The darkness silvers away, the morn doth break,
 It leaps in the sky: unrisen lusters slake
 The o'er-taken moon. Awake, O heart, awake!

She too that loveth awaketh and hopes for thee;
 Her eyes already have sped the shades that flee,
 Already they watch the path thy feet shall take:
 Awake, O heart, to be loved, awake, awake!

And if thou tarry from her,—if this could be,—
 She cometh herself, O heart, to be loved, to thee;
 For thee would unashamed herself forsake:
 Awake to be loved, my heart, awake, awake!

Awake! the land is scattered with light, and see,
 Uncanopied sleep is flying from field and tree:
 And blossoming boughs of April in laughter shake;
 Awake, O heart, to be loved, awake, awake!

Lo all things wake and tarry and look for thee:
 She looketh and saith, “O sun, now bring him to me.
 Come more adored, O adored, for his coming’s sake,
 And awake, my heart, to be loved: awake, awake!”

O WEARY PILGRIMS

(from "The Growth of Love")

O weary pilgrims, chanting of your woe,
 That turn your eyes to all the peaks that shine,
 Hailing in each the citadel divine
 The which ye thought to have entered long ago;
 Until at length your feeble steps and slow
 Falter upon the threshold of the shrine,
 And your hearts overburdened doubt in fine
 Whether it be Jerusalem or no:
 Disheartened pilgrims, I am one of you;
 For, having worshiped many a barren face,
 I scarce now greet the goal I journeyed to:
 I stand a pagan in the holy place;
 Beneath the lamp of truth I am found untrue,
 And question with the God that I embrace.

THOU DIDST DELIGHT MY EYES

Thou didst delight my eyes:
 Yet who am I? nor first
 Nor last nor best, that durst
 Once dream of thee for prize;
 Nor this the only time
 Thou shalt set love to rhyme.

Thou didst delight my ear:
 Ah! little praise; thy voice

Makes other hearts rejoice,
 Makes all ears glad that hear;
 And short my joy: but yet,
 O song, do not forget.

For what wert thou to me?
 How shall I say? The moon,
 That poured her midnight noon
 Upon his wrecking sea;—
 A sail, that for a day
 Has cheered the castaway.

WINTER NIGHTFALL

The day begins to droop,—

Its course is done:

But nothing tells the place
Of the setting sun.

The hazy darkness deepens,

And up the lane

You may hear, but cannot see,
The homing wain.

An engine pants and hums

In the farm hard by:

Its lowering smoke is lost
In the lowering sky.

The soaking branches drip,

And all night through

The dropping will not cease
In the avenue.

A tall man there in the house
Must keep his chair:
He knows he will never again
Breathe the spring air:

His heart is worn with work;
He is giddy and sick
If he rise to go as far
As the nearest rick.

He thinks of his morn of life,
His hale, strong years;
And braves as he may the night
Of darkness and tears.

LONDON SNOW

When men were all asleep the snow came flying,
In large white flakes falling on the city brown,
Stealthily and perpetually settling and loosely lying,

Hushing the latest traffic of the drowsy town;
Deadening, muffling, stifling its murmurs failing;
Lazily and incessantly floating down and down;

Silently sifting and veiling road, roof and railing;
Hiding difference, making unevenness even,
Into angles and crevices softly drifting and sailing.

All night it fell, and when full inches seven
It lay in the depth of its uncompacted lightness,
The clouds blew off from a high and frosty heaven;

And all woke earlier for the unaccustomed brightness
Of the winter dawning, the strange unheavenly glare:
The eye marveled—marveled at the dazzling whiteness;

The ear hearkened to the stillness of the solemn air;
No sound of wheel rumbling nor of foot falling,
And the busy morning cries came thin and spare.

Then boys I heard, as they went to school, calling;
They gathered up the crystal manna to freeze
Their tongues with tasting, their hands with snow-balling;

Or rioted in a drift, plunging up to the knees;
Or peering up from under the white-mossed wonder,
“O look at the trees!” they cried. “O look at the trees!”

With lessened load, a few carts creak and blunder,
Following along the white deserted way,
A country company long dispersed asunder:

When now already the sun, in pale display
Standing by Paul’s high dome, spread forth below

His sparkling beams, and awoke the stir of the day.
 For now doors open, and war is waged with the snow;
 And trains of somber men, past tale of number,
 Tread long brown paths, as toward their toil they go:
 But even for them awhile no cares encumber
 Their minds diverted; the daily word is unspoken,
 The daily thoughts of labor and sorrow slumber
 At the sight of the beauty that greets them, for the charm they have broken.

NIGHTINGALES

Beautiful must be the mountains whence ye come,

And bright in the fruitful valleys the streams wherefrom

Ye learn your song:

Where are those starry woods? O might I wander there,

Among the flowers, which in that heavenly air

Bloom the year long!

Nay, barren are those mountains and spent the streams;
 Our song is the voice of desire, that haunts our dreams,

A throe of the heart,

Whose pining visions dim, forbiddon hopes profound,

No dying cadence nor long sigh can sound,

For all our art.

Alone, aloud in the raptured ear of men
 We pour our dark nocturnal secret; and then,

As night is withdrawn

From these sweet-springing meads and bursting boughs of May,

Dream, while the innumerable choir of day

Welcome the dawn.

I HAVE LOVED FLOWERS

I have loved flowers that fade,
 Within whose magic tents
 Rich hues have marriage made
 With sweet unmemed scents:
 A honeymoon delight,—
 A joy of love at sight,
 That ages in an hour:—
 My song be like a flower!

I have loved airs that die
 Before their charm is writ
 Along a liquid sky
 Trembling to welcome it.
 Notes that with pulse of fire
 Proclaim the spirit's desire,

Then die, and are nowhere:—
 My song be like an air!

Die, song, die like a breath,
 And wither as a bloom:
 Fear not a flowery death,
 Dread not an airy tomb!
 Fly with delight, fly hence!
 'Twas thine love's tender sense
 To feast; now on thy bier
 Beauty shall shed a tear.

NIMIUM FORTUNATUS

I have lain in the sun,
 I have toil'd as I might,
 I have thought as I would,
 And now it is night.

My bed full of sleep,
My heart of content
For friends that I met
The way that I went.

I welcome fatigue
While frenzy and care
Like thin summer clouds
Go melting in air.

To dream as I may
And awake when I will
With the song of the birds
And the sun on the hill.

Or death—were it death—
To what should I wake
Who loved in my home
All life for its sake?

What good have I wrought?
I laugh to have learned
That joy cannot come
Unless it be earned;

For a happier lot
Than God giveth me
It never hath been
Nor ever shall be.

William Ernest Henley

WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY was born August 23, 1849, at Gloucester, and was educated at the Grammar School of Gloucester. From childhood he was afflicted with a tuberculous disease which finally necessitated the amputation of a foot. His Hospital Sketches, those vivid precursors of free verse, were a record of the time when he was at the infirmary at Edinburgh; they are sharp with the sights, sensations, even the smells, of the sick-room. In spite (or, more probably, because) of his continued poor health, Henley never ceased to worship strength and energy; courage and a triumphant belief shine out of the athletic London Voluntaries (1892) and the light lyrics in Hawthorn and Lavender (1901).

The buoyancy, rousing at first, becomes wearing; it is too insistent, a little shrill. When Henley ceased to overrate animal energy he was no less himself, and a better poet. When not banging drums and flashing swords, he could distill the essence of a lyric, turn a triolet or ballade with the most expert practitioner of the French forms, paint impressionistic side-lights of intimate London, and, in such pieces as "Madame Life," combine grimness and gay bizarrie.

The mixture of lightness and lustiness dates from his early youth. An infectious idiom, it flowered under his first influence, which was that of his schoolmaster, T. E. Brown, and remained to the end.

The bulk of Henley's poetry is not great in volume. He has himself explained the small quantity of his work in a Preface to his Poems, first published in 1888. "A principal reason," he says, "is that, after spending the better part of my life in the pursuit of poetry, I found myself (about 1877) so utterly unmarketable that I had to own myself beaten in art, and to indict myself to journalism for the next ten years." Later on, he began to write again—"old dusty sheaves were dragged to light; the work of selection and correction was begun; I burned much; I found that, after all, the lyrical instinct had slept—not died."

As editor he was fearless, prejudiced, violent in preferences and antipathies, and always sincere. His unflinching candor won over even those who completely disagreed with him. His friendships were many; one of the closest was with Robert Louis Stevenson, with whom he wrote three plays published in 1892. (Henley is only slightly disguised as the characteristic "Burly" in Stevenson's essay "Talk and Talkers.") He compiled a book of poems for boys, Lyra Heroica (1891), and collaborated on a dictionary of English slang. Though continually in conflict, he remained belligerent until 1894; in that year the death of his six-year-old daughter broke the heart of one whose head had been "bloody but unbowed."

In 1901 he published Hawthorn and Lavender, releasing a far finer though smaller music than he had ever uttered. His unrhymed rhythms, reminiscent of Heine's North Sea cycles, anticipated in color and accent the subsequent vogue of vers libie. Although he was not one of the great poets of his period, his period, as well as ours, would be incomplete without him. After a brilliant and varied career devoted mostly to journalism, Henley died in 1903.

INVICTUS

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the Pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds, and shall find me, unafeard.

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of my fate:
I am the captain of my soul.

THE BLACKBIRD

The nightingale has a lyre of gold,
The lark's is a clarion call,
And the blackbird plays but a boxwood flute,
But I love him best of all.

For his song is all of the joy of life,
And we in the mad, spring weather,
We two have listened till he sang
Our hearts and lips together.

A BOWL OF ROSES

It was a bowl of roses:
There in the light they lay,
Languishing, glorying, glowing
Their life away.

And the soul of them rose like a presence,
Into me crept and grew,
And filled me with something—someone—
O, was it you?

BEFORE

Behold me waiting—waiting for the knife.
A little while, and at a leap I storm
The thick sweet mystery of chloroform,
The drunken dark, the little death-in-life.
The gods are good to me: I have no wife,
No innocent child, to think of as I near
The fateful minute; nothing all-too dear
Unmans me for my bout of passive strife.
Yet I am tremulous and a trifle sick,
And, face to face with chance, I shrink a little:
My hopes are strong, my will is something weak.
Here comes the basket? Thank you. I am ready.
But, gentlemen my porters, life is brittle:
You carry Caesar and his fortunes—Steady!

BALLADE

Made in the Hot Weather

Fountains that frisk and sprinkle
The moss they overspill;
Pools that the breezes crinkle;

WE'LL GO NO MORE A-ROVING

We'll go no more a-roving by the light of the moon.
November glooms are barren beside the dusk of June.
The summer flowers are faded, the summer thoughts are sere.
We'll go no more a-roving, lest worse befall, my dear.

We'll go no more a-roving by the light of the moon.
The song we sang rings hollow, and heavy runs the tune.
Glad ways and words remembered would shame the wretched year.
We'll go no more a-roving, nor dream we did, my dear.

The wheel beside the mill,
With its wet, weedy frill;
Wind-shadows in the wheat;
A water-cart in the street;
The fringe of foam that girds
An islet's ferneries;
A green sky's minor thirds—
To live, I think of these!

Of ice and glass the tinkle,
Pellucid, silver-shrill;
Peaches without a wrinkle;
Cherries and snow at will,
From china bowls that fill
The senses with a sweet
Incuriousness of heat;
A melon's dripping sherds;
Cream-clotted strawberries;
Dusk dairies set with curds—
To live, I think of these!

Vale-lily and periwinkle;
Wet stone-crop on the sill;
The look of leaves a-twinkle
With windlets clear and still;
The feel of a forest rill
That wimples fresh and fleet
About one's naked feet;
The muzzles of drinking herds;
Lush flags and bulrushes;
The chirp of rain-bound birds—
To live, I think of these!

Envoy

Dark aisles, new packs of cards,
Mermaidens' tails, cool swards,
Dawn dews and starlit seas,
White marbles, whiter words—
To live, I think of these!

We'll go no more a-roving by the light of the moon.
 If yet we walk together, we need not shun the noon.
 No sweet thing left to savor, no sad thing left to fear,
 We'll go no more a-roving, but weep at home, my dear

MADAM LIFE

Madam Life's a piece in bloom
 Death goes dogging everywhere:
 She's the tenant of the room,
 He's the ruffian on the stair.
 You shall see her as a friend,
 You shall bilk him once and twice;
 But he'll trap you in the end,
 And he'll stick you for her price.

With his kneebones at your chest,
 And his knuckles in your throat,
 You would reason—plead—protest!
 Clutching at her petticoat;
 But she's heard it all before,
 Well she knows you've had your fun,
 Gingerly she gains the door,
 And your little job is done.

OUT OF TUNE

The spring, my dear,
 Is no longer spring.
 Does the blackbird sing
 What he sang last year?
 Are the skies the old
 Immemorial blue?
 Or am I, or are you,
 Grown cold?

Though life be change,
 It is hard to bear
 When the old sweet air
 Sounds forced and strange.
 To be out of tune,
 Plain You and I . . .
 It were better to die,
 And soon!

FALMOUTH<sup>1</sup>

O, Falmouth is a fine town with ships in the bay,
 And I wish from my heart it's there I was today;
 I wish from my heart I was far away from here,
 Sitting in my parlor and talking to my dear.
 For it's home, dearie, home—it's home I want to be.
 Our topsails are hoisted, and we'll away to sea.
 O, the oak and the ash and the bonnie birken tree
 They're all growing green in the old countrie.

In Baltimore a-walking a lady I did meet
 With her babe on her arm, as she came down the street;
 And I thought how I sailed, and the cradle standing ready
 For the pretty little babe that has never seen its daddie.
 And it's home, dearie, home . . .

O, if it be a lass, she shall wear a golden ring;
 And if it be a lad, he shall fight for his king;
 With his dirk and his hat and his little jacket blue
 He shall walk the quarter-deck as his daddie used to do.
 And it's home, dearie, home . . .

<sup>1</sup> The burden and the third stanza are adapted from an old song.

O, there's a wind a-blowing, a-blowing from the west,
 And that of all the winds is the one I like the best,
 For it blows at our backs, and it shakes our pennon free,
 And it soon will blow us home to the old countrie.
 For it's home, dearie, home—it's home I want to be.
 Our topsails are hoisted, and we'll away to sea.
 O, the oak and the ash and the bonnie birken tree
 They're all growing green in the old countrie.

ENGLAND, MY ENGLAND

What have I done for you,
 England, my England?
 What is there that I would not do,
 England, my own?
 With your glorious eyes austere,
 As the Lord were walking near,
 Whispering terrible things and dear
 As the Song on your bugles blown,
 England—
 Round the world on your bugles blown!

Where shall the watchful Sun,
 England, my England,
 Match the master-work you've done,
 England, my own?
 When shall he rejoice again
 Such a breed of mighty men
 As come forward, one to ten,
 To the Song on your bugles blown,
 England—
 Down the years on your bugles blown?

Ever the faith endures,
 England, my England:—
 "Take and break us: we are yours,
 "England, my own!"
 "Life is good, and joy runs high
 "Between English earth and sky:
 "Death is death; but we shall die
 "To the Song on your bugles blown,
 "England—
 "To the stars on your bugles blown!"

They call you proud and hard,
 England, my England:
 You with worlds to watch and ward,
 England, my own!
 You whose mailed hand keeps the keys
 Of such teeming destinies
 You could know nor dread nor ease

Were the Song on your bugles blown,
 England,
 Round the Pit on your bugles blown!

Mother of Ships whose might,
 England, my England,
 Is the fierce old Sea's delight,
 England, my own,
 Chosen daughter of the Lord,
 Spouse-in-Chief of the ancient sword,
 There's the menace of the Word
 In the Song on your bugles blown,
 England—
 Out of heaven on your bugles blown!

O GATHER ME THE ROSE

O gather me the rose, the rose,
 While yet in flower we find it,
 For summer smiles, but summer goes,
 And winter waits behind it.

For with the dream foregone, foregone,
 The deed forborne for ever,
 The worm Regret will canker on,
 And time will turn him never.

So were it well to love, my love,
 And cheat of any laughter
 The fate beneath us and above,
 The dark before and after.

The myrtle and the rose, the rose,
 The sunshine and the swallow,
 The dream that comes, the wish that goes,
 The memories that follow!

TO ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

A child,
 Curious and innocent,
 Slips from his Nurse, and rejoicing
 Loses himself in the Fair.

Thro' the jostle and din
 Wandering, he revels,
 Dreaming, desiring, possessing;
 Till, of a sudden
 Tired and afraid, he beholds
 The sordid assemblage
 Just as it is; and he runs
 With a sob to his Nurse
 (Lighting at last on him),
 And in her motherly bosom
 Cries him to sleep.

Thus thro' the World,
 Seeing and feeling and knowing,
 Goes Man: till at last,
 Tired of experience, he turns
 To the friendly and comforting breast
 Of the old nurse, Death.

MARGARITAE SORORI

A late lark twitters from the quiet skies;
 And from the west,

Where the sun, his day's work ended,
 Lingers as in content,
 There falls on the old, gray city
 An influence luminous and serene,
 A shining peace.

The smoke ascends
 In a rosy-and-golden haze. The spires
 Shine, and are changed. In the valley
 Shadows rise. The lark sings on. The sun,
 Closing his benediction,
 Sinks, and the darkening air
 Thrills with a sense of the triumphing
 night—
 Night with her train of stars
 And her great gift of sleep.

So be my passing!
 My task accomplished and the long day done,
 My wages taken, and in my heart
 Some late lark singing,
 Let me be gathered to the quiet west,
 The sundown splendid and serene,
 Death.

Robert Louis Stevenson

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON was born at Edinburgh in 1850 and attended the university there. From infancy he was afflicted with illness, nearly dying of gastric fever at the age of eight, a sickness which left him constitutionally weak. The rest of his life was a struggle between his work and a search for health in Switzerland, America, and the South Seas. He was at first trained to be a lighthouse engineer, following the profession of his family. However, he studied law instead, was admitted to the bar in 1875, and abandoned law for literature a few years later. After wandering several years about Europe, he recorded his peregrinations in An Inland Voyage (1878) and Travels with a Donkey (1879). Although he had written much before his thirtieth year, it was not until the publication of Treasure Island (1883) that he became popular. In 1885 he published, with misgivings, A Child's Garden of Verses; and again won public favor a year later with that tour de force, The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

In 1887, after a prolonged breakdown, he left England never to return. In rapid succession he tried the Adirondacks, New Jersey, California, and, in 1888 sailed, as Sidney Colvin said, "on what was only intended to be an excursion, but turned into a voluntary exile, prolonged until the hour of his death." He lived in Honolulu, Australia, and finally Samoa, where, after a long fight, he succumbed to tuberculosis in 1894.

Though primarily a novelist, Stevenson has left one book which is equally at home in the nursery and the library: A Child's Garden of Verses is second only to Mother Goose's own collection in simplicity and universal appeal. With the exception of these favorite verses and a posthumous New Poems (1918), Underwoods (1887) and Ballads (1890) comprise his entire poetic output. As a genial essayist, he is usually ranked with Charles Lamb. As a romancer, his fame rests on Kidnapped, the unfinished masterpiece, Weir of Hermiston, and that classic of youth, Treasure Island.

Stevenson's writing is inseparable from his charm and the personal appeal of his life-story. He is persuasive, not profound, too concerned with his craft, but never dull, and finally winning.

SUMMER SUN

Great is the sun, and wide he goes
Through empty heaven without repose;
And in the blue and glowing days
More thick than rain he showers his rays.

Though closer still the blinds we pull
To keep the shady parlor cool,
Yet he will find a chink or two
To slip his golden fingers through.

The dusty attic, spider-clad,
He, through the keyhole, maketh glad;
And through the broken edge of tiles
Into the laddered hay-loft smiles.

Meantime his golden face around
He bares to all the garden ground,
And sheds a warm and glittering look
Among the ivy's innmost nook.

Above the hills, along the blue,
Round the bright air with footing true,
To please the child, to paint the rose,
The gardener of the World, he goes.

WINTER TIME

Late lies the wintry sun a-bed,
A frosty, fiery sleepy-head;
Blinks but an hour or two; and then,
A blood-red orange, sets again.

Before the stars have left the skies
At morning in the dark I rise;

And, shivering in my nakedness,
By the cold candle, bathe and dress.

Close by the jolly fire I sit
To warm my frozen bones a bit;
Or, with a reindeer-sled, explore
The colder countries round the door.

When to go out, my nurse doth wrap
Me in my comforter and cap;
The cold wind burns my face, and blows
Its frosty pepper up my nose.

Black are my steps on silver sod;
Thick blows my frosty breath abroad;
And tree and house, and hill and lake,
Are frosted like a wedding-cake.

THE CELESTIAL SURGEON

If I have faltered more or less
In my great task of happiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain:—
Lord, thy most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake;
Or, Lord, if still too obdurate I,
Choose thou, before that spirit die,
A piercing pain, a killing sin,
And to my dead heart run them in!

ROMANCE

I will make you brooches and toys for your delight
 Of bird-song at morning and star-shine at night.
 I will make a palace fit for you and me,
 Of green days in forests and blue days at sea.

I will make my kitchen, and you shall keep your room,
 Where white flows the river and bright blows the broom
 And you shall wash your linen and keep your body white
 In rainfall at morning and dewfall at night.

And this shall be for music when no one else is near,
 The fine song for singing, the rare song to hear!
 That only I remember, that only you admire,
 Of the broad road that stretches and the roadside fire.

REQUIEM

Under the wide and starry sky
 Dig the grave and let me lie:
 Glad did I live and gladly die,
 And I laid me down with a will.

This be the verse you 'grave for me:
 Here he lies where he long'd to be;
 Home is the sailor, home from sea,
 And the hunter home from the hill.

GO, LITTLE BOOK

Go, little book, and wish to all
 Flowers in the garden, meat in the hall,
 A bin of wine, a spice of wit,
 A house with lawns enclosing it,
 A living river by the door,
 A nightingale in the sycamore.

Alice Meynell

Alice (Christiana Thompson) Meynell was born in 1850, educated at home and spent a great part of her early life in Italy. Later, she married Wilfred Meynell, friend, editor, and literary executor of Francis Thompson. For eighteen years she contributed to the Weekly Register of which her husband was editor; for twelve years was co-editor with him on Merrie England, wrote countless essays, columns for other periodicals, issued several volumes of poetry, took on responsibilities—not the least of which was the sponsorship of Francis Thompson which saved him from ruin—all with a huge family growing up about her. There were seven Meynell children, among them being Francis, typographer and poet (see page 378), Viola, the novelist (see page 375), Monica, the critical, and Everard, author of The Life of Francis Thompson. As described in the authorized Memoir Alice Meynell (1929) by her daughter, Viola, the children, aping their elders, conceived editing as a species of indoor sport and made up papers of their own. In one of these, the youngsters, attempting to answer Mrs. Meynell's critics, unconsciously appraised her:

"Her thought is a thought which very few writers got. It is mystical but excucite. She is a little obscure to readers who are not up in literature sufficiently to understand mystical touches. . . . Hers is a very docile temperament and thoroughly sympathetic. When she is singing a sympathetic song you can tell that she must have some excellent powers in her head."

The child Monica, touched with the family passion for salvation and trying to save her mother from literature, put the case against "ecstasy" in these delightful sentences:

"Dear Mother,—I hope you will in time give up your absurd thoughts about literature. It makes my mind quite feverish when I think of the exhaltation your undergoing. I'm getting quite frightened about calling you 'dear Mother' because you will begin to take it quite seriously. Just because Mr. Henley and those sort of unscnere men say you write well simply because they know if they don't flatter you they'll never get anything for their paper. Now mother take my advise and don't be quite so estatic, you'll get on just as well in the world and much better because you'll be respected. Now just see, MONNIE."

Whatever form Alice Meynell chose, her work was always a reflection of h.r spirit. She scorned sentimentality, "the facile literary opportunity," despised slovenliness, "the fashion of an animated strut of style," and kept herself aloof from them. Her later years were spent collecting her poems, revising her early prose and publishing the best of it in Essays. She died in 1923.

Preludes was published in 1876. Since then, various collections of her poems and essays have appeared at irregular intervals, and, in 1923, Charles Scribner's Sons published The Poems of Alice Meynell. From the earliest restrained verses to the later more ornate conceits, one strain is dominant: the music of religious emotion. It is, obviously, emotion controlled, almost intellectualized. Yet the poetry is never dull. The reader is always aware of a nature disciplined, but which, for all its self-imposed strictures, is rich in feeling, exquisite in communication.

Selected Poems of Alice Meynell (1931), with a valuable introductory note by Wilfred Meynell, is a careful winnowing of her best, although one of her finest short lyrics ("Chimes") is omitted. The book begins appropriately with the quietly original and wholly beautiful "A Letter from a Girl to Her Own Old Age" and ends with tributes from Ruskin, Meredith, Coventry Patmore, Chesterton and others.

Dante Gabriel Rossetti considered her "Renouncement" one of the three finest sonnets ever written by women. "Christ in the Universe," "To a Daisy," and "A Thrush Before Dawn," show a literary as well as spiritual kinship with Francis Thompson; but where Thompson is lavish to the point of gaudiness, Mrs. Meynell's fastidiousness dictates a fine economy.

TO A DAISY

Slight as thou art, thou art enough to hide,
Like all created things, secrets from me,
And stand a barrier to eternity.
And I, how can I praise thee well and wide
From where I dwell—upon the hither side?
Thou little veil for so great mystery,
When shall I penetrate all things and thee,
And then look back? For this I must abide,
Till thou shalt grow and fold and be unsurled
Literally between me and the world.
Then I shall drink from in beneath a spring,
And from a poet's side shall read his book.
O daisy mine, what will it be to look
From God's side even on such a simple thing?

THE SHEPHERDESS

She walks—the lady of my delight—
A shepherdess of sheep.
Her flocks are thoughts. She keeps them
white;
She guards them from the steep;
She feeds them on the fragrant height,
And folds them in for sleep.

She roams maternal hills and bright
Dark valleys safe and deep.
Into that tender breast at night,
The chastest stars may peep.
She walks—the lady of my delight—
A shepherdess of sheep.

She holds her little thoughts in sight,
Though gay they run and leap.
She is so circumspect and right;
She has her soul to keep.
She walks—the lady of my delight—
A shepherdess of sheep.

THE WIND IS BLIND

"Eyeless, in Gaza, at the mill, with slaves."
—MILTON'S SAMSON.

The wind is blind.
The earth sees sun and moon; the height
Is watch-tower to the dawn; the plain

Shines to the summer; visible light
Is scattered in the drops of rain.

The wind is blind.
The flashing billows are aware;
With open eyes the cities see;
Light leaves the ether, everywhere
Known to the homing bird and bee.

The wind is blind,
Is blind alone. How has he hurled
His ignorant lash, his sinless dart,
His eyeless rush upon the world,
Unseeing, to break his unknown heart!

The wind is blind.
And the sail traps him, and the mill
Captures him; and he cannot save
His swiftness and his desperate will
From those blind uses of the slave.

NOVEMBER BLUE

The golden tint of the electric lights seems to give a complementary color to the air in the early evening.
—ESSAY ON LONDON.

O heavenly color, London town
Has blurred it from her skies;

And, hooded in an earthly brown,
Unheaven'd the city lies.
No longer, standard-like, this hue
Above the broad road flies;
Nor does the narrow street the blue
Wear, slender pennon-wise.

But when the gold and silver lamps
Color the London dew,
And, misted by the winter damps,
The shops shine bright, anew—
Blue comes to earth, it walks the street,
It dyes the wide air through;
A mimic sky about their feet
The throng go crowned with blue.

CHIMES

Brief, on a flying night
From the shaken tower,
A flock of bells take flight,
And go with the hour.

Like birds from the cote to the gales,
Abrupt—O hark!
A fleet of bells set sails,
And go to the dark.

Sudden the cold airs swing,
Alone, aloud,
A verse of bells takes wing
And flies with the cloud.

A LETTER FROM A GIRL TO HER OWN OLD AGE

Listen, and when thy hand this paper presses,
O time-worn woman, think of her who blesses
What thy thin fingers touch, with her caresses.

O mother, for the weight of years that break thee!
O daughter, for slow time must yet awake thee,
And from the changes of my heart must make thee!

O fainting traveler, morn is gray in heaven.
Dost thou remember how the clouds were driven?
And are they calm about the fall of even?

Pause near the ending of thy long migration;
For this one sudden hour of desolation
Appeals to one hour of thy meditation.

Suffer, O silent one, that I remind thee
Of the great hills that stormed the sky behind thee,
Of the wild winds of power that have resigned thee.

Know that the mournful plain where thou must wander
Is but a gray and silent world; but ponder
The misty mountains of the morning yonder.

Listen:—the mountain winds with rain were fretting,
And sudden gleams the mountain-tops besetting.
I cannot let thee fade to death, forgetting.

What part of this wild heart of mine I know not
Will follow with thee where the great winds blow not,
And where the young flowers of the mountain grow not.

Yet let my letter with thy lost thoughts in it
 Tell what the way was when thou didst begin it,
 And win with thee the goal when thou shalt win it.

I have not writ this letter of divining
 To make a glory of thy silent pining,
 A triumph of thy mute and strange declining.

Only one youth, and the bright life was shrouded;
 Only one morning, and the day was clouded;
 And one old age with all regrets is crowded.

O hush, O hush! Thy tears my words are steeping.
 O hush, hush, hush! So full, the fount of weeping?
 Poor eyes, so quickly moved, so near to sleeping?

Pardon the girl; such strange desires beset her.
 Poor woman, lay aside the mournful letter
 That breaks thy heart; the one who wrote, forgot her:

The one who now thy faded features guesses,
 With filial fingers thy gray hair caresses,
 With morning tears thy mournful twilight blesses.

THE OCTOBER REDBREAST

Autumn is weary, halt, and old;
 Ah, but she owns the song of joy!
 Her colors fade, her woods are cold.
 Her singing-bird's a boy, a boy.

In lovely Spring the birds were bent
 On nests, on use, on love, forsooth!
 Grown-up were they. This boy's content,
 For his is liberty, his is youth.

The musical stripling sings for play
 Taking no thought, and virgin-glad.
 For duty sang those mates in May.
 This singing-bird's a lad, a lad.

A THRUSH BEFORE DAWN

A voice peals in this end of night
 A phrase of notes resembling stars,
 Single and spiritual notes of light.
 What call they at my window-bars?
     The South, the past, the day to be,
     An ancient infelicity.

Darkling, deliberate, what sings
 This wonderful one, alone, at peace?
 What wilder things than song, what things
 Sweeter than youth, clearer than Greece,
 Dearer than Italy, untold
 Delight, and freshness centuries old?

And first first-loves, a multitude,
 The exaltation of their pain;
 Ancestral childhood long renewed;
 And midnights of invisible rain;
 And gardens, gardens, night and day,
 Gardens and childhood all the way.

What Middle Ages passionate,
 O passionless voice! What distant bells
 Lodged in the hills, what palace state
 Illyrian! For it speaks, it tells,
 Without desire, without dismay
 Some morrow and some yesterday.

All-natural things! But more— Whence came
 This yet remoter mystery?
 How do these starry notes proclaim
 A graver still divinity?
     This hope, this sanctity of fear?
     O innocent throat! O human ear!

RENOUEMENT

I must not think of thee; and, tired yet strong,
 I shun the thought that lurks in all delight—
 The thought of thee—and in the blue Heaven's height,
 And in the sweetest passage of a song.

O just beyond the fairest thoughts that throng
 This breast, the thought of thee waits hidden yet bright;
 But it must never, never come in sight;
 I must stop short of thee the whole day long.

But when sleep comes to close each difficult day,
 When night gives pause to the long watch I keep,
 And all my bonds I needs must loose apart,

Must doff my will as raiment laid away,
 With the first dream that comes with the first sleep
 I run, I run, I am gathered to thy heart.

CHRIST IN THE UNIVERSE

With this ambiguous earth
 His dealings have been told us. These abide:
 The signal to a maid, the human birth,
 The lesson, and the young Man crucified.

But not a star of all
 The innumerable hosts of stars has heard
 How He administered this terrestrial ball.
 Our race have kept their Lord's entrusted Word.

Of His earth-visiting feet
 None knows the secret, cherished, perilous,
 The terrible, shamefast, frightened, whispered, sweet,
 Heart-shattering secret of His way with us.

No planet knows of this.
 Our wayside planet, carrying land and wave,
 Love and life multiplied, and pain and bliss,
 Bears, as chief treasure, one forsaken grave.

Nor, in our little day,
 May His devices with the heavens be guessed;
 His pilgrimage to thread the Milky Way,
 Or His bestowals there, be manifest.

But, in the eternities,
 Doubtless we shall compare together, hear
 A million alien Gospels, in what guise
 He trod the Pleiades, the Lyre, the Bear.

O be prepared, my soul!
 To read the inconceivable, to scan
 The million forms of God those stars unroll
 When, in our turn, we show to them a Man.

Oscar Wilde

OSCAR (FINGALL O'FLAHERTY) WILDE was born at Dublin, Ireland, October 16, 1856, and even as an undergraduate at Oxford was marked for a brilliant career. When he was scarcely twenty-one years of age, he won the Newdigate Prize with his poem "Ravenna." Devoting himself almost entirely to prose, he speedily became known as a writer of brilliant epigrammatic essays and even more brilliant paradoxical plays, such as An Ideal Husband and The Importance of Being Earnest. Wilde's aphorisms and flippancies were quoted everywhere; his fame as a wit was only surpassed by his notoriety as an esthete, the scandal of his trial, and the final prison sentence.

Most of his poems in prose (such as "The Happy Prince," "The Birthday of the Infanta," and "The Fisherman and His Soul") are more imaginative and richly colored than his rococo verse which suffers from deliberate decadence. But in one long poem, "The Ballad of Reading Gaol" (1898), he sounded his simplest and most enduring note. Prison was, in some ways, a regeneration for Wilde. It not only produced "The Ballad of Reading Gaol," but made possible his finest piece of writing, "De Profundis," only a small part of which has been published. "Salomé," which has made the author's name a household word, was originally written in French in 1892 and later translated into English by Lord Alfred Douglas, accompanied by the famous illustrations by Aubrey Beardsley. More recently, this heated drama, based on the story of Herod and Herodias, was made into an opera by Richard Strauss and performed in a dozen countries and several languages.

Wilde's society plays, flashing and cynical, were the forerunners of Bernard Shaw's audacious and far more searching ironies. One sees the origin of a whole school of drama in such epigrams as "The history of woman is the history of the worst form of tyranny the world has ever known: the tyranny of the weak over the strong. It is the only tyranny that lasts." Or "There is only one thing in the world worse than being talked about, and that is not being talked about."

Wilde's flair for publicity, avowed in the last quotation, was gratified to the full. No man of his time was more talked about. The end of the Esthetic Movement came coincidentally—and ironically—with the trial of Oscar Wilde and his indictment for a social crime. His predilection for extremes caused his artistic ruin: in youth he was ultra-Keatsian; in early manhood, ultra-Rossettian; in maturity, ultra-Wilde—and he pushed preciosity to the limits of the absurd. He believed in nothing, not even himself, except for the passing effect; he was essentially the "Pierrot of the minute"—a Pierrot whose shifting passions and impertinences convinced no one. Even his Pierroticism was a pose.

"Impression du Matin" and "Symphony in Yellow" are among the poems which suggest a verbal Whistler, with whom Wilde waged many an epigrammatic battle, and "Hélás" is an unusually honest fragment of self-analysis.

Wilde borrowed from Swinburne no little of his spirit and as much of his technique as he could master. But Swinburne's rebelliousness, though vague and general, was sincere; Wilde, the antithesis of a rebel by instinct, was a social snob who clung to his insurgence for the entrée it won him in properly breathless gatherings. His success was without dignity, his failure without pathos.

Wilde died at Paris, November 30, 1900, his body being buried in the Cemetery of Bagneux. On July 20, 1909, it was transferred to the great Cemetery of Père Lachaise, where later a striking monument by Epstein was erected to his memory.

Tread lightly, she is near
Under the snow,
Speak gently, she can hear
The daisies grow.

All her bright golden hair
Tarnished with rust,
She that was young and fair
Fallen to dust.

Lily-like, white as snow,
She hardly knew
She was a woman, so
Sweetly she grew.

Coffin-board, heavy stone,
Lie on her breast;
I vex my heart alone,
She is at rest.

Peace, peace; she cannot hear
Lyre or sonnet;
All my life's burried here.
Heap earth upon it.

I M P R E S S I O N D U M A T I N

The Thames nocturne of blue and gold
Changed to a harmony in gray;
A barge with ocher-colored hay
Dropt from the wharf: and chill and cold

The yellow fog came creeping down
The bridges, till the houses' walls
Seemed changed to shadows, and St. Paul's
Loomed like a bubble o'er the town.

Then suddenly arose the clang
Of waking life; the streets were stirred
With country wagons; and a bird
Flew to the glistening roofs and sang.

But one pale woman all alone,
The daylight kissing her wan hair,
Loitered beneath the gas lamps' flare,
With lips of flame and heart of stone.

H É L A S

To drift with every passion till my soul
Is a stringed lute on which all winds can play,
Is it for this that I have given away
Mine ancient wisdom, and austere control?
Methinks my life is a twice-written scroll
Scrawled over on some boyish holiday
With idle songs for pipe and virelay,
Which do but mar the secret of the whole.
Surely there was a time I might have trod
The sunlit heights, and from life's dissonance
Struck one clear chord to reach the ears of God:

Is that time dead? lo! with a little rod
I did but touch the honey of romance—
And must I lose a soul's inheritance?

M A G D A L E N W A L K S

The little white clouds are racing over the sky,
And the fields are strown with the gold of the flower of March,
The daffodil breaks under foot, and the tasseled larch
Sways and swings as the thrush goes hurrying by.

A delicate odor is borne on the wings of the morning breeze,
 The odor of deep wet grass, and of brown new-furrowed earth,
 The birds are singing for joy of the Spring's glad birth,
 Hopping from branch to branch on the rocking trees.

And all the woods are alive with the murmur and sound of Spring,
 And the rose-bud breaks into pink on the climbing briar,
 And the crocus-bed is a quivering moon of fire
 Girdled round with the belt of an amethyst ring.

And the plane of the pine-tree is whispering some tale of love
 Till it rustles with laughter and tosses its mantle of green,
 And the gloom of the wych-elm's hollow is lit with the iris sheen
 Of the burnished rainbow throat and the silver breast of a dove.

See! the lark starts up from his bed in the meadow there,
 Breaking the gossamer threads and the nets of dew,
 And flashing adown the river, a flame of blue!
 The kingfisher flies like an arrow, and wounds the air.

And the sense of my life is sweet! though I know that the end is nigh:
 For the ruin and ran of winter will shortly come,
 The lily will lose its gold, and the chestnut-bloom
 In billows of red and white on the grass will lie.

And even the light of the sun will fade at the last,
 And the leaves will fall, and the birds will hasten away,
 And I will be left in the snow of a flowerless day
 To think on the glories of Spring, and the joys of a youth long past.

Yet be silent, my heart! do not count it a profitless thing
 To have seen the splendor of the sun, and of grass, and of flower!
 To have lived and loved! for I hold that to love for an hour
 Is better for man and woman than cycles of blossoming Spring.

E TENEBRIS

Come down, O Christ, and help me! reach thy hand,
 For I am drowning in a stormier sea
 Than Simon on thy lake of Galilee:
 The wine of life is spilt upon the sand,
 My heart is as some famine-murdered land
 Whence all good things have perished utterly,
 And well I know my soul in Hell must lie
 If I this night before God's throne should stand.
 "He sleeps perchance, or rideth to the chase,
 Like Baal, when his prophets howled that name
 From morn to noon on Carmel's smitten height."
 Nay, peace, I shall behold, before the night,
 The feet of brass, the robe more white than flame,
 The wounded hands, the weary human face.

SYMPHONY IN YELLOW

An omnibus across the bridge
Crawls like a yellow butterfly,
And, here and there, a passer-by
Shows like a little restless midge.

Big barges full of yellow hay
Are moved against the shadowy wharf,
And, like a yellow silken scarf,
The thick fog hangs along the quay.

The yellow leaves begin to fade
And flutter from the Temple elms,
And at my feet the pale green Thames
Lies like a rod of rippled jade.

THE HARLOT'S HOUSE

We caught the tread of dancing feet,
We loitered down the moonlit street,
And stopped beneath the harlot's house.

Inside, above the din and fray,
We heard the loud musicians play
The "Treues Liebes Herz" of Strauss.

Like strange mechanical grotesques,
Making fantastic arabesques,
The shadows raced across the blind.

We watched the ghostly dancers spin
To sound of horn and violin,
Like black leaves wheeling in the wind.

Like wire-pulled automatons,
Slim silhouetted skeletons
Went sidling through the slow quadrille.

They took each other by the hand,
And danced a stately saraband;
Their laughter echoed thin and shrill.

Sometimes a clockwork puppet pressed
A phantom lover to her breast,
Sometimes they seemed to try to sing.

Sometimes a horrible marionette
Came out, and smoked its cigarette
Upon the steps like a live thing.

Then, turning to my love, I said,
"The dead are dancing with the dead,
The dust is whirling with the dust."

But she—she heard the violin,
And left my side and entered in:
Love passed into the house of lust.

Then suddenly the tune went false,
The dancers wearied of the waltz,
The shadows ceased to wheel and whirl.

And down the long and silent street,
The dawn, with silver-sandaled feet,
Crept like a frightened girl.

FROM "THE SPHINX"

How subtle-secret is your smile! Did you love none then? Nay, I know
Great Ammon was your bedfellow! He lay with you beside the Nile!

The river-horses in the slime trumpeted when they saw him come
Odorous with Syrian galbanum and smeared with spikenard and with thyme.

He came along the river bank like some tall galley argent-sailed,
He strode across the waters, mailed in beauty, and the waters sank.

He strode across the desert sand: he reached the valley where you lay:
He waited till the dawn of day: then touched your black breasts with his hand.

You kissed his mouth with mouth of flame: you made the hornèd god your own:
You stood behind him on his throne: you called him by his secret name.

You whispered monstrous oracles into the caverns of his ears:
With blood of goats and blood of steers you taught him monstrous miracles.

White Ammon was your bedfellow! Your chamber was the steaming Nile!
And with your curved archaic smile you watched his passion come and go.

FROM "THE BALLAD OF READING GAOL"

He did not wear his scarlet coat,
For blood and wine are red,
And blood and wine were on his hands
When they found him with the dead,
The poor dead woman whom he loved,
And murdered in her bed.

He walked amongst the Trial Men
In a suit of shabby gray;
A cricket cap was on his head,
And his step seemed light and gay;
But I never saw a man who looked
So wistfully at the day.

I never saw a man who looked
With such a wistful eye
Upon that little tent of blue
Which prisoners call the sky,
And at every drifting cloud that went
With sails of silver by.

I walked, with other souls in pain,
Within another ring,
And was wondering if the man had done
A great or little thing,
When a voice behind me whispered low,
"That fellow's got to swing."

Dear Christ! the very prison walls
Suddenly seemed to reel,
And the sky above my head became
Like a casque of scorching steel;
And, though I was a soul in pain,
My pain I could not feel.

I only knew what hunted thought
Quicken'd his step, and why
He looked upon the garish day
With such a wistful eye:
The man had killed the thing he loved,
And so he had to die.

Yet each man kills the thing he loves,
By each let this be heard,
Some do it with a bitter look,
Some with a flattering word,
The coward does it with a kiss,
The brave man with a sword!

Some kill their love when they are young,
And some when they are old;
Some strangle with the hands of Lust,
Some with the hands of Gold:
The kindest use a knife, because
The dead so soon grow cold.

Some love too little, some too long,
Some sell, and others buy;
Some do the deed with many tears,
And some without a sigh:
For each man kills the thing he loves,
Yet each man does not die.

He does not die a death of shame
On a day of dark disgrace,
Nor have a noose about his neck,
Nor a cloth upon his face,
Nor drop feet foremost through the floor
Into an empty space.

He did not wring his hands nor weep,
Nor did he peak or pine,
But he drank the air as though it held
Some healthful anodyne;
With open mouth he drank the sun
As though it had been wine!

And I and all the souls in pain,
Who tramped the other ring,
Forgot if we ourselves had done
A great or little thing,
And watched with gaze of dull amaze
The man who had to swing.

And strange it was to see him pass
With a step so light and gay,

And strange it was to see him look
So wistfully at the day,
And strange it was to think that he
Had such a debt to pay.

For oak and elm have pleasant leaves
That in the spring-time shoot:
But grim to see is the gallows-tree,
With its adder-bitten root,
And, green or dry, a man must die
Before it bears its fruit!

The loftiest place is that seat of grace
For which all worldlings try:
But who would stand in hempen band
Upon a scaffold high,
And through a murderer's collar take
His last look at the sky?

It is sweet to dance to violins
When Love and Life are fair:
To dance to flutes, to dance to lutes
Is delicate and rare:
But it is not sweet with nimble feet
To dance upon the air!

So with curious eyes and sick surmise
We watched him day by day,
And wondered if each one of us
Would end the self-same way,
For none can tell to what red Hell
His sightless soul may stray.

At last the dead man walked no more
Amongst the Trial Men,
And I knew that he was standing up
In the black dock's dreadful pen,
And that never would I see his face
In God's sweet world again.

Like two doomed ships that pass in storm
We had crossed each other's way:
But we made no sign, we said no word,
We had no word to say;
For we did not meet in the holy night,
But in the shameful day.

A prison wall was round us both,
Two outcast men we were:
The world had thrust us from its heart,
And God from out His care:
And the iron gin that waits for Sin
Had caught us in its snare.

John Davidson

JOHN DAVIDSON was born at Barrhead, Renfrewshire, in 1857. His Ballads and Songs (1895) and New Ballads (1897) attained a sudden but too short-lived popularity; his great promise was quenched by an apathetic public and by his own growing disillusion and despair. Neither the later Holiday and Other Poems (1906) nor the ambitious trilogy, God and Mammon (the first volume of which appeared in 1907) received anything more than frozen respect. His somber poetry never tired of repeating his favorite theme: "Man is but the Universe grown conscious." Author of some four "testaments," six plays, three novels, and various collections of poems and essays, Davidson died by his own hand at Penzance in 1909.

The theme of "A Ballad of a Nun" is one which has attracted many writers since the Middle Ages, but Davidson has given it a turn which makes the tale sound far fresher than Vollmoeller's employment of it in The Miracle. "A Ballad of Hell," Davidson's only "popular" poem, is wholly his own material.

Davidson's work may be divided into three stages. His first phase, announced in The North Wall (1885), was conscious cleverness. In the second stage he tried to reach sophisticated audiences, attempting the metropolitan note with sketches, plays, and novels in the manner of the febrile Nineties. It was not until Ballads and Songs and The Last Ballad (1899) that he struck what for him and his readers was the true note. "A Ballad of Hell" and "A Ballad of a Nun," among others, are infused with the old ballad spirit; they have the traditional reach and vigor, modernized without becoming topical, pointed but not over-personalized.

After 1900 Davidson's work suffered. As his biographer R. M. Wenley puts it, "cosmogonic passion overwhelming him, the artist pales before the prophet in travail." Somberness developed into pessimism, pessimism into self-persecution. He identified himself with the unhappy James Thomson, another maladjusted soul; he became paranoiac, losing himself in "strange passions, outlandish affaires, overstrung rhetoric." Over-emphasizing extremes, his later work was not only neurotic but melodramatic. Hysteria tainted a half-Nietzschean, half-Calvinistic philosophy; his twisted apprehension of the "hero" concept of history (in which he seemed to himself one of the defeated martyrs) was, as Wenley remarks, "like other Neo-Romantics"—from Nietzsche in excelsis to D'Annunzio in inferis.

But it is only in his last phase that Davidson turned from singing to shrieking. His huge and misshapen trilogies are forgotten; his exaggerated colors have faded; the ballads and a few of the lyrics remain. They have persistent if not permanent stuff.

A BALLAD OF HELL

"A letter from my love today!

Oh, unexpected, dear appeal!"

She struck a happy tear away,

And broke the crimson seal.

"My love, there is no help on earth,
No help in heaven; the dead-man's bell
Must toll our wedding; our first hearth
Must be the well-paved floor of hell."

The color died from out her face,
Her eyes like ghostly candles shone;
She cast dread looks about the place,
Then clenched her teeth and read right on.

"I may not pass the prison door;
Here must I rot from day to day,
Unless I wed whom I abhor,
My cousin, Blanche of Valencay.

"At midnight with my dagger keen,
I'll take my life; it must be so.
Meet me in hell tonight, my queen,
For weal and woe."

She laughed, although her face was wan,
She girded on her golden belt,
She took her jeweled ivory fan,
And at her glowing missal knelt.

Then rose, "And am I mad?" she said:

She broke her fan, her belt untied;
With leather girt herself instead,
And stuck a dagger at her side.

She waited, shuddering in her room,
Till sleep had fallen on all the house.
She never flinched; she faced her doom:
They two must sin to keep their vows.

Then out into the night she went,
And, stooping, crept by hedge and tree;
Her rose-bush flung a snare of scent,
And caught a happy memory.

She fell, and lay a minute's space;
She tore the sward in her distress;
The dewy grass refreshed her face;
She rose and ran with lifted dress.

She started like a morn-caught ghost
Once when the moon came out and stood
To watch; the naked road she crossed,
And dived into the murmuring wood.

The branches snatched her streaming cloak;
A live thing shrieked; she made no stay!
She hurried to the trysting-oak—
Right well she knew the way.

Without a pause she bared her breast,
And drove her dagger home and fell,
And lay like one that takes her rest,
And died and wakened up in hell.

She bathed her spirit in the flame,
And near the center took her post;
From all sides to her ears there came
The dreary anguish of the lost.

The devil started at her side,
Comely, and tall, and black as jet.
"I am young Malespina's bride;
Has he come hither yet?"

"My poppet, welcome to your bed."
"Is Malespina here?"
"Not he! Tomorrow he must wed
His cousin Blanche, my dear!"

"You lie, he died with me tonight."
"Not he! it was a plot" . . . "You lie."
"My dear, I never lie outright."
"We died at midnight, he and I."

The devil went. Without a groan
She, gathered up in one fierce prayer,
Took root in hell's midst all alone,
And waited for him there.

She dared to make herself at home
Amidst the wail, the uneasy stir.
The blood-stained flame that filled the dome,
Scentless and silent, shrouded her.

How long she stayed I cannot tell;
But when she felt his perfidy,
She marched across the floor of hell;
And all the damned stood up to see.

The devil stopped her at the brink:
She shook him off; she cried, "Away!"
"My dear, you have gone mad, I think."
"I was betrayed: I will not stay."

Across the weltering deep she ran;
A stranger thing was never seen:
The damned stood silent to a man;
They saw the great gulf set between.

To her it seemed a meadow fair;
And flowers sprang up about her feet.
She entered heaven; she climbed the stair
And knelt down at the mercy-seat.

Seraphs and saints with one great voice
Welcomed that soul that knew not fear.
Amazed to find it could rejoice,
Hell raised a hoarse, half-human cheer.

IMAGINATION

(from "New Year's Eve")

There is a dish to hold the sea,
A brazier to contain the sun,
A compass for the galaxy,
A voice to wake the dead and done!

That minister of ministers,
Imagination, gathers up
The undiscovered Universe,
Like jewels in a jasper cup.

Its flame can mingle north and south;
Its accent with the thunder strive;
The ruddy sentence of its mouth
Can make the ancient dead alive.

The mart of power, the fount of will,
The form and mold of every star,
The source and bound of good and ill,
The key of all the things that are,

Imagination, new and strange
In every age, can turn the year;
Can shift the poles and lightly change
The mood of men, the world's career

THE OUTCAST

Soul, be your own
Pleasance and mart,
A land unknown,
A state apart.

Scowl and be rude
Should love entice;
Call gratitude
The costliest vice.

Deride the ill
By fortune sent;
Be scornful still
If foes repent.

When curse and stone
Are hissed and hurled,
Aloof, alone
Disdain the world.

Soul, disregard
The bad, the good;
Be haughty, hard,
Misunderstood.

Be neutral; spare
No humblest lie,
And overbear
Authority.

Laugh wisdom down;
Abandon fate;
Shame the renown
Of all the great.

Dethrone the past;
Deed, vision—naught
Avails at last
Save your own thought.

Though on all hands
The powers unsheathe
Their lightning-brands
And from beneath,

And from above
One curse be hurled
With scorn, with love
Affront the world.

THE UNKNOWN

(Vilanelle)

To brave and to know the unknown
Is the high world's motive and mark,
Though the way with snares be strewn.

The earth itself alone
Wheels through the light and the dark
Onward to meet the unknown.

Each soul, upright or prone,
While the owl sings or the lark,
Must pass where the bones are strewn.

Power on the loftiest throne
Can fashion no certain ark
That shall stem and outride the unknown

Beauty must doff her zone,
Strength trudge unarmed and stark
Though the way with eyes be strewn.

This only can atone,
The high world's motive and mark,
To brave and to know the unknown
Though the way with fire be strewn.

A BALLAD OF A NUN

From Easter tide to Easter tide
For ten long years her patient knees
Engraved the stones—the fittest bride
Of Christ in all the diocese.

She conquered every earthly lust;
The abbess loved her more and more;
And, as a mark of perfect trust,
Made her the keeper of the door.

High on a hill the convent hung,
Across a duchy looking down,
Where everlasting mountains flung
Their shadows over tower and town.

The jewels of their lofty snows
In constellations flashed at night;
Above their crests the moon arose;
The deep earth shuddered with delight.

Long ere she left her cloudy bed,
Still dreaming in the orient land,
On many a mountain's happy head
Dawn lightly laid her rosy hand.

The adventurous sun took heaven by storm;
Clouds scattered largesses of rain;
The sounding cities, rich and warm,
Smoldered and glittered in the plain.

Sometimes it was a wandering wind,
Sometimes the fragrance of the pine,
Sometimes the thought how others sinned,
That turned her sweet blood into wine.

Sometimes she heard a serenade
Complaining sweetly far away:
She said, "A young man woos a maid";
And dreamt of love till break of day.

Then she would ply her knotted scourge
Until she swooned; but evermore
She had the same red sin to purge,
Poor, passionate keeper of the door!

For still night's starry scroll unfurled,
And still the day came like a flood:
It was the greatness of the world
That made her long to use her blood.

In winter-time when Lent drew nigh,
And hill and plain were wrapped in snow,
She watched beneath the frosty sky
The nearest city nightly glow.

Like peals of airy bells outworn
Faint laughter died above her head
In gusts of broken music borne.
"They keep the Carnival," she said.

Her hungry heart devoured the town:
"Heaven save me by a miracle!"
Unless God sends an angel down,
Thither I go though it were Hell."

Fillet and veil in strips she tore;
Her golden tresses floated wide;
The ring and bracelet that she wore
As Christ's betrothed, she cast aside.

"Life's dearest meaning I shall probe;
Lo! I shall taste of love at last!"
Away!" She doffed her outer robe,
And sent it sailing down the blast.

Her body seemed to warm the wind;
With bleeding feet o'er ice she ran:
"I leave the righteous God behind;
I go to worship sinful man."

She reached the sounding city's gate;
No question did the warder ask:
He passed her in: "Welcome, wild mate!"
He thought her some fantastic mask.

Half-naked through the town she went;
Each footstep left a bloody mark;
Crowds followed her with looks intent;
Her bright eyes made the torches dark.

Alone and watching in the street
There stood a grave youth nobly dressed;
To him she knelt and kissed his feet;
Her face her great desire confessed.

Straight to his house the nun he led:
"Strange lady, what would you with me?"
"Your love, your love, sweet lord," she said;
"I bring you my virginity."

He healed her bosom with a kiss;
She gave him all her passion's hoard;
And sobbed and murmured ever, "This
Is life's great meaning, dear, my lord.

"I care not for my broken vows;
Though God should come in thunder soon,
I am sister to the mountains now,
And sister to the sun and moon."

Through all the towns of Belmarie
She made a progress like a queen.
"She is," they said, "whate'er she be,
The strangest woman ever seen."

"From fairyland she must have come,
Or else she is a mermaiden."
Some said she was a ghoul, and some
A heathen goddess born again.

But soon her fire to ashes burned;
Her beauty changed to haggardness;
Her golden hair to silver turned;
The hour came of her last caress.

At midnight from her lonely bed
She rose, and said, "I have had my will.
The old ragged robe she donned, and fled
Back to the convent on the hill.

Half-naked as she went before,
She hurried to the city wall,
Unnoticed in the rush and roar
And splendor of the Carnival.

She ran across the icy plain;
 Her worn blood curdled in the blast;
 Each footstep left a crimson stain;
 The white-faced moon looked on aghast.

She said between her chattering jaws,
 "Deep peace is mine, I cease to strive;
 Oh, comfortable convent laws,
 That bury foolish nuns alive!"

"A trowel for my passing-bell,
 A little bed within the wall,
 A coverlet of stones; how well
 I there shall keep the Carnival!"

Like tired bells chiming in their sleep,
 The wind faint peals of laughter bore;
 She stopped her ears and climbed the steep
 And thundered at the convent door.

It opened straight: she entered in,
 And at the wardress' feet fell prone:
 "I come to purge away my sin;
 Bury me, close me up in stone."

The wardress raised her tenderly;
 She touched her wet and fast-shut eyes:
 "Look, sister; sister, look at me;
 Look; can you see through my disguise?"

She looked and saw her own sad face,
 And trembled, wondering, "Who art thou?"
 "God sent me down to fill your place:
 I am the Virgin Mary now."

And with the word, God's mother shone:
 The wanderer whispered, "Mary, hail!"
 The vision helped her to put on Bracelet and fillet, ring and veil.

"You are sister to the mountains now,
 And sister to the day and night;
 Sister to God." And on the brow
 She kissed her thrice, and left her sight,

While dreaming in her cloudy bed,
 Far in the crimson orient land,
 On many a mountain's happy head
 Dawn lightly laid her rosy hand.

William Watson

WILLIAM WATSON was born at Burley-in-Wharfedale, Yorkshire, August 2, 1858. He achieved his first success through his long poems on Wordsworth, Shelley, and Tennyson—poems that attempted, almost successfully, to combine the manners of these masters. Upon the death of Tennyson, Watson was inspired to write his most famous elegy. Without stopping for food or rest he wrote "Lacrymae Musarum" in fifty hours. The poem caused a deep impression; Queen Victoria admired it, Gladstone suggested that the author be made Poet Laureate. The conservatives, however, felt that Watson, just turned thirty-four, was too young; moreover, he was suspiciously "liberal," so the honor went to the dull but politically dependable Alfred Austin. This was the peak of Watson's career. A few years later he was snubbed by a Prime Minister for some tactless verses; the younger men were contemptuous of him; at sixty he was, worse than condemned, forgotten. In 1930 his circumstances were so reduced that a committee of well-wishers had to exert themselves to raise a fund for his sustenance.

Yet his early work—the best of which is in Selected Poems (1902)—has a dignity and a molded imagination. A rare reflective temper illuminates Odes and Other Poems (1894) and The Hope of the World (1896). Less interesting is The Man Who Saw (1917), and The Superhuman Antagonists is high-pitched but feeble. Like his later work, the poet himself lost favor rapidly. At the beginning of his seventy-eighth year he died, obscurely, almost in poverty, at his old Sussex home, August 13, 1935.

A somewhat too-inclusive Selected Poems of Sir William Watson, chosen by the poet himself, was published in 1927. This volume shows, rather pathetically, the rise and decline of a poet miscast in the rôle of prophet. The vatic note seems to have dwindled to irritation, an irritation caused mainly by a younger order of writers. Too much of Watson's time was devoted to extolling the tradition he worshiped and attacking a kind of poetry he disliked and which, one suspects, he did not understand. His exasperations aside, Watson produced a few effects both large and fine. "Ode in May" is a flawless expression of its kind; the song, "April, April" is deservedly famous; the "Epigrams" have certainty and wit. It is in the longer poems that Watson is paradoxically most and least himself. Summoning the wraiths of Wordsworth, Milton, Tennyson, he achieved the state of the devotee who merges his own identity in that which he worships. But Watson, alas, was not an illumined disciple, only a bemused priest repeating an old ritual. Since his idol was not a single or defined figure, he lost his own identity without reflecting a better one, becoming almost a composite parody of the Royal Purple trend in English letters. The shorter poems escape this stricture.

ODE IN MAY

Let me go forth, and share
The overflowing Sun
With one wise friend, or one
Better than wise, being fair,
Where the pewit wheels and dips
On heights of bracken and ling,
And Earth, unto her leaflet tips,
Tingles with the Spring.

What is so sweet and dear
As a prosperous morn in May,
The confident prime of the day,
And the dauntless youth of the year,
When nothing that asks for bliss,
Asking aright, is denied,
And half of the world a bridegroom is,
And half of the world a bride?

The Song of Mingling flows,
Grave, ceremonial, pure,
As once, from lips that endure,
The cosmic descant rose,
When the temporal lord of life,
Going his golden way,
Had taken a wondrous maid to wife
That long had said him nay.

For of old the Sun, our sire,
Came wooing the mother of men,
Earth, that was virginal then,
Vestal fire to his fire.

Silent her bosom and coy,
But the strong god sued and pressed;
And born of their starry nuptial joy
Are all that drink of her breast.

And the triumph of him that begot,
And the travail of her that bore,
Behold, they are evermore
As warp and weft in our lot.
We are children of splendor and flame,
Of shuddering, also, and tears.
Magnificent out of the dust we came,
And abject from the Spheres.

O bright irresistible lord,
We are fruit of Earth's womb, each one,
And fruit of thy loins, O Sun,
Whence first was the seed outpoured.
To thee as our Father we bow,
Forbidden thy Father to see,
Who is older and greater than thou, as thou
Art greater and older than we.

Thou art but as a word of his speech,
Thou art but as a wave of his hand;
Thou art brief as a glitter of sand
'Twixt tide and tide on his beach;
Thou art less than a spark of his fire,
Or a moment's mood of his soul:
Thou art lost in the notes on the lips of his choir
That chant the chant of the Whole.

ESTRANGEMENT

So, without overt breach, we fall apart,
Tacitly sunder—neither you nor I
Conscious of one intelligible Why,
And both, from severance, winning equal smart.
So, with resigned and acquiescent heart,
Whene'er your name on some chance lip
may lie,
I seem to see an alien shade pass by,
A spirit wherein I have no lot or part.

Thus may a captive, in some fortress grim,
From casual speech betwixt his warders, learn
That June on her triumphal progress goes Through arched and bannered woodlands;
while for him
She is a legend emptied of concern,
And idle is the rumor of the rose.

SONG

April, April,
Laugh thy girlish laughter;
Then, the moment alter,
Weep thy girlish tears,
April, that mine ears
Like a lover greetest,
If I tell thee, sweetest,
All my hopes and fear.
April, April,
Laugh thy golden laughter,
But, the moment after,
Weep thy golden tears!

WORLD-STRANGENESS

Strange the world about me lies,
Never yet familiar grown—
Still disturbs me with surprise,
Haunts me like a face half-known.

In this house with starry dome,
Floored with gemlike plains and seas,
Shall I never feel at home,
Never wholly be at ease?

On from room to room I stray,
Yet my Host can ne'er espy,
And I know not to this day
Whether guest or captive I.

So, between the starry dome
And the floor of plains and seas,
I have never felt at home,
Never wholly been at ease.

FOUR EPIGRAMS

The statue—Buonarroti said—doth wait,
Thrall'd in the block for me to liberate.
The poem—saith the poet—wanders free
Till I betray it to captivity.

The Poet gathers fruit from every tree,
Yea, grapes from thorns and figs from thistles he.
Pluck'd by his hand, the basest weed that grows
Towers to a lily, reddens to a rose.

Love, like a bird, hath perch'd upon a spray
For thee and me to hearken what he sings.
Contented, he forgets to fly away;
But hush! . . . remind not Eros of his wings.

The children romp within the graveyard's pale;
The lark sings o'er a madhouse or a jail;
Such nice antitheses of perfect poise
Chance in her curious rhetoric employs.

Francis Thompson

FRANCIS THOMPSON was born at Ashton in Lancashire in 1859. The son of a doctor, he was intended for the profession and took the medical course at Owens College, Manchester. He had, however, no interest in medicine, but from youth evinced a passion for religion, particularly for the ritual of Catholicism.

His attempts to earn a living were a succession of failures. He was employed as a book-agent, and sold no books; he was apprenticed to the boot trade, and spent many hours of his apprenticeship in public libraries; he enlisted as a soldier, and was discharged as incompetent. He went to London, as Francis Meynell says, "not so much to seek his fortune as to escape his bad fortune. He lost in the gamble, but literature gained. He lived for four years as errand man, seller of matches, holder of horses' heads. Soon he became too shabby to gain admittance into the public libraries, so that when one says that desire of reading was with him a passion, one restores to its literal meaning that abused word. He slept on the Embankment, and 'saw the traffic of Jacob's ladder Pitched betwixt Heaven and Charing Cross.' A woman of the streets took pity on him and kept him alive by her charity—the spirit and the deed. He began to write—now for the first time. His poem, 'Dream Tryst,' written on blue sugar wrapping, found after many months an editorial welcome. Thereafter he was persuaded, though with difficulty, to come off the streets; and even to give up for many years the laudanum he had been taking. For the remaining nineteen years of his life he had an existence at any rate three-quarters protected from the physical tragedies of his starved and homeless young manhood."

Francis Meynell does not name the persons who gave Thompson "an editorial welcome" and who provided him with the shelter which made it possible for him to continue writing and, for that matter, living. These persons were Wilfred Meynell (later to become Thompson's editor and executor) and the poet Alice Meynell (see page 67), who named their son Francis after the genius who became his godfather.

Thompson's first volume, Poems, appeared in 1893, disclosing beneath a surface of wild metaphors and violent neologisms an affinity with the august. This volume was followed by Sister Songs (1895) and New Poems (1897). In these, as well as in the essays on De Quincey and Shelley, there was tropical strangeness. Plenitude is here not only in the large concept but in the small detail. Here are metaphors as bold as

. . . laden with its lampèd clusters bright
The fiery-fruited vineyard of this night.

and

I broke through the doors of sunset,
Ran before the hooves of sunrise.

The "Anthem of Earth," from which the last quotation is taken, is second only to Thompson's highest achievement. "The Hound of Heaven," which Coventry Patmore declared "one of the very few 'great' odes the language can boast," has captured more readers than any religious poem of this century. In a mystic circle, in which the God-pursuing is the God-pursued, the poem moves with the unhurried majesty of a Bach Chorale, building verse upon fugual verse into an un terrestrial architecture. Recognition of a divine order is celebrated with an almost divine excess. Everything, like Thompson's bright laburnum, spills its "honey of wild flame."

Thompson's poetry was embedded in his philosophy to an unusual degree; he saw all things related and linked by immortal power. It was a super-Berkeley who wrote:

. . . thou canst not stir a flower
Without troubling of a star.

Thompson's philosophy, however, exalted though it was, could not maintain him on the heights. Rapture and despair fought within him. "Down the arcane where Night would perish in night," he wandered, lost in "incredible excess"; the heart's cry in "The Dread of Height" sounds the ecstatic reaches and profound depths which his spirit touched. His suspensions were unresolved. But if neither man nor nature granted him final solution, the Church offered him serenity, and no singer has ever put the Catholic creed to more inspired measures.

Influenced at first by the dazzling Crashaw and the conceits of the seventeenth century metaphysicians, Thompson allowed himself the fullest play of purple-pompous tropes. He was as prodigal with strange colors and curious words as a child; the words he applied to characterize Shelley might be used with even greater justice to describe Thompson himself: "To the last, in a degree uncommon even among poets, he retained the idiosyncrasy of childhood, expanded and matured without differentiation. To the last, he was the enchanted child."

Riotous images and extravagant archaisms were Thompson's delight and his defect; he toyed with a style that loved to toss the stars and swing constellations by the hair. His was, not infrequently, a baroque magnificence. He often confused glitter with gold, painting the sublime in terms of the theatrical, falling from the grand manner into the grand-opera manner. At worst, Thompson overdressed his lines with a showy vocabulary; at his best, he attained sublimity. Such poems as "A Fallen Yew," "Ode to the Setting Sun," "Any Saint," "In No Strange Land," and, first and last, "The Hound of Heaven," provide a noble shrine for a noble vision. Here he captured, if only for glowing moments, a glory of which most of his contemporaries were not even aware.

Thompson died, after a fragile and spasmodic life, in St. John's Wood, London, in November, 1907. Since that time, several Selected Poems have revealed Thompson's pomp and prodigality to a new generation; an inexpensive Complete Poetical Works may be found in The Modern Library.

DAISY

Where the thistle lifts a purple crown
Six foot out of the turf,
And the harebell shakes on the windy hill—
O breath of the distant surf!—

The hills look over on the South,
And southward dreams the sea;

And with the sea-breeze hand in hand
Came innocence and she.

Where 'mid the gorse the raspberry
Red for the gatherer springs;
Two children did we stray and talk
Wise, idle, childish things.

She listened with big-lipped surprise,
Breast-deep 'mid flower and spine:

Her skin was like a grape whose veins
Run snow instead of wine.

She knew not those sweet words she spake,
Nor knew her own sweet way;
But there's never a bird, so sweet a song
Thronged in whose throat all day.

Oh, there were flowers in Storrington
On the turf and on the spray;
But the sweetest flower on Sussex hills
Was the Daisy-flower that day!

Her beauty smoothed earth's furrowed face.
She gave me tokens three:—
A look, a word of her winsome mouth,
And a wild raspberry.

A berry red, a guileless look,
A still word,—strings of sand!
And yet they made my wild, wild heart
Fly down to her little hand.

For standing artless as the air
And candid as the skies,
She took the berries with her hand
And the love with her sweet eyes.

The fairest things have fleetest end,
Their scent survives their close:
But the rose's scent is bitterness
To him that loved the rose.

She looked a little wistfully,
Then went her sunshine way:—
The sea's eye had a mist on it,
And the leaves fell from the day.

She went her unremembering way,
She went and left in me
The pang of all the partings gone,
And partings yet to be.

She left me marveling why my soul
Was sad that she was glad;
At all the sadness in the sweet,
The sweetness in the sad.

Still, still I seemed to see her, still
Look up with soft replies,
And take the berries with her hand,
And the love with her lovely eyes.

Nothing begins, and nothing ends,
That is not paid with moan,
For we are born in other's pain,
And perish in our own.

TO A SNOWFLAKE

What heart could have thought you?—
Past our devisal
(O filigree petal!)
Fashioned so purely,
Fragilely, surely,
From what Paradisal
Imagineless metal,
Too costly for cost?
Who hammered you, wrought you,
From argentine vapor?—

“God was my shaper.
Passing surmisal,
He hammered, He wrought me,
From curled silver vapor,
To lust of his mind:—
Thou couldst not have thought me!
So purely, so palely,
Timly, surely,
Mightily, frailly,
Insculped and embossed,
With His hammer of wind,
And His graver of frost.”

AN ARAB LOVE-SONG

The hunched camels of the night<sup>1</sup>
Trouble the bright
And silver waters of the moon.
The Maiden of the Morn will soon
Through Heaven stray and sing,
Star gathering.

<sup>1</sup> Cloud-shapes observed by travelers in the East.

Now while the dark about our loves is strewn,
 Light of my dark, blood of my heart, O come!
 And night will catch her breath up, and be dumb.

Leave thy father, leave thy mother
 And thy brother;
 Leave the black tents of thy tribe apart!
 Am I not thy father and thy brother,
 And thy mother?
 And thou—what needest with thy tribe's black tents
 Who hast the red pavilion of my heart?

ALL'S VAST

O nothing, in this corporal earth of man,
 That to the imminent heaven of his high soul
 Responds with color and with shadow, can
 Lack correlated greatness. If the scroll
 Where thoughts lie fast in spell of hieroglyph
 Be mighty through its mighty inhabitants;
 If God be in His Name; grave potency if
 The sounds unbind of hieratic chants;
 All's vast that vastness means. Nay, I affirm
 Nature is whole in her least things exprest,
 Nor know we with what scope God builds the worm.
 Our towns are copied fragments from our breast;
 And all man's Babylons strive but to impart
 The grandeurs of his Babylonian heart.

EPILOGUE

(from "A Judgment in Heaven")

Heaven, which man's generations draws,
 Nor deviates into replicas,
 Must of as deep diversity
 In judgment as creation be.
 There is no expeditious road
 To pack and label men for God,
 And save them by the barrel-load.
 Some may perchance, with strange surprise,
 Have blundered into Paradise.
 In vasty dusk of life abroad,
 They fondly thought to err from God,
 Nor knew the circle that they trod;
 And, wandering all the night about,
 Found them at morn where they set out.
 Death dawned; Heaven lay in prospect wide:—
 Lo! they were standing by His side!

THE POPPY

(To Monica)

Summer set lip to earth's bosom bare,
 And left the flushed print in a poppy there:
 Like a yawn of fire from the grass it came,
 And the fanning wind puffed it to flapping flame.

With burnt mouth, red like a lion's, it drank
 The blood of the sun as he slaughtered sank,
 And dipped its cup in the purpuree shine
 When the Eastern conduits ran with wine.

Till it grew lethargied with fierce bliss,
 And hot as a swinked gypsy is,
 And drowsed in sleepy savageries,
 With mouth wide a-pout for a sultry kiss.

A child and man paced side by side,
 Treading the skirts of eventide;
 But between the clasp of his hand and hers
 Lay, felt not, twenty withered years.

She turned, with the rout of her dusk South hair,
 And saw the sleeping gypsy there:
 And snatched and snapped it in swift child's whim,
 With—"Keep it, long as you live!"—to him.

And his smile, as nymphs from their laving meres,
 Trembled up from a bath of tears;
 And joy, like a mew sea-rocked apart,
 Tossed on the waves of his troubled heart.

For he saw what she did not see,
 That—as kindled by its own fervency—
 The verge shriveled inward smolderingly:
 And suddenly 'twixt his hand and hers
 He knew the twenty withered years—
 No flower, but twenty shriveled years.

"Was never such thing until this hour,"
 Low to his heart he said; "the flower
 Of sleep brings wakening to me,
 And of oblivion, memory.

"Was never this thing to me," he said,
 "Though with bruised poppies my feet are red!"
 And again to his own heart very low:
 "O child! I love, for I love and know;

"But you, who love nor know at all
 The diverse chambers in Love's guest-hall,
 Where some rise early, few sit long:
 In how differing accents hear the throng
 His great Pentecostal tongue;

"Who know not love from amity,
 Nor my reported self from me;
 A fair fit gift is this, meseems,
 You give—this withering flower of dreams.

"O frankly fickle, and fickly true,
 Do you know what the days will do to you?
 To your love and you what the days will do,
 O frankly fickle, and fickly true?

"You have loved me, Fair, three lives—or days:
 'Twill pass with the passing of my face.
 But where I go, your face goes too,
 To watch lest I play false to you.

"I am but, my sweet, your foster-lover,
 Knowing well when certain years are over
 You vanish from me to another;
 Yet I know, and love, like the foster-mother.

"So, frankly fickle, and fickly true!
 For my brief life-while I take from you
 This token, fair and fit, meseems,
 For me—this withering flower of dreams."

The sleep-flower sways in the wheat its head,
 Heavy with dreams, as that with bread:
 The goodly grain and the sun-flushed sleeper
 The reaper reaps, and Time the reaper.

I hang 'mid men my needless head,
 And my fruit is dreams, as theirs is bread:
 The goodly men and the sun-hazed sleeper
 Time shall reap, but after the reaper
 The world shall glean of me, me the sleeper.

Love, love! your flower of withered dream
 In leavèd rhyme lies safe, I deem,
 Sheltered and shut in a nook of rhyme,
 From the reaper man, and his reaper Time.

Love! I fall into the claws of Time:
 But lasts within a leavèd rhyme
 All that the world of me esteems—
 My withered dreams, my withered dreams.

THE SUN

(from "Ode to the Setting Sun")

Who lit the furnace of the mammoth's heart?
 Who shagged him like Pilatus' ribbèd flanks?
 Who raised the columned ranks
 Of that old pre-diluvian forestry,
 Which like a continent torn oppressed the sea,
 When the ancient heavens did in rains depart,
 While the high-dancèd whirls
 Of the tossed scud made hiss thy drenchèd curls?
 Thou rear'dst the enormous brood;
 Who hast with life imbued
 The lion maned in tawny majesty,
 The tiger velvet-barred,
 The stealthy-stepping pard,
 And the lithe panther's flexous symmetry?

How came the entombèd tree a light-bearer,
 Though sunk in lightless lair?
 Friend of the forgers of earth,
 Mate of the earthquake and thunders volcanic,
 Clasped in the arms of the forces Titanic
 Which rock like a cradle the girth
 Of the ether-hung world;
 Swart son of the swarthy mine,
 When flame on the breath of his nostrils feeds
 How is his countenance half-divine,
 Like thee in thy sanguine weeds?
 Thou gavest him his light,
 Though sepultured in night
 Beneath the dead bones of a perished world;
 Over his prostrate form
 Though cold, and heat, and storm,
 The mountainous wrack of a creation hurled.

Who made the splendid rose
 Saturate with purple glows;
 Cupped to the marge with beauty; a perfume-press
 Whence the wind vintages
 Gushes of warmèd fragrance richer far
 Than all the flavorous ooze of Cyprus' vats?
 Lo, in yon gale which waves her green cymar,
 With dusky cheeks burnt red
 She sways her heavy head,
 Drunk with the must of her own odorousness;
 While in a moted trouble the vexed gnats
 Maze, and vibrate, and tease the noontide hush.
 Who girt dissolved lightnings in the grape?
 Summered the opal with an Irised flush?
 Is it not thou that dost the tulip drape,

And huest the daffodilly,
 Yet who hast snowed the lily,
 And her frail sister, whom the waters name,
 Dost vestal-vesture 'mid the blaze of June,
 Cold as the new-sprung girlhood of the moon
 Ere Autumn's kiss sultry her cheek with flame?
 Thou sway'st thy sceptered beam
 O'er all delight and dream,
 Beauty is beautiful but in thy glance:
 And like a jocund maid
 In garland-flowers arrayed,
 Before thy ark Earth keeps her sacred dance.

A F A L L E N Y E W

It seemed corraliv of the world's great prime,
 Made to un-edge the scythe of Time,
 And last with stateliest rhyme.

No tender Dryad ever did indu
 That rigid chiton of rough yew,
 To fret her white flesh through:

But some god like to those grim Asgard lords,
 Who walk the fables of the hordes
 From Scandinavian fjords,

Upheaved its stubborn girth, and raised unriven,
 Against the whirl-blast and the levin,
 Defiant arms to Heaven.

When doom puffed out the stars, we might have said,
 It would decline its heavy head,
 And see the world to bed.

For this firm yew did from the vassal leas,
 And rain and air, its tributaries,
 Its revenues increase,

And levy impost on the golden sun,
 Take the blind years as they might run,
 And no fate seek or shun.

But now our yew is strook, is fallen—yea,
 Hacked like dull wood of every day
 To this and that, men say.

Never!—To Hades' shadowy shipyards gone,
 Dim barge of Dis, down Acheron
 It drops, or Lethe wan.

Stirred by its fall—poor destined bark of Dis!—
 Along my soul a bruit there is
 Of echoing images,

Reverberations of mortality:
 Spelt backward from its death, to me
 Its life reads saddenedly.

Its breast was hollowed as the tooth of eld;
 And boys, there creeping unbeheld,
 A laughing moment dwelled.

Yet they, within its very heart so crept,
 Reached not the heart that courage kept
 With winds and years beswept.

And in its boughs did close and kindly nest
 The birds, as they within its breast,
 By all its leaves caressed.

But bird nor child might touch by any art
 Each other's or the tree's hid heart,
 A whole God's breadth apart;

The breadth of God, the breadth of death and life!
 Even so, even so, in undreamed strife
 With pulseless Law, the wife,—

The sweetest wife on sweetest marriage-day,—
 Their souls at grapple in mid-way,
 Sweet to her sweet may say:

“I take you to my inmost heart, my true!”
 Ah, fool! but there is one heart you
 Shall never take him to!

The hold that falls not when the town is got,
 The heart's heart, whose immurèd plot
 Hath keys yourself keep not!

Its ports you cannot burst—you are withheld—
 For him that to your listening blood
 Sends precepts as he would.

Its gates are deaf to Love, high summoner;
 Yea, love's great warrant runs not there:
 You are your prisoner.

Yourself are with yourself the sole consortress
 In that unleaguerable fortress;
 It knows you not for portress.

Its keys are at the cincture hung of God;
 Its gates are trepidant to His nod;
 By Him its floors are trod.

And if His feet shall rock those floors in wrath,
 Or blest aspersion sleek His path,
 Is only choice it hath.

Yea, in that ultimate heart's occult abode
 To lie as in an oubliette of God,
 Or in a bower untrod,

Built by a secret Lover for His Spouse;—
 Sole choice is this your life allows,
 Sad tree, whose perishing boughs
 So few birds house!

A COUNSEL OF MODERATION

On him the unpetitioned heavens descend,
 Who heaven on earth proposes not for end;
 The perilous and celestial excess
 Taking with peace, lacking with thankfulness.
 Bliss in extreme befits thee not until Thou'rt not extreme in bliss; be equal still:
 Sweets to be granted think thyself unmeet
 Till thou have learned to hold sweet not too sweet.

This thing not far is he from wise in art
 Who teacheth; nor who doth, from wise in heart.

ANY SAINT

(Condensed)

His shoulder did I hold
 Too high that I, o'erbold
 Weak one,
 Should lean thereon.

But He a little hath Declined His stately path
 And my Feet set more high;

That the slack arm may reach
 His shoulder, and faint speech
 Stir

His unwithering hair.

And bolder now and bolder
 I lean upon that shoulder,
 So dear
 He is and near:

And with His aureole
 The tresses of my soul
 Are blent
 In wished content.

Yea, this too gentle Lover
 Hath flattering words to move her
 To pride
 By His sweet side.

Ah, Love! somewhat let be—
 Lest my humility
 Grow weak
 When Thou dost speak.

Rebate Thy tender suit,
 Lest to herself impute
 Some worth
 Thy bride of earth!

A maid too easily
 Conceits herself to be
 Those things
 Her lover sings;

And being straitly wooed,
 Believes herself the Good
 And Fair
 He seeks in her.

Turn something of Thy look,
And fear me with rebuke,
That I
May timorously

Take tremors in Thy arms,
And with contrivèd charms
Allure
A love unsure.

Not to me, not to me,
Builded so flawfully,
O God,
Thy humbling laud!

Not to this man, but Man,—
Universe in a span;
Point
Of the spheres conjoint;

In whom eternally
Thou, Light, dost focus Thee!—
Didst pave
The way o' the wave.

Thou meaning, couldst thou see,
Of all which dafteth thee;
So plain,
It mocks thy pain.

Stone of the Law indeed,
Thine own self couldst thou read;
Thy bliss
Within thee is.

Compost of Heaven and mire,
Slow foot and swift desire!
Lo,
To have Yes, choose No;

To feel thyself and be
His dear nonentity—
Caught
Beyond human thought

In the thunder-sput of Him,
Until thy being dim,
And be
Dead deathlessly.

Stoop, stoop; for thou dost fear
The nettle's wrathful spear,
So slight
Art thou of might!

Rise; for Heaven hath no frown
When thou to thee pluck'st down,
Strong clod!
The neck of God.

T H E   H O U N D   O F   H E A V E N

I fled Him, down the nights and down the days;
I fled Him, down the arches of the years;
I fled Him, down the labyrinthine ways
Of my own mind; and in the mist of tears
I hid from Him, and under running laughter.

Up vistacl hopes I sped;
And shot, precipitated,
Adown Titanic glooms of chasmèd fears,
From those strong Feet that followed, followed after.
But with unhurrying chase,
And unperturbèd pace,
Deliberate speed, majestic instancy,
They beat—and a Voice beat
More instant than the Feet—
“All things betray thee, who betrayest Me.”

I pleaded, outlaw-wise,
By many a hearted casement, curtained red,
Trellised with intertwining charities
(For, though I knew His love Who followèd,

Yet was I sore adread
 Lest, having Him, I must have naught beside);
 But, if one little casement parted wide,
     The gust of His approach would clash it to:
     Fear wist not to evade, as Love wist to pursue.
 Across the margent of the world I fled,
     And troubled the gold gateways of the stars,
     Smiting for shelter on their clangèd bars;
     Fretted to dulcet jars
 And silvèrn chatter the pale ports o' the moon.
 I said to Dawn: Be sudden—to Eve: Be soon;
     With thy young skiey blossoms heap me over
     From this tremendous Lover—
 Float thy vague veil about me, lest He see!
 I tempted all His servitors, but to find
 My own betrayal in their constancy,
 In faith to Him their fickleness to me,
     Their traitorous trueness, and their loyal deceit.
 To all swift things for swiftness did I sue;
 Clung to the whistling mane of every wind.
     But whether they swept, smoothly fleet,
     The long savannahs of the blue;
     Or whether, Thunder-driven,
         They clanged his chariot 'thwart a heaven,
 Plashy with flying lightnings round the spurn o' their feet:—
 Fear wist not to evade as Love wist to pursue.
     Still with unhurrying chase,
     And unperturbèd pace,
 Deliberate speed, majestic instance,
     Came on the following Feet,
     And a Voice above their beat—
         “Naught shelters thee, who wilt not shelter Me.”

I sought no more that after which I strayed
     In face of man or maid;
 But still within the little children's eyes
     Seems something, something that replies,
They at least are for me, surely for me!
 I turned me to them very wistfully;
 But just as their young eyes grew sudden fair
     With dawning answers there,
 Their angel plucked them from me by the hair.
 “Come then, ye other children, Nature's—share
 With me” (said I) “your delicate fellowship;
     Let me greet you lip to lip,
     Let me twine with you caresses,
     Wantoning
     With our Lady-Mother's vagrant tresses.
     Banqueting

With her in her wind-walled palace,
 Underneath her azured dais,
 Quaffing, as your taintless way is,
 From a chalice

Lucent-weeping out of the dayspring."

So it was done:

I in their delicate fellowship was one—
 Drew the bolt of Nature's secracies.

I knew all the swift importings
 On the willful face of skies;
 I knew how the clouds arise
 Spumèd of the wild sea-snortings;

All that's born or dies

Rose and drooped with; made them shapers
 Of mine own moods, or wailful or divine;
 With them joyed and was bereaven.

I was heavy with the even,
 When she lit her glimmering tapers
 Round the day's dead sanctities.
 I laughed in the morning's eyes.

I triumphed and I saddened with all weather,
 Heaven and I wept together,
 And its sweet tears were salt with mortal mine;

Against the red throb of its sunset-heart
 I laid my own to beat,

And share commingling heat;

But not by that, by that, was eased my human smart.
 In vain my tears were wet on Heaven's gray cheek.
 For ah! we know not what each other says,

These things and I; in sound I speak—

Their sound is but their stir, they speak by silences.
 Nature, poor stepdame, cannot slake my drouth;

Let her, if she would owe me,

Drop yon blue bosom-veil of sky, and show me
 The breasts o' her tenderness:

Never did any milk of hers once bless

My thirsting mouth.

Nigh and nigh draws the chase,

With unperturbèd pace,

Deliberate speed, majestic instancy;

And past those noisèd Feet

A Voice comes yet more fleet—

"Lo! naught contents thee, who content'st not Me."

Naked I wait Thy love's uplifted stroke!

My harness piece by piece Thou hast hewn from me,

And smitten me to my knee;

I am defenseless utterly.

I slept, methinks, and woke,

And, slowly gazing, find me stripped in sleep.
 In the rash lustihead of my young powers,
     I shook the pillarng hours
 And pulld my life upon me; grimed with smears,
 I stand amid the dust o' the mounded years—
 My mangled youth lies dead beneath the heap.
 My days have crackled and gone up in smoke,
 Have puffed and burst as sun-starts on a stream.

Yea, faileth now even dream
 The dreamer, and the lute the lutamist;
 Even the linked fantasies, in whose blossomy twist
 I swung the earth a trinket at my wrist,
 Are yielding; cords of all too weak account
 For earth with heavy griefs so overplused.

Ah! is Thy love indeed
 A weed, albeit an amaranthine weed,
 Suffering no flowers except its own to mount?

Ah! must—
 Designer infinite!—
 Ah! must Thou char the wood ere Thou canst limn with it?
 My freshness spent its wavering shower i' the dust;
 And now my heart is as a broken fount,
 Wherin tear-dripping stagnate, spilt down ever

From the dark thoughts that shiver
 Upon the sighful branches of my mind.

Such is; what is to be?
 The pulp so bitter, how shall taste the rind?
 I dimly guess what Time in mists confounds;
 Yet ever and anon a trumpet sounds
 From the hid battlements of Eternity;
 Those shaken mists a space unsettle, then
 Round the half-glimpsèd turrets slowly wash again.

But not ere him who summoneth
 I first have seen, enwound
 With glooming robes purpureal, cypress-crowned;
 His name I know, and what his trumpet saith.
 Whether man's heart or life it be which yields

Thee harvest, must Thy harvest-fields
 Be dunged with rotten death?

Now of that long pursuit
 Comes on at hand the bruit;
 That Voice is round me like a bursting sea:
     “And is thy earth so marred,
     Shattered in shard on shard?
 Lo, all things fly thee, for thou fliest Me!
     Strange, piteous, futile thing!

Wherefore should any set thee love apart?
 Seeing none but I makes much of naught” (He said),
 “And human love needs human meriting:
     How hast thou merited—

Of all man's clotted clay the dingiest clot?
 Alack, thou knowest not
 How little worthy of any love thou art!
 Whom wilt thou find to love ignoble thee
 Save Me, save only Me?
 All which I took from thee I did but take,
 Not for thy harms,
 But just that thou might'st seek it in My arms.
 All which thy child's mistake
 Fancies as lost, I have stored for thee at home:
 Rise, clasp My hand, and come!"

Halts by me that footfall:
 Is my gloom, after all,
 Shade of His hand, outstretched caressingly?
 "Ah, fondest, blindest, weakest,
 I am He Whom thou sekest!
 Thou dravest love from thee, who dravest Me."

FROM "GRACE OF THE WAY"

Now of that vision I, bereaven,
 This knowledge keep, that may not dim:
 Short arm needs man to reach to Heaven,
 So ready is Heaven to stoop to him.

TO OLIVIA

I fear to love thee, Sweet, because
 Love's the ambassador of loss;
 White flake of childhood, clinging so
 To my soiled raiment, thy shy snow
 At tenderest touch will shrink and go.
 Love me not, delightful child.
 My heart, by many snares beguiled,
 Has grown timorous and wild.
 It would fear thee not at all,
 Wert thou not so harmless-small.
 Because thy arrows, not yet dire,
 Are still unbarbed with destined fire,
 I fear thee more than hadst thou stood
 Full-panoplied in womanhood.

"IN NO STRANGE LAND"<sup>1</sup>

O world invisible, we view thee,
 O world intangible, we touch thee,

O world unknowable, we know thee,
 Inapprehensible, we clutch thee!

Does the fish soar to find the ocean,
 The eagle plunge to find the air—
 That we ask of the stars in motion
 If they have rumor of thee there?

Not where the wheeling systems darken,
 And our benumbed conceiving soars!—
 The drift of pinions, would we hearken,
 Beats at our own clay-shuttered doors.

The angels keep their ancient places;
 Turn but a stone, and start a wing!
 'Tis ye, 'tis your estrangèd faces,
 That miss the many-splendored thing.

But, when so sad thou canst not sadder,
 Cry;—and upon thy so sore loss
 Shall shine the traffic of Jacob's ladder
 Pitched betwixt Heaven and Charing Cross

Yea, in the night, my Soul, my daughter,
 Cry,—clinging Heaven by the hem;
 And lo, Christ walking on the water
 Not of Gennesareth, but Thames!

<sup>1</sup> These verses, unpublished during his lifetime, were found among Francis Thompson's papers after his death.

ENVLOY

Go, songs, for ended is our brief, sweet play;
 Go, children of swift joy and tardy sorrow:
 And some are sung, and that was yesterday,
 And some unsung, and that may be tomorrow.

Go forth; and if it be o'er stony way,
 Old joy can lend what newer grief must borrow:
 And it was sweet, and that was yesterday,
 And sweet is sweet, though purchased with sorrow.

Go, songs, and come not back from your far way:
 And if men ask you why ye smile and sorrow,
 Tell them ye grieve, for your hearts know Today,
 Tell them ye smile, for your eyes know Tomorrow.

A. E. Housman

A(LFRED) E(DWARD) HOUSMAN was born March 26, 1859, and educated at Oxford where he received his M.A. He was a Higher Division Clerk in the British Patent Office for ten years (1882-1892), leaving the office to become a teacher. Professor of Latin at University College, London, from 1892 to 1911, at Cambridge after 1911, one of the great classical scholars of his day, he died April 30, 1936.

He is known to the world at large as the author of A Shropshire Lad, his entire non-classical output consisted of only three small volumes of poems, published nearly thirty years apart. The popularity of the first of these was exceeded only by Fitzgerald's Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám. The extraordinary success of both Fitzgerald and Housman is the more curious since both voice a philosophy compounded of pessimism and defeat. Though obviously not Oriental, Housman's fatalism is the darker of the two. Fitzgerald escapes from a world of frustration to a world of sensation; Housman does not even make the gesture of escape. Khayyám's remedy is drink; Housman's is suicide. Such concepts, dismal at the core, could never have found favor had they not been expressed in peculiarly glamorous music. Both Fitzgerald and Housman wrote with such compelling grace that, for the moment, they make darkness seem desirable. It is, however, doubtful whether readers pay much heed to the central philosophy; they are carried on if not convinced by the brisk and brilliant measures.

A Shropshire Lad is limited in range and idea. Nature is not kind; lovers are untrue; men cheat and girls betray; lads, though lightfoot, drink and die; an occasional drum calls to a conflict without reason, a struggle without hope. Nevertheless, courage is dominant, declared over and over in such poems as "Reveillé," "When Smoke Stood Up from Ludlow," "The Chestnut Casts His Flambeaux," and Housman's bitter but fearless philosophy reaches the heights in his "Epilogue."

Purely as writing, however, A Shropshire Lad is incomparable. Owing nothing to any poet of his own generation and showing few influences other than Heine's, Housman's verse is condensed to the uttermost, stripped of every superfluous ornament, pared and precise. Not the least of his triumph is the mingling of pungent humor and poignance. Possibly the outstanding virtue is the seemingly artless but extraordinarily skillful simplicity of tone. This is song sharpened, acid-flavored, yet always song.

A Shropshire Lad was first published in 1896 when Housman was thirty-seven, although several of the lyrics were written when the poet was younger. After a silence of twenty-six years, there appeared his Last Poems (1922). The title is significant, Housman saying, "I publish these poems, few though they are, because it is not likely that I shall ever be impelled to write much more. I can no longer expect to be revisited by the continuous excitement under which in the early months of 1895 I wrote the greater part of my other book, nor indeed could I well sustain it if it came." Most of the second volume belongs to an earlier period, to the years between 1895 and 1910. Here in Last Poems the Shropshire lad lives again to pipe his mournful-merry tunes; here again the rose-lipt maiden kisses carelessly as ever, and the heart out of the bosom is given in vain. Here Wenlock Edge is still in trouble, young men shoulder the sky and face the hills whose comfort cannot delay "the beautiful and deathstruck year." The pessimism assumes a half-careless, half-heroic note.

A Shropshire Lad sounded the note of a wry surrender:

Be still, be still, my soul; it is but for a season:
Let us endure an hour and see injustice done.

Aye, look, high heaven and earth ail from the prime foundation;
All thoughts to rive the heart are here, and all in vain:
Horror and scorn and hate and fear and indignation—
Oh, why did I awake? When shall I sleep again?

And in Last Poems the no less disillusioned spirit cries:

We of a certainty are not the first
Have sat in taverns while the tempest hurled
Their hopeful plans to emptiness, and cursed
Whatever brute or blackguard made the world.

The rhythms of Last Poems are a trifle slower, the cadences somewhat more acrid, but Housman's command of his instrument is still unfaltering. Some critics have pointed out Housman's "echoes" and John Sparrow, in The Nineteenth Century, has traced certain general resemblances and a few specific phrases to earlier writers, especially Shakespeare, Heine, and the Greek lyrists. But Housman's touch is so definitely his own, his accent so individualized that the occasional (and usually intentional) allusions are absorbed in the English poet's idiom. Who else could modernize the story of Jesus as concisely as Housman has done in "The Carpenter's Son"; who but he could have turned such simple material as "Loveliest of Trees" to the words and music of possibly the finest lyric in the English language? Each reader will have his favorites, and those admirers who know the two volumes almost by heart will even resent learning that Thomas Hardy considered "Is My Team Ploughing" one of the most dramatic short poems in the language.

A posthumous More Poems (1936) was edited by Housman's brother Laurence; this and the preceding volumes were assembled, together with some hitherto unpublished verse, in a comprehensive Collected Poems (1940). The introductions to his editions of Manilius, Juvenal, and Lucan reveal Housman's passion for chiseled form and his contempt for careless work. His scholarly papers are edged with sarcasm and bristle with cold contempt; he wrote of a certain teacher, "When X has acquired a scrap of misinformation he cannot rest till he has imparted it." A similar tone, trenchant and controversial, is heard in The Name and Nature of Poetry (1933), a lecture which conceals as much about the process of creation as it reveals. For example, when asked to define poetry Housman replied, "I could no more define poetry than a terrier can define a rat, but I thought we both recognized the object by the symptoms which it provokes in us. . . . Experience has taught me, when I am shaving, to keep watch over my thoughts, because if a line of poetry strays into my memory, my skin bristles so that the razor ceases to act." But it is as a poet that Housman will live, and his verse already seems marked for permanence. A dozen or more of his poems have the authority that comes only with age and tradition. They are fastidious; they are small; they are limited in range, restricted in outlook, and sometimes inflexible because of their overdisciplined line. But they haunt the mind, and many of them are as nearly perfect as lyrics can hope to be.

The most informative as well as the most informal account of Housman's life was written by Laurence Housman and entitled My Brother, A. E. Housman.

RÉVEILLE

Wake: the silver dusk returning
     Up the beach of darkness brims,
     And the ship of sunrise burning
         Strands upon the eastern rims.

Wake: the vaulted shadow shatters,
     Trampled to the floor it spanned,
     And the tent of night in tatters
         Straws the sky-paviloned land.

Up, lad, up, 'tis late for lying:
     Hear the drums of morning play;
     Hark, the empty highways crying
         "Who'll beyond the hills away?"

Towns and countries woo together,
     Forelands beacon, belfries call;
     Never lad that trod on leather
         Lived to feast his heart with all.

Up, lad: thews that lie and cumber
     Sunlit pallets never thrive;
     Morns abed and daylight slumber
         Were not meant for man alive.

Clay lies still, but blood's a rover;
 Breath's a ware that will not keep.
 Up, lad: when the journey's over
 There'll be time enough to sleep.

WITH RUE MY HEART IS LADEN

With rue my heart is laden
 For golden friends I had,
 For many a rose-lit maiden
 And many a lightfoot lad.

By brooks too broad for leaping
 The lightfoot boys are laid;
 The rose-lit girls are sleeping
 In fields where roses fade.

INTO MY HEART

Into my heart an air that kill~
 From yon far country blows:
 What are those blue remembered hills,
 What spires, what farms are those?

That is the land of lost content,
 I see it shining plain:
 The happy highways where I went
 And cannot come again.

WHEN I WAS ONE-AND-TWENTY

When I was one-and-twenty
 I heard a wise man say,
 "Give crowns and pounds and guineas
 But not your heart away;
 Give pearls away and rubies
 But keep your fancy free."
 But I was one-and-twenty,
 No use to talk to me.

When I was one-and-twenty
 I heard him say again,
 "The heart out of the bosom
 Was never given in vain;
 'Tis paid with sighs a-plenty
 And sold for endless rue."
 And I am two-and-twenty,
 And oh, 'tis true, 'tis true.

TO AN ATHLETE DYING YOUNG

The time you won your town the race
 We chaired you through the market-place;
 Man and boy stood cheering by,
 And home we brought you shoulder-high.

Today, the road all runners come,
 Shoulder-high we bring you home,
 And set you at your threshold down,
 Townsman of a stiller town.

Smart lad, to slip betimes away
From fields where glory does not stay,
And early though the laurel grows
It withers quicker than the rose.

Eyes the shady night has shut
Cannot see the record cut,
And silence sounds no worse than cheers
After earth has stopped the ears:

Now you will not swell the rout
Of lads that wore their honors out,
Runners whom renown outran
And the name died before the man.

So set, before its echoes fade,
The fleet foot on the sill of shade,
And hold to the low lintel up
The still-defended challenge-cup.

And round that early-laureled head
Will flock to gaze the strengthless dead,
And find unwithered on its curls
The garland briefer than a girl's.

LOVELIEST OF TREES

Loveliest of trees, the cherry now
Is hung with bloom along the bough,
And stands about the woodland ride
Wearing white for Eastertide.

Now, of my threescore years and ten,
Twenty will not come again,
And take from seventy springs a score,
It only leaves me fifty more.

And since to look at things in bloom
Fifty springs are little room,
About the woodlands I will go
To see the cherry hung with snow.

X IS MY TEAM PLOUGHING

"Is my team ploughing,
That I used to drive
And hear the harness jingle
When I was man alive?"

Aye, the horses trample,
The harness jingles now;
No change though you lie under
The land you used to plough.

"Is football playing
Along the river shore,
With lads to chase the leather,
Now I stand up no more?"

Aye, the ball is flying,
The lads play heart and soul;
The goal stands up, the keeper
Stands up to keep the goal.

"Is my girl happy,
That I thought hard to leave,
And has she tired of weeping
As she lies down at eve?"

Aye, she lies down lightly,
She lies not down to weep:
Your girl is well contented.
Be still, my lad, and sleep.

"Is my friend hearty,
Now I am thin and pine;
And has he found to sleep in
A better bed than mine?"

Aye, lad, I lie easy,
I lie as lads would choose;
I cheer a dead man's sweetheart.
Never ask me whose.

WHEN SMOKE STOOD UP FROM LUDLOW

When smoke stood up from Ludlow,
And mist blew off from Teme,
And blithe afield to ploughing
Against the morning beam
I strode beside my team,

The blackbird in the coppice
Looked out to see me stride,
And hearkened as I whistled
The trampling team beside,
And fluted and replied:

"Lie down, lie down, young yeoman;
What use to rise and rise?
Rise man a thousand mornings
Yet down at last he lies,
And then the man is wise."

I heard the tune he sang me,
And spied his yellow bill;

I picked a stone and aimed it
And threw it with a will:
And then the bird was still.

Then my soul within me
Took up the blackbird's strain,
And still beside the horses
Along the dewy lane
It sang the song again:

"Lie down, lie down, young yeoman;
The sun moves always west;
The road one treads to labor
Will lead one home to rest,
And that will be the best."

WHEN I WATCH THE LIVING MEET

When I watch the living meet,
And the moving pageant file
Warm and breathing through the street
Where I lodge a little while,

If the heats of hate and lust
In the house of flesh are strong,
Let me mind the house of dust
Where my sojourn shall be long.

In the nation that is not
Nothing stands that stood before;
There revenges are forgot,
And the hater hates no more;

Lovers lying two and two
Ask not whom they sleep beside,
And the bridegroom all night through
Never turns him to the bride.

OH, SEE HOW THICK THE GOLDCUP FLOWERS

Oh, see how thick the goldcup flowers
Are lying in field and lane,
With dandelions to tell the hours
That never are told again,
Oh, may I squire you round the meads
And pick you posies gay?
—"Twill do no harm to take my arm.
"You may, young man, you may."

Ah, spring was sent for lass and lad,
"Tis now the blood runs gold,
And man and maid had best be glad
Before the world is old.
What flowers today may flower tomorrow,
But never as good as new.
—Suppose I wound my arm right round.
"Tis true, young man, 'tis true."

Some lads there are, 'tis shame to say,
That only court to thieve,
And once they bear the bloom away
"Tis little enough they leave.
Then keep your heart for men like me
And safe from trustless chaps.
My love is true and all for you.
"Perhaps, young man, perhaps."

Oh, look in my eyes then, can you doubt?
—Why, 'tis a mile from town.
How green the grass is all about!
We might as well sit down.
—Ah, life, what is it but a flower?
Why must true lovers sigh?
Be kind, have pity, my own, my pretty,—
"Good-by, young man, good-by."

THE LADS IN THEIR HUNDREDS

The lads in their hundreds to Ludlow come in for the fair,
There's men from the barn and the forge and the mill and the fold,
The lads for the girls and the lads for the liquor are there,
And there with the rest are the lads that will never be old.

There's chaps from the town and the field and the till and the cart,
And many to count are the stalwart, and many the brave,
And many the handsome of face and the handsome of heart,
And few that will carry their looks or their truth to the grave.

I wish one could know them, I wish there were tokens to tell
 The fortunate fellows that now you can never discern;
 And then one could talk with them friendly and wish them farewell
 And watch them depart on the way that they will not return.

But now you may stare as you like and there's nothing to scan;
 And brushing your elbow unguessed-at and not to be told
 They carry back bright to the coiner the mintage of man,
 The lads that will die in their glory and never be old.

WHEN THE LAD FOR LONGING SIGHES

When the lad for longing sighs,
 Mute and dull of cheer and pale,
 If at death's own door he lies,
 Maiden, you can heal his ail.

Lovers' ills are all to buy:
 The wan look, the hollow tone,
 The hung head, the sunken eye,
 You can have them for your own.

Buy them, buy them: eve and morn
 Lovers' ills are all to sell.
 Then you can lie down forlorn;
 But the lover will be well.

THE IMMORTAL PART

When I meet the morning beam,
 Or lay me down at night to dream,
 I hear my bones within me say,
 "Another night, another day."

"When shall this slough of sense be cast,
 This dust of thoughts be laid at last,
 The man of flesh and soul be slain
 And the man of bone remain?

"This tongue that talks, these lungs that shout,
 These thews that hustle us about,
 This brain that fills the skull with schemes,
 And its humming hive of dreams,—

"These today are proud in power
 And lord it in their little hour:
 The immortal bones obey control
 Of dying flesh and dying soul.

"Tis long till eve and morn are gone:
 Slow the endless night comes on,
 And late to fullness grows the birth
 That shall last as long as earth.

"Wanderers eastward, wanderers west,
 Know you why you cannot rest?
 'Tis that every mother's son
 Travails with a skeleton.

"Lie down in the bed of dust;
 Bear the fruit that bear you must;
 Bring the eternal seed to light,
 And morn is all the same as night.

"Rest you so from trouble sore,
 Fear the heat o' the sun no more,
 Nor the snowing winter wild,
 Now you labor not with child.

"Empty vessel, garment cast,
 We that wore you long shall last.
 —Another night, another day."
 So my bones within me say.

Therefore they shall do my will
 Today while I am master still,
 And flesh and soul, now both are strong,
 Shall hale the sullen slaves along,

Before this fire of sense decay,
 This smoke of thought blow clean away,
 And leave with ancient night alone
 The steadfast and enduring bone.

ON WENLOCK EDGE

On Wenlock Edge the wood's in trouble;
 His forest fleeces the Wrekin heaves;
 The gale, it plies the saplings double,
 And thick on Severn snow the leaves.

"Twould blow like this through hold and hangar
When Uricon the city stood:
'Tis the old wind in the old anger,
But then it threshed another wood.

Then, 'twas before my time, the Roman
At yonder heaving hill would stare:
The blood that warms an English yeoman,
The thoughts that hurt him, they were there.

There, like the wind through woods in riot,
Through him the gale of life blew high;
The tree of man was never quiet:
Then 'twas the Roman, now 'tis I.

The gale, it plies the saplings double,
It blows so hard, 'twill soon be gone:
Today the Roman and his trouble
Are ashes under Uricon.

OH, WHEN I WAS IN LOVE WITH YOU

Oh, when I was in love with you,
Then I was clean and brave,
And miles around the wonder grew
How well did I behave.

And now the fancy passes by,
And nothing will remain,
And miles around they'll say that I
Am quite myself again.

ALONG THE FIELD AS WE CAME BY

Along the field as we came by
A year ago, my love and I,
The aspen over stile and stone
Was talking to itself alone.
"Oh, who are these that kiss and pass?
A country lover and his lass;
Two lovers looking to be wed;
And time shall put them both to bed,
But she shall lie with earth above,
And he beside another love."

And sure enough beneath the tree
There walks another love with me,
And overhead the aspen heaves
Its rainy-sounding silver leaves;

And I spell nothing in their stir,
But now perhaps they speak to her,
And plain for her to understand
They talk about a time at hand
When I shall sleep with clover clad,
And she beside another lad.

ON THE IDLE HILL OF SUMMER

On the idle hill of summer,
Sleepy with the flow of streams,
Far I hear the steady drummer
Drumming like a noise in dreams.

Far and near and low and louder
On the roads of earth go by,
Dear to friends and food for powder,
Soldiers marching, all to die.

East and west on fields forgotten
Bleach the bones of comrades slain,
Lovely lads and dead and rotten;
None that go return again.

Far the calling bugles hollo,
High the screaming fife replies,
Gay the files of scarlet follow:
Woman bore me, I will rise.

BREDON HILL

In summertime on Bredon
The bells they sound so clear;
Round both the shires they ring them
In steeples far and near,
A happy noise to hear.

Here of a Sunday morning
My love and I would lie,
And see the colored counties,
And hear the larks so high
About us in the sky.

The bells would ring to call her
In valleys miles away:
"Come all to church, good people;
Good people, come and pray."
But here my love would stay.

And I would turn and answer
Among the springing thyme,
"Oh, peal upon our wedding,

And we will hear the chime,
And come to church in time."

But when the snows at Christmas
On Bredon top were strown,
My love rose up so early
And stole out unbeknown
And went to church alone.

They tolled the one bell only,
Groom there was none to see,
The mourners followed after,
And so to church went she,
And would not wait for me.

The bells they sound on Bredon,
And still the steeples hum.
"Come all to church, good people,—"
Oh, noisy bells, be dumb;
I hear you, I will come.

L A N C E R

I 'listed at home for a lancer,
Oh who would not sleep with the brave?
I 'listed at home for a lancer
To ride on a horse to my grave.

And over the seas we were bidden
A country to take and to keep;
And far with the brave I have ridden,
And now with the brave I shall sleep.

For round me the men will be lying
That learned me the way to behave,
And showed me my business of dying:
'Oh who would not sleep with the brave?'

They ask and there is not an answer;
Says I, I will 'list for a lancer,
Oh who would not sleep with the brave?

And I with the brave shall be sleeping
At ease on my mattress of loam,
When back from their taking and keeping
The squadron is riding at home.

The wind with the plumes will be playing,
The girls will stand watching them wave,
And eyeing my comrades and saying
Oh who would not sleep with the brave?

They ask and there is not an answer;
Says you, I will 'list for a lancer,
Oh who would not sleep with the brave?

THE CHESTNUT CASTS HIS FLAMBEAUX, AND THE FLOWERS

The chestnut casts his flambeaux, and the flowers
Stream from the hawthorn on the wind away,
The doors clap to, the pane is blind with showers.
Pass me the can, lad; there's an end of May.

There's one spoilt spring to scant our mortal lot,
One season ruined of our little store.
May will be fine next year as like as not:
Oh, aye, but then we shall be twenty-four.

We for a certainty are not the first
Have sat in taverns while the tempest hurled
Their hopeful plans to emptiness, and cursed
Whatever brute and blackguard made the world.

It is in truth iniquity on high
To cheat our sentenced souls of aught they crave,
And mar the merriment as you and I
Fare on our long fool's errand to the grave.

Iniquity it is; but pass the can.
My lad, no pair of kings our mothers bore;
Our only portion is the estate of man:
We want the moon, but we shall get no more.

If here today the cloud of thunder lours
 Tomorrow it will hie on far behests;
 The flesh will grieve on other bones than ours
 Soon, and the soul will mourn in other breasts.

The troubles of our proud and angry dust
 Are from eternity, and shall not fail.
 Bear them we can, and if we can we must.
 Shoulder the sky, my lad, and drink your ale.

EIGHT O'CLOCK

He stood, and heard the steeple
 Sprinkle the quarters on the morning town.
 One, two, three, four, to market-place and people
 It tossed them down.

Strapped, noosed, nighing his hour,
 He stood and counted them and cursed his luck;
 And then the clock collected in the tower
 Its strength, and struck.

EPILOGUE

"Terence, this is stupid stuff;
 You eat your victuals fast enough;
 There can't be much amiss, 'tis clear,
 To see the rate you drink your beer.
 But oh, good Lord, the verse you make,
 It gives a chap the belly-ache.
 The cow, the old cow, she is dead;
 It sleeps well, the horned head:
 We poor lads, 'tis our turn now
 To hear such tunes as killed the cow.
 Pretty friendship 'tis to rhyme
 Your friends to death before their time
 Moping melancholy mad:
 Come, pipe a tune to dance to, lad."

Why, if 'tis dancing you would be,
 There's brisker pipes than poetry.
 Say, for what were hop-yards meant,
 Or why was Burton built on Trent?
 Oh, many a peer of England brews
 Livelier liquor than the Muse,
 And malt does more than Milton can
 To justify God's ways to man.
 Ale, man, ale's the stuff to drink
 For fellows whom it hurts to think:
 Look into the pewter pot
 To see the world as the world's not.

And faith, 'tis pleasant till 'tis past:
 The mischief is that 'twill not last.
 Oh, I have been to Ludlow fair
 And left my necktie God knows where,
 And carried half way home, or near,
 Pints and quarts of Ludlow beer:
 Then the world seemed none so bad,
 And I myself a sterling lad;
 And down in lovely muck I've lain,
 Happy till I woke again.
 Then I saw the morning sky:
 Heigho, the tale was all a lie;
 The world, it was the old world yet,
 I was I, my things were wet,
 And nothing now remained to do
 But begin the game ancw.

Therefore, since the world has still
 Much good, but much less good than ill,
 And while the sun and moon endure
 Luck's a chance, but trouble's sure,
 I'd face it as a wise man would,
 And train for ill and not for good.
 'Tis true, the stuff I bring for sale
 Is not so brisk a brew as ale:
 Out of a stem that scored the hand
 I wrung it in a weary land.
 But take it: if the smack is sour,
 The better for the embittered hour;

It should do good to heart and head
When your soul is in my soul's stead;
And I will friend you, if I may,
In the dark and cloudy day.

There was a king reigned in the East:
There, when kings will sit to feast,
They get their fill before they think
With poisoned meat and poisoned drink.
He gathered all that springs to birth
From the many-venomed earth;
First a little, thence to more,
He sampled all her killing store;
And easy, smiling, seasoned sound,
Sate the king when healths went round.
They put arsenic in his meat
And stared aghast to watch him eat;
They poured strychnine in his cup
And shook to see him drink it up:
They shook, they stared as white's their shirt:
Them it was their poison hurt.
—I tell the tale that I heard told.
Mithridates, he died old.

OTHERS, I AM NOT THE FIRST

Others, I am not the first,
Have willed more mischief than they durst:
If in the breathless night I too
Shiver now, 'tis nothing new.

More than I, if truth were told,
Have stood and sweated hot and cold,
And through their reins in ice and fire
Fear contended with desire.

Argued once like me were they,
But I like them shall win my way
Lastly to the bed of mould
Where there's neither heat nor cold.

But from my grave across my brow
Plays no wind of healing now,
And fire and ice within me fight
Beneath the suffocating night.

THE CARPENTER'S SON

Here the hangman stops his cart:
Now the best of friends must part
Fare you well, for ill fare I:
Live, lads, and I will die.

"Oh, at home had I but stayed
'Prenticed to my father's trade,
Had I stuck to plane and adze,
I had not been lost, my lads.

"Then I might have built perhaps
Gallows-trees for other chaps,
Never dangled on my own,
Had I but left ill alone.

"Now, you see, they hang me high,
And the people passing by
Stop to shake their fists and curse;
So 'tis come from ill to worse.

"Here hang I, and right and left
Two poor fellows hang for theft:
All the same's the luck we prove,
Though the midmost hangs for love.

"Comrades all, that stand and gaze,
Walk henceforth in other ways;
See my neck and save your own:
Comrades all, leave ill alone.

"Make some day a decent end,
Shrewder fellows than your friend
Fare you well, for ill fare I:
Live, lads, and I will die."

BE STILL, MY SOUL, BE STILL

Be still, my soul, be still; the arms you bear are brittle,
Earth and high heaven are fixt of old and founded strong.
Think rather,—call to thought, if now you grieve a little,
The days when we had rest, O soul, for they were long.

Men loved unkindness then, but lightless in the quarry
I slept and saw not; tears fell down, I did not mourn;
Sweat ran and blood sprang out and I was never sorry:
Then it was well with me, in days ere I was born.

Now, and I muse for why and never find the reason,
 I pace the earth, and drink the air, and feel the sun.
 Be still, be still, my soul; it is but for a season:
 Let us endure an hour and see injustice done.

Ay, look: high heaven and earth ail from the prime foundation;
 All thoughts to rive the heart are here, and all are vain:
 Horror and scorn and hate and fear and indignation—
 Oh, why did I awake? When shall I sleep again?

FROM FAR, FROM EVE

From far, from eve and morning
 And yon twelve-winded sky,
 The stuff of life to knit me
 Blew hither: here am I.

Now—for a breath I tarry
 Nor yet disperse apart—
 Take my hand quick and tell me,
 What have you in your heart.

Speak now, and I will answer;
 How shall I help you, say;
 Ere to the wind's twelve quarters
 I take my endless way.

I HOED AND TRENCHED

I hoed and trenched and weeded,
 And took the flowers to fair:
 I brought them home unheeded;
 The hue was not the wear.

So up and down I sow them
 For lads like me to find,
 When I shall lie below them,
 A dead man out of mind.

THE LAWS OF GOD, THE LAWS OF MAN

The laws of God, the laws of man,
 He may keep that will and can;
 Not I: let God and man decree
 Laws for themselves and not for me;
 And if my ways are not as theirs
 Let them mind their own affairs.
 Their deed I judge and much condemn,
 Yet when did I make laws for them?
 Please yourselves, say I, and they Need only look the other way.
 But no, they will not; they must still Wrest their neighbour to their will,

Some seeds the birds devour,
 And some the season mars,
 But here and there will flower
 The solitary stars,

And fields will yearly bear them
 As light-leaved spring comes on,
 And luckless lads will wear them
 When I am dead and gone.

THE ISLE OF PORTLAND

The star-filled seas are smooth tonight
 From France to England strown;
 Black towers above the Portland light
 The felon-quarried stone.

On yonder island, not to rise,
 Never to stir forth free,
 Far from his folk a dead lad lies
 That once was friends with me.

Lie you easy, dream you light,
 And sleep you fast for aye;
 And luckier may you find the night
 Than ever you found the day.

And make me dance as they desire
 With jail and gallows and hell-fire.
 And how am I to face the odds
 Of man's bedevilment and God's?
 I, a stranger and afraid
 In a world I never made.
 They will be master, right or wrong;
 Though both are foolish, both are strong.
 And since, my soul, we cannot fly
 To Saturn nor to Mercury,
 Keep we must, if keep we can,
 These foreign laws of God and man.

Arthur Symons

BORN in 1865 in Wales, of Cornish parents, Arthur Symons was educated at private schools. Attracted at an early age to the Symbolist movement, he became one of its leaders in England. His first few publications reveal an intellectual rather than an emotional passion. Those volumes—Days and Nights (1889), Silhouettes (1892), London Nights (1895)—are full of the artifice of the period, but Symons' technical skill often saves the poems from complete decadence. His later books are less imitative; the influence of Verlaine and Baudelaire is not so apparent. The scent of patchouli, the breath of heavy, narcotic blossoms still cling to many of the pages, but there is no longer the obsession with strange sensations, with what might be called the Deadly Nightshade school of poetry.

The best of Symons' poems have a firm delicacy of touch; they breathe an intimacy in which sophistication is not cynical and sensuousness is restrained. His various collections of essays and stories before 1900 reflect the same blend of intellectuality and perfumed romanticism one finds in his poems.

After a silence of some years, Symons began to write in a less nostalgic and more critical vein. Dramatis Personae appeared in 1923; a limited edition of his Collected Works a year later. The Symbolist Movement in Literature, originally published in 1899, remains one of the best studies of the period.

Of his many volumes in prose, Spiritual Adventures (1905), while obviously influenced by Walter Pater, is by far the most original, an undeservedly neglected volume of psychological short stories. His poetry up to 1902 was collected in two volumes, Poems. The Fool of the World appeared in 1907; Tragedies in 1916.

Appraisals of Symons' work have touched the extremes of adulation and denunciation. A final estimate of his work has not yet been reached. It is obvious that his early poetry, generated from weariness and literary wantonness, belongs to the literature of decadence. His later work is no longer preoccupied with orchids, scented handkerchiefs, and the nuances of sensation. His mind, essentially healthy, threw off its infection and produced work of a clean and admirable precision.

"In the Wood of Finvara," "Modern Beauty," "The Turning Dervish," "The Crying of Water" and a dozen other lyrics are as simple as they are sensuous.

IN THE WOOD OF FINVARA

I have grown tired of sorrow and human tears;
Life is a dream in the night, a fear among fears,
A naked runner lost in a storm of spears.

I have grown tired of rapture and love's desire;
Love is a flaming heart, and its flames aspire
Till they cloud the soul in the smoke of a windy fire.

I would wash the dust of the world in a soft green flood;
Here between sea and sea, in the fairy wood,
I have found a delicate, wave-green solitude.

Here, in the fairy wood, between sea and sea,
I have heard the song of a fairy bird in a tree,
And the peace that is not in the world has flown to me.

MODERN BEAUTY

I am the torch, she saith, and what to me
If the moth die of me? I am the flame
Of beauty, and I burn that all may see
Beauty, and I have neither joy nor shame,
But live with that clear light of perfect fire
Which is to men the death of their desire.

I am Yseult and Helen. I have seen
Troy burn, and the most loving knight lie dead.
The world has been my mirror, time has been
My breath upon the glass; and men have said,
Age after age, in rapture and despair,
Love's poor few words before my image there.

I live, and am immortal; in my eyes
The sorrow of the world, and on my lips
The joy of life, mingle to make me wise;
Yet now the day is darkened with eclipse:
Who is there still lives for beauty? Still am I
The torch, but where's the moth that still dares die?

THE CRYING OF WATER

O water, voice of my heart, crying in the sand,
All night long crying with a mournful cry,
As I lie and listen, and cannot understand
The voice of my heart in my side or the voice of the sea,
O water crying for rest, is it I, is it I?
All night long the water is crying to me.

Unresting water, there shall never be rest
Till the last moon drop and the last tide fail,
And the fire of the end begin to burn in the west;
And the heart shall be weary and wonder and cry like the sea,
All life long crying without avail,
As the water all night long is crying to me.

THE TURNING DERVISH

Stars in the heaven turn,
I worship like a star,
And in its footsteps learn
Where peace and wisdom are.
Man crawls as a worm crawls;
Till dust with dust he lies,

A crooked line he scrawls
Between the earth and skies.

Yet God, having ordained
The course of star and sun,
No creature hath constrained
A meaner course to run.

I, by his lesson taught,
Imaging his design,
Have diligently wrought
Motion to be divine.

I turn until my sense,
Dizzied with waves of air,
Spins to a point intense,
And spires and centers there.

There, motionless in speed,
I drink that flaming peace,
Which in the heavens doth feed
The stars with bright increase.

Some spirit in me doth move
Through ways of light untrod,

Till, with excessive love,
I drown, and am in God.

NIGHT

The night's held breath,
And the stars' steady eyes:
Is it sleep, is it death,
In the earth, in the skies?

In my heart of hope,
In my restless will,
There is that should not stop
Though the earth stood still,

Though the heavens shook aghast,
As the frost shakes a tree,
And a strong wind cast
The stars in the sea.

WANDERER'S SONG

I have had enough of women, and enough of love,
But the land waits, and the sea waits, and day and night is enough;
Give me a long white road, and the gray wide path of the sea,
And the wind's will and the bird's will, and the heart-ache still in me.

Why should I seek out sorrow, and give gold for strife?
I have loved much and wept much, but tears and love are not life;
The grass calls to my heart, and the foam to my blood cries up,
And the sun shines and the road shines, and the wine's in the cup.

I have had enough of wisdom, and enough of mirth,
For the way's one and the end's one, and it's soon to the ends of the earth;
And it's then good-night and to bed, and it heels or heart ache,
Well, it's sound sleep and long sleep, and sleep too deep to wake.

DURING MUSIC

The music had the heat of blood,
A passion no words can reach;
We sat together, and understood
Our own heart's speech.

We had no need of word or sign,
The music spoke for us, and said
All that her eyes could read in mine
Or mine in hers had read.

NERVES

The modern malady of love is nerves.
Love, once a simple madness, now observes

The stages of his passionate disease,
And is twice sorrowful because he sees,
Inch by inch entering, the fatal knife.
O health of simple minds, give me your life,
And let me for one midnight cease to hear
The clock forever ticking in my ear,
The clock that tells the minutes in my brain
It is not love, nor love's despair, this pain
That shoots a witness, keener pang across
The simple agony of love and loss.
Nerves, nerves! O folly of a child who dreams
Of heaven and, waking in the darkness, screams.

William Butler Yeats

WILLIAM BUTLER YEATS, son of John B. Yeats, the Irish artist, was born at Sandy-mountain, Ireland, June 13, 1865. He studied art for a short time at the Royal Dublin Society, but his childhood was spent in the wild district of Sligo. He was educated at Godolphin School, Hammersmith, and Erasmus Smith School, Dublin. In 1888 he came to London where he lived many years. Later in life he spent much time abroad, in Paris, on the Italian Riviera, always returning to his Ireland as the source of his inspiration. He died, after a brief illness, at Roquebrune, near Nice, January 28, 1939; his body was taken to his native Ireland.

It is not easy to summarize Yeats' contribution, for his activities have been so varied and his work does not divide in fixed periods nor fit into convenient categories. He was folklorist, playwright, pamphleteer, editor, experimenter in Spiritualism—and above these rôles, prompting them all, he was a poet.

In the capacity of folklorist he prepared the collections of old wives' tales and mythical legends: Fairy and Folk Tales (1890) and Irish Representative Tales (1904). As essayist he wrote The Celtic Twilight (1893); as editor he collaborated with Edwin T. Ellis on an invaluable edition of The Works of William Blake (1893); as playwright, he helped organize a native Theater and impel the movement known as the Celtic revival.

It was through the "Young Ireland" society that Yeats became identified with an Irish literary theater. He dreamed of a national poetry which would be traditional yet dramatic, written in simple English but spiritually Irish. He founded and edited a paper, the first number appearing in May, 1899, to expound his views. He collaborated with George Moore, with whom he had become associated, wrote his first original play in prose, Kathleen ni Houlihan (1902), and became one of the leaders of the movement, his chief associates being J. M. Synge, Douglas Hyde, Moore, and Lady Gregory. He worked incessantly for the cause both as propagandist and playwright; his Plays for an Irish Theatre (1913) containing Where There Is Nothing, The Hour-Glass, Kathleen ni Houlihan, The Pot of Broth, The King's Threshold, and On Baile's Strand. He died, at the age of seventy-three, January 28, 1939.

Others who followed Yeats intensified the Irish drama; they established a closer contact between the peasant and poet. No one, however, had so great a part as Yeats in the actual shaping of modern drama in Ireland. His Deirdre (1907), a beautiful retelling of the great Gaelic legend, is far more dramatic than the earlier plays; it is particularly interesting to read as a complement to Synge's more idiomatic play on the same theme, Deirdre of the Sorrows.

The poet was already at work—Mosada: A Poem was published in 1886, in Yeats' twenty-first year—but he was not yet ready to declare himself definitely. Before his verse marked the rise of a new Irish school he was one of the group contributing to the fin de siècle publication The Yellow Book; he became the friend of Lionel Johnson and Oscar Wilde, and with them founded the Rhymer's Club; he was represented in both its anthologies. But, as he has told in his autobiographical volumes, Reveries over Childhood and Youth (1915) and The Trembling of the Veil (1922), he was forced to walk about London because he could not afford the bus fare, and tea with hospitable friends was not only a social function but a meal that kept him from days of hunger. Accepting his enforced asceticism he turned it into a discipline, and those critics who consider his mysticism a later affectation might well study this period of Yeats' life and trace its essential reality.

It was in London, at the age of twenty-four, that he decided to devote himself to poetry, and it was there that his first representative volume was published in 1889, The Wanderings of Oisin. There appeared in rapid succession The Countess Kathleen and Various Lyrics (1892), a drama with appended verses; A Book of Irish Verse (1895); The Wind Among the Reeds (1899), which contains some of Yeats' finest early lyrics; and The Shadowy Waters (1900), another poetic play.

By this time Yeats had established himself as a poet of delicate effects and inconclusive loveliness. His was both a vague and personal music—the translation of faery charms and elfin songs into traditionally romantic yet highly individualized lyrics. The very music of the early lyrics—favored by those who prefer sensuousness to depth of feeling—is a limitation. They are almost too musical; they sacrifice strength of thought and utterance to limpidity. In this period Yeats presumably depended on a small set of colorful symbols, symbols which were both arbitrary and facile. It seemed that Yeats had found his métier and that he would continue to sound the charming if restricted gamut of fancy. But the poet revolted against fancifulness; he turned away from the comfort of sheer sentiment and the reliance on rhetoric. "Sentimentality," he said, "is deceiving one's self; rhetoric is deceiving other people."

With Responsibilities (1914) and The Wild Swans at Coole (1919) a change in tone is immediately apparent. The idiom is sharper, the imagery sparser. The language, no longer richly colored, is almost bare of ornament, the tone pitched on a conversational plane. This contrast to the earlier poetry was emphasized in Later Poems (1922), Michael Robartes and the Dancer (1923), The Tower (1928), and The Winding Stair (1932). One likes to believe that it was the later work which won Yeats the Nobel Prize for literature in 1924. In the comprehensive Collected Poems of 1933 the complete change is fully revealed not only in the quality of the later work but in the alterations Yeats had made in the earlier poems, often substituting the exact and sometimes harsh word for the smooth and dreamlike one.

In changing the wavering outlines of his poetry to a more rigorous line Yeats did not sacrifice music. On the contrary, the revisions disclose a music which is, at the same time, subtler and more precise. The poet has freed himself from his preoccupations with shadowy waters, Gaelic gods, and the mystic Rose's multiple meanings; he has emerged from his "labyrinth of images." Not that he has discarded symbolism, but his symbols now have a greater value; they are intellectually finer and firmer. Originally influenced by Blake and the French Symbolists, he finally accomplished a "more subtle rhythm, a more organic form."

I made my song a coat
 Covered with embroideries
 Out of old mythologies
 From heel to throat;
 But the fools caught it,

Wore it in the world's eyes
 As though they'd wrought it.
 Song, let them take it,
 For there's more enterprise
 In walking naked.

Here Yeats says explicitly what so many of the later poems imply. He repudiates his imitators and mocks his own early mythological manner. Instead of the purple patches and the multicolored "cloths of Heaven" Yeats seems less interested in talking to poets and more concerned with the simple people he used to live among. Desire for direct communication must have prompted such a poem as the one which begins

Although I see him still
 The freckled man who goes
 To a gray place on the hill and ends

I shall have written him one
 Poem maybe as cold
 And passionate as the dawn.

"Leda" (a modern poem in spite of its classical subject), "The Wild Swans at Coole," some of the political poems, "Among School Children," and "Sailing to Byzantium" are among the many verses illustrating the deeper contemplative manner with which "the last of the romantics," as Yeats called himself, rose from remote fantasies into immediate experience. More intensely self-searching the poet turns, regretfully but resolutely, to a new set of symbols expressing his adjustment with the actual world. "Sailing to Byzantium" shows the conflict and its solution with particular clarity. Cleanth Brooks, in "A Note on Symbol and Conceit" (in The American Review for May, 1934), summarizes it thus: "The poet's own country is a land of natural beauty, beauty of the body. But his own body is old. The soul must, therefore, sing the louder to compensate for the old and dying flesh.

An aged man is but a paltry thing,
 A tattered coat upon a stick, unless
 Soul clap its hands and sing, and louder sing
 For every tatter in its mortal dress.

But there is no singing school for the soul except in studying the works of the soul. 'And therefore' he has sailed to Byzantium, for the artists of Byzantium do not follow the forms of nature but intellectual forms, ideal patterns. He appears to them to

Consume my heart away; sick with desire
 And fastened to a dying animal

and by severing him from the dying world of the body, to gather him into what is at least 'the artifice of eternity.'

"A comparison of this clumsy paraphrase with the poem in its entirety illustrates better than anything else why the poet must write as he does—how much we lose by substituting concepts for his richer 'symbols.' Byzantium is, for instance, a very rich symbol. It may be thought a very indefinite one. But richness and complexity are not vagueness, and it will be easy to show that the symbol has its precision. It means many things, but if one misses the connection with intellectual art, one has missed the poem. The whole poem demands, as do the poems of Donne and Marvell, mental agility on the part of the reader."

As Yeats grew old his intellectual power increased. "I am content to follow to its source every event in action or in thought," Yeats wrote in "A Dialogue of Self and Soul," and he concluded the poem with Blake-like divination:

When such as I cast out remorse
So great a sweetness flows into the breast
We must laugh and we must sing,
We are blest by everything,
Everything we look upon is blest.

The Winding Stair (1932), The King of the Great Clock Tower (1935), published in Yeats's seventieth year, and the posthumous Last Poems and Plays (1940), contain the utterances of a man not afraid to taste unpalatable truths and even less afraid to say that they are bitter. The later poems are weighted with a sense of isolation, with the disillusionments of the age—and of old age—with defeated dreams, with the decay of beauty, with the death of friends, and the degeneration of the contemporary world. Yet, though Yeats voiced his horror and even his disgust in the later work, he did not despair. The ladder of happy fantasy was gone, but, even at the end, he was willing to begin the long ascent again.

"I must lie down where all the ladders start,
In the foul rag-and-bone shop of the heart."

Letters on Poetry from W. B. Yeats to Dorothy Wellesley (1940) posthumously reveal the poet's limitations, prejudices, and persuasions. The volume will furnish controversial source material for Yeats's biographer; the analyst will have a field-day with the aging poet's preoccupation with sex. But the ordinary reader will be fascinated by the mangled wit and profundity. The letters are studded with such epigrams as: "People much occupied with morality always lose heroic ecstasy." "The correction of prose, because it has no fixed laws, is endless; a poem comes right with a click like a closing box." The letters cover only the last four years of Yeats's life but they indicate the three metamorphoses of his poetry: the early romantic mythological strain; the mature search for "responsibilities" and psychological truths; the final expressions of political conservatism, personal contempt, and discomfiting uncertainty. Yeats distrusted change, yet he shifted his point of view as radically as he changed his idiom. He learned to suspect national panaceas and millennial dreams, yet he continually looked for solutions in occult lore, even in crystal-gazing. Turning alternately from politics to spiritualism, he failed to separate his intellectual and intuitive self. To the last he held that "nature, races, and individual men are unified by an image," and insisted that when men desert one myth they will substitute another. This is cumulatively proved by the body of his verse. If Yeats's symbolism is complicated and questionable, the directness of his best poetry, the burning vision, "simple as flame," is undeniable.

Yeats's volumes of memories and meditations were republished in the beautifully written Autobiographies (1935). The best analyses of his work may be found in Edmund Wilson's Axel's Castle (1931), Stephen Spender's The Destructive Element (1935), David Daiches' Poetry and the Modern World (1940), and Louis MacNeice's The Poetry of W. B. Yeats (1941).

THE LAKE ISLE OF INNISFREE

I will arise and go now, and go to Innisfree,
 And a small cabin build there, of clay and wattles made;
 Nine bean rows will I have there, a hive for the honey bee,
 And live alone in the bee-loud glade.

And I shall have some peace there, for peace comes dropping slow,
 Dropping from the veils of the morning to where the cricket sings;
 There midnight's all a glimmer, and noon a purple glow,
 And evening full of the linnet's wings.

I will arise and go now, for always night and day
 I hear lake water lapping with low sounds by the shore;
 While I stand on the roadway, or on the pavements gray,
 I hear it in the deep heart's core.

AEDH WISHES FOR THE CLOTHS OF HEAVEN

Had I the heavens' embroidered cloths,
 Enwrought with golden and silver light,
 The blue and the dim and the dark cloths
 Of night and light and the half-light,
 I would spread the cloths under your feet:
 But I, being poor, have only my dreams;
 I have spread my dreams under your feet;
 Tread softly because you tread on my dreams.

THE SONG OF WANDERING AENGUS

I went out to the hazel wood,
 Because a fire was in my head,
 And cut and peeled a hazel wand,
 And hooked a berry to a thread,
 And when white moths were on the wing,
 And moth-like stars were flickering out,
 I dropped the berry in a stream
 And caught a little silver trout.

When I had laid it on the floor
 I went to blow the fire a-flame,
 But something rustled on the floor,
 And someone called me by my name:
 It had become a glimmering girl
 With apple blossoms in her hair
 Who called me by my name and ran
 And faded through the brightening air.

Though I am old with wandering
 Through hollow lands and hilly lands,

I will find out where she has gone,
 And kiss her lips and take her hands;
 And walk among long dappled grass,
 And pluck till time and times are done,
 The silver apples of the moon,
 The golden apples of the sun.

AEDH TELLS OF THE ROSE IN HIS HEART

All things uncomely and broken, all things worn out and old,
 The cry of a child by the roadway, the creak of a lumbering cart,
 The heavy steps of the plowman, splashing the wintry mold,
 Are wronging your image that blossoms a rose in the deeps of my heart.

The wrong of unshapely things is a wrong too great to be told;
 I hunger to build them anew and sit on a green knoll apart,
 With the earth and the sky and the water, remade, like a casket of gold
 For my dreams of your image that blossoms a rose in the deeps of my heart.

FAIRY SONG

(from "The Land of Heart's Desire")

The wind blows out of the gates of the day,
 The wind blows over the lonely of heart,
 And the lonely of heart is withered away,
 While the faeries dance in a place apart,
 Shaking their milk-white feet in a ring,
 Tossing their milk-white arms in the air:
 For they hear the wind laugh, and murmur and sing
 Of a land where even the old are fair,
 And even the wise are merry of tonguc;
 But I heard a reed of Coolancy say,
 "When the wind has laughed and murmured and sung,
 The lonely of heart is withered away!"

WHEN YOU ARE OLD

When you are old and gray and full of sleep,
 And nodding by the fire, take down this book,
 And slowly read, and dream of the soft look
 Your eyes had once, and of their shadows deep;

How many loved your moments of glad grace,
 And loved your beauty with love false or true;
 But one man loved the pilgrim soul in you,
 And loved the sorrows of your changing face.

And bending down beside the glowing bars
 Murmur, a little sadly, how love fled
 And paced upon the mountains overhead
 And hid his face amid a crowd of stars.

THE CAP AND BELLS

A Queen was beloved by a jester,
And once when the owls grew still
He made his soul go upward
And stand on her window sill.

In a long and straight blue garment,
It talked before morn was white,
And it had grown wise by thinking
Of a footfall hushed and light.

But the young queen would not listen;
She rose in her pale nightgown,
She drew in the brightening casement
And pushed the brass bolt down.

He bade his heart go to her,
When the bats cried out no more,
In a red and quivering garment
It sang to her through the door.

The tongue of it sweet with dreaming
Of a flutter of flower-like hair,

But she took up her fan from the table
And waved it off on the air.

"I've cap and bells," he pondered,
"I will send them to her and die."
And as soon as the morn had whitened
He left them where she went by.

She laid them upon her bosom,
Under a cloud of her hair,
And her red lips sang them a love song.
The stars grew out of the air.

She opened her door and her window,
And the heart and the soul came through,
To her right hand came the red one,
To her left hand came the blue.

They set up a noise like crickets,
A chattering wise and sweet,
And her hair was a folded flower,
And the quiet of love her feet.

THE INDIAN UPON GOD

I passed along the water's edge below the humid trees,
My spirit rocked in evening light, the rushes round my knees,
My spirit rocked in sleep and sighs; and saw the moorfowl pace
All dripping on a grassy slope, and saw them cease to chase
Each other round in circles, and heard the eldest speak:
Who holds the world between His bill and made us strong or weak
Is an undying moorfowl, and He lives beyond the sky.
The rains are from His dripping wing, the moonbeams from His eye.
I passed a little further on and heard a lotus talk:
Who made the world and ruleth it, He hangeth on a stalk,
For I am in His image made, and all this tinkling tide
Is but a sliding drop of rain between His petals wide.
A little way within the gloom a roebuck raised his eyes
Brimful of starlight, and he said: The Stamper of the Skies,
He is a gentle roebuck; for how else, I pray, could He
Conceive a thing so sad and soft, a gentle thing like me?
I passed a little further on and heard a peacock say:
Who made the grass and made the worms and made my feathers gay,
He is a monstrous peacock, and He waveth all the night
His languid tail above us, lit with myriad spots of light.

AN OLD SONG RESUNG<sup>1</sup>

Down by the salley gardens my love and I did meet;
 She passed the salley gardens with little snow-white feet.
 She bid me take love easy, as the leaves grow on the tree;
 But I, being young and foolish, with her would not agree.

In a field by the river my love and I did stand,
 And on my leaning shoulder she laid her snow-white hand.
 She bid me take life easy, as the grass grows on the weirs;
 But I was young and foolish, and now am full of tears.

THE ROSE OF THE WORLD

Who dreamed that beauty passes like a dream?
 For these red lips, with all their mournful pride,
 Mournful that no new wonder may betide,
 Troy passed away in one high funeral gleam,
 And Usna's children died.

We and the laboring world are passing by:
 Amid men's souls, that waver and give place,
 Like the pale waters in their wintry race,
 Under the passing stars, frame of the sky,
 Lives on this lonely face.

Bow down, archangels, in your dim abode:
 Before you were, or any hearts to beat,
 Weary and kind, one lingered by His seat;
 He made the world to be a grassy road
 Before her wandering feet.

THE SORROW OF LOVE

The quarrel of the sparrows in the eaves,
 The full round moon and the star-laden sky,
 And the loud song of the ever-singing leaves,
 Has hid away earth's old and weary cry.

And then you came with those red mournful lips,
 And with you came the whole of the world's tears,
 And all the trouble of her laboring ships,
 And all the trouble of her myriad years.

And now the sparrows warring in the eaves,
 The curd-pale moon, the white stars in the sky,
 And the loud chanting of the unquiet leaves,
 Are shaken with earth's old and weary cry.

<sup>1</sup> "This," Yeats wrote in a footnote in one of the early editions, "is an extension of three lines sung to me by an old woman of Ballisodare."

THE SONG OF THE OLD MOTHER

I rise in the dawn, and I kneel and blow
 Till the seed of the fire flicker and glow.
 And then I must scrub, and bake, and sweep,
 Till stars are beginning to blink and peep;
 But the young lie long and dream in their bed
 Of the matching of ribbons, the blue and the red,
 And their day goes over in idleness,
 And they sigh if the wind but lift up a tress.
 While I must work, because I am old
 And the seed of the fire gets feeble and cold.

THE BALLAD OF FATHER
GILLIGAN

The old priest Peter Gilligan
 Was weary night and day;
 For half his flock were in their beds,
 Or under green sods lay.

Once, while he nodded on a chair,
 At the moth-hour of eve,
 Another poor man sent for him,
 And he began to grieve.

"I have no rest, nor joy, nor peace,
 "For people die and die";
 And after cried he, "God forgive!
 "My body spake, not I."

He knelt, and leaning on the chair
 He prayed and fell asleep;
 And the moth-hour went from the fields,
 And stars began to peep.

They slowly into millions grew,
 And leaves shook in the wind;
 And God covered the world with shade,
 And whispered to mankind.

Upon the time of sparrow chirp
 When the moths came once more,

The old priest Peter Gilligan
 Stood upright on the floor.

"Mavrone, mavrone! the man has died,
 "While I slept on the chair";
 He roused his horse out of its sleep
 And rode with little care.

He rode now as he never rode,
 By rocky lane and fen;
 The sick man's wife opened the door;
 "Father! You come again!"

"And is the poor man dead?" he cried.
 "He died an hour ago."
 The old priest Peter Gilligan
 In grief swayed to and fro.

"When you were gone, he turned and died
 "As merry as a bird."
 The old priest Peter Gilligan
 He knelt him at that word.

"He who hath made the night of stars
 "For souls, who tire and bleed,
 "Sent one of His great angels down
 "To help me in my need."

"He who is wrapped in purple robes,
 "With planets in His care,
 "Had pity on the least of things
 "Asleep upon a chair."

THE WILD SWANS AT COOLE

The trees are in their autumn beauty,
 The woodland paths are dry,
 Under the October twilight the water
 Mirrors a still sky;

Upon the brimming water among the stones
Are nine and fifty swans.

The nineteenth Autumn has come upon me
Since I first made my count;
I saw, before I had well finished,
All suddenly mount
And scatter, wheeling, in great broken rings
Upon their clamorous wings.

I have looked upon those brilliant creatures,
And now my heart is sore.
All's changed since I, hearing at twilight,
The first time on this shore,
The bell-beat of their wings above my head,
Trod with a lighter tread.

Unwearied still, lover by lover,
They paddle in the cold,
Companionable streams or climb the air;
Their hearts have not grown old;
Passion or conquest, wander where they will,
Attend upon them still.

But now they drift on the still water
Mysterious, beautiful;
Among what rushes will they build,
By what lake's edge or pool
Delight men's eyes, when I awake some day
To find they have flown away?

LEDA AND THE SWAN

A sudden blow: the great wings beating still Above the staggering girl, her thighs caressed
By the dark webs, her nape caught in his bill,
He holds her helpless breast upon his breast.

How can those terrified vague fingers push
The feathered glory from her loosening thighs?
And how can body, laid in that white rush,
But feel the strange heart beating where it lies?

A shudder in the loins engenders there
The broken wall, the burning roof and tower
And Agamemnon dead.

Being so caught up,
So mastered by the brute blood of the air,
Did she put on his knowledge with his power
Before the indifferent beak could let her drop?

SAILING TO BYZANTIUM

I

That is no country for old men. The young
 In one another's arms, birds in the trees,
 —Those dying generations—at their song,
 The salmon-falls, the mackerel-crowded seas,
 Fish, flesh, or fowl, commend all summer long
 Whatever is begotten, born, and dies.
 Caught in that sensual music all neglect
 Monuments of unaging intellect.

II

An aged man is but a paltry thing,
 A tattered coat upon a stick, unless
 Soul clap its hands and sing, and louder sing
 For every tatter in its mortal dress,
 Nor is there singing school but studying
 Monuments of its own magnificence;
 And therefore I have sailed the seas and come
 To the holy city of Byzantium.

III

O sages standing in God's holy fire
 As in the gold mosaic of a wall,
 Come from the holy fire, perne<sup>1</sup> in a gyre,
 And be the singing-masters of my soul.
 Consume my heart away; sick with desire
 And fastened to a dying animal
 It knows not what it is; and gather me
 Into the artifice of eternity.

IV

Once out of nature I shall never take
 My bodily form from any natural thing,
 But such a form as Grecian goldsmiths make
 Of hammered gold and gold enameling
 To keep a drowsy Emperor awake;
 Or set upon a golden bough to sing
 To lords and ladies of Byzantium
 Of what is past, or passing, or to come.

AMONG SCHOOL CHILDREN

I

I walk through the long schoolroom questioning;
 A kind old nun in a white hood replies;
 The children learn to cipher and to sing,
 To study reading-books and history,

<sup>1</sup> Perne: Change attitude.

To cut and sew, be neat in everything
 In the best modern way—the children's eyes
 In momentary wonder stare upon
 A sixty-year-old smiling public man.

II

I dream of a Ledacan body, bent
 Above a sinking fire, a tale that she Told of a harsh reproof, or trivial event—
 That changed some childish day to tragedy—
 Told, and it seemed that our two natures blent
 Into a sphere from youthful sympathy,
 Or else, to alter Plato's parable,
 Into the yolk and the white of one shell.

III

And thinking of that fit of grief or rage
 I look upon one child or t'other there
 And wonder if she stood so at that age—
 For even daughters of the swan can share
 Something of every paddler's heritage—
 And had that color upon cheek or hair,
 And thereupon my heart is driven wild:
 She stands before me as a living child.

IV

Her present image floats into the mind—
 Did Quattrocento finger fashion it
 Hollow of cheek as though it drank the wind
 And took a mess of shadows for its meat?
 And I thought never of Ledacan kind
 Had pretty plumage once—enough of that,
 Better to smile on all that smile, and show
 There is a comfortable kind of scarecrow.

V

What youthful mother, a shape upon her lap
 Honey of generation had betrayed,
 And that must sleep, shriek, struggle to escape
 As recollection or the drug decide,
 Would think her son, did she but see that shape
 With sixty or more winters on its head,
 A compensation for the pang of his birth,
 Or the uncertainty of his setting forth?

VI

Plato thought nature but a spume that plays
 Upon a ghostly paradigm of things;
 Solider Aristotle played the taws
 Upon the bottom of a king of kings;

World-famous golden-thighed Pythagoras
 Fingered upon a fiddle-stick or strings
 What a star sang and careless Muses heard:
 Old clothes upon old sticks to scare a bird.

vii

Both nuns and mothers worship images,
 But those the candles light are not as those
 That animate a mother's reveries,
 But keep a marble or a bronze repose.
 And yet they too break hearts—O Presences
 That passion, piety or affection knows,

And that all heavenly glory symbolize—
 O self-born mockers of man's enterprise;

viii

Labor is blossoming or dancing where
 The body is not bruised to pleasure soul,
 Nor beauty born out of its own despair,
 Nor blear-eyed wisdom out of midnight oil.
 O chestnut tree, great rooted blossomer,
 Are you the leaf, the blossom or the bole?
 O body swayed to music, O brightening
 glance,
 How can we know the dancer from the dance?

THE LEADERS OF THE CROWD

They must to keep their certainty accuse
 All that are different of a base intent;
 Pull down established honor; hawk for news
 Whatever their loose phantasy invent
 And murmur it with bated breath, as though
 The abounding gutter had been Helicon
 Or calumny a song. How can they know
 Truth flourishes where the student's lamp has shone,
 And there alone, that have no solitude?
 So the crowd come they care not what may come.
 They have loud music, hope every day renewed
 And heartier loves; that lamp is from the tomb.

AN IRISH AIRMAN FORESEES
HIS DEATH

I know that I shall meet my fate
 Somewhere among the clouds above;
 Those that I fight I do not hate,
 Those that I guard I do not love;
 My country is Kiltartan Cross,
 My countrymen Kiltartan's poor,
 No likely end could bring them loss
 Or leave them happier than before.
 Nor law, nor duty bade me fight,
 Nor public men, nor cheering crowds,
 A lonely impulse of delight
 Drove to this tumult in the clouds;
 I balanced all, brought all to mind,
 The years to come seemed waste of breath,
 A waste of breath the years behind
 In balance with this life, this death.

TO A FRIEND WHOSE WORK HAS COME TO NOTHING

Now all the truth is out,
 Be secret and take defeat
 From any brazen throat,
 For how can you compete,
 Being honor bred, with one
 Who, were it proved he lies,
 Were neither shamed in his own
 Nor in his neighbors' eyes?
 Bred to a harder thing
 Than Triumph, turn away
 And like a laughing string
 Whereon mad fingers play
 Amid a place of stone,
 Be secret and exult,
 Because of all things known
 That is most difficult.

Rudyard Kipling

(Joseph) Rudyard Kipling was born at Bombay, India, December 30, 1865. Both his parents were English; his father, John Lockwood Kipling, was curator of the Lahore Museum and an illustrator of some note. At six young Kipling was taken to Westward Ho, in North Devon, and his experiences at the English school furnished the basis for the grimly amusing Stalky and Co. (1899). Returning to India, he engaged in journalism; at seventeen he became sub-editor of the Lahore Civil and Military Gazette. At twenty-one Kipling published his first volume, Departmental Ditties (1886), a book of light verse. A year later he challenged attention as a story-teller with Plain Tales from the Hills (1887). Before he was twenty-four he had brought out six small collections of stories which showed his mastery in the form. They were astonishing in their vigor, accurate observation, and swift inventiveness. A new province was added to fiction: a realistic Arabian Nights transplanted to India and cultivated by an Englishman.

With maturity, Kipling's gift grew in power and range. His soldier stories embodied characters which rank with those of Dickens. His stories for children—The Jungle Books (1894-95), Captains Courageous (1897) and Just So Stories (1902)—became contemporary classics. He appealed equally to youth and age with Kim (1901), Puck of Pook's Hill (1906), Rewards and Fairies (1910).

Between his twenty-third and twenty-sixth year Kipling traveled to China, Japan, India, and America. In England he found himself famous at twenty-seven. On a return visit to the United States in 1892 Kipling married an American, Caroline Starr Balestier, sister of Wolcott Balestier, with whom he wrote The Naulahka, 1891, and lived for a few years in Brattleboro, Vermont. Here he wrote several of his most popular works, and it seems likely that he would have remained in America if a quarrel with another brother-in-law, Beatty Balestier, and threats of legal action, had not driven him back to England. Sensitive to criticism and increasingly wary of social contacts, Kipling buried himself in a little Sussex village. He had lost a daughter; the death of a son during the World War embittered and almost silenced him. Although he had received the Nobel Prize for literature in 1907, changes in taste caused a reaction against Kipling's militant "imperialism," which had once influenced British sentiment and, to some extent, its policies. Nevertheless, Kipling's work continued to grow in subtlety, if not in quantity, and he was at work on a collection of autobiographical notes when he died a few weeks after his seventieth birthday, January 17, 1936.

Considered solely as a poet, Kipling is one of the most vigorous figures of his time. He shared the experiences of all classes of people, and his verse spoke for civilians as well as soldiers, office-holders and vagabond adventurers. His brisk lines communicate a common joy in the snapping of a banner, the tingle of salt spray, the lurch and rumble of the sea; his poetry is woven of the stuff of myths, but it never loses its hold on actualities. Kipling himself in his poem "The Benefactors" (from The Years Between [1919]) writes:

Ah! What avails the classic bent
 And what the cultured word,
 Against the undoctor'd incident
 That actually occurred?

What attracted the average reader to Kipling was this attitude to the world's work. Where others sang of lilies and leisure, Kipling celebrated difficulties, duty, hard labor; where others evoked Greek nymphs, he hailed bridge-builders, engineers, sweating stokers—all those who exulted in the job. If he sometimes lost his head in a general hurrahing, his high spirits carried off specious prophesying and brought sing-song meters to a pitch of excitement. Gusto was not the least of his gods.

If his energy is boisterous it is irresistible. His varied poems, ranging from the lusty Barrack-Room Ballads to the quieter verse in The Five Nations, The Seven Seas and the later work, were collected in a remarkable one-volume Inclusive Edition (1885-1918), an indispensable part of any student's library. Subsequent to this collection, a new volume, The Years Between, was published in 1919.

The best and worst of Kipling are obvious to the least critical reader. His worst is inherent in a heartiness which is too loud and too prolonged, a vehemence which changes robustiousness into rowdiness. Max Beerbohm excoriated this Kipling in the cartoon showing an irate little man, helmeted and spectacled, blowing a tin trumpet, waving a Union Jack, and dancing himself into a paroxysm of patriotic fury. This Kipling, overcome by the conquering chauvinism of the Colonist, loses his sense of values, belittling the weak to the tune of British imperialism. The tune, one must admit, is an attractive one, and even those who object to its burden of bombast have learned to whistle it by heart. The rhythms are often the beat of journalistic verse, but they communicate to the "average man" something he seeks and which he would not recognize in finer measures. It is indisputable that Kipling too often tries to force beauty in a rape of violence. But there are also those poems in which, as T. Earle Welby says in A Popular History of English Poetry, "he has been humbler and more passive, and in which beauty is a voluntary captive. One emotion has never failed to inspire him, the inverted nostalgia of the man returned home and yearning for far and once familiar scenes of exile. It arouses all the poet in him, puts wistfulness into his generally brazen music, clears his style of semi-Biblical claptrap, and sets his extraordinary descriptive talent to work more legitimately than usual." Such a descriptive talent is illustrated by "Mandalay," "Fuzzy Wuzzy," "Chant-Pagan," "The Return," even by such a stanza as:

Rivers at night that cluck an' jeer,
 Plains which the moonshine turns to sea,
 Mountains which never let you near,
 An' stars to all eternity;
 An' the quick-breathin' dark that fills
 The 'ollows of the wilderness,
 When the wind worries through the 'ills—
 These may 'ave taught me more or less.

Such work shows that Kipling, though a poet, is something besides a poet. He is not so much a writer for those who enjoy writing—although his craftsmanship will repay study—as he is the singer of those who have never risen to an understanding of song. Yet after the War it became the fashion to disparage Kipling's work as well as his philosophy. When his name was mentioned it was accompanied by a deprecatory shrug or a remark about the decline of his fame; in 1935 a New York newspaper referred to him as "the forgotten man of English letters."

Reaction follows reaction, and if Kipling is underpraised today for the very qualities which were overpraised thirty years ago his hour will strike again. Few poems have revealed a richer and more resigned understanding of the soil and those who live close to it than "The Land"; the wanderlust has never been so poignantly expressed as in "For to Admire." His ballads have not only the swing but the vitality of the ancient Border Ballads, and it is altogether possible that he will outlast most of his contemporaries, and go down to posterity as a people's poet, a balladist whose songs were the popular tunes of one age and the folk-classics of another.

GUNGA DIN

You may talk o' gin an' beer
 When you're quartered safe out 'ere,
 An' you're sent to penny-fights an' Aldershot it;
 But when it comes to slaughter
 You will do your work on water,
 An' you'll lick the bloomin' boots of 'im that's got it.
 Now in Injia's sunny clime,
 Where I used to spend my time
 A-servin' of 'Er Majesty the Queen,
 Of all them black-faced crew
 The finest man I knew
 Was our regimental bhisti,<sup>1</sup> Gunga Din.

It was "Din! Din! Din!
 You limping lump o' brick-dust, Gunga Din!
 Hi! slippy hitherao!
 Water, get it! Panee lao!<sup>2</sup>
 You squidgy-nosed old idol, Gunga Din!"

The uniform 'e wore
 Was nothin' much before,
 An' rather less than 'arf o' that be'ind,
 For a twisty piece o' rag
 An' a goatskin water-bag
 Was all the field-equipment 'e could find.
 When the sweatin' troop-train lay
 In a sidin' through the day,
 Where the eat would make your bloomin' eyebrows crawl,
 We shouted "Harry By!"<sup>3</sup>

.Till our throats were bricky-dry,
Then we wopped 'im 'cause 'e couldn't serve us all.

It was "Din! Din! Din!
You 'eathen, where the mischief 'ave you been?
You put some juddee<sup>1</sup> in it,
Or I'll marrow<sup>2</sup> you this minute,
If you don't fill up my helmet, Gunga Din!"

'E would dot an' carry one
Till the longest day was done,
An' 'e didn't seem to know the use o' fear.
If we charged or broke or cut,
You could bet your bloomin' nut,
'E'd be waitin' fifty paces right flank rear:
With 'is mussick<sup>3</sup> on 'is back,
'E would skip with our attack,
An' watch us till the bugles made "Retire."
An' for all 'is dirty 'ide,
'E was white, clear white, inside
When 'e went to tend the wounded under fire!

It was "Din! Din! Din!"
With the bullets kickin' dust-spots on the green.
When the cartridges ran out,
You could 'ear the front-files shout:
"Hi! ammunition-mules an' Gunga Din!"

I sha'n't forgit the night
When I dropped be'ind the fight
With a bullet where my belt-plate should 'a' been.
I was chokin' mad with thirst,
An' the man that spied me first
Was our good old grinnin', gruntin' Gunga Din.
'E listed up my 'ead,
An' 'e plugged me where I bled,
An' 'e guv me 'arf-a-pint o' water—green;
It was crawlin' an' it stunk,
But of all the drinks I've drunk,
I'm gratefulest to one from Gunga Din.

It was "Din! Din! Din!"
'Ere's a beggar with a bullet through 'is spleen;
'E's chawin' up the ground an' 'e's kickin' all around:
For Gawd's sake, git the water, Gunga Din!"

'E carried me away
To where a dooli lay,
An' a bullet come an' drilled the beggar clean.
'E put me safe inside,
An' just before 'e died:
"I 'ope you liked your drink," sez Gunga Din.

<sup>1</sup> Speed.

<sup>3</sup> Water-skin.

So I'll meet 'im later on
 In the place where 'e is gone—
 Where it's always double drill and no canteen;
 'E'll be squattin' on the coals
 Givin' drink to pore damned souls,
 An' I'll get a swig in Hell from Gunga Din!

Din! Din! Din!
 You Lazarushian-leather Gunga Din!
 Tho' I've belted you an' flayed you,
 By the livin' Gawd that made you,
 You're a better man than I am, Gunga Din!

DANNY DEEVER

"What are the bugles blowin' for?" said Files-on-Parade.
 "To turn you out, to turn you out," the Color-Sergeant said.
 "What makes you look so white, so white?" said Files-on-Parade.
 "I'm dreadin' what I've got to watch," the Color-Sergeant said.
 For they're hangin' Danny Deever, you can 'ear the Dead March play,
 The regiment's in 'ollow square—they're hangin' him today;
 They've taken of his buttons off an' cut his stripes away,
 An' they're hangin' Danny Deever in the mornin'.

"What makes the rear-rank breathe so 'ard?" said Files-on-Parade.
 "It's bitter cold, it's bitter cold," the Color-Sergeant said.
 "What makes that front-rank man fall down?" says Files-on-Parade.
 "A touch of sun, a touch of sun," the Color-Sergeant said.
 They are hangin' Danny Deever, they are marchin' of 'im round.
 They 'ave 'alted Danny Deever by 'is coffin on the ground:
 An 'e'll swing in 'arf a minute for a sneakin' shootin' hound—
 O they're hangin' Danny Deever in the mornin'!

"Is cot was right—and cot to mine," said Files-on-Parade.
 "'E's sleepin' out an' far tonight," the Color-Sergeant said.
 "I've drunk 'is beer a score o' times," said Files-on-Parade.
 "'E's drinkin' bitter beer alone," the Color-Sergeant said.
 They are hangin' Danny Deever, you must mark 'im to 'is place,
 For 'e shot a comrade sleepin'—you must look 'im in the face;
 Nine 'undred of 'is county an' the regiment's disgrace,
 While they're hangin' Danny Deever in the mornin'.

"What's that so black agin the sun?" said Files-on-Parade.
 "It's Danny fightin' 'ard for life," the Color-Sergeant said.
 "What's that that whimpers over'ead?" said Files-on-Parade.
 "It's Danny's soul that's passin' now," the Color-Sergeant said.
 For they're done with Danny Deever, you can 'ear the quickstep play,
 The regiment's in column, an' they're marchin' us away;
 Ho! the young recruits are shakin', an' they'll want their beer today,
 After hangin' Danny Deever in the mornin'.

MANDALAY

By the old Moulmein Pagoda, lookin' eastward to the sea,
 There's a Burma girl a-settin', an' I know she thinks o' me;
 For the wind is in the palm-trees, an' the temple-bells they say:
 "Come you back, you British soldier; come you back to Mandalay!"

Come you back to Mandalay,
 Where the old Flotilla lay:
 Can't you 'ear their paddles chunkin' from Rangoon to Mandalay?
 On the road to Mandalay,
 Where the flyin'-fishes play,
 An' the dawn comes up like thunder outer China 'crost the Bay!

'Er petticut was yaller an' 'er little cap was green,
 An' 'er name was Supi-yaw-let—jes' the same as Theebaw's Queen,
 An' I seed her fust a-smokin' of a whackin' white cheroot,
 An' a-wastin' Christian kisses on an 'eathen idol's foot:
 Bloomin' idol made o' mud—
 What they called the Great Gawd Budd—
 Plucky lot she cared for idols when I kissed 'er where she stud!
 On the road to Mandalay—

When the mist was on the rice-fields an' the sun was droppin' slow,
 She'd gut 'er little banjo an' she'd sing "Kulla-lo-lo!"
 With 'er arm upon my shoulder an' her cheek agin my cheek
 We useter watch the steamers an' the hathis pilin' teak.

Elephants a-pilin' teak
 In the sludgy, squudgy creek,
 Where the silence 'ung that 'eavy you was 'arf afraid to speak!
 On the road to Mandalay—

But that's all shove be'ind me—long ago an' fur away,
 An' there ain't no 'usses runnin' from the Benk to Mandalay;
 An' I'm learnin' 'ere in London what the ten-year sodger tells:
 "If you've 'eard the East a-callin', why, you won't 'eed nothin' else."
 No! you won't 'eed nothin' else
 But them spicy garlic smells
 An' the sunshine an' the palm-trees an' the tinkly temple bells!
 On the road to Mandalay—

I am sick o' wastin' leather on these gritty pavin'-stones,
 An' the blasted Henglish drizzle wakes the fever in my bones;
 Tho' I walks with fifty 'ousemaids outer Chelsea to the Strand,
 An' they talks a lot o' lovin', but wot do they understand?
 Beefy face an' grubby 'and—
 Law! wot do they understand?
 I've a neater, sweeter maiden in a cleaner, greener land!
 On the road to Mandalay—

Ship me somewherees east of Suez where the best is like the worst,
 Where there aren't no Ten Commandments, an' a man can raise a thirst;

For the temple-bells are callin', an' it's there that I would be—
 By the old Moulmein Pagoda, lookin' lazy at the sea—
     On the road to Mandalay,
     Where the old Flotilla lay,
     With our sick beneath the awnings when we went to Mandalay!
     Oh, the road to Mandalay,
     Where the flyin'-fishes play,
     An' the dawn comes up like thunder outer China 'crost the Bay!

“F U Z Z Y - W U Z Z Y”

(Soudan Expeditionary Force)

We've fought with many men acrost the seas,
 An' some of 'em was brave an' some was not:
 The Paythan an' the Zulu an' Burmese;
     But the Fuzzy was the finest o' the lot.
 We never got a ha'porth's change of 'im:
     'E squatted in the scrub an' 'ocked our 'orses,
 'E cut our sentries up at Suakin,
     An' 'e played the cat an' banjo with our forces.
     So 'ere's to you, Fuzzy-Wuzzy, at your 'ome in the Sowdan;
     You're a pore benighted 'athen but a first-class fightin' man;
     We gives you your certifikit, an' if you want it signed
     We'll come an' 'ave a romp with you whenever you're inclined.

We took our chanst among the Kyber 'ills,
 The Boers knocked us silly at a mile,
 The Burman guv us Irrawaddy chills,
     An' a Zulu impi dished us up in style:
 But all we ever got from such as they
     Was pop to what the Fuzzy made us swaller;
 We 'eld our bloomin' own, the papers say,
     But man for man the Fuzzy knocked us 'oller.
     Then 'ere's to you, Fuzzy-Wuzzy, an' the missis and the kid;
     Our orders was to break you, an' of course we went an' did.
     We sloshed you with Martinis, an' it wasn't 'ardly fair;
     But for all the odds agin you, Fuzzy-Wuz, you bruk the square.

'E 'asn't got no papers ot 'is own,
 'E 'asn't got no medals nor rewards,
 So we must certify the skill 'e's shown
     In usin' of 'is long two-anded swords;
 When 'e's 'oppin' in an' out among the bush
     With 'is coffin-caded shield an' shovel-spear,
 A 'appy day with Fuzzy on the rush
     Will last a 'ealthy Tommy for a year.
     So 'ere's to you, Fuzzy-Wuzzy, an' your friends which is no more,
     If we 'adn't lost some messmates we would 'elp you to deplore;
     But give an' take's the gospel, an' we'll call the bargain fair,
     For if you 'ave lost more than us, you crumpled up the square!

'E rushes at the smoke when we let drive,
 An', before we know, 'e's 'ackin' at our 'ead;
 'E's all 'ot sand an' ginger when alive,
 An' 'e's generally shammin' when 'e's dead.
 'E's a daisy, 'e's a ducky, 'e's a lamb!
 'E's a injia-rubber idiot on the spree,
 'E's the on'y thing that doesn't care a damn
 For the Regiment o' British Infantry.
 So 'ere's to you, Fuzzy-Wuzzy, at your 'ome in the Sowdan;
 You're a pore benighted 'eathen but a first-class fightin' man;
 An' 'ere's to you, Fuzzy-Wuzzy, with your 'ayrick cad of 'air—
 You big black boundin' beggar—for you bruk a British square.

T O M M Y

I went into a public-ouse to get a pint o' beer,
 The publican 'e up an' sez, "We serve no red-coats here."
 The girls be'ind the bar they laughed an' giggled fit to die,
 I outs into the street again, an' to myself sez I:
 O it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy go away";
 But it's "Thank you, Mister Atkins," when the band begins to play,
 The band begins to play, my boys, the band begins to play,
 O it's "Thank you, Mister Atkins," when the band begins to play.

I went into a theater as sober as could be,
 They give a drunk civilian room, but 'adn't none for me;
 They sent me to the gallery or round the mus'c-allis,
 But when it comes to fightin', Lord! they'll shove me in the stalls
 For it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy wait outside";
 But it's "Special train for Atkins," when the trooper's on the tide,
 The troopship's on the tide, my boys, etc.

O makin' mock o' uniforms that guard you while you sleep
 Is cheaper than them uniforms, an' they're starvation cheap;
 An' hustlin' drunken sodgers when they're goin' large a bit
 Is five times better business than paradin' in full kit.
 Then it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy 'ow's yer soul?"
 But it's "Thin red line of 'eroes" when the drums begin to roll,
 The drums begin to roll, my boys, etc.

We aren't no thin red 'eroes, nor we aren't no blackguards too,
 But single men in barracks, most remarkable like you;
 An' if sometimes our conduck isn't all your fancy paints,
 Why, single men in barracks don't grow into plaster saints.
 While it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy fall be'ind";
 But it's "Please to walk in front, sir," when there's trouble in the wind,
 There's trouble in the wind, my boys, etc.

You talk o' better food for us, an' schools, an' fires, an' all:
 We'll wait for extry rations if you treat us rational.
 Don't mess about the cook-room slops, but prove it to our face
 The Widow's uniform is not the soldier-man's disgrace.

But it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Chuck him out, the brute!"
 But it's "Savior of 'is country" when the guns begin to shoot;
 An' it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' anything you please;
 An' Tommy ain't a bloomin' fool—you bet that Tommy sees!

THE LADIES

I've taken my fun where I've found it;
 I've rouged an' I've ranged in my time;
 I've 'ad my pickin' o' sweet'carts,
 An' four o' the lot was prime.
 One was an 'arf-caste widow,
 One was a woman at Prome,
 One was the wife of a jemadar-sais,
 An' one is a girl at 'ome.

Now I aren't no 'and with the ladies,
For, takin' 'em all along,
You never can say till you've tried 'em,
An' then you are like to be wrong.
There's times when you'll think that you mightn't,
There's times when you'll know that you might;
But the things you will learn from the Yellow an' Brown,
They'll 'elp you a lot with the Whitel

I was a young un at 'Oogli,
 Shy as a girl to begin;
 Aggie de Castrer she made me,
 An' Aggie was clever as sin;
 Older than me, but my first un—
 More like a mother she were—
 Showed me the way to promotion an' pay,
 An' I learned about women from 'er!

Then I was ordered to Burma,
 Actin' in charge o' Bazar,
 An' I got me a tiddy live 'eathen
 Through buyin' supplies off 'er pa.
 Funny an' yellow an' faithful—
 Doll in a teacup she were,
 But we lived on the square, like a true-married pair,
 An' I learned about women from 'er!

Then we was shifted to Neemuch
 (Or I might ha' been keepin' 'cr now),
 An' I took with a shiny she-devil,
 The wife of a nigger at Mhow;
 Taught me the gypsy-folks' bolee;
 Kind o' volcano she were,
 For she knifed me one night 'cause I wished she was white,
 An' I learned about women from 'er!

Then I come 'ome in the trooper,
 'Long of a kid o' sixteen—
 Girl from a convent at Meerut,
 The straightest I ever 'ave seen.
 Love at first sight was 'er trouble,
 She didn't know what it were;
 An' I wouldn't do such, 'cause I liked 'er too much,
 But—I learned about women from 'er!

I've taken my fun where I've found it,
 An' now I must pay for my fun,
 For the more you 'ave known o' the others
 The less you will settle to one;
 An' the end of it's sittin' and thinkin',
 An' dreamin' Hell-fires to see;
 So be warned by my lot (which I know you will not),
 An' learn about women from me!

What did the Colonel's Lady think?
Nobody never knew.
Somebody asked the Sergeant's wife,
An' she told 'em true!
When you get to a man in the case,
They're like as a row of pins—
For the Colonel's Lady an' Judy O'Grady
Are sisters under their skins!

BOOTS

(Infantry Columns of the Earlier War)

We're foot—slog—slog—slog—sloggin' over Africa!
 Foot—foot—foot—foot—sloggin' over Africa—
 (Boots—boots—boots—boots, movin' up an' down again!)
 There's no discharge in the war!

Seven—six—eleven—five—nine—an' twenty mile today—
 Four—eleven—seventeen—thirty-two the day before—
 (Boots—boots—boots—boots, movin' up an' down again!)
 There's no discharge in the war!

Don't—don't—don't—don't—look at what's in front of you
 (Boots—boots—boots—boots, movin' up an' down again);
 Men—men—men—men—men go mad with watchin' 'em,
 An' there's no discharge in the war!

Try—try—try—try—to think o' something different—
 Oh—my—God—keep—me from goin' lunatic!
 (Boots—boots—boots—boots, movin' up an' down again!)
 There's no discharge in the war!

Count—count—count—count—the bullets in the bandoliers;
 If—your—eyes—drop—they will get atop o' you
 (Boots—boots—boots—boots, movin' up an' down again)—
 There's no discharge in the war!

We—can—stick—out—'unger, thirst, an' weariness,
 But—not—not—not—not the chronic sight of 'em—
 Boots—boots—boots—boots, movin' up an' down again,
 An' there's no discharge in the war!

'Tain't—so—bad—by—day because o' company,
 But night—brings—long—strings o' forty thousand million
 Boots—boots—boots—boots, movin' up an' down again.
 There's no discharge in the war!

I—'ave—marched—six—weeks in 'Ell an' certify
 It—is—not—fire—devils, dark or anything
 But boots—boots—boots, movin' up an' down again,
 An' there's no discharge in the war!

THE RETURN

Peace is declared, and I return
 To 'Ackneystadt, but not the same;
 Things 'ave transpired which made me learn
 The size and meanin' of the game.
 I did no more than others did,
 I don't know where the change began;
 I started as a average kid,
 I finished as a thinkin' man.

*If England was what England seems
 An' not the England of our dreams,
 But only putty, brass, an' paint,
 'Ow quick we'd drop 'er! But she ain't!*

Before my gappin' mouth could speak
 I 'eard it in my comrade's tone;
 I saw it on my neighbor's cheek
 Before I felt it flush my own.
 An' last it come to me—not pride,
 Nor yet conceit, but on the 'ole
 (If such a term may be applied)
 The makin's of a bloomin' soul.

Rivers at night that cluck an' jeer,
 Plains which the moonshine turns to sea,
 Mountains that never let you near,
 An' stars to all eternity;

An' the quick-breathin' dark that fills
 The 'ollows of the wilderness,
 When the wind worries through the 'ills—
 These may 'ave taught me more or less.

Towns without people, ten times took,
 An' ten times left an' burned at last;
 An' starvin' dogs that come to look
 For owners when a column passed;
 An' quiet, 'omesick talks between Men, met by night, you never knew
 Until—is face—by shellfire scen—
 Once—an' struck off. They taught me, too.

The day's lay-out—the mornin' sun
 Beneath your 'at-brim as you sight;
 The dinner-'ush from noon till one,
 An' the full roar that lasts till night;
 An' the pore dead that look so old
 An' was so young an hour ago,
 An' legs tied down before they're cold—
 These are the things which make you know.

Also Time runnin' into years—
 A thousand Places left be'ind—
 An' Men from both two 'emispheres
 Discussin' things of every kind;
 So much more near than I 'ad known,
 So much more great than I 'ad guessed—
 An' me, like all the rest, alone—
 But reachin' out to all the rest!

So 'ath it come to me—not pride,
 Nor yet conceit, but on the 'ole
 (If such a term may be applied)
 The makin's of a bloomin' soul.
 But now, discharged, I fall away
 To do with little things again. . . .
 Gawd, 'oo knows all I cannot say,
 Look after me in Thamesfontein!

*If England was what England seems
 An' not the England of our dreams,
 But only putty, brass, an' paint,
 'Ow quick we'd chuck 'er! But she ain't!*

THE CONUNDRUM OF THE WORKSHOPS

When the flush of a newborn sun fell first on Eden's green and gold,
 Our father Adam sat under the Tree and scratched with a stick in the mold;
 And the first rude sketch that the world had seen was joy to his mighty heart,
 Till the Devil whispered behind the leaves: "It's pretty, but is it Art?"

Wherefore he called to his wife and fled to fashion his work anew—
The first of his race who cared a fig for the first, most dread review;
And he left his lore to the use of his sons—and that was a glorious gain
When the Devil chuckled: “Is it Art?” in the ear of the branded Cain.

They builded a tower to shiver the sky and wrench the stars apart,
Till the Devil grunted behind the bricks: “It’s striking, but is it Art?”
The stone was dropped by the quarry-side, and the idle derrick swung,
While each man talked of the aims of art, and each in an alien tongue.

They fought and they talked in the north and the south, they talked and they fought in the west,
Till the waters rose on the jabbering land, and the poor Red Clay had rest—
Had rest till the dank blank-canvas dawn when the dove was preened to start,
And the Devil bubbled below the keel: “It’s human, but is it Art?”

The tale is old as the Eden Tree—as new as the new-cut tooth—
For each man knows ere his lip-thatch grows he is master of Art and Truth;
And each man hears as the twilight nears, to the beat of his dying heart,
The Devil drum on the darkened pane: “You did it, but was it Art?”

We have learned to whittle the Eden Tree to the shape of a surplice-peg,
We have learned to bottle our parents twain in the yolk of an addled egg,
We know that the tail must wag the dog, as the horse is drawn by the cart;
But the Devil whoops, as he whooped of old: “It’s clever, but is it Art?”

When the flicker of London’s sun falls faint on the club-room’s green and gold,
The sons of Adam sit them down and scratch with their pens in the mold—
They scratch with their pens in the mold of their graves, and the ink and the anguish start

When the Devil mutters behind the leaves: “It’s pretty, but is it Art?”

Now, if we could win to the Eden Tree where the four great rivers flow,
And the wreath of Eve is red on the turf as she left it long ago,
And if we could come when the sentry slept, and softly scurry through,
By the favor of God we might know as much—as our father Adam knew.

EVARRA AND HIS GODS

Read here,

This is the story of Evarra—man—

Maker of Gods in lands beyond the sea.

Because the city gave him of her gold,
Because the caravans brought turquoise,
Because his life was sheltered by the King,
So that no man should maim him, none should steal,
Or break his rest with babble in the streets
When he was weary after toil, he made
An image of his God in gold and pearl,
With turquoise diadem and human eyes,
A wonder in the sunshine, known afar
And worshiped by the King; but drunk with pride,

Because the city bowed to him for God,
 He wrote above the shrine: "Thus Gods are made,
And whoso makes them otherwise shall die."
 And all the city praised him. . . . Then he died.

Read here the story of Evarra—man—
Maker of Gods in lands beyond the sea.
 Because his city had no wealth to give,
 Because the caravans were spoiled afar,
 Because his life was threatened by the King,
 So that all men despised him in the streets,
 He hacked the living rock, with sweat and tears,
 And reared a God against the morning-gold,
 A terror in the sunshine, seen afar,
 And worshiped by the King; but, drunk with pride,
 Because the city fawned to bring him back,
 He carved upon the plinth: "Thus Gods are made,
And whoso makes them otherwise shall die."
 And all the people praised him. . . . Then he died.

Read here the story of Evarra—man—
Maker of Gods in lands beyond the sea.
 Because he lived among the simple folk,
 Because his village was between the hills,
 Because he smeared his cheeks with blood of ewes,
 He cut an idol from a fallen pine,
 Smear'd blood upon its checks, and wedged a shell
 Above its brow for eye, and gave it hair
 Of trailing moss, and plaited straw for crown.
 And all the village praised him for his craft,
 And brought him butter, honey, milk, and curds.
 Wherefore, because the shoutings drove him mad,
 He scratched upon that log: "Thus Gods are made,
And whoso makes them otherwise shall die."
 And all the people praised him. . . . Then he died.

Read here the story of Evarra—man—
Maker of Gods in lands beyond the sea.
 Because his God decreed one clot of blood
 Should swerve a hair's-breadth from the pulse's path,
 And chafe his brain, Evarra mowed alone,
 Rag-wrapped, among the cattle in the fields,
 Counting his fingers, jesting with the trees,
 And mocking at the mist, until his God
 Drove him to labor. Out of dung and horns
 Dropped in the mire he made a monstrous God,
 Abhorrent, shapeless, crowned with plantain tufts.
 And when the cattle lowed at twilight-time,
 He dreamed it was the clamor of lost crowds,
 And howled among the beasts: "Thus Gods are made,
And whoso makes them otherwise shall die."
 Thereat the cattle bellowed. . . . Then he died.

Yet at the last he came to Paradise,
 And found his own four Gods, and that he wrote;
 And marveled, being very near to God,
 What oaf on earth had made his toil God's law,
 Till God said, mocking: "Mock not. These be thine."
 Then cried Evarra: "I have sinned!"—"Not so.
 If thou hadst written otherwise, thy Gods
 Had rested in the mountain and the mine,
 And I were poorer by four wondrous Gods,
 And thy more wondrous law, Evarra. Thine,
 Servant of shouting crowds and lowing kine."
 Thereat with laughing mouth, but tear-wet eyes,
 Evarra cast his Gods from Paradise.

*This is the story of Evarra—man—
 Maker of Gods in lands beyond the sea.*

LA NUIT BLANCHE

*A Much-Discerning Public hold
 The Singer generally sings
 Of personal and private things,
 And prints and sells his past for gold.
 Whatever I may here disclaim,
 The very clever folk I sing to
 Will most indubitably cling to Their pet delusion, just the same.*

I had seen, as dawn was breaking
 And I staggered to my rest,
 Tari Devi softly shaking
 From the Cart Road to the crest.
 I had seen the spurs of Jakko
 Heave and quiver, swell and sink.
 Was it Earthquake or tobacco,
 Day of Doom or Night of Drink?

In the full, fresh, fragrant morning
 I observed a camel crawl,
 Laws of gravitation scorning,
 On the ceiling and the wall;
 Then I watched a fender walking,
 And I heard gray leeches sing,
 And a red-hot monkey talking
 Did not seem the proper thing.

Half the night I watch the Heavens
 Fizz like '81 champagne—
 Fly to sixes and to sevens,
 Wheel and thunder back again;
 And when all was peace and order
 Save one planet nailed askew,
 Much I wept because my warder
 Would not let me set it true.

After frenzied hours of waiting,
 When the Earth and Skies were dumb,
 Pealed an awful voice dictating
 An interminable sum,
 Changing to a tangled story—
 "What she said you said I said—"—
 Till the Moon arose in glory,
 And I found her . . . in my head;

 Then a Face came, blind and weeping,
 And It couldn't wipe Its eyes,
 And It muttered I was keeping
 Back the moonlight from the skies;
 So I patted it for pity,
 But it whistled shrill with wrath,
 And a huge black Devil City
 Poured its peoples on my path.

 So I fled with steps uncertain
 On a thousand-year long race,
 But the bellying of the curtain
 Kept me always in one place;
 While the tumult rose and maddened
 To the roar of Earth on fire,
 Ere it ebbed and sank and saddened
 To a whisper tense as wire.

 In intolerable stillness
 Rose one little, little star,
 And it chuckled at my illness,
 And it mocked me from afar;
 And its brethren came and eyed me,
 Called the Universe to aid,
 Till I lay, with naught to hide me,
 'Neath the Scorn of All Things Made.

Dun and saffron, robed and splendid,
Broke the solemn, pitying Day,
And I knew my pains were ended,
And I turned and tried to pray;
But my speech was shattered wholly,
And I wept as children weep,
Till the dawn-wind, softly, slowly,
Brought to burning eyelids sleep.

AN ASTROLOGER'S SONG

To the Heavens above us
Oh, look and behold
The Planets that love us
All harnessed in gold!
What chariots, what horses
Against us shall bide
While the Stars in their courses
Do fight on our side?

All thought, all desires,
That are under the sun,
Are one with their fires,
As we also are one:
All matter, all spirit,
All fashion, all frame,
Receive and inherit
Their strength from the same.

(Oh, man that deniest
All power save thine own,
Their power in the highest
Is mightily shown.
Not less in the lowest
That power is made clear.
Oh, man, if thou knowest,
What treasure is here!)

Earth quakes in her throes
And we wonder for why!
But the blind planet knows
When her ruler is nigh;
And, attuned since Creation
To perfect accord,
She thrills in her station
And yearns to her Lord.

The waters have risen,
The springs are unbound—
The floods break their prison,
And ravin around.

No rampart withstands 'em,
Their fury will last,
Till the Sign that commands 'em
Sinks low or swings past.

Through abysses unproven
And gulfs beyond thought,
Our portion is woven,
Our burden is brought,
Yet They that prepare it,
Whose Nature we share,
Make us who must bear it
Well able to bear.

Though terrors o'ertake us
We'll not be afraid.
No power can unmake us
Save that which has made.
Nor yet beyond reason
Or hope shall we fall—
All things have their season,
And Mercy crowns all!

Then doubt not, ye fearful—
The Eternal is King—
Up, heart, and be cheerful,
And lustily sing:—
*What chariots, what horses
Against us shall bide
While the Stars in their courses
Do fight on our side?*

RECESSIONAL

God of our fathers, known of old,
Lord of our far-flung battle-line,
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies;
The captains and the kings depart:
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

Far-called, our navies melt away;
On dune and headland sinks the fire:

Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
 Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
 Judge of the Nations, spare us yet,
 Lest we forget—lest we forget!

If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
 Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe,
 Such boastings as the Gentiles use,
 Or lesser breeds without the Law—

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
 Lest we forget—lest we forget!

For heathen heart that puts her trust
 In reeking tube and iron shard,
 All valiant dust that builds on dust,
 And, guarding, calls not Thee to guard,
 For frantic boast and foolish word—
 Thy Mercy on Thy People, Lord!

THE LAST CHANTEY

"And there was no more sea"

Thus said the Lord in the Vault above the Cherubim,
 Calling to the Angels and the Souls in their degree:
 "Lo! Earth has passed away
 On the smoke of Judgment Day.
 That Our word may be established shall We gather up the sea?"

Loud sang the souls of the jolly, jolly mariners:
 "Plague upon the hurricane that made us furl and flee!
 But the war is done between us,
 In the deep the Lord hath seen us—
 Our bones we'll leave the barracout', and God may sink the sea!"

Then said the soul of Judas that betrayed Him:
 "Lord, hast Thou forgotten Thy covenant with me?
 How once a year I go
 To cool me on the floe?
 And Ye take my day of mercy if Ye take away the sea."

Then said the soul of the Angel of the Off-shore Wind:
 (He that bits the thunder when the bull-mouthed breakers flee):
 "I have watch and ward to keep
 O'er Thy wonders on the deep,
 And Ye take mine honor from me if Ye take away the sea!"

Loud sang the souls of the jolly, jolly mariners:
 "Nay, but we were angry, and a hasty folk are we.
 If we worked the ship together
 Till she foundered in foul weather,
 Are we babes that we should clamor for a vengeance on the sea?"

Then said the souls of the slaves that men threw overboard:
 "Kenneled in the picaroon a weary band were we;
 But Thy arm was strong to save,
 And it touched us on the wave,
 And we drowsed the long tides idle till Thy Trumpets tore the sea."

Then cried the soul of the stout Apostle Paul to God:
 "Once we frapped a ship, and she labored woundily.

There were fourteen score of these,
And they blessed Thee on their knees,
When they learned Thy Grace and Glory under Malta by the seal?"

Loud sang the souls of the jolly, jolly mariners,
Plucking at their harps, and they plucked unhandily:
    "Our thumbs are rough and tarred,
    And the tune is something hard—
May we lift a Deepsea Chantey such as seamen use at sea?"

Then said the souls of the gentlemen-adventurers—
Fettered wrist to bar all for red iniquity:
    "Ho, we revel in our chains
    O'er the sorrow that was Spain's;
Heave or sink it, leave or drink it, we were masters of the sea!"

Up spake the soul of a gray Gothavn 'speckshioner—
(He that led the flenching in the fleets of fair F'undee):
    "Oh, the ice-blink white and near,
    And the bowhead breaching clear!
Will Ye whelm them all for wantonness that wallow in the sea?"

Loud sang the souls of the jolly, jolly mariners,
Crying: "Under Heaven, here is neither lead nor lea!
    Must we sing for evermore
    On the windless, glassy floor?
Take back your golden fiddles and we'll beat to open sea!"

Then stooped the Lord, and He called the good sea up to Him,
And 'stablished its borders unto all eternity,
    That such as have no pleasure
    For to praise the Lord by measure,
They may enter into galleons and serve Him on the sea.

*Sun, Wind, and Cloud shall fail not from the face of it,
Stinging, ringng spindrift, nor the fulmar flying free;
    And the ships shall go abroad
    To the Glory of the Lord
Who heard the silly sailor-folk and gave them back their seal*

SESTINA OF THE TRAMP-ROYAL

Speakin' in general, I 'ave tried 'em all—
The 'appy roads that take you o'er the world.
Speakin' in general, I 'ave found them good
For such as cannot use one bed too long,
But must get 'ence, the same as I 'ave done,
An' go observin' matters till they die.

What do it matter where or 'ow we die,
So long as we've our 'ealth to watch it all—
The different ways that different things are done,

An' men an' women lovin' in this world;
 Takin' our chances as they come along,
 An' when they ain't, pretendin' they are good?

In cash or credit—no, it aren't no good;
 You 'ave to 'ave the 'abit or you'd die,
 Unless you lived your lite but one day long,
 Nor didn't prophesy nor fret at all,
 But drew your tucker some'ow from the world,
 An' never bothered what you might ha' done.

But, Gawd, what things are they I 'aven't done!
 I've turned my 'and to most, an' turned it good,
 In various situations round the world—
 For 'im that doth not work must surely die;
 But that's no reason man should labor all
 'Is lite on one same shift—life's none so long.

Therefore, from job to job I've moved along.
 Pay couldn't 'old me when my time was done,
 For something in my 'cad upset it all,
 Till I 'ad dropped whatever 't was for good,
 An' out at sea, be'ld the dock-lights die,
 An' met my mate—the wind that tramps the world!

It's like a book, I think, this bloomin' world,
 Which you can read and care for just so long,
 But presently you feel that you will die
 Unless you get the page you're readin' done,
 An' turn another—likely not so good;
 But what you're after is to turn 'em all.

Gawd bless this world! Whatever she 'ath done—
 Excep' when awful long—I've found it good.
 So write, before I die, " 'E liked it all!"

THE LAND

When Julius Fabricius, Sub-Prefect of the Weald,
 In the days of Diocletian owned our Lower River-field,
 He called to him Hobdenius—a Briton of the Clay,
 Saying, "What about that River-piece for layin' in to hay?"

And the aged Hobden answered: "I remember as a lad
 My father told your father that she wanted dreenin' bad.
 An' the more that you neeglect her the less you'll get her clean.
 Have it jest as you've a mind to, but if I was you, I'd dreen."

So they drained it long and crossways in the lavish Roman style.
 Still we find among the river-drift their flakes of ancient tile,
 And in drouthy middle August, when the bones of meadows show,
 We can trace the lines they followed sixteen hundred years ago.

Then Julius Fabricius died as even Prefects do,
And after certain centuries, Imperial Rome died too.
Then did robbers enter Britain from across the Northern main
And our Lower River-field was won by Ogier the Dane.

Well could Ogier work his war-boat—well could Ogier wield his brand—
Much he knew of foaming waters—not so much of farming land.
So he called to him a Hobden of the old unaltered blood,
Saying: “What about that River-bit, she doesn’t look so good.”

And that aged Hobden answered: “ ‘Tain’t for me to interfere,
But I’ve known that bit o’ meadow now for five and fifty year.
Have it jest as you’ve a mind to, but I’ve proved it time on time,
If you want to change her nature you have got to give her lime!”

Ogier sent his wains to Lewes, twenty hours’ solemn walk,
And drew back great abundance of the cool, gray, healing chalk.
And old Hobden spread it broadcast, never heeding what was in’t;
Which is why in cleaning ditches, now and then we find a flint.

Ogier died. His sons grew English. Anglo-Saxon was their name,
Till out of blossomed Normandy another pirate came;
For Duke William conquered England and divided with his men,
And our Lower River-field he gave to William of Warenne.

- But the Brook (you know her habit) rose onc rainy Autumn night
And tore down sodden flitches of the bank to left and right.
So, said William to his Bailiff as they rode their dripping rounds:
“Hob, what about that River-bit—the Brook’s got up no bounds?”

And that aged Hobden answered: “ ‘Tain’t my business to advise,
But ye might ha’ known ’twould happen from the way the valley lies.
When ye can’t hold back the water you must try and save the sile.
Hev it jest as you’ve a mind to, but if I was you I’d spile!”

They spiled along the water-course with trunks of willow-trees
And planks of clms behind ’em and immortal oaken knees.
And when the spates of Autumn whirl the gravel-beds away
You can see their faithful fragments iron-hard in iron clay.

Georgii Quinti, Anno Sexto, I, who own the River-field,
Am fortified with title-deeds, attested, signed and sealed,
Guaranteeing me, my assigns, my executors and heirs
All sorts of powers and profits which—are neither mine nor theirs.

I have rights of chase and warren, as my dignity requires.
I can fish—but Hobden tickles. I can shoot—but Hobden wires.
I repair, but he reopens, certain gaps which, men allege,
Have been used by every Hobden since a Hobden swapped a hedge.

Shall I dog his morning progress o’er the track-betraying dew?
Demand his dinner-basket into which my pheasant flew?
Confiscate his evening faggot into which the conies ran,
And summons him to judgment? I would sooner summons Pan.

His dead are in the churchyard—thirty generations laid.
Their names went down in Domesday Book when Domesday Book was made.
And the passion and the piety and prowess of his line
Have seeded, rooted, fruited in some land the Law calls mine.

Not for any beast that burrows, nor for any bird that flies,
Would I lose his large sound council, miss his keen amending eyes.
He is bailiff, woodman, wheelwright, field-surveyor, engineer,
And if flagrantly a poacher—'taint for me to interfere.

"Hob, what about that River-bit?" I turn to him again
With Fabricius and Ogier and William of Warenne
"Hev it jest as you've a mind to, but"—and so he takes command.
For whoever pays the taxes, old Mus' Hobden owns the land.

FOR TO ADMIRE

The Injin Ocean sets an' smiles
So sof', so bright, so bloomin' blue;
There aren't a wave for miles an' miles
Excep' the joggle from the screw.
The ship is swep', the day is done,
The bugle's gone for smoke and play;
An' black agin' the settin' sun
The Lascar sings, "Hum deckty hail!"<sup>1</sup>

*For to admire an' for to see,
For to be'old this world so wide—
It never done no good to me,
But I can't drop it if I tried!*

I see the sergeants pitchin' quoits,
I 'ear the women laugh an' talk,
I spy upon the quarter-deck
The orficers an' lydies walk.
I thinks about the things that was,
An' leans an' looks acrost the sea,
Till spite of all the crowded ship
There's no one lef' alive but me.

The things that was which I 'ave seen,
In barrick, camp, an' action too,
I tells them over by myself,
An' sometimes wonders if they're true;
For they was odd—most awful odd—
But all the same now they are o'er,
There must be 'eaps o' plenty such,
An' if I wait I'll see some more.

<sup>1</sup> "I'm looking out."

Oh, I 'ave come upon the books,
An' frequent broke a barrick rule,
An' stood beside an' watched myself
Be'avin' like a bloomin' fool.
I paid my price for findin' out,
Nor never grutched the price I paid,
But sat in Clink without my boots,
Admirin' 'ow the world was made.

Be'old a crowd upon the beam,
An' 'umped above the sea appears
Old Aden, like a barrick-stove
That no one's lit for years an' years!
I passed by that when I began,
An' I go 'ome the road I came,
A time expired soldier-man
With six years' service to 'is name.

My girl she said, "Oh, stay with me!"
My mother 'eld me to 'er breast.
They've never written none, an' so
They must 'ave gone with all the rest—
With all the rest which I 'ave seen
An' found an' known an' met along.
I cannot say the things I feel,
And so I sing my evenin' song:

*For to admire an' for to see,
For to be'old this world so wide—
It never done no good to me,
But I can't drop it if I tried!*

L'ENVOI

What is the moral? Who rides may read.
When the night is thick and the tracks are blind

A friend at a pinch is a friend indeed,
But a fool to wait for the laggard behind.
Down to Gehenna or up to the Throne,
He travels the fastest who travels alone.

White hands cling to the tightened rein,
Slipping the spur from the booted heel,
Tenderest voices cry "Turn again!"
Red lips tarnish the scabbarded steel.
High hopes faint on a warm hearth stone—
He travels the fastest who travels alone.

One may fall but he falls by himself—
Falls by himself with himself to blame.
One may attain and to him is pelf—
Loot of the city in Gold or Fame.
Plunder of earth shall be all his own
Who travels the fastest and travels alone.

Wherefore the more ye be holpen and stayed,
Stayed by a friend in the hour of toil,
Sing the heretical song I have made—
His be the labour and yours be the spoil.
Win by his aid and the aid disown—
He travels the fastest who travels alone!

“Æ”

GEORGE WILLIAM RUSSELL was born April 10, 1867, in the small town of Lurgan, County Armagh, Ireland. At sixteen he studied painting in the School of Art in Dublin, and became the close friend of W. B. Yeats and, later, James Stephens. While working as an accountant in a draper's establishment, he read much in Oriental mystical literature, becoming the leader of a small theosophical group. At that time he wrote an article for The Irish Theosophist under the pseudonym "Æon" but the compositor omitted the two last letters and the piece appeared under the diphthong "Æ," a pen-name which Russell adopted.

In 1897 he became active in Irish politics. For several years he devoted himself to establishing cooperative societies, aiding rural communities, editing (in 1904) The Irish Homestead and (in 1923) The Irish Statesman. There were two distinct, almost opposed, sides to Russell. There was the political and practical side which took him all over Ireland, founding poultry and creamery cooperatives, and made him goad his countrymen out of their ruinously antiquated methods of farming. There was the mystical side which prompted him to join the Theosophists, to see the inanimate earth as a powerfully living organism, and "to run in and out of a house of dream." Russell always maintained he had a double identity, and he kept his two selves clearly separated.

Besides being a public speaker, propagandist, and sociologist, Russell was a painter; his landscapes have the misty-mystical color of his verse, serene and appropriately vague in their otherworldliness. He was the author of several volumes of prose ranging from Cooperatives and Nationality (1912) to The Avatars (1933). Song and Its Fountains (1932) voices his poetic credo.

It was as poet that Russell established himself beyond national borders. The best of his early poetry is in Homeward Songs by the Way (1894) and The Earth Breath (1897). Thirteen subsequent volumes revealed, as Yeats wrote, "a kind of scented flame, consuming them from within." The choicest of these were collected in Selected Poems (1935). The poetry is a curious contradiction of the things for which Russell fought. Completely unconcerned with agrarian issues or, for that matter, any other problems, his poetry maintains that the world is an unreal world, an insubstantial shadow, in which dreams and visions are the only true guides. It is the poetry of one who is drunk with abstract Beauty, devoted to "the Heavenly Brooding" and a sense of the Everlasting.

In spite of a struggle with disease—he was afflicted with cancer—Russell continued working until the end. He died after an operation at Bournemouth, England, July 17, 1935.

S E L F - D I S C I P L I N E

When the soul sought refuge in the place of rest,
Overborne by strife and pain beyond control,
From some secret hollow, whisper soft-confessed,
Came the legend of the soul.

Some bright one of old time laid his sceptre down,
So his heart might learn of sweet and bitter truth;
Going forth bereft of beauty, throne, and crown,
And the sweetness of his youth.

So the old appeal and fierce revolt we make
Through the world's hour dies within our primal will;
And we justify the pain and hearts that break,
And our lofty doom fulfil.

P A I N

Men have made them gods of love,
Sun-gods, givers of the rain,
Deities of hill and grove:
I have made a god of Pain.

Of my god I know this much,
And in singing I repeat,
Though there's anguish in his touch,
Yet his soul within is sweet.

T R U T H

The hero first thought it;
To him 'twas a deed:
To those who retaught it,
A chain on their speed.

The fire that we kindled,
A beacon by night,
When darkness has dwindled
Grows pale in the light.

For life has no glory
Stays long in one dwelling,
And time has no story
That's true twice in telling.

And only the teaching
That never was spoken
Is worthy thy reaching,
The fountain unbroken.

TRAGEDY

A man went forth one day at eve;
 The long day's toil for him was done;
 The eye that scanned the page could leave
 Its task until tomorrow's sun.

Upon the threshold as he stood
 Flared on his tired eyes the sight,
 Where host on host the multitude
 Burned fiercely in the dusky height.

The starry lights at play—at play—
 The giant children of the blue
 Heaped scorn upon his trembling clay,
 And with their laughter pierced him through.

They seemed to say in scorn of him:
 "The power we have was once in thee.
 King, is thy spirit grown so dim,
 That thou art slave and we are free?"

As out of him the power—the power—
 The free, the fearless, whirled in play,
 He knew himself that bitter hour
 The close of all his royal day.

And from the stars' exultant dance
 Within the fiery furnace glow,
 Exile of all the vast expanse,
 He turned him homeward sick and slow.

THE GREAT BREATH

Its edges foamed with amethyst and rose,
 Withers once more the old blue flower of day:
 There where the ether like a diamond glows,
 Its petals fade away.

A shadowy tumult stirs the dusky air;
 Sparkle the delicate dews, the distant snows;
 The great deep thrills—for through it everywhere
 The breath of Beauty blows.

I saw how all the trembling ages past,
 Molded to her by deep and deeper breath,
 Near'd to the hour when Beauty breathes her last
 And knows herself in death.

FROLIC

The children were shouting together
And racing along the sands,
A glimmer of dancing shadows,
A dovelike flutter of hands.

The stars were shouting in heaven,
The sun was chasing the moon:
The game was the same as the children's,
They danced to the self-same tune.

The whole of the world was merry,
One joy from the vale to the height,
Where the blue woods of twilight encircled
The love-lawns of the light.

THE SECRET

One thing in all things have I seen:
One thought has haunted earth and air:
Clangor and silence both have been
Its palace chambers. Everywhere

I saw the mystic vision flow
And live in men and woods and streams,
Until I could no longer know
The dream of life from my own dreams.

Sometimes it rose like fire in me
Within the depths of my own mind,
And spreading to infinity,
It took the voices of the wind:

It scrawled the human mystery—
Dim heraldry—on light and air;
Wavering along the starry sea
I saw the flying vision there.

Each fire that in God's temple lit
Burns fierce before the inner shrine,
Dimmed as my fire grew near to it
And darkened at the light of mine.

At last, at last, the meaning caught—
The Spirit wears its diadem;
It shakes its wondrous plumes of thought
And trails the stars along with them.

THE UNKNOWN GOD

Far up the dim twilight fluttered
Moth-wings of vapor and flame:
The lights danced over the mountains,
Star after star they came.

The lights grew thicker unheeded,
For silent and still were we;
Our hearts were drunk with a beauty
Our eyes could never see.

CONTINUITY

No sign is made while empires pass,
The flowers and stars are still His care,
The constellations hid in grass,
The golden miracles in air.

Life in an instant will be rent,
Where death is glittering blind and wild—
The Heavenly Brooding is intent
To that last instant on Its child.

It breathes the glow in brain and heart,
Life is made magical. Until
Body and spirit are apart,
The Everlasting works Its will.

In that wild orchid that your feet
In their next falling shall destroy,
Minute and passionate and sweet
The Mighty Master holds His joy.

Though the crushed jewels droop and fade,
The Artist's labors will not cease,
And of the ruins shall be made
Some yet more lovely masterpiece.

E P I L O G U E

Well, when all is said and done
 Best within my narrow way,
 May some angel of the sun
 Muse memorial o'er my clay:

"Here was Beauty all betrayed
 From the freedom of her state;
 From her human uses stayed
 On an idle rhyme to wait.

"Ah, what deep despair might move
 If the beauty lit a smile,
 Or the heart was warm with love
 That was pondering the while.

"He has built his monument
 With the winds of time at strife,
 Who could have, before he went,
 Written in the Book of Life.

"To the stars from which he came
 Empty-handed he goes home;
 He who might have wrought in flame
 Only traced upon the foam."

E X I L E S

The gods have taken alien shapes upon them,
 Wild peasants driving swine
 In a strange country. Through the swarthy faces
 The starry faces shine.

Under grey tattered skies they strain and reel there:
 Yet cannot all disguise
 The majesty of fallen gods, the beauty,
 The fire beneath their eyes.

They huddle at night within low, clay-built cabins;
 And, to themselves unknown,
 They carry with them diadem and sceptre
 And move from throne to throne.

G E R M I N A L

Call not thy wanderer home as yet
Though it be late.
Now is his first assailing of
The invisible gate.
Be still through that light knocking. The hour
Is thronged with fate.

To that first tapping at the invisible door
Fate answereth.
What shining image or voice, what sigh
Or hoined breath,
Comes forth, shall be the master of life
Even to death.

Satyrs may follow after. Seraphs
On crystal wing
May blaze. But the delicate first comer
It shall be King.
They shall obey, even the mightiest,
That gentle thing.

All the strong powers of Dante were bowed
To a child's mild eyes,
That wrought within him travail
From depths up to skies,
Inferno, Purgatorio,
And Paradise.

Amid the soul's grave councillors
A petulant boy
Laughs under the laurels and purples, the elf
Who snatched at his joy,
Ordering Caesar's legions to bring him
The world for his toy.

In ancient shadows and twilights
Where childhood had strayed,
The world's great sorrows were born
And its heroes were made.
In the lost boyhood of Judas
Christ was betrayed.

Let thy young wanderer dream on:
Call him not home.
A door opens, a breath, a voice
From the ancient room,
Speaks to him now. Be it dark or bright
He is knit with his doom.

Ernest Dowson

ERNEST DOWSON was born at Belmont Hill in Kent, August 2, 1867. His great-uncle was Alfred Domett (Browning's "Waring"), one time Prime Minister of New Zealand. Dowson, practically an invalid all his life, lived intermittently in London, Paris, Normandy, and on the Riviera. He was reckless with himself and, as disease weakened him more and more, hid in miserable surroundings; for almost two years he lived in sordid supper-houses known as "cabmen's shelters."

He formed only one passion but that one was final and devastating. He fell in love with a restaurant-keeper's daughter, paid court to her with the most delicate reserve, and she—impatient alike of his words and his reticences—married a waiter. The shock to Dowson was profound. He grew more and more withdrawn, even his contacts with fellow-members of the Rhymers' Club became slighter. He sank into despondency and dissipation; he literally drank himself to death.

Dowson's delicate and fantastic poetry was an attempt to escape from a reality too brutal for him. It is not only typically fin de siècle; it is, as any psychoanalytical critic will recognize, curiously autobiographical. He, himself, was his own pitiful "Pierrot of the Minute," throwing "roses, riotously with the throng"—even though the throng was ignorant of him. His passionate lyric, "I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion," a triumph of despair and disillusion, is an outburst in which Dowson epitomized himself. "One of the greatest lyrical poems of our time," writes Arthur Symons; "in it he has for once said everything, and he has said it to an intoxicating and perhaps immortal music."

Yet, in spite of the fact that this familiar poem has been quoted in almost every contemporary collection, several of Dowson's less well-known poems strike a higher and far more resonant note. Among such poems are "Extreme Unction," possibly the finest expression of his Catholicism, and "A Last Word," which expresses his revulsion from the "perverse and aimless band."

Dowson's poems of decadence are no less typical than his religious poems; both, unlike the product of much of his period, are sincere. His mysticism, no less than his idealization of preciosity, is an esthetic one. Unable to find fulfillment in either, he wavered, as C. E. Andrews and M. O. Percival say in Poetry of the Nineties, "between heaping garlands upon the altars of Aphrodite and lighting candles to the Blessed Virgin."

Dowson died obscure in 1900, one of the least effectual but one of the most gifted of modern minor poets. His life was a tragedy of a weak nature buffeted by a strong and merciless environment. His poetry, highly special but never specious, survives.

A LAST WORD

Let us go hence: the night is now at hand;
 The day is overworn, the birds all flown;
 And we have reaped the crops the gods have sown;
 Despair and death; deep darkness o'er the land,

Broods like an owl; we cannot understand
 Laughter or tears, for we have only known
 Surpassing vanity: vain things alone
 Have driven our perverse and aimless band.

Let us go hence, somewhither strange and cold,
 To Hollow Lands where just men and unjust
 Find end of labor, where's rest for the old,
 Freedom to all from love and fear and lust.
 Twine our torn hands! O pray the earth enfold
 Our life-sick hearts and turn them into dust.

NON SUM QUALIS ERA M BONAE SUB REGNO CYNARAE

Last night, ah, yesternight, betwixt her lips and mine
 There fell thy shadow, Cynara! thy breath was shed
 Upon my soul between the kisses and the wine;
 And I was desolate and sick of an old passion,
 Yea, I was desolate and bowed my head:
 I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion.

All night upon mine heart I felt her warm heart beat,
 Night-long within mine arms in love and sleep she lay;
 Surely the kisses of her bought red mouth were sweet;
 But I was desolate and sick of an old passion,
 When I awoke and found the dawn was gray:
 I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion.

I have forgot much, Cynara! gone with the wind,
 Flung roses, roses riotously with the throng,
 Dancing, to put thy pale, lost lilies out of mind;
 But I was desolate and sick of an old passion,
 Yea, all the time, because the dance was long:
 I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion.

I cried for madder music and for stronger wine,
 But when the feast is finished and the lamps expire,
 Then falls thy shadow, Cynara! the night is thine;
 And I am desolate and sick of an old passion,
 Yea, hungry for the lips of my desire:
 I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion.

S P L E E N

I was not sorrowful, I could not weep,
 And all my memories were put to sleep.

I watched the river grow more white and strange,
 All day till evening I watched it change.

All day till evening I watched the rain
 Beat wearily upon the window-pane.

I was not sorrowful, but only tired
Of everything that ever I desired.

Her lips, her eyes, all day became to me
The shadow of a shadow utterly.

All day mine hunger for her heart became
Oblivion, until the evening came.

And left me sorrowful, inclined to weep,
With all my memories that could not sleep.

TO ONE IN BEDLAM

With delicate, mad hands, behind his sordid bars,
Surly he hath his posies, which they tear and twine;
Those scentless wisps of straw that, miserable, line
His strait, caged universe, whereat the dull world stares.

Pedant and pitiful. O, how his rapt gaze wars
With their stupidity! Know they what dreams divine
Lift his long, laughing reveries like enchanted wine,
And make his melancholy germane to the stars?

O lamentable brother! if those pity thee,
Am I not fain of all thy lone eyes promise me;
Half a fool's kingdom, far from men who sow and reap,
All their days, vanity? Better than mortal flowers,
Thy moon-kissed roses seem: better than love or sleep,
The star-crowned solitude of thine oblivious hours!

EXTREME UNCTION

Upon the eyes, the lips, the feet,
On all the passages of sense,
The atoning oil is spread with sweet
Renewal of lost innocence.

The feet, that lately ran so fast
To meet desire, are soothly sealed;
The eyes that were so often cast
On vanity, are touched and healed.

From troubrous sights and sounds set free;
In such a twilight hour of breath

Shall one retrace his life, or see
Through shadows the true face of death?

Vials of mercy! Sacring oils!
I know not where nor when I come,
Nor through what wanderings and toils,
To crave of you Viaticum.

Yet, when the walls of flesh grow weak,
In such an hour, it well may be,
Through mist and darkness, light will break,
And each anointed sense will see!

YOU WOULD HAVE UNDERSTOOD ME

You would have understood me had you waited;
I could have loved you, dear! as well as he:
Had we not been impatient, dear! and fated
Always to disagree.

What is the use of speech? Silence were fitter:
 Lest we should still be wishing things unsaid.
 Though all the words we ever spake were bitter,
 Shall I reproach you, dead?

Nay, let this earth, your portion, likewise cover
 All the old anger, setting us apart:
 Always, in all, in truth was I your lover;
 Always, I held your heart.

I have met other women who were tender,
 As you were cold, dear! with a grace as rare.
 Think you, I turned to them, or made surrender,
 I who had found you fair?

Had we been patient, dear! ah, had you waited,
 I had sought death for you, better than he:
 But from the very first, dear! we were fated
 Always to disagree.

Late, late, I come to you, now death discloses
 Love that in life was not to be our part:
 On your low lying mound between the roses,
 Sadly I cast my heart.

I would not waken you: nay! this is fitter;
 Death and the darkness give you unto me;
 Here we who loved so, were so cold and bitter,
 Hardly can disagree.

VILLANELLE OF MARGUERITES

"A little, passionately, not at all?"
 She casts the snowy petals on the air;
 And what care we how many petals fall?

Nay, wherefore seek the seasons to forestall?
 It is but playing, and she will not care,
 A little, passionately, not at all!

She would not answer us if we should call
 Across the years; her visions are too fair;
 And what care we how many petals fall!

She knows us not, nor recks if she enthrall
 With voice and eyes and fashion of her hair,
 A little, passionately, not at all!

Knee-deep she goes in meadow-grasses tall,
 Kissed by the daisies that her fingers tear;
 And what care we how many petals fall!

We pass and go; but she shall not recall
 What men we were, nor all she made us bear;
"A little, passionately, not at all!"
 And what care we how many petals fall!

ENV oy

(Vita summa brevis spem nos vixit incohare longam)

They are not long, the weeping and the laughter,
 Love and desire and hate;
 I think they have no portion in us after
 We pass the gate.

They are not long, the days of wine and roses:
 Out of a misty dream
 Our path emerges for a while, then closes
 Within a dream.

Lionel Johnson

BORN in 1867, at Broadstairs in Kent, Lionel (Pigot) Johnson received a classical education at Oxford; his poetry is a reflection of his studies in Greek and Latin literatures. Though he allied himself with the modern Irish poets, his Celtic origin is a literary myth; Johnson, having been converted to Catholicism in 1891, became imbued with Catholic and Irish traditions. Yeats, who became his intimate friend, says it was Johnson's habit to sleep all day and read and write all night, the ordinary world about him having no significance to the recluse. "In my library," Johnson said, "I have all the knowledge I need of the world."

Before any of his poetry was collected in a volume, he published a book on The Art of Thomas Hardy (1894) which, though planned before the appearance of Jude the Obscure or The Dynasts, remains one of the most sensitive studies of Hardy yet written. His verse, published originally among the bizarre novelties of The Yellow Book, was curiously cool and removed; he seemed, as one of his associates had said, a young monk surrounded by dancing pagans. "Divine austerity" is the goal to which his verse aspires. While sometimes over-decorated, it is chastely designed, and, like that of the Cavalier poets of the seventeenth century, fiercely devotional. Today, with such poems as "Mystic and Cavalier," "The Precept of Silence," and "The Dark Angel," he seems the most important of his group; his voice has found echoes in recent poetry, particularly in the poems of Yeats.

Johnson was one of the many poets to whom conversion to the Church supplied not only a new color but a new impetus. It is a subject rich in speculation why this period should have yielded so many artists who turned to the Catholic Church for inspiration in their life and work; among the most eminent converts, besides Johnson, were Alice Meynell, Ernest Dowson, Oscar Wilde, and Aubrey Beardsley.

Poems (1895) and Ireland (1897) were published during his lifetime; a posthumous collection of essays, Post Luminium, appeared in 1911. A collected edition of his poems was brought out in 1915. Johnson died tragically in 1902.

MYSTIC AND CAVALIER

Go from me: I am one of those who fall.
What! hath no cold wind swept your heart at all,
In my sad company? Before the end,
    Go from me, dear my friend!

Yours are the victories of light: your feet
Rest from good toil, where rest is brave and sweet:
But after warfare in a mourning gloom,
    I rest in clouds of doom.

Have you not read so, looking in these eyes?
Is it the common light of the pure skies
Lights up their shadowy depths? The end is set:
    Though the end be not yet.

When gracious music stirs, and all is bright,
And beauty triumphs through a courtly night;
When I too joy, a man like other men:
    Yet, am I like them, then?

And in the battle, when the horsemen sweep
Against a thousand deaths, and fall on sleep:
Who ever sought that sudden calm, if I
    Sought not<sup>2</sup> yet could not die!

Seek with thine eyes to pierce this crystal sphere:
Canst read a fate there, prosperous and clear?
Only the mists, only the weeping clouds,
    Dimness and airy shrouds.

Beneath, what angels are at work? What powers
Prepare the secret of the fatal hours?
See! the mists tremble, and the clouds are stirred:
    When comes the calling word?

The clouds are breaking from the crystal ball,
Breaking and clearing: and I look to fall.
When the cold winds and airs of portent sweep,
    My spirit may have sleep.

O rich and sounding voices of the air!
Interpreters and prophets of despair:
Priests of a fearful sacrament! I come
    To make with you mine home.

TO MORYDD

A voice on the winds,
A voice by the waters,
Wanders and cries:
*Oh! what are the winds?
And what are the waters?
Mine are your eyes!*

Western the winds are,
And western the waters,
Where the light lies:
*Oh! what are the winds?
And what are the waters?
Mine are your eyes!*

Cold, cold grow the winds,
And wild grow the waters,
Where the sun dies:
*Oh! what are the winds?
And what are the waters?
Mine are your eyes!*

And down the night winds,
And down the night waters,
The music flies:
*Oh! what are the winds?
And what are the waters?
Cold be the winds,
And wild be the waters,
So mine be your eyes!*

BY THE STATUE OF KING
CHARLES AT CHARING
CROSS

Somber and rich, the skies,
Great glooms, and starry plains;
Gently the night wind sighs;
Else a vast silence reigns.

The splendid silence clings
Around me: and around
The saddest of all Kings,
Crown'd, and again discrown'd.

Comely and calm, he rides
Hard by his own Whitehall,
Only the night wind glides:
No crowds, no rebels, brawl.

Gone, too, his Court: and yet,
The stars his courtiers are:
Stars in their stations set;
And every wandering star.

Alone he rides, alone,
The fair and fatal King:
Dark night is all his own,
That strange and solemn thing.

Which are more full of fate:
The stars, or those sad eyes?
Which are more still and great:
Those brows, or the dark skies?

Although his whole heart yearn
In passionate tragedy,
Never was face so stern,
With sweet austerity.

Vanquish'd in life, his death
By beauty made amends:
The passing of his breath
Won his defeated ends.

Brief life and hapless? Nay:
Through death, life grew sublime.
Speak after sentence? Yea:
And to the end of time.

Armor'd he rides, his head
Bare to the stars of doom;
He triumphs now, the dead,
Beholding London's gloom.

Our wearier spirit faints,
Vex'd in the world's employ:
His soul was of the saints;
And art to him was joy.

King, tried in fires of woe!
Men hunger for thy grace:
And through the night I go,
Loving thy mournful face.

Yet, when the city sleeps,
When all the cries are still,
The stars and heavenly deeps
Work out a perfect will.

TO A TRAVELER

The mountains, and the lonely death at last
 Upon the lonely mountains: O strong friend!
 The wandering over, and the labor passed,
 Thou art indeed at rest:
 Earth gave thee of her best,
 That labor and this end.

Earth was thy mother, and her true son thou:
 Earth called thee to a knowledge of her ways,
 Upon the great hills, up the great streams: now:
 Upon earth's kindly breast
 Thou art indeed at rest:
 Thou, and thine arduous days.

Fare thee well, O strong heart! The tranquil night
 Looks calmly on thee: and the sun pours down
 His glory over thee, O heart of might!
 Earth gives thee perfect rest:
 Earth, whom thy swift feet pressed:
 Earth, whom the vast stars crown.

THE DARK ANGEL

Dark Angel, with thine aching lust
 To rid the world of penitence:
 Malicious Angel, who still dost
 My soul such subtile violence!

Because of thee, no thought, no thing,
 Abides for me undesecrate:
 Dark Angel, ever on the wing,
 Who never reachest me too late!

When music sounds, then changest thou
 Its silvery to a sultry fire:
 Nor will thine envious heart allow
 Delight untortured by desire.

Through thee, the gracious Muses turn
 To Furies, O mine Enemy!
 And all the things of beauty burn
 With flames of evil ecstasy.

Because of thee, the land of dreams
 Becomes a gathering place of fears,
 Until tormented slumber seems
 One vehemence of useless tears.

When sunlight glows upon the flowers,
 Or ripples down the dancing sea:
 Thou, with thy troop of passionate powers
 Beleaguerest, bewilderest, me.

Within the breath of autumn woods,
 Within the winter silences:
 Thy venomous spirit stirs and broods,
 O Master of impieties!

The ardor of red flames is thine,
 And thine the steely soul of ice:
 Thou poisonest the fair design
 Of nature, with unfair device.

Apples of ashes, golden bright;
 Waters of bitterness, how sweet!
 O banquet of a foul delight,
 Prepared by thee, dark Paraclete!

Thou art the whisper in the gloom,
 The hinting tone, the haunting laugh:
 Thou art the adorner of my tomb,
 The minstrel of mine epitaph.

I fight thee, in the Holy Name!
 Yet, what thou dost is what God saith:
 Tempter! should I escape thy flame,
 Thou wilt have helped my soul from Death:

The second Death, that never dies,
 That cannot die, when time is dead.
 Live Death, wherein the lost soul cries,
 Eternally uncomforted.

Dark Angel, with thine aching lust!
 Of two defeats, of two despairs;
 Less dread, a change to drifting dust,
 Than thine eternity of cares.

Do what thou wilt, thou shalt not so,
 Dark Angell! triumph over me:
 Lonely, unto the Lone I go;
 Divine, to the Divinity.

THE PRECEPT OF SILENCE

I know you: solitary griefs,
 Desolate passions, aching hours!
 I know you: tremulous beliefs,
 Agonized hopes, and ashen flowers!

The winds are sometimes sad to me;
 The starry spaces, full of fear:
 Mine is the sorrow on the sea,
 And mine the sigh of places dear.

Some players upon plaintive strings
 Publish their wistfulness abroad:
 I have not spoken of these things,
 Save to one man, and unto God.

Laurence Binyon

(Robert) Laurence Binyon was born at Lancaster, August 10, 1869, son of a clergyman, and a cousin of the poet and playwright, Stephen Phillips. Educated at Trinity College, Oxford, Binyon won the Newdigate Prize in his twenty-first year with the long poem Persephone. The publication of this poem was followed by Primavera (1890), a collaboration with his cousin and two friends; a tragedy in four acts entitled Attula; studies of Dutch etchers of the seventeenth century; and The Popularization of Art (1896).

Although Binyon's energy and versatility was apparent, his early poetry showed little distinction until he published London Visions, which, in an enlarged edition in 1908, revealed a gift of characterization and a turn of speech in surprising contrast to his previous academic Lyrical Poems (1894). His Odes (1901) contains his ripest work; two poems in particular, "The Threshold" and "The Bacchanal of Alexander," are glowing and unusually spontaneous.

Binyon's talent continued to grow; age gave his verse a new sharpness. Sixty poems were published in The Secret (1920), some of which embody all Binyon's dignity with a definiteness which he never before attained. Selected Poems (1924) is an excellently arranged sequence which includes Binyon's finest work with the exception of The Sirens (1927), a long, elaborate ode in which the slow-paced rhythms have wide scope.

Binyon's Collected Poems (1931), in two volumes, reveal his progress from purely scholarly patterns to flexibility. The later verses are deepened with the power of thought and with a restrained music.

Since 1893 Binyon has been head of the Department of Printed Books and Deputy Keeper of Prints and Drawings in the British Museum. One volume of his Critical Studies—English Poetry in its Relation to Painting and the Other Arts (1919)—is especially rewarding to those interested in the kinship of the arts.

THE LITTLE DANCERS

Lonely, save for a few faint stars, the sky
 Dreams; and lonely, below, the little street
 Into its gloom retires, secluded and shy.
 Scarcely the dumb roar enters this soft retreat;
 And all is dark, save where come flooding rays
 From a tavern window; there, to the brisk measure
 Of an organ that down in an alley merrily plays,
 Two children, all alone and no one by,
 Holding their tattered frocks, thro' an airy maze
 Of motion lightly threaded with nimble feet
 Dance sedately; face to face they gaze,
 Their eyes shining, grave with a perfect pleasure.

O WORLD, BE NOBLER

O world, be nobler, for her sake!
 If she but knew thee what thou art,
 What wrongs are borne, what deeds are done
 In thee, beneath thy daily sun,
 Know'st thou not that her tender heart
 For pain and very shame would break?
 O World, be nobler, for her sake!

NOTHING IS ENOUGH

Nothing is enough!
 No, though our all be spent—

Heart's extremest love,
 Spirit's whole intent,
 All that nerve can feel,
 All that brain invent,—
 Still beyond appeal
 Will Divine Desire
 Yet more excellent
 Precious cost require
 Of this mortal stuff,—
 Never be content
 Till ourselves be fire.
 Nothing is enough!

BEAUTY

I think of a flower that no eye has ever seen,
 That springs in a solitary air.
 Is it no one's joy? It is beautiful as a queen
 Without a kingdom's care.

We have built houses for Beauty, and costly shrines,
 And a throne in all men's view:
 But she was far on a hill where the morning shines
 And her steps were lost in the dew.

A SONG

For Mercy, Courage, Kindness, Mirth,
 There is no measure upon earth.
 Nay, they wither, root and stem,
 If an end be set to them.

Overbrim and overflow,
 If your own heart you would know;
 For the spirit born to bless
 Lives but in its own excess.

THE HOUSE THAT WAS

Of the old house, only a few crumbled
 Courses of brick, smothered in nettle and dock,
 Or a squared stone, lying mossy where it tumbled.
 Sprawling bramble and saucy thistle mock
 What once was firelit floor and private charm
 Whence, seen in a windowed picture, were hills fading
 At dusk, and all was memory-colored and warm,
 And voices talked, secure from the wind's invading.

Of the old garden, only a stray shining
 Of daffodil flames amid April's cuckoo-flowers,

Or a cluster of aconite mixt with weeds entwining!
 But, dark and lofty, a royal cedar towers
 By homely thorns; and whether the white rain drifts
 Or sun scorches, he holds the downs in ken,
 The western vales; his branchy tiers he lifts,
 Older than many a generation of men.

Charlotte Mew

CHARLOTTE (MARY) MEW was born November 15, 1869, the daughter of an architect of distinction, who died when she was an infant. Little is generally known of her life except that it was a long struggle not only with poverty but with adversity and private sorrows that finally overcame her. In her late fifties, through the joint efforts of Hardy, De la Mare, and Masefield, she was granted a Civil List pension. Though she loved the country, she was forced to live almost continually in London, in the very heart of Bloomsbury, becoming more and more of a recluse. One of her few excursions was a week-end at Max Gate, where she was the guest of Thomas Hardy, who considered her the best woman poet of her day. The death of her mother was a blow from which she never recovered; the death of her sister hastened her end. As Sidney C. Cockerell wrote, "Charlotte and Anne Mew had more than a little in them of what made another Charlotte and Anne, and their sister Emily, what they were. They were indeed like two Bronte sisters reincarnate."

Charlotte Mew died by her own hand in a nursing home March 24, 1928.

In the obituary note which Sidney Cockerell wrote for the London Times few new facts came to light. It was learned that Charlotte Mew wrote much more than was suspected, but "how much she destroyed at house-movings and during periods of overwhelming depression, we shall never know. There can be no doubt that her fastidious self-criticism proved fatal to much work that was really good, and that the printed poems are far less than a tithe of what she composed. These first appeared in various periodicals. In 1916, seventeen of them were collected into a thin volume which was issued by the Poetry Book Shop for a shilling. In 1921 this volume, named The Farmer's Bride, after the opening poem, was re-issued with the addition of 11 new poems, 28 in all. Perhaps not more than another 20 have seen the light. But, although the visible output was so small, the quality was in each case poignant and arresting. These poems are written as though with the life-blood of a noble and passionate heart."

One of Charlotte Mew's first discoverers was Alida Klemantaski (later Mrs. Harold Monro), who was not only responsible for the publication of The Farmer's Bride, but for the printing of the posthumous The Rambling Sailor (1929) to which she furnished a Memoir. The first book was brought out in America under the title of Saturday Market in 1921. Had Miss Mew printed nothing but the original booklet, it would have been sufficient to rank her among the most distinctive and intense of living poets. Hers is the distillation, the essence of emotion, rather than the stirring up of passion. Her most remarkable work is in dramatic projections and monologues (unfortunately too long to quote) like "The Changeling," with its fantastic pathos, and that powerful meditation, "Madeleine in Church." But lyrics as swift as "Sea Love," or as ageless as "Song," with its simple finality, or as hymn-like as "I Have Been Through the Gates" are equally sure of their place in English literature. They are, in common with all of Charlotte Mew's work, disturbing in their direct beauty; full of a speech that is noble and profound without ever becoming pompous. Apart from her other qualities (not the least of which is her control of an unusually long and extraordinarily flexible line) Miss Mew's work is a series of triumphs in condensation.

"To a Child in Death," a strangely premonitory poem, "In the Fields," and "Old Shepherd's Prayer" are among those given in manuscript by Charlotte Mew to the editor shortly before her death. These, with thirty other posthumous poems, appeared in The Rambling Sailor.

IN THE FIELDS

Lord, when I look at lovely things which pass,
 Under old trees the shadow of young leaves
 Dancing to please the wind along the grass,
 Or the gold stillness of the August sun on the August sheaves;
 Can I believe there is a heavenlier world than this?
 And if there is
 Will the strange heart of any everlasting thing
 Bring me these dreams that take my breath away?
 They come at evening with the home-flying rooks and the scent of hay,
 Over the fields. They come in Spring.

SEA LOVE

Tide be runnin' the great world over:
 'Twas only last June month I mind that we
 Was thinkin' the toss and the call in the breast of the lover
 So everlastin' as the sea.

Here's the same little fishes that sputter and swim,
 Wi' the moon's old glim on the gray, wet sand;
 An' him no more to me nor me to him
 Than the wind goin' over my hand.

I HAVE BEEN THROUGH THE GATES

His heart, to me, was a place of palaces and pinnacles and shining towers;
 I saw it then as we see things in dreams,—I do not remember how long I slept;
 I remember the trees, and the high, white walls, and how the sun was always on the towers;
 The walls are standing today, and the gates: I have been through the gates, I have groped, I have crept Back, back. There is dust in the streets, and blood; they are empty; darkness is over them;

His heart is a place with the lights gone out, forsaken by great winds and the heavenly rain, unclean and unswept,
Like the heart of the holy city, old, blind, beautiful Jerusalem,
Over which Christ wept.

TO A CHILD IN DEATH

You would have scoffed if we had told you yesterday
Love made us feel—or so it was with me—like some great bird
    Trying to hold and shelter you in its strong wing,—
A gay little shadowy smile would have tossed us back such a solemn word,
    And it was not for that you were listening
    When so quietly you slipped away
With half the music of the world unheard.
What shall we do with this strange Summer, meant for you,—
    Dear, if we see the Winter through
    What shall be done with Spring?—?
This, this is the victory of the grave; here is death's sting.
That it is not strong enough, our strongest wing.

But what of His who like a Father pitied—?
His Son was also, once, a little thing,
The wistfulest child that ever drew breath,
Chased by a sword from Bethlehem and in the busy house at Nazareth
Playing with little rows of nails, watching the carpenter's hammer swing,
Long years before His hands and feet were tied
And by a hammer and the three great nails He died,
    Of youth, of Spring,
Of sorrow, of loneliness, of victory the king,
    Under the shadow of that wing.

SONG

Love, Love today, my dear,
Love is not always here;
Wise maids know how soon grows sere
    The greenest leaf of Spring;
    But no man knoweth
    Whither it goeth
    When the wind bloweth
    So frail a thing.

Love, Love, my dear, today,
If the ship's in the bay,
If the bird has come your way
    That sings on summer trees;
    When his song faileth
    And the ship saileth
    No voice availeth
    To call back these.

THE FARMER'S BRIDE

Three Summers since I chose a maid,
Too young maybe—but more's to do
At harvest-time than bide and woo.

When us was wed she turned afraid
Of love and me and all things human;
Like the shut of a winter's day.
Her smile went out, and 'twasn't a woman—
More like a little frightened fay.

One night, in the Fall, she runned away.

"Out 'mong the sheep, her be," they said,
'Should properly have been abed;
But sure enough she wasn't there
Lying awake with her wide brown stare.
So over seven-acre field and up-along across the down
We chased her, flying like a hare
Before our lanterns. To Church-Town
All in a shiver and a scare
We caught her, fetched her home at last
And turn'd the key upon her, fast.

She does the work about the house
As well as most, but like a mouse:
Happy enough to chat and play
With birds and rabbits and such as they,
So long as men-folk keep away.
"Not near, not ne'er!" her eyes beseech
When one of us comes within reach.
The women say that beasts in stall
Look round like children at her call.
I've hardly heard her speak at all.

Shy as a leveret, swift as he,
Straight and slight as a young larch tree,
Sweet as the first wild violets, she
To her wild self. But what to me?

The short days shorten and the oaks are brown,
The blue smoke rises to the low gray sky,
One leaf in the still air falls slowly down,
A magpie's spotted feathers lie
On the black earth spread white with rime,
The berries redder up to Christmas-time.
What's Christmas time without there be
Some other in the house than we!

She sleeps up in the attic there
Alone, poor maid. 'Tis but a stair
Betwixt us. Oh! my God! the down,
The soft young down of her, the brown,
The brown of her—her eyes, her hair . . .

BESIDE THE BED

Someone has shut the shining eyes, straightened and folded
 The wandering hands quietly covering the unquiet breast:
 So, smoothed and silenced you lie, like a child, not again to be questioned or scolded:
 But, for you, not one of us believes that this is rest.

Not so to close the windows down can cloud and deaden
 The blue beyond or to screen the wavering flame subdue its breath:
 Why, if I lay my cheek to your cheek, your gray lips, like dawn, would quiver and redden,
 Breaking into the old, odd smile at this fraud of death.

Because all night you have not turned to us or spoken
 It is time for you to wake, your dreams were never very deep:
 I, for one, have seen the thin bright, twisted threads of them dimmed suddenly and broken.
 This is only a most piteous pretense of sleep!

FROM "MADELEINE IN CHURCH"

How old was Mary out of whom you cast
 So many devils? Was she young or perhaps for years
 She had sat staring, with dry eyes, at this and that man going past
 Till suddenly she saw You on the steps of Simon's house
 And stood and looked at You through tears.

I think she must have known by those
 The thing, for what it was that had come to her.
 For some of us there is a passion, I suppose,
 So far from earthly cares and earthly fears
 That in its stillness you can hardly stir

Or in its nearness lift your hand,
 So great that you have simply got to stand
 Looking at it through tears, through tears.
 Then straight from these there broke the kiss.

I think You must have known by this
 The thing, for what it was that had come to You:

She did not love You like the rest,
 It was in her own way, but at the worst, the best,
 She gave you something altogether new.

And through it all, from her, no word,

She scarcely saw You, scarcely heard:
 Surely You knew when she so touched You with her hair,
 Or by the wet cheek lying there,

And while her perfume clung to You from head to feet all through the day
 That You can change the things for which we care,
 But even You, unless You kill us, not the way.

This then was peace for her, but passion too.
 I wonder was it like a kiss that once I knew,

The only one that I would care to take
 Into the grave with me, to which if there were afterwards, to wake
     Almost as happy as the carven dead
     In some dim chancel lying head to head
 We slept with it, but face to face, the whole night through—
 One breath, one throbbing quietness, as if the thing behind our lips was endless life,
 Lost, as I woke, to hear in the strange earthly dawn, his “Are you there?”
     And he still, listening to the wind outside, among the firs.

So Mary chose the dream of Him for what was left to her of night and day.
 It is the only truth: it is the dream in us that neither life nor death nor any other thing can take away:
 But if she had not touched Him in the doorway of the dream could she have cared so much?
 She was a sinner, we are what we are: the spirit afterwards, but first, the touch.

And He has never shared with me my haunted house beneath the trees
 Of Eden and Calvary, with its ghosts that have not any eyes for tears,
 And the happier guests, who would not see, or if they did, remember these,
     Though they lived here a thousand years.
 Outside, too gravely looking at me, He seems to stand,
 And looking at Him if my forgotten spirit came Unwillingly back, what could it claim
     Of those calm eyes, that quiet speech,
     Breaking like a slow tide upon the beach,
     The scarred, not quite human hand?—
 Unwillingly back to the burden of old imaginings
 When it has learned so long not to think, not to be,
 Again, again it would speak as it has spoken to me of things
     That I shall not see!

A G A I N

One day, not here, you will find a hand
 Stretched out to you as you walk down some heavenly street;
 You will see a stranger scarred from head to feet;
 But when he speaks to you you will not understand,
 Nor yet who wounded him nor why his wounds are sweet.
     And saying nothing, letting go his hand,
     You will leave him in the heavenly street—
     So we shall meet!

OLD SHEPHERD'S PRAYER

Up to the bed by the window, where I be lyin',
 Comes bells and bleats of the flock wi' them two children's clack.
 Over, from under the eaves there's the starlings flyin',
 And down in yard, fit to burst his chain, yapping out at Sue I do hear young Mac.

Turning around like a falled-over sack
 I can see team plowin' in Whithy-bush field and meal carts startin' up road to Church-Town;
 Saturday arternoon then men goin' back
 And the women from market, trapin' home over the down.

Heavenly Master, I wud like to wake to they same green places
 Where I be know'd for breakin' dogs and follerin' sheep
 And if I may not walk in th' old ways and look on th' old faces
 wud sooner sleep.

THE TREES ARE DOWN

*—and he cried with a loud voice
 Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees—(Revelation )*

They are cutting down the great plane-trees at the end of the gardens.
 For days there has been the grate of the saw, the swish of the branches as they fall,
 The crash of trunks, the rustle of trodden leaves,
 With the "Whoops" and the "Whoas," the loud common talk, the loud common laughs of the men, above it all.

I remember one evening of a long past Spring
 Turning in at a gate, getting out of a cart, and finding a large dead rat in the mud of the drive.
 I remember thinking: alive or dead, a rat was a god-forsaken thing,
 But at least, in May, that even a rat should be alive.

The week's work here is as good as done. There is just one bough
 On the roped bole, in the fine gray rain,
 Green and high
 And lonely against the sky.
 (Down now!—)
 And but for that,
 If an old dead rat
 Did once, for a moment, unmake the Spring, I might never have thought of him again.

It is not for a moment the Spring is unmade today;
 These were great trees, it was in them from root to stem:
 When the men with the "Whoops" and the "Whoas" have carted the whole of the whispering loveliness away
 Half the Spring, for me, will have gone with them.

It is going now, and my heart has been struck with the hearts of the planes;
 Half my life it has beat with these, in the sun, in the rains,
 In the March wind, the May breeze,
 In the great gales that came over to them across the roofs from the great seas.
 There was only a quiet rain when they were dying;
 They must have heard the sparrows flying,
 And the small creeping creatures in the earth where they were lying—
 But I, all day, I heard an angel crying:
 "Hurt not the trees."

HERE LIES A PRISONER

Leave him: he's quiet enough: and what matter
 Out of his body or in, you can scatter

The frozen breath of his silenced soul, of his outraged soul to the winds that rave:
 Quieter now than he used to be, but listening still to the magpie chatter
 Over his grave.

NOT FOR THAT CITY

Not for that city of the level sun,
 Its golden streets and glittering gates ablaze—
 The shadless, sleepless city of white days,
 White nights, or nights and days that are as one—
 We weary, when all is said, all thought, all done.
 We strain our eyes beyond this dusk to see
 What, from the threshold of eternity,
 We shall step into. No, I think we shun
 The splendor of that everlasting glare,
 The clamor of that never-ending song.
 And if for anything we greatly long,
 It is for some remote and quiet stair
 Which winds to silence and a space of sleep
 Too sound for waking and for dreams too deep.

ABSENCE

Sometimes I know the way
 You walk, up over the bay;
 It is a wind from that far sea
 That blows the fragrance of your hair to me.

Or in this garden when the breeze
 Touches my trees
 To stir their dreaming shadows on the grass
 I see you pass.

In sheltered beds, the heart of every rose
 Serenely sleeps tonight. As shut as those
 Your guarded heart; as safe as they from the beat, beat
 Of hooves that tread dropped roses in the street.

Turn never again
 On these eyes blind with a wild rain
 Your eyes; they were stars to me.
 There are things stars may not see.

But call, call, and though Christ stands
 Still with scarred hands
 Over my mouth, I must answer. So,
 I will come—I He shall let me go!

Alfred Douglas

(Lord) Alfred Douglas was born in 1870 and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford. He was the editor of The Academy from 1907 to 1910 and was at one time the intimate friend of Oscar Wilde. One of the minor poets of "the eighteen-nineties," several of his poems rise above affectation and the end-of-the-century decadence. The City of the Soul (1899) and Sonnets (1900) contain something more than graceful writing, the latter volume disclosing Douglas's gift of phrase-making and fidelity to form.

The friendship with Oscar Wilde brought contumely upon him socially and depreciation poetically. In 1929 a convincing defense was published, and his Selected Poems (reissued in a popular edition in 1926) proved him, on the whole, a better poet than his more notorious friend, though nothing Douglas did can equal "The Ballad of Reading Gaol." Overshadowed at first, it is evident that Douglas freed himself from specious glamor. "Perkin Warbeck" is a remarkable combination of ballad and dramatic lyric; "Night Coming Out of a Garden" is a memorable lyric, and several of the sonnets illustrate his individuality as well as his enviable command of the structure.

THE GREEN RIVER

I know a green grass path that leaves the field
 And, like a running river, winds along
 Into a leafy wood, where is no throng
 Of birds at noon-day; and no soft throats yield
 Their music to the moon. The place is sealed,
 An unclaimed sovereignty of voiceless song,
 And all the unravished silences belong
 To some sweet singer lost or unrevealed.

So is my soul become a silent place. . . .
 Oh, may I wake from this uneasy night
 To find some voice of music manifold.
 Let it be shape of sorrow with wan face,
 Or love that swoons on sleep, or else delight
 That is as wide-eyed as a marigold.

FROM "THE CITY OF THE SOUL"

Each new hour's passage is the acolyte
 Of inarticulate song and syllable,
 And every passing moment is a bell,
 To mourn the death of undiscerned delight.
 Where is the sun that made the noon-day bright,
 And where the midnight moon? O let us tell,
 In long carved line and painted parable,
 How the white road curves down into the night.

Only to build one crystal barrier
 Against this sea which beats upon our days;
 To ransom one lost moment with a rhyme.
 Or if fate cries and grudging gods demur,
 To clutch Life's hair, and thrust one naked phrase.
 Like a lean knife between the ribs of Time.

NIGHT COMING OUT OF A GARDEN

Through the still air of night
 Suddenly comes, alone and shrill,
 Like the far-off voice of the distant light,
 The single piping trill
 Of a bird that has caught the scent of the dawn,
 And knows that the night is over;
 (She has poured her dews on the velvet lawn
 And drenched the long grass and the clover),
 And now with her naked white feet
 She is silently passing away,
 Out of the garden and into the street,
 Over the long yellow fields of the wheat,
 Till she melts in the arms of the day.
 And from the great gates of the East,
 With a clang and a brazen blare,
 Forth from the rosy wine and the feast
 Comes the god with flame-flaked hair;
 The hoofs of his horses ring
 On the golden stones, and the wheels
 Of his chariot burn and sing,
 And the earth beneath him reels;
 And forth with a rush and a rout
 His myriad angels run,
 And the world is awake with a shout,
 "He is coming! The sun! The sun!"

THE DEAD POET

I dreamed of him last night, I saw his face
 All radiant and unshadowed of distress,
 And as of old, in music measureless,
 I heard his golden voice and marked him trace
 Under the common thing the hidden grace,
 And conjure wonder out of emptiness,
 Till mean things put on beauty like a dress
 And all the world was an enchanted place.

And then methought outside a fast-locked gate
 I mourned the loss of unrecorded words,
 Forgotten tales and mysteries half said,

Wonders that might have been articulate,
And voiceless thoughts like murdered singing birds.
And so I woke and knew that he was dead.

SONNET ON THE SONNET

To see the moment hold a madrigal,
To find some cloistered place, some hermitage
For free devices, some deliberate cage
Wherin to keep wild thoughts like birds in thrall,
To eat sweet honey and to taste black gall,
To fight with form, to wrestle and to rage,
Till at the last upon the conquered page
The shadows of created Beauty fall—

This is the sonnet, this is all delight
Of every flower that blows in every Spring,
And all desire of every desert place,
This is the joy that fills a cloudy night
When, bursting from her misty following,
A perfect moon wins to an empty space.

Hilaire Belloc

(Joseph) Hilaire (Pierre) Belloc, who has been described as "a Frenchman, an Englishman, an Oxford man, a country gentleman, a soldier, a satirist, a democrat, a novelist, and a practical journalist," was born near Paris, July 27, 1870. Four of his great-uncles were generals under Napoleon; his father was an eminent French lawyer; his mother, an Englishwoman, was a leader in the feminist movement which finally secured votes for women. After leaving school Belloc served as a driver in the 8th Regiment of French Artillery at Toul. Later he became a naturalized British subject, finished his education at Balliol College, Oxford, and in 1906 entered the House of Commons as Liberal Member for South Salford. He was a member of Parliament from 1906 to 1910.

Besides his other multifarious activities, he was the author (by 1940) of about one hundred volumes. These books range the gamut of literature: from travel-sketches to essays significantly entitled On Nothing and Kindred Subjects (1908), On Everything (1909), On Anything (1910), and simply On (1923); from A Book of Beasts (1896) to a History of England, three volumes of which were published by 1927. He wrote several books of satirical fiction, one of which, Mr. Clutterbuck's Election (1908), exposed British underground politics, and which bristled with affable Bellocosity.

Belloc's Path to Rome (1902) is a high-spirited travel book; his historical studies and biographies of Robespierre and Marie Antoinette (1909) are classics of their kind. His nonsense-rhymes (Cautionary Tales, The Bad Child's Book of Beasts, and More Beasts for Worse Children) are comparable to Edward Lear's. As a serious poet, Belloc is engaging but somewhat less original. Although his humorous and burlesque stanzas are refreshing, Belloc is most himself when he writes of malt liquor and his beloved Sussex. "The South County" and the "Lines to a Don" in defense of his friend Chesterton are the most persuasive of his earnest poems. "Tarantella," with its internal rhymes and shifting rhythms, is a skilful approximation of the dance which gives the poem its name. His poetic as well as spiritual kinship with that other protagonist of a burly Catholicism, G. K. Chesterton, is obvious.

Like Chesterton, Belloc is equally at home in a highly personal prose and in brightly ringing rhyme. He likes to grumble, but he does not groan. He is crotchety, often quarrelsome—in company with Chesterton he violently resents progress—but he is fiercely loyal to his loves in art, religion, and history. His faith is evident in the tributes and epigrams in Collected Poems (1923) as well as in the varied papers in The Silence of the Sea and Other Essays (1940).

WEST SUSSEX DRINKING SONG

They sell good Beer at Haslemere
     And under Guildford Hill.
 At Little Cowfold as I've been told
     A beggar may drink his fill:
 There is a good brew in Amberley too,
     And by the bridge also;
 But the swipes they take in at Washington Inn
     Is the very best Beer I know.

Chorus:

With my here it goes, there it goes,
     All the fun's before us.
 The Tipple's Aboard and the night is young,
     The door's ajar and the Barrel is sprung,
     I am singing the best song ever was sung,
     And it has a rousing chorus.

If I were what I never can be,
     The master or the squire:
 If you give me the hundred from here to the sea,
     Which is more than I desire:
 Then all my crops should be barley and hops,
     And did my harvest fail
     I'd sell every rood of mine acres, I would,
     For a bellyful of good Ale.

[Chorus]

TARANTELLA

Do you remember an Inn,
     Miranda?
 Do you remember an Inn?

And the teding and the spreading
 Of the straw for a bedding,
 And the fleas that tease in the High Pyrenees,
 And the wine that tasted of the tar?
 And the cheers and the jeers of the young muleteers
 (Under the vine of the dark verandah)?
 Do you remember an Inn, Miranda,
 Do you remember an Inn?
 And the cheers and the jeers of the young muleteers
 Who hadn't got a penny,
 And who weren't paying any,
 And the hammer at the doors and the din?
 And the hip! hop! hap!
 Of the clap
 Of the hands to the twirl and the swirl
 Of the girl gone chancing,
 Glancing,
 Dancing,
 Backing and advancing,
 Snapping of the clapper to the spin
 Out and in—
 And the ting, tong, tang of the guitar!
 Do you remember an Inn,
 Miranda?
 Do you remember an Inn?

Never more;
 Miranda,
 Never more.
 Only the high peaks hoar:
 And Aragon a torrent at the door.
 No sound
 In the walls of the halls where falls
 The tread
 Of the feet of the dead to the ground,
 No sound·
 But the boom
 Of the far waterfall like doom.

THE SOUTH COUNTRY

When I am living in the Midlands
 That are sodden and unkind,
 I light my lamp in the evening:
 My work is left behind;
 And the great hills of the South Country
 Come back into my mind.

The great hills of the South Country
 They stand along the sea;

And it's there walking in the high woods
 That I could wish to be,
 And the men that were boys when I was a boy
 Walking along with me.

The men that live in North England
 I saw them for a day:
 Their hearts are set upon the waste fells,
 Their skies are fast and gray;
 From their castle-walls a man may see
 The mountains far away.

The men that live in West England
 They see the Severn strong,
 A-rolling on rough water brown
 Light aspen leaves along.
 They have the secret of the rocks,
 And the oldest kind of song.

But the men that live in the South Country
 Are the kindest and most wise,
 They get their laughter from the loud surf,
 And the faith in their happy eyes
 Comes surely from our Sister the Spring
 When over the sea she flies;
 The violets suddenly bloom at her feet,
 She blesses us with surprise.

I never get between the pines
 But I smell the Sussex air;
 Nor I never come on a belt of sand
 But my home is there.
 And along the sky the line of the Downs
 So noble and so bare.

A lost thing could I never find,
 Nor a broken thing mend:
 And I fear I shall be all alone
 When I get towards the end.
 Who will there be to comfort me
 Or who will be my friend?

I will gather and carefully make my friends
 Of the men of the Sussex Weald;
 They watch the stars from silent folds,
 They stiffly plow the field.
 By them and the God of the South Country
 My poor soul shall be healed.

If I ever become a rich man,
 Or if ever I grow to be old,
 I will build a house with deep thatch
 To shelter me from the cold,

And there shall the Sussex songs be sung
 And the story of Sussex told.

I will hold my house in the high wood
 Within a walk of the sea,
 And the men that were boys when I was a boy
 Shall sit and drink with me.

HA'NACKER MILL

Sally is gone that was so kindly,
 Sally is gone from Ha'nacker Hill.
 And the Briar grows ever since then so blindly
 And ever since then the clapper is still,
 And the sweeps have fallen from Ha'nacker Mill.

Ha'nacker Hill is in Desolation:
 Ruin a-top and a field unplowed,
 And Spirits that call on a fallen nation,
 Spirits that loved her calling aloud:
 Spirits abroad in a windy cloud.

Spirits that call and no one answers;
 Ha'nacker's down and England's done.
 Wind and Thistle for pipe and dancers
 And never a plowman under the Sun.
 Never a plowman. Never a one.

FOUR BEASTS

The Big Baboon

The Big Baboon is found upon
 The plains of Cariboo;
 He goes about with nothing on
 (A shocking thing to do.)
 But if he dressed respectably
 And let his whiskers grow
 How like this Big Baboon would be
 To Mister So-and-So!

The Yak

As a friend to the children command me the Yak;
 You will find it exactly the thing:
 It will carry and fetch, you can ride on its back,
 Or lead it about with a string.

The Tartar who dwells on the plains of Thibet
 (A desolate region of snow)
 Has for centuries made it a nursery pet,
 And surely the Tartar should know!

Then tell your papa where the Yak can be got,
 And if he is awfully rich
 He will buy you the creature—or else he will not.
 (I cannot be positive which.)

The Lion

The Lion, the Lion, he dwells in the waste,
 He has a big head and a very small waist;
 But his shoulders are stark, and his jaws they are grim,
 And a good little child will not play with him.

The Tiger

The Tiger, on the other hand, is kittenish and mild,
 He makes a pretty playfellow for any little child;
 And mothers of large families (who claim to common sense)
 Will find a Tiger well repays the trouble and expense.

LINES TO A DON

Remote and ineffectual Don
 That dared attack my Chesterton,
 With that poor weapon, half-impelled,
 Unlearnt, unsteady, hardly held,
 Unworthy for a tilt with men—
 Your quavering and corroded pen;
 Don poor at Bed and worse at Table,
 Don pinched, Don starved, Don miserable;
 Don stuttering, Don with roving eyes,
 Don nervous, Don of crudities;
 Don clerical, Don ordinary,
 Don self-absorbed and solitary;
 Don here-and-there, Don epileptic;
 Don puffed and empty, Don dyspeptic;
 Don middle-class, Don sycophantic,
 Don dull, Don brutish, Don pedantic;
 Don hypocritical, Don bad,
 Don furtive, Don three quarters mad;
 Don (since a man must make an end),
 Don that shall never be my friend.

Don different from those regal Dons!
 With hearts of gold and lungs of bronze,
 Who shout and bang and roar and bawl
 The Absolute across the hall,
 Or sail in amply bellowing gown
 Enormous through the Sacred Town,
 Bearing from College to their homes
 Deep cargoes of gigantic tomes;

Dons admirable! Dons of Might!
 Uprising on my inward sight
 Compact of ancient tales, and port
 And sleep—and learning of a sort.
 Dons English, worthy of the land;
 Dons rooted; Dons that understand.
 Good Dons perpetual that remain
 A landmark, walling in the plain—
 The horizon of my memories—
 Like large and comfortable trees.

Don very much apart from these,
 Thou scapegoat Don, thou Don devoted,
 Don to thine own damnation quoted,
 Perplexed to find thy trivial name
 Reared in my verse to lasting shame.
 Don dreadful, rasping Don and wearing,
 Repulsive Don—Don past all bearing,
 Don of the cold and doubtful breath,
 Don desppicable, Don of death;
 Don nasty, skimpy, silent, level;
 Don evil; Don that serves the devil.
 Don ugly—that makes fifty lines.
 There is a Canon which confines
 A Rhymed Octosyllabic Curse
 If written in Iambic Verse
 To fifty lines. I never cut;
 I far prefer to end it—but
 Believe me I shall soon return.
 My fires are banked, but still they burn
 To write some more about the Don
 That dared attack my Chesterton.

SONNET

We will not whisper, we have found the place
 Of silence and the endless halls of sleep
 Of that which breathes alone throughout the deep
 The end and the beginning; and the face
 Between the level brows of whose blind eyes
 Lie plenary contentment, full surcease
 Of violence, and the passionless long peace
 Wherein we lose our human lullabies.

Look up and tell the immeasurable height
 Between the vault of the world and your dear head;
 That's death, my little sister, and the night
 Which was our Mother beckons us to bed,
 Where large oblivion in her house is laid
 For us tired children, now our games are played.

SIX EPIGRAMS

On Lady Poltagrue, a Public Peril

The Devil, having nothing else to do,
 Went off to tempt My Lady Poltagrue.
 My Lady, tempted by a private whim,
 To his extreme annoyance, tempted him.

On a Dead Hostess

Of this bad world the loveliest and the best
 Has smiled and said "Good Night," and gone to rest.

On Hygiene

Of old when folk lay sick and sorely tried,
 The doctors gave them physic, and they died.
 But here's a happier age for now we know
 Both how to make men sick and keep them so.

On His Books

When I am dead, I hope it may be said:
 "His sins were scarlet, but his books were read."

Epitaph on the Politician

Here, richly, with ridiculous display,
 The Politician's corpse was laid away.
 While all of his acquaintance sneered and slanged,
 I wept: for I had longed to see him hanged.

For False Heart

I said to Heart, "How goes it?" Heart replied:
 "Right as a Ribstone Pippin!" But it lied.

W. H. Davies

ACCORDING to his own biography, W(illiam) H(enry) Davies was born in a public-house called Church House at Newport, in the County of Monmouthshire, April 20, 1870, of Welsh parents. He was, until Bernard Shaw "discovered" him, a cattleman, a berry-picker, a panhandler—in short, a vagabond. In a preface to Davies' The Autobiography of a Super-Tramp (1906), Shaw describes how the manuscript came into his hands:

"In the year 1905 I received by post a volume of poems by one William H. Davies, whose address was The Farm House, Kennington, S.E. I was surprised to learn that there was still a farmhouse left in Kennington; for I did not then suspect that The Farm House, like the Shepherdess Walks and Nightingale Lane and Whetstone Parks of Bethnal Green and Holborn, is so called nowadays in irony, and is, in fact, a doss-house, or hostelry, where single men can have a night's lodging, for, at most, sixpence. . . . The author, as far as I could guess, had walked into a printer's or stationer's shop; handed in his manuscript; and ordered his book as he might have ordered a pair of boots. It was marked 'price, half a crown.' An accompanying letter asked me very civilly if I required a half-crown book of verses; and if so, would I please send the author the half-crown: if not, would I return the book. This was attractively simple and sensible. I opened the book, and was more puzzled than ever; for before I had read three lines I perceived that the author was a real poet. His work was not in the least strenuous or modern; there was indeed no sign of his ever having read anything otherwise than as a child reads. . . . Here, I saw, was a genuine innocent, writing odds and ends of verse about odds and ends of things; living quite out of the world in which such things are usually done, and knowing no better (or rather no worse) than to get his book made by the appropriate craftsman and hawk it round like any other ware."

It is more than likely that Davies' first notoriety as a tramp-poet who had ridden the rails in the United States and had had his right foot cut off by a train in Canada, obscured his merit as a singer. Even his early The Soul's Destroyer (1907) revealed that simplicity which is as naïf as it is unexpected.

Between 1906, when Davies published his first book, and 1935, the poet issued twenty-two volumes, five of autobiography, seventeen of verse. Besides these, there were four different Collected Poems, appearing in 1916, 1923, 1929, and 1935. The difficulty of strictly evaluating this verse is the greater since the Welsh-English poet depended on repetitions of a few ideas, and rarely trusted his imagination with any but the most tested themes. Love Poems (1935) is a typical mixture of Davies' plain-song sagacities and painful banalities. It needs all one's faith in a poet to forgive him such a stanza as:

The sun has his spots, the moon has her shadows,
 The sea has his wrinkles, the land has her warts;
 Sweet faith has her doubts and lovers their quarrels,
 And nothing is perfect in all its parts.

But Davies merits our faith, for his best, like the best of the Caroline poets, moves us not only because of the innocence of vision but because of the adequacy of communicating it. If, in his later work, his thought is confused and tempts Davies out of his depth, his ear remains quick and sensitive as the thrush he celebrates:

That speckled thrush, that stands so still,
Is listening for the worms to stir;
He hears a worm—what marvelous ears
That he can live by ear alone,
And save his eyes to guard his fears!

Collected Poems (1935) contains some five hundred poems in which good, indifferent, and bad mingle so inextricably that the reader must accept Davies en masse or reject him in toto. One can no more imagine Davies self-critical than one can imagine him in the labor of creation, his "labor" being about as arduous as a bird's and his song being no less recreational. The figure is not far-fetched, for no poetry has ever been more obviously bird-like. But, it may be asked with a proper regard for ornithology, what bird? Not the lark, for Davies is no Shelley hurling himself and his cry far above the comfortable altitudes of man. Not the nightingale, for his is not Keats' clear passion nor Swinburne's operatic coloratura. It is the English robin that Davies most resembles or the American goldfinch, whose song, limited in range, is cleanly, sharply pitched. Without the variability of greater singers, his notes are only three or four, but the tones are so cool, the delivery so fresh that we would not exchange the crisp spontaneity even for the versatile brilliance of the hermit-thrush. No less than thirty-three poems begin: "When I in praise of babies speak," "When on a summer morn I wake," "When I came forth this morn I saw," "When I am old," "When I complained," "When . . . ?"

It is easy enough to deride such naiveté, easy enough to confuse Davies with his compatriots who pipe their placid week-end pastorals. But, although a Georgian in point of time, Davies shakes himself free of "Georgianism," that false simplicity sickled o'er with the pale cast of thoughtlessness. He does not study his subjects from the outside; it is doubtful if he studies them at all; he is always within his bucolics. Thus his sympathies are as genuine as they are ingenuous. His sense of wonder is as direct, as unmistakable as an untutored child's. He looks at clouds, cowslips, lovely ladies, glow-worms, sheep, dogs, dolls, and daisies, as though they had never existed prior to his observation; and he puts them to rhyme as unself-consciously as though never before had they been employed in verse. Davies re-discovers the common objects which everyone takes for granted, he regards them with an air of surprise and what is more, communicates his astonished wonder.

Observe the poem entitled "A Great Time" and note what details prompt his adjective. Beauty to Davies is not in the elaboration but in the mere being; greatness is, therefore, implicit in the coming together of a rainbow and a cuckoo. These are his auguries of innocence; for him, also, "a dog starv'd at his master's gate Predicts the ruin of the State." His rapport with lamb and bat and game-cock may lead us to imply a kinship with Blake, but he is, at the best, a Blake in words of one syllable. Where Blake projects apocalypses and flaming images, Davies offers a panorama of quiet pictures; we drop from passionate vision into pleasant reverie.

Davies was planning another volume of homely and spontaneous verse when he died at his home in Gloucestershire, September 26, 1940.

THE HOUR OF MAGIC

This is the hour of magic, when the Moon
 With her bright wand has charmed the tallest tree
 To stand stone-still with all his million leaves!
 I feel around me things I cannot see;
 I hold my breath, as Nature holds her own.
 And do the mice and birds, the horse and cow,
 Sleepless in this deep silence, so intense,
 Believe a miracle has happened now,
 And wait to hear a sound they'll recognize,
 To prove they still have life with earthly ties?

A GREETING

Good morning, Life—and all
 Things glad and beautiful.
 My pockets nothing hold,
 But he that owns the gold,
 The Sun, is my great friend—
 His spending has no end.

Hail to the morning sky,
 Which bright clouds measure high;
 Hail to you birds whose throats
 Would number leaves by notes;
 Hail to you shady bowers,
 And you green fields of flowers.

Hail to you women fair,
 That make a show so rare
 In cloth as white as milk—
 Be't calico or silk:
 Good morning, Life—and all
 Things glad and beautiful.

DAYS TOO SHORT

When primroses are out in Spring,
 And small, blue violets come between;
 When merry birds sing on boughs green,
 And rills, as soon as born, must sing;

When butterflies will make side-leaps,
 As though escaped from Nature's hand
 Ere perfect quite; and bees will stand
 Upon their heads in fragrant deeps;

When small clouds are so silvery white
 Each seems a broken summèd moon—
 When such things are, this world too soon,
 For me, doth wear the veil of Night.

THE MOON

Thy beauty haunts me heart and soul,
 O thou fair Moon, so close and bright;
 Thy beauty makes me like the child
 That cries aloud to own thy light:
 The little child that lifts each arm
 To press thee to her bosom warm.

Though there are birds that sing this night
 With thy white beams across their throats,
 Let my deep silence speak for me
 More than for them their sweetest notes:
 Who worships thee till music fails
 Is greater than thy nightingales.

THE VILLAIN

While joy gave clouds the light of stars,
 That beamed where'er they looked;
 And calves and lambs had tottering knees,
 Excited, while they sucked;
 While every bird enjoyed his song,
 Without one thought of harm or wrong—
 I turned my head and saw the wind,
 Not far from where I stood,
 Dragging the corn by her golden hair,
 Into a dark and lonely wood.

THE EXAMPLE

Here's an example from
A Butterfly;
That on a rough, hard rock
Happy can lie;
Friendless and all alone
On this unsweetened stone.

Now let my bed be hard,
No care take I;
I'll make my joy like this Small Butterfly,
Whose happy heart has power
To make a stone a flower.

THE TWO STARS

Day has her star, as well as Night,
One star is black, the other white.
I saw a white star burn and pant
And swirl with such a wildness, once—
That I stood still, and almost stared Myself into a trance!

The star of Day, both seen and heard,
Is but a little, English bird
The Lark, whose wings beat time to his Wild rapture, sings, high overhead;
When silence comes, we almost fear
That Earth receives its dead.

THE DOG

The dog was there, outside her door,
She gave it food and drink,
She gave it shelter from the cold:
It was the right young Molly robbed
An old fool of his gold.

"Molly," I said, "you'll go to hell—"
And yet I half believed

That ugly, famished, tottering cur
Would bark outside the gates of Heaven,
To open them for Her!

JENNY WREN

Her sight is short, she comes quite near;
A foot to me's a mile to her;
And she is known as Jenny Wren,
The smallest bird in England. When I heard that little bird at first,
Methought her frame would surely burst
With earnest song. Olt had I seen
Her running under leaves so green,
Or in the grass when fresh and wet,
As though her wings she would forget.
And, seeing this, I said to her—
"My pretty runner, you prefer
To be a thing to run unheard
Through leaves and grass, and not a bird!"
'Twas then she burst, to prove me wrong,
Into a sudden storm of song,
So very loud and earnest, I
Feared she would break her heart and die.
"Nay, nay," I laughed, "be you no thing
To run unheard, sweet scold, but sing!
O I could hear your voice near me,
Above the din in that oak tree,
When almost all the twigs on top
Had starlings chattering without stop."

AMBITION

I had Ambition, by which sin
The angels fell;
I climbed and, step by step, O Lord,
Ascended into Hell.

Returning now to peace and quiet,
And made more wise,
Let my descent and fall, O Lord,
Be into Paradise.

THE HERMIT

What moves that lonely man is not the boom
Of waves that break against the cliff so strong;
Nor roar of thunder, when that traveling voice
Is caught by rocks that carry far along.

'Tis not the groan of oak tree in its prime,
 When lightning strikes its solid heart to dust.
 Nor frozen pond when, melted by the sun,
 It suddenly doth break its sparkling crust.

What moves that man is when the blind bat taps
 His window where he sits alone at night;
 Or when the small bird sounds like some great beast
 Among the dead, dry leaves so frail and light;
 Or when the moths on his night-pillow beat
 Such heavy blows he fears they'll break his bones;
 Or when a mouse inside the papered walls,
 Comes like a tiger crunching through the stones.

WHEN YON FULL MOON

When yon full moon's with her white fleet of stars,
 And but one bird makes music in the grove;
 When you and I are breathing side by side,
 Where our two bodies make one shadow, love;
 Not for her beauty will I praise the moon,
 But that she lights thy purer face and throat;
 The only praise I'll give the nightingale
 Is that she draws from thee a richer note.

For, blinded with thy beauty, I am filled,
 Like Saul of Tarsus, with a greater light;
 When he had heard that warning voice in Heaven,
 And lost his eyes to find a deeper sight.

Come, let us sit in that deep silence then,
 Launched on love's rapids, with our passions proud,
 That makes all music hollow—though the lark
 Raves in his windy heights above a cloud.

SHEEP

When I was once in Baltimore,
 A man came up to me and cried,
 "Come, I have eighteen hundred sheep,
 And we will sail on Tuesday's tide."

"If you will sail with me, young man,
 I'll pay you fifty shillings down;
 These eighteen hundred sheep I take
 From Baltimore to Glasgow town."

He paid me fifty shillings down,
 I sailed with eighteen hundred sheep;

We soon had cleared the harbor's mouth,
 We soon were in the salt sea deep.

The first night we were out at sea
 Those sheep were quiet in their mind;
 The second night they cried with fear—
 They smelt no pastures in the wind.

They sniffed, poor things, for their green fields,
 They cried so loud I could not sleep;
 For fifty thousand shillings down
 I would not sail again with sheep.

THE MIND'S LIBERTY

The mind, with its own eyes and ears,
May for these others have no care;
No matter where this body is,
The mind is free to go elsewhere.
My mind can be a sailor, when
This body's still confined to land;
And turn these mortals into trees,
That walk in Fleet Street or the Strand.

So, when I'm passing Charing Cross,
Where porters work both night and day,
I oftentimes hear sweet Malpas Brook,
That flows thrice fifty miles away.
And when I'm passing near St. Paul's,
I see, beyond the dome and crowd,
Twm Barlum, that green pap in Gwent,
With its dark nipple in a cloud.

A GREAT TIME

Sweet Chance, that led my steps abroad,
Beyond the town, where wild flowers
grow—
A rainbow and a cuckoo, Lord!
How rich and great the times are now!
Know, all ye sheep
And cows that keep
On staring that I stand so long
In grass that's wet from heavy rain—
A rainbow and a cuckoo's song
May never come together again;
May never come
This side the tomb.

THE ELEMENTS

No house of stone
Was built for me;
When the Sun shines—
I am a bee.

No sooner comes
The Rain so warm,
I come to light—
I am a worm.

When the Winds blow,
I do not strip,
But set my sails—
I am a ship.

When Lightning comes,
It plays with me
And I with it—
I am a tree.

When drowned men rise
At Thunder's word,
Sings Nightingale—
I am a bird.

LEAVES

Peace to these little broken leaves,
That strew our common ground;
That chase their tails, like silly dogs,
As they go round and round.

For though in winter boughs are bare,
Let us not once forget
Their summer glory, when these leaves
Caught the great Sun in their strong net;
And made him, in the lower air,
Tremble—no bigger than a star!

SONGS OF JOY

Sing out, my Soul, thy songs of joy;
Such as a happy bird will sing
Beneath a Rainbow's lovely arch
In early spring.

Think not of Death in thy young days;
Why shouldst thou that grim tyrant fear,
And fear him not when thou art old,
And he is near.

Strive not for gold, for greedy fools
Measure themselves by poor men never;
Their standards still being richer men,
Makes them poor ever.

Train up thy mind to feel content,
What matters then how low thy store!
What we enjoy, and not possess,
Makes rich or poor.

Filled with sweet thought, then happy I
Take not my state from others' eyes;
What's in my mind—not on my flesh
Or theirs—I prize.

Sing, happy Soul, thy songs of joy;
 Such as a Brook sings in the wood,
 That all night had been strengthened by Heaven's purer flood.

TO A LADY FRIEND

Since you have turned unkind,
 Then let the truth be known:
 We poets give our praise
 To any weed or stone,
 Or sulking bird that in
 The cold, sharp wind is dumb;
 To this, or that, or you—
 Whatever's first to come.

You came my way the first,
 When the life-force in my blood—
 Coming from none knows where—
 Had reached its highest flood;
 A time when anything,
 No matter old or new,
 Could bring my song to birth—
 Sticks, bones, or rags, or you!

LEISURE

What is this life if, full of care,
 We have no time to stand and stare.

No time to stand beneath the boughs
 And stare as long as sheep or cows.

No time to see, when woods we pass,
 Where squirrels hide their nuts in grass.

No time to see, in broad daylight,
 Streams full of stars, like skies at night.

No time to turn at Beauty's glance,
 And watch her feet, how they can dance.

No time to wait till her mouth can
 Enrich that smile her eyes began.

A poor life this if, full of care,
 We have no time to stand and stare.

J. M. Synge

JOHN M. SYNGE, the most brilliant star of the Celtic revival, was born at Rathfarnham, near Dublin, in 1871, his maternal grandfather, Robert Traill, being famous for a splendid translation of Josephus. As a child in Wicklow, Synge was already fascinated by the strange idioms and rhythmic speech he heard there, a native utterance which was his delight and which was rare material for his greatest work. He did not use this folk-language merely as he heard it, he was an artist first, and, as an artist, he bent and shaped the rough matter, selecting with fastidiousness, so that in his plays every speech is, as he himself declared, all good speech should be, "as fully flavored as a nut or apple." Even in The Tinker's Wedding (1907), the least important of his plays, Synge's peculiarly inflected sentences vivify every scene; one is arrested by snatches of illuminated prose like:

"That's a sweet tongue you have, Sarah Casey; but if sleep's a grand thing, it's a grand thing to be waking up a day the like of this, when there's a warm sun in it, and a kind of air, and you'll hear the cuckoos singing and crying out on the top of the hill."

For some time, Synge's career was uncertain. He went to Germany half intending to become a professional musician. There he studied the theory of music, perfecting himself meanwhile in Gaelic and Hebrew, winning prizes in both of these languages. He took up Hcine with great interest, familiarized himself with the peasant-dramas of Anzengruber, and was planning to translate the ballads of the old German minnesingers into Anglo-Irish dialect. Then he went to Paris.

Yeats found him in France in 1898 and advised him to go to the Aran Islands, to live there as if he were one of the people. "Express a life," said Yeats, "that has never found expression." Synge went. He became part of the life of Aran, living upon salt fish and eggs, talking Irish for the most part, but listening also to that beautiful English which, to quote Yeats again, "has grown up in Irish-speaking districts and takes its vocabulary from the time of Malory and of the translators of the Bible, but its idiom and vivid metaphor from Irish." The result of this close contact can be seen in five dramas which are like nothing produced in Synge's own time; in them the imagination of the artist is linked with the imaginings of the people.

In Riders to the Sea (1903), The Well of the Saints (1905), and The Playboy of the Western World (1907), there is a richness of imagery, a new language startling in its vigor; a wildness and passion that contrast strangely with the suave mysticism and delicate spirituality of the playwright's associates in the Irish Theatre.

Synge's Poems and Translations (1910), a volume which was not issued until after his death, contains not only his few hard and earthy verses, but also the famous preface embodying his theory of poetry. The translations, which have been rendered in a highly intensified prose, are as racy as anything in his plays; his versions of Villon and Petrarch are remarkable for their adherence to the original though they radiate the adapter's own personality.

Synge died of an old illness, just as his reputation had broken down borders, at a private hospital in Dublin, March 24, 1909.

P R E L U D E

Still south I went and west and south again,
Through Wicklow from the morning till the night,
And, far from cities and the sights of men,
Lived with the sunshine and the moon's delight.

I knew the stars, the flowers, and the birds,
The gray and wintry sides of many glens,
And did but half remember human words,
In converse with the mountains, moors and fens.

B E G - I N N I S H

Bring Kateen-beug and Maurya Jude
To dance in Beg-Innish,<sup>1</sup>
And when the lads (they're in Dunquin)
Have sold their crabs and fish,
Wave fawny shawls and call them in,
And call the little girls who spin,
And seven weavers from Dunquin,
To dance in Beg-Innish.

<sup>1</sup> The accent is on the last syllable.

I'll play you jigs, and Maurice Kean,
 Where nets are laid to dry,
 I've silken strings would draw a dance
 From girls are lame or shy;
 Four strings I've brought from Spain and France
 To make your long men skip and prance,
 Till stars look out to see the dance
 Where nets are laid to dry.

We'll have no priest or peeler in
 To dance in Beg-Innish;
 But we'll have drink from M'riarty Jim
 Rowed round while gannets fish,
 A keg with porter to the brim,
 That every lad may have his whim,
 Till we up sails with M'riarty Jim
 And sail from Beg-Innish.

IN KERRY

We heard the thrushes by the shore and sea,
 And saw the golden stars' nativity,
 Then round we went the lane by Thomas Flynn,
 Across the church where bones lie out and in;
 And there I asked beneath a lonely cloud
 Of strange delight, with one bird singing loud,
 What change you'd wrought in graveyard, rock and sea,
 To wake this new wild paradise for me. . . .
 Yet knew no more than knew those merry sins
 Had built this stack of thigh-bones, jaws and shins.

A QUESTION

I asked if I got sick and died, would you
 With my black funeral go walking too,
 If you'd stand close to hear them talk or pray
 While I'm let down in that steep bank of clay.

And, No, you said, for if you saw a crew
 Of living idiots pressing round that new
 Oak coffin—they alive, I dead beneath
 That board—you'd rave and rend them with your teeth.

ON AN ISLAND

You've plucked a curlew, drawn a hen,
 Washed the shirts of seven men,
 You've stuffed my pillow, stretched the sheet,
 And filled the pan to wash your feet,

You've cooped the pullets, wound the clock,
 And rinsed the young men's drinking crock;
 And now we'll dance to jigs and reels,
 Nailed boots chasing girls' naked heels,
 Until your father'll start to snore,
 And Jude, now you're married, will stretch on the floor.

D R E A D

Beside a chapel I'd a room looked down,
 Where all the women from the farms and town
 On Holy-days and Sundays used to pass
 To marriages, and christenings, and to Mass.

Then I sat lonely watching score and score,
 Till I turned jealous of the Lord next door. . . .
 Now by this window, where there's none can see,
 The Lord God's jealous of yourself and me.

I N M A Y

In a nook
 That opened south,
 You and I
 Lay mouth to mouth.

A snowy gull
 And sooty daw
 Came and looked
 With many a caw;

"Such," I said,
 "Are I and you,
 When you've kissed me
 Black and blue!"

A T R A N S L A T I O N F R O M P E T R A R C H

(He is Jealous of the Heavens and the Earth)

What a grudge I am bearing the earth that has its arms about her, and is holding that face away from me, where I was finding peace from great sadness.

What a grudge I am bearing the Heavens that are after taking her, and shutting her in with greediness, the Heavens that do push their bolt against so many.

What a grudge I am bearing the blessed saints that have got her sweet company, that I am always seeking; and what a grudge I am bearing against Death, that is standing in her two eyes, and will not call me with a word.

A TRANSLATION FROM WALTER VON DER VOGELWEIDE

I never set my two eyes on a head was so fine as your head, but I'd no way to be looking down into your heart.

It's for that I was tricked out and out—that was the thanks I got for being so steady in my love.

I tell you, if I could have laid my hands on the whole set of the stars, the moon and the sun along with it, by Christ I'd have given the lot to her. No place have I set eyes on the like of her; she's bad to her friends, and gay and playful with those she'd have a right to hate. I ask you can that behaviour have a good end come to it?

TWO TRANSLATIONS FROM VILLON

I

(Prayer of the Old Woman, Villon's Mother)

Mother of God that's Lady of the Heavens, take myself, the poor sinner, the way I'll be along with them that's chosen.

Let you say to your own Son that He'd have a right to forgive my share of sins, when it's the like He's done, many's the day, with big and famous sinners. I'm a poor aged woman, was never at school, and is no scholar with letters, but I've seen pictures in the chapel with Paradise on one side, and harps and pipes in it, and the place on the other side, where sinners do be boiled in torment; the one gave me great joy, the other a great fright and scaring; let me have the good place, Mother of God, and it's in your faith I'll live always.

It's yourself that bore Jesus, that has no end or death, and He the Lord Almighty, that took our weakness and gave Himself to sorrows, a young and gentle man. It's Himself is our Lord surely, and it's in that faith I'll live always.

(In Old Woman's Lamentations)

The man I had a love for—a great rascal would kick me in the gutter—is dead thirty years and over it, and it is I am left behind, grey and aged. When I do be minding the good days I had, minding what I was one time, and what it is I'm come to, and when I do look on my own self, poor and dry, and pinched together, it wouldn't be much would set me raging in the streets.

Where is the round forehead I had, and the fine hair, and the two eyebrows, and the eyes with a big gay look out of them would bring folly from a great scholar? Where is my straight, shapely nose, and two ears, and my chin with a valley in it, and my lips were red and open?

Where are the pointed shoulders were on me, and the long arms and nice hands to them? Where is my bosom was as white as any, or my straight rounded sides?

It's the way I am this day—my forehead is gone away into furrows, the hair of my head is grey and whitish, my eyebrows are tumbled from me, and my two eyes have died out within my head—those eyes that would be laughing to the men—my nose has a hook on it, my ears are hanging down, and my lips are sharp and skinny.

That's what's left over from the beauty of a right woman—a bag of bones, and legs the like of two shrivelled sausages going beneath it.

It's of the like of that we old hags do be thinking, of the good times are gone away from us, and we crouching on our hunkers by a little fire of twigs, soon kindled and soon spent, we that were the pick of many.

QUEENS

Seven dog-days we let pass
 Naming Queens in Glenmacnass,
 All the rare and royal names
 Wormy sheepskin yet retains:
 Etain, Helen, Maeve, and Fand,
 Golden Deirdre's tender hand;
 Bert, the big-foot, sung by Villon,
 Cassandra, Ronsard found in Lyon.
 Queens of Sheba, Meath, and Connaught,
 Coifed with crown, or gaudy bonnet;
 Queens whose finger once did stir men,
 Queens were eaten of fleas and vermin,
 Queens men drew like Mona Lisa,
 Or slew with drugs in Rome and Pisa.
 We named Lucrezia Clevelli,
 And Titian's lady with amber belly,
 Queens acquainted in learned sin,
 Jane of Jewry's slender shin:
 Queens who cut the bogs of Glanna,
 Judith of Scripture, and Gloriana,
 Queens who wasted the East by proxy,
 Or drove the ass-cart, a tinker's doxy.
 Yet these are rotten—I ask their pardon—
 And we've the sun on rock and garden;
 These are rotten, so you're the Queen
 Of all are living, or have been.

TO THE OAKS OF GLEN CREE

My arms are round you, and I lean
 Against you, while the lark
 Sings over us, and golden lights and green
 Shadows are on your bark.

There'll come a season when you'll stretch
 Black boards to cover me;
 Then in Mount Jerome I will lie, poor wretch,
 With worms eternally.

Ralph Hodgson

RALPH HODGSON was born in Yorkshire in 1872. Though he has been most reticent regarding the facts of his life, separating the poet from the casual man by the intimation that "the poet should live in his poetry," this much has been gathered: He lived for a while in America; he worked as a pressman in Fleet Street; he was a professional draughtsman, employed on the pictorial staff of an evening paper; he edited Fry's Magazine; he has bred bull terriers and, as a leading authority, has judged them; pugilism is one of his private enthusiasms. In 1924, Hodgson accepted an invitation to visit Japan as lecturer in English literature at Sendai University, about two hundred miles from Tokio. In 1928 the invitation was renewed and again accepted. In 1940 Hodgson came to America and bought a farm near Canton, Ohio.

Although Hodgson has earned a livelihood in many capacities, he kept his writing severely apart; he refused to stain his pen with hack-work of any sort. He has given only his highest moments to his art, believing with Housman that lyric poetry—and Hodgson is one of the purest lyric poets of his age—is not a casual recreation. Writing little and publishing less, Hodgson was unknown until he was thirty-six; his first book, The Last Blackbird and Other Lines, appeared in 1907. In 1913, he went into partnership with Lovat Fraser and Holbrook Jackson to publish broadsides and chapbooks; many of his most famous poems appeared in the exquisite booklets issued by their press and illustrated by Fraser, "The Sign of Flying Fame." Eve, The Bull, The Song of Honor, The Mystery and Other Poems (1913-1914) found a wide circle of delighted readers in this format. A collected edition (entitled simply Poems) was published in 1917 and reissued in America some months later.

Hodgson's verses, full of the love of all natural things, a love that goes out to "an idle rainbow

No less than laboring-seas," establish, like Davies' and De la Mare's, the wonder of essentially simple objects, or they (as in "Time, You Old Gypsy Man") personify abstractions.

One of the most graceful of word-magicians, Ralph Hodgson will retain his freshness as long as there are lovers of fresh and timeless songs. It is difficult to think of any showing of contemporary English poetry that could omit "Eve," "The Bull," "The Song of Honor," and that memorable snatch of music, "Time, You Old Gypsy Man." One succumbs to the charm of "Eve" at the first reading; here is the oldest of all legends told with a surprising simplicity and still more surprising difference. This Eve is neither the conscious sinner nor the symbolic Mother of men; she is, in Hodgson's candid lines, any young English country girl filling her basket, regarding the world and the serpent itself with a frank and childlike wonder.

Outstanding in Hodgson's work is his sympathy with animal life. This wide humanitarianism is implicit in poems like "The Bull," but it is explicit in his outrage against the slaughter of birds for fine feathers ("Stupidity Street") and the irony of "The Bells of Heaven."

Influences are far to seek in this work, although one scents rather than sees a trace of Christina Rossetti's "Goblin Market" in "Eve" and Christopher Smart's

"Song to David" in "The Song of Honor." While Hodgson's poetry remains in the tradition, making no pretense to singularity or even originality, it has, because of an inherent candor, the spontaneity of a new genre.

REASON

Reason has moons, but moons not hers
 Lie mirrored on her sea,
 Confusing her astronomers,
 But O! delighting me.

EVE

Eve, with her basket, was Deep in the bells and grass,
 Wading in bells and grass
 Up to her knees.
 Picking a dish of sweet
 Berries and plums to eat,
 Down in the bells and grass
 Under the trees.

Mute as a mouse in a
 Corner the cobra lay,
 Curled round a bough of the Cinnamon tall. . . .
 Now to get even and Humble proud heaven and Now was the moment or Never at all.

"Eval!" Each syllable
 Light as a flower fell,
 "Eval!" he whispered the Wondering maid,
 Soft as a bubble sung
 Out of a linnet's lung,
 Soft and most silverly
 "Eval!" he said.

Picture that orchard sprite;
 Eve, with her body white,
 Supple and smooth to her
 Slim finger tips; •
 Wondering, listening,
 Listening, wondering,
 Eve with a berry
 Half-way to her lips.

Oh, had our simple Eve
 Seen through the make-believe!
 Had she but known the Pretender he was!

Out of the boughs he came,
 Whispering still her name,
 Tumbling in twenty rings
 Into the grass.

Here was the strangest pair
 In the world anywhere,
 Eve in the bells and grass
 Kneeling, and he
 Telling his story low. . . .
 Singing birds saw them go
 Down the dark path to The Blasphemous Tree.

Oh, what a clatter when Titmouse and Jenny Wren
 Saw him successful and
 Taking his leave!
 How the birds rated him,
 How they all hated him!
 How they all pitied
 Poor motherless Eve!

Picture her crying
 Outside in the lane,
 Eve, with no dish of sweet
 Berries and plums to eat,
 Haunting the gate of the Orchard in vain. . . .
 Picture the lewd delight
 Under the hill tonight—
 "Eval!" the toast goes round,
 "Eval!" again.

TIME, YOU OLD GYPSY MAN

Time, you old gypsy man,
 Will you not stay,
 Put up your caravan
 Just for one day?

All things I'll give you
 Will you be my guest,
 Bells for your jennet
 Of silver the best,
 Goldsmiths shall beat you
 A great golden ring,
 Peacocks shall bow to you,
 Little boys sing,
 Oh, and sweet girls will
 Festoon you with may.
 Time, you old gypsy,
 Why hasten away?

Last week in Babylon,
 Last night in Rome,
 Morning, and in the crush
 Under Paul's dome;
 Under Paul's dial
 You tighten your rein—
 Only a moment,
 And off once again;

Off to some city
 Now blind in the womb,
 Off to another
 Ere that's in the tomb.

Time, you old gypsy man,
 Will you not stay,
 Put up your caravan
 Just for one day?

THE BIRDCATCHER

When flighting time is on, I go
 With clap-net and decoy, .
 A-fowling after goldfinches
 And other birds of joy;

I lurk among the thickets of
 The Heart where they are bred,
 And catch the twittering beauties at
 They fly into my Head.

THE MOOR

The world's gone forward to its latest fair
 And dropt an old man done with by the way,
 To sit alone among the bats and stare
 At miles and miles and miles of moorland bare
 Lit only with last shreds of dying day.

Not all the world, not all the world's gone by:
 Old man, you're like to meet one traveler still,
 A journeyman well kenned for courtesy
 To all that walk at odds with life and limb;
 If this be he now riding up the hill
 Maybe he'll stop and take you up with him. . . .

“But thou art Death?” “Of Heavenly Seraphim
 None else to seek thee out and bid thee come.”
 “I only care that thou art come from Him,
 Unbody me—I’m tired—and get me home.”

AFTER

“How fared you when you mortal were?
 “What did you see on my peopled star?”
 “Oh well enough,” I answered her,
 “It went for me where mortals are!

“I saw blue flowers and the merlin’s flight
 “And the rime on the wintry tree,
 “Blue doves I saw and summer light
 “On the wings of the cinnamon bee.”

THE SONG OF HONOR

I climbed the hill as light fell short,
 And rooks came home in scramble sort,
 And filled the trees and flapped and fought
 And sang themselves to sleep;
 An owl from nowhere with no sound
 Swung by and soon was nowhere found,
 I heard him calling half-way round,
 Holloing loud and deep;
 A pair of stars, faint pins of light,
 Then many a star, sailed into sight,
 And all the stars, the flower of night,
 Were round me at a leap;
 To tell how still the valleys lay
 I heard the watchdog miles away
 And bells of distant sheep.
 I heard no more of bird or bell,
 The mastiff in a slumber fell,
 I stared into the sky,
 As wondering men have always done
 Since beauty and the stars were one,
 Though none so hard as I.

It seemed, so still the valleys were,
 As if the whole world knelt at prayer,
 Save me and me alone;
 So pure and wide that silence was
 I feared to bend a blade of grass,
 And there I stood like stone.

There, sharp and sudden, there I heard—
Ah! some wild lovesick singing bird
Woke singing in the trees?
The nightingale and bubble-wren
Were in the English greenwood then,
And you heard one of these?
 The babble-wren and nightingale
 Sang in the Abyssinian vale
 That season of the year!
 Yet, true enough, I heard them plain,
 I heard them both again, again,
 As sharp and sweet and clear
 As if the Abyssinian tree
 Had thrust a bough across the sea,
 Had thrust a bough across to me
 With music for my ear!

I heard them both, and, oh! I heard
 The song of every singing bird
 That sings beneath the sky,

And with the song of lark and wren
 The song of mountains, moths and men
 And seas and rainbows vie!

I heard the universal choir,
 The Sons of Light exalt their Sire
 With universal song,
 Earth's lowliest and loudest notes,
 Her million times ten million throats
 Exalt Him loud and long,
 And lips and lungs and tongues of Grace
 From every part and every place
 Within the shining of His face,
 The universal throng

I heard the hymn of being sound
 From every well of honor found
 In human sense and soul.
 The song of poets when they write
 The testament of Beautyspite
 Upon a flying scroll,
 The song of painters when they take
 A burning brush for Beauty's sake
 And limn her features whole—

The song of men divinely wise
 Who look and see in starry skies
 Not stars so much as robins' eyes,
 And when these pale away
 Hear flocks of shiny pleiades
 Among the plums and apple trees
 Sing in the summer day—

The song of all both high and low
 To some blest vision true,
 The song of beggars when they throw
 The crust of pity all men owe
 To hungry sparrows in the snow,
 Old beggars hungry too—
 The song of kings of kingdoms when
 They rise above their fortune men,
 And crown themselves anew—

The song of courage, heart and will
 And gladness in a fight,
 Of men who face a hopeless hill
 With sparkling and delight,
 The bells and bells of song that ring
 Round banners of a cause or king
 From armies bleeding white—

The song of sailors every one
 When monstrous tide and tempest run
 At ships like bulls at red,
 When stately ships are twirled and spun
 Like whipping tops and help there's none
 And mighty ships ten thousand ton
 Go down like lumps of lead—

And song of fighters stern as they
 At odds with fortune night and day,
 Crammed up in cities grim and gray
 As thick as bees in hives,
 Hosannas of a lowly throng
 Who sing unconscious of their song,
 Whose lips are in their lives—

And song of some at holy war
 With spells and ghouls more dread by far
 Than deadly seas and cities are,
 Or hordes of quarreling kings—
 The song of fighters great and small
 The song of petty fighters all
 And high heroic things—

The song of lovers—who knows how
 Twitched up from place and time
 Upon a sigh, a blush, a vow,
 A curve or hue of cheek or brow,
 Borne up and off from here and now
 Into the void sublime!

And crying loves and passions still
 In every key from soft to shrill
 And numbers never done,
 Dog-loyalties to faith and friend,
 And loves like Ruth's of old no end,
 And intermissions none—

And burst on burst for beauty and
 For numbers not behind,
 From men whose love of motherland
 Is like a dog's for one dear hand,
 Sole, selfless, boundless, blind—
 And song of some with hearts beside
 For men and sorrows far and wide,
 Who watch the world with pity and pride
 And warm to all mankind—

And endless joyous music rise
 From children at their play,

And endless soaring lullabies
 From happy, happy mothers' eyes,
 And answering crows and baby cries,
 How many who shall say!

And many a song as wondrous well
 With pangs and sweets intolerable
 From lonely hearths too gray to tell,
 God knows how utter gray!

And song from many a house of care
 When pain has forced a footing there
 And there's a Darkness on the stair
 Will not be turned away—

And song—that song whose singers come
 With old kind tales of pity from
 The Great Compassion's lips,
 That make the bells of Heaven to peal
 Round pillows frosty with the feel
 Of Death's cold finger tips—

The song of men all sorts and kinds,
 As many tempers, moods and minds
 As leaves are on a tree,
 As many faiths and castes and creeds,
 As many human bloods and breeds
 As in the world may be;

The song of each and all who gaze
 On Beauty in her naked blaze,
 Or see her dimly in a haze,
 Or get her light in fitful rays
 And tiniest needles even,
 The song of all not wholly dark,
 Not wholly sunk in stupor stark
 Too deep for groping Heaven—

And alleluias sweet and clear
 And wild with beauty men mishear,
 From choirs of song as near and dear
 To Paradise as they,
 The everlasting pipe and flute
 Of wind and sea and bird and brute,
 And lips deaf men imagine mute
 In wood and stone and clay,
 The music of a lion strong
 That shakes a hill a whole night long,
 A hill as loud as he,
 The twitter of a mouse among
 Melodious greenery,
 The ruby and the night-owl's song,
 The nightingale's—all three,

The song of life that wells and flows
From every leopard, lark and rose
And everything that gleams or goes
Lack-luster in the sea.

I heard it all, each, every note
Of every lung and tongue and throat,
Aye, every rhythm and rhyme
Of everything that lives and loves
And upward ever upward moves
From lowly to sublime!
Earth's multitudinous Sons of Light,
I heard them lift their lyric might
With each and every chanting sprite
That lit the sky that wondrous night
As far as eye could climb!

I heard it all, I heard the whole
Harmonious hymn of being roll
Up through the chapel of my soul
And at the altar die,
And in the awful quiet then
Myself I heard, Amen, Amen,
Amen I heard me cry!
I heard it all and then although
I caught my flying senses, oh,
A dizzy man was I!
I stood and stared; the sky was lit,
The sky was stars all over it,
I stood, I knew not why,
Without a wish, without a will,
I stood upon that silent hill
And stared into the sky until
My eyes were blind with stars and still
I stared into the sky.

THE LATE, LAST ROOK

The old gilt vane and spire receive
The last beam eastward striking;
The first shy bat to peep at eve
Has found her to his liking.
The western heaven is dull and gray,
The last red glow has followed day.

The late, last rook is housed and will
With cronies lie till morrow;
If there's a rook loquacious still
In dream he hunts a furrow,
And flaps behind a specter team,
Or ghostly scarecrows walk his dream.

THE BULL

See an old unhappy bull,
Sick in soul and body both,
Slouching in the undergrowth
Of the forest beautiful,
Banished from the herd he led,
Bulls and cows a thousand head.

Cranes and gaudy parrots go
Up and down the burning sky;
Tree-top cats purr drowsily
In the dim-day green below;
And troops of monkeys, nutting some,
All disputing, go and come;
And things abominable sit
Picking ossal buck or swine,
On the mess and over it
Burnished flies and beetles shine,
And spiders big as bladders lie
Under hemlocks ten foot high;

And a dotted serpent curled
Round and round and round a tree,
Yellowing its greenery,
Keeps a watch on all the world,
All the world and this old bull
In the forest beautiful.

Bravely by his fall he came:
One he led, a bull of blood
Newly come to lustihood,
Fought and put his prince to shame,
Snusled and pawed the prostrate head
Tameless even while it bled.

There they left him, every one,
Left him there without a lick,
Left him for the birds to pick,
Left him for the carrion,
Vilely from their bosom cast
Wisdom, worth and love at last.
When the lion left his lair
And roared his beauty through the hills,
And the vultures pecked their quills
And flew into the middle air,
Then this prince no more to reign
Came to life and lived again.
He snuffed the herd in far retreat,
He saw the blood upon the ground,
And snuffed the burning airs around

Still with beevish odors sweet,
While the blood ran down his head
And his mouth ran slaver red.
Pity him, this fallen chief,
All his splendor, all his strength
All his beauty's breadth and length
Dwindled down with shaine and grief,
Half the bull he was before,
Bones and leather, nothing more.

See him standing dewlap-deep
In the rushes at the lake,
Surly, stupid, half asleep,
Waiting for his heart to break
And the birds to join the flies
Feasting at his bloodshot eyes,—
Standing with his head hung down
In a stupor, dreaming things:
Green savannas, jungles brown,
Battlefields and bellowings,
Bulls undone and lions dead
And vultures flapping over head.
Dreaming things: of days he spent
With his mother gaunt and lean
In the valley warm and green,
Full of baby wonderment,
Blinking out of silly eyes
At a hundred mysteries;
Dreaming over once again
How he wandered with a throng
Of bulls and cows a thousand strong,
Wandered on from plain to plain,
Up the hill and down the dale,
Always at his mother's tail;
How he lagged behind the herd,
Lagged and totter'd, weak of limb,
And she turned and ran to him
Blaring at the loathly bird
Stationed always in the skies,
Waiting for the flesh that dies.

Dreaming maybe of a day,
When her drained and drying paps
Turned him to the sweets and saps,
Richer fountains by the way,
And she left the bull she bore
And he looked to her no more;
And his little frame grew stout,
And his little legs grew strong,
And the way was not so long;
And his little horns came out,

And he played at butting trees
And boulder-stones and tortoises,
Joined a game of knobby skulls
With the youngsters of his year,
All the other little bulls,
Learning both to bruise and bear,
Learning how to stand a shock
Like a little bull of rock.

Dreaming of a day less dim,
Dreaming of a time less far,
When the faint but certain star
Of destiny burned clear for him,
And a fierce and wild unrest
Broke the quiet of his breast,
And the gristles of his youth
Hardened in his comely pow,
And he came to fighting growth,
Beat his bull and won his cow,
And flew his tail and trampled off
Past the tallest, vain enough.
And curved about in splendor full
And curved again and snuffed the airs
As who should say, Come out who dares!
And all beheld a bull, a Bull,
And knew that here was surely one
That backed for no bull, fearing none.
And the leader of the herd
Looked and saw, and beat the ground,
And shook the forest with his sound,
Bellowed at the loathly bird
Stationed always in the skies,
Waiting for the flesh that dies.

Dreaming, this old bull forlorn,
Surely dreaming of the hour
When he came to sultan power,
And they owned him master-horn,
Chiefest bull of all among
Bulls and cows a thousand strong,
And in all the trampling herd
Not a bull that barred his way,
Not a cow that said him nay,
Not a bull or cow that err'd
In the furnace of his look
Dared a second, worse rebuke;
Not in all the forest wide,
Jungle, thicket, pasture, fen,
Not another dared him then,
Dared him and again defied;

Not a sovereign buck or boar
Came a second time for more.
Not a serpent that survived
Once the terrors of his hoof,
Risked a second time reproof,
Came a second time and lived,
Not a serpent in its skin
Came again for discipline;

Not a leopard bright as flame,
Flashing fingerhooks of steel,
That a wooden tree might feel,
Met his fury once and came
For a second reprimand,
Not a leopard in the land,
Not a lion of them all,
Not a lion of the hills,
Hero of a thousand kills,
Dared a second fight and fall,
Dared that ram terrific twice,
Paid a second time the price. . . .

Pity him, this dupe of dream,
Leader of the herd again
Only in his dast old brain,
Once again the bull supreme
And bull enough to bear the part
Only in his tameless heart.

Pity him that he must wake.
Even now the swarm of flies
Blackening his bloodshot eyes
Bursts and blusters round the lake,
Scattered from the feast half-fed,
By great shadows overhead,
And the dreamer turns away
From his visionary herds
And his splendid yesterday,
Turns to meet the loathly birds
Flocking round him from the skies,
Waiting for the flesh that dies.

THE BELLS OF HEAVEN

"Twould ring the bells of Heaven
The wildest peal for years,
If Parson lost his senses
And people came to theirs,
And he and they together

Knelt down with angry prayers
For tamed and shabby tigers
And dancing dogs and bears,
And wretched, blind pit ponies,
And little hunted hares.

THE HAMMERS

Noise of hammers once I heard
Many hammers, busy hammers,
Beating, shaping night and day,
Shaping, beating dust and clay
To a palace; saw it reared;
Saw the hammers laid away.

And I listened, and I heard
Hammers beating, night and day,
In the palace newly reared,
Beating it to dust and clay:
Other hammers, muffled hammers,
Silent hammers of decay.

STUPIDITY STREET

I saw with open eyes
Singing birds sweet
Sold in the shops
For the people to eat,
Sold in the shops of Stupidity Street.

I saw in a vision
The worm in the wheat,
And in the shops nothing
For people to eat:
Nothing for sale in Stupidity Street.

THE MYSTERY

He came and took me by the hand
Up to a red rose tree,
He kept His meaning to Himself
But gave a rose to me.

I did not pray Him to say bare
The mystery to me,
Enough the rose was Heaven to smell,
And His own face to see.

THE GIPSY GIRL

"Come, try your skill, kind gentlemen,
A penny for three tries!"
Some threw and lost, some threw and won
A ten-a-penny prize.

She was a tawny gipsy girl,
A girl of twenty years,
I liked her for the lumps of gold
That jingled from her ears;

I liked the flaring yellow scarf
Bound loose about her throat,

I liked her showy purple gown
And flashy velvet coat.

A man came up, too loose of tongue,
And said no good to her;
She did not blush as Saxons do,
Or turn upon the cur;

She fawned and whined, "Sweet gentleman
A penny for three tries!"
—But, oh, the den of wild things in
The darkness of her eyes!

GHOUL CARE

Sour fiend, go home and tell the Pit
For once you met your master,—
A man who carried in his soul
Three charms against disaster,
The Devil and disaster.

Away, away, and tell the tale
And start your whelps a-whining,
Say "In the greenwood of his soul
A lizard's eye was shining,
A little eye kept shining."

Away, away, and salve your sores,
And set your hags a-groaning,
Say "In the greenwood of his soul
A drowsy bee was droning,
A dreamy bee was droning."

Prodigious Bat! Go start the walls
Of Hell with horror ringing,
Say "In the greenwood of his soul
There was a goldfinch singing,
A pretty goldfinch singing."

And then come back, come, if you please,
A fiercer ghoul and ghaster,
With all the glooms and smuts of Hell
Behind you, I'm your master!
You know I'm still your master.

Ford Madox (Hueffer) Ford

FORD MADOX HUEFFER (who, later in life, became Ford Madox Ford) was born in 1873, the grandson of Ford Madox Brown, a cousin of the Rossettis. He was educated at University College, London, and abroad, but returned to edit The English Review. During his editorship he discovered many unknown writers. After a richly-traveled life he succumbed to a heart attack in France, June 26, 1939.

As an author, Ford first came into prominence as a collaborator of Joseph Conrad on The Inheritors (1901) and Romance (1901). As a novelist in his own right, his fame rests on the Tietjens series: Some Do Not (1924), No More Parades (1925), A Man Could Stand Up (1926) and Last Post (1928). Although utterly different from Galsworthy's cycle, the Tietjens novels prompt inevitable comparison with The Forsyte Saga. Ford's protagonist is a single man, not a family, and he deals with the impact of events in rapid succession on an individual, instead of social forces reacting through a period on a group. With the War as a living backdrop and in a style utterly his own, Ford had projected a figure, nervously intense, dully heroic, and wholly characteristic of his times.

Although known primarily as a novelist, Ford was a true poet at intervals much of his life. Collected Poems (1913), On Heaven and Poems Written on Active Service (1918) and New Poems (1927) show a style that never strives to be "poetic" and is as personal as Ford's prose. Allied to no "school" Ford displays, in such poems as "Gray Matter" and "A House," a definite but unspectacular modernity.

GRAY MATTER

She. They leave us nothing.

He. Still, a little's left.

She. A crabbed, ancient, dried biologist,
Somewhere very far from the sea, closed up from the sky,
Shut in from the leaves, destroys our hopes and us.

He. Why no, our hopes and . . .

She. In his "Erstes Heft"
Page something, I forget the line, he says
That, hidden as deep in the brain as he himself from hope,
There's this gray matter.

He. Why, 'tis there, dear heart.

She. That, if that hidden matter cools, decays,
Dies—what you will—our souls die out as well;
Since, hidden in the millionth of a cell,
Is all we have to give us consciousness.

He. Suppose it true.

She. Ah, never; better die,
Better have never lived than face this mist,
Better have never toiled to such distress.

He. It matters little.

She. Little!—Where shall I,
 The woman, where shall you take part,
 My poet? Where has either of us scope
 In all this dead-dawning century that lacks all faith,
 All hope, all aim, and all the mystery
 That comforteth Since he victorious
 With his cold vapors chill out you and me,
 The woman and the poet?

He. Never, dear.
 For you and I remain,
 The woman and the poet. And soft rain
 Still falls and still the crocus flames,
 The blackbird calls.

She. But half the sweet is gone.
 The voices of our children at their games
 Lack half their ring.

He. Why, never, dear. Out there
 The sea's a cord of silver, still to south
 Beyond the marsh.

She. Aye, but beyond it all,
 And all beneath and all above, half of the glory's done.
 And I and you . . .

He. Why, no. The ancient sun
 Shines as it ever shone, and still your mouth
 Is sweet as of old it was.

She. But what remains?
He. All the old pains,
 And all the old sweet pleasures and the mystery
 Of time, slow travel and unlathomed deep.

She. And then this cold extinction? . . .
He. Dreamless sleep.
She. And nothing matters?

He. All the old, old things.
 Whether to Church or College rings
 The clamorous bell of creeds,
 We, in the lush, far meads,
 Poet and woman, past the city walls,
 Hear turn by turn the burden of their calls,
 Believe what we believe, feel what we feel,
 Like what we list of what they cry within

Cathedral or laborat'ry,
 Since by the revolution of the wheel,
 The one swings under, let us wait content.

She. Yet it is hard.
He. Ah, no. A sure intent,
 For me and you.

The right, true, joyful word, the sweet, true phrase,
 The calling of our children from the woods these garden days
 Remain—These drops of rain have laid the dust
 And in our soft brown seed-beds formed the crust

We needed for our sowings. Bring your seed,
And you shall prick it in, I close the row.
Be sure the little grains your hands have pressed
Tenderly, lovingly, home, shall flourish best.

She. Aye, you are still my poet.

He. Even so

Betwixt the rain and shine Half true's still true
More truly than the thing that's proved and dead.
The sun lends flame to every crocus head
Once more, and we once more must sow and weed
Since in the earth the newly stirring seed
Begins the ancient mystery anew.

"THERE SHALL BE MORE JOY . . ."

The little angels of Heaven
Each wear a long white dress,
And in the tall arcadings
Play ball and play at chess;

With never a soil on their garments,
Not a sigh the whole day long,
Not a bitter note in their pleasure,
Not a bitter note in their song.

But they shall know keener pleasure,
And they shall know joy more rare—
Keener, keener pleasure
When you, my dear, come there.

The little angels of Heaven
Each wear a long white gown,
And they lean over the ramparts
Waiting and looking down.

A HOUSE

(first part)

The House. I am the House!

I resemble
The drawing of a child
That draws "just a house." Two windows and two doors,
Two chimney pots;
Only two floors
Three windows on the upper one; a fourth
Looks towards the north.
I am very simple and mild;
I am very gentle and sad and old.
I have stood too long.

The Tree. I am the great Tree over above this House.

I resemble
The drawing of a child Drawing "just a tree"
The child draws Me!
Heavy leaves, old branches, old knots:
I am more old than the house is old.
I have known nights so cold
I used to tremble;
For the sap was frozen in my branches,
And the mouse,

That stored her nuts in my knot-holes, died. I am strong
 Now . . . Let a storm come wild
 Over the Sussex Wold,
 I no longer fear it.
 I have stood too long!

The Nightingale. I am the Nightingale. The summer through I sit
 In the great tree, watching the house, and throw jewels over it!
 There is no one watching but I; no other soul to waken
 Echoes in this valley night.

The Unborn Son of the House. You are mistaken!
 I am the Son of the House!—
 That shall have silver limbs, and clean straight haunches,
 Lean hips, clean lips and a tongue of gold;
 That shall inherit
 A golden voice, and waken
 A whole world's wonder!

The Nightingale. Young blood! You are right,
 So you and I only
 Listen and watch and waken
 Under

The stars of the night.

The Dog of the House. You are mistaken!
 This house stands lonely.
 Let but a sound sound in the seven acres that surround
 Their sleeping house,
 And I, seeming to sleep, shall awaken.
 Let but a mouse
 Creep in the bracken,
 I seeming to drowse, I shall hearken.
 Let but a shadow darken
 Their threshold; let but a finger
 Lie long or linger,
 Holding their latch:
 I am their Dog. And I watch.
 I am just Dog. And being His hound
 I lie
 All night with my head on my paws,
 Watchful and whist!

The Nightingale. So you and I and their Son and I Watch alone under the stars of the sky.

The Cat of the House. I am the Cat. And you lie!
 I am the Atheist!
 All laws
 I coldly despise.
 I have yellow eyes;
 I am the Cat on the Mat the child draws
 When it first has a pencil to use.

The Milch-goat. I am the Goat. I give milk!

The Cat of the House. I muse
 Over the hearth with my 'minishing eyes
 Until after

The last coal dies.
 Every tunnel of the mouse,
 Every channel of the cricket,
 I have smelt.
 I have felt
 The secret shifting of the moldered rafter,
 And heard
 Every bird in the thicket.
 I see
 You,
 Nightingale up in your tree!

The Nightingale. The night takes a turn towards coldness; the stars

Waver and shake.
 Truly more wake,
 More thoughts are afloat;
 More folk are afoot than I knew!

The Milch-goat. I, even I, am the Goat!

Cat of the House. Enough of your stuff of dust and of mud!

I, born of a race of strange things,
 Of deserts, great temples, great kings,
 In the hot sand where the nightingale never sings!
 Old he-gods of ingle and hearth,
 Young she-gods of fur and of silk—
 Not the mud of the earth—
 Are the things that I dream of!

The Milch-goat. Tibby-Tab, more than you deem of

I dream of when chewing the cud
 For my milk.
 Who was born
 Of a Nan with one horn and a liking for gin
 In the backyard of an inn
 A child of Original Sin,
 With a fleece of spun-silk
 And two horns in the bud—
 I, made in the image of Pan,
 With my corrugate, vicious-cocked horn,
 Now make milk for a child yet unborn.
 That's a come-down!,
 And you with your mouse-colored ruff,
 Discoursing your stuff-of-a-dream,
 Sell your birthright for cream,
 And bolt from a cuff or a frown.
 That's a come-down!
 So let it be! That's enough.

The House. The top star of the Plow now mounts

Up to his highest place;
 The dace
 Hang silent in the pool.
 The night is cool
 Before the dawn. Behind the blind

Dies down the one thin candle.
 Our harried man,
 My lease-of-a-life-long Master,
 Studies against disaster;
 Gropes for some handle
 Against too heavy Fate; pores over his accounts,
 Studying into the morn
 For the sake of his child unborn

The Unborn Son of the House. The vibrant notes of the spheres,

Thin, sifting sounds of the dew,
 I hear. The mist on the meres
 Rising I hear . . . So here's
 To a lad shall be lusty and bold,
 With a voice and a heart ringing true!
 To a house of a livelier hue!

The House. That is true!

I have stood here too long and grown old.

Himself. What is the matter with the wicks?

What on earth's the matter with the wax?

The candle wastes in the draught;

The blind's worn thin!

. . . Thirty-four and four, ten . . .

And ten . . . are forty-nine!

And twenty pun' twelve and six was all

I made by the clover.

It's a month since I laughed:

I have given up wine.

And then . . .

The Income Tax!

The Dog of the House. The mare's got out of the stable!

The Cat of the House. She's able, over and over,

To push up the stable latch . . .

Over and over again. You would say she's a witch,

With a spite on our Man!

The Milch-goat. Heu! Did you see how she ran!

She's after the clover, she's over the ditch,

Doing more harm than a dozen of goats

When there's no one to watch.

Yet she is the sober old mare with her skin full of oats,

Whereas we get dry bracken and heather;

Snatching now and then a scrap of old leather,

Or half an old tin,

As the price of original sin!

Himself. I shall live to sell

The clock from the hall;

I shall have to pawn my old Dad's watch,

Or fell

The last old oak; or sell half the stock . . .

Or all!

Or the oak chest out of the hall.

One or the other—or all.

God, it is hell to be poor

For ever and ever, keeping the Wolf from the door!

The Cat of the House. Wouldn't you say

That Something, heavy and furry and gray,

Was snuffing round the door?

Wouldn't you say

Skinny fingers, stretching from the thicket,

Felt for the latch of the wicket?

Himself. You would almost say

These blows were repercussions

Of an avenging Fate!

But how have we earned them . . .

The sparks that fell on the cornricks and burned them

Still in the ear;

And all the set-backs of the year—

Frost, drought and demurrage,

The tiles blown half o'l the roof?

What is it, what is it all for?

Chastisement of pride? I swear we have no pride!

We ride

Behind an old mare with a flea-bitten hide!

Or over-much love for a year-old bride?

But it's your duty to love your bride! . . . But still,

All the sows that died,

And the cows all going off milk;

The cream coming out under proof;

The hens giving over laying;

The bullocks straying,

Getting pounded over the hill!

It used to be something—cold feet going over

The front of a trench after Stand-to at four!

But these other things—God, how they make you blench!

Aye, these are the pip squeaks that call for Four-in-the-morning courage . . .

May you never know, my wench,

That's asleep up the stair!

Herself (In her sleep) I'll have a kitchen all white tiles;

And a dairy, all marble the shelves and the floor;

And a larder, cream-white and full of air.

I'll have whitewood kegs for the flour,

And blackwood kegs for the rice and barley,

And silvery jugs for the milk and cream . . .

O glorious Me!

And hour by hour by hour by hour,

On piles of cushions from hearth to door,

I'll sit sewing my silken seams,

I'll sit just dreaming my silver dreams;

With a little, mettlesome, brown-legged Charley,

To leave his ploys<sup>1</sup> and come to my knee,
 And question how God can be Three-in-One
 And One-in-Three.
 And all the day and all the day
 Nothing but hoys<sup>2</sup> for my dearest one;
 And no care at all but to kiss and twine;
 And nought to contrive for but ploys and play
 For my son, my son, my son, my son!
 Only at nine,
 With the dinner finished, the men at their wine;
 And the girls in the parlor at forfeits for toffee,
 I'll make such after-dinner coffee . . .
 But it's all like a dream!

Himself. If Dixon could pay! . . . But he never will.

He promised to do it yesterday . . . But poor old Dicky's been through the mill
 And it's late—it's too late to sit railing at Fate!
 He'd pay if he could—but he's got his fix on . . .
 Yet . . . If he could pay—

God!—It would carry us over the day
 Of Herself!

The Clock in the Room. I am the Clock on the Shelf!
 Is . . . Was . . . Is . . . Was!

Too late . . . Because . . . Too late . . . Because . . .
 One! . . . Two! . . . Three! . . . Four!

Himself. Just over The Day and a week or two more!
 And we'd maybe get through.

Not with a hell of a lot
 Of margin to spare . . . But just through!

The Clock in the Hall. One! . . . Two! . . . One! . . . Two!
 As . . . your . . . hours . . . pass
 I re . . . cord them
 Though you . . . waste them
 Or have . . . stored them

ALL . . .

One!
 Two!
 Three!
 Four!
 Begun!
 Half through!
 Let be!
 No more at all!
 I am the Great Clock in the Hall!

<sup>1</sup> Ploys == games, sports.

Walter De la Mare

WALTER (JOHN) DE LA MARE was born at Charlton, in Kent, in 1873. He was educated at St. Paul's school in London and was employed for eighteen years in the English branch of The Standard Oil Company of America. Later he retired to the village of Taplow near London.

His first volume, Songs of Childhood (1902), was published under the pseudonym of "Walter Ramal," an anagram of part of his name. The first volume published under his own name was the novel Henry Brocken (1904), a form to which he returned with phenomenal success in Memoirs of a Midget (1921), a permanent addition to the world's small stock of philosophic fiction.

By 1929 De la Mare was the author of some twenty-three volumes which seem to fall into four categories: (1) The poetry of metaphysical phantasy. (2) The poems to and of children. (3) The mixture of prose and verse achieved in Ding Dong Bell (1924). (4) The introspective prose.

Although not the most important, his most popular verse is that which is centered in the child's sphere. As Harold Williams has written, "De la Mare is the singer of a young and romantic world, understanding and perceiving as a child." This poet paints simple scenes of miniature loveliness; he uses fragments of fairy-like delicacy and, with the least consequential matter, achieves a grace remarkable in its appeal. "In a few words, seemingly artless and unsought" (to quote Williams again) "he can express a pathos or a hope as wide as man's life."

De la Mare is an astonishing joiner of words; in Peacock Pie (1913) and Down-a-Down Derry (1922) he surprises us again and again by transforming what began as a child's nonsense-rhyme into a thrilling snatch of music. A score of times he takes events as casual as the feeding of chickens, or the swallowing of physic, berry-picking, eating, hair-cutting—and turns them into magic. These poems read like lyrics of William Shakespeare rendered by Mother Goose. The trick of revealing the ordinary in whimsical colors, of catching the commonplace off its guard, as in "Martha" and "The Sleeper," is the first of De la Mare's two chief gifts.

This poet's second gift is his sense of the supernatural, of the fantastic other-world that lies on the edges of our consciousness. Sometimes, as in "At the Key-hole" and "The Mocking Fairy," the sinister turns into the lightly macabre; often the unbelievable, as in "Sam" and "Berries," is more homely-natural than the real. The Listeners (1912) is a book that, like all the best of De la Mare, is full of half-heard whispers. Moonlight and mystery seem soaked in the lines, and a cool wind from Nowhere blows over them. That most suggestive of modern verses, "The Listeners," and the brief music of "An Epitaph" are two examples among many. In the first of these poems there is an uncanny splendor. What we have here is the effect, the thrill, the overtones, of a ghost story rather than the narrative itself—the less than half-told adventure of some new Childe Roland heroically challenging a heedless universe. Never have silence and black night been reproduced more creepily, nor has the symbolism of man's courage facing the cryptic riddle of life been more memorably expressed.

De la Mare's chief distinction, however, lies not so much in what he says as in how he says it; he can take outworn words like "thridding," "athwart," "amaranthine" and make them live again in a poetry that is of no time and of all time. He writes, it has been said, as much for antiquity as for posterity; he is a poet who is distinctively in the world and yet not wholly of it.

Motley and Other Poems (1918) was followed by Collected Poems, 1901-1918, published in 1920, and The Veil and Other Poems (1921). Come Hither (1923), a collection apparently designed for children, is actually for mature minds. In all of these—even in the anthology—De la Mare betrays a speculation which is kin to a preoccupation: the paradox of mortality and immortality. Henry Newbolt, in New Paths on Helicon, recognizes this pervading quality, but prefers to call it "an inveterate habit of questioning. . . . Even the descriptions in which he excels are of the nature of a search: he attempts, like the Pre-Raphaelite painters, to pierce by intensity of vision through to the reality behind the visible word."

The Fleeting and Other Poems (1934) displays less of De la Mare's technical virtuosity than its forerunners; the awareness of the dream world, so characteristic of De la Mare, is a little strained and the spirit seems tired. But the vocabulary is still supple, the harmonies delicate and often exquisite. Collected Poems (1941) displays, more effectively than any of De la Mare's separate volumes, the poet's creation of his own limbo, a fitful region between the natural and the supernatural order of things.

It is a curiously remembering quality which characterizes De la Mare. He is spellbound by the magic of dreams—his Behold, This Dreamer (1939) is the largest anthology ever published about dreams "so various in their shocking disregard of our tastes and ideals"—fascinated by the borderland between hallucination and true vision, by the conflict between the outer event and the inner eye, by mystery as mystery. It is as if De la Mare, unable to remain a child, so feared adult reality that his whole work becomes a defense against it, a retreat into bitter-sweet remembrances of things past, into a domain (half faery fantasy, half nightmare reality) where everything is veiled in an unearthly loveliness and the impossible is more likely to happen than not.

It is in this hushed and recessive mood that De la Mare triumphs. Whether he is examining the extra-rational, or harking back to irresponsible childhood and irresistible romance, or exploring territories of spectral solitude, his poetry is soaked in a pervasive and musical melancholy. De la Mare's "motto" may be found in a verse from the old anonymous "Tom o' Bedlam," one of De la Mare's favorite poems.

With a host of furious fancies
Whereof I am commander;
With a burning spear,
And a horse of air,
To the wilderness I wander.

It is as a determined "knight of ghosts" that De la Mare journeys into the terra incognita of time and spaciousness. He is one of the poets who have ventured

"ten leagues beyond the wide world's end" and have returned to tell us something incredible yet, somehow, believable about that uncharted and illimitable universe.

THE SONG OF FINIS

At the edge of All the Ages
 A Knight sate on his steed,
 His armor red and thin with rust,
 His soul from sorrow freed;
 And he lifted up his visor
 From a face of skin and bone,
 And his horse turned head and whinnied
 As the twain stood there alone.

No bird above that steep of time
 Sang of a livelong quest;
 No wind breathed,
 Rest:
 "Lone for an end!" cried Knight to steed,
 Loosed an eager rein—
 Charged with his challenge into Space:
 And quiet did quiet remain.

THE LISTENERS

"Is there anybody there?" said the Traveler,
 Knocking on the moonlit door;
 And his horse in the silence champed the grasses
 Of the forest's ferny floor.
 And a bird flew up out of the turret,
 Above the Travler's head
 And he smote upon the door again a second time;
 "Is there anybody there?" he said.
 But no one descended to the Traveler;
 No head from the leaf-fringed sill
 Leaned over and looked into his gray eyes,
 Where he stood perplexed and still.
 But only a host of phantom listeners
 That dwelt in the lone house then
 Stood listening in the quiet of the moonlight
 To that voice from the world of men:
 Stood thronging the faint moonbeams on the dark stair
 That goes down to the empty hall,
 Harkening in an air stirred and shaken
 By the lonely Traveler's call.
 And he felt in his heart their strangeness,
 Their stillness answering his cry,

While his horse moved, cropping the dark turf,
 'Neath the starred and leafy sky;
 For he suddenly smote on the door, even
 Louder, and lifted his head:—
 “Tell them I came, and no one answered,
 That I kept my word,” he said.
 Never the least stir made the listeners,
 Though every word he spake
 Fell echoing through the shadowiness of the still house
 From the one man left awake:
 Aye, they heard his foot upon the stirrup,
 And the sound of iron on stone,
 And how the silence surged softly backward,
 When the plunging hoofs were gone.

A N E P I T A P H

Here lies a most beautiful lady,
 Light of step and heart was she;
 I think she was the most beautiful lady
 That ever was in the West Country.

But beauty vanishes; beauty passes;
 However rare—rare it be;
 And when I crumble, who will remember
 This lady of the West Country?

T H E T R U A N T S

Ere my heart beats too coldly and faintly
 To remember sad things, yet be gay,
 I would sing a brief song of the world's little children
 Magic hath stolen away.

The primroses scattered by April,
 The stars of the wide Milky Way,
 Cannot outnumber the hosts of the children
 Magic hath stolen away.

The buttercup green of the meadows,
 The snow of the blossoming may,
 Lovelier are not than the legions of children
 Magic hath stolen away.

The waves tossing surf in the moonbeam,
 The albatross lone on the spray,
 Alone knew the tears wept in vain for the children
 Magic hath stolen away.

In vain: for at hush of the evening,
 When the stars twinkle into the gray,
 Seems to echo the far-away calling of children
 Magic hath stolen away.

OLD SUSAN

When Susan's work was done, she'd sit
 With one fat guttering candle lit,
 And window opened wide to win
 The sweet night air to enter in;
 There, with a thumb to keep her place
 She'd read, with stern and wrinkled face.
 Her mild eyes gliding very slow
 Across the letters to and fro,
 While wagged the guttering candle flame
 In the wind that through the window came.
 And sometimes in the silence she
 Would mumble a sentence audibly,
 Or shake her head as if to say,
 "You silly souls, to act this way!"
 And never a sound from night I'd hear,
 Unless some far-off cock crowed clear;
 Or her old shuffling thumb should turn
 Another page; and rapt and stern,
 Through her great glasses bent on me,
 She'd glance into reality;
 And shake her round old silvery head,
 With—"You!—I thought you was in bed!"—
 Only to tilt her book again,
 And rooted in Romance remain.

MARTHA

"Once . . . once upon a time . . ."
 Over and over again,
 Martha would tell us her stories,
 In the hazel glen.

Hers were those clear gray eyes
 You watch, and the story seems Told by their beautifulness
 Tranquil as dreams.

She'd sit with her two slim hands
 Clasped round her bended knees;
 While we on our elbows lolled,
 And stared at ease.

Her voice and her narrow chin,
 Her grave small lovely head,
 Seemed half the meaning
 Of the words she said.

"Once . . . once upon a time . . ."
 Like a dream you dream in the night,

Fairies and gnomes stole out
 In the leaf-green light.

And her beauty far away
 Would fade, as her voice ran on,
 Till hazel and summer sun
 And all were gone.—

All fordone and forgot;
 And like clouds in the height of the sky,
 Our hearts stood still in the hush
 Of an age gone by.

SOMEONE

Someone came knocking
 At my wee, small door;
 Someone came knocking,
 I'm sure—sure—sure;
 I listened, I opened,
 I looked to left and right,
 But nought there was a-stirring
 In the still dark night,
 Only the busy beetle
 Tap-tapping in the wall,
 Only from the forest
 The screech-owl's call,
 Only the cricket whistling
 While the dewdrops fall,
 So I know not who came knocking,
 At all, at all, at all.

THE SLEEPER

As Ann came in one summer's day,
 She felt that she must creep,
 So silent was the clear cool house,
 It seemed a house of sleep.
 And sure, when she pushed open the door,
 Rapt in the stillness there,
 Her mother sat with stooping head,
 Asleep upon a chair;
 Fast—fast asleep; her two hands laid
 Loose-folded on her knee,
 So that her small unconscious face
 Looked half unreal to be:
 So calmly lit with sleep's pale light
 Each feature was; so fair
 Her forehead—every trouble was Smooth'd out beneath her hair.

But though her mind in dream now moved,
Still seemed her gaze to rest
From out beneath her fast-sealed lids,
Above her moving breast,
On Ann, as quite, quite still she stood;
Yet slumber lay so deep
Even her hands upon her lap
Seemed saturate with sleep.
And as Ann peeped, a cloudlike dread
Stole over her, and then,
On stealthy, mouselike feet she trod,
And tiptoed out again.

THE OLD MEN

Old and alone sit we,
Caged, riddle-rid men;
Lost to earth's "Listen!" and "See!"
Thought's "Wherefore?" and "When?"
Only far memories stray
Of a past once lovely, but now
Wasted and faded away,
Like green leaves from the bough.
Vast broods the silence of night;
And the ruinous moon
Lifts on our faces her light,
Whence all dreaming is gone.
We speak not; trembles each head;
In their sockets our eyes are still;
Desire as cold as the dead,
Without wonder or will.

And one, with a lanthorn, draws near,
At clash with the moon in our eyes:
"Where art thou?" he asks: "I am here!"
One by one we arise.
And none lifts a hand to withhold
A friend from the touch of that foe:
Heart cries unto heart, "Thou art old!"
Yet reluctant we go.

AT THE KEYHOLE

"Grill me some bones," said the Cobbler,
"Some bones, my pretty Sue;
I'm tired of my lonesome with heels and soles,
Springsides and uppers too;
A mouse in the wainscot is nibbling;
A wind in the keyhole drones;
And a sheet webbed over my candle,
Susie,
Grill me some bones!"

"Grill me some bones," said the Cobbler,
"I sat at my tic-tac-to;
And a footstep came to my door and stopped,
And a hand groped to and fro;
And I peered up over my boot and last;
And my feet went cold as stones —
I saw an eye at the keyhole, Susie! —
Grill me some bones!"

THE MOCKING FAIRY

"Won't you look out of your window, Mrs. Gill?"
Quoth the Fairy, niddling, noddling in the garden;
"Can't you look out of your window, Mrs. Gill?"
Quoth the Fairy, laughing softly in the garden;
But the air was still, the cherry boughs were still,
And the ivy-tod<sup>1</sup> 'neath the empty sill,
And never from her window looked out Mrs. Gill
On the Fairy shrilly mocking in the garden.
"What have they done with you, you poor Mrs. Gill?"
Quoth the Fairy brightly glancing in the garden;
"Where have they hidden you, you poor old Mrs. Gill?"
Quoth the Fairy dancing lightly in the garden;
But night's faint veil now wrapped the hill,
Stark 'neath the stars stood the dead-still Mill,
And out of her cold cottage never answered Mrs. Gill
The Fairy mimbling manbling in the garden.

<sup>1</sup> Tod = dense foliage.

S A M

When Sam goes back in memory,
 It is to where the sea
 Breaks on the shingle, emerald-green,
 In white foam, endlessly;
 He says—with small brown eye on mine—
 “I used to keep awake,
 And lean from my window in the moon,
 Watching those billows break.
 And half a million tiny hands,
 And eyes, like sparks of frost,
 Would dance and come tumbling into the moon,
 On every breaker tossed.
 And all across from star to star,
 I've seen the watery sea,
 With not a single ship in sight,
 Just ocean there, and me;
 And heard my father snore. And once,
 As sure as I'm alive,
 Out of those wallowing, moon-flecked waves
 I saw a mermaid dive;
 Head and shoulders above the wave,
 Plain as I now see you,
 Combing her hair, now back, now front,
 Her two eyes peeping through;
 Calling me, ‘Sam’!—quietlike—‘Sam’! . . .
 But me . . . I never went,
 Making believe I kind of thought
 ’Twas someone else she meant . . .
 Wonderful lovely there she sat,
 Singing the night away,
 All in the solitudinous sea
 Of that there lonely bay.
 P'raps,” and he'd smooth his hairless mouth,
 “P'raps, if 'twere now, my son,
 P'raps, if I heard a voice say, ‘Sam’!
 Morning would find me gone.”

B E R R I E S

There was an old woman
 Went blackberry picking
 Along the hedges
 From Weep to Wicking.
 Half a pottle—
 No more she had got,
 When out steps a Fairy
 From her green grot;
 And says, “Well, Jill,
 Would 'ee pick 'ee mo?”

And Jill, she curtseys,
 And looks just so.
 “Be off,” says the Fairy,
 “As quick as you can,
 Over the meadows
 To the little green lane,
 That dips to the hayfields
 Of Farmer Grimes:
 I've berried those hedges
 A score of times;
 Bushel on bushel
 I'll promise 'ee, Jill,

This side of supper
If 'ee pick with a will."
She glints very bright,
And speaks her fair;
Then lo, and behold!
She had faded in air.

Be sure Old Goodie
She trots betimes
Over the meadows
To Farmer Grimes.
And never was queen
With jewelry rich
As those same hedges
From twig to ditch;
Like Dutchmen's coffers,
Fruit, thorn, and flower—
They shone like William
And Mary's Bower.
And be sure Old Goodie
Went back to Weep,
So tired with her basket
She scarce could creep.

When she comes in the dusk
To her cottage door,
There's Towser wagging
As never before,
To see his Missus
So glad to be
Come from her fruit-picking
Back to he.
As soon as next morning
Dawn was gray,
The pot on the hob
Was simmering away;
And all in a stew
And a hugger-mugger
Towser and Jill
A-boiling of sugar,
And the dark clear fruit
That from Faerie came
For syrup and jelly
And blackberry jam.

Twelve jolly gallipots
Jill put by;
And one little teeny one,
One inch high;

And that she's hidden
A good thumb deep,
Half way over
From Wicking to Weep.

ALL BUT BLIND

All but blind
In his chambered hole
Gropes for worms
The four-clawed Mole.

All but blind
In the evening sky,
The hooded Bat
Twirls softly by.

All but blind
In the burning day
The Barn-Owl blunders
On her way.

And blind as are
These three to me,
So, blind to Someone
I must be.

SUMMER EVENING

The sandy cat by the Farmer's chair
Mcws at his knee for dainty fare;
Old Rover in his moss-greened house
Mumbles a bone, and barks at a mouse.
In the dewy fields the cattle lie
Chewing the cud 'neath a fading sky.
Dobbin at manger pulls his hay:
Gone is another summer's day.

THERE BLOOMS NO BUD IN MAY

There blooms no bud in May
Can for its white compare
With snow at break of day,
On fields forlorn and bare.

For shadow it hath rose,
Azure, and amethyst;
And every air that blows
Dies out in beauteous mist.

It hangs the frozen bough
With flowers on which the night
Wheeling her darkness through
Scatters a starry light.

Fearful of its pale glare
In flocks the starlings rise;
Slide through the frosty air,
And perch with plaintive cries.

Only the inky rook,
Hunched cold in ruffled wings,
Its snowy nest forsook,
Caws of unnumbered Springs.

THE SCARECROW

All winter through I bow my head
Beneath the driving rain;
The North wind powders me with snow
And blows me black again;
At midnight 'neath a maze of stars
I flame with glittering rime,
And stand, above the stubble, stiff
As mail at morning-prime.
But when that child, called Spring, and all
His host of children, come,
Scattering their buds and dew upon
These acres of my home,
Some rapture in my rags awakes;
I lift void eyes and scan
The skies for crows, those ravening foes
Of my strange master, Man.
I watch him striding lank behind
His clashing team, and know
Soon will the wheat swish body high
Where once lay sterile snow;
Soon shall I gaze across a sea
Of sun-begotten grain,
Which my unflinching watch hath sealed
For harvest once again.

THE GHOST

"Who knocks?" "I, who was beautiful,
Beyond all dreams to restore,
I, from the roots of the dark thorn am hither,
And knock on the door."

"Who speaks?" "I—once was my speech
Sweet as the bird's on the air.

When echo lurks by the waters to heed;
"Tis I speak thee fair."

"Dark is the hour!" "Aye, and cold."
"Lone is my house." "Ah, but mine?"
"Sight, touch, lips, eyes yearned in vain."
"Long dead these to thine . . . ?"

Silence. Still faint on the porch
Brake the flames of the stars.
In gloom groped a hope-wearied hand
Over keys, bolts, and bars.

A face peered. All the grey night
In chaos of vacancy shone;
Nought but vast sorrow was there—
The sweet cheat gone.

SILVER

Slowly, silently, now the moon
Walks the night in her silver shoon;
This way, and that, she peers, and sees
Silver fruit upon silver trees;
One by one the casements catch
Her beans beneath the silvery thatch;
Couched in his kennel, like a log,
With paws of silver sleeps the dog;
From their shadowy cote the white breasts peep
Of doves in a silver-feathered sleep;
A harvest mouse goes scampering by,
With silver claws and a silver eye;
And moveless fish in the water gleam,
By silver reeds in a silver stream.

THE SONG OF SHADOWS

Sweep thy faint strings, Musician,
With thy long lean hand;
Downward the starry tapers burn,
Sinks soft the waning sand;
The old hound whimpers couched in sleep
The embers smolder low;
Across the walls the shadows
    Come, and go.

Sweep softly thy strings, Musician,
The minutes mount to hours;
Frost on the windless casement weaves
A labyrinth of flowers;

Ghosts linger in the darkening air,
Hearken at the open door;
Music hath called them, dreaming,
Home once more.

N O D

Softly along the road of evening,
In a twilight dim with rose,
Wrinkled with age, and drcnched with dew
Old Nod, the shepherd, goes.

His drowsy flock streams on before him,
Their fleeces charged with gold,
To where the sun's last beam leans low
On Nod the shepherd's fold.

The hedge is quick and green with briar,
From their sand the conies creep;
And all the birds that fly in heaven
Flock singing home to sleep.

His lambs outnumber a noon's roses,
Yet, when night's shadows fall,
His blind old sheep-dog, Slumber-soon,
Misses not one of all.

His are the quiet steeps of dreamland,
The waters of no-more-pain;
His ram's bell rings 'neath an arch of stars
"Rest, rest, and rest again."

THE LAST CHAPTER

I am living more alone now than I did;
This life tends inward, as the body ages;
And what is left of its strange book to read
Quickens in interest with the last few pages.

Problems abound. Its authorship? A sequel?
Its hero-villain, whose ways so little mend?
The plot? still dark. The style? a shade unequal.
And what of the denouement? And the end?

No, no, have done! Lay the thumbed thing aside;
Forget its horrors, folly, incitement, lies;
In silence and in solitude abide,
And con what yet may bless your inward eyes.

Pace, still, for pace with you, companion goes,
Though now, through dulled and inattentive ear,
No more—as when a child's—your sick heart knows
His infinite energy and beauty near.

His, too, a World, though viewless save in glimpse;
He, too, a book of imagery bears;
And as your halting foot beside him limps,
Mark you whose badge and livery he wears.

P E A C E

Night arches England, and the winds are still;
Jasmine and honeysuckle steep the air;
Softly the stars that are all Europe's fill
Her heaven-wide dark with radiancy fair;
That shadowed moon now waxing in the west,
Stirs not a rumor in her tranquil seas;

Mysterious sleep has lulled her heart to rest,
Deep even as theirs beneath her churchyard trees.

Secure, serene; dumb now the nighthawk's threat;
The gun's low thunder drumming o'er the tide;
The anguish pulsing in her stricken side . . .
All is at peace. Ah, never, heart, forget
For this her youngest, best, and bravest died,
These bright dews once were mixed with blood and sweat.

G. K. Chesterton

THAT brilliant journalist, novelist, essayist, publicist and lyricist, Gilbert Keith Chesterton, was born at Campden Hill, Kensington, May 29, 1874, and began his literary life by reviewing books on art for various magazines. He is best known as a writer of paradoxical essays on anything and everything, such as Tremendous Trifles (1909), Varied Types (1905), and All Things Considered (1910), but he was also a stimulating critic; a keen appraiser, as shown in his volume Heretics (1905) and his analytical studies of Robert Browning, Charles Dickens, and George Bernard Shaw; a writer of strange and grotesque romances like The Napoleon of Notting Hill (1906), The Man Who Was Thursday (1908), which Chesterton himself has sub-titled "A Nightmare," and that mad extravaganza with songs for a sublimated comic-opera, The Flying Inn (1914). This being insufficient to exhaust his creative energy, he was also the author of several books of fantastic short stories, ranging from the whimsical narratives in The Club of Queer Trades (1905) to that amazing sequence begun with The Innocence of Father Brown (1911), which is a series of religious detective stories!

Besides being the creator of all these, Chesterton found time to be a prolific if sometimes too acrobatic newspaperman, a lay preacher in disguise (witness Orthodoxy [1908], What's Wrong with the World [1910], The Ball and the Cross [1909]) and a pamphleteer. He is also—his admirers say, primarily—a poet. His first volume of verse, The Wild Knight and Other Poems (1900), a collection of quaintly flavored affirmative verses, was followed by The Ballad of the White Horse (1911), one long poem which, in spite of Chesterton's ever-present sermonizing, is possibly the most stirring creation he has achieved.

Scarcely less notable is the ringing "Lepanto" from his later, more epigrammatic Poems (1915) which, anticipating the clanging verses of Vachel Lindsay's "The Congo," is one of the finest of modern chants. The syllables beat, as though on brass; the armies sing; the feet tramp; the drums snarl; the tides of marching crusaders surge through such lines as

Strong gongs groaning as the guns boom far,
Don John of Austria is going to the war;
Stiff flags straining in the night-blasts cold
In the gloom black-purple, in the glint old-gold;
Torchlight crimson on the copper kettle-drums,
Then the tuckets, then the trumpets, then the cannon, and he comes. . . .

Subsequent volumes established the poet's rollicking reactions. Aware that something was wrong with the economic system, he revolted against both capitalism and socialism, and proclaimed a new order which was curiously like an old disorder: a confused and romanticized medievalism. Here Chesterton revealed his irrational rationalism. He wrote like an adult who lived in a world of childish fantasy, a serious thinker who thought only in terms of paradox, a philosopher who defended the obvious with the zeal of a fanatic crucified for heresy. When Chesterton died on June 14, 1936, he was the author of more than one hundred volumes of fiction, poetry, plays, biographies, criticisms, essays, and studies.

A clue to Chesterton's tricky humor is contained in some of his later titles: The Unthinkable Theory of Professor Green (1925), The Moderate Murderer (1929), The Poet and the Lunatics (1929), A Defence of Nonsense (1911), and The Scandal of Father Brown (1935). His charm is the charm of gusto, a zest which does not stop to appraise its defects. His criticism of Mrs. Browning's style might well be applied to Chesterton himself. "Whenever her verse is bad, it is bad from some violence of comparison, some kind of debauch of cleverness. Her nonsense never arises from weakness, but from a confusion of powers. . . . She cannot leave anything alone, she cannot write a line, without a conceit. She gives the reader the impression that she never declined a fancy."

ECCLESIASTES

There is one sin· to call a green leaf grey,
Whereat the sun in heaven shuddereth.
There is one blasphemy: for death to pray,
For God alone knoweth the praise of death.

There is one creed· 'neath no world-terror's wing
Apples forget to grow on apple-trees.
There is one thing is needful—everything—
The rest is vanity of vanities.

LEPANTO

White founts falling in the Courts of the sun,
And the Soldan of Byzantium is smiling as they run;
There is laughter like the fountains in that face of all men feared,
It stirs the forest darkness, the darkness of his beard;
It curls the blood-red crescent, the crescent of his lips;
For the inmost sea of all the earth is shaken with his ships.
They have dared the white republics up the capes of Italy,
They have dashed the Adriatic round the Lion of the Sea,
And the Pope has cast his arms abroad for agony and loss,
And called the kings of Christendom for swords about the Cross.
The cold queen of England is looking in the glass;
The shadow of the Valois is yawning at the Mass;
From evening isles fantastical rings faint the Spanish gun,
And the Lord upon the Golden Horn is laughing in the sun.

Dim drums throbbing, in the hills half heard,
Where only on a nameless throne a crownless prince has stirred,

Where, risen from a doubtful seat and half-attainted stall,
 The last knight of Europe takes weapons from the wall,
 The last and lingering troubadour to whom the bird has sung,
 That once went singing southward when all the world was young.
 In that enormous silence, tiny and unafraid,
 Comes up along a winding road the noise of the Crusade.
 Strong gongs groaning as the guns boom far,
 Don John of Austria is going to the war;
 Stiff flags straining in the night-blasts cold
 In the gloom black-purple, in the glint old-gold,
 Torchlight crimson on the copper kettle-drums,
 Then the tuckets, then the trumpets, then the cannon, and he comes.
 Don John laughing in the brave beard curled,
 Spurning of his stirrups like the thrones of all the world,
 Holding his head up for a flag of all the free.
 Love-light of Spain—hurrah!
 Death-light of Africa!
 Don John of Austria
 Is riding to the sea.

Mahound is in his paradise above the evening star,
 (Don John of Austria is going to the war)
 He moves a mighty turban on the timeless houri's knees,
 His turban that is woven of the sunsets and the seas.
 He shakes the peacock gardens as he rises from his ease,
 And he strides among the tree-tops and is taller than the trees;
 And his voice through all the garden is a thunder sent to bring
 Black Azrael and Ariel and Amnion on the wing.
 Giants and the Genii,
 Multiplex of wing and eye,
 Whose strong obedience broke the sky
 When Solomon was king.

They rush in red and purple from the red clouds of the morn,
 From the temples where the yellow gods shut up their eyes in scorn;
 They rise in green robes roaring from the green hells of the sea
 Where fallen skies and evil hues and eyeless creatures be,
 On them the sea-valves cluster and the gray sea-forests curl,
 Splashed with a splendid sickness, the sickness of the pearl;
 They swell in sapphire smoke out of the blue cracks of the ground,—
 They gather and they wonder and give worship to Mahound.
 And he saith, “Break up the mountains where the hermit-folk can hide,
 And sift the red and silver sands lest bone of saint abide,
 And chase the Giaours flying night and day, not giving rest,
 For that which was our trouble comes again out of the west.
 We have set the seal of Solomon on all things under sun,
 Of knowledge and of sorrow and endurance of things done.
 But a noise is in the mountains, in the mountains; and I know
 The voice that shook our palaces—four hundred years ago:
 It is he that saith not ‘Kismet’; it is he that knows not Fate;
 It is Richard, it is Raymond, it is Godfrey at the gate!

It is he whose loss is laughter when he counts the wager worth,
Put down your feet upon him, that our peace be on the earth."

For he heard drums groaning and he heard guns jar,
(Don John of Austria is going to the war.)

Sudden and still—hurrah!

Bolt from Iberia!

Don John of Austria

Is gone by Alcalar.

St. Michael's on his Mountain in the sea-roads of the north

(Don John of Austria is girt and going forth.)

Where the gray seas glitter and the sharp tides shift

And the sea-folk labor and the red sails lift.

He shakes his lance of iron and he claps his wings of stone;

The noise is gone through Normandy; the noise is gone alone;

The North is full of tangled things and texts and aching eyes,

And dead is all the innocence of anger and surprise,

And Christian killeth Christian in a narrow dusty room,

And Christian dreadeth Christ that hath a newer face of doom,

And Christian hateth Mary that God kissed in Galilee,—

But Don John of Austria is riding to the sea.

Don John calling through the blast and the eclipse,

Crying with the trumpet, with the trumpet to his lips,

Trumpet that sayeth hal!

Domino Gloria!

Don John of Austria

Is shouting to the ships.

King Philip's in his closet with the Fleece about his neck

(Don John of Austria is armed upon the deck.)

The walls are hung with velvet that is black and soft as sin,

And little dwarfs creep out of it and little dwarfs creep in.

He holds a crystal phial that has colors like the moon,

He touches, and it tingles, and he trembles very soon,

And his face is as a fungus of a leprous white and gray

Like plants in the high houses that are shuttered from the day,

And death is in the phial and the end of noble work,

But Don John of Austria has fired upon the Turk.

Don John's hunting, and his hounds have bayed—

Booms away past Italy the rumor of his raid.

Gun upon gun, hal! hal!

Gun upon gun, hurrah!

Don John of Austria

Has loosed the cannonade.

The Pope was in his chapel before day or battle broke,

(Don John of Austria is hidden in the smoke.)

The hidden room in man's house where God sits all the year,

The secret window whence the world looks small and very dear.

He sees as in a mirror on the monstrous twilight sea

The crescent of his cruel ships whose name is mystery;

They fling great shadows foe-wards, making Cross and Castle dark,
 They veil the plumèd lions on the galleys of St. Mark;
 And above the ships are palaces of brown, black-bearded chiefs,
 And below the ships are prisons, where with multitudinous griefs,
 Christian captives, sick and sunless, all a laboring race repines
 Like a race in sunken cities, like a nation in the mines.
 They are lost like slaves that swat, and in the skies of morning hung
 The stair-ways of the tallest gods when tyranny was young.
 They are countless, voiceless, hopeless as those fallen or fleeing on
 Before the high Kings' horses in the granite of Babylon.
 And many a one grows witless in his quiet room in hell
 Where a yellow face looks inward through the lattice of his cell,
 And he finds his God forgotten, and he seeks no more a sign—
(But Don John of Austria has burst the battle-line!)
 Don John pounding from the slaughter-painted poop,
 Purpling all the ocean like a bloody pirate's sloop,
 Scarlet running over on the silvers and the golds,
 Breaking of the hatches up and bursting of the holds,
 Thronging of the thousands up that labor under sca
 White for bliss and blind for sun and stunned for liberty.
Vivat Hispania!
Domino Gloria!
 Don John of Austria
 Has set his people free!

Cervantes on his galley sets the sword back in the sheath
(Don John of Austria rides homeward with a wreath.)
 And he sees across a weary land a straggling road in Spain,
 Up which a lean and foolish knight for ever rides in vain,
 And he smiles, but not as Sultans smile, and settles back the blade. . . .
(But Don John of Austria rides home from the Crusade.)

A PRAYER IN DARKNESS

This much, O heaven—if I should brood or rave,
 Pity me not; but let the world be fed,
 Yea, in my madness if I strike me dead,
 Heed you the grass that grows upon my grave.

If I dare snarl between this sun and sod,
 Whimper and clamor, give me grace to own,
 In sun and rain and fruit in season shown,
 The shining silence of the scorn of God.

Thank God the stars are set beyond my power,
 If I must travail in a night of wrath;
 Thank God my tears will never vex a moth,
 Nor any curse of mine cut down a flower.

Men say the sun was darkened: yet I had Thought it beat brightly, even on—Calvary:
 And He that hung upon the Torturing Tree
 Heard all the crickets singing, and was glad.

ELEGY IN A COUNTRY
CHURCHYARD

The men that worked for England
They have their graves at home;
And bees and birds of England
About the cross can roam.

But they that fought for England,
Following a falling star,
Alas, alas, for England
They have their graves afar.

And they that rule in England
In stately conclave met,
Alas, alas, for England
They have no graves as yet.

THE DONKEY

When fishes flew and forests walked
And figs grew upon thorn,
Some moment when the moon was blood,
Then surely I was born;

With monstrous head and sickening cry
And ears like errant wings,
The devil's walking parody
On all four-footed things.

The tattered outlaw of the earth,
Of ancient crooked will;
Starve, scourge, deride me: I am dumb,
I keep my secret still.

Fools! For I also had my hour;
One far fierce hour and sweet:
There was a shout about my ears,
And palms before my feet!

THE PRAISE OF DUST

"What of vile dust?" the preacher said.
Methought the whole world woke,
The dead stone lived beneath my foot,
And my whole body spoke.

"You, that play tyrant to the dust,
And stamp its wrinkled face,
This patient star that flings you not Far into homeless space,

"Come down out of your dusty shrine
The living dust to see,
The flowers that at your sermon's end
Stand blazing silently.

"Rich white and blood-red blossom; stones,
Lichens like fire encrust;
A gleam of blue, a glare of gold,
The vision of the dust.

"Pass them all by: till, as you come
Where, at a city's edge,
Under a tree—I know it well—
Under a lattice ledge,

"The sunshine falls on one brown head.
You, too, O cold of clay,
Eater of stones, may haply hear
The trumpets of that day.

"When God to all his paladins
By his own splendor swore
To make a fairer face than heaven,
Of dust and nothing more."

WINE AND WATER

Old Noah he had an ostrich farm and fowls on the largest scale,
He ate his egg with a ladle in an egg-cup big as a pail,
And the soup he took was Elephant Soup, and the fish he took was Whale,
But they all were small to the cellar he took when he set out to sail,
And Noah he often said to his wife when he sat down to dine,
"I don't care where the water goes if it doesn't get into the wine."

The cataract of the cliff of heaven fell blinding off the brink
As if it would wash the stars away as suds go down a sink,
The seven heavens came roaring down for the throats of hell to drink,
And Noah he cocked his eye and said, "It looks like rain, I think,"

The water has drowned the Matterhorn as deep as a Mendip mine,
But I don't care where the water goes if it doesn't get into the wine."

But Noah he sinned, and we have sinned; on tipsy feet we trod,
Till a great big, black teetotaler was sent to us for a rod,
And you can't get wine at a P. S. A., or chapel, or Eisteddfod.
For the Curse of Water has come again because of the wrath of God,
And water is on the Bishop's board and the Higher Thinker's shrine,
But I don't care where the water goes if it doesn't get into the wine.

THE SWORD OF SURPRISE

Sunder me from my bones, O sword of God,
Till they stand stark and strange as do the trees;
That I whose heart goes up with the soaring woods
May marvel as much at these.

Sunder me from my blood that in the dark
I hear that red ancestral river run,
Like branching buried floods that find the sea
But never find the sun.

Give me miraculous eyes to see my eyes,
Those rolling mirrors made alive in me,
Terrible crystal more incredible
Than all the things they see.

Sunder me from my soul, that I may see
The sins like streaming wounds, the life's brave beat
Till I shall save myself, as I would save
A stranger in the street.

THE HOUSE OF CHRISTMAS

There fared a mother driven forth
Out of an inn to roam;
In the place where she was homeless
All men are at home.
The crazy stable close at hand,
With shaking timber and shifting sand,
Grew a stronger thing to abide and stand
Than the square stones of Rome.

For men are homesick in their homes,
And strangers under the sun,
And they lay their heads in a foreign land
Whenever the day is done.
Here we have battle and blazing eyes,
And chance and honor and high surprise;
But our homes are under miraculous skies
Where the yule tale was begun.

A child in a foul stable,
 Where the beasts feed and foam;
 Only where He was homeless
 Are you and I at home;
 We have hands that fashion and heads that know,
 But our hearts we lost—how long ago!
 In a place no chart nor ship can show
 Under the sky's dome.

This world is wild as an old wives' tale,
 And strange the plain things are,
 The earth is enough and the air is enough
 For our wonder and our war;
 But our rest is as far as the fire-drake swings,
 And our peace is put in impossible things
 Where clashed and thundered unthinkable wings
 Round an incredible star.

To an open house in the evening
 Home shall men come,
 To an older place than Eden
 And a taller town than Rome;
 To the end of the way of the wandering star,
 To the things that cannot be and that are,
 To the place where God was homeless
 And all men are at home.

Gordon Bottomley

GORDON BOTTOMLEY was born at Keighley in 1874 and educated at the Grammar School. He is best known as a dramatist, his volumes—and there are ten of them dating from 1904—having elicited high praise upon publication. When the dramas were collected in two volumes, King Lear's Wife and Other Plays (1920) and Gruach and Britain's Daughter (1921), the tributes were still more enthusiastic. Referring to Gruach, which is a portrait of the Lady Macbeth at the time of her first meeting with the Thane, Lascelles Abercrombie wrote, "It was remarkable enough that Mr. Bottomley should have proved himself capable of worthily inventing a prelude to 'Lear'; it is astonishing that the success should be repeated in a prelude to 'Macbeth.' But it has become clear now that at no time in the history of English poetry since the seventeenth century has the requisite combination of dramatic and poetic talents existed until now in the person of Mr. Bottomley."

His poetry, collected in Chambers of Imagery, First Series (1907), Second Series (1912), displays the same command of vivid characterization and imaginative vigor one finds in his poetic dramas. What lends technical, if contemporary, interest to both volumes is that they anticipated the effects of the Imagists long before the group created a movement. A comprehensive collection, Poems of Thirty Years (1925), synthesizes the combination of force and delicacy which is Bottomley's own.

"The End of the World" (which should be read in connection with Abercrombie's play of the same title) is typical, simple in language, dramatic in effect, and extraordinarily supple in rhythm. Here, as in his dramas, the fine intricacies of phrase are paralleled by a knit power of thought.

THE END OF THE WORLD

The snow had fallen many nights and days;
 The sky was come upon the earth at last,
 Sifting thinly down as endlessly
 As though within the system of blind planets
 Something had been forgot or overdriven.
 The dawn now seemed neglected in the gray,
 Where mountains were unbuilt and shadowless trees
 Rootlessly paused or hung upon the air.
 There was no wind, but now and then a sigh
 Crossed that dry falling dust and rifted it
 Through cervices of slate and door and casement.
 Perhaps the new moon's time was even past.
 Outside, the first white twilights were too void
 Until a sheep called once, as to a lamb,
 And tenderness crept everywhere from it;
 But now the flock must have strayed far away.
 The lights across the valley must be veiled,
 The smoke lost in the grayness or the dusk
 For more than three days now the snow had thatched
 That cow-house roof where it had ever melted
 With yellow stains from the beasts' breath inside;
 But yet a dog howled there, though not quite lately.
 Someone passed down the valley swift and singing,
 Yes, with locks spreaded like a son of morning;
 But if he seemed too tall to be a man
 It was that men had been so long unseen,
 Or shapes loom larger through a moving snow.
 And he was gone and food had not been given him.
 When snow slid from an overweighted leaf
 Shaking the tree, it might have been a bird
 Slipping in sleep or shelter, whirring wings;
 Yet never bird fell out, save once a dead one—
 And in two days the snow had covered it.
 The dog had howled again—or thus it seemed
 Until a lean fox passed and cried no more.
 All was so safe indoors where life went on Glad of the close enfolding snow—O glad
 To be so safe and secret at its heart,
 Watching the strangeness of familiar things.
 They knew not what dim hours went on, went by,
 For while they slept the clock stopt newly wound
 As the cold hardened. Once they watched the road,
 Thinking to be remembered. Once they doubted
 If they had kept the sequence of the days,

Because they heard not any sound of bells.
 A butterfly, that hid until the Spring
 Under a ceiling's shadow, dropt, was dead.
 The coldness seemed more nigh, the coldness deepened
 As a sound deepens into silences;
 It was of earth and came not by the air;
 The earth was cooling and drew down the sky.
 The air was crumbling. There was no more sky.
 Rails of a broken bed charred in the grate,
 And when he touched the bars he thought the sting
 Came from their heat—he could not feel such cold . . .
 She said, "O do not sleep,
 Heart, heart of mine, keep near me. No, no; sleep.
 I will not lift his fallen, quiet cyclids,
 Although I know he would awaken then—
 He closed them thus but not of his own will.
 He can stay with me while I do not lift them."

D A W N

A thrush is tapping a stone
 With a snail-shell in its beak;
 A small bird hangs from a cherry
 Until the stem shall break.
 No waking song has begun,
 And yet birds chatter and hurry
 And throng in the elm's gloom
 Because an owl goes home.

E A G E R S P R I N G

Whirl, snow, on the blackbird's chatter;
 You will not hinder his song to come.
 East wind, sleepless, you cannot scatter
 Quince-bud, almond-bud,
 Little grape-hyacinth's
 Clustering brood.
 Nor unfurl the tips of the plum.
 No half-born stalk of a lily stops;
 There is sap in the storm-torn bush;
 And, ruffled by gusts in a snow-blurred copse,
 "Pity to wait" sings a thrush.

Love, there are few Springs left for us;
 They go, and the count of them as they go
 Makes surer the count that is left for us.
 More than the East wind, more than the snow,
 I would put back these hours that bring
 Buds and bees and are lost;
 I would hold the night and the frost,
 To save for us one more Spring.

E A G L E S O N G

(from "Sulven and the Eagle")

O deep, creating Light,
 My energy, my desire,
 Receive me into you in the height
 And force me to aspire.

Alone I am made for you;
 I alone rise and gaze
 With lidless eyes, alone pursue
 Like spiring flame your ways.

I am that part of life
 Which will not live but to dare:
 When I must rest from joyful strife
 I climb the lonely air,

And climbing strive again.
 On fellow life I prey,
 Know that immaterial pain
 Passes and things remain

In me or outside me,
 Which deepen in that fierce way
 Life, and by wisdom and cruelty
 Continue it for a day.

Out of the fathomless height,
 Come, show to me here
 This thing I have held in my breast all night,
 Desired, devoted, dear.
 On strange, small limb and brow
 Come, Light, now.

A. E. Coppard

A. E. COPPARD was born January 4, 1878, at Folkestone, Kent, and has lived all his life in close contact with the soil of which he writes so faithfully. Unknown until 1921, his first volume, Adam and Eve and Pinch Me, immediately created an enthusiastic circle of readers on both sides of the Atlantic. Clorinda Walks in Heaven (1922) increased the number of his readers, and with The Black Dog (1923), Fishmonger's Fiddle (1925) and The Field of Mustard (1927) his following has grown greatly in size and admiration.

These volumes of short tales vibrate with a prose so pointed and colorful that it is seldom without the glow of poetry. But Coppard is no less a poet when he writes in rhyme. Two privately printed volumes—Hips and Haws (1922) and Pelagea (1927)—communicate his half-earthly, half-eerie quality. The latter volume is particularly rich in those concisions which point his prose; landscape and figure are fixed in a few lines. "Betty Perrin" is a common enough figure; Coppard gives her a new dimension. "Winter Field" is another example of the ordinary in terms of the illuminating.

Collected Poems, a volume awaited by Coppard's admirers, appeared in 1929 and was neglected by all but a few appreciators of his special quality.

S T A Y , O S T A Y

Of love's designèd joys,
    Dream only, do not speak,
Lest every noting hour
    A separate vengeance take.

Holy is love, but frail
    With love's confined desires,
Against whose chosen urn
    Time like a thief conspires.

Keep silence; love will grow
    In its own darkened air,
A moon whose clouds do make
    Heaven and itself more fair.

W I N T E R   F I E L D

Sorrow on the acres,
    Wind in the thorn,
And an old man plowing
    Through the frosty morn.

A flock of the dark birds,
    Rooks and their wives,

Follow the plow team
    The old man drives;

And troops of starlings,
    A-tittle-tat and prim,
Follow the rooks
    That follow him.

B E T T Y   P E R R I N

Up the pound path
    Long o' Lag Lane,
Lives an old woman
    As never saw the rain,
Never saw the sea,
    Nor the sun upon the earth:
Poor Betty Perrin,
    Blind from her birth!

Chick nor child
    Never blessed her day,
Nor a loving man
    Ever came her way
With blessings in his heart
    And the blarney on his tongue;
Blind was Betty Perrin
    Since she was young.

She had sisters nine—
O, such pretty maidics!—
Two went on the town,
But most were decent ladies;
And Betty's pious pride
Bethanked the Lord for that:
Poor Miss Perrin,
Blind as a bat!

Both the saucy sisters
Cherished her and fed,
Bought her beer and skittles
Until they both were dead.
Dying thus so young,
Be sure they died of sin:
Pray, lovely daughters,
Never you begin!

Then the seven sisters
Put her on the parish,
For they were truly wedded
And she was hard to nourish.
Betty was a burden,
A burden from her birth:
It would not hurt the living
To give her to the earth.

Long o' Lag Lane,
Up 'ayond the pound,
Still Betty Perrin
Cumbereith the ground,
Sisterless as Eve
With the Sword against the Door:
Poor Betty Perrin,
Blind for evermore!

THE SLUGGARD

On our last night together
My love rose early:
Come—said my dear—will you not come with me
To see the sun arise?

But I lay still,
Mum as a Christmas lark.
“Will you not come with me?
The clock has struck the hour,
Night wavers and the birds will soon begin.”
But I lay a-mumbling:
“There'll be ten thousand dawns before we die;
One dawn is like another;
It is dark and freezing on the wold;
Do not go, I do not care to go;
Lie here and sleep again.”

I heard the sharp latch fall as she went forth alone,
Alone to see day break—the last of days—
Beyond the wood, that well of moving shade
From whence all shadows rise;
I heard the latch fall and I could not sleep.

The gold rays slanted on the bedroom wall
When she came back again.
She had seen the couth hills flow into the sky
And the coloring sun glide out of them,
And as the sun soared up—
A blooded hawk from Abyssinia—
The moon came too:
His rose was in the river,
Her lily in the sky.
And O the cowslips nodding in the warren!

And the coney babe no bigger than a purse!
 O the enriching beams athwart the wood,
 Where the white windflowers hid their timid lips
 Pondering, and buds of beech were locked in bronze!

When I arose she set the dishes out,
 And cooked a haddock,
 And we ate together,
 And then she said Good-by;
 For she was a stranger,
 Wandering far from home:
 Good-by, Good-by.
 So long, my dear and tender love,
 So long.

How often now I go to greet the dawns!
 I do not care for them,
 It is tiring to rise and go,
 And one dawn is much like another,
 But I do see them often, often now,
 Seeking for what may bless me in her eyes.

I shall see ten thousand dawns before I die.

THE PRODIGAL SON

When I forsook my homely town
 And bade my luck good-by,
 The lord of freedom flung me down
 His sweet scourge from the sky;
 But all the passionate winds ordained
 His purpose to fulfill
 Blew to a burning goal ungained,
 Left me my idle will.

Sad are the harvests I amassed,
 And empty of all grain;
 Thickens the dust upon the grass
 No dews shall wash again;
 Nought can unclog the unconfined
 From pride so falsely kept,
 Nor from my void but living mind
 May its dead dreams be swept.

Ten thousand finer dreams of sleep,
 And old songs sweet to hear,
 Mock at my anguish as I keep
 My journeying otherwhere;
 I would not need one kingly frown,
 Or yet bequeath one sigh,
 Had I not left my shining town,
 Nor bade my heart good-by.

Edward Thomas

PHILIP EDWARD THOMAS was born in 1878 and educated at Lincoln College, Oxford. Before he turned to verse, Thomas had a large following as author of travel books, biographies, and pot-boilers. Hating his hackwork, yet unable to free himself of it, he had so repressed his creative ability that he had grown doubtful concerning his power. It needed something foreign to animate and release what was native in him. When Robert Frost, the New England poet, went abroad in 1912 for two years and became an intimate of Thomas's, the English critic began to write poetry.

Thomas's verse was first published under the pseudonym "Edward Eastaway." It immediately attracted the attention of a small circle, but (as with his American preceptor) editors were slow to recognize the distinction of the poet's rusticities. Loving, like Frost, the minutiae of existence, the quaint and casual turns of ordinary life, Thomas caught the magic of the English countryside in its unpoeticized quietude. Many of his poems are full of a slow, sad contemplation of life and a reflection of its brave futility. It is not exactly disillusion; it is rather an absence of illusion. Poems (1917), dedicated to Robert Frost, is full of Thomas's fidelity to little things, things as unglorified as the unfreezing of the "rock-like mud," a child's path, a list of quaint-sounding villages, birds' nests uncovered by the autumn wind, dusty nettles. Thomas somehow manages to combine close observation with a sense of strangeness.

Thomas was killed at Arras at an observatory outpost on Easter Monday, 1917. Last Poems, published posthumously in 1919, has less of Frost's idiom (apparent in such poems as "Fifty Faggots," "Tall Nettles," "Haymaking") and more of Thomas's darkening concern. Faithful to a beauty unseen or scorned by others, his heart "floats through the window to a tree down in the misting, quiet vale":

Not like a peewit that returns to wail
For something it has lost, but like a dove
That slants unswerving to its home and love.
There I find my rest, and through the dark air
Flies what yet lives in me. Beauty is there.

This poetry is a constant search for neglected loveliness: the vortex in an eddy of dead leaves, the dying sun in a fading sunflower, the sedgewarbler's pipe, a music of songlessness. Aldous Huxley characterized it as "a nameless emotion of quiet happiness shot through with melancholy."

Collected Poems, a richly inclusive volume with an introduction by Walter De la Mare, was published in 1922. Thomas must be reckoned among the most natural—and most English—of nature poets. As De la Mare wrote, "When Edward Thomas was killed in Flanders, a mirror of England was shattered of so pure a crystal that a clearer and tenderer reflection can be found no elsewhere than in these poems." Behind the accuracy of observation there is an emotional tensity, a vision of things seen "not with but through the eye."

Thomas's biography has been twice told by his wife, Helen Thomas, in World

Without End and As It Was. The best essay, laudatory but analytical, is to be found in Aldous Huxley's On the Margin (1923).

THE NEW HOUSE

Now first, as I shut the door,
I was alone
In the new house; and the wind
Began to moan.

Old at once was the house,
And I was old;
My ears were teased with the dread
Of what was foretold,

Nights of storm, days of mist, without end;
Sad days when the sun
Shone in vain: old griefs and griefs
Not yet begun.

All was foretold me; naught
Could I foresee;
But I learned how the wind would sound
After these things should be.

TALL NETTLES

Tall nettles cover up, as they have done
These many springs, the rusty harrow, the plow
Long worn out, and the roller made of stone:
Only the elm butt tops the nettles now.

This corner of the farmyard I like most:
As well as any bloom upon a flower
I like the dust on the nettles, never lost
Except to prove the sweetness of a shower.

IF I SHOULD EVER BY CHANCE

If I should ever by chance grow rich
I'll buy Codham, Cockriddien, and Childerditch,
Roses, Pyrgo, and Lapwater,
And let them all to my elder daughter.
The rent I shall ask of her will be only
Each year's first violets, white and lonely,
The first primroses and orchises—
She must find them before I do, that is.
But if she finds a blossom on furze
Without rent they shall all for ever be hers,
Codham, Cockriddien, and Childerditch,
Roses, Pyrgo, and Lapwater,—
I shall give them all to my elder daughter.

COCK-CROW

Out of the wood of thoughts that grows by night
To be cut down by the sharp ax of light,—
Out of the night, two cocks together crow,
Cleaving the darkness with a silver blow:

And bright before my eyes twin trumpeters stand,
 Heralds of splendor, one at either hand,
 Each facing each as in a coat of arms:—
 The mullers lace their boots up at the farms.

THE PENNY WHISTLE

The new moon hangs like an ivory bugle
 In the naked frosty blue;
 And the ghylls of the forest, already blackened
 By Winter, are blackened a'ncw.

The brooks that cut up and increase the forest,
 As if they had never known
 The sun, are roaring with black hollow voices
 Betwixt rage and a moan.

But still the caravan-hut by the hollies
 Like a kingfisher gleams between;
 Round the mossed old hearths of the charcoal-burners,
 First primroses ask to be seen.

The charcoal-burners are black, but their linen
 Blows white on the line;
 And white the letter the girl is reading
 Under that crescent fine:

And her brother who hides apart in a thicket,
 Slowly and surely playing
 On a whistle an olden nursery melody,
 Says far more than I am saying.

THE TRUMPET

Rise up, rise up,
 And, as the trumpet blowing
 Chases the dreams of men,
 As the dawn glowing
 The stars that left unlit
 The land and water,
 Rise up and scatter
 The dew that covers
 The print of last night's lovers—
 Scatter it, scatter it!

While you are listening
 To the clear horn,
 Forget, men, everything
 On this earth newborn,
 Except that it is lovelier
 Than any mysteries.

Open your eyes to the air
 That has washed the eyes of stars
 Through all the dewy night:
 Up with the light,
 To the old wars;
 Arise, arise!

DIGGING

Today I think
 Only with scents,—scents dead leaves yield,
 And bracken and wild carrot's seed,
 And the square mustard field;

Odors that rise
 When the spade wounds the root of a tree,
 Rose, currant, raspberry, or goutweed,
 Rhubarb or celery;

The smoke's smell, too,
Flowing from where a bonfire burns
The dead, the waste, the dangerous,
And all to sweetness turns.

It is enough
To smell, to crumble the dark earth,
While the robin sings over again
Sad songs of Autumn mirth.

THAW

Over the land freckled with snow half-thawed
The speculating rooks at their nests cawed,
And saw from elm-tops, delicate as flower of grass,
What we below could not see, Winter pass.

GALLows

There was a weasel lived in the sun
With all his family,
Till a keeper shot him with his gun
And hung him up on a tree,
Where he swings in the wind and the rain,
In the sun and in the snow,
Without pleasure, without pain
On the dead oak tree bough.

There was a crow who was no sleeper,
But a thief and a murderer
Till a very late hour; and this keeper
Made him one of the things that were,
To hang and flap in the rain and wind,
In the sun and in the snow.
There are no more sins to be sinned
On the dead oak tree bough.

There was a magpie, too,
Had a long tongue and a long tail;
He could both talk and do—
But what did that avail?
He, too, flaps in the wind and rain
Alongside weasel and crow.
Without pleasure, without pain,
On the dead oak tree bough.

. And many other beasts
And birds, skin, bone and feather,
I Have been taken from their feasts
And hung up there together,
To swing and have endless leisure
In the sun and in the snow,
Without pain, without pleasure,
On the dead oak tree bough.

FIFTY FAGGOTS

There they stand, on their ends, the fifty faggots
That once were underwood of hazel and ash
In Jenny Pink's copse. Now, by the hedge
Close packed they make a thicket fancy alone
Can creep through with the mouse and wren. Next Spring
A blackbird or a robin will nest there,
Accustomed to them, thinking they will remain
Whatever is forever to a bird:
This Spring it is too late; the swift has come.
"Twas a hot day for carrying them up:
Better they will never warm me, though they must Light several Winters' fires. Before they are done
The war will have ended, many other things
Have ended, maybe, that I can no more
Foresee or more control than robin and wren.

HAYMAKING

After night's thunder far away had rolled,
 The fiery day had a sweet kernel of cold,
 And in the perfect blue the clouds uncurled,
 Like the first gods before they made the world
 And misery, swimming the stormless sea
 In beauty and in divine gayety.
 The smooth white empty road was lightly strewn
 With leaves—the holly's Autumn falls in June—
 And fir cones standing stiff up in the heat.
 The mill-foot water tumbled white and lit
 With tossing crystals, happier than any crowd
 Of children pouring out of school aloud.
 And in the little thickets where a sleeper
 For ever might lie lost, the nettle-creeper
 And garden warbler sang unceasingly;
 While over them shrill shrieked in his fierce glee
 The swift with wings and tail as sharp and narrow
 As if the bow had flown off with the arrow.
 Only the scent of woodbine and hay new-mown
 Traveled the road. In the field sloping down,
 Park-like to where its willows showed the brook,
 Haymakers rested. The tosser lay forsook
 Out in the sun; and the long wagon stood
 Without its team, it seemed it never would Move from the shadow of that single yew.
 The team, as still, until their task was duc,
 Beside the laborers enjoyed the shade
 That three squat oaks mid-field together made
 Upon a circle of grass and weed uncut,
 And on the hollow, once a chalk-pit, but
 Now brimmed with nut and elder-flower so clean.
 The men leaned on their rakes, about to begin,
 But still. And all were silent. All was old,
 This morning time, with a great age untold,
 Older than Clare and Cobbett, Morland and Crome.
 Than, at the field's far edge, the farmer's home,
 A white house crouched at the foot of a great tree.
 Under the heavens that know not what years be
 The men, the beasts, the trees, the implements
 Uttered even what they will in times far hence—
 All of us gone out of the reach of change—
 Immortal in a picture of an old grange.

OUT IN THE DARK

Out in the dark over the snow
 The fallow fawns invisible go
 With the fallow doe;

And the winds blow
Fast as the stars are slow.

Stealthily the dark haunts round
And, when a lamp goes, without sound
At a swifter bound
Than the swiftest hound,
Arrives, and all else is drowned;

And I and star and wind and deer,
Are in the dark together,—near,
Yet far,—and fear
Drums on my ear
In that sage company drear.

How weak and little is the light,
All the universe of sight,
Love and delight,
Before the might,
If you love it not, of night.

John Masefield

JOHN MASEFIELD was born June 1, 1878, in Ledbury, Herefordshire. His father, a lawyer, died while Masefield was still a child; at fourteen the boy was indentured to a merchant ship and became a wanderer for several years. At one time (in 1895, to be exact) he worked for a few months as a sort of third assistant barkkeeper in Luke O'Connor's saloon, the Columbia Hotel, on the corner of Sixth and Greenwich Avenues, New York City. Later he worked in a carpet factory in Yonkers, and earned his living at various odd jobs. In 1897, he returned to England where he made friends with Synge in London, living, for a time, in Bloomsbury. Reading Chaucer's The Parlement of Foules in 1896 Masefield determined to be a poet. After the death of Robert Bridges in 1930 he was appointed Poet Laureate.

The results of his wanderings showed in his early works, Salt-Water Ballads (1902), Ballads (1903), frank, often crude, but rightly measured poems of sailors written in their own speech, and A Mainsail Haul (1905), a collection of short nautical stories. In these books Masefield occasionally overemphasized passion and brutality, yet, underneath the violence, he captured a highly colored realism.

It was not until he published The Everlasting Mercy (1911) that Masefield became famous. Followed quickly by long narrative poems, The Widow in the Bye Street (1912), Dauber (1912), and The Daffodil Fields (1913), these works vibrate with a blend of physical exulting and spiritual exaltation. It is typical of Masefield that the very rudeness is lifted to a plane of religious intensity. The religious undercurrent did not save the volumes from causing a scandal. The combination of profanity and ecstasy, sordid melodrama and spiritual elevation created a sensation; they overwhelmed the critics as well as ordinary readers. Masefield's sympathy with workers and "common characters" often brought him to the verge of sentimentality—his dramatis personae usually "got religion" and reformed—but Masefield was one of the first to make the Georgian movement seem a movement of innovation, even of protest. Moreover he succeeded (if only temporarily) in bringing narrative verse back to favor. The popularity of his rude and sometimes shocking story-poems was appreciated because of their gusto; they achieved a blend of personal strength and irresponsible vigor. But the World War, which outdid Masefield in intensity, did not stimulate a literature of violence. On the contrary, force lost its power and gave way to a literature of exhaustion.

The exhaustion is apparent in the work which Masefield wrote after the first World War, in which he served with the Red Cross in France and on the Gallipoli Peninsula. After the Armistice, most of the Georgian poets turned from bugle calls to pastorals and exchanged the field of battle for fields of buttercups and daisies. Masefield joined the movement of escape. Logically enough, he wrote classical sonnets, religious verse, and new versions of old myths such as King Cole (1921) and A Tale of Troy (1932). But in sacrificing the early vigor of epithet and plot he also sacrificed individuality. Critical opinion changed. It began to be suspected that the rebellious Georgian was little more than a roughened Victorian.

Masefield attempted to recapture his high spirits in Reynard the Fox (1919) and Right Royal (1920). The vigor is there, but a sense of strain pervades the too packed, too rapidly propelled stanzas; influenced by Chaucer, they are marred by excess. "There is," says Middleton Murry, speaking of Reynard the Fox, "in Chaucer, a naturalness, a lack of emphasis, a confidence that the object will not fail to make its own impression, beside which Mr. Masefield's demonstration and underlining seem almost malsain . . . tainted by the desperate bergerie of the Georgian era. Chaucer is at home with his speech and at home with his world; by his side Mr. Masefield seems nervous and uncertain about both." But though the Chaucerian influence is obvious, it is not wholly a handicap to Masefield, it stimulates him to overcome a nostalgia, roused (if overanimated) by the English countryside. It is said that Reynard the Fox did more than any other single poem to earn him the Laureateship.

After 1930 Masefield grew less and less self-critical, and his work suffered from prolixity. Midsummer Night (1928) still has the narrative sweep of the earlier poems, but Minnie Maylow's Story and Other Tales and Scenes (1931) is a sort of British Night's Entertainment neither interesting in idea nor technique. The thirteen "tales and scenes" ranging from the Chaucerian "Adamas and Eva" to the outworn theme of "Tristan and Isolt," will not bear close scrutiny. A Tale of Troy (1932) shows Masefield, for no discernible reason, retelling the drama of the Trojan War. End and Beginning (1933) is a poem-drama of the last days and execution of Mary, Queen of Scots, the title being from her prophetic remark when notified of her death sentence, "In the end is my beginning." A generous Collected Poems was issued in 1923 and enlarged in 1935. The former is the more commendable since it contains the best of his poetry from youth to maturity and does not include the later tedious work. Besides his poetry, Masefield wrote more than a dozen plays (including translations from Racine); a standard work on Shakespeare (1911); about twelve volumes of essays and studies, which range from Sea Life in

Nelson's Time (1905) through The Battle of the Somme (1919) to Chaucer (1931); several books for boys, and "adventure" novels which capture the early robustiousness.

In his early sixties Masefield turned to reminiscences and retelling of old tales; an account of his working days in America was entitled In the Mill (1941). He was, as Edwin Muir wrote, "one of the few writers of his time who had a genuine perception of evil which, though sometimes melodramatic, gives weight to his view of life."

A CONSECRATION

Not of the princes and prelates with periwigged charioteers
 Riding triumphantly laureled to lap the fat of the years,—
 Rather the scorned—the rejected—the men hemmed in with the spears;

The men of the tattered battalion which fights till it dies,
 Dazed with the dust of the battle, the din and the cries.
 The men with the broken heads and the blood running into their eyes.

Not the be-medaled Commander, beloved of the throne,
 Riding cock-horse to parade when the bugles are blown,
 But the lads who carried the koppie and cannot be known.

Not the ruler for me, but the ranker, the tramp of the road,
 The slave with the sack on his shoulders pricked on with the goad,
 The man with too weighty a burden, too weary a load.

The sailor, the stoker of steamers, the man with the clout,
 The chantyman bent at the halliards putting a tune to the shout,
 The drowsy man at the wheel and the tired look-out.

Others may sing of the wine and the wealth and the mirth,
 The portly presence of potentates goodly in girth;—
 Mine be the dirt and the dross, the dust and scum of the earth!

Theirs be the music, the color, the glory, the gold;
 Mine be a handful of ashes, a mouthful of mold.
 Of the maimed, of the halt and the blind in the rain and the cold—
 Of these shall my songs be fashioned, my tales be told.

AMEN.

SEA - FEVER

I must down to the seas again, to the lonely sea and the sky,
 And all I ask is a tall ship and a star to steer her by,
 And the wheel's kick and the wind's song and the white sail's shaking.
 And a gray mist on the sea's face and a gray dawn breaking.

I must down to the seas again, for the call of the running tide
 Is a wild call and a clear call that may not be denied;
 And all I ask is a windy day with the white clouds flying,
 And the flung spray and the blown spume, and the sea-gulls crying.

I must down to the seas again to the vagrant gypsy life.
 To the gull's way and the whale's way where the wind's like a whetted knife;
 And all I ask is a merry yarn from a laughing fellow-rover,
 And quiet sleep and a sweet dream when the long trick's over.

A WANDERER'S SONG

A wind's in the heart of me, a fire's in my heels,
 I am tired of brick and stone and rumbling wagon-wheels;
 I hunger for the sea's edge, the limits of the land,
 Where the wild old Atlantic is shouting on the sand.

Oh I'll be going, leaving the noises of the street,
 To where a lifting foresail-foot is yanking at the sheet;
 To a windy, tossing anchorage where yawls and ketches ride,
 Oh I'll be going, going, until I meet the tide.

And first I'll hear the sea-wind, the mewing of the gulls,
 The clucking, sucking of the sea about the rusty hulls,
 The songs at the capstan in the hooker warping out,
 And then the heart of me'll know I'm there or thereabout.

Oh I am sick of brick and stone, the heart of me is sick,
 For windy green, unquiet sea, the realm of Moby Dick;
 And I'll be going, going, from the roaring of the wheels,
 For a wind's in the heart of me, a fire's in my heels.

SORROW OF MY DATII

Weary the cry of the wind is, weary the sea,
 Weary the heart and the mind and the body of me.
 Would I were out of it, done with it, would I could be
 A white gull crying along the desolate sands!

Outcast, derelict soul in a body accurst,
 Standing drenched with the spindrift, standing athirst,
 For the cool green waves of death to arise and burst
 In a tide of quiet for me on the desolate sands!

Would that the waves and the long white hair of the spray
 Would gather in splendid terror and blot me away
 To the sunless place of the wrecks where the waters sway
 Gently, dreamily, quietly over desolate sands!

TOMORROW

Oh yesterday the cutting edge drank thirstily and deep,
 The upland outlaws ringed us in and herded us as sheep,
 They drove us from the stricken field and bayed us into keep;
 But tomorrow,
 By the living God, we'll try the game again!

Oh yesterday our little troop was ridden through and through,
Our swaying, tattered pennons fied, a broken, beaten few,
And all a summer afternoon they hunted us and slew;

But tomorrow,
By the living God, we'll try the game again!

And here upon the turret-top the bale-fire glowers red,
The wake-lights burn and drip about our hacked, disfigured dead,
And many a broken heart is here and many a broken head;

But tomorrow,
By the living God, we'll try the game again!

THE WEST WIND

It's a warm wind, the west wind, full of birds' cries;
I never hear the west wind but tears are in my eyes
For it comes from the west lands, the old brown hills,
And April's in the west wind, and daffodils.

It's a fine land, the west land, for hearts as tired as mine,
Apple orchards blossom there, and the air's like wine.
There is cool green grass there, where men may lie at rest,
And the thrushes are in song there, fluting from the nest.

"Will ye not come home, brother? ye have been long away,
It's April, and blossom time, and white is the may;
And bright is the sun, brother, and warm is the rain,—
Will ye not come home, brother, home to us again?

"The young corn is green, brother, where the rabbits run,
It's blue sky, and white clouds, and warm rain and sun.
It's song to a man's soul, brother, fire to a man's brain,
To hear the wild bees and see the merry spring again.

"Larks are singing in the west, brother, above the green wheat,
So will ye not come home, brother, and rest your tired feet?
I've a balm for bruised hearts, brother, sleep for aching eyes,"
Says the warin' wind, the west wind, full of birds' cries.

It's the white road westwards is the road I must tread
To the green grass, the cool grass, and rest for heart and head,
To the violets and the warm hearts and the thrushes' song,
In the fine land, the west land, the land where I belong.

ROUNDING THE HORN

(from "Dauber")

Then came the cry of "Call all hands on deck!"
The Dauber knew its meaning; it was come:
Cape Horn, that tramples beauty into wreck,
And crumples steel and smites the strong man dumb.

Down clattered flying kites and staysails; some Sang out in quick, high calls: the fair-leads skirled,
And from the south-west came the end of the world . . .

"Lay out!" the Bosun yelled. The Dauber laid
Out on the yard, gripping the yard, and feeling
Sick at the mighty space of air displayed
Below his feet, where mewling birds were wheeling.
A giddy fear was on him; he was reeling.
He bit his lip half through, clutching the jack.
A cold sweat glued the shirt upon his back.

The yard was shaking, for a brace was loose.
He felt that he would fall; he clutched, he bent,
Claiming with natural terror to the shoes
While idiotic promptings came and went.
Snow fluttered on a wind-flaw and was spent;
He saw the water darken. Someone yelled,
"Frap it; don't stay to furl! Hold on!" He held.

Darkness came down—half darkness—in a whirl;
The sky went out, the waters disappeared.
He felt a shocking pressure of blowing hurl
The ship upon her side. The darkness speared
At her with wind; she staggered, she careered;
Then down she lay. The Dauber felt her go,
He saw her yard tilt downwards. Then the snow

Whirled all about—dense, multitudinous, cold—
Mixed with the wind's one devilish thrust and shriek,
Which whiffled out men's tears, defeated, took hold,
Flattening the flying drift against the cheek.
The yards buckled and bent, man could not speak.
The ship lay on her broadside; the wind's sound
Had devilish malice at having got her downed.

How long the gale had blown he could not tell,
Only the world had changed, his life had died.
A moment now was everlasting hell.
Nature an onslaught from the weather side,
A withering rush of death, a frost that cried,
Shrieked, till he withered at the heart; a hail
Plastered his oilskins with an icy mail. . . .

"Up!" yelled the Bosun; "up and clear the wreck!"
The Dauber followed where he led; below
He caught one giddy glimpse of the deck
Filled with white water, as though heaped with snow.
He saw the streamers of the rigging blow
Straight out like pennons from the splintered mast,
Then, all sense dimmed, all was an icy blast.

Roaring from nether hell and filled with ice,
 Roaring and crashing on the jerking stage,
 An utter bridle given to utter vice,
 Limitless power mad with endless rage
 Withering the soul; a minute seemed an age.
 He clutched and hacked at ropes, at rags of sail,
 Thinking that comfort was a fairy tale,

Told long ago—long, long ago—long since
 Heard of in other lives—imagined, dreamed—
 There where the basest beggar was a prince.
 To him in torment where the tempest screamed,
 Comfort and warmth and ease no longer seemed
 Things that a man could know; soul, body, brain,
 Knew nothing but the wind, the cold, the pain.

C. L. M.

In the dark womb where I began
 My mother's life made me a man.
 Through all the months of human birth
 Her beauty fed my common earth
 I cannot see, nor breathe, nor stir,
 But through the death of some of her.

Down in the darkness of the grave
 She cannot see the life she gave.
 For all her love, she cannot tell
 Whether I use it ill or well,
 Nor knock at dusty doors to find
 Her beauty dusty in the mind.

If the grave's gates could be undone,
 She would not know her little son,
 I am so grown. If we should meet,
 She would pass by me in the street,

Unless my soul's face let her see
 My sense of what she did for me.

What have I done to keep in mind
 My debt to her and womankind?
 What woman's happier life repays
 Her for those months of wretched days?
 For all my mouthless body leech'd
 Ere Birth's releasing hell was reach'd?

What have I done, or tried, or said
 In thanks to that dear woman dead?
 Men triumph o'er women still,
 Men trample women's rights at will,
 And man's lust roves the world untamed.

O grave, keep shut lest I be shamed.

CARGOES

Quinquireme of Nineveh from distant Ophir
 Rowing home to haven in sunny Palestine,
 With a cargo of ivory,
 And apes and peacocks,
 Sandalwood, cedarwood, and sweet white wine.

Stately Spanish galleon coming from the Isthmus,
 Dipping through the Tropics by the palm-green shores,
 With a cargo of diamonds,
 Emeralds, amethysts,
 Topazes, and cinnamon, and gold moidores.

Dirty British coaster with a salt-caked smoke-stack
 Butting through the Channel in the mad March days,
 With a cargo of Tyne coal,
 Road-rail, pig-lead,
 Firewood, iron-ware, and cheap tin trays.

CAPTAIN STRATTON'S FANCY

Oh some are fond of red wine, and some are fond of white,
 And some are all for dancing in the pale moonlight;
 But rum alone's the tipple and the heart's delight
 Of the old bold mate of Henry Morgan.

Oh some are fond of Spanish wine, and some are fond of French,
 And some'll swallow tay and stuff fit only for a wench;
 But I'm for right Jamaica till I roll beneath the bench,
 Says the old bold mate of Henry Morgan.

Oh some are for the lily, and some are for the rose,
 But I am for the sugar-cane that in Jamaica grows;
 For it's that makes the bonny drink to warm my copper nose,
 Says the old bold mate of Henry Morgan.

Oh some are fond of fiddles and a song well sung,
 And some are all for music for to lilt upon the tongue;
 But mouths were made for tankards, and for sucking at the bung,
 Says the old bold mate of Henry Morgan.

And some are fond of dancing, and some are fond of dice,
 And some are all for red lips and pretty lasses' eyes;
 But a right Jamaica puncheon is a finer prize
 To the old bold mate of Henry Morgan.

Oh some that's good and godly ones they hold that it's a sin
 To troll the jolly bowl around and let the dollars spin;
 But I'm for toleration and for drinking at an inn,
 Says the old bold mate of Henry Morgan.

Oh some are sad and wretched folk that go in silken suits,
 And there's a mort of wicked rogues that live in good reputes;
 So I'm for drinking honestly, and dying in my boots,
 Like an old bold mate of Henry Morgan.

NIGHT ON THE DOWNTLAND

Night is on the downland, on the lonely moorland,
 On the hills where the wind goes over sheep-bitten turf,
 Where the bent grass beats upon the unplowed poorland
 And the pine-woods roar like the surf.

Here the Roman lived on the wind-barren lonely,
 Dark now and haunted by the moorland fowl;
 None comes here now but the peewit only,
 And moth-like death in the owl.

Beauty was here on this beetle-droning downland;
 The thought of a Caesar in the purple came
 From the palace by the Tiber in the Roman townland
 To this wind-swept hill with no name.

Lonely Beauty came here and was here in sadness,
 Brave as a thought on the frontier of the mind,
 In the camp of the wild upon the march of madness,
 The bright-eyed Queen of the Blind.

Now where Beauty was are the wind-withered gorses,
 Moaning like old men in the hill-wind's blast;
 The flying sky is dark with running horses,
 And the night is full of the past.

ON GROWING OLD

Be with me, Beauty, for the fire is dying;
 My dog and I are old, too old for roving.
 Man, whose young passion sets the spindrift flying,
 Is soon too lame to march, too cold for loving.
 I take the book and gather to the fire,
 Turning old yellow leaves; minute by minute
 The clock ticks to my heart. A withered wire,
 Moves a thin ghost of music in the spinet.
 I cannot sail your seas, I cannot wander
 Your cornland, nor your hill-land, nor your valleys
 Ever again, nor share the battle yonder
 Where the young knight the broken squadron rallies.
 Only stay quiet while my mind remembers
 The beauty of fire from the beauty of embers.

Beauty, have pity! for the strong have power,
 The rich their wealth, the beautiful their grace,
 Summer of man its sunlight and its flower.
 Spring-time of man all April in a face.
 Only, as in the jostling in the Strand,
 Where the mob thrusts or loiters or is loud,
 The beggar with the saucer in his hand
 Asks only a penny from the passing crowd,
 So, from this glittering world with all its fashion,
 Its fire, and play of men, its stir, its march,
 Let me have wisdom, Beauty, wisdom and passion,
 Bread to the soul, rain when the summers parch.
 Give me but these, and though the darkness close
 Even the night will blossom as the rose.

SONNET

Flesh, I have knocked at many a dusty door,
 Gone down full many a windy midnight lane,
 Probed in old walls and felt along the floor,
 Pressed in blind hope the lighted window-pane,
 But useless all, though sometimes when the moon
 Was full in heaven and the sea was full,
 Along my body's alleys came a tune
 Played in the tavern by the Beautiful.
 Then for an instant I have felt at point
 To find and seize her, whosoe'er she be,
 Whether some saint whose glory doth anoint
 Those whom she loves, or but a part of me,
 Or something that the things not understood
 Make for their uses out of flesh and blood.

SONNET

Is there a great green commonwealth of Thought
 Which ranks the yearly pageant, and decides
 How Summer's royal progress shall be wrought,
 By secret stir which in each plant abides?
 Does rocking daffodil consent that she,
 The snowdrop of wet winters, shall be first?
 Does spotted cowslip with the grass agree
 To hold her pride before the rattle burst?
 And in the hedge what quick agreement goes,
 When hawthorn blossoms reddens to decay,
 That Summer's pride shall come, the Summer's rose,
 Before the flower be on the bramble spray?
 Or is it, as with us, unresting strife,
 And each consent a lucky gasp for life?

LAUGH AND BE MERRY

Laugh and be merry, remember, better the world with a song,
 Better the world with a blow in the teeth of a wrong.

Laugh, for the time is brief, a thread the length of a span.

Laugh, and be proud to belong to the old proud pageant of man.

Laugh and be merry: remember, in olden time,
 God made Heaven and Earth for joy He took in a rhyme,
 Made them, and filled them full with the strong red wine of His mirth,
 The splendid joy of the stars: the joy of the earth.

So we must laugh and drink from the deep blue cup of the sky,
 Join the jubilant song of the great stars sweeping by,
 Laugh, and battle, and work, and drink of the wine outpoured
 In the dear green earth, the sign of the joy of the Lord.

Laugh and be merry together, like brothers akin,
 Guesting awhile in the rooms of a beautiful inn,
 Glad till the dancing stops, and the lilt of the music ends.
 Laugh till the game is played; and be you merry, my friends.

THE CHOICE

The Kings go by with jeweled crowns;
 Their horses gleam, their banners shake, their spears are many.
 The sack of many-peopled towns
 Is all their dream:
 The way they take
 Leaves but a ruin in the brake,
 And, in the furrow that the plowmen make,
 A stampless penny; a tale, a dream.

The Merchants reckon up their gold,
 Their letters come, their ships arrive, their freights are glories;
 The profits of their treasures sold
 They tell and sum;
 Their foremen drive
 Their servants, starved to half-alive,
 Whose labors do but make the earth a hive
 Of stinking stories; a tale, a dream.

The Priests are singing in their stalls,
 Their singing lifts, their incense burns, their praying clamors;
 Yet God is as the sparrow falls,
 The ivy drifts;
 The votive urns
 Are all left void when Fortune turns,
 The god is but a marble for the kerns
 To break with hammers; a tale, a dream.

O Beauty, let me know again
 The green earth cold, the April rain, the quiet waters figuring sky,
 The one star risen.
 So shall I pass into the feast
 Not touched by King, Merchant, or Priest;
 Know the red spirit of the beast,
 Be the green grain;
 Escape from prison.

THE PASSING STRANGE

Out of the earth to rest or range
 Perpetual in perpetual change,
 The unknown passing through the strange.

Water and saltiness held together
 To tread the dust and stand the weather,
 And plow the field and stretch the tether,

To pass the wine-cup and be witty,
 Water the sands and build the city,
 Slaughter like devils and have pity,

Be red with rage and pale with lust,
 Make beauty come, make peace, make trust,
 Water and saltiness mixed with dust;

Drive over earth, swim under sea,
Fly in the eagle's secrecy,
Guess where the hidden comets be;

Know all the deathy seeds that still Queen Helen's beauty, Caesar's will,
And slay them even as they kill;

Fashion an altar for a rood,
Defile a continent with blood,
And watch a brother starve for food:

Love like a madman, shaking, blind,
Till self is burnt into a kind
Possession of another mind;

Brood upon beauty, till the grace
Of beauty with the holy face
Brings peace into the bitter place;

Prove in the lifeless granites, scan
The stars for hope, for guide, for plan;
Live as a woman or a man;

Fasten to lover or to friend,
Until the heart break at the end
The break of death that cannot mend:

Then to lie useless, helpless, still,
Down in the earth, in dark, to fill
The roots of grass or daffodil.

Down in the earth, in dark, alone,
A mockery of the ghost in bone,
The strangeness, passing the unknown.

Time will go by, that outlasts clocks,
Dawn in the thorps will rouse the cocks,
Sunset be glory on the rocks:

But it, the thing, will never heed
Even the rootling from the seed
Thrusting to suck it for its need.

Since moons decay and suns decline,
How else should end this life of mine?
Water and saltiness are not wine.

But in the darkest hour of night,
When even the foxes peer for sight,
The byre-cock crows; he feels the light.

So, in this water mixed with dust,
The byre-cock spirit crows from trust
That death will change because it must.

For all things change: the darkness changes,
The wandering spirits change their ranges,
The corn is gathered to the granges.

The corn is sown again, it grows;
The stars burn out, the darkness goes;
The rhythms change, they do not close.

They change, and we, who pass like foam,
Like dust blown through the streets of Rome,
Change ever, too; we have no home,

Only a beauty, only a power,
Sad in the fruit, bright in the flower,
Endlessly erring for its hour,

But gathering as we stray, a sense
Of Life, so lovely and intense,
It lingers when we wander hence,

That those who follow feel behind
Their backs, when all before is blind,
Our joy, a rampart to the mind.

Lord Dunsany

EDWARD JOHN MORETON DRAX PLUNKETT, Lord Dunsany, the eighteenth Baron of his line, with estates in Meath, Ireland, and in Kent, was born July 24, 1878, and was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. He is best known as an author of fantastic fairy tales and still more fantastic plays. The Gods of the Mountain (1911) and The Golden Doom (1912) are highly dramatic and intensely poetic; A Night at an Inn (1916) is that peculiar novelty, an eerie and plausible melodrama.

Dunsany's prime quality is a highly colored imagination rich in symbolism. This symbolism, part modern, part Oriental, shows itself in situation, in the juxtaposition of the grotesque and the casual, even in the employment of curious fictitious names. Five Plays (1914) and Plays of Gods and Men (1917) include the best of Dunsany's one-acters.

After the World War, in which he served as captain in the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, Dunsany visited America and revised the reissue of his early tales and prose poems collected in his The Book of Wonder, originally published in 1912. Then followed The Last Book of Wonder (1916), Unhappy Far-off Things and The King of Elfland's Daughter (1924).

Fifty Poems (1930) is marred by too great an amount of occasional verse. Most of it seems the product of a mind whose edge is by no means dull but whose emotions are remembered in too tranquil a tranquillity. The Dunsany touch is not wholly lacking. "The Watchers," for all its resemblance to De la Mare's "The Listeners," is one of the best in the volume, and "Snow on the East Wind" is an apt and imagistic picturing of the dying down of the wind with the coming of snow.

SNOW ON THE EAST WIND

A black horse came to visit us,
His hooves on the hills drumming
All the way from the Caucasus,
And was three days coming.

On his back was a lady light,
And cruelly did she ride him.
He dropped dead at our doors by night
As she softly stepped from astride him.

SONGS FROM AN EVIL WOOD

I

There is no wrath in the stars,
They do not rage in the sky;
I look from the evil wood
And find myself wondering why.

Why do they not scream out
And grapple star against star,
Seeking for blood in the wood
As all things round me are?

They do not glare like the sky
Or flash like the deeps of the wood;
But they shine softly on
In their sacred solitude.

To their high, happy haunts
Silence from us has flown,

She whom we loved of old
And know it now she is gone.

When will she come again,
Though for one second only?
She whom we loved is gone
And the whole world is lonely.

II

Somewhere lost in the haze
The sun goes down in the cold,
And birds in this evil wood
Chirrup home as of old;

Chirrup, stir and are still,
On the high twigs frozen and thin.
There is no more noise of them now,
And the long night sets in.

Of all the wonderful things
That I have seen in the wood
I marvel most at the birds
And their wonderful quietude.

For a giant smites with his club
All day the tops of the hill,
Sometimes he rests at night,
Oftener he beats them still.

And a dwarf with a grim black mane
Raps with repeated rage
All night in the valley below
On the wooden walls of his cage.

And the elder giants come
 Sometimes, tramping from far
 Through the weird and flickering light
 Made by an earthly star.

And the giant with his club,
 And the dwarf with rage in his breath,
 And the elder giants from far,
 They are all the children of Death.

They are all abroad tonight
 And are breaking the hills with their brood,—
 And the birds are all asleep
 Even in Plug Street Wood!

III

I met with Death in his country,
 With his scythe and his hollow eye
 Walking the roads of Belgium.
 I looked and he passed me by.

Since he passed me by in Plug Street,
 In the wood of the evil name,
 I shall not now lie with the heroes,
 I shall not share their fame;

I shall never be as they are,
 A name in the lands of the Free,
 Since I looked on Death in Flanders
 And he did not look at me.

Harold Monro

HAROLD MONRO was born in Brussels in 1879 and educated at Caius College, Cambridge. He described himself as "author, publisher, editor and book-seller." Monro founded The Poetry Bookshop in London in 1912, a unique establishment having as its object a practical relation between poetry and the public: it kept in stock nothing but poetry, the drama, and books connected with these subjects. His quarterly, Poetry and Drama (discontinued during the war and revived in 1919 as The Chapbook), was in a sense the organ of the younger men; and his shop, in which he lived for the last twenty years of his life except while he was in the army, became a literary center. In spite of changing fashions Monro remained an influence until his death. He died at Broadstairs, March 16, 1932.

Monro's poetry depicts the play between the world of reality and the limbo of fantasy. Before Dawn (1911) has little of his peculiar mysticism, but Children of Love (1914), Ties (1915) and Strange Meetings (1917) present, with indubitable originality, the relation of man, not only to the earth he rose from, but to the inanimate things among which he moves. Even the most whimsical poems disclose an emotional intensity beneath the skillful rhythms. Monro's kettles are as animated as his cats; his machines, domestic furniture, ordinary interiors are both surprising and natural—surprising in the revelation of what might well be their "inner selves," natural in the way their speech is communicated.

Monro has been criticized as being a poet by intention, but not a singer by intuition. Defending certain of the more determined "modernist" poets—and, by implication, himself—Monro has written, "It will be no use to say that their poetry 'does not sing.' It is not meant to. The word Song has been abandoned and swept out, with Ode, Sonnet, Quatrain, and other similar verbal lumber. The test of intellect is more important to them than tests of prosody, or tradition. The passing event and its effect on the mind is everything to them. . . . Thus they think in terms of the whole poem rather than of the single line, and thus they are often unquotable except in extenso." While this is interesting (and only partially true) Monro's own poetry is at its best when intellect is subservient to imagination.

Real Property (1922) represents a further advance. Although Monro has not lost his whimsical appraisal of "still life," the note is graver, the implications larger. Some of the poems, as Monro states in a prefatory note, are "tainted with slight Georgian affectations." But such verses as the metaphysical "Earthliness" (too long for quotation) and the simpler poems of Part Two, four of which are reprinted in the group below, mark this poet as one of the most original though, undeservedly, one of the least popular creators of the period.

The Earth for Sale (1928) is a continuation and extension of the more somber speculations. Besides his poetry, Monro is the author of Some Contemporary Poets (1920), a set of sharply critical estimates.

EVERY THING

Since man has been articulate,
Mechanical, improvidently wise
(Servant of Fate),
He has not understood the little cries
And foreign conversations of the small
Delightful creatures that have followed him
Not far behind,
Has failed to hear the sympathetic call
Of Crockery and Cutlery, those kind
Reposeful Teraphim
Of his domestic happiness; the Stool
He sat on, or the Door he entered through;
He has not thanked them, overbearing fool!
What is he coming to?

But you should listen to the talk of these.
Honest they are, and patient they have kept;
Served him without his Thank you or his Please . . .
I often heard
The gentle Bed, a sigh between each word,
Murmuring, before I slept.
The Candle, as I blew it, cried aloud,
Then bowed,
And in a smoky argument
Into the darkness went.
The Kettle puffed a tentacle of breath —
"Pooh! I have boiled his water, I don't know
Why; and he always says I boil too slow.
He never calls me 'Sukie, dear,' and oh,
I wonder why I squander my desire
Sitting submissive on his kitchen fire."

Now the old Copper Basin suddenly
Rattled and tumbled from the shelf,
Bumping and crying: "I can fall by myself;

Without a woman's hand
 To patronize and coax and flatter me,
 I understand
 The lean and poise of gravitable land."
 It gave a raucous and tumultuous shout,
 Twisted itself convulsively about,
 Rested upon the floor, and, while I stare,
 It stares and grins at me.

The old impetuous Gas above my head
 Begins irascibly to flare and fret,
 Wheezing into its epileptic jet,
 Reminding me I ought to go to bed.

The rafters creak; an Empty-Cupboard door
 Swings open; now a wild Plank of the floor
 Breaks from its joist, and leaps behind my foot.
 Down from the chimney, half a pound of Soot
 Tumbles and lies, and shakes itself again.
 The Putty cracks against the window-pane.
 A piece of Paper in the basket shoves
 Another piece, and toward the bottom moves.
 My independent Pencil, while I write,
 Breaks at the point: the ruminating Clock
 Stirs all its body and begins to rock,
 Warning the waiting presence of the Night,
 Strikes the dead hour, and tumbles to the plain
 Ticking of ordinary work again.

You do well to remind me, and I praise
 Your strangely individual foreign ways.
 You call me from myself to recognize
 Companionship in your unselfish eyes.
 I want your dear acquaintances, although
 I pass you arrogantly over, throw
 Your lovely sounds, and squander them along
 My busy days. I'll do you no more wrong.

Purr for me, Sukie, like a faithful cat.
 You, my well-trampled Boots, and you, my Hat,
 Remain my friends: I feel, though I don't speak,
 Your touch grow kindlier from week to week.
 It well becomes our mutual happiness
 To go toward the same end more or less.
 There is not much dissimilarity,
 Not much to choose, I know it well, in fine,
 Between the purposes of you and me,
 And your eventual Rubbish Heap, and mine.

CHILDREN OF LOVE

The holy boy
 Went from his mother out in the cool of day
 Over the sun-parched fields
 And in among the olives shining green and shining gray.

There was no sound,
 No smallest voice of any shivering stream.
 Poor sinless little boy,
 He desired to play, and to sing; he could only sigh and dream.

Suddenly came
 Running along to him naked, with curly hair,
 That rogue of the lovely world,
 That other beautiful child whom the virgin Venus bare.

The holy boy
 Gazed with those sad blue eyes that all men know.
 Impudent Cupid stood
 Panting, holding an arrow and pointing his bow.

("Will you not play?
 Jesus, run to him, run to him, swift for our joy.
 Is he not holy, like you?
 Are you afraid of his arrows, O beautiful dreaming boy?")

And now they stand
 Watching one another with timid gaze;
 Youth has met youth in the wood,
 But holiness will not change its melancholy ways.

Cupid at last
 Draws his bow and softly lets fly a dart.
 Smile for a moment, sad world!—
 It has grazed the white skin and drawn blood from the sorrowful heart.

Now for delight,
 Cupid tosses his locks and goes wantonly near;
 But the child that was born to the cross
 Has let fall on his cheek, for the sadness of life a compassionate tear.

Marvelous dream!
 Cupid has offered his arrows for Jesus to try;
 He has offered his bow for the game,
 But Jesus went weeping away, and left him there wondering why.

STRANGE MEETINGS

If Suddenly a Clod of Earth

If suddenly a clod of earth should rise,
 And walk about, and breathe, and speak, and love,
 How one would tremble, and in what surprise
 Gasp: "Can you move"?

I see men walking and I always feel:
 "Earth! How have you done this? What can you be?"
 I can't learn how to know men, or conceal
 How strange they are to me.

A Flower Is Looking

A flower is looking through the ground,
 Blinking at the April weather;
 Now a child has seen the flower:
 Now they go and play together.

Now it seems the flower will speak,
 And will call the child its brother—
 But, oh strange forgetfulness!—
 They don't recognize each other.

SOLITUDE

When you have tidied all things for the night,
 And while your thoughts are fading to their sleep,
 You'll pause a moment in the late firelight,
 Too sorrowful to weep.

The large and gentle furniture has stood
 In sympathetic silence all the day
 With that old kindness of domestic wood;
 Nevertheless the haunted room will say:
 "Someone must be away."

The little dog rolls over half awake,
 Stretches his paws, yawns, looking up at you,
 Wags his tail very slightly for your sake,
 That you may feel he is unhappy too.

A distant engine whistles, or the floor
 Creaks, or the wandering night-wind bangs a door.

Silence is scattered like a broken glass.
 The minutes prick their ears and run about,
 Then one by one subside again and pass
 Sedately in, monotonously out.

You bend your head and wipe away a tear.
 Solitude walks one heavy step more near.

MILK FOR THE CAT

When the tea is brought at five o'clock,
 And all the neat curtains are drawn with care,
 The little black cat with bright green eyes
 Is suddenly purring there.

At first she pretends, having nothing to do,
 She has come in merely to blink by the grate,
 But, though tea may be late or the milk may be sour,
 She is never late.

And presently her agate eyes
 Take a soft large milky haze,
 And her independent casual glance
 Becomes a stiff hard gaze.

Then she stamps her claws or lifts her ears
 Or twists her tail and begins to stir,
 Till suddenly all her little body becomes
 One breathing trembling purr.

The children eat and wriggle and laugh;
 The two old ladies stroke their silk.
 But the cat is grown small and thin with desire,
 Transformed to a creeping lust for milk.

The white saucer like some full moon descends
 At last from the clouds of the table above,
 She sighs and dreams and thrills and glows,
 Transfigured with love.

She nestles over the shining rim,
 Buries her chin in the creamy sea;
 Her tail hangs loose; each drowsy paw
 Is doubled under each bending knee.

A long dim ecstasy holds her life;
 Her world is an infinite shapeless white,
 Till her tongue has curled the last holy drop,
 Then she sinks back into the night,

Draws and dips her body to heap
 Her sleepy nerves in the great arm-chair,
 Lies defeated and buried deep
 Three or four hours unconscious there.

D O G

O little friend, your nose is ready; you sniff,
 Asking for that expected walk,
 (Your nostrils full of the happy rabbit-whiff)
 And almost talk.

And so the moment becomes a moving force;
 Coats glide down from their pegs in the humble dark;
 You scamper the stairs,
 Your body informed with the scent and the track and the mark
 Of stoats and weasels, moles and badgers and hares.

We are going Out. You know the pitch of the word,
 Probing the tone of thought as it comes through fog
 And reaches by devious means (half-smelt, half-heard)
 The four-legged brain of a walk-eccstatic dog.

Out through the garden your head is already low.
 You are going your walk, you know,
 And your limbs will draw
 Joy from the earth through the touch of your padded paw.

Now, sending a look to us behind,
 Who follow slowly the track of your lovely play,
 You fetch our bodies forward away from mind
 Into the light and fun of your useless day.

Thus, for your walk, we took ourselves, and went
 Out by the hedge, and tree, to the open ground.
 You ran, in delightful strata of wafted scent,
 Over the hill without seeing the view;
 Beauty is hinted through primitive smells to you:
 And that ultimate Beauty you track is but rarely found.

Home . . . and further joy will be waiting there:
 Supper full of the lovely taste of bone,
 You lift up your nose again, and sniff, and stare
 For the rapture known
 Of the quick wild gorge of food, then the still lie-down;
 While your people will talk above you in the light
 Of candles, and your dreams will merge and drown
 Into the bed-delicious hours of night.

MAN CARRYING BALE

The tough hand closes gently on the load;
 Out of the mind a voice
 Calls "Lift!" and the arms, remembering well their work,
 Lengthen and pause for help.
 Then a slow ripple flows along the body,
 While all the muscles call to one another:
 "Lift!" and the bulging bale
 Floats like a butterfly in June.

So moved the earliest carrier of bales,
 And the same watchful sun
 Glowed through his body feeding it with light.
 So will the last one move,
 And halt, and dip his head, and lay his load
 Down, and the muscles will relax and tremble . . .
 Earth, you designed your man
 Beautiful both in labor and repose.

THE NIGHTINGALE NEAR THE HOUSE

Here is the soundless cypress on the lawn:
 It listens, listens. Taller trees beyond
 Listen. The moon at the unruffled pond
 Stares. And you sing, you sing.

That star-enchanted song falls through the air
 From lawn to lawn down terraces of sound,
 Darts in white arrows on the shadowed ground;
 And all the night you sing.

My dreams are flowers to which you are a bee
 As all night long I listen, and my brain
 Receives your song; then loses it again
 In moonlight on the lawn.

Now is your voice a marble high and white,
 Then like a mist on fields of paradise,
 Now is a raging fire, then is like ice,
 Then breaks, and it is dawn.

CITY-STORM

The heavy sounds are over-sweet
 That droop above the hooded street,
 At any moment ripe to fall and lie,
 And when the Wind will swagger up the town
 They'll bend a moment, then will fly
 All clattering down.

Troupes come and go of urchin breeze:
 They flick your face or smack the trees,
 Then round the corner spin and leap
 With whistling cries,
 Rake their rubbish in a heap
 And throw it in your eyes.

(Much preparation of the earth and air
 Is needed everywhere
 Before that first large drop of rain can fall.)

Smells of the Sea, or inland Grass,
 Come staring through the town and pass.
 Brilliant old Memories drive in state
 Along the way, but cannot wait;
 And many a large unusual bird
 Hovers across the sky, half-heard.

But listen. It is He;
 At last he comes:
 Gigantic tyrant panting through the street,
 Slamming the windows of our little homes,

Banging the doors, knocking the chimneys down.

Oh, his loud tramp: how scornfully he can meet

Great citizens, and lash them with his sleet! Everything will be altered in our town.

He'll wipe the film of habit clean away, While he remains,

His cloak is over everything we do, And the whole town complains:—

A somber scroll;

An inner room.

A crystal bowl·

Waters of gloom.

Oh, the darkened house—

Into silence creep!

The world is cold.

All people weep.

THE HURRIER

O furrowed plaintive face,
No time for peace?

Your grim appointment will not wait?

No, our great earthly clock

Ticks through your spine, and locomotion wags

An angry tail.

Quick, do not miss the toiling trailing tram.

Hurry, or you are lost, for anywhere

Hunger may lurk and leer.

You may have been elected, mid so many,

To be his prey,

Even today.

On horned imagination drive your limbs.

It will need your whole life to be at peace:

Then all appointments cease.

But now you neither have the time for death,

Nor time conveniently to draw your breath

W. W. Gibson

WILFRID WILSON GIBSON was born in 1880 at Hexham, Northumberland, and, by his fiftieth year, was the author of some twenty-two books of poems and five volumes of poetic plays and dialogues. The first five or six of these were pseudo-Tennysonian, imitative in manner and sentimental in tone. Their titles give the key: Ulyn the Harper (1902), The Queen's Vigil (1902), The Golden Helm (1903), The Nets of Love (1905).

With Daily Bread (1910), Fires (1912), and Borderlands (1914) Gibson executed a complete right-about-face and, with dramatic brevity, wrote a series of poems mirroring the dreams, pursuits, and fears of common humanity. Thoroughfares (1914) marks an advance in technique and power. In Livelihood (1917) Gibson seems to be theatricalizing and merely exploiting his working-people, yet several of his later lyrics recapture the quality of such poems as "The Old Man," "The Stone" and "The Machine." Hill-Tracks (1918) attempts to hold (as Edward Thomas actually did hold) the beauty of village-names through the glamor of the English countryside. Neighbors (1920) again takes up the strain of a somewhat too conscious poeticizing of the casual. Islands (1932) and Fuel (1934) prolong the attempt.

Gibson's later work suffers from his facility; a thinning out of power, even of feeling, is evident in Krindlesyke (1922), Kestrel Edge (1924) and I Heard a Sailor (1925). The best of Gibson is in the first Collected Poems (1923), a further Collected Poems, 1905-1925, having been published in 1926.

P R E L U D E

As one, at midnight, wakened by the call
 Of golden-plovers in their seaward flight,
 Who lies and listens, as the clear notes fall
 Through tingling silence of the frosty night—
 Who lies and listens, till the last note fails,
 And then, in fancy, faring with the flock
 Far over slumbering hills and dreaming dales,
 Soon hears the surges break on reef and rock;
 And, hearkening, till all sense of self is drowned
 Within the mightier music of the deep,
 No more remembers the sweet piping sound
 That startled him from dull, undreaming sleep;
 So I, first waking from oblivion, heard,
 With heart that kindled to the call of song,
 The voice of young life, fluting like a bird,
 And echoed that light lilting; till, ere long,
 Lured onward by that happy, singing-flight,
 I caught the stormy summons of the sea,
 And dared the restless deeps that, day and night,
 Surge with the life-song of humanity.

T H E S T O N E

“And will you cut a stone for him,
 To set above his head?
 And will you cut a stone for him—
 A stone for him?” she said.

Three days before, a splintered rock
 Had struck her lover dead—
 Had struck him in the quarry dead,
 Where, careless of the warning call,
 He loitered, while the shot was fired—
 A lively stripling, brave and tall,
 And sure of all his heart desired . . .
 A flash, a shock,
 A rumbling fall . . .
 And, broken ’neath the broken rock,
 A lifeless heap, with face of clay;
 And still as any stone he lay,
 With eyes that saw the end of all.

I went to break the news to her;
 And I could hear my own heart beat
 With dread of what my lips might say
 But, some poor fool had sped before;
 And flinging wide her father’s door,
 Had blurted out the news to her,
 Had struck her lover dead for her,
 Had struck the girl’s heart dead in her,

Had struck life lifeless, at a word,
 And dropped it at her feet.
 Then hurried on his witless way,
 Scarce knowing she had heard.

And when I came, she stood alone,
 A woman turned to stone.
 And, though no word at all she said,
 I knew that all was known.
 Because her heart was dead,
 She did not sigh nor moan,
 His mother wept.
 She could not weep.
 Her lover slept:
 She could not sleep.
 Three days, three nights,
 She did not stir.
 Three days, three nights,
 Were one to her,
 Who never closed her eyes
 From sunset to sunrise,
 From dawn to eventfall:
 Her tearless, staring eyes,
 That seeing naught, saw all.

The fourth night when I came from work,
 I found her at my door.

"And will you cut a stone for him?"
 She said: and spoke no more:
 But followed me, as I went in,
 And sank upon a chair;
 And fixed her gray eyes on my face,
 With still, unseeing stare.
 And, as she waited patiently,
 I could not bear to feel
 Those still, gray eyes that followe. me,
 Those eyes that plucked the heart from me,
 Those eyes that sucked the breath from me
 And curdled the warm blood in me,
 Those eyes that cut me to the bone,
 And pierced my marrow like cold steel.

And so I rose, and sought a stone;
 And cut it, smooth and square:
 And, as I worked, she sat and watched,
 Beside me, in her chair.
 Night after night, by candlelight,
 I cut her lover's name:
 Night after night, so still and white,
 And like a ghost she came;
 And sat beside me in her chair;
 And watched with eyes aflame.

She eyed each stroke;
 And hardly stirred:
 She never spoke
 A single word:
 And not a sound or murmur broke
 The quiet, save the mallet-stroke.

With still eyes ever on my hands,
 With eys that seemed to burn my hands,
 My wincing, overwearied hands,
 She watched, with bloodless lips apart,
 And silent, indrawn breath:
 And evcry stroke my chisel cut,
 Death cut still deeper in her heart:
 The two of us were chiseling,
 Together, I and death.

And when at length the job was done,
 And I had laid the mallet by,
 As if, at last, her peace were won,
 She breathed his name; and, with a sigh,
 Passed slowly through the open door:
 And never crossed my threshold more.

Next night I labored late, alone,
 To cut her name upon the stone.

SIGHT

By the lamplit stall I loitered, feasting my eyes
 On colors ripe and rich for the heart's desire—
 Tomatoes, redder than Krakatoa's fire,
 Oranges like old sunsets over Tyre,
 And apples golden-green as the glades of Paradise.

And as I lingered, lost in divine delight,
 My heart thanked God for the goodly gift of sight
 And all youth's lively senses keen and quick . . .
 When suddenly, behind me in the night,
 I heard the tapping of a blind man's stick.

THE WHITE DUST

I felt no tremor and I caught no sound;
 But a fresh crack scored my ceiling: white dust dropped,
 Sprinkling my polished table . . .
 Underground,
 Fathoms beneath my comfortable room,
 In the pit's dripping gloom,
 A new drift's rock-roof, insecurely propped,
 Had settled; and, in settling, crushed just then

The life out of six men:
Six hearts had stopped . . .

But I, unguessing, looked up fretfully
At the fresh crack, and rose impatiently
To wipe the dust from my mahogany.

Alfred Noyes

ALFRED NOYES was born at Staffordshire, September 16, 1880, one of the few contemporary poets who have been fortunate enough to write a kind of poetry that is not only readable but extraordinarily saleable.

His first book, The Loom of Years (1902), was published when he was only 22 years old, and Poems (1904) emphasized the promise of this first publication. Swinburne, grown old and living in retirement, was so struck with Noyes's talent that he had the young poet out to read to him. Unfortunately, Noyes never developed his gifts as deeply as his admirers expected. His poetry, extremely straightforward and rhythmical, degenerated too often into sentimentalities and cheap tirades; the later work attempted to express programs and profundities far beyond Noyes's power.

What is most appealing about his best verse is its ease and heartiness; this singer's gift lies in the almost personal bond established between the poet and his public. It may be said that many people have such a good time reading his vivacious lines because Noyes had such a good time writing them. Rhyme in a thumping rhythm seems to be not merely his trade but his morning exercise. Noyes's own relish quickens the glee and catches like Forty Singing Seamen (1907), the lusty choruses in Tales of the Mermaid Tavern (1913), the seemingly inspired nonsense of the earlier Forest of Wild Thyme (1905).

The least popular work of Noyes is, as a unified product, his most remarkable performance. It is an epic in twelve books of blank verse, Drake (1908), a pageant of the sea and England's drama upon it. It is a spirited echo of the maritime Elizabethans, a vivid orchestral work interspersed with lyric passages and brisk songs. The companion volume, an attempted reconstruction of the literary phase of the same period, is less successful; but these Tales of the Mermaid Tavern (which introduce Shakespeare, Marlowe, Drayton, Raleigh, Ben Jonson, and other immortals) are colorful, if somewhat too insistently rollicking and smoothly lilting.

Noyes's eight volumes were assembled in 1913 and published in two books of Collected Poems. The third volume of his rapidly accumulating Collected Poems appeared in 1920, the fourth in 1927. In 1922 Noyes began The Torch-Bearers, "An Epic Trilogy," a sort of outline of man's accomplishment rendered in verse, which was cruelly parodied by E. V. Knox in "The Steam-Givers."

Besides his verse, Noyes has written several volumes of prose. Some Aspects of Modern Poetry (1924) is a critical study; The Sun Cure (1929) is a novel; both books are marred by Noyes's petulant gibes at modern poetry.

Although most of his smooth-running rhymes seemed doomed to rush to an early death—are, in fact, already extinct—Noyes will remain a poet pleasant to read because of his “Sherwood,” the lilt of “The Barrel-Organ,” the galloping “The Highwayman” and a handful of other ballads.

S H E R W O O D

Sherwood in the twilight, is Robin Hood awake?
 Gray and ghostly shadows are gliding through the brake;
 Shadows of the dappled deer, dreaming of the morn,
 Dreaming of a shadowy man that winds a shadowy horn.

Robin Hood is here again: all his merry thieves
 Hear a ghostly bugle-note shivering through the leaves,
 Calling as he used to call, faint and far away,
 In Sherwood, in Sherwood, about the break of day.

Merry, merry England has kissed the lips of June:
 All the wings of fairyland were here beneath the moon;
 Like a flight of rose-leaves fluttering in a mist
 Of opal and ruby and pearl and amethyst.

Merry, merry England is waking as of old,
 With eyes of blither hazel and hair of brighter gold:
 For Robin Hood is here again beneath the bursting spray
 In Sherwood, in Sherwood, about the break of day.

Love is in the greenwood building him a house
 Of wild rose and hawthorn and honeysuckle boughs;
 Love is in the greenwood: dawn is in the skies;
 And Marian is waiting with a glory in her eyes.

Hark! The dazzled lark crock climbs the golden steep:
 Marian is waiting: is Robin Hood asleep?
 Round the fairy grass-rings frolic elf and fay,
 In Sherwood, in Sherwood, about the break of day.

Oberon, Oberon, rake away the gold,
 Rake away the red leaves, roll away the mold,
 Rake away the gold leaves, roll away the red,
 And wake Will Scarlet from his leafy forest bed.

Friar Tuck and Little John are riding down together
 With quarter-staff and drinking-can and gray goose-feather;
 The dead are coming back again; the years are rolled away
 In Sherwood, in Sherwood, about the break of day.

Softly over Sherwood the south wind blows;
 All the heart of England hid in every rose
 Hears across the greenwood the sunny whisper leap,
 Sherwood in the red dawn, is Robin Hood asleep?

Hark, the voice of England wakes him as of old
 And, shattering the silence with a cry of brighter gold,
 Bugles in the greenwood echo from the steep,
Sherwood in the red dawn, is Robin Hood asleep?

Where the deer are gliding down the shadowy glen
 All across the glades of fern he calls his merry men;
 Doublets of the Lincoln green glancing through the May,
 In Sherwood, in Sherwood, about the break of day;

Calls them and they answer: from aisles of oak and ash
 Rings the Follow! Follow! and the boughs begin to crash;
 The ferns begin to flutter and the flowers begin to fly;
 And through the crimson dawning the robber band goes by.

Robin! Robin! Robin! All his merry thieves
 Answer as the bugle-note shivers through the leaves:
 Calling as he used to call, faint and far away,
 In Sherwood, in Sherwood, about the break of day.

THE BARREL-ORGAN

There's a barrel-organ catoling across a golden street
 In the City as the sun sinks low;
 And the music's not immortal; but the world has made it sweet
 And fulfilled it with the sunset glow;
 And it pulses through the pleasures of the City and the pain
 That surround the singing organ like a large eternal light;
 And they've given it a glory and a part to play again
 In the Symphony that rules the day and night.
 And now it's marching onward through the realms of old romance,
 And trolling out a fond familiar tune,
 And now it's roaring cannon down to fight the King of France,
 And now it's Prattling softly to the moon.
 And all around the organ there's a sea without a shore
 Of human joys and wonders and regrets;
 To remember and to recompense the music evermore
 For what the cold machinery forgets . . .

Yes; as the music changes,
 Like a prismatic glass,
 It takes the light and ranges
 Through all the moods that pass:
 Dissects the common carnival
 Of passions and regrets,
 And gives the world a glimpse of all
 The colors it forgets.

And there La Traviata sighs
 Another sadder song;
 And there Il Trovatore cries
 A tale of deeper wrong;

And bolder knights to battle go
 With sword and shield and lance,
 Than ever here on earth below
 Have whirled into—a dance!—

Go down to Kew in lilac-time, in lilac-time, in lilac-time;
 Go down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!)
 And you shall wander hand in hand with Love in summer's wonderland;
 Go down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!)

The cherry-trees are seas of bloom and soft perfume and sweet perfume,
 The cherry-trees are seas of bloom (and oh, so near to London!)
 And there they say, when dawn is high and all the world's a blaze of sky
 The cuckoo, though he's very shy, will sing a song for London.

The nightingale is rather rare and yet they say you'll hear him there
 At Kew, at Kew in lilac-time (and oh, so near to London!)
 The linnet and the throstle, too, and after dark the long halloo
 And golden-eyed tu-whit, tu-whoo of owls that ogle London.

For Noah hardly knew a bird of any kind that isn't heard
 At Kew, at Kew in lilac-time (and oh, so near to London!)
 And when the rose begins to pout and all the chestnut spires are out
 You'll hear the rest without a doubt, all chorusing for London:—

Come down to Kew in lilac-time, in lilac-time, in lilac-time;
Come down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!)
And you shall wander hand in hand with Love in summer's wonderland;
Come down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!)

And then the troubadour begins to thrill the golden street,
 In the City as the sun sinks low;
 And in all the gaudy busses there are scores of weary feet
 Marking time, sweet time, with a dull mechanic beat,
 And a thousand hearts are plunging to a love they'll never meet,
 Through the meadows of the sunset, through the poppies and the wheat,
 In the land where the dead dreams go.

Verdi, Verdi, when you wrote Il Trovatore did you dream      "
 Of the City when the sun sinks low,
 Of the organ and the monkey and the many-colored stream
 On the Piccadilly pavement, of the myriad eyes that seem
 To be litten for a moment with a wild Italian gleam
 As A che la morte parodies the world's eternal theme
 And pulses with the sunset-glow?

There's a thief, perhaps, that listens with a face of frozen stone
 In the City as the sun sinks low;
 There's a portly man of business with a balance of his own,
 There's a clerk and there's a butcher of a soft reposcful tone,
 And they're all of them returning to the heavens they have known:
 They are crammed and jammed in busses and—they're each of them alone
 In the land where the dead dreams go.

There's a laborer that listens to the voices of the dead
 In the City as the sun sinks low;
 And his hand begins to tremble and his face is rather red
 As he sees a loafer watching him and—there he turns his head
 And stares into the sunset where his April love is fled,
 For he hears her softly singing and his lonely soul is led
 Through the land where the dead dreams go . . .

There's a barrel-organ caroling across a golden street
 In the City as the sun sinks low;
 Though the music's only Verdi there's a world to make it sweet
 Just as yonder yellow sunset where the earth and heaven meet
 Mellows all the sooty City! Hark, a hundred thousand feet
 Are marching on to glory through the poppies and the wheat
 In the land where the dead dreams go.

So it's Jeremiah, Jeremiah,
 What have you to say
 When you meet the garland girls
 Tripping on their way?

All around my gala hat
 I wear a wreath of roses
 (A long and lonely year it is I've waited for the May!)
 If anyone should ask you,
 The reason why I wear it is—
 My own love, my true love, is coming home today.

And it's buy a bunch of violets for the lady
 (It's lilac-time in London, it's lilac-time in London!)
 Buy a bunch of violets for the lady;
 While the sky burns blue above:

On the other side the street you'll find it shady
 (It's lilac-time in London; it's lilac-time in London!)
 But buy a bunch of violets for the lady,
 And tell her she's your own true love.

There's a barrel-organ caroling across a golden street
 In the City as the sun sinks glittering and slow;
 And the music's not immortal; but the world has made it sweet
 And enriched it with the harmonies that make a song complete
 In the deeper heavens of music where the night and morning meet,
 As it dies into the sunset glow;
 And it pulses through the pleasures of the City and the pain
 That surround the singing organ like a large eternal light,
 And they've given it a glory and a part to play again
 In the Symphony that rules the day and night.

And there, as the music changes,
     The song runs round again;
 Once more it turns and ranges
     Through all its joy and pain:
     Dissects the common carnival
         Of passions and regrets;
 And the wheeling world remembers all
     The wheeling song forgets.

Once more La Traviata sighs
     Another sadder song:
 Once more Il Trovatore cries
     A tale of deeper wrong;
 Once more the knights to battle go
     With sword and shield and lance
     Till once, once more, the shattered foe
         Has whirled into—a dance!

Come down to Kew in lilac-time, in lilac-time, in lilac-time;
Come down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!)
And you shall wander hand in hand with Love in summer's wonderland,
Come down to Kew in lilac-time (it isn't far from London!)

EPILOGUE

(from "The Flower of Old Japan")

Carol, every violet has
 Heaven for a looking-glass!

Every little valley lies
 Under many-clouded skies;
 Every little cottage stands
 Girt about with boundless lands.
 Every little glimmering pond
 Claims the mighty shores beyond—
 Shores no seaman ever hailed,
 Seas no ship has ever sailed.

All the shores when day is done
 Fade into the setting sun,
 So the story tries to teach
 More than can be told in speech.

Beauty is a fading flower,
 Truth is but a wizard's tower,
 Where a solemn death-bell tolls,
 And a forest round it rolls.
 We have come by curious ways
 To the light that holds the days;
 We have sought in haunts of fear
 For that all-enfolding sphere:
 And lo! it was not far, but near.
 We have found, O foolish-fond,
 The shore that has no shore beyond.
 Deep in every heart it lies
 With its untranscended skies;
 For what heaven should bend above
 Hearts that own the heaven of love?

Carol, Carol, we have come
 Back to heaven, back to home.

Padraic Colum

PADRAIC COLUM was born at Longford, Ireland (in the same county as Oliver Goldsmith), December 8, 1881, and was educated at the local schools. At twenty he was a member of the group that created the Irish National Theatre.

Colum began as a dramatist with Broken Soil (1904), The Land (1905), Thomas Muskerry (1910), and this early dramatic influence has colored much of his work; in fact, his best poetry is in the form of dramatic lyrics. Wild Earth, his most quoted collection of verse, first appeared in 1909, and an amplified edition of it was published in America in 1916. Colum himself had come to America (where he has lived ever since) shortly before that date; his Dramatic Poems appeared in 1922.

Creatures (1927), utterly different in theme from its predecessors, is held together by the same gift of condensation. Though Colum's animals are less obviously divine than his gods, his treatment of them is no less devotional. He combines an innocence of vision with wisdom of experience.

As a recorder, Colum has been equally successful as an autobiographer (My Irish Year, 1912), a folk-lorist (Tales and Legends of Hawaii, 1924, The Bright Islands, 1925) and a deservedly popular adapter of tales for children.

THE PLOWER

Sunset and silence! A man: around him earth savage, earth broken;
Beside him two horses—a plow!

Earth savage, earth broken, the brutes, the dawn man there in the sunset,
And the Plow that is twin to the Sword, that is founder of cities!

“Brute-tamer, plow-maker, earth-breaker! Can’t hear?

“There are ages between us.

“Is it praying you are as you stand there alone in the sunset?

“Surely our sky-born gods can be naught to you, earth-child and earth-master?
“Surely your thoughts are of Pan, or of Wotan, or Dana?

“Yet, why give thought to the gods? Has Pan led your brutes where they stumble?
“Has Dana numbed pain of the child-bed, or Wotan put hands to your plow?

“What matter your foolish reply! O man, standing lone and bowed earthward,
“Your task is a day near its close. Give thanks to the night-giving God.”

Slowly the darkness falls, the broken lands blend with the savage;
The brute-tamer stands by the brutes, a head’s breadth only above them.

A head’s breadth? Aye, but therein is hell’s depth, and the height up to heaven,
And the thrones of the gods and their halls, their chariots, purples, and splendors.

AN OLD WOMAN OF THE ROADS

O, to have a little house!
 To own the hearth and stool and all!
 The heaped-up sods upon the fire,
 The pile of turf against the wall!

To have a clock with weights and chains
 And pendulum swinging up and down!
 A dresser filled with shining delph,
 Speckled and white and blue and brown!

I could be busy all the day
 Clearing and sweeping hearth and floor,
 And fixing on their shelf again
 My white and blue and speckled store!

I could be quiet there at night
 Beside the fire and by myself,
 Sure of a bed and loth to leave
 The ticking clock and the shining delph!

Och! but I'm weary of mist and dark,
 And roads where there's never a house nor bush,
 And tired I am of bog and road,
 And the crying wind and the lonesome hush!

And I am praying to God on high,
 And I am praying Him night and day,
 For a little house—a house of my own—
 Out of the wind's and the rain's way.

INTERIOR

The little moths are creeping
 Across the cottage pane;
 On the floor the chickens gather,
 And they make talk and complain.

And she sits by the fire
 Who has reared so many men;
 Her voice is low like the chickens'
 With the things she says again.

"The sons that come back do be restless,
 They search for the thing to say;
 Then they take thought like the swallows,
 And the morrow brings them away.

"In the old, old days, upon Innish,
 The fields were lucky and bright,

And if you lay down you'd be covered
 By the grass of one soft night."

She speaks and the chickens gather,
 And they make talk and complain,
 While the little moths are creeping
 Across the cottage pane.

A DROVER

To Meath of the pastures,
 From wet hills by the sea,
 Through Leitrim and Longford,
 Go my cattle and me.

I hear in the darkness
 Their slipping and breathing—
 I name them the by-ways
 They're to pass without heeding;

Then the wet, winding roads,
Brown bogs with black water;
And my thoughts on white ships
And the King o' Spain's daughter.

Oh! farmer, strong farmer!
You can spend at the fair;
But your face you must turn
To your crops and your care.

And soldiers, red soldiers!
You've seen many lands;
But you walk two by two,
And by captain's commands.

Oh! the smell of the beasts,
The wet wind in the morn;

And the proud and hard earth
Never broken for corn;

And the crowds at the fair,
The herds loosened and blind,
Loud words and dark faces
And the wild blood behind.

(Oh! strong men, with your best
I would strive breast to breast,
I could quiet your herds
With my words, with my words.)

I will bring you my kine,
Where there's grass to the knee;
But you'll think of scant croppings
Harsh with salt of the sea.

WILD ASS

The wild ass lounges, legs struck out
In vagrom unconcern:
The tombs of Achaemenian kings
Are for those hooves to spurn.

And all of rugged Tartary
Lies with him on the ground.
The Tartary that knows no awe
That has nor ban nor bound.

The wild horse from the herd is plucked
To bear a saddle's weight;
The boar is one keeps covert, and
The wolf runs with a mate.

But he's the solitary of space,
Curbless and unbeguiled;
The only being that bears a heart
Not recreant to the wild.

Joseph Campbell

(SEOSAMH MACCATHMHAOIL)

JOSEPH CAMPBELL was born in Belfast in 1881, and is not only a poet but an artist; he made all the illustrations for The Rushlight (1906), a volume of his own poems. Writing under the Gaelic form of his name, he has published half a dozen books of verse, the most striking of which is The Mountainy Singer, first published in Dublin in 1909. Judgment (1912), a play in two acts, was followed by a collection of racy poems, Earth of Cualann (1917).

I AM THE MOUNTAINY SINGER

I am the mountainy singer—
The voice of the peasant's dream,
The cry of the wind on the wooded hill,
The leap of the fish in the stream.

Quiet and love I sing—
 The cairn on the mountain crest,
 The caulin in her lover's arms,
 The child at its mother's breast.

Beauty and peace I sing—
 The fire on the open hearth,
 The cailleach spinning at her wheel,
 The plow in the broken earth.

Travail and pain I sing—
 The bride on the childing bed,
 The dark man laboring at his rhymes,
 The ewe in the lambing shed.

Sorrow and death I sing—
 The canker come on the corn,
 The fisher lost in the mountain loch,
 The cry at the mouth of morn.

No other life I sing,
 For I am sprung of the stock
 That broke the hilly land for bread,
 And built the nest in the rock!

THE OLD WOMAN

As a white candle
 In a holy place,
 So is the beauty
 Of an aged face.

As the spent radiance
 Of the winter sun,

So is a woman
 With her travail done,
 Her brood gone from her,
 As the waters
 Under a ruined mill.

Lascelles Abercrombie

LASCELLES ABERCROMBIE was born in 1881, at Ashton-upon-Mersey, near Manchester. He was educated at Malcolm College and Manchester University. After that, he engaged in a variety of professions; he taught literature at the University in Liverpool and in London. He succumbed to a long illness in 1938.

Like Masefield, Abercrombie gained his reputation rapidly. Unknown until 1909, upon the publication of Interludes and Poems, he was recognized as one of the true metaphysical poets of his period. Emblems of Love (1912), the ripest collection of his dialogues, justified the enthusiasm of his admirers.

Many of Abercrombie's poems, the best of which are too long to quote, are founded on scriptural themes, but his blank verse is biblical neither in mood nor in manner. It is the undercurrent rather than the surface of his verse which moves with a strong religious conviction. Abercrombie's images are daring and brilliant; his lines, sometimes too closely packed, glow with an intensity that is spiritual and yet recognizably human.

As a dramatist, Abercrombie has achieved a series of literary but scarcely popular successes with Deborah (1914), Four Short Plays (1921), and Phoenix (1923), brilliantly written though not eminently actable pieces. His knotted, almost tortured, style presents many difficulties to the performers as well as to audiences; but, once the speech is mastered, a swift intellectuality and a dramatic sense are disclosed.

It is only the superficially dense style which keeps Abercrombie an unpopular, almost an unread, poet. Actually his diction, though thickened, is extraordinarily flexible; his characters, if overburdened with analysis, are vividly imagined; and, as Edward Thomas wrote, "the march or leap or stagger or hesitation of the syllables correspond to varying emotions with thrilling delicacy."

It seems a pity that the poet who conceived the ecstatic action of The Sale of St. Thomas (1911), the racing vigor of "Witchcraft: New Style," and the brilliant couplets of "Epilogue," should turn away from poetry. Since 1916, Abercrombie had concerned himself (with the exception of two plays) almost entirely with prose. During his illness he wrote no less than six volumes about prosody and the technique of verse; The Theory of Poetry (1924) is one of the most illuminating books on the subject.

SONG

(from "Judith")

Balkis was in her marble town,
And shadow over the world came down.
Whiteness of walls, towers and piers,
That all day dazzled eyes to tears,
Turned from being white-golden flame,
And like the deep-sea blue became.
Balkis into her garden went;
Her spirit was in discontent
Like a torch in restless air.
Joylessly she wandered there,
And saw her city's azure white
Lying under the great night,
Beautiful as the memory
Of a worshiping world would be
In the mind of a god, in the hour
When he must kill his outward power;
And, coming to a pool where trees
Grew in double greeneries,
Saw herself, as she went by
The water, walking beautifully,
And saw the stars shine in the glance
Of her eyes, and her own fair countenance

Passing, pale and wonderful,
Across the night that filled the pool.
And cruel was the grief that played
With the queen's spirit; and she said:
"What do I here, reigning alone?
For to be unloved is to be alone.
There is no man in all my land
Dare my longing understand;
The whole folk like a peasant bows
Lest its look should meet my brows
And be harmed by this beauty of mine.
I burn their brains as I were sign
Of God's beautiful anger sent
To master them with punishment
Of beauty that must pour distress
On hearts grown dark with ugliness.
But it is I am the punisher one.
Is there no man, is there none,
In whom my beauty will but move
The lust of a delighted love;
In whom some spirit of God so thrives
That we may wed our lonely lives?
Is there no man, is there none?"—
She said, "I will go to Solomon."

EPILOGUE

What shall we do for Love these days?
 How shall we make an altar-blaze
 To smite the horny eyes of men
 With the renown of our Heaven,
 And to the unbelievers prove
 Our service to our dear god, Love?
 What torches shall we lift above
 The crowd that pushes through the mire,
 To amaze the dark heads with strange fire?
 I should think I were much to blame,
 If never I held some fragrant flame
 Above the noises of the world,
 And openly 'mid men's hurrying stares,
 Worshipt before the sacred fears
 That are like flashing curtains furl'd
 Across the presence of our lord Love.
 Nay, would that I could fill the gaze
 Of the whole earth with some great praise
 Made in a marvel for men's eyes,
 Some tower of glittering masonry,
 Therein such a spirit flourishing
 Men should see what my heart can sing:
 All that Love hath done to me
 Built into stone, a visible glee;
 Marble carried to gleaming height
 As moved aloft by inward delight;
 Not as with toil of chisels hewn,
 But seeming poised in a mighty tune.

For of all those who have been known
 To lodge with our kind host, the sun,
 I envy one for just one thing:
 In Cordova of the Moors
 There dwelt a passion-minded King,
 Who set great bands of marble-hewers
 To fashion his heart's thanksgiving
 In a tall palace, shapen so
 All the wondering world might know
 The joy he had of his Moorish lass.
 His love, that brighter and larger was
 Than the starry places, into firm stone
 He sent, as if the stone were glass
 Fired and into beauty blown.

Solemn and invented gravely
 In its bulk the fabric stood,
 Even as Love, that trusteth bravely
 In its own exceeding good
 To be better than the waste
 Of time's devices; grandly spaced,

Seriously the fabric stood.
 But over it all a pleasure went
 Of carven delicate ornament,
 Wreathing up like ravishment,
 Mentioning in sculptures twined
 The blitheness Love hath in his mind;
 And like delighted senses were
 The windows, and the columns there
 Made the following sight to ache
 As the heart that did them make.
 Well I can see that shining song
 Flowering there, the upward throng
 Of porches, pillars and windowed walls,
 Spires like piercing panpipe calls,
 Up to the roof's snow-cloudy flight;
 All glancing in the Spanish light
 White as water of arctic tides,
 Save an amber dazzle on sunny sides.
 You had said, the radiant sheen
 Of that palace might have been
 A young god's fantasy, ere he came
 His serious worlds and suns to frame;
 Such an immortal passion
 Quiver'd among the slim hewn stone.
 And in the nights it seemed a jar
 Cut in the substance of a star,
 Wherein a wine, that will be poured
 Some time for feasting Heaven, was stored
 But within this fretted shell,
 The wonder of Love made visible,
 The King a private gentle mood
 There placed, of pleasant quietude.
 For right amidst there was a court,
 Where always muskèd silences
 Listened to water and to trees;
 And herbage of all fragrant sort,—
 Lavender, lad's love, rosemary,
 Basil, tansy, centaury,—
 Was the grass of that orchard, hid
 Love's amazements all amid.
 Jarring the air with rumor cool,
 Small fountains played into a pool
 With sound as soft as the barley's hiss
 When its beard just sprouting is;
 Whence a young stream, that trod on moss,
 Prettily rippled the court across.
 And in the pool's clear idleness,
 Moving like dreams through happiness,
 Shoals of small bright fishes were;
 In and out weed-thickets bent
 Perch and carp, and sauntering went

With mounching jaws and eyes a-stare;
 Or on a lotus leaf would crawl,
 A brinded loach to bask and sprawl,
 Tasting the warm sun ere it dipt
 Into the water; but quick as fear
 Back his shining brown head slipt
 To crouch on the gravel of his lair,
 Where the cooled sunbeams broke in wrack,
 Spilt shatter'd gold about his back.

So within that green-veiled air,
 Within that white-walled quiet, where
 Innocent water thought aloud,—
 Childish prattle that must make
 The wise sunlight with laughter shake
 On the leafage overbowed,—
 Often the King and his love-lass
 Let the delicious hours pass.
 All the outer world could see
 Graved and sown amazingly
 Their love's delighted riotise,
 Fixt in marble for all men's eyes;
 But only these twain could abide
 In the cool peace that withinside

Thrilling desire and passion dwelt;
 They only knew the still meaning spelt
 By Love's flaming script, which is God's word written in ecstasies.

And where is now that palace gone,
 All the magical skil'd stone,
 All the dreaming towers wrought
 By Love as if no more than thought
 The unresisting marble was?
 How could such a wonder pass?
 Ah, it was but built in vain
 Against the stupid horns of Rome,
 That pusht down into the common loam
 The loveliness that shone in Spain.
 But we have raised it up again!
 A loftier palace, fairer far,
 Is ours, and one that fears no war.
 Safe in marvelous walls we are;
 Wondering sense like builded fires,
 High amazement of desires,
 Delight and certainty of love,
 Closing around, roofing above
 Our unapproacht and perfect hour
 Within the splendors of love's power.

WOMAN'S BEAUTY

(from "Vashti")

What thing shall be held up to woman's beauty?
 Where are the bounds of it? Yea, what is all
 The world, but an awning scaffolded amid
 The waste perilous Eternity, to lodge
 This Heaven-wander'd princess, woman's beauty?
 The East and West kneel down to thee, the North
 And South; and all for thee their shoulders bear
 The load of fourfold space. As yellow morn
 Runs on the slippery waves of the spread sea,
 Thy feet are on the griefs and joys of men
 That shine to be thy causey. Out of tears
 Indeed, and blitheness, murder and lust and love,
 Whatever has been passionate in clay,
 Thy flesh was tempered. Behold in thy body
 The yearnings of all men measured and told,
 Insatiate endless agonies of desire
 Given thy flesh, the meaning of thy shape!
 What beauty is there, but thou makest it?
 How is earth good to look on, woods and fields,
 The season's garden, and the courageous hills,
 All this green raft of earth moored in the seas?
 The manner of the sun to ride the air,

The stars God has imagined for the night?
 What's this behind them that we cannot near,
 Secret still on the point of being blabbed,
 The ghost in the world that flies from being named?
 Where do they get their beauty from, all these?
 They do but glaze a lantern lit for man,
 And woman's beauty is the flame therein.

WITCHCRAFT: NEW STYLE

The sun drew off at last his piercing fires.
 Over the stale warm air, dull as a pond
 And moveless in the gray quieted street,
 Blue magic of a summer evening glowed.
 The sky, that had been dazzling stone all day,
 Hollowed in smooth hard brightness, now dissolved
 To infinite soft depth, and smoldered down
 Low as the roofs, dark burning blue, and soared
 Clear to that winking drop of liquid silver,
 The first exquisite star. Now the half-light
 Tidied away the dusty litter parching
 Among the cobbles, veiled in the color of distance
 Shabby slates and brickwork moldering, turned
 The hunchback houses into patient things
 Resting; and golden windows now began.

A little brisk gray slattern of a woman,
 Pattering along in her loose-heeled clogs,
 Push the brass-barred door of a public-house;
 The spring went hard against her; hand and knee
 Shoved their weak best. As the door poised ajar,
 Hullabaloo of talking men burst out,
 A pouring babble of inflamed palaver,
 And overriding it and shouted down
 High words, jeering or downright, broken like
 Crests that leap and stumble in rushing water.
 Just as the door went wide and she stept in,
 "She cannot do it!" one was bawling out:
 A glaring hulk of flesh with a bull's voice.
 He fingered with his neckerchief, and stretcht
 His throat to ease the anger of dispute,
 Then spat to put a full stop to the matter.
 The little woman waited, with one hand
 Propping the door, and smiled at the loud man.
 They saw her then; and the sight was enough
 To gag the speech of every drinker there:
 The din fell down like something chopt off short.
 Blank they all wheeled towards her, with their mouths
 Still gaping as though full of voiceless words.
 She let the door slam to; and all at ease,

Amused, her smile wrinkling about her eyes,
Went forward; they made room for her quick enough.
Her chin just topt the counter; she gave in
Her bottle to the potboy, tuckt it back,
Full of bright tawny ale, under her arm,
Rapt down the coppers on the planish zinc,
And turned: and no word spoken all the while.

The first voice, in that silent crowd, was hers,
Her light snickering laugh, as she stood there
Pausing, scanning the sawdust at her feet.
Then she swicht round and faced the positive man
Whose strong "She cannot do it!" all still felt Huskily shouting in their guilty ears.
"She can't, eh? She can't do it?"—Then she'd heard!
The man, inside his ruddy insolent flesh,
Had hoped she did not hear. His barrel chest
Gave a slight cringe, as though the glint of her eyes
Prickt him. But he stood up to her awkwardly bold,
One elbow on the counter, gripping his mug
Like a man holding on to a post for safety.

The Man You can't do what's not nature: nobody can.

The Woman And louts like you have nature in your pocket?

The Man I don't say that—

The Woman If you kept saying naught,
No one would guess the fool you are.

Second Man Almost
My very words!

The Woman O you're the knowing man!
The spark among the cinders!

First Man You can't fetch
A free man back, unless he wants to come.

The Woman Nay, I'll be bound he doesn't want to come!

Third Man And he won't come: he told me flat he wouldn't.

The Woman Are you there too?

Third Man And if he does come back
It will be devilry brought him.

The Woman I shall bring him;—
Tonight.

First Man How will he come?

The Woman Running: unless
He's broke his leg, and then he'll have to come
Crawling. But he will come.

First Man How do you know
What he may choose to do, three countries off?

The Woman He choose?

Third Man You haven't got him on a lead.

The Woman Haven't I thought!

Second Man That's right: it's what I said.

The Woman Aye, there are brains in your family.

First Man

You have

The Woman

Some sort of pull on him, to draw him home?
 You may say that: I have hold of his mind.
 And I can slack it oft or fetch it taut,
 And make him dance a score of miles away
 An answer to the least twangling thrum
 I play on it. He thought he lurkt at last Safely; and all the while, what has he been?
 An eel on the end of a night-line; and it's time
 I hauled him in. You'll see, tonight I'll land him.
 Bragging's a light job.

Third Man

You daren't let me take

The Woman

Your eyes in mine!—Haul, did I say? no need:
 I give his mind a twitch, and up he comes Tumbling home to me. Whatever work he's at,
 He drops the thing he holds like redhot iron
 And runs—runs till he falls down like a beast
 Pole-axt, and grunts for breath; then up and on,
 No matter does he know the road or not:
 The strain I put on his mind will keep him going
 Right as a homing-pigeon.

First Man

Devilry

I call it.

And you're welcome.

The Woman

But the law

Second Man

Should have a say here.

What, isn't he mine,

The Woman

My own? There's naught but what I please about it.

Third Man

Why did you let him go?

To fetch him back!

The Woman

For I enjoy this, mind. There's many a one
 Would think to see me, There goes misery!
 There's a queer starveling for you!—and I do
 A thing that makes me like a saint in glory,
 The life of me the sound of a great tune
 Your flesh could never hear: I can send power
 Delighting out of me! O, the mere thought
 Has made my blood go smarting in my veins,
 Such a flame glowing along it!—And all the same
 I'll pay him out for sidling off from me.
 But I'll have supper first.

When she was gone,

Their talk could scarcely raise itself again
 Above a grumble. But at last a cry
 Sharp-pitcht came startling in from the street: at once
 Their moody talk exploded into flare
 Of swearing hubbub, like gunpowder dropt
 On embers; mugs were clapt down, out they bolted
 Rowdily jostling, eager for the event.
 All down the street the folk thronged out of doors,

But left a narrow track clear in the middle;
 And there a man came running, a tall man
 Running desperately and slowly, pounding
 Like a machine, so evenly, so blindly;
 And regularly his trotting body wagged.
 Only one foot clattered upon the stones;
 The other padded in his dogged stride:
 The boot was gone, the sock hung frayed in shreds;
 About his ankle, the foot was blood and earth;
 And never a limp, not the least flinch, to tell
 The wounded pulp hit stone at every step.
 His clothes were tattered and his rent skin showed,
 Harrowed with thorns. His face was pale as putty,
 Thrown far back; clots of drooping spittle foamed
 On his mustache, and his hair hung in tails,
 Mired with sweat; and sightless in their sockets
 His eyeballs turned up white, as dull as pebbles.
 Evenly and doggedly he trotted,
 And as he went he moaned. Then out of sight
 Round a corner he swerved, and out of hearing.
 —“The law should have a say to that, by God!”

EPITAPH

Sir, you should notice me: I am the Man;
 I am Good Fortune: I am satisfied.
 All I desired, more than I could desire,
 I have: everything has gone right with me.
 Life was a hiding-place that played me false;
 I croucht ashamed, and still was seen and scorned:
 But now I am not seen. I was a fool,
 And now I know what wisdom dare not know:
 For I know Nothing. I was a slave, and now
 I have ungoverned freedom and the wealth
 That cannot be conceived: for I have Nothing.
 I lookt for beauty and I longed for rest,
 And now I have perfection: nay, I am
 Perfection: I am Nothing, I am dead.

James Stephens

JAMES STEPHENS was born in Dublin in February, 1882. His youth was difficult, his livelihood precarious. Stephens was “discovered” in an office and saved from clerical slavery by George Russell (“Æ”). Always a poet, many of Stephens’s most poetic moments are in his highly colored prose. Yet, although the finest of his novels, The Crock of Gold (1912), contains more wild fantasy and quaint imagery than his verse, his Insurrections (1909) and The Hill of Vision (1912) reveal a rebellious spirit that is at once hotly ironic and coolly whimsical. Green Branches (1916) and Reincarnations (1918)—the latter being free adaptations from the Gaelic—are further persuasive volumes of his verse.

Collected Poems (1926) discloses two strongly differentiated personalities. There is the familiar and well-beloved Irish gamin, intimate with goats and gods, the playboy of the roads, deferential to rabbits and lesser folk, impudent to the universe. There is, also, the less popular but more sizeable poet, the thoughtful author of "The Crest Jewel," "In Waste Places," "The Main-Deep" with its surging rhythm held in a few syllables, and "A Prelude and a Song" which moves with the gentle solemnity of a river. Traces of Blake are in the later Stephens; the poet, discarding his light grotesquerie, becomes the seer. A less amusing singer is the result, but a more impassioned one. In youth Stephens delighted in gay mischiefs, pranking with unnatural phenomena; in maturity he is concerned with nothing less than elemental truths.

Both personalities combine in the prose fiction for which Stephens is famous. Dendie (1923) and In the Land of Youth (1924) continue the re-creations from the Irish folk- and fairy-tales. Hunger (1918), originally published under the pseudonym "James Esse," was incorporated in the somber collection of short stories Etched in Moonlight (1928) which, curiously enough, was poorly received in England but an enormous success in America. An edition of his Irish Fairy Tales was arranged for children.

Strict Joy (1931) is a small book containing a dozen new poems, yet its very range is characteristic. Stephens lightly runs the scale from badinage to mysticism and seldom strikes an uncertain note, never a false one.

Kings and the Moon (1938) is another deceptive little volume. It is so simply written as to seem banal, so unaffected in thought as to appear sentimental. But the simplicity is attained by severe restraint, by clear perception instead of poetic diction, by the refusal to inflate an emotion or pad a line.

Stephens's final characteristic is his delightful blend of incongruities—he successfully mingles the bizarre and the charming, the buoyant and the profound. It is sometimes difficult to separate the elfin from the human in Stephens—Fred B. Millett has characterized Stephens' spirit as "that of a sensitive and uncannily observant gnome"—but Stephens charms by the very uncertainty, by the tricks of his imagination and the sudden warmth of his sympathy.

E V E N I N G

The drowsy sun went slowly to his rest
 Gathering all his dusty gold again
 Into one place:
 He did not leave a trace
 Upon the sky except one distant stain,
 Scarce to be seen, upon the quiet west:
 So evening came, and darkness, and the sound
 Of moving feet upon the whispering ground.

Like timid girls the shades went pacing down
 The spreading slopes apparellled soberly
 In vestments grey;
 And far away
 The last red color faded to a brown,
 So faint, so far, the eye could scarcely see:
 And then the skirts of evening swung upon
 That distant little light, and it was gone.

The bee sped home, the beetle's wing of horn
 Went boomerang by, the darkness every side
 Gathered around
 On sky and air and ground;
 And all the plant trees sang far and wide
 In cadenced lift of leaves a song of morn:
 And then the moon's white circle, faint and thin,
 Looked steady on the earth—there is no sin.

THE LAKE

He could see the little lake
 Cuddled on a mountain's arm,
 And the rushes were a-shake,
 On the margin of the lake.

And the gloom of evening threw
 On the surface of the lake,
 Just a shadow on the blue      •
 Where the night came creeping through.

There was silence all around,
 Not a whisper stirred the lake,
 And the trees made not a sound
 Standing silent in the ground.

Then a moon of beauty swept
 One slim finger on the lake,
 And the glory of it crept
 Past the lilies where they slept,

And just where a lily flung
 Its broad flag upon the lake
 Was a dead face pale and young
 And the wet hair spread and swung;

And the moon beamed mild and dim
 On that dead face in the lake,
 Then it grew fierce, wide and grim,
 And a mad moon glared at Him.

THE SHELL

And then I pressed the shell
 Close to my ear
 And listened well,
 And straightway like a bell
 Came low and clear
 The slow, sad murmur of the distant seas,
 Whipped by an icy breeze
 Upon a shore
 Wind-swept and desolate.
 It was a sunless strand that never bore
 The footprint of a man,
 Nor felt the weight
 Since time began
 Of any human quality or stir
 Save what the dreary winds and waves incur.
 And in the hush of waters was the sound
 Of pebbles rolling round,
 For ever rolling with a hollow sound.
 And bubbling sea-weeds as the waters go
 Swish to and fro
 Their long, cold tentacles of slimy gray.
 There was no day,
 Nor ever came a night
 Setting the stars alight
 To wonder at the moon:
 Was twilight only and the frightened croon,
 Smitten to whimpers, of the dreary wind
 And waves that journeyed blind—
 And then I loosed my ear . . . O, it was sweet
 To hear a cart go jolting down the street.

WHAT THOMAS AN BUILE SAID IN A PUB

I saw God. Do you doubt it?
 Do you dare to doubt it?
 I saw the Almighty Man. His hand
 Was resting on a mountain, and
 He looked upon the World and all about it:
 I saw Him plainer than you see me now,
 You mustn't doubt it.

He was not satisfied;
 His look was all dissatisfied.
 His beard swung on a wind far out of sight
 Behind the world's curve, and there was light
 Most fearful from His forehead, and He sighed,
 "That star went always wrong, and from the start
 I was dissatisfied."

He lifted up His hand—
 I say He heaved a dreadful hand
 Over the spinning Earth. Then I said, “Stay,
 You must not strike it, God; I’m in the way;
 And I will never move from where I stand.”
 He said, “Dear child, I feared that you were dead,”
 And stayed His hand.

TO THE FOUR COURTS, PLEASE

The driver rubbed at his netty chin
 With a huge, loose forefinger, crooked and black,
 And his wobbly, violet lips sucked in,
 And puffed out again and hung down slack:
 One fang shone through his lop-sided smile,
 In his little pouched eye flickered years of guile.

And the horse, poor beast, it was ribbed and forked,
 And its ears hung down, and its eyes were old,
 And its knees were knuckly, and as we talked
 It swung the stiff neck that could scarcely hold
 Its big, skinny head up—then I stepped in,
 And the driver climbed to his seat with a grin.

God help the horse and the driver too,
 And the people and beasts who have never a friend,
 For the driver easily might have been you,
 And the horse be me by a different end.
 And nobody knows how their days will cease,
 And the poor, when they’re old, have little of peace.

LITTLE THINGS

Little things that run and quail
 And die in silence and despair;

Little things that fight and fail
 And fall on earth and sea and air;

All trapped and frightened little things,
 The mouse, the coney, hear our prayer.

As we forgive those done to us,
 The lamb, the linnet, and the hare,

Forgive us all our trespasses,
 Little creatures everywhere.

THE RED-HAIRED MAN'S WIFE

I have taken that vow—
 And you were my friend
 But yesterday—now
 All that's at an end,
 And you are my husband, and claim me, and I must depend.

Yesterday I was free,
 Now you, as I stand,
 Walk over to me
 And take hold of my hand.
 You look at my lips, your eyes are too bold, your smile is too bland.

My old name is lost,
 My distinction of race·
 Now the line has been crossed,
 Must I step to your pace?
 Must I walk as you list, and obey and smile up in your face?

All the white and the red
 Of my cheeks you have won;
 All the hair of my head,
 And my feet, tho' they run,
 Are yours, and you own me and end me just as I begun.

Must I bow when you speak,
 Be silent and hear,
 Inclining my cheek
 And incredulous ear
 To your voice, and command, and behest, hold your lightest wish dear?

I am woman, but still Am alive, and can feel
 Every intimate thrill
 That is woe or is weal.
 I, aloof, and divided, apart, standing far, can I kneel?

If not, I shall know,
 I shall surely find out,
 And your world will throw
 In disaster and rout;
 I am woman and glory and beauty, I mystery, terror, and doubt.

I am separate still,
 I am I and not you:
 And my mind and my will,
 As in secret they grew,
 Still are secret, unreached and untouched and not subject to you.

HATE

My enemy came nigh,
And I
Stared fiercely in his face.
My lips went writhing back in a grimace,
And stern I watched him with a narrow eye.
Then, as I turned away, my enemy,
That bitter heart and savage, said to me:
"Some day, when this is past,
When all the arrows that we have are cast,
We may ask one another why we hate,
And fail to find a story to relate.
It may seem to us then a mystery
That we could hate each other."

Thus said he,

And did not turn away,
Waiting to hear what I might have to say.
But I fled quickly, fearing if I stayed
I might have kissed him as I would a maid.

THE WATCHER

A rose for a young head,
A ring for a bride,
Joy for the homestead
Clean and wide—
Who's that waiting
In the rain outside?

A heart for an old friend,
A hand for the new:
Love can to earth lend
Heaven's hue—

Who's that standing
In the silver dew?

A smile for the parting,
A tear as they go,
God's sweetheartsing
Ends just so—

Who's that watching
Where the black winds blow?

He who is waiting
In the rain outside,
He who is standing
Where the dew drops wide,
He who is watching
In the wind must ride

(Tho' the pale hands cling)
With the rose
And the ring
And the bride,
Must ride

With the red of the rose,
And the gold of the ring,
And the lips and the hair of the bride.

RIGHTEOUS ANGER

The lanky hank of a she in the inn over there
Nearly killed me for asking the loan of a glass of beer:
May the devil grip the whey-faced slut by the hair,
And beat bad manners out of her skin for a year.

That parboiled imp, with the hardest jaw you will see
On virtue's path, and a voice that would rasp the dead,
Came roaring and raging the minute she looked at me,
And threw me out of the house on the back of my head!

If I asked her master he'd give me a cask a day;
But she with the beer at hand, not a gill would arrange!
May she marry a ghost and bear him a kitten and may
The High King of Glory permit her to get the mange.

ODELL

My mind is sad and weary thinking how
The griffins of the Gael went over the sea

From noble Eiré, and are fighting now
In France and Flanders and in Germany.

If they, 'mid whom I sported without dread,
Were home I would not mind what foe might do,
Or fear tax-man Odell would seize my bed
To pay the hearth-rate that is overdue.

I pray to Him who, in the haughty hour
Of Babel, threw confusion on each tongue,
That I may see our princes back in power,
And see Odell, the tax-collector, hung.

BLUE BLOOD

(After O'Braaidar)

We thought at first, this man is a-king for sure,
Or the branch of a mighty and ancient and famous lineage—
That silly, sulky, illiterate, black-avised boor
Who was hatched by foreign vulgarity under a hedge.

The good men of Clare were drinking his health in a flood,
And gazing with me in awe of the princely lad,
And asking each other from what bluest blueness of blood
His daddy was squeezed, and the pa of the da of his dad?

We waited there, gaping and wondering, anxiously,
Until he'd stop eating and let the glad tidings out,
And the slack-jawed booby proved to the hilt that he
Was lout, son of lout, by old lout, and was da to a lout!

THE MAIN-DEEP

The long rólling,
Steady-póuring,
Deep-trenchéd
Green bollow:

The wide-topped,
Unbróken,
Green-glacid,
Slow-sliding.

Cold-flushing,
On—on—on—
Chill-rushing,
Hush-hushing,

Hush—hushing. . . .

IN WASTE PLACES

As a naked man I go
Through the desert, sore afraid;
Holding high my head, although
I'm as frightened as a maid.

The lion crouches there! I saw
In barren rocks his amber eye!
He parts the cactus with his paw!
He stares at me as I go by!

He would pad upon my trace
If he thought I was afraid!
If he knew my hardy face
Veils the terrors of a maid.

He rises in the night-time, and
He stretches forth! He snuffs the air!

He roars! He leaps along the sand!
He creeps! He watches everywhere!

His burning eyes, his eyes of bale
Through the darkness I can see!
He lashes fiercely with his tail!
He makes again to spring at me!

I am the lion, and his lair!
I am the fear that frightens me!
I am the desert of despair!
And the night of agony!

Night or day, whate'er befall,
I must walk that desert land,
Until I dare my fear and call
The lion out to lick my hand.

GOOD AND BAD

Good and bad and right and wrong,
Wave the silly words away:
This is wisdom to be strong,
This is virtue to be gay:
Let us sing and dance until
We shall know the final art,
How to banish good and ill
With the laughter of the heart.

THE OUTCAST

Shy and timid, Gloom to me
Said, I am lost! How shall I go?
There is no place for Misery,
Welcome for Woe!

And to him,
Desolate and fey,
My stricken heart
Found nought to say.

But soon: Be thou my Joy, I said:
Give me your hand, rest here your head:
Come to my home, and eat my bread,
And rest thee from annoy.

For I shall give thee all of mine,
Until my all be seal'd thine,
And thou shalt be, in little time,
A Child of Joy.

Now, on my heart, as on a throne,
Gloom, as heavy as a stone,
Sits, and I go dark till he
Is Joy, and gives Joy back to me.

THE CREST JEWEL

I

The leaf will wrinkle to decay
And crumble into dust away!

The rose, the lily, grow to ead,
And are, and are no more, beheld!

Nothing will stay! For, as the eye
Rests upon an object nigh,

It is not there to look upon!
It is mysteriously gone!

And, in its place, another thing
Apes its shape and fashioning!

II

All that the sun will breathe today
The moon will lip and wear away

Tonight. And all will re-begin
Tomorrow as the dawn comes in.

Is no beginning, middle-trend
Or argument to that or end.

No cause and no effect, and no
Reason why it should be so.

Or why it might be otherwise
To other minds or other eyes.

III

The soul can dream itself to be
Adrift upon an endless sea

Of day and night. The soul can seem
To be all things that it can dream!

Yet needs but look within to find
That which is steady in the wind,

That which the fire does not appal,
Which good and ill mourn not at all

Which does not seek, or lack, or try.
And was not born, and cannot die!

IV

It has been writ in wisdom old—
This is the last word to be told:

—There is no dissolution! No
Creation! There are none in woe!

There is no teacher, teaching, taught!
Are none who long for, lack for aught!

Are none who pine for freedom! None
Are liberated under sun!

—And this is absolutely true
In Him who dreams in me and you.

James Joyce

JAMES AUGUSTINE ALOYSIUS JOYCE was born February 2, 1882, in Dublin. Educated for the priesthood, he attended Jesuit schools in Ireland for thirteen years. At twenty he revolted, wrote a blasphemous broadside, left his country and repudiated his countrymen, "the most belated race in Europe."

From that time Joyce's life (according to Herbert Gorman, Joyce's official biographer) became "a constant struggle against terrific odds, prejudices, mob smugness, poverty, and physical disability." His work was censored, officially banned, and even burned; his books, forbidden by several governments, were illicitly published all over the world, and Joyce received no royalties from the pirated publications. He studied medicine in Paris; almost became a professional singer; taught languages in Trieste and Switzerland; wandered about the Continent until he finally settled in Paris. Illness and overwork necessitated ten eye operations in twenty years; before he was forty Joyce was practically blind. Writing was a painful effort for him; a few lines at a time scrawled on a large sheet of paper was all he could manage.

Joyce's literary début was quiet and undistinguished: Chamber Music (1907), a small volume of pseudo-Elizabethan verse in the traditional lyric manner. His next book, Dubliners (1914), marked the beginning of the artist's twofold struggle for recognition and for the right to pursue his own methods—methods which, depending upon the point of view, were lauded as pioneering or attacked as mere arrogance.

In his early thirties Joyce definitely broke with tradition in A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man (1916), a welter of characters and theories, a kaleidoscope of the weird and the commonplace. Its central character became a chief figure in Joyce's Ulysses (1922), banned for many years from the United States. Ulysses, an autobiographical extension of reality, is one of the strangest novels ever written and one of the most extraordinary works of the age. It became a storm-center. It was reviled as the work of an obscene madman and praised as the utterance of an unqualifiedly great genius. With all its complexities, Ulysses is crystal-clear compared to Finnegan's Wake (1939). Finnegan's Wake seems to be a collision between the language of speech and the language of literature, a colossal series of telescopic phrases, vast figures which dissolve into allusions, and a constant elaboration of half-intelligible puns.

The enormous labor demanded by his cryptic work was too much for Joyce. He succumbed in a losing fight against blindness, illness, and poverty; he died in Zurich, Switzerland, January 13, 1941, a few weeks before his fifty-ninth birthday.

Pomes Penyeach (1927) is delicate and genuinely lyrical, strangely reminiscent of the seventeenth century singers. Like the early Chamber Music, the verse is conventional in theme, orthodox in treatment, harmonically simple, and the very antithesis of everything for which Joyce is celebrated.

STRINGS IN THE EARTH

Strings in the earth and air
    Make music sweet;
Strings by the river where
    The willows meet.

There's music along the river
    For Love wanders there,
Pale flowers on his mantle,
    Dark leaves on his hair.

All softly playing,
    With head to the music bent,
And fingers straying
    Upon an instrument.

I HEAR AN ARMY

I hear an army charging upon the land,
    And the thunder of horses plunging, foam about their knees:
Arrogant, in black armor, behind them stand,
    Disdaining the reins, with fluttering whips, the charioteers.

They cry unto the night their battle-name:
    I moan in sleep when I hear afar their whirling laughter.
They cleave the gloom of dreams, a blinding flame,
    Clanging, clanging upon the heart as upon an anvil.

They come shaking in triumph their long, green hair:
    They come out of the sea and run shouting by the shore.
My heart, have you no wisdom thus to despair?
    My love, my love, my love, why have you left me alone?

O SWEETHEART, HEAR YOU

O sweetheart, hear you
 Your lover's tale;
 A man shall have sorrow
 When friends him fail.

For he shall know then
 Friends be untrue
 And a little ashes
 Their words come to.

But one unto him
 Will softly move
 And softly woo him
 In ways of love.

His hand is under
 Her smooth round breast;
 So he who has sorrow
 Shall have rest.

ALL DAY I HEAR

All day I hear the noise of waters
 Making moan,
 Sad as the sea-bird is when, going
 Forth alone,
 He hears the winds cry to the waters'
 Monotone.

The gray winds, the cold winds are blowing
 Where I go.
 I hear the noise of many waters
 Far below.
 All day, all night, I hear them flowing
 To and fro.

SONG

O, it was out by Donnycarney,
 When the bat flew from tree to tree,
 My love and I did walk together,
 And sweet were the words she said to me.

Along with us the summer wind
 Went murmuring—O, happily!—
 But softer than the breath of summer
 Was the kiss she gave to me.

ON THE BEACH AT FONTANA

Wind whines and whines the shingle,
 The crazy pierstakes groan;
 A senile sea numbers each single Slimesilvered stone.

From whining wind and colder
 Gray sea I wrap him warm
 And touch his trembling fineboned shoulder
 And boyish arm.

Around us fear, descending
 Darkness of fear above
 And in my heart how deep unending
 Ache of love!

FLOOD

Goldbrown upon the sated flood
 The rockvine clusters lift and sway,
 Vast wings above the lambent waters brood
 Of sullen day.

A waste of waters ruthlessly
 Sways and uplifts its weedy mane
 Where brooding day stares down upon the sea
 In dull disdain.

Uplift and sway, O golden vine,
 Your clustered fruits to love's full flood,
 Lambent and vast and ruthless as in thine
 Incertitude!

James Elroy Flecker

ANOTHER remarkable poet whose early death was a blow to English literature was James Elroy Flecker. Born in London, November 5, 1884, he studied at Trinity College, Oxford, specialized in Oriental languages at Cambridge, and went to Constantinople in the Consular Service in 1910. The fact that the remainder of his life was spent in the East has a direct bearing on Flecker's work: his play Hussan, one of the most powerful and brilliantly colored modern dramas, is the definite reflection of his adopted Orientalism.

Possibly due to low vitality, Flecker found little to interest him but a reaction against realism in verse, a delight in verbal craftsmanship, and a passion for technical perfection—especially the deliberate technique of the French Parnassians, whom he worshiped. Flecker was opposed to any art that was emotional or that “taught” anything. “The poet's business,” he declared, “is not to save the soul of man, but to make it worth saving.” Flecker's desire to be objective rather than passionate was scarcely consistent with his actual creation, even though he maintained that “the Parnassians raised the technique of their art to a height which enabled them to express the subtlest ideas in powerful and simple verse.” Technique and manner were his abstract gods.

The advent of the war began to make Flecker's verse more personal and romantic. The tuberculosis that finally killed him at Davos Platz, Switzerland, January 3, 1915, forced him from an Olympian disinterest to a deep concern with life and death. He passionately denied that he was weary of living "as the pallid poets are," and he was attempting higher flights of song when his singing ceased altogether.

Flecker's two notable volumes are The Golden Journey to Samarkand (1913) and The Old Ships (1915). Collected Poems, with an autobiographical introduction and notes by J. C. Squire, was published in 1917 and drew fresh attention to Flecker's half-classical, half-romantic, and always vivid style.

THE OLD SHIPS

I have seen old ships sail like swans asleep
 Beyond the village which men still call Tyre,
 With leaden age o'ercargoed, dipping deep
 For Fanragusta and the hidden sun
 That rings black Cyprus with a lake of fire;
 And all those ships were certainly so old—
 Who knows how oft with squat and noisy gun,
 Questing brown slaves or Syrian oranges,
 The pirate Genoese
 Hell-raked them till they rolled
 Blood, water, fruit and corpses up the hold.
 But now through friendly seas they softly run,
 Painted the mid-sea blue or shore-sea green,
 Still patterned with the vine and grapes in gold.

But I have seen,
 Pointing her shapely shadows from the dawn
 An image tumbled on a rose-swept bay,
 A drowsy ship of some yet older day;
 And, wonder's breath indrawn,
 Thought I—who knows—who knows—but in that same (Fished up beyond Aeaea, patched up new —Stern painted brighter blue—)
 That talkative, bald-headed seaman came (Twelve patient comrades sweating at the oar)
 From Troy's doom-crimson shore,
 And with great lies about his wooden horse
 Set the crew laughing, and forgot his course.

It was so old a ship—who knows, who knows?
 —And yet so beautiful, I watched in vain
 To see the mast burst open with a rose,
 And the whole deck put on its leaves again.

STILLNESS

When the words rustle no more,
 And the last work's done,
 When the bolt lies deep in the door,

And Fire, our Sun,
Falls on the dark-lanced meadows of the floor;

When from the clock's last chime to the next chime
Silence beats his drum,
And Space with gaunt gray eyes and her brother Time
Wheeling and whispering come,
She with the mold of form and he with the loom of rhyme:

Then twittering out in the night my thought-birds flee,
I am emptied of all my dreams:
I only hear Earth turning, only see
Ether's long bankless streams,
And only know I should drown if you
Laid not your hand on me.

THE WAR SONG OF THE SARACENS

We are they who come faster than fate: we are they who ride early or late:
We storm at your ivory gate: Pale Kings of the Sunset, beware!
Not on silk nor in samet we lie, not in curtained solemnity die
Among women who chatter and cry, and children who mumble a prayer.
But we sleep by the ropes of the camp, and we rise with a shout, and we tramp
With the sun or the moon for a lamp, and the spray of the wind in our hair.

From the lands, where the elephants are, to the forts of Merou and Balghar,
Our steel we have brought and our star to shine on the ruins of Ruhm.
We have marched from the Indus to Spain, and, by God, we will go there again;
We have stood on the shore of the plain where the Waters of Destiny boom.
A mart of destruction we made at Jalula where men were afraid,
For death was a difficult trade, and the sword was a broker of doom;

And the Spear was a Desert Physician who cured not a few of ambition,
And drove not a few to perdition with medicine bitter and strong;
And the shield was a grief to the fool and as bright as a desolate pool,
And as straight as the rock of Stamboul when their cavalry thundered along:
For the coward was drowned with the brave when our battle cheered up like a wave,
And the dead to the desert we gave, and the glory to God in our song.

TENEBRIS INTERLUCE NTEM

A linnet who had lost her way
Sang on a blackened bough in Hell,
Till all the ghosts remembered well
The trees, the wind, the golden day.

At last they knew that they had died
When they heard music in that land,
And someone there stole forth a hand
To draw a brother to his side.

TO A POET A THOUSAND YEARS HENCE

I who am dead a thousand years,
 And wrote this sweet archaic song,
 Send you my words for messengers
 The way I shall not pass along.

I care not if you bridge the seas,
 Or ride secure the cruel sky,
 Or build consummate palaces
 Of metal or of masonry.

But have you wine and music still,
 And statues and a bright-eyed love,
 And foolish thoughts of good and ill,
 And prayers to them who sit above?

How shall we conquer? Like a wind
 That falls at eve our fancies blow,
 And old Maeonides the blind
 Said it three thousand years ago.

O friend unseen, unborn, unknown,
 Student of our sweet English tongue,
 Read out my words at night, alone:
 I was a poet, I was young.

Since I can never see your face,
 And never shake you by the hand,
 I send my soul through time and space
 To greet you. You will understand.

THE TOWN WITHOUT A MARKET

There lies afar behind a western hill
 The Town without a Market, white and still;
 For six feet long and not a third as high
 Are those small habitations. There stood I,
 Waiting to hear the citizens beneath
 Murmur and sigh and speak through tongueless teeth.
 When all the world lay burning in the sun
 I heard their voices speak to me. Said one:
 "Bright lights I loved and colors, I who find
 That death is darkness, and has struck me blind."
 Another cried: "I used to sing and play,
 But here the world is silent, day by day."
 And one: "On earth I could not see or hear,
 But with my fingers touched what I was near,
 And knew things round and soft, and brass from gold,
 And dipped my hand in water, to feel cold,
 And thought the grave would cure me, and was glad

When the time came to lose what joy I had." Soon all the voices of a hundred dead Shouted in wrath together. Someone said, "I care not, but the girl was sweet to kiss At evening in the meadows." "Hard it is," Another cried, "to hear no hunting horn. Ah me! the horse, the hounds, and the great gray morn When I rode out a-hunting." And one sighed, "I did not see my son before I died." A boy said, "I was strong and swift to run: Now they have tied my feet; what have I done?" A man, "But it was good to arm and fight And storm their cities in the dead of night." An old man said, "I read my books all day, But death has taken all my books away." And one, "The popes and prophets did not well To cheat poor dead men with false hopes of hell. Better the whips of fire that hiss and rend Than painless void proceeding to no end." I smiled to hear them restless, I who sought Peace. For I had not loved, I had not fought, And books are vanities, and manly strength A gathered flower. God grants us peace at length! I heard no more, and turned to leave their town Before the chill came, and the sun went down. Then rose a whisper, and I seemed to know A timorous man, buried long years ago. "On Earth I used to shape the Thing that seems. Master of all men, give me back my dreams. Give me the world that never failed me then, The hills I made and peopled with tall men, The palace that I built and called my home, My cities which could break the pride of Rome, The three queens hidden in the sacred tree, And those white cloudy folk who sang to me, O death, why hast thou covered me so deep? I was thy sister's child, the friend of Sleep."

Then said my heart, Death takes and cannot give.
Dark with no dream is hateful: let me live!

THE BALLAD OF HAMPSTEAD HEATH

From Heaven's Gate to Hampstead Heath
Young Bacchus and his crew
Came tumbling down, and o'er the town
Their bursting trumpets blew.

The silver night was wildly bright,
And madly shone the moon
To hear a song so clear and strong,
With such a lovely tune.

From London's houses, huts and flats,
Came busmen, snobs, and Earls,
And ugly men in bowler hats
With charming little girls.

Sir Moses came with eyes of flame,
Judd, who is like a bloater,
The brave Lord Mayor in coach and pair.
King Edward, in his motor.

Far in a rosy mist withdrawn
The God and all his crew,
Silenus pulled by nymphs, a faun,
A satyr drenched in dew,

Smiled as they wept those shining tears
Only Immortals know,
Whose feet are set among the stars,
Above the shifting snow.

And one spake out into the night,
Before they left for ever,
"Rejoice, rejoice!" and his great voice
Rolled like a splendid river.

He spake in Greek, which Britons speak
Seldom, and circumspectly;
But Mr. Judd, that man of mud,
Translated it correctly.

And when they heard that happy word,
Policemen leapt and ambled:
The busmen pranced, the maidens danced,
The men in bowlers gambolled.

A wistful Echo stayed behind
To join the mortal dances,
But Mr. Judd, with words unkind,
Rejected her advances,

And passing down through London Town
She stopped, for all was lonely,
Attracted by a big brass plate
Inscribed: FOR MEMBERS ONLY.

And so she went to Parliament,
But those ungainly men
Woke up from sleep, and turned about,
And fell asleep again.

Anna Wickham

ANNA WICKHAM was born in Wimbledon, Surrey, in 1884. She went to Australia at six, returned when she was twenty-one, studied for Opera in Paris with De Reszke and suddenly, after a few years of marriage, became a poet. In a burst of creative energy she wrote nine hundred poems in four years.

Her first two books (The Contemplative Quarry, 1915, and The Man with a Hammer, 1916) were republished in America in one volume, The Contemplative Quarry (1921). This was followed by The Little Old House (1922). Another volume, The Noiseless Propeller, was prepared, but its publication was postponed. The most casual reading of Anna Wickham's work reveals the strength of her candor. The poems could scarcely be put in the category of "charming" verse; they are astringent and sometimes harsh, gnarled frequently by their own violences of mood. But there is no disputing their incisiveness and integrity. Mrs. Wickham's lines present the picture of woman struggling between dreams and domesticity; they are acutely sensitive, restless, analytical. The very tone of her poetry reflects the disturbed music and the nervous protests of her age.

Sometimes her verse tends toward introverted self-questioning, but usually it is as just in phrase as it is fearless in thought. Much of her poetry is a poetry of the senses, and in this she seems kin to D. H. Lawrence. But where Lawrence, lost and suffering in the "mazes of the female mystery," is sexually tormented, Anna Wickham, unhampered in her sensuality, delights even in her torments. She turns upon men for maintaining a traditional attitude, not to the real women of today, but to creatures half-historical, half-illusory; she berates women for fostering this tendency, thus weakening men and en chaining themselves.

We, vital women, are no more content
 Bound, first to passion, then to sentiment.
 Of you, the masters, slaves in our poor eyes
 Who most are moved by women's tricks and lies,
 We ask our freedom. In good sooth,
 We only ask to know and speak the truth!

Yet Mrs. Wickham does more than "only ask to know and speak the truth." Her angers and revulsions cannot choke the lyric impulse. Time and again she makes songs that are sweet without being sentimental, almost perfect in their simple cadences.

For the most part she is torn between being the instrument of love and love itself; making, with a wry determination, an unhappy compromise between the conflicting claims of modernity and maternity. She is rarely objective; even such dramatic projections as "Meditation at Kew" and the acrid humor of "Nervous Prostration" are too bitter to be impersonal. Out of all her poems, the plangent as well as the powerful, rises this cry which is also an apologia:

Let it be something for my song,
 If it is sometimes swift and strong.

"Self-Analysis," "Divorce," and "The Affinity" are this remarkable and unappreciated poet in petto. Divided between her desire for mastery and being mastered, for perfection and her distrust of it, she typifies the woman who has repudiated order but is frustrated in lawlessness; even her domesticity, which she celebrates, is, if not self-condemning, self-contradicting.

Although Mrs. Wickham has written longer poems, her terse, pungently flavored lyrics are most characteristic of her. She is a psychologist by intention, but a psychologist who has not forgotten how to sing. At her worst she offers an interesting exhibit of the age; at her best she displays a genius for the firm epithet and quick-thrusting phrase—and an unforgettable power of emotion.

C R E A T R I X

Let us thank Almighty God
 For the woman with the rod.
 Who was ever and is now
 Strong, essential as the plow.
 She shall goad and she shall drive,
 So to keep man's soul alive.
 Amoris with her scented dress
 Beckons, in pretty wantonness;
 But the wife drives, nor can man tell
 What hands so urge, what powers compel.

S O N G

I was so chill, and overworn, and sad,
 To be a lady was the only joy I had.
 I walked the street as silent as a mouse,
 Buying fine clothes, and fittings for the house.
 But since I saw my love
 I wear a simple dress,
 And happily I move
 Forgetting weariness.

S E L F - A N A L Y S I S

The tumult of my fretted mind
 Gives me expression of a kind;

But it is faulty, harsh, not plain—
My work has the incompetence of pain.

I am consumed with a slow fire,
For righteousness is my desire;
Towards that good goal I cannot whip my will,
I am a tired horse that jibes upon a hill.

I desire Virtue, though I love her not—
I have no faith in her when she is got:
I fear that she will bind and make me slave
And send me songless to the sullen grave.

I am like a man who fears to take a wife,
And frets his soul with wantons all his life.
With rich, unholly foods I stuff my maw;
When I am sick, then I believe in law.

I fear the whiteness of straight ways—
I think there is no color in unsullied days.
My silly sins I take for my heart's ease,
And know my beauty in the end disease.

Of old there were great heroes, strong in fight,
Who, tense and sinless, kept a fire alight:
God of our hope, in their great name,
Give me the straight and ordered flame!

SEHNSUCHT

Because of body's hunger are we born,
And by contriving hunger are we fed;
Because of hunger is our work well done,
As so are songs well sung, and things well said.
Desire and longing are the whips of God—
God save us all from death when we are fed.

WEAPONS

Up the crag
In the screaming wind,
Naked and bleeding
I fought blind.

Then at dawn
On the snowy height
I seized a spear
By the eastern light.

On I trudged
In the eye of the sun,

Past the cromlech
I found a gun.

Then I strayed
In the cities of men,
In the house of my Love
I found a pen!

THE LAST ROUND

Clasp you the God within yourself
And hold it fast;
After all combats shall ye come
To this good fight at last.

God is a mighty wrestler
He battles in the night;
Not till the end shall it be known
What foe you fight.

When God in you is overthrown
He'll show a light
And claim the victor for his own
And crown the fight.

TO A CRUCIFIX

O courteous Christ—Kind guest, most gracious host,
Which of these ugly things had pained you most
That silly priests repeat your words for gain
Or in your house hang symbols of your pain?

How had you withered at the servile breath
Spent in the praises of your common death,
Scorning these claims to honor and to pride
For such a death as multitudes have died.

Not in the cross was such indignity
As these acclaiming Christian ages see,
When you who lived for cure and for relief
Are most remembered for your wounds and grief.

FRIEND CATO

When the master sits at ease
He joys in generalities;
In aphorisms concerning all things human,
But most of all concerning woman.
Saying, "Women are this or that.
Woman is round, or high, or square, or flat."

Sir, a shepherd knows his sheep apart,
And mothers know young babes by heart.
To taste no little shade of difference
Is sign of undiscerning sense.
Cato, in pity, hear our just demur,
Man to be critic, must be connoisseur.

THE SONG-MAKER

I would live for a day and a night,
In the rigorous land where everything's right.
Then I would sit and make a song,
In the leisurely land where everything's wrong.

DEDICATION OF THE COOK

If any ask why there's no great She-Poet,
Let him come live with me, and he will know it:
If I'd indite an ode or mend a sonnet,
I must go choose a dish or tie a bonnet;

For she who serves in forced virginity
 Since I am wedded will not have me free;
 And those new flowers my garden is so rich in
 Must die for clammy odors of my kitchen.

Yet had I chosen Dian's barrenness
 I'm not full woman, and I can't be less,
 So could I state no certain truth for life,
 Can I survive and be my good man's wife?

Yes! I will make the servant's cause my own
 That she in pity leave me hours alone
 So I will tend her mind and feed her wit
 That she in time have her own joy of it;
 And count it pride that not a sonnet's spoiled
 Lacking her choice betwixt the baked and boiled.
 So those young flowers my garden is so rich in
 Will blossom from the ashes of my kitchen!

MEDITATION AT K E W

Alas! for all the pretty women who marry dull men,
 Go into the suburbs and never come out again,
 Who lose their pretty faces, and dim their pretty eyes,
 Because no one has skill or courage to organize.

What do these pretty women suffer when they marry?
 They bear a boy who is like Uncle Harry,
 A girl, who is like Aunt Eliza, and not new,
 These old, dull races must breed true.

I would enclose a common in the sun,
 And let the young wives out to laugh and run;
 I would steal their dull clothes and go away,
 And leave the pretty naked things to play.

Then I would make a contract with hard Fate
 That they see all the men in the world and choose a mate,
 And I would summon all the pipers in the town
 That they dance with Love at a feast, and dance him down.

From the gay unions of choice
 We'd have a race of splendid beauty, and of thrilling voice.
 The World whips frank, gay love with rods,
 But frankly, gayly shall we get the gods.

T H E A F F I N I T Y

I have to thank God I'm a woman,
 For in these ordered days a woman only
 Is free to be very hungry, very lonely.

It is sad for Feminism, but still clear
 That man, more often than woman, is pioneer.
 If I would confide a new thought,
 First to a man must it be brought.

Now, for our sins, it is my bitter fate
 That such a man wills soon to be my mate,
 And so of friendship is quick end:
 When I have gained a love I lose a friend.

It is well within the order of things
 That man should listen when his mate sings;
 But the true male never yet walked
 Who liked to listen when his mate talked.

I would be married to a full man,
 As would all women since the world began;
 But from a wealth of living I have proved
 I must be silent, if I would be loved.

Now of my silence I have much wealth,
 I have to do my thinking all by stealth.
 My thoughts may never see the day;
 My mind is like a catacomb where early Christians pray

And of my silence I have much pain,
 But of these pangs I have great gain;
 For I must take to drugs or drink,
 Or I must write the things I think.

If my sex would let me speak,
 I would be very lazy and most weak;
 I should speak only, and the things I spoke
 Would fill the air awhile, and clear like smoke.

The things I think now I write down,
 And some day I will show them to the Town.
 When I am sad I make thought clear;
 I can re-read it all next year.

I have to thank God I'm a woman,
 For in these ordered days a woman only
 Is free to be very hungry, very lonely.

THE TIRED WOMAN

O my Lover, blind me,
 Take your cords and bind me,
 Then drive me through a silent land
 With the compelling of your open hand!

There is too much of sound, too much for sight,
 In thundrous lightnings of this night,
 There is too much of freedom for my feet,
 Bruised by the stones of this disordered street.

I know that there is sweetest rest for me,
 In silent fields, and in captivity.
 O Lover! drive me through a stilly land
 With the compelling of your open hand.

DIVORCE

A voice from the dark is calling me.
 In the close house I nurse a fire.
 Out in the dark, cold winds rush free,
 To the rock heights of my desire.
 I smother in the house in the valley below,
 Let me out to the night, let me go, let me go!

Spirits that ride the sweeping blast,
 Frozen in rigid tenderness,
 Wait! For I leave the fire at last,
 My little-love's warm loneliness.
 I smother in the house in the valley below,
 Let me out in the night, let me go, let me go!

High on the hills are beating drums,
 Clear from a line of marching men
 To the rock's edge the hero comes.
 He calls me, and he calls again.
 On the hill there is fighting, victory, or quick death,
 In the house is the fire, which I fan with sick breath.
 I smother in the house in the valley below,
 Let me out in the dark, let me go, let me go!

AFTER ANNUNCIATION

Rest, little Guest,
 Beneath my breast.
 Feed, sweet Seed,
 At your need.

I took Love for my lord
 And this is my reward,
 My body is good earth,
 That you, dear Plant, have birth.

THE CHERRY-BLOSSOM WAND

I will pluck from my tree a cherry-blossom wand,
 And carry it in my merciless hand,

So I will drive you, so bewitch your eyes,
With a beautiful thing that can never grow wise.

Light are the petals that fall from the bough,
And lighter the love that I offer you now;
In a spring day shall the tale be told
Of the beautiful things that will never grow old.

The blossoms shall fall in the night wind,
And I will leave you so, to be kind:
Eternal in beauty are short-lived flowers,
Eternal in beauty, these exquisite hours.

I will pluck from my tree a cherry-blossom wand,
And carry it in my merciless hand,
So I will drive you, so bewitch your eyes,
With a beautiful thing that shall never grow wise.

SOUL'S LIBERTY

He who has lost soul's liberty
Concerns himself for ever with his property,
As, when the folk have lost both dance and song,
Women clean useless pots the whole day long.

Thank God for war and fire
To burn the silly objects of desire,
That from the ruin of a church thrown down
We see God clear and high above the town.

TO MEN

(Variation on Ella Wheeler Wilcox, after a poem of the same name)

Sirs—though we fail you—let us live;
Be just, have pity, and forgive.
Think how poor Mother Eve was brought
To being as God's afterthought.

God had a vast expanse of clay
To fashion Adam's primal day;
Yet was the craftsman's limit shown
His image could not live alone.

Yet God supports eternal life
Without the comfort of a wife;
So it was proved e'er we began
God had miscalculated man.

And of his fault, he took a part
Formed woman's brain and woman's heart

Of Imperfection—vainly planned—
To love, to serve, to understand.

How can you wonder, if we stray
Through coward night and sloven day
When power in us can but reflect
God's wifelessness and man's defect.

Had lonely God when earth was new
Some blest remembrances of two,
He had not made one half of life
A shambles and a hell-stung strife.

Do you remember, O my Dear,
The seventh night of our first year,
The night, when my first son was given
With ecstasy to tutor Heaven—

Had God loved thus, all Hell were blind
And famine, lust and murder kind.
Come, my co-adjutor, beloved smith,
Raise thou thy hammer—break the myth

There is no marvel of creation
Exists beyond our full relation—
Yet God shall strengthen from his sins
To breed us new and breed us twins.

Thou bungling artifcer, yet
Thou shalt be artist and beget
And on the form of Chaos lie
To wash the earth and raise the sky.

Not equal I, but counterpart
And in relation is my heart
Perfect with man's—as with his mind—
Mine is all strong to loose and bind.

Come then, my husband, here and rest
On my so well-remolcd breast.
At morning we'll go out and see
How well God works for you and me.

THE SINGER

If I had peace to sit and sing,
Then I could make a lovely thing;
But I am stung with goads and whips,
So I build songs like iron ships.

Let it be something for my song,
If it is sometimes swift and strong.

E N V O I

God, thou great symmetry,
Who put a biting lust in me
From whence my sorrows spring,
For all the frittered days
That I have spent in shapeless ways,
Give me one perfect thing.

D. H. Lawrence

D(AVID) H(ERBERT) LAWRENCE was born September 17, 1885, in the colliery town of Eastwood, a drab hamlet on the border between Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire. The son of workers, his novels return again and again to the rural and industrial backgrounds of his boyhood. Lawrence obtained a scholarship at the Nottingham High School and at sixteen became a pupil-teacher. After a short appointment in a London school, he abandoned teaching for literature. He traveled considerably in search of health and, during his last fifteen years, lived in Italy, New Mexico, and Southern France.

Even in his mid-twenties—in The White Peacock (1909), Love Poems and Others (1913) and, first of all, in Sons and Lovers (1913)—Lawrence pronounced the strain with which he was to be so closely identified. The two volumes of Collected Poems (1929) are autobiographically candid, completely characterizing. No one in his generation pursued the cry of sex so passionately, so painfully as D. H. Lawrence; and no one was more confused by it. A magnificently equipped craftsman, a writer pur sang, his gamut never extended. His novels, with two unimportant exceptions and, more explicitly, his poems are concerned with little else than the dark fire, the broken body, the struggle, death and resurrection of crucified flesh, the recurring cycle of fulfillment and frustration. This is Lawrence's theme, a theme which he varied with great skill, but one which he could neither leave nor fully control. It is not merely his passion, it is his obsession.

This is as far as Lawrence goes. And he could go no farther except in that limbo where sex and love are desperately confused. He could not separate his spirit from his loins; he was, at the same time, mentally detached and emotionally victimized.

His agony grew sharper, his solution vaguer. This, it seems, was the core of Lawrence's malaise. There is something about his excitation which is uncomfortably flagellant; his sudden heats and swift revulsions are too neurotic to evoke more than pity; hysteria, in many of the poems, is subdued but not silenced.

But there is something here beyond the sex-fearful, sex-fascinated being; something beyond the self-worshiping, self-deluded artist, and that is Lawrence's intensity. Whatever its faults, the pitch and register of his work is poetry. Impotence itself has power in his propulsive verse. A poet of sensibilities which are refined to the point of being always wounded, a recorder of kaleidoscopic images and sensory nuances, Lawrence at forty-four had made a permanent if painful contribution to literature. There are passages in his novels—especially in The Rainbow (1915) and Women in Love (1921)—that have the accent and the sweep of poetry; there are poems that fasten on the mind and will not be shaken off. It is rather a curious commentary that his objective or "fictional" poems are among his best. Nothing that he has written, none of his verse is more surely projected than the dramatic lyrics in dialect: "A Youth Mowing," "Violets," "Whether or Not," that remarkable sequence which a ruder Browning might have fathered and which is a completely rounded tale, a poignantly condensed novel.

Lawrence is more the enmeshed self, less the detached poet in "A Young Wife," "Love on the Farm," "Wedding Morn," and the irritated fragments in Pansies (1929). Here speaks "the hot blood's blindsfold art," chaotically, characteristically, but always eloquently.

After a struggle of many years, Lawrence succumbed to tuberculosis. His wish that he be taken to Arizona, either to die or to recuperate, could not be granted and he died March 2, 1930, at Nice, France. Immediately thereafter reappraisals set in: Lawrence was subjected to new examinations as poet, prophet, and pamphleteer. No less than four "intimate" biographers, including his wife, attempted the almost impossible task of presenting Lawrence as he seemed to the world and himself—and succeeded only in presenting him as he appeared to Mabel Dodge Luhan, Middleton Murry, Catherine Carswell, and Freda Lawrence. Horace Gregory was more critical in his study of Lawrence's symbols, estimating the man in relation to his work in Pilgrim of the Apocalypse. Lawrence's early stories were collected with a Memoir by David Garnett; posthumous and partly finished stories were issued for several years after his death. Last Poems, a volume of some three hundred pages with an introduction by Richard Aldington, appeared in 1933. The book consists of the greater part of two large manuscripts found among Lawrence's papers. It ranges from the sharp, snarling, and often trivial pensées, which Lawrence liked to call "Pansies," to long premonitory poems on death, poems which voice a new dignity.

Few writers had roused more violent and controversial issues; four of his books had been suppressed, a show of his paintings (an art to which Lawrence turned in his forties) was raided. Though he was unusually fecund, opposition kindled a bitter flame in him and his creative passion turned to propaganda. The Psychology of the Unconscious is a fantastic variation on Jung; Studies in American Literature is a poorly proportioned but provocative plea for the recognition of a native spirit; Pornography and Obscenity (1929) is a tract, an argument for the appreciation of the realities as against the hypocrisies of sexual morality.

But his polemical writing is, after all, the least of his work. In the best of his novels and poems he achieved a style that was dynamic, inflamed, savagely honest. A conscientious barbarian, he was, as Stuart Sherman wrote, "a revolutionist in favor of an individualistic, aristocratic barbarianism." He seldom wrote badly. True, his preoccupation was sex (he was described as "the novelist of the over- and the under-sexed"); he dealt almost entirely with the intensification or the perversion of the sexual instinct. But his deeper obsession, the "inner theme," was the possession and maintenance of masculine power and the understanding of men's and women's basic relations with each other. He clarified, though he did not altogether resolve, the complexities in two essays published in We Need One Another (1933). Here Lawrence pleaded for a relinquishing of the over-inflated ego and a realization of the sexes' spiritual dependence—"the great flow of the relationship goes on, undying, and this is the flow of living sex, the relation that lasts a lifetime, and of which sex-desire is only one vivid, most vivid, manifestation."

This conviction was fully expressed only toward the end of Lawrence's life; most of his writing lacks such clarity. One hornily was apparent in all his works: The world has gone stale, feebly promiscuous, prettily fetid. Small spurts of lust instead of a long passion; talk instead of acts. The world has ceased to be masculine. Its discontent, like its nervous art, its soft-rotten culture, its middle-class malaise, is all the outcome of womanishness. Women, pretending to need us, have used us up; women have destroyed us with merciless softness. All we cherish has become effeminated, vitiated with the white poison of their approval and the black venom of their jealousy. Suffering from a "mind-perverted, will-perverted, ego-perverted love," the world will be happy only when man—overcivilized man—regains the free power and security which are the well-spring of emotional vitality. The defect in thinking is obvious. It is not "maleness" which troubles the artist but his consciousness of it. It is this lack of peace which Lawrence instinctively resented and which kept him enslaved to his narrow freedom. Coming up from that lower English world "where the good form and restraint of the public school tradition was a gag to be spat out once the speaker gained the strength of self-confidence," Lawrence, rising by self-improvement, could never resist improving others. In this he was, beneath his libertarian manner, the Puritan. "He came up," said Henry S. Canby, "when the bourgeois Victorian morality was losing its vigor, and he preached his new gospel of virility just as the Methodists preached revivalism to the Anglicans." His methods were extravagant, often exacerbated, but they were vitally his own. He had, above all, the faculty of making the reader revalue his own standards. Whatever status as an artist the future may assign him, there can be no question that he was a force.

A YOUTH MOWING

There are four men mowing down by the Isar;
 I can hear the swish of the scythe-strokes, four Sharp breaths taken; yea, and I
 Am sorry for what's in store.

The first man out of the four that's mowing
 Is mine, I claim him once and for all;
 Though it's sorry I am, on his young feet, knowing
 None of the trouble he's led to stall.

As he sees me bringing the dinner, he lifts
 His head as proud as a deer that looks
 Shoulder-deep out of the corn; and wipes
 His scythe-blade bright, unhooks

The scythe-stone and over the stubble to me.
 Lad, thou hast gotten a child in me,
 Laddie, a man thou'l ha'e to be,
 Yea, though I'm sorry for thee.

L I G H T N I N G

I felt the lurch and halt of her heart
 Next my breast, where my own heart was beating;
 And I laughed to feel it plunge and bound,
 And strange in my blood-swept ears was the sound
 Of the words I kept repeating,
 Repeating with tightened arms, and the hot blood's blind-fold art.

Her breath flew warm against my neck,
 Warm as a flame in the close night air;
 And the sense of her clinging flesh was sweet
 Where her arms and my neck's blood-surge could meet.
 Holding her thus, did I care
 That the black night hid her from me, blotted out every speck?

I leaned me forward to find her lips,
 And claim her utterly in a kiss,
 When the lightning flew across her face,
 And I saw her for the flaring space
 Of a second, afraid of the clips
 Of my arms, inert with dread, wilted in fear of my kiss.

A moment, like a wavering spark,
 Her face lay there before my breast,
 Pale love lost in a snow of fear,
 And guarded by a glittering tear,
 And lips apart with dumb cries;
 A moment, and she was taken again in the merciful dark.

I heard the thunder, and felt the rain,
 And my arms fell loose, and I was dumb.
 Almost I hated her, she was so good,
 Hated myself, and the place, and my blood,
 Which burned with rage, as I bade her come
 Home, away home, ere the lightning floated forth again.

SUSPENSE

The wind comes from the north
 Blowing little flocks of birds
 Like spray across the town,
 And a train roaring forth
 Rushes stampeding down
 South, with flying curds
 Of steam, from the darkening north.

Whither I turn and set
 Like a needle steadfastly,
 Waiting ever to get
 The news that she is free;
 But ever fixed, as yet,
 To the lode of her agony.

A YOUNG WIFE

The pain of loving you
 Is almost more than I can bear.

I walk in fear of you.
 The darkness starts up where
 You stand, and the night comes through
 Your eyes when you look at me.

Ah, never before did I see
 The shadows that live in the sun!

Now every tall glad tree
 Turns round its back to the sun
 And looks down on the ground, to see
 The shadow it used to shun.

At the foot of each glowing thing
 A night lies looking up.

Oh, and I want to sing
 And dance, but I can't lift up
 My eyes from the shadows: dark
 They lie spilt round the cup.

What is it?—Hark
 The faint fine seethe in the air!

Like the seething sound in a shell!
 It is death still seething where
 The wild-flower shakes its bell
 And the skylark twinkles blue—

The pain of loving you
 Is almost more than I can bear.

CHERRY ROBBERS

Under the long dark boughs, like jewels red
 In the hair of an Eastern girl
 Hang strings of crimson cherries, as if had bled
 Blood-drops beneath each curl.

Under the glistening cherries, with folded wings
 Three dead birds lie:
 Pale-breasted throstles and a blackbird, robberlings
 Stained with red dye.

Against the haystack a girl stands laughing at me,
 Cherries hung round her ears.
 Offers me her scarlet fruit: I will see
 If she has any tears.

A WINTER'S TALE

Yesterday the fields were only gray with scattered snow,
 And now the longest grass-leaves hardly emerge;
 Yet her deep footsteps mark the snow, and go
 On toward the pines at the hill's white verge.

I cannot see her, since the mist's pale scarf
 Obscures the dark wood and the dull orange sky;
 But she's waiting, I know, impatient and cold, half
 Sobs struggling into her frosty sigh.

Why does she come so promptly, when she must know
 She's only the nearer to the inevitable farewell?
 The hill is steep, on the snow my steps are slow—
 Why does she come, when she knows what I have to tell?

LOVE ON THE FARM

What large, dark hands are those at the window
 Grasping in the golden light
 Which weaves its way through the evening wind
 At my heart's delight?

Ah, only the leaves! But in the west
 I see a redness suddenly come
 Into the evening's anxious breast—
 "Tis the wound of love goes home!

The woodbine creeps abroad
 Calling low to her lover:
 The sun-lit flirt who all the day
 Has poised above her lips in play
 And stolen kisses, shallow and gay
 Of pollen, now has gone away—
 She woos the moth with her sweet, low word;
 And when above her his moth-wings hover
 Then her bright breast she will uncover
 And yield her honey-drop to her lover.

Into the yellow, evening glow
 Saunters a man from the farm below;
 Leans, and looks in at the low-built shed
 Where the swallow has hung her marriage bed.
 The bird lies warm against the wall.
 She glances quick her startled eyes
 Towards him, then she turns away
 Her small head, making warm display
 Of red upon the throat. Her terrors sway
 Her out of the nest's warm, busy ball,
 Whose plaintive cry is heard as she flies
 In one blue stoop from out the sties
 Into the twilight's empty hall.

Oh, water-hen, beside the rushes,
 Hide your quaintly scarlet blushes,
 Still your quick tail, lie still as dead,
 Till the distance folds over his ominous tread!

The rabbit presses back her ears,
 Turns back her liquid, anguished eyes
 And crouches low; then with wild spring
 Spurts from the terror of his oncoming;
 To be choked back, the wire ring
 Her frantic effort throttling:

Piteous brown ball of quivering fears!
 Ah, soon in his large, hard hands she dies,
 And swings all loose from the swing of his walk!
 Yet calm and kindly are his eyes
 And ready to open in brown surprise
 Should I not answer to his talk
 Or should he my tears surmise.

I hear his hand on the latch, and rise from my chair
 Watching the door open; he flashes bare
 His strong teeth in a smile, and flashes his eyes
 In a smile like triumph upon me; then careless-wise
 He flings the rabbit soft on the table board
 And comes toward me: he! the uplifted sword
 Of his hand against my bosom! and oh, the broad
 Blade of his glance that asks me to applaud
 His coming! With his hand he turns my face to him
 And caresses me with his fingers that still smell grim
 Of rabbit's fur! God, I am caught in a snare!
 I know not what fine wire is round my throat;
 I only know I let him finger there
 My pulse of life, and let him nose like a stoat
 Who sniffs with joy before he drinks the blood.

And down his mouth comes to my mouth! and down
 His bright dark eyes come over me, like a hood
 Upon my mind! his lips meet mine, and a flood
 Of sweet fire sweeps across me, so I drown
 Against him, die, and find death good.

PIANO

Softly, in the dusk, a woman is singing to me;
 Taking me back down the vista of years, till I see
 A child sitting under the piano, in the boom of the tingling strings
 And pressing the small, poised feet of a mother who smiles as she sings.

In spite of myself, the insidious mastery of song
 Betrays me back, till the heart of me weeps to belong
 To the old Sunday evenings at home, with winter outside
 And hymns in the cozy parlor, the tinkling piano our guide.

So now it is vain for the singer to burst into clamor
 With the great black piano appassionato. The glamour
 Of childish days is upon me, my manhood is cast
 Down in the flood of remembrance, I weep like a child for the past.

GREEN

The dawn was apple-green,
The sky was green wine held up in the sun,
The moon was a golden petal between.

She opened her eyes, and green
They shone, clear like flowers undone
For the first time, now for the first time seen.

A WHITE BLOSSOM

A tiny moon as small and white as a single jasmine flower
Leans all alone above my window, on night's wintry bower,
Liquid as lime-tree blossom, soft as brilliant water or rain
She shines, the first white love of my youth, passionless and in vain.

WEDDING MORN

The morning breaks like a pomegranate
In a shining crack of red;
Ah, when tomorrow the dawn comes late
Whitening across the bed
It will find me at the marriage gate
And waiting while light is shed
On him who is sleeping satiate
With a sunk, unconscious head.

And when the dawn comes creeping in,
Cautiously I shall raise
Myself to watch the daylight win
On my first of days,
As it shows him sleeping a sleep he got
With me, as under my gaze
He grows distinct, and I see his hot
Face freed of the wavering blaze.

Then I shall know which image of God
My man is made toward;
And I shall see my sleeping rod
Or my life's reward;
And I shall count the stamp and worth
Of the man I've accepted as mine,
Shall see an image of heaven or of earth
On his minted metal shine.

Oh, and I long to see him sleep
In my power utterly;
So I shall know what I have to keep. . . .
I long to see
My love, that spinning coin, laid still
And plain at the side of me
For me to reckon—for surely he will
Be wealth of life to me.

And then he will be mine, he will lie
Revealed to me;
Patent and open beneath my eye
He will sleep of me;
He will be negligent, resign
His truth to me, and I
Shall watch the dawn light up for me
This fate of mine.

And as I watch the wan light shine
On his sleep that is filled of me,
On his brow where the curved wisps clot and twine
Carelessly,
On his lips where the light breaths come and go
Unconsciously,
On his limbs in sleep at last laid low
Helplessly,
I shall weep, oh, I shall weep, I know
For joy or for misery.

WHETHER OR NOT

Dunna thee tell me it's his'n, mother,
 Dunna thee, dunna thee!
 —Oh, 'ay, he'll come an' tell thee' his-sèn,
 Wench, wunna he?

Tha doesna mean ter say ter me, mother,
 He's gone wi' that—
 —My gel, owt'll do for a man i' th' dark;
 Tha's got it flat!

But 'er's old, mother, 'er's twenty year
 Older nor him—
 —Ay, an' yaller as a crowflower; an' yet i' th' dark
 Er'd do for Tim.

Tha niver believes it, does ter, mother?
 It's somebody's lies.
 —Ax 'im thy-sèn, wench; a widder's lodger!
 It's no surprise.

A widow o' forty-five
 Wi' a bitter, dirty skin,
 To ha' 'ticed a lad o' twenty-five,
 An' 'im to 'ave been took in!

A widow o' forty-five
 As 'as sludged like a horse all 'er life
 Till 'er's tough as whit-leather, to slive<sup>1</sup>
 Atween a lad an' 'is wife!

A widow o' forty-five!
 A glum old otchel, wi' long
 Witch teeth, an' er hawk-eyes, as I've Mistrusted all along!

An' me as 'as kept my-sèn
 Shut like a daisy bud,
 Clean an' new an' nice, so's when
 He wed he'd ha'e summat good!

An' 'im as nice an' fresh
 As any man i' th' force,
 To ha' gone an' given his clean young flesh
 To a woman that coarse!

III

You're stout to brave this snow, Miss Stainwright,
 Are you makin' Brinsley way?
 —I'm off up th' line to Underwood
 Wi' a dress as is wanted today.

<sup>1</sup> To slive = to slip, to interfere.

Oh, are you goin' to Underwood?
 'Appen then you've 'eered!
 —What's that as 'appen I've 'eered on, Missis?
 Speak up, you nedn't be feared.

Why, your young man an' Widow Naylor,
 'Er as 'e lodges wi'!
 They say he's got 'er wi' childt; but there—
 It's nothing to do wi' me!

Though if it's true, they'll turn 'im out
 O' th' plice force, without fail;
 An' if it's not true, you may back your life
 They'll listen to her tale.

—Well, I'm believin' no tale, Missis,
 I'm seein' for my-sèn.
 An' when I know for sure, Missis,
 I'll talk then.

IV

Nay, robin red-breast, tha needna
 Sit noddin' thy head at me!
 My breast's as red as thinc, I reckon,
 Flayed red, if tha could but see.

Nay, yo' blessed pee-whips,
 Yo' needna scraight<sup>1</sup> at me!
 I'm scraightin' my-sèn but arena goin'
 Ter let iv'rybody see.

Tha art smock-raveled, bunny,
 Larropin' neck an' crop
 I' th' snow! but I's warrant thee
 I'm further ower th' top.

V

Now sithee theer at th' reelroad crossin'
 Warmin' 'is-sèn at the stool o' fire
 Under the tank as fills th' ingines,
 If there isn't my dearly-beloved har!

My constable, wi' 'is buttoned breast
 As stout as the truth, my Sirs! an' 'is face
 As bold as a robin! It's much he cares
 For this nice old shame an' disgrace.

Oh, but 'e drops 'is flag when 'e sees me!
 Yi, an' 'is face goes white! Oh, yes,
 Tha can stare at me wi' thy fierce blue eyes;
 Tha won't stare me out, I guess.

<sup>1</sup> Scraight = cry.

VI

Whatever brings thee out so far
 In a' this depth o' snow?
 —I'm takin' 'ome a weddin'-dress,
 If yer mun know.

Why, is there a weddin' at Underwood
 As tha ne'd trudge up 'ere?
 —It's Widder Naylor's weddin'-dress,
 'Er'll be wantin' it, I 'ear.

'Er doesna want no weddin'-dress—
 —Why—? but what dost mean?
 —Doesn't ter know what I mean, Timmy?
 Yi, tha must ha' bin 'ard ter wean!

Tha'rt a good-un at suckin'-in yet, Timmy!
 But tell me, isn't it true
 As 'er'll be wantin' my weddin'-dress
 In a wík or two?

—Tha's no 'casions ter ha'e me on,
 Lizzie; what's done is done.
 —Done, I should think so! An' might I ask
 When tha begun?

It's thee as 'as done it, as much as me,
 So there, an' I tell thee flat.
 —Me gotten a childt ter thy landlady?
 —Tha's gotten thy answer pat.

As tha allus 'ast; but let me tell thee
 Hasna ter sent me whoam, when I
 Was a'most burstin' mad o' my-sèn,
 An' walkin' in agony?

After I'd kissed thee at night, Lizzie,
 An' tha's laid against me, an' melted
 Into me, melted right into me, Lizzie,
 Till I was verily swelted.

An' if my landlady seed me like it,
 An' if 'er clawkin' eyes
 Went through me as the light went out,
 Is it any cause for surprise?

—No cause for surprise at all, my lad;
 After kissin' an' cuddlin' wi' me, tha could Turn thy mouth on a woman like that!
 I hope it did thee good.

—Ay, it did; but afterwards
I could ha' killed 'er.

—Afterwards! how many times afterwards
Could ter ha' killed 'er?

Say no more, Liz, dunna thee;
'Er's as good as thee.

—Then I'll say good-by to thee, Timothy;
Take 'er i'stead o' me.

I'll ta'e thy word good-by, Liz,
Though I shonna marry 'er.
Nor 'er nor nub'dy.—It is Very brave of you, Sir!

—T' childt maun ta'e its luck, it mun,
An' 'er maun ta'e 'er luck.
F'r I tell yer I h'arena marryin' none
On yer; yo'n got what yer took!

—That's spoken like a man, Timmy,
That's spoken like a man!
“E up an' fired 'is pistol,
An' then away 'e ran!”

—I damn well shanna marry 'er,
Nor yo', so chew it no more!
I'll chuck the flamin' lot o' you—
—Yer nedn't 'ave swore!

vii

There's 'is collar round th' candlestick,
An' there's the dark-blue tie I bought 'im!
An' these is the woman's kids 'es's so fond on,
An' 'ere comes the cat as caught 'im!

I dunno wheer 'is eyes was—a gret
Round-shouldered hag! My Sirs, to think
Of 'im stoopin' to 'er! You'd wonder 'e could Throw 'imself down that sink!

I expect yer know who I am, Mrs. Naylor?
Who y're? yis, you're Lizzie Stainwright.
An' 'appen you'd guess then what I've come for?
—'Appen I mightn't, 'appen I might.

Yer knowed as I was courtin' Tim Merfin?
—Yis, I knowed 'e wor courtin' thee.
An' yet yer've bin carryin' on wi' 'im!
—Ay, an' 'im wi' me.

Well, now yer've got ter pay for it.
 —If I han, what's that ter thee?
 'E isn't goin' ter marry yer.
 —Tha wants 'im thy-sèn, I see.

It 'asn't nothin' to do with me.
 —Then what art colleyfoglin' for?
I'm not 'avin' your orts an' slarts.
 —Which on us said you wor?

But I want you to know 'e's not marryin' you.
 —Tha wants 'im thy-sèn too bad.
 Though I'll see as 'e pays you, an' docs what's right.
 —Tha'rt for doin' a lot wi' t' lad!

viii

To think I should 'ave ter 'affle an' castle
 Wi' a woman, an' name 'er a price
 For lettin' me marry the lad as I thought
 Ter marry wi' cabs an' rice!

But we'll go unbeknown ter th' registrar,
 An' give 'er the money there is;
 For I won't be beholden to such as 'er,
 I won't, or my name's not Liz.

ix

Ta'e off thy duty stripes, Tim,
 An' come in 'ere wi' me;
 Ta'e off thy p'lliceman's helmet
 An' look at me.

I wish tha hadna done it, Tim,
 I do, an' that I do!
 For whenever I look thee i' th' face, I s'll see
 Her face too.

I wish I could wesh 'er off'n thee;
 'Appen I can, if I try.
 But tha'll ha'e ter promise ter be true ter me
 Till I die. . . .

x

Twenty pounds o' thy own tha hast, an' fifty pound ha'e I;
 Thine shall go ter pay the woman, an' wi' my bit we'll buy
 All as we s'll want for furniture when tha leaves this place;
 An' we'll be married at th' registrar—now lift thy face.

Lift thy face an' look at me, man! canna ter look at me?
 Sorry I am for this business, an' sorry if ever I've driven thee
 To do such a thing; though it's a poor tale, it is, that I'm bound to say,
 Afore I can ta'e thee I've got a widder o' forty-five ter pay!

Dunna thee think but what I've loved thee; I've loved thee too well.
 An' 'deed an' I wish as this tale o' thine wor niver my tale to tell!
 Deed an' I wish I c'd 'a' stood at th' altar wi' thee an' bin proud o' thee!
 That I could 'a' bin first woman ter thee, as tha'rt first man ter me!

But we maun ma'e the best on't. So now rouse up an' look at me.
 Look up 'an' say tha'rt sorry tha did it; say tha'rt sorry for me.
 They'll turn thee out o' th' force, I doubt me; if they do, we can see
 If my father can get thee a job on t'bank. Say tha'rt sorry, Timmy!

xi

Ay, I'm sorry, I'm sorry,
 But what o' that!
 Ay, I'm sorry! Tha needna worry
 Nor fret thy fat.

I'm sorry for thee, I'm sorry f'r 'er,
 I'm sorry f'r us a'.
 But what then? Tha wants me, does ter
 After a'?

Ah'n put my-sèn i' th' wrong, Liz,
 An' 'er as well.
 An' tha'rt that right, tha knows; 'tis
 Other folks in hell.

Tha art so sure tha'rt right, Liz!
 That damned sure!
 But 'ark thee 'ere, that widder woman
 's less grasin', if 'er's poor.

What 'er gen, 'er gen me
 Beout a thought.
 'Er gen me summat; I shanna
 Say it wor nought.

I'm sorry for th' trouble, ay
 As comes on us a'.
 But sorry for what I had? why
 I'm not, that's a'.

As for marryin', I shanna marry
 Neither on yer.
 Ah've 'ad a' as I can carry
 From you an' from 'er.

So I s'll go an' leave yer,
 Both on yer,
 I don't like yer, Liz, I want ter
 Get away from yer.

An' I don't really like 'er neither,
 Even though I've 'ad
 More from 'er than from you; but either
 Of yer's too much for this lad.

Let me go! what's good o' talkin'?
 Let's a' ha' done.
 Talk about love o' women!
 Ter me it's no fun.

I s'll say good-by, Liz, to yer,
 Yer too much i' th' right for me.
 An' wi' 'er somehow it isn't right.
 So good-by, an' let's let be!

A W A R E

Slowly the moon is rising out of the ruddy haze,
 Divesting herself of her golden shift, and so
 Emerging white and exquisite; and I in amaze
 See in the sky before me, a woman I did not know
 I loved, but there she goes, and her beauty hurts my heart;
 I follow her down the night, begging her not to depart.

K I S S E S I N T H E T R A I N

I saw the midlands
 Revolve through her hair;
 The fields of autumn
 Stretching bare,
 And sheep on the pasture
 Tossed back in a scare.

And still as ever
 The world went round,
 My mouth on her pulsing
 Neck was found,
 And my breast to her beating
 Breast was bound.

But my heart at the center
 Of all, in a swound
 Was still as a pivot,
 As all the ground
 On its prowling orbit
 Shifted round.

And still in my nostrils
 The scent of her flesh,

And still my wet mouth
 Sought her afresh;
 And still one pulse
 Through the world did thresh.

And the world all whirling
 Around in joy
 Like the dance of a dervish
 Did destroy
 My sense—and my reason
 Spun like a toy.

But firm at the center
 My heart was found;
 Her own to my perfect
 Heart-beat bound,
 Like a magnet's keeper
 Closing the round.

S P R I N G M O R N I N G

Ah, through the open door
 Is there an almond tree
 Aflame with blossom!
 —Let us fight no more.

Among the pink and blue
Of the sky and the almond flowers
A sparrow flutters.
—We have come through.

It is really spring!—See,
When he thinks himself alone
How he bullies the flowers.
—You and me

How happy we'll be!—See him,
He clouts the tufts of flowers
In his impudence.
—But, did you dream

It would be so bitter? Never mind
It is finished, the spring is here.
And we're going to be summer-happy
And summer-kind.

We have died, we have slain and been slain
We are not our old selves any more.
I feel new and eager
To start again.

It is gorgeous to live and forget.
And to feel quite new.
See the bird in the flowers?—he's making
A rare to-do!

He thinks the whole blue sky
Is much less than the bit of blue egg
He's got in his nest—we'll be happy
You and I, I and you.

With nothing to fight any more—
In each other, at least.
See, how gorgeous the world is Outside the door!

TREES IN THE GARDEN

Ah in the thunder air
how still the trees are!

And the lime-tree, lovely and tall, every leaf silent hardly looses even a last breath of perfume.

And the ghostly, creamy colored little tree of leaves white, ivory white among the rambling greens, how evanescent, variegated elder, she hesitates on the green grass as if, in another moment, she would disappear with all her grace of foam!

And the larch that is only a column, it goes up too tall to see:
and the balsam-pines that are blue with the gray-blue blueness of things from the sea, and the young copper beech, its leaves red-rosy at the ends how still they are together, they stand so still in the thunder air, all strangers to one another as the green grass glows upwards, strangers in the garden.

F. S. Flint

F(RANCIS) S(TEWART) FLINT was born in 1885 and, besides being a poet, is known as a skillful translator from the French. He was one of the first to form the Imagist group and his "History of Imagism," in The Egoist (May, 1915) shows that the movement had a much earlier origin than is commonly supposed. His youth was spent in a struggle to maintain existence. As he wrote in the Introduction to

Otherworld, "I am not a scholar in any sense; the chance of life has made me a wage-earner since I could read and write almost—so that when I invented the term 'unrhymed cadence' I was not aware that I was in the oldest of traditions, that Chaucer had spoken of it in his House of Fame or that Cynewulf had sung:

Many varied voices voice I through my mouth.
Cunning are the notes I sing, and incessantly I change them.
Clear I cry and loud with the chant within my head;
Holding to my tones, hiding not their sweetness,
. . . when I burst forth with a cadenced song."

Flint himself was one of the most accomplished of the Imagist poets. His first volume, In the Net of the Stars (1909), anticipates the later experiments although most of it is formal in structure and is like its title, influenced by Yeats. Ford Madox Ford was quick to appreciate Flint's gift and printed his work in The English Review. Cadences appeared in 1915, Otherworld in 1920. The latter volume began with this statement: "There is only one art of writing and that is the art of poetry; and wherever you feel the warmth of human experience and imagination in any writing, there is poetry—whether it is in the form we call prose, or in rhyme and meter, or in the unrhymed cadence in which the greater part of this book is written."

Apart from his form, which is usually successful in registering racial memories, Flint's philosophy is apparent beneath a not so obvious music. It is regrettable that Flint has not pursued poetry, having discontinued it with Otherworld. Since 1920 he has busied himself with translating the works of modern French poets and essayists, especially Verhaeren and Jean de Bosschere.

L O N D O N

London, my beautiful,
it is not the sunset
nor the pale green sky shimmering through the curtain
of the silver birch,
nor the quietness;
it is not the hopping
of birds
upon the lawn,
nor the darkness
stealing over all things that moves me.

But as the moon creeps slowly over the tree-tops
among the stars,
I think of her
and the glow her passing sheds on men.

London, my beautiful,
I will climb
into the branches
to the moonlit tree-tops, that my blood may be cooled
by the wind.

P L A N E - T R E E

O tardy plane-tree,
Was not the winter long enough?
The April sun
Has sprayed with green
The gray house behind the boughs
And burst the first lit
Golden lamps of the chestnut:
Its leaves fall limply
Away from the brown flower-buds;
He has dressed in pink
The black and naked almond-tree,

Bestrewn the pavement with red-tipped catkins,
And sent the sparrows to find
His pouting buds on every twig,
Excepting yours, O motley plane-tree,
Whom the motor-cars,
In scorn of your laziness,
Spurn with their dust.

SADNESS

Spirit in me,
why are you so sad?
Is it that men are still but men
and know no other way?

Over the hills
go and find the golden-garlanded trees. . . .
Autumn has come. . . .
In the soft sadness of her mists,
you may discover a memory of the joys
of summer past,
and there forget
what men are,
and think what men may be.

CHRYSANthemums

O golden-red and tall chrysanthemums, you are the graceful soul of the china vase wherein you stand
amid your leaves.

O quiet room,
you are the symbol of my patient heart.
O flowers of flame, O tall chrysanthemums, my love who comes will wave wide ripples of disquiet there,

and a great tide of the eternal sea
will rise at her approach, and surge to song.

O quiet room, O flame chrysanthemums, images of my heart and its proud love,
you have no presage of the power that comes to fill with anguish the essential calm.

O calm wrought face, O sphinx behind the door,
her hand is on the latch.

BEGGAR

In the gutter piping his sadness
an old man stands,
bent and shriveled,
beard draggled,
eyes dead.

Huddled and mean,
shivering in threadbare clothes—
winds beat him,
hunger bites him,
forlorn, a whistle in his hands,
piping.

Hark! the strange quality of his sorrowful music, wind from an empty belly wrought magically into the wind,—

pattern of silver on bronze.

Gerald Gould

GERALD GOULD was born in 1885 at Scarborough, was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and was Fellow of Merton College from 1906 to 1916. Journalist as well as author, he was associate editor of The Daily Herald from 1919 to 1921 and literary editor of The Saturday Review from 1922 to 1926.

Gould began as a poet and, although he was the author of half a dozen books of essays and sketches, remained a poet. Of his eight books of verse, the most interesting are The Happy Tree (1919), The Journey (1920), and Beauty, the Pilgrim (1927). Extremely versatile, his smoothly running lines sometimes descend to mere facility; but a dignity of spirit underlines the best of Gould's lyrics. Collected Poems (1929) attracted new readers. Gould died in London in 1936.

SONG

She whom I love will sit apart,
And they whom love makes wise
May know the beauty in her heart
By the beauty in her eyes.

Thoughts that in quietness confute
The noisy world are hers,
Like music in a listening lute
Whose strings no finger stirs.

And in her eyes the shadows move,
Not glad nor sad, but strange
With those unchanging dreams that prove
The littleness of change.

MORTALITY

In the green quiet wood, where I was used,
In summer, to a welcome calm and dark,
I found the threat of murder introduced
By scars of white paint on the wrinkled bark.

How few old friends were to be spared! And now
I see my friends with new eyes here in town
—Men as trees walking, and on every brow
A pallid scar, and all to be cut down.

TWILIGHT

The fields grow dim; the somber mills
Stand crucified against the skies;
Blue in the distance rise
The ancient hills.

The stars come softly, and the least
Last wind is dead as dead desires;

A swarm of silver spires
Fades in the East.

The heavy thoughts that dwelt with me
Slip from me soundless, as the dead
Sink to their quiet bed
Far out at sea.

The stars are empty of concern,
The earth is empty of unrest;
Almost the burning West
Has ceased to burn.

Gray rivers and gray roads, and dells
Having the darkness at their heart;
From valleys, far apart,
The noise of bells.

THE HAPPY TREE

There was a bright and happy tree;
The wind with music laced its boughs;
Thither across the houseless sea
Came singing birds to house.

Men grudged the tree its happy eves,
Its happy dawns of eager sound;
So that all crown and tower of leaves
They leveled with the ground.

They made an upright of the stem,
A cross-piece of a bough they made:
No shadow of their deed on them
The fallen branches laid.

But blithely, since the year was young,
When they a fitting hill did find,
There on the happy tree they hung
The Saviour of mankind.

I AM FRIGHTENED

I am frightened, sweetheart—that's the long and short
 Of the bad mind I bear: the scent comes back
 Of an unhappy garden gone to wrack,
 The flower-beds trampled for an idiot's sport,
 A mass of vermin battenning there, a mort
 Of weeds a-fester, all the green turned black,
 And through the sodden glades of loss and lack
 The dead winds blown of hate and false report.
 There was a music in the early air,
 When our young love was virgin as we were,
 Ripe for the rose, new to the nightingale;
 But now two ghosts walk showing each to each
 The empty grace of ceremonious speech,
 And I am frightened, and the air is stale.

Andrew Young

ANDREW YOUNG was born in Elgin in 1885. Brought up in Edinburgh, he attended the Royal High School and graduated in Arts at the University. In 1920 he moved to Hove, chiefly because the southern countryside yielded the plants which fascinated him.

From Winter Harvest (1933) to Collected Poems (1936) Young's poetry, begun in maturity, shows an uncommon understanding of the country scene. His is "nature verse," but it is far removed from the pretty bucolics and self-satisfied naïveté of the lesser Georgians. Never callow or commonplace, reminiscent of Edward Thomas, it delights in odd observations and details usually overlooked.

LAST SNOW

Although the snow still lingers
 Heaped on the ivy's blunt webbed fingers
 And painting tree-trunks on one side,
 Here in this sunlit ride
 The fresh unchristened things appear,
 Leaf, spathe and stem,
 With crumbs of earth clinging to them
 To show the way they came
 But no flower yet to tell their name,
 And one green spear
 Stabbing a dead leaf from below
 Kills winter at a blow.

THE SWANS

How lovely are these swans,
 That float like high proud galleons,
 Cool in the summer heat,
 And waving leaf-like feet
 Divide with narrow breasts of snow
 In a smooth surge
 This water that is mostly sky;
 So lovely that I know
 Death cannot kill such birds,
 It could but wound them, mortally.

THE OVERWORKED HORSE

I wondered at the mighty horse
 So meekly since the day began
 Toiling to make himself a corse,
 And then I wondered at the man.

Humbert Wolfe

HUMBERT WOLFE was born at Milan in Italy, January 5, 1885. As he himself declared, he "lost no time in crossing to Bradford in the West Riding of Yorkshire, which town he reached during the same year and remained there till he left it for Oxford some 18 years later. Wrote sporadic and increasingly unsatisfactory verse from the age of 16 till his appointment to the British Civil Service in 1909. This appointment naturally induced in him a more restrained outlook upon life and, beyond a few casual poems and a rejected novel, he had no literary output or recognition till after the War in 1919. In that year, he published London Sonnets, followed in the next year by Shylock Reasons with Mr. Chesterton. In 1923, he published Circular Saws, a collection of ambiguous aphorisms, and, in 1924, Kensington Gardens, a collection of short poems dealing with that delectable locality. It is to be anticipated (and feared) that his output will tend rapidly to increase."

That was in 1924. Between that year and 1935 Wolfe published some fourteen volumes, all, with two exceptions, in verse. The outstanding quality is neither the dexterous satire which Wolfe used so incisively nor the grace and charm of which he was somewhat too fond, but a confusion of the two. The surface characteristics are modern, but modern only in certain tricks of typography and employment of "slant" or "suspended" rhymes. There is, above all, a fancy that delights to improvise on major themes which somehow slide into minor cadences. It is this contradiction which marks even the most definite of his volumes, an indetermination from which Wolfe seems unable to escape. It is as if the "pale musicianer" of whom he speaks had composed a robust theme—and arranged it as a pretty duet for dulcimer and viola d'amore.

Thus the poet cannot make up his mind whether to thrust sentimentally or sigh sardonically; whether to be a mimic Heine or a tragic Pierrot; whether to be the last of an old tradition of lyricists or the first of a new generation of ironists. As a result, he is all of these in quick succession, often, indeed, at the same time. Humoresque (1926), the least remarkable poetically, is the most rewarding as a study of this paradoxical ambidexterity. The Unknown Goddess (1925) wavers between earnestness and artificiality; "Iliad," as memorable a set of stanzas about poetry as was ever written, is followed by half a dozen fragilities composed of whipped cream and a spun-sugar Weltschmerz. In News of the Devil (1926) the barb of satire speeds with a savage purpose. Cursory Rhymes (1927), on the other hand, is a collection of verses to and for children in which the author begins by being unsure of his audience and ends by being unsure of himself; the note of naïveté seems forced, the archness calculated, the humor tricky and bookish. This Blind Rose (1929) and Snow (1931) again alternate Wolfe's not quite detached irony, his bitter-sweet overtones, the artificial idiom which surrenders, in spite of the author's weak struggle, to "the soft advances of the charmed senses." The poet admonishes himself:

Yield to the easy hunger
Of beauty no longer—

but he cannot escape the ready and treacherous pleasure of his own ease.

Wolfe's two best volumes are the early Kensington Gardens (1924) and the larger Requiem (1927). In the first, the fantasies enchant with their delicacy. The squirrel "like a small gray coffee-pot," the half-metal tulip "clean as a lady, cool as glass," the city financier with his "table-land of shiny hat," the "flushed example" of the rose with her "dazzling inch of scent"—all these are seen and communicated in such a way that the reader enjoys the mingling of recognition and surprise. Requiem is the most reflective of all Wolfe's work and the nearest to a synthesis. This symphonic and almost fugual creation retains Wolfe's exactitude of epithet embodied in a graver music than he usually employed.

Homage to Meleager (1930) and Others Abide (1927) display Wolfe as the translator of many epigrams from the Greek, a task for which he was eminently capable. X at Oberammergau (1935) again attempts to construct a major poem upon minor effects. The theme is timely: the conflict between personal good and universal evil. The design is large: the Gospel narrative and a Passion Play translated to the present scene. Unfortunately Wolfe's treatment fails to meet the demands of his subject.

It was evident that Wolfe was overworked. He had been one of the most responsible and hard-pressed Civil Servants; the second World War piled on more burdens than he could bear. He died of a heart attack on January 15, 1940.

In his lifetime Wolfe was underpraised for the tart dissonances and light fancies which were natural to him, overpraised for the symphonic elaborations which were scarcely his forte. He made the mistake of going in for fragility on a large scale; he tried to build cosmic allegories on every whimsicality. But he will outlive many louder poets by virtue of his frail-spun and faintly acid lyrics.

THRUSHES

The City Financier
walks in the gardens, stiffly, because of his pride and his burdens.

The daisies, looking up, observe only a self-respecting curve.

The thrushes only see a flat
table-land
of shiny hat.

He looks importantly about him,
while all the spring
goes on without him.

TULIP

Clean as a lady,
cool as glass,
fresh without fragrance
the tulip was.

The craftsman, who carved her
of metal, prayed:
"Live, oh thou lovely!"
Half metal she stayed.

THE GRAY SQUIRREL

Like a small gray
coffee-pot,
sits the squirrel.
He is not all he should be,

kills by dozens trees, and eats
his red-brown cousins.

The keeper, on the other hand
, who shot him, is a Christian, and loves his enemies,

which shows
the squirrel was not one of those.

L A M B

The old bellwether looked at the lamb,
as a gentleman looks
when he mutters "Damn!"

"If you jump and frisk,
you little fool,
you'll only end
by losing your wool.

"When I was a lamb
I always would behave as like a sheep
as I could."

"Did you!" the lamb replied with a leap,
"I always thought you were born a sheep."

The park-keeper said
to the boy on the fence,
"Let's have less
of your impudence!

"Off with you now,
and do as you're bade,
or you'll end in prison.
When I was a lad . . ."

THE LILAC

Who thought of the lilac?
"J," dew said,
"I made up the lilac out of my head."

"She made up the lilac!
Pooh!" thrilled a linnet, and each dew-note had a lilac in it.

THE ROSE

Why should a man
, though six foot tall, think he matters
at all, at all?

and, though he live
for seventy years,
does he suppose that anyone cares?

Rather let me
to him propose the flushed example of the rose,

who, with her dazzling
inch of scent,
a summer's day weighs imminent

upon the spirit
entranced, and goes richer with that than he with those.

L A B U R N U M

Laburnum hangs her golden fleece through a thousand lattices.

In the silken flosses caught struggles Spring,
the Argonaut.

THINGS LOVELIER

You cannot dream
Things lovelier
Than the first love
I had of her.

Nor air is any
By magic shaken
As her first breath in
The first kiss taken.

And who, in dreaming,
Understands
Her hands stretched like
A blind man's hands?

Open, trembling,
Wise they were—
You cannot dream
Things lovelier.

GREEN CANDLES

"There's someone at the door," said gold candlestick:
"Let her in quick, let her in quick!"
"There is a small hand groping at the handle.
Why don't you turn it?" asked green candle.

"Don't go, don't go," said the Heppelwhite chair,
"Lest you find a strange lady there."
"Yes, stay where you are," whispered the white wall:
"There is nobody there at all."

"I know her little foot," gray carpet said:
"Who but I should know her light tread?"
"She shall come in," answered the open door,
"And not," said the room, "go out any more."

QUEEN VICTORIA

Queen Victoria's statue is the work of her daughter Beatrice.

The shape's all wrong,
and the crown don't fit,

but—bless her old heart!
she was proud of it.

LOVE IS A KEEPER OF SWANS

Love is a keeper of swans!
Helen! amid what dark wherries are you steering the silver boat,
that for all the love of Paris,
and his lips against your throat,
passed out of Troy with windless vans?

And, fairest of Italians,
where do you glimmer, Beatrice?
What light of heaven stains your wings
with gold that were all fleur de lys?
And do you hear when Dante sings?
"Love is a keeper of swans."

Love is a keeper of swans.
Have you left the barren plain,
and stormed a gold-eagle's eyrie?
Queen-swan of the eagle strain,
what mountain has you, Mary?
And is its name, as ever, still romance?

And you, bright cynet of immortal Hans,
you need not join your sisters yet.
You have all time. Why should you hasten?
What though the lake with reeds be set,
one reed is murmuring, oh, listen!
"Love is a keeper of swans."

MAN

The feathers in a fan
are not so frail as man;
the green embossed leaf
than man is no more brief.
His life is not so loud
as the passing of a cloud;
his death is quieter
than harebells when they stir.
The years that have no form
and substance are as warm, and space has hardly less supreme an emptiness.
And yet man being frail
does on himself prevail,

and with a single thought
can bring the world to naught, as being brief he still bends to his fleeting will all time and makes of it
the shadow of his wit.
Soundless in life and death

although he vanisheth,
the echo of a song
makes all the stars a gong.
Cold, void, and yet the grim darkness is hot with him, and space is but the span of the long love of man.

THE WATERS OF LIFE

When, hardly moving, you decorate night's hush with the slim pencil of your grace, retrieving the clean flat stroke of some old Grecian brush that painted dancers fair beyond believing;

when, leaning back the harvest of your hair
under the moon with beauty as still as hers, your body's wonder writes upon the air
the perfect cadence of consummate verse,

I think, if this upon the air be shaken, brief as a falling blossom, it can but be that Time records, by beauty overtaken, in one gold instant, immortality,

and that the patterns you weave upon the night
have such swift passion, such essential heat, that all the painter sees, the poet can write,
are but pale shadows of your dancing feet.

THIS IS NOT DEATH

Lay aside phrases; speak as in the night
a child in terror might Confess that you are lonely, that you heard some foot or hand that stirred, that, holding your own breath, you almost hear
the midnight breath of Fear, that tearless, soundless in your heart you pray:
“God! give me back the day!”
Yes! God can give it back, but not the one that you have dreamed upon.
The black will turn to gray, the gray to blue distance, but not for you,
and not for you the cheerful voice of men
will warm the heart again.
Nor will your friends or enemies intrude upon that solitude
where only shadows drift and cross and pass,
seen sideways in your glass.

Make not complaint. For neither prayer nor tear has its old power here.
This is not silence rounded by the deep deliverance of sleep, but by the empty spaces where the will to wake again is still.
You chose, and you abide the choice, apart,
saying to your own heart:
“Beat if you must, though softly,” to the brain:
“Must you imagine pain?”
And last of all say to the sobbing breath:
“No, fool, this is not death.”

ILIA D

False dreams, all false,
mad heart, were yours.
The word, and nought else,
in time endures.
Not you long after,
perished and mute,
will last, but the defter
viol and lute.
Sweetly they'll trouble
the listeners
with the cold dropped pebble of painless verse.
Not you will be offered,
but the poet's false pain.
You have loved and suffered,
mad heart, in vain.
What love doth Helen or Paris have where they lie still in a nameless grave?

Her beauty's a wraith,
and the boy Paris
muffles in death
his mouth's cold cherries.
Yes! these are less,
that were love's summer,
than one gold phrase
of old blind Homer.
Not Helen's wonder
nor Paris stir,
but the bright, untender
hexameters.
And thus, all passion is nothing made,
but a star to flash in an Iliad.
Mad heart, you were wrong!
No love of yours,
but only what's sung,
when love's over, endures.

Frances Cornford

FRANCES (DARWIN) CORNFORD, daughter of Sir Francis Darwin, the third son of Charles Darwin, was born in 1886 at Cambridge. She married Francis Macdonald Cornford, Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1909.

Her first volume, Poems (1910), though unaffected, showed little trace of individuality. With Spring Morning (1915) a much more distinct personality expressed itself. Hers is a firmly realized, clean-edged verse, with a clarity of utterance which is also found in the more suggestive Autumn Midnight (1923). Her later verse in Different Days (1928) is no less spontaneous than the simple “A Wasted Day,” the acute and onomatopoetic “The Watch,” and the delightfully mocking triolet "To a Fat Lady Seen from the Train." It is, however, more measured; gravity has been added without the loss of charm. Whether grave or mocking Mrs. Cornford's tone maintains a quiet distinction.

In Mountains and Molehills (1935), with distinctive woodcuts by Gwen Raverat, Mrs. Cornford continues to write of the English countryside with a quaint difference, of thoughts in a night nursery, of a back view particular yet universal, of Cambridge autumns, of madmen and fairies—a seemingly heterogeneous set of variations on traditional themes. Yet Mrs. Cornford, somehow, imposes unity upon them, if only by virtue of making her subjects sing.

THE COUNTRY BEDROOM

My room's a square and candle-lighted boat,
In the surrounding depths of night afloat.
My windows are the portholes, and the seas
The sound of rain on the dark apple-trees.

Sea-monster-like beneath, an old horse blows
A snort of darkness from his sleeping nose,
Below, among drowned daisies. Far off, hark!
Far off, one owl amidst the waves of dark.

TO A FAT LADY SEEN FROM THE TRAIN

O why do you walk through the fields in gloves,
Missing so much and so much?
O fat white woman whom nobody loves,
Why do you walk through the fields in gloves,
When the grass is soft as the breast of doves
And shivering sweet to the touch?
O why do you walk through the fields in gloves,
Missing so much and so much?

THE WATCH

I wakened on my hot, hard bed;
Upon the pillow lay my head;
Beneath the pillow I could hear
My little watch was ticking clear.
I thought the throbbing of it went
Like my continual discontent;
I thought it said in every tick:
I am so sick, so sick, so sick:
O death, come quick, come quick, come quick,
Come quick, come quick, come quick, come quick. . . .

A WASTED DAY

I spoiled the day;
Hotly, in haste
All the calm hours
I gashed and defaced.

Let me forget,
Let me embark
—Sleep for my boat—
And sail through the dark.

Till a new day
Heaven shall send,
Whole as an apple,
Kind as a friend.

AT NIGHT

My brain is like the ravaged shores—the sand
Torn cruelly by footsteps from the land.
O hushing waves; O profound sea of sleep,
Send your curved ripples surely-lapping.
Creep,
Pour on the scarrèd surface of my brain;
With your vast pity, wash it smooth again.

THE UNBESEECHABLE

(To be set to music)

"Time stands still
With gazing on her face,"
Sang Dowland to his lute,
Full of courtly grace.

Now that his musician's face
And her face are dust,
Still I cry, Stand still:
Still cry I must.

Stand still, Time,
Hold, hold your pace;
Stiller stand than the smile
On Pharaoh's face.

Stiller than December's frost
That takes the heart with wonder,
Or the pause that comes between Lightning and thunder.

Time, stand still,
Hush now your tread,
Stiller, stiller than a room
Where lies the sheeted dead.

Where, though it's busy noon,
Naught comes or goes;
Where the tree of endless peace
To the ceiling grows.

O Time, Time—
Stark and full of pain
Why drag me into space,
A dog upon a chain?

I who would float with you,
A ship sailing white,
Who cannot tell which power is hers,
And which the wind's delight.

So my refreshèd soul
Time would adore,
If for one moment's breath
Time were no more.

But, with Dowland's broken lute
And his forgotten rhyme,
Still I cry, Stand still,
Stand still, Time.

THE HILLS

Out of the complicated house, come I
To walk beneath the sky.
Here mud and stones and turf, here everything
Is mutely comforting.
Now hung upon the twigs and thorns appear
A host of lovely rain-drops cold and clear.
And on the bank
Or deep in brambly hedges dank
The small birds nip about, and say:
"Brothers, the Spring is not so far away!"
The hills like mother-giantesses old
Lie in the cold,
And with a complete patience, let
The cows come cropping on their bosoms wet,
And even tolerate that such as I
Should wander by
With paltry leatherneel heel which cannot harm
Their bodies' calm;
And, with a heart they cannot know, to bless
The enormous power of their peacefulness.

T. E. Hulme

T. E. HULME was born in 1886, and was educated at Cambridge, where he distinguished himself in philosophy. Coming to London, he was soon established as the intellectual stimulus if not the leader of a group of writers, painters, and thinkers, all of whom paid posthumous tribute to his genius. Entering the War, he was killed in action in 1917.

It is doubtful whether any writer of his generation considered theories of expression more seriously than Hulme. He distrusted the word per se, regarding it as a thing with no inner reality. As Herbert Read says, "Against words he opposed the image as a unit and the analogy as an instrument of thought. Poetry, in the broad sense of imaginative literature, becomes the only kind of logic worthy of consideration, and the art of poetry the only science of meaning. Thought, he argued, was prior to its expression in language, being the simultaneous presentation to the mind of two different images; thought was the recognition of their analogy. The poet is he who can awaken this analogy in the mind of the reader. There can be no question of exact conveyance, because language is a feeble instrument. The poet only suggests, and his suggestion falls flat on a mind that is not in some manner prepared for this sudden fertilization. But suggestion is not produced by 'eye-blur': poetry is a mosaic of exactly defined words, and suggestion must not be related to indefiniteness, but is the most exact conveyance possible of a vivid visual image." Five of Hulme's image-built poems appeared at the end of Pound's Ripostes (1915) gravely entitled "The Complete Poetical Works of T. E. Hulme."

After Hulme's death Herbert Read undertook the labor of deciphering and editing his manuscripts. Most of the material appeared under the title Speculations in 1924. A supplementary pamphlet, Notes on Language and Style, also collated by Read, was published as one of the University of Washington Chapbooks in 1929.

A U T U M N

A touch of cold in the Autumn night—
I walked abroad,
And saw the ruddy moon lean over a hedge
Like a red-faced farmer.
I did not speak, but nodded,
And round about were the wistful stars
With white faces like town children.

C O N V E R S I O N

Lighthearted I walked into the valley wood
In the time of hyacinths,
Till beauty like a scented cloth
Cast over, stifled me. I was bound
Motionless and faint of breath
By loveliness that is her own eunuch.

Now pass I to the final river
Ignominiously, in a sack, without sound,
As any peeping Turk to the Bosphorus.

T H E E M B A N K M E N T

(The fantasia of a fallen gentleman on a cold, bitter night)

Once, in finesse of fiddles found I ecstasy,
In the flash of gold heels on the hard pavement.
Now see I
That warmth's the very stuff of poesy.
Oh, God, make small
The old star-eaten blanket of the sky,
That I may fold it round me and in comfort lie.

Siegfried Sassoon

SIEGFRIED (LORAIN) SASOON was born September 8, 1886. He was educated at Marlborough and Clare College, Cambridge, and, during the War, was a captain in the Royal Welsh Fusiliers. He fought in France and Palestine; he won the Military Cross for bringing in wounded on the battlefield.

Sassoon's literary development seems as contradictory as it is curious. Descended from Persian Jews on his father's side, from a traditional English country family on his mother's, Sassoon's boyhood was spent alternating between fox- and rhyme-hunting. He was divided between a love of rugged activity and a fondness for pale, Dowsonesque lyrics. Several volumes ranging from parody to the verge of preciosity were issued anonymously and privately printed. The earliest book, Poems (1906), was published in Sassoon's twentieth year and is, according to its author, "mostly weak imitations of Tennyson, Swinburne, and Rossetti." A sense of their unreality drove him to a larger work, The Daffodil Murderer (1913), a poem which, beginning as a burlesque of Masefield, ended in serious self-expression.

By this time the poet had chaffed himself out of his juvenile admirations for Stephen Phillips and the Pre-Raphaelites, and strong feeling demanded a powerful expression. The war compelled it. With The Old Huntsman (1917) Sassoon came into his own idiom, taking his place immediately as "one of England's most brilliant rising stars." The first poem, a pseudo-Masefieldian monologue, was followed by a series of war poems, undisguised in their reality and bitterness. Every line of these quivering stanzas bore the mark of a sensitive and outraged nature; there was scarcely a phrase that did not protest against the "glorification" and false glamor of war.

Counter-Attack appeared in 1918. In this volume, Sassoon turned from ordered loveliness to the gigantic brutality of war. At heart a lyric idealist, the bloody years intensified and twisted his tenderness till what was stubborn and satiric in him forced its way to the top. In Counter-Attack Sassoon found his angry outlet. Most of these poems are choked with passion; many of them are torn out, roots and all, from the very core of an intense conviction. They rush on, not so much because of the poet's art but almost in spite of it. A suave utterance, a neatly-joined structure would be out of place and even inexcusable in such verses as the title-poem, "The Rear-Guard," "Base Details," "Does It Matter?"—verses that are composed of love and indignation. "Let no one ever," Robert Nichols in his preface quotes Sassoon as saying, "from henceforth say one word in any way countenancing war. It is dangerous even to speak of how here and there the individual may gain some hardship of soul by it. For war is hell, and those who institute it are criminals. Were there even anything to say for it, it should not be said; for its spiritual disasters far outweigh any of its advantages. . . ." Nichols adds his approval to these sentences, saying, "For myself, this is the truth. War does not ennoble, it degrades."

Early in 1920, Sassoon visited America. At the same time, he brought out his Picture Show (1920), a vigorous answer to those who feared that Sassoon had "written himself out" or had begun to burn away in his own fire. Had Rupert Brooke lived, he might have written many of these lacerated but somehow exalted lines. "The Dug-Out" and "Everyone Sang" are splendid examples of how much poignance and (in the latter) winged joy can be held in less than a dozen lines. Sassoon's three volumes are the most vital and unsparing records of the war we have had. They synthesize in poetry what Barbusse's Under Fire and Remarque's All Quiet on the Western Front spread out in panoramic prose or Sheriff's Journey's End compacted in his stripped tragedy.

Recreations, a privately distributed volume, printed at Christmas, 1923, for his friends, shows Sassoon in a more playfully intellectual vein. Another, even more strictly limited publication, Lingual Exercises for Advanced Vocabularians, was issued in 1925. Most of the contents of the two volumes appeared in Satirical Poems (1926). Less direct than his deeper notes, these poems display another interesting though not so compelling aspect of Sassoon's genius. Poems of Pinchbeck Lyre (1931), issued anonymously, is a revival of Sassoon's talent for parody; this small but bitter collection is a set of diabolical burlesques of Humbert Wolfe.

The Heart's Journey (1928) and Vigils (1935) represent a further maturing. They seem the work of another poet, but it is the essential Sassoon. Here is the distillation of the post-war years, of silence and sorrow, of long conflict and final unity. Here are the visionary ideals of youth sharpened and purified through pain; here is bitter knowledge saved from bitterness by the spirit of faith; here, in short, Sassoon's Songs of Innocence are mingled with his Songs of Experience. This spiritual autobiography reveals the old fire, but a fire subdued. It has dignity, a gentle ecstasy which places it in the line of great religious poetry. With almost monosyllabic simplicity of word and music, Sassoon shares the power of the mystic; he achieves a sense of identification with all things—be they inanimate objects like a lamp or a book, intangible concepts like music, or his fellowmen, living or dead—fusing every element in a rapt and universal love.

Memoirs of a Fox-Hunting Man (1928), first published anonymously, was awarded the two most coveted literary prizes in England: the Hawthornden Prize and the James Tait Black Memorial Prize in 1929. Memoirs of an Infantry Officer, its sequel, appeared in 1930.

Sherston's Progress (1936) and The Old Century and Seven More Years (1938) are further explorations in autobiography. Rhymed Ruminations (1941) are occasional poems, a little resigned, a little remote, but not without the poet's fundamental consciousness. They are best characterized by the title.

DREAMERS

Soldiers are citizens of death's gray land,
Drawing no dividend from time's tomorrows.
In the great hour of destiny they stand,
Each with his feuds, and jealousies, and sorrows.
Soldiers are sworn to action; they must win
Some flaming, fatal climax with their lives.
Soldiers are dreamers; when the guns begin
They think of firelit homes, clean beds, and wives.

I see them in foul dug-outs, gnawed by rats,
And in the ruined trenches, lashed with rain,

Dreaming of things they did with balls and bats,
 And mocked by hopeless longing to regain
 Bank-holidays, and picture shows, and spats,
 And going to the office in the train.

THE REAR-GUARD

Groping along the tunnel, step by step,
 He winked his prying torch with patching glare
 From side to side, and sniffed the unwholesome air.

Tins, boxes, bottles, shapes too vague to know,
 A mirror smashed, the mattress from a bed;
 And he, exploring fifty feet below
 The rosy gloom of battle overhead.
 Tripping, he grabbed the wall; saw someone lie
 Humped at his feet, half-hidden by a rug,
 And stooped to give the sleeper's arm a tug.
 "I'm looking for headquarters." No reply.
 "God blast your neck!" (For days he'd had no sleep.)
 "Get up and guide me through this stinking place."
 Savage, he kicked a soft, unanswering heap,
 And flashed his beam across the livid face
 Terribly glaring up, whose eyes yet wore
 Agony dying hard ten days before;
 And fists of fingers clutched a blackening wound.
 Alone he staggered on until he found
 Dawn's ghost that filtered down a shafted stair
 To the dazed, muttering creatures underground
 Who hear the boom of shells in muffled sound.
 At last, with sweat of horror in his hair,
 He climbed through darkness to the twilight air,
 Unloading hell behind him step by step.

BASE DETAILS

If I were fierce and bald and short of breath,
 I'd live with scarlet Majors at the Base,
 And speed glum heroes up the line to death.
 You'd see me with my puffy petulant face,
 Guzzling and gulping in the best hotel,
 Reading the Roll of Honor. "Poor young chap,"
 I'd say—"I used to know his father well.
 Yes, we've lost heavily in this last scrap."
 And when the war is done and youth stone dead,
 I'd toddle safely home and die—in bed.

ATTACK

At dawn the ridge emerges massed and dun
 In the wild purple of the glowering sun

Smoldering through spouts of drifting smoke that shroud
 The menacing scarred slope; and, one by one,
 Tanks creep and topple forward to the wire.
 The barrage roars and lifts. Then, clumsily bowed
 With bombs and guns and shovels and battle-gear,
 Men jostle and climb to meet the bristling fire.
 Lines of gray, muttering faces, masked with fear,
 They leave their trenches, going over the top,
 While time ticks blank and busy on their wrists,
 And hope, with furtive eyes and grappling fists,
 Flounders in mud. O Jesu, make it stop!

COUNTER-ATTACK

We'd gained our first objective hours before
 While dawn broke like a face with blinking eyes,
 Pallid, unshaved and thirsty, blind with smoke
 Things seemed all right at first. We held their line,
 With bombers posted, Lewis guns well placed,
 And clink of shovels deepening the shallow trench.
 The place was rotten with dead; green clumsy legs
 High-booted, sprawled and groveled along the saps;
 And trunks, face downward in the sucking mud,
 Wallowed like trodden sand-bags, loosely filled;
 And naked, sodden buttocks, mats of hair,
 Bulged, clotted heads, slept in the plastering slime.
 And then the rain began—the jolly old rain!

A yawning soldier knelt against the bank,
 Staring across the morning blear with fog;
 He wondered when the Allemands would get busy;
 And then, of course, they started with five-nines
 Traversing, sure as fate, and never a dud.
 Mute in the clamor of shells he watched them burst
 Spouting dark earth and wire with gusts from hell,
 While posturing giants dissolved in drifts of smoke.
 He crouched and flinched, dizzy with galloping fear,
 Sick for escape,—loathing the strangled horror
 And butchered, frantic gestures of the dead.

An officer came blundering down the trench:
 "Stand-to and man the fire-step!" On he went. . . .
 Gasping and bawling, "Fire-step . . . counter-attack!"
 Then the haze lifted. Bombing on the right
 Down the old sap: machine guns on the left;
 And stumbling figures looming out in front.
 "O Christ, they're coming at us!" Bullets spat,
 And he remembered his rifle . . . rapid fire . . .
 And started blazing wildly . . . then a bang
 Crumpled and spun him sideways, knocked him out
 To grunt and wriggle: none heeded him; he choked

And fought the flapping veils of smothering gloom,
 Lost in a blurred confusion of yells and groans. . . .
 Down, and down, and down, he sank and drowned,
 Bleeding to death. The counter-attack had failed.

DOES IT MATTER?

Does it matter?—losing your leg? . . .
 For people will always be kind,
 And you need not show that you mind
 When the others come in after hunting
 To gobble their muffins and eggs.

Does it matter?—losing your sight? . . .
 There's such splendid work for the blind;
 And people will always be kind,
 As you sit on the terrace remembering
 And turning your face to the light.

Do they matter?—those dreams from the pit? . . .
 You can drink and forget and be glad,
 And people won't say that you're mad;
 For they'll know that you've fought for your country,
 And no one will worry a bit.

THE DUG-OUT

Why do you lie with your legs ungainly huddled,
 And one arm bent across your sullen, cold,
 Exhausted face? It hurts my heart to watch you,
 Deep-shadowed from the candle's guttering gold;
 And you wonder why I shake you by the shoulder;
 Drowsy, you mumble and sigh and turn your head. . . .
You are too young to fall asleep for ever;
And when you sleep you remind me of the dead.

INVOCATION

Come down from heaven to meet me when my breath
 Chokes, and through drumming shafts of stifling death
 I stumble toward escape, to find the door
 Opening on morn where I may breathe once more Clear cock-crow airs across some valley dim
 With whispering trees. While dawn along the rim
 Of night's horizon flows in lakes of fire,
 Come down from heaven's bright hill, my song's desire.

Belov'd and faithful, teach my soul to wake
 In glades deep-ranked with flowers that gleam and shake

And flock your paths with wonder. In your gaze
 Show me the vanquished vigil of my days.
 Mute in that golden silence hung with green,
 Come down from heaven and bring me in your eyes
 Remembrance of all beauty that has been,
 And stillness from the pools of Paradise.

AFTERMATH

Have you forgotten yet? . . .

For the world's events have rumbled on since those gagged days,
 Like traffic checked a while at the crossing of city ways:
 And the haunted gap in your mind has filled with thoughts that flow
 Like clouds in the lit heavens of life; and you're a man reprimed to go,
 Taking your peaceful share of Time, with joy to spare.
But the past is just the same,—and War's a bloody game. . . .
Have you forgotten yet? . . .
Look down, and swear by the slain of the War that you'll never forget.

Do you remember the dark months you held the sector at Mametz,—
 The nights you watched and wired and dug and piled sand-bags on parapets?
 Do you remember the rats; and the stench
 Of corpses rotting in front of the front-line trench,—
 And dawn coming, dirty-white, and chill with a hopeless rain?
 Do you ever stop and ask, "Is it all going to happen again?"

Do you remember that hour of din before the attack,—
 And the anger, the blind compassion that seized and shook you then
 As you peered at the doomed and haggard faces of your men?
 Do you remember the stretcher-cases lurching back
 With dying eyes and lolling heads, those ashen-gray
 Masks of the lads who once were keen and kind and gay?

Have you forgotten yet? . . .

Look up, and swear by the green of the Spring that you'll never forget!

EVERYONE SANG

Everyone suddenly burst out singing;
 And I was filled with such delight
 As prisoned birds must find in freedom
 Winging wildly across the white
 Orchards and dark green fields; on; on;
 and out of sight.

Everyone's voice was suddenly lifted,
 And beauty came like the setting sun.
 My heart was shaken with tears, and horror
 Drifted away. . . . O, but everyone

Was a bird; and the song was wordless; the singing will never be done.

FALLING ASLEEP

Voices moving about in the quiet house:
Thud of feet and a muffled shutting of doors:
Everyone yawning. Only the clocks are alert.

Out in the night there's autumn-smelling gloom
Crowded with whispering trees; across the park
A hollow cry of hounds like lonely bells.
And I know that the clouds are moving across the moon;
The low, red, rising moon. Now herons call
And wrangle by their pool; and hooting owls
Sail from the wood above pale stooks of oats.

Waiting for sleep, I drift from thoughts like these;
And where today was dream-like, build my dreams.
Music . . . there was a bright white room below,
And someone singing a song about a soldier,
One hour, two hours ago: and soon the song
Will be "last night" but now the beauty swings
Across my brain, ghost of remembered chords
Which still can make such radiance in my dream
That I can watch the marching of my soldiers,
And count their faces; faces; sunlit faces.

Falling asleep . . . the herons, and the hounds. . . .
September in the darkness; and the world
I've known; all fading past me into peace.

THE WISDOM OF THE WORLD

The wisdom of the world is this; to say, "There is No other wisdom but to gulp what time can give" . . .
To guard no inward vision winged with mysteries;
To hear no voices haunt the hurrying hours we live;
To keep no faith with ghostly friends; never to know
Vigils of sorrow crowned when loveless passions fade . . .
From wisdom such as this to find my gloom I go,
Companied by those powers who keep me unafraid.

EVERYMAN

The weariness of life that has no will
To climb the steepening hill:
The sickness of the soul for sleep, and to be still.

And then once more the impassioned pygmy fist
Clenched cloudward and defiant;

The pride that would prevail, the doomed protagonist,
Grappling the ghostly giant.

Victim and venturer, turn by turn; and then
Set free to be again
Companion in repose with those who once were men.

C O N C L U S I O N

An image dance of change
Throngs my dim-sighted flesh,
To music's air-built mesh
Move thoughts forever strange.
I am so woven of sense
And subtlety uncharted
That I must vanish hence
Blind-souled and twilight-hearted.

Soon death the hooded lover
Shall touch my house of clay,
And life-lit eyes discover
That in the warbling gray
I have been early waking,
And while the dawn was breaking

Have stolen afield to find
That secrecy which quivers
Beyond the skies and rivers
And cities of the mind.

Till then my thought shall strive
That living I may not lose
The wonder of being alive,
Nor Time's least gift refuse.
For, though the end be night,
This wonder and this white
Astonishment of sight
Make hours of magic shine;
And heaven's a blaze and bloom
Of transience and divine
Inheritance of doom.

P R E H I S T O R I C B U R I A L S

These barrows of the century-darkened dead,—
Memorials of oblivion, these turfed tombs
Of muttering ancestries whose fires, once red,
Now burn for me beyond mysterious glooms,
I pass them, day by day, while daylight fills
My sense of sight on these time-haunted hills.

Could I but see those burials that began
Whole History,—flint and bronze and iron beginnings,—
When under the wide Wiltshire sky, crude man
Warred with his world and augured our world-winnings!
Could I but enter that unholpen brain,
Cabined and comfortless and insecure,
Ruling some settlement on Salisbury Plain
And offering blood to blind primeval powers,—
Dim Caliban whose doom was to endure
Earth's ignorant nullity made strange with flowers.

L I M I T A T I O N S

If you could crowd them into forty lines!
Yes; you can do it once you get a start:
All that you want is waiting in your head,
For long ago you've learnt it off by heart.

Begin: your mind's the room where you have slept,
 (Don't pause for rhymes), till twilight woke you early.
 The window stands wide-open, as it stood
 When tree-tops loomed enchanted for a child
 Hearing the dawn's first thrushes through the wood
 Warbling (you know the words) serene and wild.

You've said it all before: you dreamed of Death,
 A dim Apollo in the bird-voiced breeze
 That drifts across the morning veiled with showers,
 While golden weather shines among dark trees.

You've got your limitations; let them sing,
 And all your life will waken with a cry:
 Why should you halt when rapture's on the wing
 And you've no limit but the cloud-flocked sky? . . .

But some chap shouts, "Here, stop it; that's been done!"
 As God might holloa to the rising sun,
 And then relent, because the glorying rays
 Remind Him of green-glinting Eden days,
 And Adam's trustful eyes as he looks up
 From carving eagles on his beechwood cup.

Young Adam knew his job; he could condense
 Life to an eagle from the unknown immense. . . .
 Go on, whoever you are, your lines can be
 A whisper in the music from the weirs
 Of song that plunge and tumble toward the sea
 That is the uncharted mercy of our tears.

I told you it was easy! . . . Words are fools
 Who follow blindly, once they get a lead.
 But thoughts are kingfishers that haunt the pools
 Of quiet; seldom-seen: and all you need
 Is just that flash of joy above your dream.
 So, when those forty platitudes are done,
 You'll hear a bird-note calling from the stream
 That wandered through your childhood; and the sun
 Will strike old flaming wonder from the waters. . . .
 And there'll be forty lines not yet begun.

GRANDEUR OF GHOSTS

When I have heard small talk about great men
 I climb to bed; light my two candles; then
 Consider what was said; and put aside
 What Such-a-one remarked and Someone-else replied.

They have spoken lightly of my deathless friends,
 (Lamps for my gloom, hands guiding where I stumble,) Quoting, for shallow conversational ends,
 What Shelley shrilled, what Blake once wildly muttered. . . .

How can they use such names and not be humble?
 I have sat silent; angry at what they uttered.
 The dead bequeathed them life; the dead have said
 What these can only memorize and mumble.

A L O N E

"When I'm alone"—the words tripped off his tongue
 As though to be alone were nothing strange.
"When I was young," he said; "when I was young. . . ."

I thought of age, and loneliness, and change.
 I thought how strange we grow when we're alone,
 And how unlike the selves that meet and talk,
 And blow the candles out, and say good night.
Alone. . . . The word is life endured and known.
 It is the stillness where our spirits walk
 And all but inmost faith is overthrown.

P R E S E N C E S P E R F E C T E D

I looked on that prophetic land
 Where, manifested by their powers,
 Presences perfected stand
 Whom night and day no more command
 With shine and shadow of earthly hours.

I saw them Numberless they stood
 Half-way toward heaven, that men might mark
 The grandeur of their ghostlihood
 Burning divinely on the dark.

Names had they none. Through spirit alone
 They triumphed, the makers of mankind,
 Whose robes like flames were round them blown
 By winds which raved from the unknown
 Erebus of earth's ancestral mind.

E L E C T E D S I L E N C E

Where voices vanish into dream,
 I have discovered, from the pride
 Of temporal trophydoms, this theme,
 That silence is the ultimate guide.

Allow me now much musing-space
 To shape my secracies alone:
 Allow me life apart, whose heart
 Translates instinctive tragi-tone.

How solitude can hear! O see
 How stillness unreluctant stands
 Enharmonized with cloud and tree . . .
 O earth and heaven not made with hands!

Rupert Brooke

POSSIBLY the most famous of the younger Georgians, Rupert Brooke was born at Rugby August 3, 1887, where his father was assistant master at the school. As a youth, Brooke was fastidious, finicky in dress, but keenly interested in athletics; he played cricket, football, and tennis, and swam as well as most professionals. He was six feet tall, his finely molded head topped with a crown of loose hair of lively brown: "a golden young Apollo," said Edward Thomas. Another friend wrote, "To look at, he was part of the youth of the world." His beauty encouraged a naturally romantic disposition; his poems are a blend of delight in the splendor of actuality and disillusion in a loveliness that dies. The shadow of John Donne lies over many of his early and more than a few of his later pages, while the accent of Housman (vide "The Chilterns") prompts the conversational tone which Brooke adopted, extended, and popularized.

At first Brooke affected a tired sophistication not uncommon to the young poet of the times. However, the bored cynicisms, the fashionable ennui were purged, when after several years of travel (he had been to Germany, Italy and Honolulu) the War came, turning Brooke away from "A world grown old and cold and weary . . .

 And half men, and their dirty songs and dreary,
 And all the little emptiness of love."

Brooke enlisted with a relief that was like a rebirth; he sought new energy in the struggle "where the worst friend and enemy is but Death." After seeing service in Belgium, 1914, he spent the following winter in a training-camp in Dorsetshire and sailed with the British Mediterranean Expeditionary Force in February, 1915, to take part in the unfortunate Dardanelles Campaign.

Brooke never reached his destination. He died of blood-poison at Skyros in the Aegean, April 23, 1915. His early death was one of England's great literary losses; Lascelles Abercrombie, W. W. Gibson (with both of whom he had been associated on the quarterly, New Numbers), Walter De la Mare, Winston Spencer Churchill, and a host of others united to pay tribute to the most brilliant and passionate of the younger poets.

Brooke's sonnet-sequence, 1914 (from which "The Soldier" is taken), appeared with prophetic irony, a few weeks before his death. It contains the accents of immortality. "The Old Vicarage, Grantchester," "Heaven" and "Fish" are characteristic of the lighter and more playful side of Brooke's temperament. The metaphysician, not yet free of Donne, speaks in the mingled fancy and philosophy of "Dining-Room Tea," in several of the sonnets, and "Second Best." Both phases are combined in "The Great Lover," of which Abercrombie has written, "It is life he loves, and not in any abstract sense, but all the infinite little familiar details of life, remembered and catalogued with delightful zest."

Brooke published only two volumes during his lifetime. After his death, both volumes, with several posthumous poems, were issued as Collected Poems of Rupert Brooke, with a Memoir, in 1915. With a few exceptions, when Brooke yielded to the merely clever, his poetry is alert with the sparkle of his personality. It is the self-aware, self-examining mind that rules his emotions; his verse is a triumph of the intellectual imagination. "The theme of his poetry," says Walter De la Mare, "is the life of the mind, the senses, the feelings—life here and now. . . . His world stands out sharp and distinct, like the towers and pinnacles of a city under the light of a sunny sky." Brooke's delight was not in the shadows of revery and meditation, but in the swift play of ideas, in energetic action and reaction.

Thus Brooke was as thorough in his inconsistencies as in his sincerities. Impulse was his god—and his goad. He worshiped glamor and turned from it in revulsion, in a kind of sea- and beauty-sickness; he celebrated (in "Dust") the immortality of love and (in "Kindliness" and the sonnet already quoted) ridiculed its empty impermanence; turned from the intellect to sheer imagination—and abandoned fantasy for an ordered philosophy. His later work indicates that Brooke had tired of shifting extremes. It is impossible to predict what integration might have come with maturity. He was dead at twenty-seven.

THE GREAT LOVER

I have been so great a lover: filled my days
 So proudly with the splendor of Love's praise,
 The pain, the calm, and the astonishment,
 Desire illimitable, and still content,
 And all dear names men use, to cheat despair,
 For the perplexed and viewless streams that bear
 Our hearts at random down the dark of life.
 Now, ere the unthinking silence on that strife
 Steals down, I would cheat drowsy Death so far,
 My night shall be remembered for a star
 That outshone all the suns of all men's days.
 Shall I not crown them with immortal praise
 Whom I have loved, who have given me, dared with me
 High secrets, and in darkness knelt to see
 The incenarrable godhead of delight?
 Love is a flame:—we have beaconed the world's night.
 A city:—and we have built it, these and I.
 An emperor:—we have taught the world to die.
 So, for their sakes I loved, ere I go hence,
 And the high cause of Love's magnificence,

And to keep loyalties young, I'll write those names
 Golden for ever, eagles, crying flames,
 And set them as a banner, that men may know,
 To dare the generations, burn, and blow
 Out on the wind of Time, shining and streaming. . . .

These I have loved:

White plates and cups, clean-gleaming,
 Ringed with blue lines; and feathery, faery dust;
 Wet roofs, beneath the lamp-light; the strong crust
 Of friendly bread; and many-tasting food;
 Rainbows; and the blue bitter smoke of wood;
 And radiant raindrops couching in cool flowers;
 And flowers themselves, that sway through sunny hours,
 Dreaming of moths that drink them under the moon;
 Then, the cool kindness of sheets, that soon
 Smooth away trouble; and the rough male kiss
 Of blankets; grainy wood; live hair that is Shining and free; blue-massing clouds; the keen
 Unpassioned beauty of a great machine;
 The benison of hot water; furs to touch;
 The good smell of old clothes; and other such—
 The comfortable smell of friendly fingers,
 Hair's fragrance, and the musty reek that lingers
 About dead leaves and last year's ferns. . . .

Dear names,

And thousand others throng to me! Royal flames;
 Sweet water's dimpling laugh from tap or spring;
 Holes in the ground; and voices that do sing:
 Voices in laughter, too; and body's pain,
 Soon turned to peace; and the deep-panting train;
 Firm sands; the little dulling edge of foam
 That browns and dwindle as the wave goes home;
 And washen stones, gay for an hour; the cold
 Graveness of iron; moist black earthen mold;
 Sleep; and high places; footprints in the dew;
 And oaks; and brown horse-chestnuts, glossy-new;
 And new-peeled sticks; and shining pools on grass;—
 All these have been my loves. And these shall pass,
 Whatever passes not, in the great hour,
 Nor all my passion, all my prayers, have power
 To hold them with me through the gate of Death.
 They'll play deserter, turn with the traitor breath,
 Break the high bond we made, and sell Love's trust
 And sacramental covenant to the dust.
 —Oh, never a doubt but, somewhere, I shall wake,
 And give what's lett of love again, and make
 New friends now strangers. . . .

But the best I've known

Stays here, and changes, breaks, grows old, is blown

About the winds of the world, and fades from brains
Of living men, and dies.

Nothing remains.

O dear my loves, O faithless, once again
This one last gift I give: that after men
Shall know, and later lovers, far-removed Praise you, "All these were lovely"; say, "He loved."

THE CHILTERN S

Your hands, my dear, adorable,
Your lips of tenderness
—Oh, I've loved you faithfully and well,
Three years, or a bit less.
It wasn't a success.

Thank God, that's done! and I'll take the road,
Quit of my youth and you,
The Roman road to Wendover
By Tring and Lilley Hoo,
As a free man may do

For youth goes over, the joys that fly,
The tears that follow fast;
And the dirtiest things we do must lie
Forgotten at the last;
Even love goes past.

What's left behind I shall not find,
The splendor and the pain;
The splash of sun, the shouting wind,
And the brave sting of rain,
I may not meet again.

But the years, that take the best away,
Give something in the end;
And a better friend than love have they,
For none to mar or mend,
That have themselves to friend.

I shall desire and I shall find
The best of my desires;
The autumn road, the mellow wind
That soothes the darkening shires.
And laughter, and inn-fires.

White mist about the black hedgerows,
The slumbering Midland plain,
The silence where the clover grows,
And the dead leaves in the lane,
Certainly, these remain.

And I shall find some girl perhaps,
And a better one than you,
With eyes as wise, but kindlier,
And lips as soft, but true.
And I daresay she will do.

THE HILL

Breathless, we flung us on the windy hill,
Laughed in the sun, and kissed the lovely grass.
You said, "Through glory and ecstasy we pass;
Wind, sun, and earth remain, the birds sing still,
When we are old, are old. . . ." "And when we die
All's over that is ours; and life burns on Through other lovers, other lips," said I,
"Heart of my heart, our heaven is now, is won!"
"We are Earth's best, that learnt her lesson here.
Life is our cry. We have kept the faith!" we said;
"We shall go down with unreluctant tread
Rose-crowned into the darkness! . . ." Proud we were,
And laughed, that had such brave true things to say.
And then you suddenly cried, and turned away.

DUST

When the white flame in us is gone,
 And we that lost the world's delight
 Stiffen in darkness, left alone
 To crumble in our separate night;

When your swift hair is quiet in death,
 And through the lips corruption thrust
 Has stilled the labor of my breath—
 When we are dust, when we are dust!—

Not dead, not undesirous yet,
 Still sentient, still unsatisfied,
 We'll ride the air, and shine and flit,
 Around the places where we died,

And dance as dust before the sun,
 And light of foot, and unconfined,
 Hurry from road to road, and run
 About the errands of the wind.

And every mote, on earth or air,
 Will speed and gleam down later days,
 And like a secret pilgrim fare
 By eager and invisible ways,

Nor ever rest, nor ever lie,
 Till, beyond thinking, out of view,

One mote of all the dust that's I
 Shall meet one atom that was you.

Then in some garden hushed from wind,
 Warm in a sunset's afterglow,
 The lovers in the flowers will find
 A sweet and strange unquiet grow

Upon the peace; and, past desiring,
 So high a beauty in the air,
 And such a light, and such a quiring,
 And such a radiant ecstasy there,

They'll know not if it's fire, or dew,
 Or out of earth, or in the height,
 Singing, or flame, or scent, or hue,
 Or two that pass, in light, to light,

Out of the garden higher, higher . . .
 But in that instant they shall learn
 The shattering fury of our fire,
 And the weak passionless hearts will burn

And faint in that amazing glow,
 Until the darkness close above;
 And they will know—poor fools, they'll know!—
 One moment, what it is to love.

SONNET

Oh! Death will find me, long before I tire
 Of watching you; and swing me suddenly
 Into the shade and loneliness and mire
 Of the last land! There, waiting patiently,

One day, I think, I'll feel a cool wind blowing,
 See a slow light across the Stygian tide,
 And hear the Dead about me stir, unknowing,
 And tremble. And I shall know that you have died,

And watch you, a broad-browed and smiling dream,
 Pass, light as ever, through the lightless host,
 Quietly ponder, start, and sway, and gleam—
 Most individual and bewildering ghost!—

And turn, and toss your brown delightful head
 Amusedly, among the ancient Dead.

THE SOLDIER

If I should die, think only this of me;
 That there's some corner of a foreign field
 That is for ever England. There shall be
 In that rich earth a richer dust concealed;
 A dust whom England bore, shaped, made aware,
 Gave, once, her flowers to love, her ways to roam,
 A body of England's breathing English air,
 Washed by the rivers, blest by suns of home.

And think, this heart, all evil shed away,
 A pulse in the eternal mind, no less
 Gives somewhere back the thoughts by England given;
 Her sights and sounds; dreams happy as her day;
 And laughter, learnt of friends; and gentleness,
 In hearts at peace, under an English heaven.

HEAVEN

Fish (fly-replete, in depth of June
 Dawdling away their wat'ry noon)
 Ponder deep wisdom, dark or clear,
 Each secret fishy hope or fear.
 Fish say, they have their Stream and Pond;
 But is there anything Beyond?
 This life cannot be All, they swear,
 For how unpleasant, if it were!
 One may not doubt that, somehow, good
 Shall come of Water and of Mud,
 And, sure, the reverent eye must see
 A Purpose in Liquidity
 We darkly know, by Faith we cry,
 The future is not Wholly Dry
 Mud unto Mud!—Death eddies near—
 Not here the appointed End, not here!

But somewhere, beyond Space and Time,
 Is wetter water, slimier slime!
 And there (they trust) there swimmeth One
 Who swam ere rivers were begun,
 Immense, of fishy form and mind,
 Squamous, omnipotent and kind;
 And under that Almighty Fin
 The littlest fish may enter in.
 Oh! never fly conceals a hook,
 Fish say, in the Eternal Brook,
 But more than mundane weeds are there,
 And mud, celestially fair;
 Fat caterpillars drift around,
 And Paradisal grubs are found;
 Unfading moths, immortal flies,
 And the worm that never dies.
 And in that Heaven of all their wish,
 There shall be no more land, say fish.

SECOND BEST

Here in the dark, O heart;
 Alone with the enduring Earth, and Night,
 And Silence, and the warm strange smell of clover;
 Clear-visioned, though it break you; far apart
 From the dead best, the dear and old delight;
 Throw down your dreams of immortality,
 O faithful, O foolish lover!
 Here's peace for you, and surely; here the one
 Wisdom—the truth!—“All day the good glad sun
 Showers love and labor on you, wine and song;
 The greenwood laughs, the wind blows, all day long

Till night." And night ends all things.

Then shall be
No lamp relumed in heaven, no voices crying,
Or changing lights, or dreams and forms that hover!
(And, heart, for all your sighing,
That gladness and those tears, are over. . . .)

And has the truth brought no new hope at all,
Heart, that you're weeping yet for Paradise?
Do they still whisper, the old weary cries?

*"Mid youth and song, feasting and carnival,
Through laughter, through the roses, as of old
Comes Death, on shadowy and relentless feet,
Death, unappeasable by prayer or gold,
Death is the end, the end!"*

Proud, then, clear-eyed and laughing, go to greet
Death as a friend!

Exile of immortality, strongly wise,
Strain through the dark with undesirous eyes
To what may lie beyond it. Sets your star,
O heart, for ever! Yet, behind the night,
Waits for the great unborn, somewhere afar,
Some white tremendous daybreak. And the light,
Returning, shall give back the golden hours,
Ocean a windless level, Earth a lawn
Spacious and full of sunlit dancing-places,
And laughter, and music, and among the flowers,
The gay child-hearts of men, and the child-faces,
O heart, in the great dawn!

THE BUSY HEART

Now that we've done our best and worst, and parted,
I would fill my mind with thoughts that will not rend.
(O heart, I do not dare go empty-hearted)
I'll think of Love in books, Love without end;
Women with child, content; and old men sleeping;
And wet strong plowlands, scarred for certain grain;
And babes that weep, and so forget their weeping;
And the young heavens, forgetful after rain;
And evening hush, broken by homing wings;
And Song's nobility, and Wisdom holy,
That live, we dead. I would think of a thousand things,
Lovely and durable, and taste them slowly,
One after one, like tasting a sweet food.
I have need to busy my heart with quietude.

DINING-ROOM TEA

When you were there, and you, and you,
 Happiness crowned the night; I too,
 Laughing and looking, one of all,
 I watched the quivering lamplight fall
 On plate and flowers and pouring tea
 And cup and cloth; and they and we Flung all the dancing moments by
 With jest and glitter. Lip and eye
 Flashed on the glory, shone and cried,
 Improvident, unmemed;

And fitfully, and like a flame
 The light of laughter went and came.
 Proud in their careless transience moved
 The changing faces that I loved.

Till suddenly, and otherwhence,
 I looked upon your innocence.
 For lifted clear and still and strange
 From the dark woven flow of change
 Under a vast and starless sky
 I saw the immortal moment lie.
 One instant I, an instant, knew
 As God knows all. And it and you,
 I, above Time, oh, blind! could see
 In witless immortality.

I saw the marble cup; the tea,
 Hung on the air, an amber stream;
 I saw the fire's unglittering gleam,
 The painted flame, the frozen smoke.
 No more the flooding lamplight broke
 On flying eyes and lips and hair;
 But lay, but slept unbroken there,
 On stiller flesh, and body breathless,
 And lips and laughter stayed and deathless,
 And words on which no silence grew.
 Light was more alive than you.

For suddenly, and otherwhence,
 I looked on your magnificence.
 I saw the stillness and the light,
 And you, august, immortal, white,
 Holy and strange; and every glint
 Posture and jest and thought and tint
 Freed from the mask of transiency,
 Triumphant in eternity,
 Immote, immortal.

Dazed at length

Human eyes grew, mortal strength
 Weared; and Time began to creep.
 Change closed about me like a sleep.
 Light glinted on the eyes I loved.
 The cup was filled. The bodies moved.
 The drifting petal came to ground.
 The laughter chimed its perfect round,
 The broken syllable was ended.
 And I, so certain and so friended,
 How could I cloud, or how distress,
 The heaven of your unconsciousness?
 Or shake at Time's sufficient spell,
 Stammering of lights unutterable?
 The eternal holiness of you,
 The timeless end, you never knew,
 The peace that lay, the light that shone.
 You never knew that I had gone
 A million miles away, and stayed
 A million years. The laughter played
 Unbroken round me; and the jest
 Flashed on. And we that knew the best
 Down wonderful hours grew happier yet.
 I sang at heart, and talkcd, and ate,
 And lived from laugh to laugh, I too,
 When you were there, and you, and you.

THE OLD VICARAGE,
GRANTCHESTER

(Café des Westens, Berlin. May, 1912)

Just now the lilac is in bloom,
 All before my little room;
 And in my flower-beds, I think,
 Smile the carnation and the pink;
 And down the borders, well I know,
 The poppy and the pansy blow . . .
 Oh! there the chestnuts, summer through,
 Beside the river make for you
 A tunnel of green gloom, and sleep
 Deeply above; and green and deep
 The stream mysterious glides beneath,
 Green as a dream and deep as death.
 —Oh, damn! I know it! and I know
 How the May fields all golden show,
 And when the day is young and sweet,
 Glide gloriously the bare feet
 That run to bathe . . .

Du lieber Gott!
 Here am I, sweating, sick, and hot,

And there the shadowed waters fresh
Leap up to embrace the naked flesh.
Temperamentwoll German Jews
Drink beer around;—and there the dews
Are soft beneath a morn of gold.
Here tulips bloom as they are told;
Unkempt about those hedges blows
An English unofficial rose;
And there the unregulated sun
Slopes down to rest when day is done,
And wakes a vague unpunctual star,
A slipp'd Hesper; and there are
Meads towards Haslingfield and Coton
Where das Betreten's not verboten.

εἵδε γένοιμην . . . would I were
In Grantchester, in Grantchester!—
Some, it may be, can get in touch
With Nature there, or Earth, or such.
And clever modern men have seen
A Faun a-peeping through the green,
And felt the Classics were not dead,
To glimpse a Naiad's reedy head,
Or hear the Goat-foot piping low; . . .
But these are things I do not know.
I only know that you may lie
Day long and watch the Cambridge sky,
And, flower-lulled in sleepy grass,
Hear the cool lapse of hours pass,
Until the centuries blend and blur
In Grantchester, in Grantchester. . . .
Still in the dawnlit waters cool
His ghostly Lordship swims his pool,
And tries the strokes, essays the tricks,
Long learnt on Hellespont, or Styx.
Dan Chaucer hears his river still
Chatter beneath a phantom mill.
Tennyson notes, with studious eye,
How Cambridge waters hurry by . . .
And in that garden, black and white,
Creep whispers through the grass all night;
And spectral dance, before the dawn,
A hundred vicars down the lawn;
Curates, long dust, will come and go
On lissom, clerical, printless toe;
And oft between the boughs is seen
The sly shade of a Rural Dean . . .
Till, at a shiver in the skies,
Vanishing with Satanic cries,
The prim ecclesiastical rout
Leaves but a startled sleeper-out,

Gray heavens, the first bird's drowsy calls,
The falling house that never falls.

God! I will pack, and take a train,
And get me to England once again!
For England's the one land, I know,
Where men with Splendid Hearts may go;
And Cambridgeshire, of all England,
The shire for Men who Understand;
And of that district I prefer
The lovely hamlet Grantchester.
For Cambridge people rarely smile,
Being urban, squat, and packed with guile;
And Royston men in the far South
Are black and fierce and strange of mouth;
At Over they fling oaths at one,
And worse than oaths at Trumpington,
And Ditton girls are mean and dirty,
And there's none in Harston under thirty,
And folks in Shelford and those parts
Have twisted lips and twisted hearts,
And Barton men make Cockney rhymes,
And Coton's full of nameless crimes,
And things are done you'd not believe
At Madingley on Christmas Eve.
Strong men have run for miles and miles,
When one from Cherry Hinton smiles,
Strong men have blanched, and shot their wives,
Rather than send them to St. Ives;
Strong men have cried like babes, bydam,
To hear what happened in Babraham.
But Grantchester! ah, Grantchester!
There's peace and holy quiet there,
Great clouds along pacific skies,
And men and women with straight eyes,
Lithe children lovelier than a dream,
A bosky wood, a slumb'rous stream,
And little kindly winds that creep
Round twilight corners, half asleep.
In Grantchester their skins are white;
They bathe by day, they bathe by night;
The women there do all they ought;
The men observe the Rules of Thought;
They love the Good; they worship Truth;
They laugh uproariously in youth;
(And when they get to feeling old,
They up and shoot themselves, I'm told) . . .

Ah God! to see the branches stir
Across the moon at Grantchester!

To smell the thrilling-sweet and rotten
 Unforgettable, unforgotten
 River-smell, and hear the breeze
 Sobbing in the little trees.
 Say, do the elm-clumps greatly stand
 Still guardians of that holy land?
 The chestnuts shade, in reverend dream,
 The yet unacademic stream?
 Is dawn a secret shy and cold
 Anadyomene, silver-gold?
 And sunset still a golden sea
 From Haslingfield to Madingley?

And after, ere the night is born,
 Do hares come out about the corn?
 Oh, is the water sweet and cool,
 Gentle and brown, above the pool?
 And laughs the immortal river still
 Under the mill, under the mill?
 Say, is there Beauty yet to find?
 And Certainty? And Quiet kind?
 Deep meadows yet, for to forget
 The lies, and truths, and pain? . . . oh! yet
 Stands the Church clock at ten to three?
 And is there honey still for tea?

Edith Sitwell

EDITH SITWELL, daughter of Sir George and Lady Ida Sitwell, granddaughter of the Earl of Landesborough, was born at Scarborough, Yorkshire, in 1887. She was educated, as she puts it, "in secrecy" and in 1914 came to London, where she has lived ever since. A portrait of her, painted by Alvaro Guevara, hangs in the Tate Gallery. In her forties she occupied herself with prose, with a life of Pope, a history of Bath, and a critical anthology.

In 1916, she began the editing of Wheels, a determinedly modern anthology which outraged most of the conservative critics. Her own poems provided an even greater series of shocks. After a mild and undistinguished début—The Mother and Other Poems (1915)—Miss Sitwell published, in a succession so speedy as to seem little less than rapid-fire, Clown's Houses (1918), The Wooden Pegasus (1920), Façade (1922), Bucolic Comedies (1923).

In these volumes—particularly in the last two—Miss Sitwell limits her gamut; but, within her range, there is no poet quite like her. Her favorite instrument seems to be the xylophone, and it is amazing what effects she produces from its restricted timbre. Miss Sitwell is a virtuoso in the communication of a half-wooden, half-glassy tone which is seldom without brilliance. It has been objected that Miss Sitwell's poetry is artificial, and this may be true. But the criticism is not as devastating as it seems, for hers is obviously, and purposefully, an artificial world. It is a curious, semi-mechanical heaven and earth over which her keen eye ranges, a landscape in which Miss Sitwell sees, as none before her has seen, skies of paper, seas of wool, the "reynard-colored sun," the world "like a bare egg laid by the feathered air," the "coltish wind nuzzling the hand," trees "hissing like green geese," "barley-sugar children,"—she even hears Silence "like a slow-leaking tap." If Miss Sitwell's is nothing but a clock-work, conjuring-trick sort of poetry—and it is often more than that—there has rarely been so brilliant an exhibition of verbal legerdemain.

But, it must be reiterated, Miss Sitwell is more than an adroit juggler of startling phrases. Purely as a craftsman in nonsense, she has written some of the most delectable nonsense verses of the age; her grotesque nursery rhymes are, in their own genre, as memorable as De la Mare's. The secret of her serious poetry is scarcely more difficult to capture. After one's initial bewilderment (due chiefly to the galloping pace of her verse), the wit of her comments, her strange associations, the novel romanticism of an essentially feminine mind—all these lie ready to disclose themselves beneath the surface glitter.

Beginning with The Sleeping Beauty (1924) Miss Sitwell has essayed to humanize her hard, bright idiom. Here, as in the succeeding Troy Park (1925) and Rustic Elegies (1927), she achieves an intensity which her other work, for all its felicities, never expressed. Her poems approach reality, but this recorder is never content with representation. She delights to juxtapose actualities and impossibilities; assuming, in quick succession, an enigmatic mask, a bizarre clarity, shifting suddenly from patent absurdity to piercing sympathy. No longer reflecting life from the outside, she adds the note of compassion. She moves with care and sensitivity, charting the border between reality and insanity. She is Donne one moment, Lewis Carroll the next. To apply the term "mystic" to her will surprise only those who have never cared to see through the glassy surface of her verse. To such readers, Miss Sitwell will remain the artisan of a papier-mâché universe, a juggler amusing herself in a world where grass is shrill, fire fury, where rains hang like wooden stalactites, where the creaking air, combed seas, and spangled emotions are equally automatic.

In the later volumes her occupation with the human drama is far more apparent. Here man's hunger for beauty is no longer seen as a pitiful joke in a vegetable existence, but as an insatiate passion. The pictures become actually autobiographical; the touching "Colonel Fantock" reveals the poet in her simplest mood, and those who know her brothers Osbert and Sacheverell will have little difficulty identifying "Dagobert" and "Peregrine."

Gold Coast Customs and Other Poems (1930) repeats the pattern which Miss Sitwell's work has formed: a combination of contempt and nostalgia. The scorn is for a fatuous world she refuses to join, and the nostalgia is for the quiet, primitive world left in childhood. Her idiom, more than ever, is a building-up of repetitions and contrasting shocks with a lush music, lingering and illogical. If the luxuriance recalls the modern ballet, it is no accident, since this is the effect that the poet tries to achieve. It is stylized, opulent, and always original in movement.

Collected Poems (1930), more clearly than any single volume, emphasizes Miss Sitwell's alternation of wayward metaphysics and methodical madness. The poet reveals herself as a grown-up child, absurd, wise and determinedly innocent, who insists on translation of all objects in terms of her characters. Thus, in "Aubade," Miss Sitwell pictures the world as seen through the mind of a half-dreaming, half-doltish kitchen maid. Jane's sad bucolic stupidity colors the country morning. Coming down with her "cockscomb ragged hair" to light the fire, she feels each drop of rain hardening into a "dull blunt wooden stalactite"; she faces weeding in "eternities" of kitchen-garden where the flowers "cluck" (since most of them are cockscombs) and mock at her; even the flames remind her of the carrots and turnips which she is continually digging, cleaning, and cooking, and her own spirits hang limp as the "milk's weak mind." Thus Miss Sitwell realizes a character with seeming inconsequence but actually with an odd verbal skill. Here, as in "Interlude" and elsewhere, Miss Sitwell's verse has the charm of an inspired jingle which conceals genuine emotion.

Besides her poetry, Miss Sitwell has written criticism, fiction, history—as depicted in the nostalgic Bath (1932)—and several volumes of biography, the most characteristic of which are Alexander Pope (1930) and The English Eccentrics (1933).

INTERRLUDE

Amid this hot green glowing gloom
A word falls with a raindrop's boom.

Like baskets of ripe fruit in air
The bird-songs seem, suspended where

Those goldfinches—the ripe warm lights
Peck slyly at them—take quick flights.

My feet are feathered like a bird
Among the shadows scarcely heard;

I bring you branches green with dew
And fruits that you may crown anew

Your whirring waspish-gilded hair
Amid this cornucopia—

Until your warm lips bear the stains
And bird-blood leap within your veins.

AUBADE

Jane, Jane,
Tall as a crane,
The morning light creaks down again.

Comb your cockscomb-ragged hair;
Jane, Jane, come down the stair.

Each dull blunt wooden stalactite
Of rain creaks, hardened by the light,

Sounding like an overtone
From some lonely world unknown.

But the creaking empty light
Will never harden into sight,

Will never penetrate your brain
With overtones like the blunt rain.

The light would show (if it could harden)
Eternities of kitchen-garden,

Cockscomb flowers that none will pluck,
And wooden flowers that 'gin to cluck.

In the kitchen you must light
Flames as staring, red and white

As carrots or as turnips, shining
Where the cold dawn light lies whining.

Cockscomb hair on the cold wind
Hangs limp, turns the milk's weak mind. . . .

Jane, Jane,
Tall as a crane,
The morning light creaks down again!

SIR BEELZEBUB

WHEN

Sir

Beelzebub called for his syllabub in the hotel in Hell
Where Proserpine first fell,
Blue as the gendarmerie were the waves of the sea,

(Rocking and shocking the bar-maid.)

Nobody comes to give him his rum but the Rim of the sky hippopotamus-glum
Enhances the chances to bless with a benison
Alfred Lord Tennyson crossing the bar laid
With cold vegetation from pale deputations
Of temperance workers (all signed In Memoriam)
Hoping with glory to trip up the Laureate's feet,

(Moving in classical meters). . . .

Like Balaclava, the lava came down from the Roof, and the sea's blue wooden gendarmerie
Took them in charge while Beelzebub roared for his rum.

. . . None of them come!

THE KING OF CHINA'S DAUGHTER

The King of China's daughter,
She never would love me
Though I hung my cap and bells upon
Her nutmeg tree.

For oranges and lemons,
The stars in bright blue air,
(I stole them long ago, my dear)
Were dangling there.
The Moon did give me silver pence,
The Sun did give me gold,

And both together softly blew
And made my porridge cold;
But the King of China's daughter
Pretended not to see,
When I hung my cap and bells upon
Her nutmeg tree.

SOLO FOR EAR-TRUMPET

The carriage brushes through the bright
Leaves (violent jets from life to light).
Strong polished speed is plunging, heaves
Between the showers of bright hot leaves.
The window-glasses glaze our faces
And jar them to the very basis,—
But they could never put a polish
Upon my manners, or abolish
My most distinct disinclination
For calling on a rich relation!
In her house,—bulwark built between
The life man lives and visions seen,—
The sunlight hiccups white as chalk,
Grown drunk with emptiness of talk,
And silence hisses like a snake,
Invertebrate and rattling ache. . . .

Till suddenly, Eternity
Drowns all the houses like a sea,
And down the street the Trump of Doom
Blares,—barely shakes this drawing-room
Where raw-edged shadows sting forlorn
As dank dark nettles. Down the horn
Of her ear-trumpet I convey
The news that: "It is Judgment Day!"

"Speaker louder; I don't catch, my dear."
I roared: "It is the Trump we hear!"
"The What?" —"The T R U M P l" . . .
"I shall complain—
Those boy-scouts practicing again!"

GARDENER JANUS CATCHES
A NAIAD

Baskets of ripe fruit in air
The bird-songs seem suspended where
Between the hairy leaves trills dew
All tasting of fresh green anew.

Ma'am, I've heard your laughter flare
Through your waspish-gilded hair:

Feathered masks,
Pots of peas,—
Janus asks
Nought of these,
Creaking water
Brightly striped
Now I've caught her—
Shrinking biped.
Flute sounds jump
And turn together,
Changing clumps
Of glassy feather.
In among the
Pots of peas
Naiad changes—
Quick as these.

SPINNING SONG

The miller's daughter
Combs her hair,
Like flocks of dove
As soft as vair. . . .

Oh, how those soft flocks flutter down
Over the empty grassy town.

Like a queen in a crown
Of gold light, she Sits 'neath the shadows'
Flickering tree—

Till the old dame went the way she came,
Playing bobcherry with a candle-flame.

Now Min the cat
 With her white velvet gloves
 Watches where sat
 The mouse with her loves—

(Old and malicious Mrs. Grundy Whose washing day is from Monday to Monday.)

“Not a crumb,” said Min,
 “To a mouse I’ll be giving.
 For a mouse must spin
 To earn her living.”

So poor Mrs. Mouse and her three cross Aunts
 Nibble snow that rustles like gold wheat plants.

And the miller’s daughter
 Combs her locks,
 Like running water
 Those dove-soft flocks;

And her mouth is sweet as a honey flower cold
 But her heart is heavy as bags of gold.

The shadow-mice said
 “We will line with down
 From those doves, our bed
 And our slippers and gown,

For everything comes to the shadows at last
 If the spinning-wheel Time move slow or fast.”

P A N O P E

How lovely are the tombs of the dead nymphs
 On the heroic shore—the glittering plinths
 Of jacinth . . . hyacinthine waves profound
 Sigh of the beauty out of sight and sound

And many a golden foot that pressed the sand—
 Panope walking like the pomp of waves
 With plumaged helmet near the fountain caves
 The panoply of suns on distant strand—

Is only now an arena for the worm,
 Her golden flesh lies in the dust’s frail storm

And beauty water-bright for long is laid
 Deep in the empire of eternal shade—

Only the sighing waves know now the plinth
 Of those deep tombs that were of hyacinth.

But still the echoes of that helmeted bright hair
 Are like the pomp of tropic suns, the blare
 That from the inaccessible horizon runs—
 The eternal music of heroic suns
 When their strong youth comes freshened from deep seas—
 And the first music heard among the trees.

COLONEL FANTOCK

Thus spoke the lady underneath the tree:
 I was a member of a family
 Whose legend was of hunting—(all the rare
 And unattainable brightness of the air)—
 A race whose tabled skill in falconry
 Was used on the small song-birds and a winged
 And blindest Destiny. . . . I think that only
 Winged ones know the highest eyrie is so lonely.

There in a land austere and elegant
 The castle seemed an arabesque in music;
 We moved in an hallucination born
 Of silence, which like music gave us lotus
 To ear, perfuming lips and our long eyelids
 As we trailed over the sad summer grass
 Or sat beneath a smooth and mournful tree.

And Time passed, suavely, imperceptibly.

But Dagobert and Peregrine and I
 Were children then; we walked like shy gazelles
 Among the music of thin flower-bells.
 And life still held some promise,—never ask
 Of what,—but life seemed less a stranger then
 Than ever after in this cold existence.
 I always was a little outside life,—
 And so the things we touch could comfort me,
 I loved the shy dreams we could hear and see—
 For I was like one dead, like a small ghost,
 A little cold air wandering and lost.

All day within the straw-roofed arabesque
 Of the towered castle and the sleepy gardens wandered
 We; those delicate paladins, the waves
 Told us fantastic legends that we pondered.
 And the soft leaves were breasted like a dove,
 Crooning old mournful tales of untrue love.

When night came sounding like the growth of trees,
 My great-grandmother bent to say good night,
 And the enchanted moonlight seemed transformed
 Into the silvery tinkling of an old

And gentle music-box that played a tune
 Of Circean enchantments and far seas.
 Her voice was lulling like the splash of these
 When she had given me her good night kiss
 There, in her lengthened shadow, I saw this Old military ghost with mayfly whiskers,—
 Poor harmless creature, blown by the cold wind,
 Boasting of unseen, unreal victories
 To a harsh unbelieving world unkind,—
 For all the battles that this warrior fought
 Were with cold poverty and helpless age—
 His spoils were shelters from the winter's rage.
 And so forever through his braggart voice,
 Through all that martial trumpet's sound, his soul
 Wept a little sound, so pitiful,
 Knowing that he is outside life for ever
 With no one that will warm or comfort him. . . .
 He is not even dead, but Death's bufsoon
 On a bare stage, a shrunken pantaloon.—
 His military banner never fell,
 Nor his account of victories, the stories
 Of old apocryphal misfortunes, glories
 Which comforted his heart in later life
 When he was the Napoleon of the schoolroom
 And all the victories he gained were over
 Little boys who would not learn to spell.

All day within the sweet and ancient gardens
 He had my childish self for audience—
 Whose body flat and strange, whose pale straight hair
 Made me appear as though I had been drowned—
 (We all have the remote air of a legend)—
 And Dagobert my brother whose large strength,
 Great body and grave beauty still reflect
 The Angevin dead kings from whom we spring;
 And sweet as the young tender winds that stir
 In thickets where the earliest flower-bells sing
 Upon the boughs, was his just character;
 And Peregrine the youngest with a naive
 Shy grace like a faun's, whose slant eyes seemed
 The warm green light beneath eternal boughs.
 His hair was like the fronds of feathers, life
 In him was changing ever, springing fresh
 As the dark songs of birds . . . the furry warmth
 And purring sound of fires was in his voice
 Which never failed to warm and comfort me.

And there were haunted summers in Troy Park
 When all the stillness budded into leaves;
 We listened like Ophelia drowned in blond
 And fluid hair, beneath stag-antlered trees;

Then in the ancient park the country-pleasant
 Shadows fell as brown as any pheasant,
 And Colonel Fantock seemed like one of these.
 Sometimes for comfort in the castle kitchen
 He drowsed, where with a sweet and velvet lip
 The snapdragons within the fire
 Of their red summer never tire.
 And Colonel Fantock liked our company.
 For us he wandered over each old lie,
 Changing the flowering hawthorn full of bees
 Into the silver helm of Hercules,
 For us defended Troy from the top stair
 Outside the nursery, when the calm full moon
 Was like the sound within the growth of trees.
 But then came one cruel day in deepest June
 When pink flowers seemed a sweet Mozartian tune,
 And Colonel Fantock pondered o'er a book.
 A gay voice like a honeysuckle nook,—
 So sweet,—said, “It is Colonel Fantock’s age
 Which makes him babble.” . . . Blown by winter’s rage
 The poor old man then knew his creeping fate,
 The darkening shadow that would take his sight
 And hearing; and he thought of his saved pence
 Which scarce would rent a grave . . . that youthful voice
 Was a dark bell which ever clanged “Too late”—
 A creeping shadow that would steal from him
 Even the little boys who would not spell—
 His only prisoners. . . . On that June day
 Cold Death had taken his first citadel.

Arthur Waley

ARTHUR WALEY was born in 1889 and was educated at Rugby School and King’s College, Cambridge. He entered the employ of the British Museum in 1913 and began the study of Chinese and Japanese. Five years later he was known as a leading English authority on Chinese and Japanese literatures.

His first publication, A Hundred and Seventy Chinese Poems (1918, revised edition 1927), has taken its place as a standard work. More Translations (1919) and The Temple (1923) affirm his admirers’ contention that Waley is no mere competent adapter, but a poet in his own right. Whatever the Chinese original may be, the re-creation is a separate work in which the craftsman reveals himself. In his balanced imagery, his enameled phrases, his use but not abuse of color, Waley’s own poetic personality is imposed on the originals as certainly as Khayyám’s Rubáiyát was suffused with Fitzgerald. As Humbert Wolfe wrote in his foreword to the pamphlet Poems from the Chinese published in The Augustan Books of English Poetry in 1928, “We must address ourselves to these poems as though they had been written by an Englishman of the twentieth century, and judge them on that basis. It is a severe test to apply to translations, but Mr. Waley emerges from it serenely victorious. Indeed, serenity is the keynote of all this work—the serenity of assured mastery in a difficult medium, but still more of outlook. The beauty with which these poems are inlaid is fundamentally a wise beauty, and the wisdom is as much in the shape of Mr. Waley's mind as in that of China."

Waley has also translated a quantity of Oriental prose, notably The Tale of Genji.

FROM THE "BOOK OF ODES"

Anon. (c. 1000 B.C.)

There grows an elm-tree on the hill,
And by the mere an alder-tree—
You have a coat, but do not wear it,
You have a gown, but do not trail it,
You have a horse, but do not ride it,
A coach, but do not drive it,
And so it will be when you are dead
And others can enjoy them!
There grows a gum-tree on the hill,
And by the mere a chestnut tree.
You have wine and food, why do you forget
Sometimes to play your lute,
Sometimes to laugh and sing,
Sometimes to steal new playtime from the
night?
Shall it be so when you are dead
And others have your house?

HOT CAKE

Shu Hsi (c. A.D. 281)

Winter has come; fierce is the cold;
In the sharp morning air new-risen we meet
Rheum freezes in the nose;
Frost hangs about the chin.
For hollow bellies, for chattering teeth and shivering knees
What better than hot cake?
Soft as the down of spring,
Whiter than autumn wool!
Dense and swift the steam
Rises, swells and spreads.
Fragrance flies through the air,
Is scattered far and wide,
Steals down along the wind and wets
The covetous mouth of the passer-by.
Servants and grooms
Throw sidelong glances, munch the empty air.
They lick their lips who serve;
While lines of envious lackeys by the wall
Stand dryly swallowing.

THE CRANES

Po Chu-i (A.D. 830)

The western wind has blown but a few days;
Yet the first leaf already flies from the bough.
On the drying paths I walk in my thin shoes;
In the first cold I have donned my quilted coat.
Through shallow ditches the floods are clearing away;
Through sparse bamboos trickles a slanting light.
In the early dusk, down an alley of green moss,
The garden-boy is leading the cranes home.

W. J. Turner

WALTER JAMES (REDFERN) TURNER was born in Melbourne, Australia, in 1889. He was educated at Scotch College, Melbourne, and, at seventeen, made the long journey to Europe. He studied in Germany and, shortly afterward, came to England, where, except for short intervals of travel, he has lived ever since.

His activities have been numerous. He was literary editor of The Daily Herald, dramatic critic of The London Mercury, and musical critic for three English weeklies. In the last rôle, his essays have been collected in three volumes, the first being Music and Life (1921). Later Turner made a reputation as an incisive dramatist with the imaginative The Man Who Ate the Popomack (1922) and the satiric Smaragda's Lover (1924).

But it is as a poet that Turner first attracted and still challenges attention. The Hunter and other Poems (1916) contains other matter besides the whimsical "Romance," which has been much quoted. The Dark Fire (1918) suggests if it does not sound depths; repressed passion adds a somber note to the fancies. Turner's subsequent volumes, Paris and Helen (1921), In Time Like Glass (1921) and Landscape of Cytherea (1923), suffer from an overproductive and uncritical ease, but many of the individual poems are on a level with the author's successful work. A dramatic poem, The Seven Days of the Sun (1925), was followed by the simpler, more persuasive New Poems (1928). A critical study of Beethoven was published in 1927.

Pursuit of Psyche (1931) and Jack and Jill (1934) came as a surprise to all except Turner's insistent admirers. Jack and Jill has a freshness of idea and a technical proficiency which command instant attention. Pursuit of Psyche, Turner's most ambitious project, concerns (as the title suggests) the search for the spirit through the varying forms of human desire. The ten cantos suffer from the lack of a fiery imagination which should unify the whole—the poem has organization without integration—but its parts are admirable. There are reminders of Abercrombie's Emblems of Love not only in the philosophy but in the phrasing. Beauty fills

This common function of all living things
 With a pure value, vivid as the pact
 The rosebush makes with summer, or the wings
 The dove makes with the wind, or water when ice is still.

But Turner is, at the same time, more abstract and more lyrical than Abercrombie. The shorter poems are particularly convincing, and such pieces as "Talking with Soldiers," "The Music of a Tree," and "The Lion" pronounce an imagination altogether his own, an imagination which has not been sufficiently praised.

Blow for Balloons (1935), Turner's first novel, is a mixture of naïve egotism, penetration, poetry, and general literary sans-culottisme—a headlong fantasy, the best part of which is the author's account of his boyhood in Australia. Turner's music criticism, acute and authoritative, is at its best in Berlioz (1934) and Mozart (1938).

ROMANCE

When I was but thirteen or so
 I went into a golden land,
 Chimborazo, Cotopaxi
 Took me by the hand.

My father died, my brother too,
 They passed like fleeting dreams,
 I stood where Popocatapetl
 In the sunlight gleams.

I dimly heard the master's voice
 And boys far-off at play,—
 Chimborazo, Cotopaxi
 Had stolen me away.

I walked in a great golden dream
 To and fro from school—
 Shining Popocatapetl
 The dusty streets did rule.

I walked home with a gold dark boy
 And never a word I'd say,
 Chimborazo, Cotopaxi
 Had taken my speech away.

I gazed entranced upon his face
 Fairer than any flower—
 O shining Popocatapetl,
 It was thy magic hour:

The houses, people, traffic seemed
 Thin fading dreams by day;
 Chimborazo, Cotopaxi,
 They had stolen my soul away!

SONG

Lovely hill-torrents are
 At cold winterfall;

TALKING WITH SOLDIERS

The mind of the people is like mud,
 From which arise strange and beautiful things,
 But mud is none the less mud,
 Though it bear orchids and prophesying Kings,
 Dreams, trees, and water's bright babblings.

It has found form and color and light,
 The cold glimmer of the ice-wrapped Poles;

Among the earth's silence, they Stonily call.

Gone Autumn's pageantry;
 Through woods all bare
 With strange, locked voices
 Shining they stare!

THE ROBBER

The Trees were taller than the night,
 And through my window square,
 Earth-stupefied, great oranges
 Drowsed in the leaf-carved air.

Into that tree-top crowded dream
 A white arm stretched, and soon
 Those green-gold oranges were plucked,
 Were sucked pale by the Moon.

And white and still that robber lay
 On the frail boughs asleep,
 Eating the solid substance through
 In silence clear and deep.

Suddenly he went, and then
 The wood was dark as death:
 Come back, O robber; robber, come;
 These gray trees are but breath:

These gray trees are but breath, the Night
 Is a wind-walled, dream-filled Hall!
 But on the mirror of the air
 The wood wreathed dark and tall.

No movement and no sound there was Within that silent House.
 Behind a cloud, the Robber laughed
 In a mad white carouse.

It has called a far-off glow: Arcturus,
And some pale weeds: lilies of the valley.

It has imagined Virgil, Helen and Cassandra,
The sack of Troy, and the weeping for Hector—
Rearing stark up 'mid all this beauty
In the thick, dull neck of Ajax.

There is a dark Pine in Lapland,
And the great, figured Horn of the Reindeer
Moving soundlessly across the snow,
Is its twin brother, double-dreamed,
In the mind of a far-off people.

It is strange that a little mud
Should echo with sounds, syllables, and letters,
Should rise up and call a mountain Popocatapetl,
And a green-leaved wood Oleander.

These are the ghosts of invisible things;
There is no Lapland, no Helen and no Hector,
And the Reindeer is a darkening of the brain,
And Oleander is but oleander.

Mary Magdalena and the vine Lachryma Christi
Were like ghosts up the ghost of Vesuvius,
As I sat and drank wine with the soldiers,
As I sat in the Inn on the mountain,
Watching the shadows in my mind.

The mind of the people is like mud:
Where are the imperishable things,
The ghosts that flicker in the brain—
Silent women, orchids, and prophesying Kings,
Dreams, trees, and water's bright babblings!

THE LION

Strange spirit with inky hair,
Tail tufted stiff in rage,
I saw with sudden stare
Leap on the printed page.

The stillness of its roar
From midnight deserts torn
Clove silence to the core
Like the blare of a great horn.

I saw the sudden sky;
Cities in crumbling sand;
The stars fall wheeling by;
The lion roaring stand:

The stars fall wheeling by,
 Their silent, silver stain
 Cold on his glittering eye,
 Cold on his carven mane.

The full-orbed Moon shone down,
 The silence was so loud,
 From jaws wide-open thrown
 His voice hung like a cloud.

Earth shrank to blackest air;
 That spirit stiff in rage
 Into some midnight lair
 Leapt from the printed page.

THE MUSIC OF A TREE

Once, walking home, I passed beneath a Tree,
 It filled the dark like stone statuary,
 It was so quiet and still,
 Its thick green leaves a hill
 Of strange and faint earth-branching melody:

Over a wall it hung its leaf-starred wood,
 And as I lonely there beneath it stood,
 In that sky-hollow street
 Where rang no human feet,
 Sweet music flowed and filled me with its flood;

And all my weariness then fell away,
 The houses were more lovely than by day;
 The Moon and that old Tree
 Sang there, and secretly,
 With throbbing heart, tip-toe I stole away.

IN TIME LIKE GLASS

In Time like glass the stars are set,
 And seeming-fluttering butterflies
 Are fixed fast in Time's glass net
 With mountains and with maids' bright eyes.

Above the cold Cordilleras hung
 The winged eagle and the Moon:
 The gold, snow-throated orchid sprung
 From gloom where peers the dark baboon:

The Himalayas' white, rapt brows;
 The jewel-eyed bear that threads their caves;
 The lush plains' lowing herds of cows;
 That Shadow entering human graves:

All these like stars in Time are set,
 They vanish but can never pass;
 The Sun that with them fades is yet
 Fast-fixed as they in Time like glass.

INDIA

They hunt, the velvet tigers in the jungle,
 The spotted jungle full of shapeless patches—
 Sometimes they're leaves, sometimes they're hanging flowers,
 Sometimes they're hot gold patches of the sun:
 They hunt, the velvet tigers in the jungle!

What do they hunt by glimmering pools of water,
 By the round silver Moon, the Pool of Heaven?—
 In the striped grass, amid the barkless trees—
 The stars scattered like eyes of beasts above them!

What do they hunt, their hot breath scorching insects?
 Insects that blunder blindly in the way,
 Vividly fluttering—they also are hunting,
 Are glittering with a tiny ecstasy!

The grass is flaming and the trees are growing,
 The very mud is gurgling in the pools,
 Green toads are watching, crimson parrots flying,
 Two pairs of eyes meet one another glowing—
 They hunt, the velvet tigers in the jungle.

SILENCE

It was a bright day and all the trees were still
 In the deep valley, and the dim Sun glowed;
 The clay in hard-baked fire along the hill
 Leapt through dark trunks to apples green and gold,
 Smooth, hard and cold, they shone like lamps of stone.

They were bright bubbles bursting from the trees,
 Swollen and still among the dark green boughs;
 On their bright skins the shadows of the leaves
 Seemed the faint ghosts of summers long since gone,
 Faint ghosts of ghosts, the dreams of ghostly eyes.

There was no sound between those breathless hills.
 Only the dim Sun hung there, nothing moved;
 The thronged, massed, crowded multitude of leaves
 Hung like dumb tongues that loll and gasp for air:
 The grass was thick and still between the trees.

There were big apples lying on the ground,
 Shining, quite still, as though they had been stunned
 By some great violent spirit stalking through,

Leaving a deep and supernatural calm
Round a dead beetle upturned in a furrow.

A valley filled with dark, quiet, leaf-thick trees,
Loaded with green, cold, faintly shining suns;
And in the sky a great dim burning disc!—
Madness it is to watch these twisted trunks
And to see nothing move and hear no sound.

Let's make a noise, Hey! . . . Hey! . . . Hullo!
Hullo!

THE SUN

The sun has come, I know,
For yesterday I stood
Beside it in the wood—
But O how pale, how softly did it glow.
I stooped to warm my hands
Before its rain-washed gold;
But it was pebble-cold,
Startled to find itself in these dark lands.

Theodore Maynard

THEODORE MAYNARD was born November 3, 1890, at Madras, India, where his parents were missionaries. His early education was in England, but he took his degree at Fordham University while teaching at its Graduate School. He came to America for the first time in 1909, intending to study for the Congregational ministry, but while "supplying" at a country church in Vermont preached a sermon which led to a call for his resignation. It was a sermon on fools, and the rustic congregation, suspecting personal implications, regarded it as heretical. Fortunately rebuffed in his ambition, Maynard returned to England in 1911, working his passage on a cattle-boat, and not long afterwards (having become a Catholic), tested unsuccessfully his vocation to the Dominican order. Seven months later he returned to the world, married, and took up journalism, writing for The New Witness under the editorship of the Chestertons and for other London periodicals. He came to the United States for the second time in 1920 to lecture, but remained to teach in California. In 1925 he moved to New York, and three years later was appointed head of the English Department at Georgetown University.

Maynard's first book, Laughs and Whiffs of Song (1915), was incorporated with two other small volumes and published in America as Poems in 1919. This collection, like The Last Knight (1920), was immature and imitative. Maynard, it is evident, had absorbed his influences, but had not gestated them. Exile (1928) is far better. The influence of Chesterton and other Catholic poets is not so apparent; Maynard's stanzas proceed from concepts and convictions which are his own.

EXILE

Here where the season swiftly turns
Its great wheel forward while there burns

Red in the redwood trees:
And while the eucalyptus climbs
Above the palm trees and the limes
By Californian seas,

I think of England—and there wakes
Pain like wild roses in her brakes,
A pain as dear as they,
That digs its roots in English earth,
And brings an English flower to birth
Six thousand miles away.

The Downs are standing hugely drawn
Magnificent against the dawn,
Deep black against the sky.
The first cock crows; the light leaps higher;
The Channel is a flood of fire
And crimson suddenly.

And London, moving in her bed,
Hears on the eaves above her head
The earlier sparrows stir.
A thin mist rises and the dew
Is thick on Hampstead and at Kew—
The dawn has greeted her.

I ache in memory, yet I know
That if I ever homeward go
I shall not ever find
In England's gentle tenderness
The rest I seek for which can bless
My tired, unquiet mind.

For though I wander through all lands,
Seeking a house not built with hands
For my eternal home,
No city in this world of men
Can claim me as a citizen
From Babylon to Rome.

Not even London, where I burned
With bliss because in her I learned
My faith, my love, my art;
Not even London, where I trod
Through crowded streets alone with God,
And anguish in my heart;

Not even London, though she stands
To me with priestly praying hands
In every dome and spire,

Can be the city of my quest,
Of infinite and final rest,
The end of all desire.

But London, London has become
A heavenly symbol and the sum
Of all the world can give.
And English air that was my breath
Remains my mortal life, till death
Shall set me free to live.

The apple tree's an apple still
Here or upon an English hill;
The moon among the boughs
Is the same moon, although it went
O'er ghostly orchards far in Kent
When noon shone on my house.

But ah! some change had come to it
Beyond my exegetic wit:
I know not what it was;
Not as the sailor on the spars
Among the Australasian stars
Beholds the Southern Cross—

This map of heaven I know by rote.
But something struggles at my throat:
And stirs my secret blood,
While a vague light, unearthly, strange
Glowes through the lineaments of change
On field and hill and wood.

The Roman poplars in their lines
Like Roman soldiers, Roman vines—
These I had known of old.
And here in evidence the plain
And iron intellect of Spain,
Her fury hot and cold.

But these are exiles, too, whose need
Has clung and stiffened round the Creed
Which made them clear and strong.
Though far from Europe, here they keep
Her name remembered in their sleep,
And in their classic song.

The apple tree remembers how
The blossoms burgeoned on her bough
By little English streams;
And how the cider-drinking men
Were mighty with the sword and pen,
And mightiest in their dreams.

The poplar and the olive know
How like an arrow from a bow
The Roman road was shot;
How Roman law and Roman Pope
Brought order and outrageous hope
To men who had them not.

The giant masonry shall pass,
The palaces be mounds of grass—
And yet not all in vain
That energy of brain and bone,
Though no stone on another stone
Shall ever stand again.

I well may join the cry with them,
"If I forget Jerusalem . . ."
I who shall not forget
My holy city, made more fair
By distance and the alien air
Wherein my life is set.

If London come to empty loss,
And jackals wail at Charing Cross;
And if at Westminster
The lizards crawl about each niche,
And she be poor who once was rich—
I shall remember her.

For now I know with what in mind
The Abbey windows were designed,
Her pavements were laid down;
And how her streets were meant to go
Beyond the steeple bells of Bow
To the celestial Town.

And so beside the Golden Gate
A gate of purer gold I wait,
A more resplendent wall

Than London's—daring now to lift
My voice to praise God's bitter gift,
Exile, the best of all.

THE WORLD'S MISER

I

A miser with an eager face
Sees that each roseleaf is in place.

He keeps beneath strong bolts and bars
The piercing beauty of the stars.

The colors of the dying day
He hoards as treasure—well He may!—

And saves with care (lest they be lost)
The dainty diagrams of frost.

He counts the hairs of every head,
And grieves to see a sparrow dead.

II

Among the yellow primroses
He holds His summer palaces,

And sets the grass about them all
To guard them as His spearmen small.

He fixes on each wayside stone
A mark to show it as His Own,

And knows when raindrops fall through air
Whether each single one be there,

That gathered into ponds and brooks
They may become His picture-books,

To shew in every spot and place
The living glory of His face.

Isaac Rosenberg

ISAAC ROSENBERG was born at Bristol on November 25, 1890. At the age of seven his parents brought him to London; at fourteen he was compelled to leave school and work for his living. Later some friends interested themselves in the boy who had begun to show great talent as a writer and draftsman, and made it possible for the young Jew from the East End to attend the Slade School. After three years of art schooling, during which Rosenberg won prizes, ill health forced him to leave

England. In 1914, he went to South Africa, to a married sister in Capetown. It was there that he definitely decided to become a poet. He attempted to support himself by writing and lecturing, but his efforts were without success and, in less than a year, he was back in London. War had broken out. Sick and unhappy, Rosenberg enlisted in 1915. Early in 1916, he was sent to France, totally unfitted for military life. Nevertheless, his endurance was amazing; he hated war with all the force of his keen mind and disabled body, but he never whined. He was killed in action on April 1, 1918.

As a poet, Rosenberg is greater in promise than achievement. Most of the privately printed Night and Day (1912), although published at the age of twenty-two, was written in his 'teens. Even the succeeding Youth (1915) suffers from verbal awkwardness; a fear of falling into weak writing led him to complicate his images until they are, for the most part, turgid and overburdened. But in Moses (1916), and in the posthumous war-poems, the passionate young poet speaks in his own half-savage voice. Here and there a passage suggests Abercrombie, whom Rosenberg admired greatly; but the images are so fiercely fresh, the accent so personal, that there is no mistaking the strength and originality of Rosenberg's gift.

Rosenberg's three small books, as well as a quantity of uncollected verse including an unfinished play, were published in one volume, Poems, in 1922, edited by Gordon Bottomley and introduced by Laurence Binyon. An enlarged Collected Works of Isaac Rosenberg (1937) includes his prose, letters, some drawings, and many poems never before published. In the foreword Siegfried Sassoon recognized in Rosenberg a fusion of English and Hebrew culture. "Behind all his poetry there is a racial quality—biblical and prophetic. His experiments were a strenuous effort for impassioned expression; his imagination had a sinewy and muscular aliveness. Often he saw things in terms of sculpture, but he did not carve or chisel; he modelled words with fierce energy and aspiration, finding ecstasy in form, dreaming in grandeurs of superb light and deep shadow. . . . Watching him working with words, I find him a poet of movement. Words which express movement are often used by him and are essential to his natural utterance."

The Collected Works reveal Rosenberg's influences and his achievements; it grows from immaturity to independence. The early poems show traces of Rossetti, and there are lines of such Oriental luxuriance that Rosenberg seems to be a Jewish Francis Thompson; but his intensity creates a harsher idiom and a more vigorous word-color. As Edwin Muir wrote, "He gives above all a feeling of power which is not yet certain of itself, which is sometimes tripped up by its own force." Yet if Rosenberg did not always accomplish a fully realized poetry, he achieved a rich originality which has not received the recognition it merits.

EXPRESSION

Call—call—and bruise the air:
Shatter dumb space!
Yea! We will fling this passion
everywhere;
Leaving no place

For the superb and grave
Magnificent throng,
The pregnant queens of quietness that brave
And edge our song

Of wonder at the light
 (Our life-leased home),
 Of greeting to our housemates.
 And in might
 Our song shall roam

Life's heart, a blossoming fire
 Blown bright by thought,
 While gleams and fades the infinite
 desire,
 Phantasmed naught.

Can this be caught and caged?
 Wings can be clipt
 Of eagles, the sun's gaudy measure gauged,
 But no sense dipt

In the mystery of sense.
 The troubled throng
 Of words break out like smothered fire through dense
 And smouldering wrong.

CHAGRIN

Caught still as Absalom,
 Surely the air hangs

From the swayless cloud-boughs,
 Like hair of Absalom
 Caught and hanging still.

From the imagined weight
 Of spaces in a sky
 Of mute chagrin, my thoughts
 Hang like branch-clung hair
 To trunks of silence swung,
 With the choked soul weighing down
 Into thick emptiness.
 Christ! end this hanging death,
 For endlessness hangs therefrom.

Invisibly—branches break
 From invisible trees—
 The cloud-woods where we rush,
 Our eyes holding so much,
 Which we must ride dim ages round
 Ere the hands (we dream) can touch,
 We ride, we ride, before the morning
 The secret roots of the sun to tread,
 And suddenly
 We are lifted of all we know
 And hang from implacable boughs.

BREAK OF DAY IN THE TRENCHES

The darkness crumbles away—
 It is the same old druid Time as ever.
 Only a live thing leaps my hand—
 A queer sardonic rat—
 As I pull the parapet's poppy
 To stick behind my ear.
 Droll rat, they would shoot you if they knew
 Your cosmopolitan sympathies.
 Now you have touched this English hand
 You will do the same to a German—
 Soon, no doubt, if it be your pleasure
 To cross the sleeping green between.
 It seems you inwardly grin as you pass
 Strong eyes, fine limbs, haughty athletes
 Less chanced than you for life,
 Bonds to the whims of murder,
 Sprawled in the bowels of the earth,
 The torn fields of France.
 What do you see in our eyes
 At the shrieking iron and flame

Hurled through still heavens?
 What quaver—what heart aghast?
 Poppies whose roots are in man's veins
 Drop, and are ever dropping;
 But mine in my ear is safe,
 Just a little white with the dust.

ON RECEIVING NEWS
OF THE WAR

Snow is a strange white word.
 No ice or frost
 Has asked of bud or bird
 For Winter's cost.

Yet ice and frost and snow
 From earth to sky
 This Summer land doth know.
 No man knows why.

In all men's hearts it is.
 Some spirit old
 Hath turned with malign kiss
 Our lives to mould.

Red fangs have torn His face.
 God's blood is shed.
 He mourns from His lone place
 His children dead.

O! ancient crimson curse!
 Corrode, consume.
 Give back this universe
 Its pristine bloom.

I AM THE BLOOD

I am the blood
 Streaming the veins of sweetness; sharp and sweet,
 Beauty has pricked the live veins of my soul
 And sucked all being in.

I am the air
 Prowling the room of beauty, climbing her soft
 Walls of surmise, her ceilings that close in.
 She breathes me as her breath.

I am the death
 Whose monument is beauty, and forever,

Although I lie unshrouded
 in life's tomb,
 She is my cenotaph.

THE ONE LOST

I mingle with your bones;
 You steal in subtle noose
 This lighted dust Jehovah loans
 And now I lose.

What will the Lender say
 When I shall not be found,
 Safe-sheltered at the Judgment Day,
 Being in you bound?

He'll hunt through wards of Heaven,
 Call to uncoffined earth,
 "Where is this soul, unjudged, not given Dole for good's dearth?"

And I, lying so safe
 Within you, hearing all,
 To have cheated God shall laugh,
 Freed by your thrall.

THE JEW

Moses, from whose loins I sprung,
 Lit by a lamp in his blood
 Ten immutable rules, a moon
 For mutable lampless men.

The blond, the bronze, the ruddy,
 With the same heaving blood,
 Keep tide to the moon of Moses.
 Then why do they sneer at me?

THE DEAD HEROES

Flame out, you glorious skies,
 Welcome our brave;
 Kiss their exultant eyes;
 Give what they gave.

Flash, mailed seraphim,
Your burning spears;
New days to outflame their dim
Heroic years.

Thrills their baptismal tread
The bright proud air;
The embattled plumes outspread
Burn upwards there.

Flame out, flame out, O Song!
Star, ring to star!

Strong as our hurt is strong,
Our children are.

Their blood is England's heart;
By their dead hands,
It is their noble part
That England stands.

England—Time gave them thee;
They gave back this
To win Eternity
And claim God's kiss.

Viola Meynell

VIOLA MEYNELL, daughter of Alice Meynell (see page 67), is the sister of Francis Meynell. Her prose is less metaphysical than her poetry, but the short stories in Young Mrs. Cruse as well as her novels are enriched with the same subtlety that informs her verse.

Verses (1919) contained only fifteen poems, a book so slight that it almost escaped notice. These earlier poems were republished, with the addition of several new ones, in The Frozen Ocean (1931), a book which was applauded by the poets and neglected by the public. The reason for this is not far to seek. Miss Meynell's mood is contemplative; her emotions are reserved; she is clairvoyant, but her communication is so quiet that the common reader, missing the common rhetoric, is reluctant to listen. It is as if she did not expect her poems to be heard, but overheard. The tone is restrained, the transpositions are gradual and sensitive. "She has inherited her mother's lucid mysticism," wrote Louise Bogan, "but escapes the faintly dry touch of literary air which Alice Meynell absorbed from the late nineteenth century. The form is frugal, undisturbed, candid as thoughtful speech. This candor reveals emotion brightly alive and clearly felt, emotion that is itself form: the kernel which builds outward from inner intensity every lyric capable of touching the heart and mind."

Such a poem as "Jonah and the Whale" seems a seventeenth century creation, a definite visualization and a daring conceit. "The Maid in the Rice-fields" and "A Girl" sound the note of romantic fervor. The first is particularly eloquent with its mounting invocation and terror of young love, a strain which the poet has amplified and stressed in her novels.

In addition to Viola Meynell's fictional prose—nine novels were published before 1930—her memoir of her mother, Alice Meynell (1929), is a beautiful piece of writing as well as an authoritative biography.

THE BLIND MAN'S MORNING

Sleeping, he is not blind
More than another,

But dawn's faint wind,
Blowing rosy light,
Whispers: Rise, brother,
To thy night.

DUSTING

The dust comes secretly day after day,
Lies on my ledge and dulls my shining things.
But O this dust that I shall drive away
Is flowers and kings,
Is Solomon's temple, poets, Nineveh.

JONAH AND THE WHALE

He sported round the watery world.
His rich oil was a gloomy waveless lake
Within the waves. Affrighted seamen hurled
Their weapons in his foaming wake.

One old corroding iron he bore
Which journeyed through his flesh but yet had not Found out his life. Another lance he wore
Outside him pricking in a tender spot.

So distant were his parts that they
Sent but a dull faint message to his brain.
He knew not his own flesh, as great kings may
Not know the farther places where they reign.

His play made storm in a calm sea;
His very kindness slew what he might touch;
And wrecks lay scattered on his anger's lee.
The Moon rocked to and fro his watery couch.

His hunger cleared the sea. And where
He passed, the ocean's edge lifted its brim.
He skimmed the dim sea-floor to find if there
Some garden had its harvest ripe for him.

But in his sluggish brain no thought
Ever arose. His law was instinct blind.
No thought or gleam or vision ever brought
Light to the dark of his old dreamless mind.

Until one day sudden and strange
Half-hunts of knowledge burst upon his sight.
Glimpses he had of Time, and Space, and Change,
And something greater than his might;

And terror's leap to imagine sin;
 And blinding Truth half-bare unto his seeing.
 It was the living man who had come in . . .
 Jonah's thoughts flying through his being.

THE MAID IN THE RICE-FIELDS

Until the day when thou and I are wed
 How shall my life be fed!
 But first this rice that's newly sown
 Must rise and multiply and be
 A full crop in the granary
 Before thou art my own.

Last night I dreamt that I walked out at dusk
 And heard the first dry husk
 Fall rustling from the ripened ear.
 But now today I wake and weep
 To see the fields no man may reap
 In the cold early year.

O passing clouds, have pity on my need,
 Water the thirsting seed;
 O mighty sun, find out this plain,
 Call up the stalk, hasten the leaf;
 O bare fields, harken to my grief,
 Foster the holy grain.

Weeping, I stand above the seed and say
 Why do you hide away?
 Do you fear the storm if you leave your rest?
 I have taken the storm into my breast.
 Why do you still delay?
 O if the cloud you wait to rain forbears,
 Here are a maiden's tears.
 And if the sun you seek denies his dart,
 Behold my burning heart.

A GIRL

Wherever she may turn her ravished eyes
 Something so precious to her bosom lies,
 She spends her fervent passion more and more,
 Thinking such beauty has not been before.
 The common virtue in things, to her excess,
 Seems like some new undreamt-of loveliness.
 Whatever allurement may her senses move
 Her fair false judgment hurries to approve.
 She clasps to her fond heart what's poor and mean,
 For joy of some beguilement she has seen.
 But all her sins of word and look and touch
 God may forgive because she hath loved much.

Francis Meynell

FRANCIS MEYNELL, son of Alice and Wilfred Meynell, was born in 1891. He was, he says, "tattered up to be a poet, but early decided better to print other people's good poems well than to have his own bad poems printed at all." After working as printer, journalist and politician, he founded The Nonesuch Press in 1923. Since that time the Press under his direction has brought out more than a hundred and fifty books of literary value, flawless in all details—typography, editing, choice of paper, binding and general composition.

Although he is better known as a master-printer, he has, Meynell himself to the contrary, published several excellent verses. His literary talents also found expression in the editing of George Herbert's The Temple (1927) and Thomas Beecham's Select Poems (1928), as well as in the authorship of The Typography of Newspaper Advertisements (1929).

MAN AND BEAST

I am less patient than this horse
And it is fleeter far than I.
Its hair is silky, mine is coarse;
Grasses have shaped that larger eye,
While to feed me live things must die.

The birds make little darts in air,
And fishes little darts in water,
Old sheep a silver glory share,
Peacocks are peacocks everywhere . . .
Man lies awake, planning the slaughter.

What woman has this old cat's graces?
What boy can sing as the thrush sings?
For me, I'd rather not run races
With dragon-flies, nor thread the mazes
Of a smooth lawn with ants and things.

Yet horse and sheep tread leaf and stem
And bud and flower beneath their feet;
They sniff at Stars-of-Bethlehem
And buttercups are food to them—
No more than bitter food or sweet.

I, to whom air and waves are sealed,
I yet possess the human part.
O better beasts, you now must yield!
I name the cool stars of the field,
I have the flowers of heaven by heart.

PERMANENCE

There is no power to change
One act, one word.

We move in time: these range
Immortal. I have heard

Egypt and her Antony,
With their love first fulfilled
Cry out, and again cry—
Nor ever are they stilled.

And Sheba I have seen
Bare for her love her breast.
The silken Lesbian queen
Leaves nothing unconfest.

Unspaced, untimed, held fast
Are all things done or undone.
Eternity knows no haste—
In Babylon, or London.

Though they have never moved
These hundred hundred years,
Their rhythm when they loved
Lives ever, and their tears.

When your love's flight shall falter,
Shall fall like a wounded bird,
You too cannot alter
The said or the unsaid word.

O passion of wisdom, this (Helen held it for such):
You cannot unkiss that kiss,
You cannot untouch that touch.

Richard Aldington

RICHARD ALDINGTON was born in England in 1892, and educated at Dover College and London University. His first poems were published in England in 1909; Images Old and New appeared in 1915. Aldington and "H. D." (the chief American Imagist) were conceded to be two of the foremost Imagist poets; their sensitive and clean-cut lines put to shame their scores of imitators. Both appeared, with four others, under Amy Lowell's Aegis in the three issues of Some Imagist Poets, published from 1915 to 1917.

Aldington's War and Love (1918) is somewhat more regular in pattern; the poems in this latter volume are less consciously programmatic but more searching. Recently, Aldington, in common with most of the vers libristes, has been writing in regular rhythms and fixed forms. Images of Desire (1919) was followed by Exile and Other Poems (1923) which contains whole sections of surprisingly archaic, pseudo-Elizabethan songs. A Fool i' the Forest (1925) is a return to Aldington's earlier manner with the addition of foreign dissonances. Though the influence of Eliot is obvious, this phantasmagoria is in many ways Aldington's most important work. Juxtaposing classic calm with the incongruities of a mechanical civilization, Aldington projects an agony unrelated to either ancient or modern backgrounds. This agony was amplified in Aldington's first novel, Death of a Hero (1929), a novel dealing with three generations, beginning in the snug little England of the Victorian Nineties; a work kaleidoscopic in effect and, as might be imagined, rich in musical variety. Roads to Glory (1931), All Men Are Enemies (1933), and Women Must Work (1934) are his decreasingly important books of prose. His Collected Poems was published in 1928.

Critics differ concerning Aldington's position as a poet; none disputes his eminence as a translator. Among his many translations (of which more than twenty were published prior to 1929) are The Poems of Anyte of Tegea, The Poems of Meleager, Cyrano de Bergerac's Voyages to the Moon and the Sun, Letters of Voltaire and Frederick the Great. His autobiography, Life for Life's Sake (1941) is a lively, if romantically bitter, record of the literary movements and influences from 1912 to 1940.

IMAGES

I

Like a gondola of green scented fruits
Drifting along the dank canals of Venice,
You, O exquisite one,
Have entered into my desolate city.

II

The blue smoke leaps
Like swirling clouds of birds vanishing.
So my love leaps forth toward you,
Vanishes and is renewed.

III

A rose-yellow moon in a pale sky
When the sunset is faint vermilion
In the mist among the tree-boughs
Art thou to me, my beloved.

IV

A young beech tree on the edge of the forest
Stands still in the evening,
Yet shudders through all its leaves in the light air
And seems to fear the stars—
So are you still and so tremble.

v

The red deer are high on the mountain,
They are beyond the last pine trees.
And my desires have run with them.

vi

The flower which the wind has shaken
Is soon filled again with rain;
So does my heart fill slowly with tears,
O Foam-Driver, Wind-of-the-Vineyards,
Until you return.

THE FAUN SEES SNOW FOR THE FIRST TIME

Zeus,
Brazen-thunder-hurler,
Cloud-whirler, son-of-Kronos,
Send vengeance on these Oreads
Who strew
White frozen flecks of mist and cloud
Over the brown trees and the tufted grass
Of the meadows, where the stream
Runs black through shining banks
Of bluish white.

Zeus,
Are the halls of heaven broken up
That you flake down upon me
Feather-strips of marble?

Dis and Styx!
When I stamp my hoof
The frozen-cloud specks jam into the cleft
So that I reel upon two slippery points. . . .

Fool, to stand here cursing
When I might be running!

AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM

I turn the page and read:
"I dream of silent verses where the rhyme
Glides noiseless as an oar."

The heavy musty air, the black desks,
The bent heads and rustling noises
In the great dome
Vanish . . .
And
The sun hangs in the cobalt-blue sky,

The boat drifts over the lake shallows,
The fishes skim like umber shadows
through undulating weeds,
The oleanders drop their rosy
petals on the lawns,
And the swallows dive and swirl and whistle
About the cleft battlements of Can Grande' castle. . . .

E V E N I N G

The chimneys, rank on rank,
Cut the clear sky;
The moon,
With a rag of gauze about her loins,
Poses among them, an awkward Venus—

And here am I looking wantonly at her
Over the kitchen sink.

V I C A R I O U S A T O N E M E N T

This is an old and very cruel god. . . .

We will endure;
We will try not to wince
When he crushes and rends us.

If indeed it is for your sakes,
If we perish or moan in torture,
Or stagger under sordid burdens
That you may live—
Then we can endure.

If our wasted blood
Makes bright the page
Of poets yet to be;
If this our tortured life
Save from destruction's nails
Gold words of a Greek long dead;
Then we can endure,
Then hope,
Then watch the sun rise
Without utter bitterness.

But, O thou old and very cruel god,
Take if thou canst this bitter cup from us

P O S S E S S I O N

I must possess you utterly
And utterly must you possess me;

So even if that dreamer's tale
 Of heaven and hell be true
 There shall be two spirits rived together
 Either in whatever peace be heaven
 Or in the icy whirlwind that is hell
 For those who loved each other more than
 God—
 So that the other spirits shall cry out:
 "Ah! Look how the ancient love yet holds to them
 That these two ghosts are never driven apart
 But kiss with shadowy kisses and still take Joy from the mingling of their misty limbs!"

AFTER TWO YEARS

She is all so slight
 And tender and white

As a May morning,
 She walks without hood
 At dusk. It is good
 To hear her sing.

It is God's will
 That I shall love her still
 As he loves Mary,
 And night and day
 I will go forth to pray
 That she love me.

She is as gold
 Lovely, and far more cold.
 Do thou pray with me,
 For if I win grace
 To kiss twice her face
 God has done well to me.

Stella Benson

STELLA BENSON was born in 1892 at Much Wenlock in Shropshire, her father being "a sort of squire down there," but, as she was a delicate child, she spent most of her girlhood in Switzerland and Southern France. After doing social work during the War, she paid her first visit to America in 1918. Ordered to a warm climate by her physician, she came to California and, having no funds, tried to support herself in San Francisco as lady's maid, bill-collector, and book-agent, but without success in any of these capacities. Later, she tutored at the University of California, returned to England by way of China, where she taught Chinese boys in an English church school, and during her travels in the Orient met her husband, J. C. O'Gorman Anderson. Her health was uncertain and her work was continually interrupted by spells of illness. She died in Hongai, Tongking, French Indo-China, December 7, 1933.

Stella Benson is generally known as a novelist of piquant charm. Her volume of verse, Twenty (1918), reveals more of herself than her more voluminous prose; it has all the insouciance of I Pose (1915), the delicacy of The Poor Man (1920) and the finesse of Pipers and a Dancer (1924).

Toward the end of her life her work grew increasingly more brilliant and sensitive; the short stories and sketches with their premonitory concern with death cannot easily be forgotten. Perhaps her finest extended work is Tobit Transplanted (1932), published in America under the simpering title The Faraway Bride, in which she shifted the Biblical background to modern Manchuria without violating either the spirit of the apocryphal tale or the actuality of the present setting and added a wealth of poetic understanding.

WORDS

O words, O words, and shall you rule
 The world? What is it but the tongue
 That doth proclaim a man a fool,
 So that his best songs go unsung,
 So that his dreams are sent to school
 And all die young.

There pass the traveling dreams, and these
 My soul adores—my words condemn—
 Oh, I would fall upon my knees
 To kiss their golden garments' hem,
 Yet words do lie in wait to seize
 And murder them.

Tonight the swinging stars shall plumb
 The silence of the sky. And herds
 Of plumèd winds like huntsmen come
 To hunt with dreams the restless birds.
 Tonight the moon shall strike you dumb,
 O words, O words. . . .

FIVE SMOOTH STONES

It was young David, lord of sheep and cattle,
 Pursued his fate, the April fields among,
 Singing a song of solitary battle,
 A loud mad song, for he was very young.

Vivid the air—and something more than vivid,—
 Tall clouds were in the sky—and something more,—
 The light horizon of the spring was vivid
 With a steel smile that showed the teeth of war.

It was young David mocked the Philistine.
 It was young David laughed beside the river.
 There came his mother—his and yours and mine—
 With five smooth stones, and dropped them in his quiver.

You never saw so green-and-gold a fairy.
 You never saw such very April eyes.
 She sang him sorrow's song to make him wary.
 She gave him five smooth stones to make him wise.

*The first stone is love, and that shall fail you.
 The second stone is hate, and that shall fail you.
 The third stone is knowledge, and that shall fail you.
 The fourth stone is prayer, and that shall fail you.
 The fifth stone shall not fail you.*

For what is love, O lovers of my tribe?
And what is love, O women of my day?
Love is a farthing piece, a bloody bribe
Pressed in the palm of God—and thrown away.

And what is hate, O fierce and unforgiving?
And what shall hate achieve, when all is said?
A silly joke that cannot reach the living,
A spitting in the faces of the dead.

And what is knowledge, O young man who tasted
The reddest fruit on that forbidden tree?
Knowledge is but a painful effort wasted,
A bitter drowning in a bitter sea.

And what is prayer, O waiters for the answer?
And what is prayer, O seekers of the cause?
Prayer is the weary soul of Herod's dancer,
Dancing before blind kings without applause.

The fifth stone is a magic stone, my David,
Made up of fear and failure, lies and loss.
Its heart is lead, and on its face is graved
A crooked cross, my son, a crooked cross.

It has no dignity to lend it value;
No purity—alas, it bears a stain.
You shall not give it gratitude, nor shall you
Recall it all your days, except with pain.

Oh, bless your blindness, glory in your groping!
Mock at your betters with an upward chin!
And when the moment has gone by for hoping,
Sling your fifth stone, O son of mine, and win.

Grief do I give you, grief and dreadful laughter;
Sackcloth for banner, ashes in your wine.
Go forth, go forth, nor ask me what comes after;
The fifth stone shall not fail you, son of mine.

Go forth, go forth, and slay the Philistine.

V. Sackville-West

V(ITA) SACKVILLE-WEST, daughter of Baron Sackville of Knole Park, was born in 1892. Her ancestral home figures prominently in Virginia Woolf's Orlando (1928). Orlando, that time-dissolving tour de force, is in fact an elaborate fantasia—half poem, half parody—on the Sackvilles with Vita Sackville-West (to whom the book is dedicated) scarcely disguised as the hero-heroine. The “plot” of Virginia Woolf's fiction, with its magical telescoping of periods, places and passions, seems to be suggested by one of the interludes in Miss Sackville-West's The Land, a passage ending:

Perilla, fly! Corinna, stay!
In deserts of Bohemia,
A wood near Athens, or the wood
Where these grown oaks as saplings stood
Three hundred English years gone by,
“And yet I love her till I die.”

V. Sackville-West has become well known in three capacities: as the wife of the critic, biographer, and diplomat, Harold Nicolson; as a novelist; as a poet. It was as a poet that she began, with Poems of West and East (1917). The volume failed to attract attention and she turned to prose, publishing four novels and two volumes of short stories between 1919 and 1924. Of these The Heir (1922) received the greatest commendation.

It was not until 1926 that her reputation as a poet was established. In that year she published The Land, which was awarded the Hawthornden Prize in 1927. This, with the earlier poems, was reprinted in a Collected Poems in 1935. The Land is a long tribute to the English countryside, interspersed with lyrics. The movement is slow; there is no narrative; the scheme is no more original than Thomson's The Seasons. But while there is no novelty of theme or technique, there is an utterance so sincere, a rapport with her material so intense, that they produce a keen if quiet rapture. Here, without pomp, is penetration.

The country habit has me by the heart,
For he's bewitched forever who has seen,
Not with his eyes but with his vision, Spring
Flow down the woods and stipple leaves with sun,
As each man knows the life that fits him best,
The shape it makes in his soul, the tune, the tone . . .

This is a poetry that speaks for itself more clearly than any résumé. Whether Miss Sackville-West writes about the sowing of crops, orchards, cider-making, sheep-shearing, wood-flowers, or weeds, she knows, “as each man knows the life that fits him best,” the tone which fits the changing look of spring or winter landscapes. Truly the country habit has her by the heart.

WEED MONTH

(from "The Land")

This is the month of weeds.

Kex, charlock, thistle,

Among the shorn bristle

Of stubble drop seeds.

This is the month of weeds.

Spurry, pimpernel, quitch,

Twine in the stubble,

Making for trouble;

With nettle in ditch,

Spurry, pimpernel, quitch.

Yet the field has a friend,

The nimble clover,

Custodian, lover,
Yare to defend.
The field has a friend.Humble-bees boldly reach
Red clover's honey,
Paid in sweet money.
Hives-bees in vain beseech:
Honey is out of reach.Now let the clover spread;
Nature it craveth;
Foemen it braveth,
Strangling them dead.
So let the clover spread.

FULL MOON

She was wearing the coral taffeta trousers
 Someone had brought her from Ispahan,
 And the little gold coat with pomegranate blossoms,
 And the coral-hafted feather fan;
 But she ran down a Kentish lane in the moonlight,
 And skipped in the pool of the moon as she ran.

She cared not a rap for all the big planets,
 For Betelgeuse or Aldebaran,
 And all the big planets cared nothing for her,
 That small impertinent charlatan;
 But she climbed on a Kentish stile in the moonlight,
 And laughed at the sky through the sticks of her fan.

A SAXON SONG

Tools with the comely names,
 Mattock and scythe and spade,
 Couth and bitter as flames,
 Clean, and bowed in the blade,—
 A man and his tools make a man and his trade.

Breadth of the English shires,
 Hummock and kame and mead,
 Tang of the reeking byres,<sup>1</sup>
 Land of the English breed,—
 A man and his land make a man and his creed.

Leisurely flocks and herds,
 Cool-eyed cattle that come

<sup>1</sup> Byres = buildings, literally cow-sheds.

Mildly to wonted words,
Swine that in orchards roam,—
A man and his beasts make a man and his home.

Children sturdy and flaxen
Shouting in brotherly strife,
Like the land they are Saxon,
Sons of a man and his wife,—
For a man and his loves make a man and his life.

WINTER SONG

(from "The Land")

Many have sung the summer's songs,
Many have sung the corn,
Many have sung white blossom too
That stars the naked thorn—
That stars the black and naked thorn
Against the chalky blue.

But I, crouched up beside the hearth,
Will sing the red and gray;
Red going-down of sun behind
Clubbed woods of winter's day;
Of winter's short and holden<sup>1</sup> day
That seals the sober hind:

Seals him sagacious through the year
Since winter comes again:
Since harvest's but another toil
And sorrow through the grain
Mounts up, through swathes of ripest grain
The sorrow of the soil.

No lightness is there at their heart,
No joy in country folk;
Only a patience slow and grave
Beneath their labor's yoke,—
Beneath the earth's compelling yoke
That only serves its slave,

Since countryman forever holds
The winter's memory,

When he, before the planets' fires
Have faded from the sky,
From black, resplendent winter sky
Must go about his byres;

And whether to the reaper's whirr
That scythes the falling crops,
He travels round the widening wake
Between the corn and copse,
The stubble wake 'twixt corn and copse
Where gleaners ply the rake,

Or whether in his granary loft
He pours the winnowed sacks,
Or whether in his yard he routs
The vermin from the stacks,
The vermin from the staddled<sup>2</sup> stacks
With staves and stones and shouts,

Still, still through all the molten eves
Whether he reaps or hones,
Or counts the guerdon of his sweat,
Still to his inward bones,
His ancient, sage, sardonic bones,
The winter haunts him yet.

Winter and toil reward him still
While he his course shall go
According to his proven worth,
Until his faith shall know
The ultimate justice and the slow
Compassion of the earth.

<sup>1</sup> Holden == rustic-coarse, gray.<sup>2</sup> Staddled == upheld, supported.

Osbert Sitwell

OSBERT SITWELL (brother of Sacheverell and Edith Sitwell) was born in London, December 6, 1892, was educated at Eton, and became an officer in the Grenadier Guards, with whom he served in France for various periods from 1914 to 1917. After contesting the 1918 election at Scarborough in the Liberal interests, he devoted himself to literature.

His first contributions appeared in Wheels (an annual anthology of a few of the younger radical writers, edited by his sister) and disclosed an ironic touch. That impression was strengthened by Argonaut and Juggernaut (1920), where Sitwell's cleverness and satire are intensified if not fused. His most remarkable though least satisfactory poems are his protests against smugness and hypocrisy. Osbert Sitwell's more conventional poetry has a freshness of movement and definiteness of outline. Out of the Flame (1923) reinforces this judgment. It is in two parts; a contrast, not a combination. There is the world of ideal beauty which the poet loves and the world of idle luxury which rouses his satirical hate. In spite of a certain wildness of aim, Sitwell rarely misses his mark.

For several years after 1923 this author distinguished himself in prose, registering a deep impression with the short stories in Tipple Fugue (1924) and the novel Before the Bombardment (1926). The Man Who Lost Himself (1929) is the largest of his prose works; here he seems to shed all but the last drop of his spleen and has accomplished a fancifully philosophic tale in which poetry is instinct.

His subsequent volume of poetry presented him in a new and simpler vein. Sharing the nostalgia of his sister, Edith, he also returns to his childhood for much of the material in England Reclaimed: A Book of Eclogues (1927). Satire is still here, but it is satire softened with sympathy; if he laughs at such rustic figures as Mr. Goodbear and Moping Fred, he smiles with Mr. and Mrs. Nutch, the Southerns, the gamekeepers, gardeners and the homely gentles of the countryside. The author aims at "recording a broad panorama, essentially English, but which seems now, by force of circumstance, to be slipping away into the past." He has evoked an atmosphere in which the landscape is alive, in which recollection is newly shaped by the imagination.

Penny Foolish (1935) assembles Sitwell's enthusiasms and irritations—English public school, games, and war being among the latter and the telephone among the former. The Collected Poems and Satires of Osbert Sitwell (1931) are at their best when they exhibit the author's curious transpositions and his witty sense of period.

THE BLIND PEDDLER

I stand alone through each long day
Upon these pavers; cannot see
The wares spread out upon this tray
—For God has taken sight from me!

Many a time I've cursed the night
When I was born. My peering eyes

Have sought for but one ray of light
To pierce the darkness. When the skies
Rain down their first sweet April showers
On budding branches; when the morn
Is sweet with breath of spring and flowers,
I've cursed the night when I was born:

But now I thank God, and am glad
For what I cannot see this day

—The young men cripples, old, and sad,
With faces burnt and torn away;

Or those who, growing rich and old,
Have battened on the slaughter,
Whose faces, gorged with blood and gold,
Are creased in purple laughter!

FOUNTAINS

Proud fountains, wave your plumes,
Spread out your phoenix-wing,
Let the tired trees rejoice
Beneath your blossoming
(Tired trees, you whisper low).

High up, high up, above
These green and drooping sails,
A fluttering young wind
Hovers and dives, but fails
To steal a foaming feather.

Sail, like a crystal ship,
Above your sea of glass;
Then, with your quickening touch,
Transmute the things that pass
(Come down, cool wind, come down).

All humble things proclaim,
Within your magic net,
Their kinship to the Gods.
More strange and lovely yet
All lovely things become.

Dead, sculptured stone assumes
The life, from which it came;
The kingfisher is now
A moving tongue of flame,
A blue, live tongue of flame—

While birds, less proud of wing,
Crouch, in wind-ruffled shade,
Hide shyly, then pour out
Their jealous serenade;
. . . Close now your golden wings!

ELEGY FOR MR. GOODBEARE

Do you remember Mr. Goodbeare, the carpenter,
Godfearing and bearded Mr. Goodbeare,
Who worked all day
At his carpenter's tray,
Do you remember Mr. Goodbeare?
Mr. Goodbeare, that Golconda of gleaming fable,
Lived, thin-ground between orchard and stable,
Pressed thus close against Alfred, his rival—
Mr. Goodbeare, who had never been away.

Do you remember Mr. Goodbeare,
Mr. Goodbeare, who never touched a cup?
Do you remember Mr. Goodbeare,
Who remembered a lot?
Mr. Goodbeare could remember
When things were properly kept up:
Mr. Goodbeare could remember
The christening and the coming-of-age:
Mr. Goodbeare could remember
The entire and roasted ox:
Mr. Goodbeare could remember
When the horses filled the stable,
And the port-wine-colored gentry rode after the tawny fox:
Mr. Goodbeare could remember
The old lady in her eagle rage,
Which knew no bounds:

Mr. Goodbeare could remember
 When the escaped and hungering tiger
 Flickered lithe and fierce through Foxton Wood,
 When old Sir Nigel took his red-tongued, clamoring hounds,
 And hunted it then and there,
 As a Gentleman Should.

Do you remember Mr. Goodbeare,
 Mr. Goodbeare who never forgot?
 Do you remember Mr. Goodbeare,
 That wrinkled and golden apricot,
 Dear, bearded, godfearing Mr. Goodbeare
 Who remembered remembering such a lot?

Oh, do you remember, do you remember,
 As I remember and deplore,
 That day in drear and far-away December
 When dear, godfearing, bearded Mr. Goodbeare
 Could remember
 No more?

ON THE COAST OF COROMANDEL

On the coast of Coromandel
 Dance they to the tunes of Handel;
 Chorally, that coral coast
 Correlates the bone to ghost,
 Till word and limb and note seem one,
 Blending, binding act to tone.

All day long they point the sandal
 On the coast of Coromandel.
 Lemon-yellow legs all bare
 Pirouette to perqued air
 From the first green shoots of morn,
 Cool as northern hunting-horn,
 Till the nightly tropic wind
 With its rough-tongued, grating rind
 Shatters the frail spires of spice.
 Imaged in the lawns of rice
 (Mirror-flat and mirror green
 Is that lovely water's sheen)
 Saraband and rigadoon
 Dance they through the purring noon,
 While the lacquered waves expand
 Golden dragons on the sand—
 Dragons that must, steaming, die
 From the hot sun's agony—
 When elephants, of royal blood,
 Plod to bed through lilied mud,
 Then evening, sweet as any mango,

Bids them do a gay fandango,
 Minuet, jig or gavotte.
 How they hate the turkey-trot,
 The nautch-dance and the highland fling,
 Just as they will never sing
 Any music save by Handel
 On the coast of Coromandel!

Hugh MacDiarmid

HUGH MAC DIARMID (whose real name is C. M. Grieve) was born in Scotland in 1892. From the beginning it was evident that he was a radical in politics and an experimenter in poetry. His half-dozen volumes, from Penny Wheep to Stony Limits and Other Poems (1934) are as uneven as they are Communistic. Much of these are written in MacDiarmid's own particular Scots, but even his more easily comprehended English is a confusion of satire and sentimentality, rough humor and metaphysical refinements, brilliance and banality.

In The Present Age (1940) Edwin Muir summarizes MacDiarmid's interests and inventiveness: "He is concerned more with the potential than the actual; with things which may be true than with things which are true." This gives his work a high degree of suggestiveness, but also robs it of final conviction. The best of MacDiarmid's verse is not political, not even provocative, but visionary, traditional (even though MacDiarmid takes the tradition lightly), and richly lyrical.

WITH A LIFTING OF THE HEAD

Scotland, when it is given to me
 As it will be
 To sing the immortal song
 The crown of all my long
 Travail with thee,
 I know in that high hour
 I'll have, and use, the power
 Sublime contempt to blend
 With its ecstatic end—
 As who, in love's embrace,
 Forgetfully may frame
 Above the poor slut's face
 Another woman's name.

PARLEY OF BEASTS

Auld Noah was at hame wi' them a',
 The lion and the lamb,
 Pair by pair they entered the Ark,
 And he took them as they cam'.

If twa a' ilk beist there is
Into this room s'u'd come,
Wad I could welcome them like him,
And no' stand gowpin' dumb!

Be chief wi' them and they wi' me
And a' wi' ane anither,
As Noah and his couples were
There in the Ark thegither.

It's fain I'd mell wi' tiger and tit,
Wi' elephant and ecl,
But noo-a'days e'en wi' ain's sel
At hame it's hard to feel.

CATTLE SHOW

I shall go among red faces and virile voices,
See stylish sheep, with fine heads and well-wooled,
And great bulls mellow to the touch,
Brood mares of marvellous approach, and geldings
With sharp and flinty bones and silken hair.

And through th' enclosure draped in red and gold
I shall pass on to spheres more vivid yet
Where countesses' coque feathers gleam and glow
And, swathed in silks, the painted ladies are Whose laughter plays like summer lightning there.

TO A SEA EAGLE

I used to walk on solid gr'und
Till it fell awa' frae my feet
And, left in the void, I'd instantly
To get accustomed wi't.

Watchin' your prood flight noo I feel
As a man may dae wi' a bairn,
For without ony show at a'
In deeper abysses I'm farin'.

Aye, without ony show at a',
Save whiles a song I may sing
Gets in resonance wi' the sun
And ootshines't like a turnin' wing.

ON THE OXFORD BOOK OF VICTORIAN VERSE

Most poets to a muse that is stone-deaf cry.
 This English poetry that they vaunt so high,
 What is it except for two or three men
 Whose best work is beyond all but a few men's ken?

Stupidity will not accept the fact, and so
 Cheek by jowl with Shakespeare and Milton must go
 Even in famous anthologies the incredibly small,
 A Domett, Toke Lynch, and Wathen Mark Call.

A horde no man is the better for reading,
 A horde no man is the worse for not heeding,
 Create with these the notion that poetry's less rare
 Than it is; that there's something for most men there.

Something—but what? Poetry's not written for men
 And lies always beyond all but all men's ken
 —Only fools—countless fools—are deceived by the claims
 Of a Menella Bute Smedley and most other names.

So when this book is revised for reissue
 Let us have you included lest somebody should miss you.
 Here with your peers—Spoof, Dubb, and Blong,
Smiffkins, Pimple, and Jingle. Oh Lord! how long?

THE SKELETON OF THE FUTURE

(At Lenin's Tomb)

Red granite and black diorite, with the blue
 Of the labradorite crystals gleaming like precious stones
 In the light reflected from the snow; and behind them
 The eternal lightning of Lenin's bones.

Wilfred Owen

WILFRED OWEN's biography is pitifully brief. He was born at Oswestry on the 18th of March, 1893, was educated at the Birkenhead Institute, matriculated at London University in 1910, obtained a private tutorship in 1913 near Bordeaux and remained there for two years. In 1915, in spite of delicate health, he joined the Artist's Rifles, served in France from 1916 to June, 1917, when he was invalidated home. Fourteen months later, he returned to the Western Front, was awarded the Military Cross for gallantry in October, and was killed while trying to get his men across the Sambre Canal—with tragic irony—a week before the armistice, on November 4, 1918.

Owen's name was unknown to the world until his friend Siegfried Sassoon unearthed the contents of his posthumous volume, Poems (1920). It was evident at once that here was one of the most important contributions to the literature of the War, expressed by a poet whose courage was surpassed only by his integrity of mind and nobility of soul. The restrained passion as well as the pitiful outcries in Owen's poetry have a spiritual kinship with Sassoon's stark verses. They reflect that second stage of the War, when the glib patter wears thin and the easy patriotics have a sardonic sound in the dug-outs and trenches. "He never," writes Sassoon, "wrote his poems (as so many war poets did) to make the effect of a personal gesture. He pitied others; he did not pity himself."

In a scrap which serves as an unfinished preface, Owen wrote, "This book is not about heroes. English poetry is not yet fit to speak of them. Nor is it about deeds or lands, nor anything about glory, honor or dominion. . . .

except War.

Above all, this book is not concerned with Poetry,
The subject of it is War, and the pity of War.
The Poetry is in the pity."

"Strange Meeting," "Miners," and the poignant "Futility" illustrate, beneath their emotional content, Owen's great fondness for assonance. He was continually experimenting with devices to enrich or take the place of rhyme, testing alliterative consonants as substitutes for the prepared and often monotonous matching of vowels. Almost half of his volume is a record of such unique and surprisingly successful experiments. But it is the nobility, the profound sympathy, compassionate without ever becoming maudlin, that gives Owen's verse a place among the authentic poetry of his day. "Dulce et Decorum Est" is obviously a reaction against the "glory" of war; but it is bigger than its subject, something far beyond a protest, surpassing its program.

It is difficult to choose among Owen's few but compelling poems. "Apologia pro Poemate Meo," "Greater Love," "Anthem for Doomed Youth" and the rhymed suspensions already mentioned will live beyond the tragic events during which they were created. They influenced the post-war poets (vide C. Day Lewis' A Hope for Poetry) in theme as well as technique; time has already found a place for them.

A new and enlarged edition entitled The Poems of Wilfred Owen was published in 1931 with an introduction by Edmund Blunden. This complete collection included many poems hitherto unprinted, notably "The Unreturning," "Arms and the Boy"—both full of Owen's peculiar broken music—and "From My Diary," in which Owen added initial consonantal dissonances (Blunden calls them "pararhymes") to the usual end-rhymes. They emphasize that Owen's death at twenty-five was one of modern poetry's greatest losses.

F U T I L I T Y

Move him into the sun—
Gently its touch awoke him once,

At home, whispering of fields unsown.
 Always it woke him, even in France.
 Until this morning and this snow.
 If anything might rouse him now
 The kind old sun will know.

Think how it wakes the seeds—
 Woke, once, the clay of a cold star.
 Are limbs so dear-achieved, are sides
 Full-nerved,—still warm,—too hard to stir?
 Was it for this the clay grew tall?
 —Oh, what made fatuous sunbeams toil
 To break earth's sleep at all?

APOLOGIA PRO POEMATE MEO

I, too, saw God through mud—
 The mud that cracked on cheeks when wretches smiled.
 War brought more glory to their eyes than blood,
 And gave their laughs more glee than shakes a child.

Merry it was to laugh there—
 Where death becomes absurd and life aburder.
 For power was on us as we slashed bones bare
 Not to feel sickness or remorse of murder.

I, too, have dropped off fear—
 Behind the barrage, dead as my platoon,
 And sailed my spirit surging, light and clear,
 Past the entanglement where hopes lay strewn;

And witnessed exultation—
 Faces that used to curse me, scowl for scowl,
 Shine and lift up with passion of oblation,
 Seraphic for an hour, though they were foul.

I have made fellowships—
 Untold of happy lovers in old song.
 For love is not the binding of fair lips
 With the soft silk of eyes that look and long,

By Joy, whose ribbon slips,—
 But wound with war's hard wire whose stakes are strong;
 Bound with the bandage of the arm that drips;
 Knit in the welding of the rifle-thong.

I have perceived much beauty
 In the hoarse oaths that kept our courage straight;
 Heard music in the silentness of duty;
 Found peace where shell-storms spouted reddest spate.

Nevertheless, except you share
 With them in hell the sorrowful dark of hell,
 Whose world is but the trembling of a flare,
 And heaven but as the highway for a shell,

You shall not hear their mirth:
 You shall not come to think them well content
 By any jest of mine. These men are worth
 Your tears: You are not worth their merriment.

ANTHEM FOR DOOMED YOUTH

What passing-bells for these who die as cattle?
 Only the monstrous anger of the guns.
 Only the stuttering rifles' rapid rattle
 Can patter out their hasty orisons.
 No mockeries for them; no prayers nor bells,
 Nor any voice of mourning save the choirs,—
 The shrill, demented choirs of wailing shells;
 And bugles calling for them from sad shires.

What candles may be held to speed them all?
 Not in the hands of boys, but in their eyes
 Shall shine the holy glimmers of good-bys.
 The pallor of girls' brows shall be their pall;
 Their flowers the tenderness of patient minds,
 And each slow dusk a drawing-down of blinds.

DULCE ET DECORUM EST

Bent double, like old beggars under sacks,
 Knock-kneed, coughing like hags, we cursed through sludge,
 Till on the haunting flares we turned our backs,
 And towards our distant rest began to trudge.
 Men marched as sleep. Many had lost their boots,
 But limped on, blood-shod. All went lame, all blind;
 Drunk with fatigue; deaf even to the hoots
 Of gas-shells dropping softly behind.

Gas! Gas! Quick, boys!—An ecstasy of fumbling,
 Fitting the clumsy helmets just in time,
 But someone still was yelling out and stumbling
 And flound'ring like a man in fire or lime.
 Dim through the misty panes and thick green light,
 As under a green sea, I saw him drowning.

In all my dreams before my helpless sight
 He plunges at me, guttering, choking, drowning.

If in some smothering dreams, you too could pace
 Behind the wagon that we flung him in,

And watch the white eyes wilting in his face,
His hanging face, like a devil's sick of sin,
If you could hear, at every jolt, the blood
Come gargling from the froth-corrupted lungs
Bitten as the cud
Of vile, incurable sores on innocent tongues,—
My friend, you would not tell with such high zest
To children ardent for some desperate glory,
The old lie: Dulce et decorum est
Pro patria mori.<sup>1</sup>

FROM MY DIARY, JULY 1914

Leaves                          Murmuring by myriads in the shimmering trees.
Lives                          Wakening with wonder in the Pyrenees.
Birds                          Cheerily chirping in the early day.
Bards                          Singing of summer scything thro' the hay.
Bees                          Shaking the heavy dews from bloom and frond.
Boys                          Bursting the surface of the ebony pond.
Flashes                        Of swimmers carving thro' the sparkling cold.
Fleshes                        Gleaming with wetness to the morning gold.
A mead                        Bordered about with warbling water brooks.
A maid                        Laughing the love-laugh with me; proud of looks.
The heat                       Throbbing between the upland and the peak.
Her heart                      Quivering with passion to my pressed cheek.
Braiding                       Of floating flames across the mountain brow.
Brooding                       Of stillness; and a sighing of the bough.
Stirs                          Of leaflets in the gloom; soft petal-showers;
Stars                          Expanding with the starr'd nocturnal flowers.

THE UNRETURNING

Suddenly night crushed out the day and hurled
Her remnants over cloud-peaks, thunder-walled.

<sup>1</sup> "It is sweet and dignified to die for one's country."

Then fell a stillness such as harks appalled
When far-gone dead return upon the world.

There watched I for the Dead; but no ghost woke.
Each one whom Life exiled I named and called.
But they were all too far, or dumbed, or thralled;
And never one fared back to me or spoke.

Then peered the indefinite unshapen dawn
With vacant gloaming, sad as half-lit minds,
The weak-limned hour when sick men's sighs are drained.
And while I wondered on their being withdrawn,
Gagged by the smothering wing which none unbinds,
I dreaded even a heaven with doors so chained.

GREATER LOVE

Red lips are not so red
As the stained stones kissed by the English dead.
Kindness of wooed and woer
Seems shame to their love pure.
O Love, your eyes lose lure
When I behold eyes blinded in my stead!

Your slender attitude
Trembles not exquisite like limbs knife-skewed,
Rolling and rolling there
Where God seems not to care;
Till the fierce love they bear
Cramps them in death's extreme decrepitude.

Your voice sings not so soft,—
Though even as wind murmuring through raftered loft,—
Your dear voice is not clear,
Gentle, and evening clear,
As theirs whom none now hear
Now earth has stopped their piteous mouths that coughed.

Heart, you were never hot,
Nor large, nor full like hearts made great with shot;
And though your hand be pale,
Paler are all which trail
Your cross through flame and hail:
Weep, you may weep, for you may touch them not.

MINERS

There was a whispering in my hearth,
A sigh of the coal,
Grown wistful of a former earth
It might recall.

I listened for a tale of leaves
 And smothered ferns,
 Proud forests, and the low sly lives
 Before the fawns.

My fire might show steam-phantoms simmer
 From Time's old caldron,
 Before the birds made nests in summer,
 Or men had children.

But the coals were murmuring of their mine.
 And moans down there,
 Of boys that slept wry sleep, and men
 Wriggling for air.

I saw white bones in the cinder-shard,
 Bones without number.
 For many hearts with coal are charred,
 And few remember.

I thought of all that worked dark pits
 Of war, and died
 Digging the rock where Death reputes
 Peace lies indeed:

Comforted years will sit soft-chained,
 In rooms of amber,
 The years will stretch their hands, well cheered
 By our life's ember;

The centuries will burn rich loads
 With which we groaned,
 Whose warmth shall lull their dreamy lids,
 While songs are crooned;
 But they will not dream of us poor lads
 Lost in the ground.

A R M S A N D T H E B O Y

Let the boy try along this bayonet-blade
 How cold steel is, and keen with hunger of blood;
 Blue with all malice, like a madman's flash;
 And thinly drawn with famishing for flesh.

Lend him to stroke these blind, blunt bullet-heads
 Which long to nuzzle in the heart of lads,
 Or give him cartridges of fine zinc teeth,
 Sharp with the sharpness of grief and death.

For his teeth seem for laughing round an apple.
 There lurk no claws behind his fingers supple;
 And god will grow no talons at his heels,
 Nor antlers through the thickness of his curls.

STRANGE MEETING

It seemed that out of the battle I escaped
Down some profound dull tunnel, long since scooped
Through granites which Titanic wars had groined.
Yet also there encumbered sleepers groaned,
Too fast in thought or death to be bestirred.
Then, as I probed them, one sprang up, and stared
With piteous recognition in fixed eyes,
Lifting distressful hands as if to bless.
And by his smile, I knew that sullen hall;
By his dead smile I knew I stood in Hell.
With a thousand fears that vision's face was grained;
Yet no blood reached there from the upper ground,
And no guns thumped, or down the flues made moan.
"Strange, friend," I said, "here is no cause to mourn."
"None," said the other, "save the undone years,
The hopelessness. Whatever hope is yours,
Was my life also; I went hunting wild
After the wildest beauty in the world,
Which lies not calm in eyes, or braided hair,
But mocks the steady running of the hour,
And if it grieves, grieves richlier than here.
For by my glee might many men have laughed,
And of my weeping something has been left,
Which must die now. I mean the truth untold,
The pity of war, the pity war distilled.
Now men will go content with what we spoiled,
Or, discontent, boil bloody, and be spilled.
They will be swift with swiftness of the tigress,
None will break ranks, though nations trek from progress.
Courage was mine, and I had mystery,
Wisdom was mine, and I had mastery;
To miss the march of this retreating world
Into vain citadels that are not walled.
Then when much blood had clogged their chariot-wheels
I would go up and wash them from sweet wells,
Even with truths that lie too deep for taint.
I would have poured my spirit without stint
But not through wounds; not on the cess of war.
Foreheads of men have bled where no wounds were.
I am the enemy you killed, my friend
I knew you in this death; for so you frowned
Yesterday through me as you jabbed and killed.
I parried; but my hands were loath and cold.
Let us sleep now. . . ."

Richard Church

RICHARD CHURCH was born in London in 1893, and educated at Dulwich Hamlet School. Before he was twenty-one he followed the family tradition and entered the Civil Service. Although he says he loathed the bureaucratic machine, "and all the backstair life of government and politics," he remained in the Service for twenty-four years.

Church had already begun to write at the age of eighteen; by his mid-forties he had published ten books of verse and six of prose. His first volume, Flood of Life (1917) was a fumbling preparation for Philip (1921), which reveals the work of an artist sensitive to implications behind the fact. Tentative though much of it may be, it expresses a poet who, like an undeveloped Robert Frost, combines the power of sight with insight. After 1925 Church developed a more somber note. Mood Without Measure (1927) is, as the title indicates, a transcript of emotion in free or cadenced verse instead of meter. Theme with Variations (1926), a smaller volume, has larger implications. News from the Mountain (1932) and Twelve Noon (1936) show continually growing sensitivity. The dictates of emotion and the discipline of intellect are well balanced in a poetry which, at its best, as Edwin Muir wrote, "is moving as emotion twice felt, by the senses and by the mind."

In addition to his poetry, Church has written several volumes of fiction, the best of which is The Porch (1937), and a biography of Mary Shelley (1928).

IMMORTAL

With dying fire and light,
With agony of birds,
The day defers to the night,
And thought descends to words.

Immortal might become
The poet who could take
The rapture that is dumb,
And simple music make.

MUD

Twenty years ago
My generation learned
To be afraid of mud.
We watched its vileness grow,
Deeper and deeper churned
From earth, spirit, and blood.

From earth, sweet-smelling enough
As moorland, field, and coast;
Firm beneath the corn,
Noble to the plough;
Purified by frost
Every winter morn.

From blood, the invisible river
 Pulsing from the hearts
 Of patient man and beast:
 The healer and life-giver;
 The union of parts;
 The meaning of the feast.

From spirit, which is man
 In triumphant mood,
 Conqueror of fears,
 Alchemist of pain
 Changing bad to good;
 Master of the spheres.

Earth, the king of space,
 Blood, the king of time,
 Spirit, their lord and god,
 All tumbled from their place,
 All trodden into slime,
 All mingled into mud.

ON HEARING THE FIRST CUCKOO

Oh Menelaus,
 Oh my poor friend,
 You have heard the news?
 I know! I know! They all betray us.
 Sooner or later there comes an end
 To kindness; and the winds of abuse
 Nip the bud, shrivel the bloom
 Then marriage, with the promise of the bed,
 Is a disgusting memory of betrayal,
 Shame in the heart for words once said
 With a bride now clasped to another groom.
 Not the flesh, but the mind, Menelaus, is frail.

THE LANTERN

She swings the lantern. Night around her
 Swings out, swings in; the roadside falls.
 Under her feet abysmal darkness sinks;
 Then from the pit, to meet her feet,
 Earth rises, somber stones and steady soil
 Loom up, stare at the lantern, then . . .
 Sink, sink again as it swings.

On she tramps, towering above the lantern,
 All her daylight beauty lifted away,
 Underlit, and drenched with the dye,
 The smudgy gold of the drowsy beams from the lantern.
 Over the light her hip turns smooth and strong,
 Rolling the shadows to and fro on its breadth.

To and fro in rhythm as on she swings.—
 The gaunt trees over her leap, and mope, and bow.—
 And one deep breast, like the old moon lacking light,
 Rides above, rimmed with a ghostly line,
 Then waxes full as the lantern swings before.
 Crowning this wild-lit moving life,
 The aureoled hair glows gold, a smoke-veiled fire,
 Flaming and changing, but ever her crown as she swings
 On, swings on, steady and sure, while the earth and skies
 Tumble and leap and prance and dance round the lantern.

The cows are milked; she is going home to her babe.

FROM AN UPLAND VALLEY

In a high valley of the hills
 Where the wind spun Earth
 In a gust of mirth,
 I saw the conflict of our wills:
 You the wild
 Unreconciled
 Self-diviner, trustless; true
 Only to the cruel self in you.
 Cruel yet kind,
 Harsh, tortured mind,
 Worse than wanton, sweeter than faith;
 I saw you, heard you, fought you—wraith!

There is no absence since you came
 Into this vale we call
 Life, where the winds fall
 Like eagles on quarry, a piercing blame,
 Then lulling to dear
 Confidences, near
 Whisperings, close, so intimate
 There's hardly room for love or hate
 To slip between.
 For what has been,
 Was past, is present, will future be,
 One piercing agony, one joy for me.

And you, so swift, so sure, burnt clean
 And sparse with your soul-inflicted pain,
 What have you left to feel?
 Could you see the trees kneel
 As they kneel here beneath the storm,
 Bowed with invisible alarm
 Down to stones, grasses,
 Sheep-runs, hare-passes,
 Shuddering under the sizzling wrath
 That hisses through each gap and path;

Could you be near me
 Would your mind sear me,
 With such a wild exemplar by,
 As this embrace of earth and sky?

I torture you, I who am still
 Yours, shall be till death takes his fill
 Of the brimmed lake
 Whereat we slake
 Our thirst, self poured on self, and run
 Into such stillness under the sun
 That light is pain,
 And loss is gain
 Refracted from that source of pleasure.
 Oh, brood on this, dear heart, at leisure;
 Absent, here,
 Gone, but near,
 Your passion is flame you cannot measure

POR TENT

There is no sound:
 Only the quiet brittle of the fire
 And flake-fall of ash:
 Only the pursed drip,
 Long drop, drip of water:
 Only the sigh,
 The high sigh of winter trees
 As the east sifts through their branches:
 Only the tramp, tramp,
 And running to and fro of thoughts
 Far away down the avenues of my mind:
 Only that ominous gathering,
 Distant murmur and cry,
 Faint clash of steel:
 Only that hoarse preparation
 In the sleeping city of my brain.

THE PURIFICATION

They have gone over, the god, the friend, the lover,
 They have gone over.
 It is growing gray now;
 There comes the end of day now.'

They were signs then, the stars were a glory for men,
 They were signs then.
 Those lights flare unseen now,
 Things paltry and mean now.

They were true pleasure, the friendly trust, the praise without measure.
 They were true pleasure.
 Praise is an empty sound now.
 Trust treads no firm ground now.

They were music, joy, and truth, the kisses she gave him in youth.
 They were music, joy, and truth.
 They are less beautiful now;
 They are but dutiful now.

Aye, they have come to an end, the god, the lover, the friend;
 They have come to an end.
 The soul is alone now:
 Strong, naked, full-grown now.

Frank Kendon

FRANK KENDON was born in 1893 at Goudhurst, Kent, educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and was in Egypt and Palestine during the War. Besides being a poet, he has been a schoolmaster and journalist, "a countryman by birth and youth, Londoner by necessity, poet by chance, business man by fate." Since 1929 he has been assistant editor of John o' London's Weekly.

Kendon's first appearance was in his section in Poems by Four Authors (1923). A full view of his characteristics is obtained in the succeeding Poems and Sonnets (1924) in which, without straining for idiomatic effect, Kendon achieves a personal distinction. He is particularly happy in his combinations of rhyme and assonance, or (as in "I spend my days vainly") in the variation of rhyming vowels and shifting consonantal sounds, sometimes referred to as "analyzed rhyme." The first two lyrics here reprinted are unusually adroit pieces of technique—and both are much more than mere technical exercises.

Arguments and Emblems (1925), a book of lyrics, was succeeded by A Life and Death of Judas Iscariot (1926). Critics disputed whether this or Tristram (1934) was Kendon's most important work in verse. The author agreed with those who considered the nourishment in Tristram of a finer product and better distilled, though "persons looking for a meal might find Judas more filling." Tristram is a narrative in ballad measure interchapters with songs, a tour de force and a triumph over the time-worn subject matter. The Cherry Minder (1935) contains the best of his later lyrics.

Besides his verse Kendon has written The Adventure of Poetry (1932) and The Small Years (1930), an autobiography up to the age of ten, with an introduction by Walter De la Mare, the only book of Kendon's that had a large public success.

I SPEND MY DAYS VAINLY

I spend my days vainly,
Not in delight;
Though the world is elate
And tastes her joys finely.

Here wrapped in slow musing
Lies my dark mind,
To no music attuned
Save its own, and despising

The lark for remoteness,
The thrush for bold lying,
The soft wind for blowing,
And the round sun for brightness.

O tarry for me, sweet;
I shall stir, I shall wake!
And the melody you seek
Shall be lovely, though late.

THE KERNEL

Now that the flush of summer is gone,
And in the lane no flower is seen,
No hedge in leaf,
No tree in gold or green;

Now that the golden fruit is stored,
And in the wood no song is heard,
No merry stir
Of song from any bird;

Now that the unaccompanied wind
Blows cold across the naked land
And, hung in black,
Bare trees like mourners stand;

Winter reveals through falling rain,
A strength which summer had left unseen:
Beauty and peace
Which, but for tears, had been in vain,
Which, but for loss, had never been.

THE IMMIGRANT

When Ruth was old
She'd take her children's children on her knee,
They never wearied to be told
Tales of her girlhood in a far country.

For though her eyes grew dim
Men said of her: "Her heart is always young,"
And Boaz, while she spoke of him,
Loved the faint accent of a foreign tongue.

SO DEEP IS DEATH

So deep is death in silence lapped,
So deep in sleep their spirits are
Who, out of tempest earth escaped,
Lie down untroubled. Like a star
On the rich beds of evening skies
Before the night has peopled heaven,
So deeply shut from love she lies,
And her quick going is forgiven.

Come little Spring, come, give us heart;
Come noisy Summer, sing and drowse;
If sense must now play double part,
Come life again! She will not rouse;
She will not hear, nor laugh to hear,
Whatever challenge wildness make;
Music is silence in her ear.
Only her lovers lie awake.

Herbert Read

HERBERT READ was born, December 4, 1893, at Muscoates Grange, Kirbymoorside, Yorkshire. He was educated at Crossley's School, Halifax, and at the University of Leeds. Commissioned in January 1915 to the Yorkshire Regiment, he fought in France and Belgium from 1915 to 1918, having been made a captain in 1917. He left the army in 1919, married, and became Assistant at the Victoria and Albert Museum.

Read's early work was experimental and unsatisfactory; his first volume, Songs of Chaos (1915), scarcely justified the title. Naked Warriors (1919), a much more vitalized work, suggested, somewhat remotely, what Siegfried Sassoon and Wilfred Owen had been saying directly. But Read's was no mere echo, his utterance, gnarled and contorted, formed vivid if unlovely lines. Mutations of the Phoenix (1923) is overweighted by a concern with style and by the influence of T. S. Eliot, although Read has his own distinct philosophy, intense and individualistic.

Collected Poems 1913-1925 (1926) shows a poet in transition. Under the cloudy angers and distortions he seeks

. . . some state of high serenity
Beyond the range
Of febrile senses.

But he attains neither serenity nor integration. Almost ten years later his Poems 1914-1934 (1935) proves that Read is still striving for a solid poetic character, and striving vainly. His volume covers twenty years of original writing, yet the book seems little more than a mirror of recent poetic fashions, a cross between a retrospective anthology and a volume of humorless parodies. The opening "Eclogues" are leftovers from the Imagist ice-box; the "War Poems" are mannered, as might be expected of a poet who can, in 1935, append this note, "It is not my business as a poet to condemn war"—this in the face of the records left by such indubitable poets as Wilfred Owen, Edmund Blunden, Siegfried Sassoon, Robert Nichols, Isaac Rosenberg, and Robert Graves. "Satirical Verses," "Lyrical Poems" and "Longer Poems" are equally undistinguished. There are occasional interesting intellectual exercises, but the lyrical note is thin and, contrasted with such a savage wit as Auden, whose military images are imitated in "The Nuncio," the satire is feeble.

Read established himself as a critic with his Reason and Romanticism (1926), English Prose Style (1928), and Phases of English Poetry (1929). Besides editing T. E. Hulme's Speculations and writing a book on ceramics, Read is the author of the critical Surrealism (1938) and the autobiographical The Innocent Eye (1933).

D E V I C E

O that I might believe that time
Is but a measure thrown on things
That hold existence in a sphere
Intense alone, and always felt
In full reality! For then

I could evade despondency
By magnifying to my frame
The ecstatic beat that night and day
Pulses within the milk-white walls
Of mental sloth, eager to break
Into the radiant release
Of vision divine and precise.

—Time that is shrouded thought
Involving earth and life in doubt.

FROM "THE ANALYSIS OF LOVE"

Nature has perpetual tears
In drooping boughs,
And everywhere inanimate death
Is immemorial.

But I have naught that will express
The grief I feel
When men and moods combine to show
The end of this—

This mental ecstasy all spent
In disuniting death;
And the years that spread
Oblivion on our zest.

THE REFUGEES

Mute figures with bowed heads
They travel along the road:
Old women, incredibly old,
And a hand-cart of chattels.

They do not weep:
Eyes are too raw for tears.

Past them have hastened
Processions of retreating gun-teams,
Baggage-wagons and swift horsemen.
Now they struggle along
With the rearguard of a broken army.

We will hold the enemy towards nightfall
And they will move
Mutely into the dark behind us,
Only the creaking cart
Disturbing their sorrowful serenity.

TOURISTS IN A SACRED PLACE

A pallid rout stepping like phantoms beneath the arching boughs, have come with angel hands and wretched voices
to the valley and this choir of perished stones.

Valid was my anguish—as though a turbulent dove had scattered the leafy silence.
Now in airless vistas, dim and blind my limbs will loiter while the senses stray to vast defeats.

A rocking bell
peals in a gray tower.
The sound has broken down the strong defenses of age and innocence.

Cecily come with your virginal tremors,
Cecily still the bell.
Your tresses are wet from the rushing river,
a green weed clings like a vein on your breast.

Cecily, listen, the clangor is over now only the burden of bees in the clover.
God and his angels have given you grace,
and stamped your mission on your naiad face.

Sylvia Townsend Warner

SYLVIA TOWNSEND WARNER was born December 1893 at Harrow on the Hill, Middlesex, where her father was a schoolmaster. From 1916 to 1926 she worked on the preparation of the critical edition of Tudor Church Music, a vast and learned compilation in ten volumes, of which she was one of four editors. Research work in the music of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries was not only her occupation but her preoccupation, and it was not until 1922 that she started writing as a by-product.

Although she first attracted wide attention with the fanciful Lolly Willowes or The Loving Huntsman, which was the first "book-of-the-month" in America in 1926, her literary début was made with a volume of verse, The Espalier (1925). There followed two more books of prose, quaintly misnamed novels by the publishers: Mr. Fortune's Maggot (1927) and The True Heart (1929). Three years after her first volume, her second book of poems appeared, Time Impostured (1928).

Although her work seems to fall into two categories, it actually forms a unified expression. The poems, objective, sharply characterized, compact with drama, are condensed stories; the novels are poetry from beginning to end. Lolly Willowes is a fantasy which alternates between the unashamedly tender and the lightly terrible. Mr. Fortune's Maggot adds compassionate understanding to extravaganza; fantasy turns here to philosophy whose motto implies surrender instead of possession in love. The title-story of The Salutation (1932) is a sequel to Mr. Fortune's Maggot, exquisite in style, tragic in effect. The True Heart is the simplest and the deepest of her larger works. Seemingly an idyll of Victorian England, it is really one of the oldest love stories, the classic tale of Psyche and Eros retold. Although no critic seems to have noted the fact, Miss Warner has supplied sufficient hints; "Sukey" is obviously an Anglicized Psyche; the mad Love, Eros, is the witless "Eric"; Venus is less than half-disguised as "Mrs. Seaborn."

Thus all of Miss Warner's work is a paradoxical union of subtlety and simplicity, with no sense of strain between these opposites. Each quality is equally characteristic of this author; if the mode tends toward increasing simplicity, it is as though the subtle brain were being counseled if not always controlled by the simple—and the true—heart.

The element which holds these contraries in so nice a balance is the rightness, the so-to-speak connoisseurship of Miss Warner's taste. She can be utterly exquisite when elegance dictates the mood; her coarseness is no less in place when theme and measure demand rudeness. Thus Time Impostured has the same sparse imagery and no little of the earth smell of which The Espalier is redolent, but the rustic note is not so broad; the rough country humor which underlines her bucolic comedies turns to rustic elegies without effort or affectation. "Nelly Trim," a poem which touches the ballad with nothing short of magnificence, finds its complement in "The Rival"; the neat incisiveness of "The Alarum" is matched by the bitter-sweetness of "Song."

Craftsmen will be quick to detect Miss Warner's innovations. She is particularly resourceful in her use of the unrhymed line; she is as adroit in her mingling of assonantal and dissonantal rhyme as Wilfred Owen and Humbert Wolfe. But it is unwise to place too much emphasis on technique. Each reader will discover a different quality on which to lay stress: the poet's marked accent; or her half-modern, half-archaic blend of naiveté and erudition; or the low-pitched but tart tone of voice, like a feminine Thomas Hardy. Every year seems to distill Miss Warner's gift nearer to its basic essence. "Modo and Alciphron," which has not yet appeared in book form, illustrates this quality in which grotesquerie and metaphysics so nimbly combine. "Killing No Murder" and "Building in Stone," two other uncollected poems, abandon by-play and raillery in their grave music and graver implications.

Opus 7 (1931) is, in spite of its unimaginative title, a highly imaginative tale in precise couplets of one Rebecca Random who, with her "green thumb," has a way with flowers, but who has no love for them except as a means of supplying herself with gin. It is both a delicate and a diabolic long poem, realistic and revenant, musing and epigrammatic. It is as though the ghost of Pope had seized Miss Warner's pen and, allowing her to control her own fancy, had added a series of commentaries to prove that the proper student of mankind was woman. Whether a Dove or Seagull (1933) contains more than a hundred poems, half of which are by Miss Warner and half by her friend Valentine Ackland. The authors believed that by issuing their separate work under one cover the element of contrast would add to the pleasure of the reader; by withholding their signatures from the poems they attained the freshness as well as the provocation of anonymity. The book contains some of Miss Warner's finest poems.

Greatly gifted, she barely misses greatness. Ironic, critical, compassionate, her mind rules her emotions a fraction too well. She cannot quite give herself to a self-forgetting, world-forgetting ecstasy. Miss Warner is a philosopher, but never a labored one. She is one who walks, light-footed, a long road, singing her long thoughts to a light—though usually legato—measure.

FOUR EPITAPHS

John Bird, a laborer, lies here,
Who served the earth for sixty year
With spade and mattock, drill and plow;
But never found it kind till now.

I, an unwedded wandering dame,
For quiet into the country came:
Here, hailed it; but did not foretell
I'd stay so long and rest so well.

I, Richard Kent, beneath these stones,
Sheltered my old and trembling bones;
But my best manhood, quick and brave,
Lies buried in another grave.

Her grieving parents cradled here
Ann Monk, a gracious child and dear.
Lord, let this epitaph suffice:
Early to Bed and Early to Rise.

COUNTRY THOUGHT

Idbury bells are ringing
And Westcote has just begun,
And down in the valley
Ring the bells of Bledington.

To hear all the church-bells
Ring-ring together,
Chiming so pleasantly
As if nothing were the matter.

The notion might come
To some religious thinker,

That The Lord God Almighty
Is a traveling tinker,

Who travels through England
From north to south,
And sits him at the roadside
With a pipe in his mouth,

A-tinkling and a-tinkering
To mend up the souls
That week-day wickedness
Has worn into holes.

And yet there is not
One tinker, but Three—
One at Westcote, One at Bledington
And One at Idbury.

N E L L Y T R I M

"Like men riding,
The mist from the sea
Drives down the valley
And baffles me."
"Enter, traveler,
Whoever you be."

By lamplight confronted
He staggered and peered;
Like a wet bramble
Was his beard.
"Sit down, stranger,
You look a-feared."

Shudders rent him
To the bone,
The wet ran off him
And speckled the stone.
"Dost bide here alone, maid?"
"Yes, alone."

As he sat down
In the chimney-nook
Over his shoulder
He cast a look,
As if the night
Were pursuing; she took

A handful of brash
To mend the fire,

He eyed her close
As the flame shot higher;
He spoke—and the cattle
Moved in the byre.

"Though you should heap
Your fire with wood,
'Twouldn't warm me
Nor do no good,
Unless you first warm me
As a maiden should."

With looks unwavering,
With breath unstirred,
She took off her clothes
Without a word,
And stood up naked
And white as a curd.

He breathed her to him
With famished sighs,
Against her bosom
He sheltered his eyes,
And warmed his hands
Between her thighs.

Strangely assembled
In the quiet room,
Alone alight
Amidst leagues of gloom,
So brave a bride,
So sad a groom;

And strange love-traffic
Between these two;
Nor mean, nor shamefaced—
As though they'd do
Something more solemn
Than they knew:

As though by this greeting
Which chance had willed
'Twixt him so silent
And her so stilled,
Some pledge or compact
Were fulfilled,

Made for all time
In times unknown,
'Twixt man and woman
Standing alone

In mirk night
By a tall stone.

His wayfaring terrors
All cast aside,
Brave now the bridegroom
Quitted the bride;
As he came, departing—
Undenied.

But once from darkness
Turned back his sight
To where in the doorway
She held a light:
“Good-by to you, maiden.”
“Stranger, good night.”

Long time has this woman
Been bedded alone.
The house where she slept
Lies stone on stone:
She'd not know her ash-tree,
So warped has it grown.

But yet this story
Is told of her
As a memorial;
And some aver
She'd comfort thus any Poor traveler.

A wanton, you say—
Yet where's the spouse,
However true
To her marriage-vows,
To whom the lot
Of the earth-born allows

More than this?—
To comfort the care
Of a stranger, bound
She knows not where,
And afraid of the dark,
As his fathers were.

THE ALARUM

With its rat's tooth the clock
Gnaws away delight.
Piece by piece, piece by piece
It will gnaw away tonight,

Till the coiled spring released
Rouses me with a hiss
To a day, to another night
Less happy than this.

And yet my own hands wound it
To keep watch while I slept;
For though they be with sorrow
Appointments must be kept.

AFTER HE HAD GONE

After he had gone the wind rose,
Buffeting the house and rumbling in the chimney,
And I thought: It will roar against him like a lion
As onward he goes.

Seven miles before him, all told—
Chilled will be the lips I kissed so warm at parting,
Kissed in vain; for he's forth into the wind, and kisses
Won't keep out the cold.

Closer should I have kissed, fondlier prayed:
Pleasant is the room in the wakeful firelight,
And within is the bed, arrayed with peace and safety.
Would he had stayed!

ELIZABETH

"Elizabeth the Beloved"—
So much says the stone
That is all with weather defaced,
With moss overgrown.

But if to husband or child,
Brother or sire, most dear
Is past deciphering;
This only is clear:

That once she was beloved,
Was Elizabeth,
And is now beloved no longer,
If it be not of Death.

TRIUMPH OF SENSIBILITY

"Tiger, strolling at my side,
Why have you unbound the zone
Of your individual pride?
Why so meek did you come sneaking
After me as I walked alone?

"Since the goat and since the deer
Wait the shattering death you wield
In a constancy of fear,
By your stripes, my strange disciple,
Am I also to be healed?"

"Woman, it was your tender heart
Did my bloody heart compel.
Master-mistress of my art,
Past my wit of wrath your pity,
Ruthless and inexorable.

"I hunt flesh by fallible sense;
You a more exquisite prey pursue
With a finer prescience,
And lap up another's unhappiness:
Woman, let me learn of you."

SAD GREEN

The glass falls lower,
And lowers the wet sky,
And by a fire sit I
Hearing the lawn-mower

Nearing and waning—
Howbeit out of tune

The essential voice of June,
Patient and uncomplaining;

For though by frost and thunder
Summer be overthrown,
The grass plat must be mown
And the daisies kept under.

SONG

She has left me, my pretty,
Like a fleeting of apple-blows
She has left her loving husband.
And who she has gone to
The Lord only knows.

She has left me, my pretty,
A needle in a shirt,
Her pink flannelette bedgown,
And a pair of pattens
Caked over with dirt.

I care not for the pattens,
Let 'em lie in the mold;
But the pretty pink bedgown
Will comfort my lumbago
When midnights are cold;

And the shirt I will wear it,
And the needle may bide.
Let it prick, let it rankle,
Let my flesh remember
How she lay against my side!

SONG FROM THE BRIDE OF SMITHFIELD

A thousand guileless sheep have bled,
A thousand bullocks knelt in fear,
To daub my Henry's cheek with red
And round the curl above his ear.

And wounded calves hung up to drip
Have in slow sweat distilled for him
To dew that polishes his lip,
The inward balm that oils each limb.

In vain I spread my maiden arts,
In vain for Henry's love I pine,
He is too skilled in bleeding hearts
To turn this way and pity mine.

THE RIVAL

The farmer's wife looked out of the dairy:
 She saw her husband in the yard;
 She said: "A woman's life is hard,
 The chimney smokes, the churn's contrary."

She said:
 "I of all women am the most ill-starred.
 "Five sons I've borne and seven daughters,
 And the last of them is on my knee.
 Finer children you could not see.
 Twelve times I've put my neck in the halter:
 You'd think
 So much might knit my husband's love to me.
 "But no! Though I should serve him double
 He keeps another love outdoors,
 Who thieves his strength, who drains his stores,
 Who haunts his mind with fret and trouble;
 I pray
 God's curse may light on such expensive whores.

"I am grown old before my season,
 Weather and care have worn me down;
 Each year delves deeper in my frown,
 I've lost my shape and for good reason:
 But she
 Yearly puts on young looks like an Easter gown.

"And year by year she has betrayed him
 With blight and mildew, rain and drought,
 Smut, scab, and murrain, all the rout;
 But he forgets the tricks she's played him
 When first
 The fields give a good smell and the leaves put out.

"Aye, come the Spring, and the gulls keening,
 Over her strumpet lap he'll ride,
 Watching those wasteful fields and wide,
 Where the darkened tilth will soon be greening,
 With looks
 Fond and severe, as looks the groom on bride."

KILLING NO MURDER

You, master of delays,
 Need no artillery but days

One after one
 Loosed off in blank against hope's garrison;
 No art,
 Save doing nothing, to undo a heart.

MODO AND ALCIPHRON

In the Lybian desert I
 Saw a hermit's carcass lie,
 And a melancholy fiend
 Over the battered bosom leaned.

Black as a widow dead for love,
 Motionless he drooped above;
 Only his tail from side to side
 Switched the sand with narrow stride.

"Griefest thou, imp, to see thy spoil
 Lie thus quenched on burning soil?
 Rinsed the brain, and the loin's lust
 Safely reconciled with dust?

"Or perchance thy mournful hide
 Dreads how well the lash will chide
 When Pope Satan makes thee skip
 For a negligent stewardship?"

With a sullen silence he Raised his head, and looked at me,
 Looked me through, and looked away,
 Nor for all that I could say

Looked again. Quoth I, I've matched
 Patience with yours; and so I watched
 The slow, sun-swollen daytime through
 To mark what this strange fiend would do

Cramped and cold I woke from sleep
 To hear the fiend begin to weep.
 Twinkling in starlight the tears ran
 Along his beard, and he began:

"Dead is the holy Alciphron!
 Modo's occupation's gone.
 All my pretty joys are sped,
 Gentle Alciphron is dead!

"Never was there saint so mild
 And so easily beguiled;
 'Twas pure pleasure to torment
 Anything so innocent.

"Danced I, gleaming in a dress
Of nimble maiden nakedness,
His prompt heart with hastening beat
Drummed the measure for my feet,

"And his glances whipped me round,
Till toppling in a dizzy swound
With long recovery I would twine
About him like the conjugal vine,

"While my forked and flickering tongue,
Constant as summer lightning, hung
On the scant flesh that wrapped his bones,
Till sighs long-husbanded, chuckling groans,

"Vouched for the pleasures he endured;
By thorns such pleasures must be cured,
And when most thick the thin blood fell
I knew that I had pleased him well.

"Then at other times I'd sit
Praising his spiritual wit,
Assuring him how deftly he Could comprehend the Trinity,

"Flesh Christ, with never a trespassing glide
To error on this or t'other side,
Show how original sin doth breed
Inherent in the genital seed,

"And every tinkling sophist quell,
Who questions that the troops of hell
Pester the saint upon his knees,
Actual and numerous as his fleas.

"But most of all 'twas my delight
To cajole him from the elected night
Wherewith the christian cowls his sense
From the allurement and offense

"Of a lost planet. I would be
Damnation singing from a tree
With voice more wildly ravishing
For being damned, or in a spring

"With chill adulteries surprise
Him parched; often I thieved his eyes
To love me in lizard, or in braid
Of sun begetting from a shade

"A spawn of dancing babies—all
Accursed as their original.
In many a salad I laid a snare
Of joy that he on such poor fare

"Fared well, or else on wafts of thyme
Into the warded brain would climb
Unchallenged, or tweaked him by the nose
With the remembrance of a rose.

"Thus did we wrestle, and never chaste
Turtles did rarer dalliance taste,
Thus mixed our opposites, as true
As plighted dock and nettle do,

"Thus to all time example gave
Of the mutual comfort saint should have
With devil, devil with saint, and thus
I clean forgot how envious

"In his unmated splendor sits
He, the Tyrant—" As oak splits
Before the ax, and falls with loud
Indignant groan, so groaned, so bowed,

The fiend, and lay in silence long;
But once or twice against the throng
Of stars raised up a blackening fist;
Then mourned, as mourning from a mist:

"Alas, how faithless man can be
To a friend's eternity!
Into untiring malice doomed,
Virtue as long-breathed I presumed;

"With never a care save which art next
To ply I looked on time un vexed,
Nor, in this plenty of sand, did doubt
The tale of his was running out.

"So Alciphron grew old, though I Knew it not. This gew-gawed sky
Its virgin hood of gray had on,
And light was scarce, when Alciphron

"Awoke, and laid his hand on me,
And stared east. Haec dies, said he,
Quam fecit Dominus. I too
Looked east, and saw a path run through

"The kindling cloud. It bruised my gaze
To meet the intolerable blaze,
The ostentatious Rose, the blare
And uproar of light which threatened there;

"But Alciphron beheld and smiled,
Crowding for pleasure like a child
Who views its promised sugarplum:
Then, with a crash which has left dumb

"All thunder since, about us came
A simpering angel in a flame,
Who seized upon redemption's prey,
And bore him, like a child, away.

"Thus, O woe, I'm left alone
With this unanswering flesh and bone.
All my pretty joys are sped,
Gentle Alciphron is dead!

"Nothing is left me of my joy
But this contemptuous broken toy.
Modo's occupation's gone,
Dead is the holy Alciphron!"

THE ABSENCE

How happy I can be with my love away!
No care comes all day;
Like a dapple of clouds the hours pass by,
Time stares from the sky
But does not see me where I lie in the hay,
So still do I lie.

Like points of dew the stars, well in the skies;
Taller the trees rise.
Dis-shadowed, unselved, I wander slow,
My thoughts flow and flow,
But whither tending I know not, nor need surmise,
So softly I go,

Till to my quiet bed I must undress—
Then I say, Alas!
That he whom, too anxious or too gay,
I torment all day
Can never know me in my harmlessness
While he is away.

BUILDING IN STONE

God is still glorified—
To him the wakeful arch holds up in prayer,
Nightly dumb glass keeps vigil to declare
His East, and Eastertide;

The constant pavement lays
Its flatness for his feet, each pier acquaints
Neighbor, him housed; time-thumbed, forgotten saints
Do not forget to praise;

All parcels of the whole,
Each hidden, each revealed, each thrust and stress,
Antiphonally interlocked, confess
Him, stay, and him, control.

Whether upon the fens
Anchored, with all her canvas and all her shrouds,
Ely signal him to willows and clouds
And cattle, or whether Wren's

Unperturbed dome, above
The city roaring with mechanic throat
And climbing in layer on layer of Babel, float
Like an escaping dove,

Or whether in countryside
 Stationed all humble and holy churches keep Faith with the faith of those who lie asleep,
 God is still glorified;

Since by the steadfastness
 Of his most mute creation man conjures
 —Man, so soon hushed—the silence which endures
 To bear in mind, and bless.

Aldous Huxley

ALDOUS (LEONARD) HUXLEY, grandson of Thomas Huxley, was born in 1894 at Godalming and educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford. From 1919 to 1921, he was on the editorial staff of The Athenaeum and, although he has recently devoted himself entirely to prose, his first publications were in verse; his three volumes, The Burning Wheel (1916), The Defeat of Youth (1918) and Leda (1920), are in that medium.

As a poet, Huxley is at least three writers. At times, he is a precise, rather academic picture-maker, rhyming his subjects in the broad, traditional manner. At other times—and far more frequently—he is a disillusioned ironist, a conscious imitator of Rimbaud and Laforgue, a sardonic Pierrot lunaire. (The latter vein is best illustrated by the poem "Male and Female Created He Them" and the bitter "Soles Occidere et Redire Possunt" in Leda.) More rarely, his poetry strikes the somber note which finds its fullest expression in the novel Antic Hay (1923), the note of tragic despair echoing in a vast emptiness. Brief Candles (1930) contains four brilliant and ruthless novelettes.

In 1928 Huxley published his largest and most uncomfortable novel, Point-Counter-Point. Its theme was futility, disillusion having already been the motivating power—or lack of power—in his short stories, Limbo (1920), Mortal Coils (1922), Two or Three Graces (1926). Active as a feuilletonist, his sketches sometimes attained the dignity of essays, but his later novels, such as After Many a Summer Dies the Swan (1940), are extended caricatures of a decadent society.

The Cicadas and other Poems (1931) is more mannered—even more ill-mannered—than the preceding volumes of verse. The title-poem and one or two others break away from the tight pattern, and many of the shorter poems are lyric in impulse but they are songs accompanied by shrugs and the mood is desperately nostalgic.

SONG OF POPLARS

Shepherd, to yon tall poplars tune your flute:
 Let them pierce keenly, subtly shrill,
 The slow blue rumor of the hill;
 Let the grass cry with an anguish of evening gold.
 And the great sky be mute.

Then hearken how the poplar trees unfold
 Their buds, yet close and gummed and blind,
 In airy leafage of the mind,
 Rustling in silvery whispers the twin-hued scales
 That fade not nor grow old.

"Poplars and fountains and you cypress spires
 Springing in dark and rusty flame,
 Seek you aught that hath a name?
 Or say, say: Are you all an upward agony
 Of undefined desires?

"Say, are you happy in the golden march
 Of sunlight all across the day?
 Or do you watch the uncertain way
 That leads the withering moon on cloudy stairs
 Over the heaven's wide arch?

"Is it towards sorrow or towards joy you lift
 The sharpness of your trembling spears?
 Or do you seek, through the gray tears
 That blur the sky, in the heart of the triumphing blue,
 A deeper, calmer rift?"

So; I have tuned my music to the trees,
 And there were voices, dim below
 Their shrillness, voices swelling slow
 In the blue murmur of hills, and a golden cry
 And then vast silences.

FIFTH PHILOSOPHER'S SONG

A million million spermatozoa,
 All of them alive:
 Out of their cataclysm but one poor Noah
 Dare hope to survive.

And among that billion minus one
 Might have chanced to be
 Shakespeare, another Newton, a new Donne—
 But the One was Me.

Shame to have ousted your betters thus,
 Taking ark while the others remained outside!
 Better for all of us, forward Homunculus,
 If you'd quietly died!

A SUNSET

Over against the triumph and the close—
 Amber and green and rose—
 Of this short day,

The pale ghost of the moon grows living-bright
 Once more, as the last light
 Ebbs slowly away.
 Darkening the fringes of these western glories
 The black phantasmagories
 Of cloud advance
 With noiseless footing—vague and villainous shapes,
 Wrapped in their ragged fustian capes,
 Of some grotesque romance.
 But overhead where, like a pool between
 Dark rocks, the sky is green
 And clear and deep,
 Floats windlessly a cloud, with curving breast
 Flushed by the fiery west,
 In god-like sleep . . .
 And in my mind opens a sudden door
 That lets me see once more
 A little room
 With night beyond the window, chill and damp,
 And one green-lighted lamp
 Tempering the gloom,
 While here within, close to me, touching me
 (Even the memory
 Of my desire
 Shakes me like fear), you sit with scattered hair;
 And all your body bare
 Before the fire
 Is lapped about with rosy flame. . . . But still,
 Here on the lonely hill,
 I walk alone;
 Silvery green is the moon's lamp overhead,
 The cloud sleeps warm and red,
 And you are gone.

Charles Hamilton Sorley

CHARLES HAMILTON SORLEY, who promised great things, was born at Old Aberdeen in May, 1895. Son of Professor Sorley of Cambridge, he studied at Marlborough College and University College, Oxford. He was finishing his studies abroad and was on a walking-tour along the banks of the Moselle when war came. Sorley returned home to receive an immediate commission in the 7th Battalion of the Suffolk Regiment. In August, 1915, at the age of twenty, he was made a captain. On October 13, 1915, he was killed in action near Hulluch.

Jingoism, violent propaganda, falsely patriotic slogans could not obscure his piercing vision. "There is no such thing as a just war," he wrote. "What we are doing is casting out Satan by Satan." At nineteen, while he was training at Shorncliffe, he dared to write, "England—I am sick of the sound of the word. In training to fight for England, I am training to fight for that deliberate hypocrisy, that terrible middle-class sloth of outlook and appalling 'imaginative indolence' that has marked us out from generation to generation. . . . Indeed I think that after the War all brave men will renounce their country and confess that they are strangers and pilgrims on the earth." Such electrifying sentences, as well as his independent appreciations of Masefield, Richard Jefferies, and Thomas Hardy, are to be found in the posthumous Letters of Charles Sorley (1919). These letters perform the same service to Sorley the poet as the letters of Keats perform in rounding out that greater poet who also died at the beginning of manhood.

Sorley left but one book, Marlborough and Other Poems, a posthumous collection, edited by his father, published in 1916. The verse contained in it is sometimes rough but never rude. Although he admired Masefield, loveliness rather than liveliness was his aim. Restraint, tolerance, and a dignity unusual for a boy of twenty distinguish his verse. There is scarcely a line in Sorley's work which does not breathe the spirit of compelling exaltation.

Whether it blows with breezy youth in "The Song of the Ungirt Runners" or burns with steady ardor in the sonnets, his poetry is, in the fullest sense, radiant. What Sorley might have accomplished is apparent though indefinable. He died before he was twenty-one.

TWO SONNETS

I

Saints have adored the lofty soul of you.
Poets have whitened at your high renown.
We stand among the many millions who
Do hourly wait to pass your pathway down.

You, so familiar, once were strange: we tried
To live as of your presence unaware.
But now in every road on every side
We see your straight and steadfast signpost there.

I think it like that signpost in my land
Hoary and tall, which pointed me to go
Upward, into the hills, on the right hand,
Where the mists swim and the winds shriek and blow,
A homeless land and friendless, but a land
I did not know and that I wished to know.

II

Such, such is Death: no triumph: no defeat:
Only an empty pail, a slate rubbed clean,
A merciful putting away of what has been.

And this we know: Death is not Life effete,
Life crushed, the broken pail. We who have seen
So marvelous things know well the end not yet.

Victor and vanquished are a-one in death:
 Coward and brave: friend, foe. Ghosts do not say,
 "Come, what was your record when you drew breath?"
 But a big blot has hid each yesterday
 So poor, so manifestly incomplete.
 And your bright Promise, withered long and sped,
 Is touched; stirs, rises, opens and grows sweet
 And blossoms and is you, when you are dead.

THE SONG OF THE UNGIRT RUNNERS

We swing ungirded hips,
 And lightened are our eyes,
 The rain is on our lips,
 We do not run for prize.
 We know not whom we trust
 Nor whitherward we fare,
 But we run because we must
 Through the great wide air.

The waters of the seas
 Are troubled as by storm.
 The tempest strips the trees
 And does not leave them warm.
 Does the tearing tempest pause?
 Do the tree tops ask it why?
 So we run without a cause
 'Neath the big bare sky.

The rain is on our lips,
 We do not run for prize.
 But the storm the water whips
 And the wave howls to the skies.
 The winds arise and strike it
 And scatter it like sand,
 And we run because we like it
 Through the broad bright land.

TO GERMANY

You are blind like us. Your hurt no man designed,
 And no man claimed the conquest of your land.
 But gropers both, through fields of thought confined,
 We stumble and we do not understand.
 You only saw your future bigly planned,
 And we the tapering paths of our own mind,
 And in each other's dearest ways we stand,
 And hiss and hate. And the blind fight the blind.

When it is peace, then we may view again
 With new-won eyes each other's truer form

And wonder. Grown more loving-kind and warm
 We'll grasp firm hands and laugh at the old pain,
 When it is peace. But until peace, the storm,
 The darkness and the thunder and the rain.

R O O K S

There where the rusty iron lies,
 The rooks are cawing all the day.
 Perhaps no man, until he dies,
 Will understand them, what they say.

The evening makes the sky like clay.
 The slow wind waits for night to rise.
 The world is half content. But they Still trouble all the trees with cries,

 That know, and cannot put away,
 The yearning to the soul that flies
 From day to night, from night to day.

ALL THE HILLS AND VALES

All the hills and vales along
 Earth is bursting into song,
 And the singers are the chaps
 Who are going to die perhaps.
 O sing, marching men,
 Till the valleys ring again.
 Give your gladness to earth's keeping,
 So be glad, when you are sleeping.

Cast away regret and rue,
 Think what you are marching to.
 Little live, great pass.
 Jesus Christ and Barabbas
 Were found the same day.
 This died, that went his way.
 So sing with joyful breath.
 For why, you are going to death.
 Teeming earth will surely store
 All the gladness that you pour.

Earth that never doubts nor fears,
 Earth that knows of death, not tears,
 Earth that bore with joyful ease
 Hemlock for Socrates,
 Earth that blossomed and was glad
 'Neath the cross that Christ had,

Shall rejoice and blossom too
 When the bullet reaches you.
 Wherefore, men marching
 On the road to death, sing!
 Pour your gladness on earth's head,
 So be merry, so be dead.

From the hills and valleys earth
 Shouts back the sound of mirth,
 Tramp of feet and lilt of song
 Ringing all the road along.
 Ringing, swinging, glad song-throwing,
 Earth will echo still when foot
 Lies numb and voice mute.

On, marching men, on
 To the gates of death with song.
 Sow your gladness for earth's reaping,
 So you may be glad, though sleeping.
 Strew your gladness on earth's bed,
 So be merry, so be dead.

Robert Graves

ROBERT (RANKE) GRAVES, son of the Irish poet and song-writer Alfred Percival Graves, was born July 26, 1895. He was educated at Charterhouse and Oxford, after which he joined the British Expeditionary Force and served three times in France, in the same regiment as Siegfried Sassoon. His activities were as numerous as incongruous. He won a prize at the Olympic games, lost his capital as an unsuccessful shopkeeper, was the biographer of Colonel T. E. Lawrence, and taught literature in Cairo.

Graves was one of the writers who, roused by the War and giving himself to his country, refused to glorify warfare or chant new hymns of hate. Like Sassoon, Graves reacted against the storm of fury and blood-lust, but, fortified by a lighter and more whimsical spirit, where Sassoon is violent, Graves is volatile; where Sassoon grew bitter, Graves was almost blithe in his irony.

An easy gayety rises from Fairies and Fusiliers (1917), a surprising and healing humor that is warmly individual. In Country Sentiment (1919) Graves turns to a more rustic simplicity. But a buoyant fancy ripples beneath the most archaic of his ballads and a quaintly original turn of mind saves them from their own echoes.

With Country Sentiment, Graves, so one was ready to believe, had established his characteristics. His gift was charming rather than startling, playful and lightly macabre rather than profound; qualities, which, while not those of a great poet, were distinctly those of an enjoyable one. The young poet seemed happy in his combinations (and mutations) of two traditionally English forms: the ballad and the Mother Goose rhyme. "A Frosty Night," "Star-Talk," "True Johnny," "It's a Queer Time," "Neglectful Edward," "I Wonder What It Feels Like to Be Drowned?" are some of the measures written out of a surplus and careless fertility, with little effort, scarcely with thought, and with one eye winking at the Nursery.

But Thought, that enemy of the lyric impulse, spread her theory-spun snare for Graves and soon he was laboring in her toils. He began to analyze, pare, probe, to examine ways, means and the creative process—his own as well as others'. No less than seven volumes were devoted to interpretation and technique; On English Poetry (1922), The Meaning of Dreams (1924), Poetic Unreason (1925), Contemporary Techniques of Poetry (1925), Another Future of Poetry (1926), A Survey of Modernist Poetry, the last in collaboration with Laura Riding (1928). His volumes of verse during this period reflect changing preoccupations. The Pier Glass (1921), Whipperginn (1923), Mock Beggar Hall (1924), Welchman's Hose (1925), The Marmosite's Miscellany, issued pseudonymously as by "John Doyle" (1925), turn from fancy to philosophy, from philosophy to metaphysics, from Skelton to Freud.

One sees the kaleidoscopic shifts only too plainly in Collected Poems 1914-1926 and Poems—1929 (1929) where the whimsical vein and amatory moods run through war-verse and "poems of unrest and transition" to the heavily intellectual and awkwardly involved. The later Graves is scarcely the poet who once nonchalantly wrote:

May sudden justice overtake
And snap the foward pen,
That old and palsied poets shake
Against the minds of men.

Blasphemers trusting to hold caught
In far-flung webs of ink
The utmost ends of human thought
Till nothing's left to think.

But may the gift of heavenly peace
And glory for all time
Keep the boy Tom who, tending geese,
First made the nursery rhyme.

Thus the early Graves (circa 1916) seems to be admonishing—and with good reason—the mature but unstabilized experimentalist, who, some dozen years later, attempts the dislocations of James Joyce, echoes Gertrude Stein, and flounders in a morass of speculations. Graves began as one who had simplicity rather than acquired simplesse. He was a true innocent. By taking thought unsuited to his intuitive temperament he did not increase his stature. He lost innocence without gaining wisdom.

Much of this intellectual and emotional indecision is reflected in Good-by to All That (1930). In this exciting and candid autobiography, Graves (as is made plain by more than the title) waves a public farewell to his youth. Without bitterness or bravado, the poet, like his friends Sassoon and Blunden, describes the horror of an offensive, the drudgery of trench-life, the abuses of officialdom, intensifying his pages with a hatred of injustice in any form. Unlike his fellows, he is even more candid in revealing the stress of his personal—and highly private—encounters.

Good-by to All That may, as a reviewer implied, "suffer little from that instinctive good taste which is to the twentieth century the unpardonable sin," but, in its undeviating honesty, it rounds and completes not only the portrait of a poet but of a period.

Graves was always interested in reconstructed literature and history. He "condensed" Dickens' David Copperfield in 1933. In his fortieth year this penchant was reënforced by shrewdly selected and boldly interpreted research to compose his most popular book: I, Claudius (1934), a quasi-biography. It was followed within a year by the equally successful Claudius the God.

NEGLECTFUL EDWARD

Nancy

Edward, back from the Indian Sea,
"What have you brought for Nancy?"

Edward

"A rope of pearls and a gold earring,
And a bird of the East that will not sing.
A carven tooth, a box with a key—"

Nancy

"God be praised you are back," says she,
"Have you nothing more for your Nancy?"

Edward

"Long as I sailed the Indian Sea
I gathered all for your fancy:
Toys and silk and jewels I bring,
And a bird of the East that will not sing:
What more can you want, dear girl, from me?"

Nancy

"God be praised you are back," said she,
"Have you nothing better for Nancy?"

Edward

"Safe and home from the Indian Sea,
And nothing to take your fancy?"

Nancy

"You can keep your pearls and your gold earring,
And your bird of the East that will not sing,
But, Ned, have you nothing more for me
Than heathenish gew-gaw toys?" says she,
"Have you nothing better for Nancy?"

IT'S A QUEER TIME

It's hard to know if you're alive or dead
When steel and fire go roaring through your head.

One moment you'll be crouching at your gun
 Traversing, mowing heaps down half in fun:
 The next, you choke and clutch at your right breast—
 No time to think—leave all—and off you go . . .
 To Treasure Island where the Spice winds blow,
 To lovely groves of mango, quince and lime—
 Breathe no good-by, but ho, for the Red West!
 It's a queer time.

You're charging madly at them yelling "Fag!"
 When somehow something gives and your feet drag.
 You fall and strike your head; yet feel no pain
 And find . . . you're digging tunnels through the hay
 In the Big Barn, 'cause it's a rainy day.
 Oh, springy hay, and lovely beams to climb!
 You're back in the old sailor suit again.
 It's a queer time.

Or you'll be dozing safe in your dug-out—
 A great roar—the trench shakes and falls about—
 You're struggling, gasping, struggling, then . . . hullo!
 Elsie comes tripping gayly down the trench,
 Hanky to nose—that lyddite makes a stench—
 Getting her pinafore all over grime.
 Funny! because she died ten years ago!
 It's a queer time.

The trouble is, things happen much too quick;
 Up jump the Boches, rifles thump and click,
 You stagger, and the whole scene fades away:
 Even good Christians don't like passing straight
 From Tipperary or their Hymn of Hate
 To Alleluiah-chanting, and the chime
 Of golden harps . . . and . . . I'm not well today . . .
 It's a queer time.

A PINCH OF SALT

When a dream is born in you
 With a sudden clamorous pain,
 When you know the dream is true
 And lovely, with no flaw nor stain,
 O then, be careful, or with sudden clutch
 You'll hurt the delicate thing you prize so much.

Dreams are like a bird that mocks,
 Flirting the feathers of his tail.
 When you seize at the salt box,
 Over the hedge you'll see him sail.
 Old birds are neither caught with salt nor chaff:
 They watch you from the apple bough and laugh.

Poet, never chase the dream.
 Laugh yourself, and turn away.
 Mask your hunger; let it seem
 Small matter if he come or stay;
 But when he nestles in your hand at last,
 Close up your fingers tight and hold him fast.

S T A R - T A L K

"Are you awake, Gemelli,
 This frosty night?"
 "We'll be awake till revéille,
 Which is Sunrise," say the Gemelli,
 "It's no good trying to go to sleep:
 If there's wine to be got we'll drink it deep,
 But sleep is gone tonight,
 But sleep is gone tonight."

"Are you cold too, poor Pleiads,
 This frosty night?"
 "Yes, and so are the Hyads:
 See us cuddle and hug," say the Pleiads,
 "All six in a ring: it keeps us warm:
 We huddle together like birds in a storm:
 It's bitter weather tonight,
 It's bitter weather tonight."

"What do you hunt, Orion,
 This starry night?"
 "The Ram, the Bull and the Lion,
 And the Great Bear," says Orion,
 "With my starry quiver and beautiful belt
 I am trying to find a good thick pelt
 To warm my shoulders tonight,
 To warm my shoulders tonight."

"Did you hear that, Great She-bear,
 This frosty night?"
 "Yes, he's talking of stripping me bare
 Of my own big fur," says the She-bear,
 "I'm afraid of the man and his terrible arrow:
 The thought of it chills my bones to the marrow,
 And the frost so cruel tonight!
 And the frost so cruel tonight!"

"How is your trade, Aquarius,
 This frosty night?"
 "Complaints is many and various
 And my feet are cold," says Aquarius,
 "There's Venus objects to Dolphin-scales,
 And Mars to Crab-spawn found in my pails,
 And the pump has frozen tonight,
 And the pump has frozen tonight."

I WONDER WHAT IT FEELS LIKE TO BE DROWNED?

Look at my knees,
 That island rising from the steamy seas!
 The candle's a tall lightship; my two hands
 Are boats and barges anchored to the sands,
 With mighty cliffs all round;
 They're full of wine and riches from far lands. . . .
I wonder what it feels like to be drowned?

I can make caves,
 By lifting up the island and huge waves
 And storms, and then with head and ears well under Blow bubbles with a monstrous roar like thunder,
 A bull-of-Bashan sound.
 The seas run high and the boats split asunder . . .
I wonder what it feels like to be drowned?

The thin soap slips
 And slithers like a shark under the ships.
 My toes are on the soap dish—that's the effect
 Of my huge storms; an iron steamer's wrecked.
 The soap slides round and round;
 He's biting the old sailors, I expect . . .
I wonder what it feels like to be drowned?

ESCAPE

(August 6, 1916. Officer Previously Reported Died of Wounds, Now Reported Wounded Graves, Capt. R., Royal Welsh Fusiliers)

. . . But I was dead, an hour or more:
 I woke when I'd already passed the door
 That Cerberus guards and half-way down the road
 To Lethe, as an old Greek sign-post showed.
 Above me, on my stretcher swinging by,
 I saw new stars in the sub-terrene sky,
 A Cross, a Rose in Bloom, a Cage with Bars,
 And a barbed Arrow feathered with fine stars.
 I felt the vapors of forgetfulness
 Float in my nostrils: Oh, may Heaven bless
 Dear Lady Proserpine, who saw me wake
 And, stooping over me, for Henna's sake
 Cleared my poor buzzing head and sent me back
 Breathless, with leaping heart along the track.
 After me roared and clattered angry hosts
 Of demons, heroes, and policemen-ghosts.
 "Life, life! I can't be dead, I won't be dead:
 Damned if I'll die for anyone," I said . . .
 Cerberus stands and grins above me now,
 Wearing three heads, lion and lynx and sow.

"Quick, a revolver! but my Webley's gone, Stolen . . . no bombs . . . no knife . . . (the crowd swarms on, Bellows, hurls stones) . . . not even a honeyed sop . . .
 Nothing . . . Good Cerberus . . . Good dog . . . But stop!
 Stay! . . . A great luminous thought . . . I do believe
 There's still some morphia that I bought on leave."
 Then swiftly Cerberus' wide mouths I cram
 With Army biscuit smeared with Tickler's jam;
 And Sleep lurks in the luscious plum and apple.
 He crunches, swallows, stiffens, seems to grapple
 With the all-powerful poppy . . . then a snore,
 A crash; the beast blocks up the corridor
 With monstrous hairy carcase, red and dun—
 Too late: for I've sped through.

O Life! O Sun!

THE TRAVELER'S CURSE AFTER MISDIRECTION
(from the Welsh)

May they wander stage by stage
 Of the same vain pilgrimage,
 Stumbling on, age after age,
 Night and day, mile after mile,
 At each and every step, a stile;
 At each and every stile, withal,
 May they catch their feet and fall;
 At each and every fall they take,
 May a bone within them break;
 And may the bones that break within
 Not be, for variation's sake,
 Now rib, now thigh, now arm, now shin,
 But always, without fail, THE NFCK.

SONG: ONE HARD LOOK

Small gnats that fly
 In hot July
 And lodge in sleeping ears,
 Can rouse therein
 A trumpet's din
 With Day of Judgment fears.

Small mice at night
 Can wake more fright
 Than lions at midday.
 A straw will crack
 The camel's back;
 There is no easier way.

One smile relieves
 A heart that grieves
 Though deadly sad it be,
 And one hard look
 Can close the book
 That lovers love to see.

A FROSTY NIGHT

Mother
 Alice, dear, what ails you,
 Dazed and white and shaken?
 Has the chill night numbed you?
 Is it fright you have taken?

Alice
 Mother, I am very well,
 I felt never better,
 Mother, do not hold me so,
 Let me write my letter.

Mother
 Sweet, my dear, what ails you?

Alice
 No, but I am well;
 The night was cold and frosty,
 There's no more to tell.

Mother
 Aye, the night was frosty,
 Coldly gaped the moon,
 Yet the birds seemed twittering
 Through green boughs of June.

Soft and thick the snow lay,
Stars danced in the sky.
Not all the lambs of May-day
Skip so bold and high.

Your feet were dancing, Alice,
Seemed to dance on air,
You looked a ghost or angel
In the starlight there.

Your eyes were frosted starlight,
Your heart fire and snow.
Who was it said, "I love you"?

Alice

Mother, let me go!

IN THE WILDERNESS

Christ of His gentleness
Thirsting and hungering,
Walked in the wilderness;
Soft words of grace He spoke
Unto lost desert-folk
That listened wondering.

He heard the bitterns call
From ruined palace-wall,
Answered them brotherly.
He held communion
With the she-pelican
Of lonely piety.
Basilisk, cockatrice,
Flocked to his homilies,
With mail of dread device,
With monstrous barbèd slings,
With eager dragon-eyes;
Great bats on leathern wings
And poor blind broken things,
Foul in their miseries.
And ever with Him went,
Of all His wanderings
Comrade, with ragged coat,
Gaunt ribs—poor innocent—
Bleeding foot, burning throat,
The guileless old scapegoat;
For forty nights and days
Followed in Jesus' ways,
Sure guard behind Him kept,
Tears like a lover wept.

A FORCED MUSIC

Of Love he sang, full hearted one,
But when the song was done,
The King demanded more,
Aye, and commanded more.
The boy found nothing for encore,
Words, melodies—none,
Ashamed the song's glad rise and plaintive fall
Had so charmed King and Queen and all.

He sang the same verse once again
But urging less Love's pain.
With altered time and key
He showed variety,
Seemed to refresh the harmony
Of his only strain,
So still the glad rise and the plaintive fall
Could charm the King, the Queen and all.

He of his song then wearying ceased,
But was not yet released:
The Queen's request was "More,"
And her behest was "More."

He played of random notes some score,
 Then suddenly let his twangling harp down fall
 And fled in tears from King and Queen and all.

LOST LOVE

His eyes are quickened so with grief,
 He can watch a grass or leaf
 Every instant grow; he can
 Clearly through a flint wall see,
 Or watch the startled spirit flee
 From the throat of a dead man:
 Across two counties he can hear,
 And catch your words before you speak;
 The woodlouse or the maggot's weak
 Clamor rings in his sad ear;
 And noise so slight it would surpass
 Credence:—drinking sound of grass,
 Worm-talk, clashing jaws of moth
 Chumbling tiny holes in cloth:
 The groan of ants who undertake
 Gigantic loads for honor's sake,
 Their sinews creak, their breath comes thin:
 Whir of spiders when they spin,
 And minute, whispering, mumbling sighs
 Of idle grubs and flies.
 This man is quickened so with grief,
 He wanders god-like or like thief
 Inside and out, below, above,
 Without relief seeking lost love.

L. A. G. Strong

LEONARD A. G. STRONG was born on March 8, 1896, in the parish of Plympton, in Devon. "One of his parents," Strong informed the editor some years ago, "is Irish, the other is half English and half Irish, so that he is fairly entitled to describe himself as a mongrel. He spent his childhood partly on Southern Dartmoor and partly on the borders between Dublin and Wicklow. From a preparatory school at Plymouth, he went with a scholarship to Brighton College, and thence, five years later, won an open Classical Scholarship at Wadham College, Oxford. Illness interrupting his career, he finally graduated in 1920 and taught at Summer Fields, a famous preparatory school near Oxford. Delicate health has confined him to a spectator's part in his favorite sports. Swimming is the only form of violent exercise he has been able to keep up—perhaps because, as legend has it, one of his ancestors, Teig Riarach O'Dowda, King of Connaught, captured and married a mermaid, thereby endowing his descendants with a taste for the sea!"

Strong is known in America chiefly through his Dublin Days (1921), a small volume of shrewd appraisals, in which satire nudges characterization. The Lowery Road (1923) depends for its effect less on humor and more on exaltation. Without sacrificing originality of speech, Strong summons the spirit of the English countryside in these terse Dartmoor lyrics. Besides the celebration of Strong's native Devon, the author has written poetry which is by no means local; his Eight Poems, privately distributed at Christmas 1923, show him capable of supporting himself in somewhat higher flights. Later Strong distinguished himself as a shrewd compiler of anthologies of magazine verse. His first novel, Dewer Rides, was published in America as one of Paper Books in 1929 and considerably enlarged his audience.

In 1930 Strong left Oxford and teaching, came down to London and there established himself as the author of a successful set of novels, the best of which (up to 1935) are Dewer Rides, The Garden, The Brothers, and The Seven Arms. A pamphlet of his later lyrics, March Evening, was issued in 1932, containing two of his gravest interpretations.

OLD DAN'L

Out of his cottage to the sun
Bent double comes old Dan'l,
His chest all over cotton wool,
His back all over flannel.

"Winter will finish him," they've said
Each winter now for ten
But come the first warm day of Spring
Old Dan'l's out again.

ZEKE

Gnarly and bcnt and deaf's a pos',
Pore old Ezckiel Purvis
Goeth crippin' slowly up the 'ill
To the Commoonion Survis.

And tappy, tappy up the haistle
Goeth stick and brassy ferule:
And Passen<sup>1</sup> 'ath to stoopy down
An' 'oller in ees yerole.

AN OLD WOMAN, OUTSIDE THE ABBEY THEATER

In this Theayter they has plays
On us, and high-up people comes

<sup>1</sup> Person.

And pays to see things playin' here
They'd run like hell from in the slums.

RUFUS PRAYS

In the darkening church
Where but a few had stayed
At the Litany Desk
The idiot knelt and prayed.

Rufus, stunted, uncouth,
The one son of his mother.
"Eh, I'd sooner 'ave Rufie,"
She said, "than many another:

" 'E's useful about the 'ouse,
And so gentle as 'e can be.
An' 'e gets up early o' mornin'
And makes me a cup o' tea."

The formal evensong
Had passed over his head:
He sucked his thumb, and squinted,
And dreamed, instead.

Now while the organ boomed
To the few who still were there,
At the Litany Desk
The idiot made his prayer:

"Gawd bless Mother,
 'N make Rufie a good lad:
 Take Rufie to Heaven
 'N forgive him when 'e's bad.

"'N early mornin's in Heaven
 'E'll make mother's tea,
 'N a cup for the Lord Jesus
 'N a cup for Thee."

THE MAD WOMAN OF PUNNET'S TOWN

A-swell within her billowed skirts
 Like a great ship with sails unfurled,
 The mad woman goes gallantly
 Upon the ridges of her world.

With eagle nose and wisps of gray
 She strides upon the westward hills,
 Swings her umbrella joyously
 And waves it to the waving mills.

Talking and chuckling as she goes
 Indifferent both to sun and rain,
 With all that merry company:
 The singing children of her brain.

LOWERY COT

This is the house where Jesse White
 Run staring in one misty night,
 And said he seed the Holy Ghost
 Out to Lowery finger-post.

Said It rised up like a cloud
 Muttering to Itself out loud,
 And stood tremendous on the hill
 While all the breathing world was still.

They put en shivering to bed,
 And in three days the man was dead.
 Gert solemn visions such as they
 Be overstrong for mortal clay.

THE DOOR

One in the boat cried out
 Pointing to land,
 For the sun leaped clear of the mist

And a rainbow spanned
 With one vast arch the mountain, the trees, and the sand.

The mountain stood like a huge
 Ghost in a cloud;
 The startled trees were caught
 In a wavering crowd;
 And the four in their glittering oilskins cried aloud

As that pure and soaring arch
 More marvelous grew,
 And the sandhills stared beneath it
 Wild and new,
 And down the unearthly beaches lamenting flew

Gull upon gull distraught
 Blown through that Door,
 Handful on handful flung
 High over the shore.
 Such desperate beauty they never had seen before.

MARCH EVENING

This pool, the quiet sky,
 Is rippled with a chime.
 Night gathers, and the cry
 Of lambs in the far fold
 Comes to us as we climb:
 The moorland air is cold.

Ghost-pale the grass, and bare
 The bowlder-scattered crest.
 A frightened rabbit starts—
 With quickening eyes and hearts
 We turn about, and stare
 Into the open west.

The Cornish hills lie small,
 So huge the sky has grown.
 We can look down on all
 Western and southern ground,
 And see the Eddystone,
 Pricking the seaward pall,
 Wink over Plymouth Sound.

Below us, dim and deep,
 Mist-hidden, murmuring,

The valley winds away:
Beneath its shadow Spring
Lies light asleep
In dreams of coming day,
With cuckoos on the wing
And steep banks blossoming.

Again the quiet sky
Is troubled with a chime
That spreads in rings of sound.
We sigh, and think, What rhyme
That man has ever bound
Can hold a sigh?

Edmund Blunden

EDMUND (c.) BLUNDEN was born in 1896, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford. During the War he served as lieutenant in the Royal Sussex Regiment. His bucolic poems were a direct revulsion from his experiences as a soldier. In 1916 he published three small volumes of pastorals which appeared as one book, The Wagoner and other Poems, in 1920. In the same year, he edited, with Alan Porter, The Poems of John Clare, most of the verses being deciphered from a mass of old manuscript. Two years later, he published The Shepherd (1922), which was awarded the Hawthornden Prize for that year. He was Professor of English Literature at Tokio University from 1924 to 1927.

The most casual glance at his volumes discloses that Blunden's use of the pastoral note is not, as it is with some of his contemporaries, a mere literary device. Here, the verse is gnarled and twisted as the bent trees of which he loves to write; there is rude country air in his lines and even the words have the smell of apple orchards. It has been objected that Blunden depends too often on unusual and obsolescent terms, but—as Robert Bridges wrote in a pamphlet on The Dialectical Words in Blunden's Poems (1921)—“his poetry cannot be imagined without them, and the strength and beauty of the effects must be estimated in his successes and not in his failures.”

Blunden's subsequent poetry is milder; a softness but not a flabbiness of texture clothes To Nature (1923), Masks of Time (1925) and Retreat (1928). These verses, lacking the earthy flavor of the early poems, lose the spiciness that dialect confers, but they retain the contemplative quality of Blunden's mind and a dignity which inheres both in the tradition and in the man. Near and Far (1929), on the other hand, is composed of pretty trifles which did Blunden's reputation no good. The contents, betraying a monotonous solemnity, are, as Peter Quennell remarked, “a drowsy methodical grinding out of familiar tunes.”

In spite of his attainments, Blunden remained known to only a small circle until 1929. In that year he published his large prose work, Undertones of War, which was received with instant enthusiasm in Europe and America and took its place among such vivid anti-militaristic documents as Remarque's All Quiet on the Western Front, Zweig's The Case of Sergeant Grischa, Hemingway's A Farewell to Arms, and E. E. Cummings' The Enormous Room.

The Poems of Edmund Blunden (1932) collects all the poetry written by Blunden between 1914 and 1930. Nature and war are the chief themes and, though one sometimes wishes for more abandon, no reader can be deaf to the admirable diction and the grave music. Poems: 1930-1940 (1941) reflect the author's gentle clarity, but they suffer from his obsession with vanished innocence and memories of things past.

(For the definitions appended to the following poems, thanks must be given to the late Robert Bridges, whose skill as etymologist can scarcely be overrated.)

THE POOR MAN'S PIG

Already fallen plum-bloom stars the green
 And apple-boughs as knarred<sup>1</sup> as old toads' backs
 Wear their small roses ere a rose is seen;
 The building-thrush watches old Job who stacks

The bright-peeled osiers on the sunny fence,
 The pent sow grunts to hear him stumping by,
 And tries to push the bolt and scamper thence,
 But her ringed snout still keeps her to the sty.

Then out he lets her run; away she snorts
 In bundling gallop for the cottage door,
 With hungry hubbub begging crusts and orts.<sup>2</sup>
 Then like a whirlwind bumping round once more;
 Nuzzling the dog, making the pullets run,
 And sulky as a child when her play's done.

A COUNTRY GOD

When groping farms are lantered up
 And stolchy<sup>3</sup> plowlands hid in grief,
 And glimmering byroads catch the drop
 That weeps from sprawling twig and leaf,
 And heavy-hearted spins the wind
 Among the tattered flags of Mirth,—
 Then who but I flit to and fro,
 With shuddering speech, with mope and mow,
 And glass the eyes of earth?

Then haunt I by some moaning brook
 Where lank and snaky brambles swim,
 Or where the hill pines swartly look
 I whirry<sup>4</sup> through the dark and hymn
 A dull-voiced dirge and threnody,
 An echo of the sad world's drone
 That now appals the friendly stars—
 O wail for blind brave youth, whose wars
 Turn happiness to stone.

<sup>1</sup> Knarred, a word meaning "wrinkled," is a country-cousin to our "gnarled."

<sup>3</sup> Stolchy is such an excellent onomatopoeic word that it scarcely needs explanation. But there is an old English verb stolch "to tread down in wet land or mud"

<sup>4</sup> Whirry is another sound-word, not to be confused with "worry." It means "to fly rapidly with noise"—a combination of "whir" and "hurry."

How rang the cavern-shades of old
 To my melodious pipes, and then
 My bright-haired bergomask patrolled
 Each lawn and plot for laughter's din:
 Never a sower flung broadcast,
 No hedger brished<sup>1</sup> nor scythesman swung,
 Nor maiden trod the purpling press,
 But I was by to guard and bless
 And for their solace sung.

But now the sower's hand is writhed
 In livid death, the bright rhythm stolen,
 The gold grain flattened and unscythed,
 The boars in the vineyard, gnarled and sullen,
 Havocking the grapes; and the pouncing wind
 Spins the spattered leaves of the glen
 In a mockery dance, death's hue-and-cry;
 With all my murmurous pipes flung by
 And summer not to come again.

THE BARN

Rain-sunken roof, grown green and thin
 For sparrows' nests and starlings' nests;
 Disheveled eaves; unwieldy doors,
 Cracked rusty pump, and oaken floors,
 And idly-penciled names and jests
 Upon the posts within.

The light pales at the spider's lust,
 The wind tangs<sup>2</sup> through the shattered pane:
 An empty hop-poke spreads across
 The gaping frame to mend the loss
 And keeps out sun as well as rain,
 Mildewed with clammy dust.

The smell of apples stored in hay
 And homely cattle-cake is there.
 Use and disuse have come to terms,
 The walls are hollowed out by worms,
 But men's feet keep the mid-floor bare
 And free from worse decay.

All merry noise of hens astir
 Or sparrows squabbling on the roof
 Comes to the barn's broad open door;

You hear upon the stable floor
 Old hungry Dapple strike his hoof,
 And the blue fan-tail's whir.

The barn is old, and very old,
 But not a place of spectral fear.
 Cobwebs and dust and speckling sun
 Come to old buildings every one.
 Long since they made their dwelling here,
 And here you may behold

Nothing but simple wane and change;
 Your tread will wake no ghost, your voice
 Will fall on silence undeterred.
 No phantom wailing will be heard,
 Only the farm's blithe cheerful noise;
 The barn is old, not strange.

EASTERN TEMPEST

This flying angel's torrent cry
 Will hurl the mountains through the sky!
 A wind like fifty winds at once
 Through the bedragoned kingdom runs,
 And hissing rain slants icy stings
 At many a wretch afield who clings

<sup>2</sup> Tangs—an old term (differing from our word meaning "taste") denoting a barb or a sting. Blunden uses it here as a verb.

His cloak of straw, with glistening spines
Like a prodigious porcupine's.
The reptile grasses by his path
Wind sleek as unction from that Wrath
Which with its glassy claw uproots
The broad-leaved kun, flays and loots
Torn and sprung sinews, leaves for dead
The young crops with the shining head,
While blotched blunt melons darkly dot
The slaughtered swathes like cannon-shot.
The lotus in the pond upheaves
Its sacred, slow, appealing leaves,
And many a bush with wrestling jerk
Defies the demon's murderous work—
Yet nature stares white-lipped, to read
In Chance's eye what desperate deed?
A kinder god discerns, replies,
And stills the land's storm-shouts to sighs;
The clouds in massy folds apart
Disclose the day's bright bleeding heart,
Huge plumes and scarves black-tossing wide
As if a Kubla Khan had died!
From flame to flame the vision glows,
Till all the pools of heaven unclose
The lotus-light, the hue, the balm
Of wisdom infinitely calm.

THE MIDNIGHT SKATERS

The hop-poles stand in cones,
The icy pond lurks under,
The pole-tops touch the star-gods' thrones
And sound the gulfs of wonder,
But not the tallest there, 'tis said,
Could fathom to this pond's black bed.

Then is not Death at watch
Within those secret waters?
What wants he but to catch
Earth's heedless sons and daughters?
With but a crystal parapet
Between, he has his engines set.

Then on, blood shouts, on, on,
Twirl, wheel and whip above him,

Dance on this ball-floor thin and wan,
Use him as though you love him;
Court him, elude him, reel and pass,
And let him hate you through the glass.

THE RECOVERY

From the dark mood's control
I free this man; there's light still in the West.
The most virtuous, chaste, melodious soul
Never was better blest.

Here medicine for the mind
Lies in a gilded shade; this feather stirs
And my faith lives; the touch of this tree's
- rind,—
And temperate sense recurs.

No longer the loud pursuit
Of self-made clamors dulls the ear; here dwell
Twilight societies, twig, fungus, root,
Soundless, and speaking well.

Beneath the accustomed dome
Of this chance-planted, many-centuried tree
The snake-marked earthy multitudes are come
To breathe their hour like me.

The leaf comes curling down,
Another and another, gleam on gleam;
Above, celestial leafage glistens on,
Borne by time's blue stream.

The meadow-stream will serve
For my refreshment; that high glory yields
Imaginings that slay; the safe paths curve
Through unexalted fields

Like these, where now no more
My early angels walk and call and fly,
But the mouse stays his nibbling, to explore
My eye with his bright eye.

Sacheverell Sitwell

SACHEVERELL SITWELL, brother of Edith and Osbert Sitwell, was born in 1897 at Scarborough and educated at Eton. As soon as he was of military age, he joined the Grenadier Guards as second lieutenant. After the War he attended Balliol College, Oxford, for a short time, but came to London before completing his courses, confining his activities to literature.

From the first, his poetry was experimental, but even the early The People's Palace contained his gesture. The Hundred and One Harlequins (1922) and The Thirteenth Caesar (1924) are less dependent on influences, although the accents of such dissimilar poets as Vachel Lindsay and T. S. Eliot arise from his pages. Here the youngest of the Sitwells displays a lively imagination, a delight in toying with the subject as well as distorting it, a glittering, if sometimes too self-conscious, cleverness.

His more recent work shows him milder in manner and idiom. Less distinctive than his strepitant sister and brother, he seems to be developing a more traditional vein. His larger efforts would seem to dispute this; "Canons of Giant Art" and "Doctor Donne and Gargantua" are exercises in the approved modern manner. But they are not the poet Try as he will with all the resources of the brain, his art is not in them. His art (and for that manner his heart) finds its response in unaffected song, a group of twenty-five lyrics being the core of The Cyder Feast (1927). Apart from a dissonance or two, an inverted image, a strained or dislocated adjective, these horticultural verses might have been written in the eighteenth century.

It is curious to note how the more modern "modernists" turn their eyes not to formless futurism, but to a precise past. Thus we find T. S. Eliot rediscovering Dryden and Lancelot Andrewes, Humbert Wolfe looting the Greek Anthology, Edith Sitwell turning from Gertrude Stein and Dr. Steiner to pen an introduction to the didactic rhymes of Jane Taylor. And here, in The Cyder Feast, in the midst of the "alchemy of dank leaves," one finds the youngest Sitwell writing "Four Variations upon William Browne of Tavistock," "Variation on a Theme by Robert Herrick," "Variation upon a Couplet of Alexander Pope," "An Adaptation from John Milton." Moreover most of the poems not adapted or "varied" betray accents of a period that is scarcely Sitwellian. "Tulip Tree" and "Kingcups" are two examples among many. Canons of Giant Art (1933) continues the classical "heroic" strain.

The irruption of a kind of architectural fancy is not unnatural in one who has established himself as an ardent appraiser if not an authority on the genesis of the rococo, embodied in his three volumes Southern Baroque Art (1924), German Baroque Art (1927) and The Gothick North (1929).

FOUNTAINS

This night is pure and clear as thrice refined silver.
 Silence, the cape of Death, lies heavy
 Round the bare shoulders of the hills.
 Faint throbs and murmurs

At moments growing to a mutter, then subsiding,
 Fill the night with mystery and panic.
 The honey-tongued arguings of fountains
 Stir the air with flutes and gentle voices.

The graven fountain-masks suffer and weep—
 Curved with a smile, the poor mouths
 Clutch at a half-remembered song
 Striving to forget the agony of ever laughing,—
 Laughing while they hear the secrets
 Echoed from the depths of Earth beneath them.

This half-remembered song—
 This flow of sad-restrained laughter
 Jars with the jets of youthful water
 Springing from the twisted masks,
 For this is but the birth of water;
 And singing joyfully
 It springs upon the world
 And wanders ceaselessly
 Along its jeweled valleys to the sea,
 Rattling like rolls of drums
 The shells and pebbles down its bed.

The endless argument of water ceases,
 A few drops fall heavily, splashing on the marble:
 A Sultan with his treasures
 Seeking to gain the goodwill of his love,
 Pouring before her chains of crackling pearls
 And weeping heavy jealous tears
 Because she will not heed him.

THE RED-GOLD RAIN

(Orange Tree by Day)

Sun and rain at work together
 Ripened this for summer weather;
 Sun gave it color tawny red
 And rain its life as though it bled;
 In the long days full of fire
 Its fruit will cool us when we tire.
 Against the house-wall does it grow
 With smooth stem like a fountain's flow,
 Dark are its leaves, a colder shade
 Than ever rock or mountain made;
 When the wind plays soft they sing,
 For here the birds' songs never ring,
 Quite still the fruit that in a golden shower
 Will fall one day to flood this tower.

"PSITTACHUS EOIS IMITATRIX ALES AB INDIS"—Ovid

The parrot's voice snaps out—
 No good to contradict—
 What he says he'll say again:
 Dry facts, like biscuits,—

His voice and vivid colors
 Of his breast and wings
 Are immemorably old;
 Old dowagers dressed in crimpèd satin
 Boxed in their rooms
 Like specimens beneath a glass
 Inviolate—and never changing,
 Their memory of emotions dead;
 The ardor of their summers

Sprayed like camphor
On their silken parasols
Intissued in a cupboard.

Reflective, but with never a new thought
The parrot sways upon his ivory perch—
Then gravely turns a somersault
Through rings nailed in the roof—
Much as the sun performs his antics
As he climbs the aerial bridge
We only see
Through crystal prisms in a falling rain.

TULIP TREE

Whose candles light the tulip tree?
What is this subtle alchemy,
That builds an altar in one night
And touches the green boughs with light?
Look at the shaped leaves below
And see the scissor-marks they show,
As if a tailor had cut fine
The marking of their every line!

These are no leaves of prudcry
Hiding what all eyes should see;
No Adam and no Eve lie hid
Below this leafy coverlid
The long limbs of that flower-hid girl
Would need no leaves to twist and curl,

The markings of that leaf-hid boy
Want no flowers to mar and cloy.

And so these cut leaves and their lights
Live only for the tulip-rites
At this altar of bright fires
Sweet-scented lest their ardor tires;
Leaf, and flower, and scent are all
Alive for this lit interval:
Between two winters are they born
To make great summer seem forlorn.

KING CUPS

When poetry walked the live, spring wood,
Hid, ghostlike, in the leaves' green hood
She came to a slant fence of sun,
Whose golden timbers, one by one,
Trod into a marsh's toils
And here she stayed her flowery spoils;
But pitying the marshes' plight
She shook her lap and wide and bright
Great kingcups to that waste she threw
Where nothing lived and nothing grew;
Now, where poetry passed, there stays
The light of suns, the fire of days,
And these cups for kings to hold
Make summer with their wide-eyed gold.

THE RIVER GOD

Leap out, chill water, over reeds and brakes,
Flash bright your sword
Out of my hand that never shakes,
Your voice rings louder than my whispered word,
For my song is but a murmur down the wind and water
No louder than the leaves that make my chequered shade,
Cooling the bank on which I'm laid.
My urn I move not, lest the blade may break,
Its round lip no more dropping water,
When this, my river, at its source will die
And sinking through the sand will bare each daughter,
Born of this glassy world, though now they lie
On the green bank high above that falling flood,
And wait like snow for sun or rain to move them.
I could not help them, were my stream to stop,
Until it springs again from out my urn,
But now it floods the pool and wells up high,
Sparkling like the sun's gold eye.

While from this plenitude it flows away
 And hides those nymphs again below its glass.
 Heaped on the hills, till with the sun they flow,
 Safe runs the river now made sure with snow,
 Snow, as those nymphs cool, as white my locks,
 Which, while they also fall, tell time like clocks.

FROM "AGAMEMNON'S TOMB"

One by one, as harvesters, all heavy laden,
 The bees sought their corridor into the dome
 With honey of the asphodel, the flower of death,
 Or thyme, rain-sodden, and more sweet for that;
 Here was their honeycomb, high in the roof,
 I heard sweet summer from their drumming wings,
 Though it wept and rained and was the time of tears;
 They made low music, they murmur'd in the tomb,
 As droning nuns through all a shuttered noon,
 Who prayed in this place of death, and knew it not.

How sweet such death, with honey from the flowers,
 A little air, a little light, and drone of wings,
 To long monotony, to prison of the tomb!
 But he did not know it His bones, picked clean,
 Were any other bones. The trick is in our mind:
 They love not a bed, nor raiment for their bones,
 They are happy on cold stone or in the aching water,
 And neither care, nor care not, they are only dead.
 It once was Agamemnon, and we think him happy:
 O false, false hope! How empty his happiness,
 All for a fine cavern and the hum of bees.

Ruth Pitter

RUTH PITTER was born in Ilford, a village in the Essex forest, November 7, 1897. Daughter of a schoolteacher, she was educated at Coborn School, Bow, London. There (to continue her informal autobiographical note) she learned to cook "and got a certain amount of natural science, and a faint but indelible smear of Latin. Matriculated, and as war came when I was nearly through my Intermediate Arts year, and I had no predilections as regards a career, I went to the War Office and worked for nearly two years at 25 shillings a week." The first World War over, Miss Pitter learned woodwork and painting, went into business, and made a specialty of hand-painted trays. The second World War bombed her shop out of existence.

Ruth Pitter wrote verse at the age of five and published her first book in her twenty-third year. She never had a large popular success, although she was continually acclaimed by her fellow poets. A Trophy of Arms (1936) was prefaced by James Stephens; A Mad Lady's Garland (1935) carried two introductions, one by Hilaire Belloc and the other by the poet laureate John Masefield. Beset by increasing difficulties and an ungenial mental climate, Miss Pitter steadfastly refused to dramatize her conflicts. Calm, even dream-like, the surface of her poetry is deceptive. The texture is smooth and graceful; the idiom is quietly conventional; the statements are seemingly casual. But the craftsmanship is unusually disciplined, and the tone is unmistakably the tone of a high order of poetry.

The Spirit Watches (1940) indicates a firm control of fluid material as well as constant growth. The fanciful soliloquies have changed to intense meditations, the mocking parodies have turned into earnest wit. Miss Pitter is that rare thing: a mystic with a sense of humor, an initiate whose revelations are immediate, eager, and seldom arcane. Hers is a poetry which is both passionate and restrained, ecstatic and yet completely governed.

THE TASK

Reverse the flight of Lucifer,
Hurl back to heaven the fallen star;
Recall Eve's fate, establish her
Again where the first glories are:
Again where Eden's rivers are.

Thrust back contention, merge in one
Warring dualities, make free
Night of the moon, day of the sun;
End the old war of land and sea,
Saying, There shall be no more sea.

With love of love now make an end;
Let male and female strive no more;
Let good and bad their quarrel mend
And with an equal voice adore;
The lion with the lamb adore.

Bow softly saint, rise humble sin,
Fall from your throne, creep from your den:
The king, the kingdom is within,
That is for evermore, amen:
Was dead and is alive. Amen.

THE COFFIN-WORM

The Worm unto his love: lo, here's fresh store;
Want irks us less as men are pinched the more.
Why dost thou lag' thou pitiest the man?
Fall to, the while I teach thee what I can.
Men in their lives full solitary be:
We are their last and kindest company.
Lo, where care's claws have been! those marks are grim;
Go, gentle Love, erase the scar from him.
Hapless perchance in love (most men are so),
Our quaint felicity he could not know:
We and our generation shall sow love
Throughout that frame he was not master of;
Flatter his wishful beauties; in his ear
Whisper he is at last beloved here;
Sing him (and in no false and siren strain)
We will not leave him while a shred remain
On his sweet bones. Then shall our labor cease,
And the imperishable part find peace,
Even from love. Meanwhile how blest he lies,
Love in his heart, his empty hands, his eyes.

THE UNICORN

Hate me or love, I care not, as I pass
 To those hid citadels
 Where in the depth of my enchanted glass
 The changeless image dwells;
 To where for ever blooms the nameless tree;
 For ever, alone and fair,
 The lovely Unicorn beside the sea
 Is laid, and slumbers there.

Give or withhold, all's nothing, as I go
 On to those glimmering grounds
 Where falling secretly and quiet as snow
 The silent music sounds;
 Where earth is withered away before the eyes,
 And heaven hangs in the air,
 For in the oak the bird of paradise
 Alights, and triumphs there.

Slay me or spare, it matters now: I fly
 Ever, for ever rest
 Alone and with a host: in the void sky
 There do I build my nest:
 I lay my beams from star to star, and make
 My house where all is bare;
 Hate, slay, withhold, I rear it for thy sake
 And thou art with me there.

THE ETERNAL IMAGE

Her angel looked upon God's face
 As eagles gaze upon the sun,
 Fair in the everlasting place.

And saw that everything is one
 And moveless, in the eternal light:
 Never completed, not begun.

She on the earth, with steadfast sight,
 Stood like an image of the Muse
 Amid the falling veils of night:

Her feet were silvered in the dews,
 Dew fell upon her darkling tree,
 And washed the plain with whitish hues.

Standing so still, what does she see?
 She sees the changeless creature shine
 Apparell'd in eternity:

She knows the constancy divine;
 The whole of life sees harvested,
 And frozen into crystalline

And final form, the quick, the dead,
 All that has ever seemed to change,
 Possess at once the pale and red.

All that from birth to death may range
 Newborn and dead she sees, nor says
 The vision to be sad or strange.

How may this serve her mortal ways?
 Truly it cannot buy her bread
 Nor ease the labor of her days:

But calm her waking, quiet her bed,
 For she has seen the perfect round
 That binds the infant to the dead,

And one by one draws underground
 All men; and still, and one by one,
 Into the air the living bound,

Never completed, not begun.
 With burning hair, with moveless grace,
 As eagles gaze against the sun

Her angel looks upon God's face.

TIME'S FOOL

Time's fool, but not heaven's: yet hope not for any return.
 The rabbit-eaten dry branch and the halfpenny candle
 Are lost with the other treasure: the sooty kettle
 Thrown away, become redbreast's home in the hedge, where the nettle
 Shoots up, and bad bindweed wreathes rust-fretted handle.
 Under that broken thing no more shall the dry branch burn.

Poor comfort all comfort: once what the mouse had spared
 Was enough, was delight, there where the heart was at home;
 The hard cankered apple holed by the wasp and the bird,
 The damp bed, with the beetle's tap in the headboard heard,
 The dim bit of mirror, three inches of comb:
 Dear enough, when with youth and with fancy shared.

I knew that the roots were creeping under the floor,
 That the toad was safe in his hole, the poor cat by the fire,
 The starling snug in the roof, each slept in his place:
 The lily in splendor, the vine in her grace,
 The fox in the forest, all had their desire,
 As then I had mine, in the place that was happy and poor.

THE SWAN BATHING

Now to be clean he must abandon himself
 To that fair yielding element whose lord he is.
 There where she is strongest, in mid-current,
 Facing the stream, he half sinks, who knows how?
 His armed head, his prow wave-worthy, he dips under:
 The meeting streams glide rearward, fill the hollow
 Of the proud wings; then as it fainting he falls sidelong,
 Prone, without shame, reveals the shiplike belly,
 Tumbling reversed, with limp black paddles waving,
 And down, gliding abandoned, helplessly wallows,
 The head and neck, wrecked mast and pennon, trailing.

It is enough: satisfied he rears himself,
 Sorts with swift movement his disordred tackle,
 Rises, again the master: and so seated
 Riding, he spreads his wings and flogs the water
 Lest she should triumph; in a storm of weeping
 And a great halo of her tears transfigured,
 With spreading circles of his force he smites her,
 Till remote tremblings heave her rushy verges
 And all her lesser lives are rocked with rumour.

Now they are reconciled; with half-raised pinion
 And backward-leaning head pensively sailing,

With silver furrow the reflected evening
 Parting, he softly goes; and one cold feather
 Drifts, and is taken gently by the rushes:
 By him forgotten, and by her remembered.

Richard Hughes

RICHARD HUGHES was born in 1900 of a Welsh family settled in England. Educated at Charterhouse School and Oriel College, Oxford, his first play, The Sisters' Tragedy, was produced in London in 1922 while Hughes was still an undergraduate. In the same year, his first volume of poems, Gypsy-Night, appeared and before he graduated he was poetry-critic to the London Saturday Westminster and contributor to leading periodicals. He traveled extensively in Europe, North Africa, and America, often on foot, and has, he confesses, "a slight amateur knowledge of Balkan revolutions and seamanship."

Hughes began his career as a poet although his reputation was made by two dramas. The first of these has been mentioned, the other, composed in his twenties, was a comedy praised by Shaw and selected with works of Chekhov and Pirandello as "one of the three most important productions in London in seven years."

Gypsy-Night (1922) marked the début of a poet with acute sensibility, a precocious apprehension emphasized by the short stories in A Moment of Time (1925). After a silence of three years, Hughes published his first full-length novel, The Innocent Voyage (1929), published in England as A High Wind in Jamaica. This tale is an accomplishment in an untried genre. Upon a basis of traditional melodrama, including pirates and kidnaping, Hughes has constructed a story wholly unexpected, an unromantic romance, where the psychological reinforces the fantastic and where the union of cut-throats and children is convincing, delicate and, at the same time, horrible. Modern writing has produced several techniques for dealing fancifully with the commonplace; Hughes has developed a realistic way of handling the extraordinary.

This gift of familiarizing the unusual is of paramount service to his poetry. Chekhov counseled writers to cease being insincere about the moon and say what they really felt about a rain-puddle. But, Hughes implies, one can also be faithful to subject and self, when writing about the moon, or the mad immortal unicorn, or the elephant-swallowing roc, or inditing meditative and ecstatic odes to vision, or transfixing the windlike passing of Time. Such subjects brighten the pages of Confessio Juvenis (1926) which, as its title indicates, collects Hughes' early work. But if it is a poet's eye which rolls toward these strangenesses, it is his mind which carries them off in a fine frenzy.

Besides three privately printed volumes, Hughes is the author of some seven books. His collected Plays were issued in 1928 and his edition of John Skelton's poems appeared in 1924. In Hazard (1938) emphasizes his gift for fantastic fiction.

INVOCATION TO THE MUSE

Fair maiden, fair maiden,
 Come spin for me:
 Come spin till you're laden
 Though hard it may be.

'Tis an honor and glory
 To be a king's maid,
 Though (I'll not tell a story)
 You won't be well paid.

TRAMP

(The Bath Road, June)

When a brass sun staggers above the sky,
 When feet cleave to boots, and the tongue's dry,
 And sharp dust goads the rolling eye
 Come thoughts of wine and dancing thoughts of girls:
 They shiver their white arms, and the head whirls,
 And noon light is hid in their dark curls;
 Then noon feet stumble, and head swims,
 Till out shines the sun, and the thought dims;
 And death, for blood, runs in the weak limbs.

To fall on flints in the shade of tall nettles
 Gives easy sleep as a bed of rose petals,
 And dust drifting from the highway
 As light a coverlet as down may.
 The myriad feet of many-sized flies
 May not open those tired eyes.

But the first wind of night
 Twitches the coverlet away quite:
 The first wind and large first rain,
 Flickers the dry pulse to life again,
 Flickers the lids burning on the eyes:
 Come sudden flashes of the slipping skies:
 Hunger, oldest visionary,
 Hides a devil in a tree,
 Hints a glory in the clouds,
 Fills the crooked air with crowds
 Of ivory sightless demons singing—
 Eyes start: straightens back:
 Limbs stagger and crack:
 But brain flies, brain soars
 Up, where the Sky roars
 Upon the backs of cherubim:
 Brain rockets up to Him.

Body gives another twist
 To the slack waist-band;
 In agony clenches fist
 Till the nails bite the hand.
 Body floats light as air,
 With rain in its sparse hair.

Brain returns; and he would tell
 The things he has seen well;

But Body will not stir his lips:
 So Mind and Body come to grips
 And deadly each hates the other
 As his treacherous blood-brother.

Yet no sight, no sound shows
 How the struggle goes.

I sink at last faint in the wet gutter;
 So many words to speak that the tongue cannot utter.

LOVER'S REPLY TO GOOD ADVICE

Could you bid an acorn
 When in earth it heaves
 On Time's backward wing be borne
 To forgotten leaves:
 Could you quiet Noah's flood
 To an essence rare,
 Or bid the roaring wind
 Confine in his lair:

Could round the iron shell
 When the spark was in it
 Hold gun-powder so well
 That it never split:
 Had you reins for the sun,
 And curb and spur,
 Held you God in a net
 So He might not stir:

Then might you take this thing,
 Then strangle it, kill:
 By weighing, considering,
 Conform it to will:
 As man denied his Christ
 Deny it, mock, betray—
 But being Seed, Wind, God,
 It bears all away.

ON TIME

Unhurried as a snake I saw Time glide
 Out of the shape of his material frame:
 I, who am part of Time's material name,
 Saw that unhurried serpent quietly slide
 Through a straight crack in his material side
 Between a prince and a stone: flicker, and presently coil,
 A small bright worm about a stalk of fennel;
 While light stood still as spar, and smell
 Spread like a fan, sound hung festooned, and toil
 Rose balanced and patterned like a storied palace
 Whose wild tons grapple in immovable grace;
 While laughter sat on a rustic seat with tears
 And watched the corn-sheaves lean across the plow:
 Ah! then what wind across the nodding years!
 What ecstasies upon the bough
 Sang, like a fountain to its peers:
 And in the meadows what deep-rooted men
 Flowered their lovely faces in the grass,
 Where death, like a butterfly of dark-colored glass,
 Flitted and sipped, and sipped again!

BURIAL OF THE SPIRIT

OF A YOUNG POET

Dead hangs the fruit on that tall tree:
 The lark in my cold hand is dead.
 What meats his funeral stars decree
 By their own light I've spread:
 The bearded fog among the leaves
 Too sad to move, excludes the air:
 No bursting seed this stiff soil heaves,
 Nor ever will again, when we have laid him there.

Then come, ye silent wheels of fire,
 Ye birds among the tulip-trees,
 And let your brilliancy conspire
 In rings of visual threnodies:
 And thou, heart-breaking nightingale
 Who phoenix-like forever burnst
 In thine own voice, oh Philomel
 Let not thy tuneful flame now fail,
 But burn in it this spirit pale
 Which once was grand, but now to naught, to nothing-naught returns.

Roy Campbell

ROY CAMPBELL was born in Durban, Natal, South Africa, in 1902. After marriage to Mary Garman in 1922, he became active—evidently too active—in South African affairs, for in 1926 he was compelled to come to England where he has since lived.

The Flaming Terrapin appeared in 1922. It was at once apparent that a poet of unusual vitality had come out of the Colonies. Campbell had chosen a huge theme and he had sufficient vigor to cope with it. The poem is a broad allegory: The ark of Noah plunges through terror and tempest carrying with it all of humanity. Unlike the Biblical vessel, this ark does not merely float; it is pulled along, swept to its goal by a tremendous saurian, blood brother to Leviathan, a Flaming Terrapin, which is the symbol of the all-suffering, all-surviving power of persistence. It is this monster, the life-force, which brings the ark to a richer Ararat.

So much for the theme. The reader, however, is scarcely aware of the philosophic content, for the lines sweep him on at such a pace that he is conscious of little except the momentum of the verse, the bright concatenation of figures, and a general sense of exuberance. The headlong speed may be accounted a vice, but Campbell's poetic vices and virtues are inseparable. Both proceed from prodigality; epithet and emotion rush forward in continual and creative excitement.

The Waygoose (1928) is a more local and less arousing work. Satirizing conditions in South Africa, it limits not only Campbell's audience but his own spirit, for this poet needs amplitude for his effects. The subsequent poetry is in the early, gustier vein with a new control. "Tristan Da Cunha" and "The Palm" display less alacrity and violence than The Flaming Terrapin, but contain much of its lavish energy. "The Palm" is particularly successful in its combinations of assonance and interior rhyming. In addition, the new poems have a condensed power which dignifies the sometimes too crashing effects in Adamastor (1930), the satirical "Charlotade," The Georgiad (1931), and Flowering Reeds (1933). They still suffer from the poet's uncertainty, undecided whether to be a satirist or a poet in the grand manner, Campbell falls back upon sonority and his own bounding vitality.

THE ZEBRAS

From the dark woods that breathe of fallen showers,
 Harnessed with level rays in golden reins,
 The zebras draw the dawn across the plains
 Wading knee-deep among the scarlet flowers.
 The sunlight, zithering their flanks with fire,
 Flashes between the shadows as they pass
 Barred with electric tremors through the grass
 Like wind along the gold strings of a lyre.

Into the flushed air snorting rosy plumes
 That smolder round their feet in drifting fumes,

With dove-like voices call the distant fillies,
 While round the herds the stallion wheels his flight,
 Engine of beauty volted with delight,
 To roll his mare among the trampled lilies.

TRISTAN DA CUNHA

Snore in the foam: the night is vast and blind,
 The blanket of the mist around your shoulders,
 Sleep your old sleep of rock, snore in the wind,
 Snore in the spray! The storm your slumber lulls,
 His wings are folded on your nest of bowlders
 As on their eggs the gray wings of your gulls.

No more as when, ten thousand years ago,
 You hissed a giant cinder from the ocean—
 Around your rocks you furl the shawling snow,
 Half sunk in your own darkness, vast and grim,
 And round you on the deep with surly motion
 Pivot your league-long shadow as you swim.

Why should you haunt me thus but that I know
 My surly heart is in your own displayed,
 Round whom such wastes in endless circuit flow,
 Whose hours in such a gloomy compass run—
 A dial with its league-long arm of shade
 Slowly revolving to the moon and sun.

My heart has sunk, like your gray fissured crags,
 By its own strength o'ertopped and betrayed:
 I too have burned the wind with fiery flags,
 Who now am but a roost for empty words—
 An island of the sea whose only trade
 Is in the voyages of its wandering birds.

Did you not, when your strength became your pyre,
 Deposed and tumbled from your flaming tower,
 Awake in gloom from whence you sank in fire
 To find Antaeus-like, more vastly grown,
 A throne in your own darkness, and a power
 Sheathed in the very coldness of your stone?

Your strength is that you have no hope or fear,
 You march before the world without a crown:
 The nations call you back, you do not hear:
 The cities of the earth grow gray behind you,
 You will be there when their great flames go down
 And still the morning in the van will find you.

You march before the continents: you scout
 In front of all the earth: alone you scale
 The masthead of the world, a lorn look-out,

Waving the snowy flutter of your spray
 And gazing back in infinite farewell
 To suns that sink, and shores that fade away.

From your gray tower what long regrets you fling
 To where, along the low horizon burning,
 The great swan-breasted seraphs soar and sing,
 And suns go down, and trailing splendors dwindle,
 And sails on lonely errands unreturning,
 Glow with a gold no sunrise can rekindle.

Turn to the Night, these flames are not for you
 Whose steeple for the thunder swings its bells:
 Gray Memnon, to the tempest only true,
 Turn to the night, turn to the shadowing foam,
 And let your voice, the saddest of farewells,
 With sullen curfew toll the gray wings home.

The wind your mournful syren haunts the gloom:
 The rocks, spray-clouded, are your signal-guns
 Whose stony niter, puffed with flying spume,
 Rolls forth in grim salute your broadside hollow,
 Over the gorgeous burials of suns,
 To sound the tocsin of the storms that follow.

Plunge forward; like a ship to battle hurled,
 Slip the long cables of the failing light,
 The level rays that moor you to the world.
 Sheathed in your armor of eternal frost,
 Plunge forward, in the thunder of the fight
 To lose yourself as I would fain be lost.

Exiled, like you, and severed from my race
 By the cold ocean of my own disdain,
 Do I not freeze in such a wintry space,
 Do I not travel through a storm as vast
 And rise at times, victorious from the main,
 To fly the sunrise at my shattered mast?

Your path is but a desert where you reap
 Only the bitter knowledge of your soul,
 You fish with nets of seaweed in the deep
 As fruitlessly as I with nets of rhyme,
 Yet forth you stride: yourself the way, the goal,
 The surges are your strides, your path is time.

Hurled by what aim to what tremendous range!
 A missile from the great sling of the past
 Your passage leaves its track of death and change
 And ruin on the world: you fly beyond,
 Leaping the current of the ages vast
 As lightly as a pebble skims a pond.

The years are undulations in your flight
 Whose awful motion we can only guess:
 Too swift for sense, too terrible for sight,
 We only know how fast behind you darken
 Our days like lonely beacons of distress:
 We know that you stride on and will not hearken.

Now in the eastern sky the fairest planet
 Pierces the dying wave with dangled spear,
 And in the whirring hollows of your granite
 That vaster Sea, to which you are a shell,
 Sighs with a ghostly rumor like the drear
 Moan of the nightwind in a hollow cell.

We shall not meet again: over the wave
 Our ways divide, and yours is straight and endless—
 But mine is short and crooked to the grave:
 Yet what of these dark crowds, amid whose flow
 I battle like a rock, aloof and friendless—
 Are not their generations, vague and endless,
 The waves, the strides, the feet on which I go?

FROM "THE FLAMING TERRAPIN"

Part I

Maternal Earth stirs redly from beneath
 Her blue sea-blanket and her quilt of sky,
 A giant Anadyomene from the sheath
 And chrysalis of darkness; till we spy
 Her vast barbaric haunches, furred with trees,
 Stretched on the continents, and see her hair
 Combed in a surf of fire along the breeze
 To curl about the dim sierras, where
 Faint snow-peaks catch the sun's far-swiveled beams:
 And, tinder to his rays, the mountain-streams
 Kindle, and volleying with a thunder-stroke
 Out of their roaring gullies, burst in smoke
 To shred themselves as fine as women's hair,
 And hoop gay rainbows on the sunlit air.
 Winnowed by radiant eagles, in whose quills
 Sing the swift gales, and on whose waving plumes
 Flashing sunbeams ignite—the towering hills
 Yearn to the sun, rending the misty fumes
 That clogged their peaks, and from each glistening spire
 Fling to the winds their rosy fleece of fire.
 Far out to sea the gales with savage sweep
 Churning the water, waken drowsy fins
 Huge fishes to propel from monstrous sleep,
 That spout their pride as the red day begins,
 "We are the great volcanoes of the deep!"

Now up from the intense creative Earth
 Spring her strong sons: the thunder of their mirth
 Vibrates upon the shining rocks and spills
 In floods of rolling music on the hills.
 Action and flesh cohere in one clean fusion
 Of force with form: the very ethers breed
 Wild harmonies of song: the frailest reed
 Holds shackled thunder in its heart's seclusion.
 And every stone that lines my lonely way,
 Sad tongueless nightingale without a wing,
 Seems on the point of rising up to sing
 And donning scarlet for its dusty gray!

How often have I lost this fervent mood,
 And gone down dingy thoroughfares to brood
 On evils like my own from day to day;
 "Life is a dusty corridor," I say,
 "Shut at both ends." But far across the plain,
 Old Ocean growls and tosses his gray mane,
 Pawing the rocks in all his old unrest
 Or lifting lazily on some white crest
 His pale foam-feathers for the moon to burn—
 Then to my veins I feel new sap return,
 Strength tightens up my sinews long grown dull,
 And in the old charred crater of the skull
 Light strikes the slow somnambulistic mind
 And sweeps her forth to ride the rushing wind,
 And stamping on the hill-tops high in air,
 To shake the golden bonfire of her hair.

This sudden strength that catches up men's souls
 And rears them up like giants in the sky,
 Giving them fins where the dark ocean rolls,
 And wings of eagles when the whirlwinds fly,
 Stands visible to me in its true self
 (No spiritual essence of wing'd elf
 Like Ariel on the empty winds to spin).
 I see him as a mighty Terrapin,
 Rafting whole islands on his stormy back,
 Built of strong metals molten from the black
 Roots of the innmost earth: a great machine,
 Thoughtless and fearless, governing the clean
 System of active things: the winds and currents
 Are his primeval thoughts: the raging torrents
 Are moods of his, and men who do great deeds
 Are but the germs his awful fancy breeds.

For when the winds have ceased their ghostly speech
 And the long waves roll moaning from the beach,
 The Flaming Terrapin that towed the Ark
 Rears up his hump of thunder on the dark,

And like a mountain, seamed with rocky scars,
 Crinkles white rings, as from its ancient sleep
 Into a foam of life he wakes the Deep.
 His was the crest that from the angry sky
 Tore down the hail: he made the boulders fly
 Like balls of paper, splintered icebergs, hurled
 Lassoes of dismal smoke around the world,
 And like a bunch of crisp and crackling straws,
 Coughed the sharp lightning from his craggy jaws.
 His was the eye that blinked beyond the hill
 After the fury of the flood was done,
 And breaching from the bottom, cold and still,
 Leviathan reared up to greet the Sun.
 Perched on the stars around him in the air,
 White angels rinsed the moonlight from their hair,
 And the drowned trees into new flowers unfurled
 As it sank dreaming down upon the world.
 As he rolled by, all evil things grew dim.
 The Devil, who had scoffed, now slunk from him
 And sat in Hell, dejected and alone,
 Rasping starved teeth against an old dry bone.

Before the coral reared its sculptured fern
 Or the pale shellfish, swinging in the waves
 With pointed steeples, had begun to turn
 The rocks to shadowy cities—from dark caves
 The mixed and drowsy poisons of the sea
 Mixed their corrosive strength with horny stones,
 And coaxed new substances from them to be
 The ponderous material of his bones.
 The waves by slow erosion did their part
 Shaping his heavy bonework from the mass,
 And in that pillared temple grew a heart
 That branched with mighty veins, through which to pass
 His blood, that, filtering the tangled mesh,
 Built walls of gristle, clogged each hollow gap
 With concrete vigor, till through bone and flesh
 Flowed the great currents of electric sap.
 While thunder clangs from the cloudy rack
 With elemental hammers fierce and red,
 Tempered the heavy target of his back,
 And forged the brazen anvil of his head.

Freed from the age-long agonies of birth
 This living galion oars himself along
 And roars his triumph over all the earth
 Until the sullen hills burst into song.
 His beauty makes a summer through the land,
 And where he crawls upon the solid ground,
 Gigantic flowers, exploding from the sand,
 Spread fans of blinding color all around.

His voice has roused the amorphous mud to life—
 Dust thinks: and tired of spinning in the wind,
 Stands up to be a man and feel the strife
 Of brute-thoughts in the jungle of his mind.
 Bellerophon, the primal cowboy, first
 Heard that wild summons on the stillness burst,
 As, from the dusty mesa leaping free,
 He slewed his white-winged broncho out to sea,
 And shaking loose his flaming coils of hair,
 Shot whistling up the smooth blue roads of air:
 As he rose up, the moon with slanted ray
 Ruled for those rapid hoofs a shining way,
 And streaming from their caves, the sirens came
 Riding on seals to follow him: the flame
 Of their moon-tinsel'd limbs had flushed the dim
 Green depths, and as when winds in Autumn skim
 Gold acres, rustling plume with fiery plume,
 Their long hair flickered skyward in the gloom,
 Tossed to the savage rhythms of their tune.
 Till, far across the world, the rising moon
 Heard, ghost-like, in the embered evening sky
 Their singing fade into a husky sigh,
 And splashed with stars and dashed with stinging spray
 The dandy of the prairies rode away!

That voice on Samson's mighty sinews rang
 As on a harp's tense chords: each fiber sang
 In all his being: rippling their strings of fire,
 His nerves and muscles, like a wondrous lyre,
 Vibrated to that sound; and through his brain
 Proud thoughts came surging in a gorgeous train.
 He rose to action, slew the grumbling bear,
 Hauled forth the flustered lion from its lair
 And swung him yelping skyward by the tail:
 Tigers he mauled, with tooth and ripping nail
 Rending their straps of fire, and from his track
 Slithering like quicksilver, pouring their black
 And liquid coils before his pounding feet,
 He drove the livid mambas of deceit.
 Oppression, like a starved hyena, sneaked
 From his loud steps: Tyranny, vulture-beaked,
 Rose clapping iron wings, and in a cloud
 Of smoke and terror, wove its own dark shroud,
 As he strode by and in his tossing hair,
 Rippled with sunshine, sang the morning air.

Like a great bell clang'd in the winds of Time,
 Linking the names of heroes chime by chime
 That voice rolled on, and as it filled the night
 Strong men rose up, thrilled with the huge delight

Of their own energy. Upon the snows
 Of Ararat gigantic Noah rose,
 Stiffened for fierce exertion, like the thong
 That strings a bow before its arrow strong
 Sings on the wind; and from his great fists hurled
 Red thunderbolts to purify the world.

THE PALM

Blistered and dry was the desert I trod
 When out of the sky with the step of a god,
 Victory-vanned with her feathers out-fanned,
 The palm tree alighting my journey delayed
 And spread me, inviting, her carpet of shade.
 Vain were evasions, though urgent my quest,
 And there as the guests of her lovely persuasions
 To lie in the shade of her branches was best.
 Like a fountain she played, spilling plume over plume in
 A golden cascade for the winds to illumine,
 Ascending in brilliance and falling in shade,
 And spurning the ground with a tiptoe resilience
 Danced to the sound of the music she made.
 Her voice intervened on my shadowed seclusion
 Like the whispered intrusion of seraph or fiend,
 In its tone was the hiss of the serpent's wise tongue,
 But soft as the kiss of a lover it stung—
 "Unstrung is your lute? For despair are you silent?
 Am I not an island in oceans as mute?
 Around me the thorns of the desert take root;
 Though I spring from the rock of a region accurst,
 Yet fair is the daughter of hunger and thirst
 Who sings like the water the valleys have nursed,
 And rings her blue shadow as deep and as cool
 As the heavens of azure that sleep on a pool.
 And you, who so soon by the toil were undone,
 Could you guess through what horrors my beauty had won
 Ere I crested the noon as the bride of the sun?
 The roots are my anchor struck fast in the hill,
 The higher I hanker, the deeper they drill,
 Through the red mortar their claws interlock
 To ferret the water through warrens of rock.
 Each inch of my glory was wrenched with a groan,
 Corroded with fire from the base of my throne
 And drawn like a wire from the heart of a stone:
 Though I soar in the height with a shape of delight
 Uplifting my stem like the string of a kite,
 Yet still must each grade of my climbing be told
 And still from the summit my measure I hold,
 Sounding the azure with plummet of gold,
 Partaking the strain of the heavenward pride
 That soars me away from the earth I deride;

Though my stem be a rein that would tether me down
 And fasten a chain on the height of my crown,
 Yet through its tense nerve do I measure my might,
 The strain of its curb is the strength of my flight:
 And when by the hate of the hurricane blown
 It doubles its forces with fibers that groan,
 Exulting I ride in the tower of my pride
 To feel that the strength of the blast is my own. . . .
 Rest under my branches, breathe deep of my balm
 From the hushed avalanches of fragrance and calm,
 For suave is the silence that poises the palm.

The wings of the egrets are silk'n and fine,
 But hushed with the secrets of Eden are mine:
 Your spirit that grieves like the wind in my leaves
 Shall be robbed of its care by those whispering thieves
 To study my patience and hear, the day long,
 The soft foliations of sand into song—
 For bitter and cold though it rasp to my root,
 Each atom of gold is the chance of a fruit,
 The sap is the music, the stem is the flute,
 And the leaves are the wings of the scrapp I shape
 Who dances, who springs in a golden escape,
 Out of the dust and the drought of the plain,
 To sing with the silver hosannahs of rain."

AUTUMN

I love to see, when leaves depart,
 The clear anatomy arrive,
 Winter, the paragon of art,
 That kills all forms of life and feeling
 Save what is pure and will survive.

Already now the clangling chains
 Of geese are harnessed to the moon:
 Stripped are the great sun-clouding planes:
 And the dark pines, their own revealing,
 Let in the needles of the noon.

Strained by the gale the olives whiten
 Like hoary wrestlers bent with toil
 And, with the vines, their branches lighten
 To brim our vats where summer lingers
 In the red froth and sun-gold oil.

Soon on our hearth's reviving pyre
 Their rotted stems will crumble up:
 And like a ruby, panting fire,
 The grape will redden on your fingers
 Through the lit crystal of the cup.

ON SOME SOUTH AFRICAN NOVELISTS

You praise the firm restraint with which they write—
 I'm with you there, of course.
 They use the snaffle and the curb all right;
 But where's the bloody horse?

TOLEDO

July, 1936

Toledo, when I saw you die
 And heard the roof of Carmel crash,
 A spread-winged phoenix from its ash
 The Cross remained against the sky!
 With horns of flame and haggard eye
 The mountain vomited with blood,
 A thousand corpses down the flood
 Were rolled gesticulating by.
 And high above the roaring shells
 I heard the silence of your bells
 Who've left those broken stones behind
 Above the years to make your home
 And burn, with Athens and with Rome,
 A sacred city of the mind.

FROM "THE GEORGIA"

Hail, Mediocrity, beneath whose spell
 Lion and fox as loving neighbors dwell:
 For it is sweet with modesty to swell
 When one has not a ghost of pride to quell.
 Puffed up with modesty, the ambitious toad
 May safely swell, and fear not to explode,
 Until, ballooned with emptiness, he rise
 To dwarf the ox he envies for his size.

THE SERF

His naked skin clothed in the torrid mist
 That puffs in smoke around the patient hooves,
 The ploughman drives, a slow somnambulist,
 And through the green his crimson furrow grooves.
 His heart, more deeply than he wounds the plain,
 Long by the rasping share of insult torn,
 Red clod, to which the war-cry once was rain
 And tribal spears the fatal sheaves of corn,
 Lies fallow now. But as the turf divides
 I see in the slow progress of his strides
 Over the toppled clods and falling flowers,
 The timeless, surly patience of the serf
 That moves the nearest to the naked earth
 And ploughs down palaces, and thrones, and towers.

C. Day Lewis

C. (CECIL) DAY LEWIS was born April 27, 1904, at Ballintubber, Queens County, Ireland. He was educated at Sherbourne School and Wadham College, Oxford, where he became affiliated with Stephen Spender, W. H. Auden, and others of the post-war group. He taught at the Junior School of Cheltenham College and wrote with increasing rapidity and purpose.

There were two early publications (Beechen Vigils and Country Comets) which were derivative and received little attention. Transitional Poem (1929) is Day Lewis' first serious bid for notice. The early influences are not altogether discarded, but it is immediately evident that a new and indubitably lyric voice is being sounded. This is "nature poetry," but nature poetry sharply differentiated from the philosophic-meditative manner of Wordsworth and the tired detachment of the Georgians. Day Lewis is no mere onlooker, he is a passionate participant; there is courage as well as color in his lines, and even the awkward passages are redeemed by a challenging vision.

That vision is amplified, sometimes distorted, and finally explicated in From Feathers to Iron (1931) and The Magnetic Mountain (1933), both of which, with Transitional Poem, were assembled in Poems 1929-1933, published in America in 1935. Since the three young English poets were printed almost simultaneously in this country, Day Lewis was continually linked with Spender and Auden in the public press. Actually the so-called "triumvirate" was composed of three different types of poet. Auden is satirical, experimental, and often (except to those who understand his private parables) incomprehensible; Spender is rhapsodic, sometimes sentimental, and usually forthright; Lewis is almost continuously lyrical and candid. Although he, too, plays with internal rhyme and concealed assonance, he is less concerned than Auden with craftsmanship; although he shares Spender's political convictions, he does not lose himself, as Spender sometimes does, in emotion. Yet if he is the most dependable he is the least original of the three. He has not yet outgrown his influences; one does not have to read closely to recognize the accents of Gerard Manley Hopkins, Wilfred Owen, T. S. Eliot, most of all W. H. Auden, to all of whom C. Day Lewis pays credit. There are even moments (as in the poem "You'll be leaving soon and it's up to you boys") which sound strangely like Robert W. Service and Rudyard Kipling's "If" turned upside down. It should also be said that his social sentiments have little to do with the final effect of his poetry; it is, poetically speaking, unimportant that the author has chosen communism for his faith rather than a more popular conservatism. He knows that in the end a poet is measured by his poetry, not by his policies; that, although Southey was an ardent believer in the French Revolution, Southey means nothing to us, and readers of the Ode on the Intimations of Immortality do not care when or why Wordsworth ceased to be a liberal. But Day Lewis also knows that a poet must have a creed; and a belief in the dignity and possible brotherhood of man is certainly no more to be deplored than a belief in the sacredness of the Georgian Squirearchy and its incorporated nightingales. As a matter of record, the best of his poems are the least protesting ones.

This poet is still fluctuating between a tradition which he distrusts, but in which he is quite at home, and a conviction which his mind applauds but his imagination has not yet fully accepted. From the conflict no less than half a dozen serene, illuminating, and indignant lyrics are born, lyrics which will find their way into even the most cautious anthologies. It is his certainties, coming after a generation of negativism, which matter, not his arbitrary symbols of "kestrel," "airman" and "magnetic mountain" (for imagination, poet, and the coöperative commonwealth). It is not the fighting figures and stretched metaphors, straining under the demands of their author, but the athletic belief, the alert spirit, which breaks through to music spontaneous and bitter-sweet.

A Time to Dance (1935) emphasizes this. It apostrophizes the spirit

For those who had the power,
Unhesitating whether to kill or cure:
Those who were not afraid
To dam the estuary or start the forest fire:
Whose hearts were filled
With enthusiasm as with a constant wind. . . .
There need be neither obituary nor wreath,
Accomplices of death. . . .
Their spirit shall be blowing out of the sunrise,
Their veins our rivers, their bones our bread.

The title-poem, however, is something of a disappointment. It is ambitiously "symphonic," but its program is more impressive than the performance, and the last movement, a jumble of crude parodies, is awkward as humor, ineffective as satire. Far better are the lyrics which occupy the first half of A Time to Dance; the prevailing motif is "the conflict between the past and the future of the individual," particularly Day Lewis' statement of his own uncertain position. Lacking Spender's moral passion and Auden's social intensity, Lewis holds the reader with his verbal power. Even though the spell is hortatory, it is usually effective.

Day Lewis has also written a book-length essay entitled A Hope for Poetry, which is by far the best analysis of post-war poetry that has yet appeared. It is more than a timely appraisal. Besides his poetry and criticism, Lewis has written in many other veins: a novel, detective stories and children's books, some of them under pseudonyms.

NEARING AGAIN THE LEGENDARY ISLE

Nearing again the legendary isle
Where sirens sang and mariners were skinned,
We wonder now what was there to beguile
That such stout fellows left their bones behind.

Those chorus-girls are surely past their prime,
 Voices grow shrill and paint is wearing thin,
 Lips that sealed up the sense from gnawing time
 Now beg the favor with a graveyard grin.

We have no flesh to spare and they can't bite,
 Hunger and sweat have stripped us to the bone;
 A skeleton crew we toil upon the tide
 And mock the theme-song meant to lure us on:

No need to stop the ears, avert the eyes
 From purple rhetoric of evening skies.

REST FROM LOVING AND BE LIVING

Rest from loving and be living.
 Fallen is fallen past retrieving
 The unique flyer dawn's dove
 Arrowing down feathered with fire.

Cease denying, begin knowing.
 Comes peace this way, here comes renewing
 With dower of bird and bud, knocks
 Loud on winter wall on death's door.

Here's no meaning but of morning.
 Naught soon of night but stars remaining,
 Sink lower, fade, as dark womb
 Recedes creation will step clear.

NOW SHE IS LIKE THE WHITE TREE-ROSE

Now she is like the white tree-rose
 That takes a blessing from the sun:
 Summer has filled her veins with light,
 And her warm heart is washed with noon.

Or as a poplar, ceaselessly
 Gives a soft answer to the wind:
 Cool on the light her leaves lie sleeping,
 Folding a column of sweet sound.

Powder the stars. Forbid the night
 To wear those brilliants for a brooch
 So soon, dark death, you may close down
 The mines that made this beauty rich.

Her thoughts are pleiads, stooping low
 O'er glades where nightingale has flown:
 And like the luminous night around her
 She has at heart a certain dawn.

DO NOT EXPECT AGAIN A PHOENIX HOUR

Do not expect again a phoenix hour,
 The triple-towered sky, and dove complaining,
 Sudden the rain of gold and heart's first ease
 Tranced under trees by the eldritch light of sundown.

By a blazed trail our joy will be returning:
 One burning hour throws light a thousand ways,
 And hot blood stays into familiar gestures.
 The best years wait, the body's plenitude.

Consider then, my lover, this is the end
 Of the lark's ascending, the hawk's unearthly hover:
 Spring season is over soon and first heatwave;
 Grave-browed with cloud ponders the huge horizon.

Draw up the dew. Swell with pacific violence.
 Take shape in silence. Grow as the clouds grew.
 Beautiful brood the cornlands, and you are heavy;
 Leafy the boughs—they also hide big fruit.

CHIEFLY TO MIND APPEARS

Chiefly to mind appears
 That hour on Silverhowe
 When evening's lid hung low
 And the sky was about our ears.
 Buoyed between fear and love
 We watched in eastward form
 The armadas of the storm
 And sail superbly above;
 So near, they'd split and founder
 On the least jag of sense,
 One false spark fire the immense
 Broadside the confounding thunder.
 They pass, give not a salvo,
 And in their rainy wash
 We hear the horizons crash
 With monitors of woe.

Only at highest power
 Can love and fear become
 Their equilibrium,
 And in that eminent hour
 A virtue is made plain
 Of passionate cleavage
 Like the hills' cutting edge
 When the sun sets to rain.
 This is the single mind,

This is the star-solved equation
 Of life with life's negation:
 A deathless cell designed
 To demonstrate death's act,
 Which, the more surely it moves
 To earth's influence, but proves
 Itself the more intact.

TEMPT ME NO MORE

Tempt me no more; for I
 Have known the lightning's hour,
 The poet's inward pride,
 The certainty of power.

Bayonets are closing round.
 I shrink; yet I must wring
 A living from despair
 And out of steel a song.

Though song, though breath be short,
 I'll share not the disgrace
 Of those that ran away
 Or never left the base.

Comrades, my tongue can speak
 No comfortable words;
 Calls to a forlorn hope
 Give work and not rewards.

Oh keep the sickle sharp
And follow still the plow:
Others may reap, though some
See not the winter through.

Father who endest all,
Pity our broken sleep;

For we lie down with tears
And waken but to weep.

And if our blood alone
Will melt this iron earth,
Take it. It is well spent
Easing a savior's birth.

THE CONFLICT

I sang as one
Who on a tilting deck sings
To keep their courage up, though the wave hangs
That shall cut off their sun.

As storm-cocks sing,
Flinging their natural answer in the wind's teeth,
And care not if it is waste of breath
Or birth-carol of spring.

As ocean-flyer clings
To height, to the last drop of spirit driving on While yet ahead is land to be won
And work for wings.

Singing I was at peace,
Above the clouds, outside the ring:
For sorrow finds a swift release in song
And pride its poise.

Yet living here,
As one between two massing powers I live
Whom neutrality cannot save
Nor occupation cheer.

None such shall be left alive:
The innocent wing is soon shot down,
And private stars fade in the blood-iced dawn
Where two worlds strive.

The red advance of life
Contracts pride, calls out the common blood,
Beats song into a single blade,
Makes a depth-charge of grief.

Move then with new desires,
For where we used to build and love
Is no man's land, and only ghosts can live
Between two fires.

Peter Quennell

PETER QUENNELL was born March 5, 1905, in Kent. He was educated at Berkhamstead Grammar School and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he spent two years, and where he was co-editor of Oxford Poetry. He made "the customary pilgrimages" to Greece and the Balkans, and since 1927 has lived in London.

Poems (1926) appeared before Quennell was twenty-one years old, four of the poems being "very early"—"Procne," for example, having been written at the age of sixteen. Quennell's verse is wholly unlike that of his living compatriots, although American readers will detect a similarity to the verbal elegances of Wallace Stevens. It is as near the abstract as verse can come and still depend on words. Here language flowers of itself, feeding automatically on its own air; image suggests image, and associations grow freely on seemingly unrelated suggestions. In "The Divers" and "Leviathan," among others, the poetry wanders far from common experience or recognizable emotions or, for that matter, its own subject. But it is never less than poetry. Although the figures flowing into each other have the uncertain, fluid outlines of dream pictures, the musical progression is clear.

It is as music, first of all, that Quennell's poetry succeeds. His accomplishment is the greater since, without the aid of rhyme or definite rhythm, he achieves melodies intangible but more original than lightly summoned tunes. The actors in his verse are vague, the happenings remote and unreal, yet the intent is never false, and the effect is a set of nicely adjusted modulations and strange harmonics. It is, in essence, a poetry of shock, but shock without eccentricity, smoothed and almost without surprise.

As an essayist, Quennell has developed slowly but with increasing surety. His Baudelaire and the Symbolists (1930) contains five essays outlining the stream which sprang from Baudelaire and which swayed not only French literature but determined in no inconsiderable degree the course of English poetry during and after the Eighteen Nineties. Sympathy (1933) assembles his imaginative short stories.

Quennell made his most successful bid for popularity as biographer. Readers and reviewers united to praise the wit and vitality of his Byron: The Years of Fame (1935) and the still more vivid Byron in Italy (1941).

PROCNE

So she became a bird and bird-like danced
 On a long sloe-bough, treading the silver blossom
 With a bird's lovely feet,
 And shaken blossoms fell into the hands
 Of sunlight, and he held them for a moment
 And let them drop.
 And in the autumn Procne came again
 And leapt upon the crooked sloe-bough singing
 And the dark berries winked like earth-dimmed beads,
 As the branch swung beneath her dancing feet.

THE DIVERS

Ah, look,
 How sucking their last sweetness from the air
 These divers run upon the pale sea verge;
 An evening air so smooth my hand could round
 And grope a circle of the hollow sky
 Without a harshness or impediment.

Look now,
 How they run cowering and each unknots
 A rag, a girdle twisted on his loins,
 Stands naked, quivered in the cool of night.

As boldest lovers will tire presently,
 When dawn dries up a radiance on the limbs,
 And lapse to common sleep,
 To the deep tumult of habitual dreams,
 Each sighing, with loosened limbs, as if regrettfully,
 Gives up his body to the foamless surge.

Water combs out his body, and he sinks
 Beyond all form and sound.
 Only the blood frets on,
 Grown fearful, in a shallow dissonance.

Water strains on his hair and drums upon his flank,
 Consumes his curious track
 And straight or sinuous path
 Dissolves as swift, impermanent as light.

Still his strange purpose drives him, like a beam,
 Like the suspended shaft of cavern-piercing sun;
 And, hardier still,
 With wavering hands, divides the massive gloom,—
 A vast caress through which he penetrates,
 Or obscure death withdrawing
 Veil upon veil,
 Discovering new darkness and profounder terror.

“Consider you your loss,
 For now what strength of foot or hand
 Can take you by the narrow way you came
 Through the clear darkness up again and up.
 Watch a procession of the living days,
 Where dawn and evening melt so soft together
 As wine in water, or milk shed in water,
 Filming and clouding into even dullness.”

"Who weeps me now with pulse of noisy tears,
 Who strikes the breast?
 If I regret among the flowing weed,
 My regret is
 Not vocal, cannot pierce to hidden day,
 Momentary, soon quenched, like a strangled flame."

LEVIATHAN

(Second Section)

A music met Leviathan returning,
 While the still troubled waters of his passage
 Danct every island like a lily head.
 Through all the shadowed throats of the wide forest
 His unnumbered monster children rode to greet him
 On horses winged and dappled over like flowers.

Now huddled waves had lulled their bursting foam
 And slight clouds laid their breasts upon the sea;
 The sullen winds, head downward from the sky,
 Solicited his movement on their viols.

And the palm trees, heat weary,
 Chafing smooth limbs within a rinded shell,
 Spoke of his coming with soft acclamation,
 Like watchers long grown tired, languid and sorry:

"Look, how he comes"—as faint as whispering deer—
 "What storm and state he brings." Then louder voices,
 The unchaste turtles crying out with pleasure,
 And badgers from the earth
 Sprawled upon the rocks with animal laughter.

"The Cretan bull ferrying across the sea
 Bore home no richer load;
 In the reed forest of Eurotas' bank
 That quivering swan, clapping strong wings together,
 With harsh, sweet voice called out no keener marriage."

Then shrill response, as seeming from the air,
 Invoking joy, summoning desire:

"Hither desires,
 Coming as thick and hot as the press and hurry of blood
 Striking the apse of the brain,
 Ranging abroad, carrying your torches high,
 Running as light and remote as a scattered cast of pearls."

Then antic spirits from the tulip trees:

"We must have tumblers like a wheel of fire.
 We must have dancers moving their suave hands:
 The tumblers strung backward like a hoop
 Until they thrust vermillioned cheeks between their knees.
 And the intricacy
 Of sweet involving gayety,
 And wine to warm our innocence,
 Music to sooth the prickled sense,
 Sounding like water or like ringing glass."

The mitered Queen of Heaven stirred on her broad, low throne,
 Setting the lattice just so much ajar
 That wandering airs from earth should cool the room,
 Peered down on more-than-Leda and smoothed her wrinkled snood,
 Crying to her Father-Spouse—"Dear Lord, how sweet she looks."
 The clumsy hierarchies,
 Wearied by their continual task of praise,
 Rested wide heifer eyes upon her fallen lids.
 Islanded in stars,
 Even the keen Intelligences turned away
 From the mathematic splendor of the spheres' incessant rolling chime.

Himself, the Father moved,
 Traditional and vast,
 Remembering fresher years,
 Might have inclined his steeply pinnacled head,
 But his more zealous son,
 As neat as Thammuz, with smooth, pallid cheeks,
 Sensing an evil, shut the casement fast.

But I, remembering Atlantis, wept,
 Remembering her paths and unswept flowers,
 Clean beaches, patterned by a light sea wrack,
 And the ruined halcyon nests that came on shore.

Tears, in their freedom, cloud the eyes,
 Drowsing the sense.
 Honey and poppy equally mixed together,
 They cannot drug away or curtain off with sleep
 Such pitiless disharmony of shapes.

Louis MacNeice

LOUIS MAC NEICE was born September 12, 1907, in the North of Ireland. His family, however, came from the West of Ireland, so he is not to be designated an Orangeman. He was at Oxford, Merton College, from 1926 to 1930, when he married and moved to Birmingham, after which he lectured in Greek in London.

His first volume, Blind Fireworks (1929), is more than an exhibit of the usual juvenilia, but the author dismisses it with the assurance that none of it will survive. The influence of Edith Sitwell (obvious in "Cradle Song") is here, but an alert mind is fashioning an idiom of its own. In the succeeding Poems published in 1935, the imaginative power is apparent. Like his immediate contemporaries, MacNeice prefers to spice the piquant half-rhyme with the traditional full vowel; like Auden and Spender, he uses the strictly contemporary scene. Like them, also, he adapts, turns, and generally "heightens" the ordinary speech of the day. It is in such poems as "Sunday Morning," "Morning Sun" and "Birmingham" that MacNeice, in common with a few others, points to a revival of vitality, a reliance on contemporary life, however complicated and difficult it may be.

Poems 1925-1940 is an odd mingling of the delicate lyrics which MacNeice wrote as a youth and the semi-jazz approximations which he composed in his thirties. In the later poems he often relies on a casual tone and complacent finalities; he overuses the offhand tone and carries the natural order of words to the pitch of banality. The ideas suffer; the style becomes a loose set of statements dropped haphazardly into verse. Conversationally limited and always "in character," this is, as Edwin Muir wrote in The Present Age, "attractively tentative, almost gossipy: the poetry of a man who will never go farther than he feels he can legitimately go, and who is never swept off his feet." Nevertheless, when MacNeice puts aside carelessness, he has a way of rousing the reader by making trivial things seem tremendous, by suddenly sharpening his idiom and shooting phrases which rankle but lodge in the memory.

Besides his poetry, MacNeice wrote Out of the Picture (1937), a play in verse which is fantastic and satirical, collaborated with W. H. Auden in Letters from Iceland (1937); issued a sensible, if not inspired, examination of Modern Poetry (1938), and published a searching and highly readable summary of The Poetry of W. B. Yeats (1941).

THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING ROOM

Under the hive-like dome the stooping haunted readers
 Go up and down the alleys, tap the cells of knowledge—
     Honey and wax, the accumulation of years—
 Some on commission, some for the love of learning,
 Some because they have nothing better to do
 Or because they hope these walls of books will deaden
     The drumming of the demon in their ears.

Cranks, hacks, poverty-stricken scholars,
 In pince-nez, period hats or romantic beards
     And cherishing their hobby or their doom.
 Some are too much alive and some are asleep
 Hanging like bars in a world of inverted values,
 Folded up in themselves in a world which is safe and silent:
     This is the British Museum Reading Room.

Out on the steps in the sun the pigeons are courting,
 Puffing their ruffs and sweeping their tails or taking
     A sun-bath at their ease

And under the totem poles—the ancient terror—
 Between the enormous fluted Ionic columns
 There seeps from heavily jowled or hawk-like foreign faces
 The guttural sorrow of the refugees.

AND LOVE HUNG STILL

And love hung still as crystal over the bed
 And filled the corners of the enormous room;
 The boom of dawn that left her sleeping, showing
 The flowers mirrored in the mahogany table.

O my love, if only I were able
 To protract this hour of quiet after passion,
 Not ration happiness but keep this door for ever
 Closed on the world, its own world closed within it.

But dawn's waves trouble with the bubbling minute,
 The names of books come clear upon their shelves,
 The reason delves for duty and you will wake
 With a start and go on living on your own.

The first train passes and the windows groan,
 Voices will hector and your voice become
 A drum in tune with theirs, which all last night
 Like sap that fingered through a hungry tree
 Asserted our one night's identity.

CRADLE SONG

The clock's untiring fingers wind the wool of darkness
 And we all lie alone, having long outgrown our cradles
 (Sleep, sleep, Miriam)
 And the flames like faded ladies always unheeded simper
 And all is troubledness.

Soft the wool, dark the wool
 Is gathered slowly, wholly up
 Into a ball, all of it.

And yet in the back of the mind, lulled all else,
 There is something unsleeping, un-tamperable-with,
 Something that whines and scampers
 And like the ladies in the grate will not sleep nor forget itself,
 Clawing at the wool like a kitten.

The clock's fingers wind, wind the wool of Lethe,
 (Sleep, sleep, Miriam)
 It glides across the floor drawn by hidden fingers

And the beast droops his head
 And the fire droops its flounces
 And winks a final ogle out of the fading embers
 But no one pays attention;

This is too much, the flames say, insulted,
 We who were once the world's beauties and now
 No one pays attention
 No one remembers us.

Sleep, sleep, Miriam.
 And as for this animal of yours
 He must be cradled also.
 That he may not unravel this handiwork of forgetfulness.
 That he may not philander with the flames before they die.

The world like a cradle rises and falls
 On a wave of confetti and funerals
 And sordor and stinks and stupid faces
 And the deity making bored grimaces.

Oh what a muddle he has made of the wool,
 (God will tomorrow have his hands full),
 You must muzzle your beast, you must fasten him
 For the whole of life—the interim.

Through the interim we pass
 Everyone under an alias
 Till they gather the strands of us together
 And wind us up for ever and ever.

SUNDAY MORNING

Down the road someone is practicing scales,
 The notes like little fishes vanish with a wink of tails,
 Man's heart expands to tinker with his car
 For this is Sunday morning, Fate's great bazaar,
 Regard these means as ends, concentrate on this Now,
 And you may grow to music or drive beyond Hindhead anyhow,
 Take corners on two wheels until you go so fast
 That you can clutch a fringe or two of the windy past,
 That you can abstract this day and make it to the week of time
 A small eternity, a sonnet self-contained in rhyme.

But listen, up the road, something gulps, the church spire
 Opens its eight bells out, skulls' mouths which will not tire
 To tell how there is no music or movement which secures Escape from the weekday time. Which deadens and endures.

MUSEUMS

Museums offer us, running from among the buses,
 A centrally heated refuge, parquet floors and sarcophaguses,
 Into whose tall fake porches we hurry without a sound
 Like a beetle under a brick that lies, useless, on the ground.
 Warmed and cajoled by the silence the cowed cypher revives,
 Mirrors himself in the cases of pots, paces himself by marble lives,
 Makes believe it was he that was the glory that was Rome,
 Soft on his cheek the nimbus of other people's martyrdom,
 And then returns to the street, his mind an arena where sprawls
 Any number of consumptive Keatses and dying Gauls.

MORNING SUN

Shuttles of trains going north, going south, drawing threads of blue
 The shining of the lines of trams like swords
 Thousands of posters asserting a monopoly of the good, the beautiful, the true
 Crowds of people all in the vocative, you and you,
 The haze of the morning shot with words

Yellow sun comes white off the wet streets but bright
 Chromium yellows in the gay sun's light
 Filleted sun streaks the purple mist,
 Everything is kissed and reticulated with sun
 Scooped-up and cupped in the open fronts of shops
 And bouncing on the traffic which never stops.

And the street fountain blown across the square
 Rainbow-trellises the air and sunlight blazons
 The red butcher's and scrolls of fish on marble slabs
 Whistled bars of music crossing silver sprays
 And horns of cars, touché, touché, rapiers' retort, a moving cage,
 A turning page of shine and sound, the day's maze.

But when the sun goes out, the streets go cold, the hanging meat
 And tiers of fish are colorless and merely dead
 And the hoots of cars neurotically repeat and the tiptoed feet
 Of women hurry and falter whose faces are dead
 And I see in the air but not belonging there
 The blown gray powder of the fountain gray as the ash
 That forming on a cigarette covers the red.

BIRMINGHAM

Smoke from the train-gulf hid by hoardings blunders upward, the brakes of cars
 Pipe as the policeman pivoting round raises his flat hand, bars
 With his figure of a monolith Pharaoh the queue of fidgety machines
 (Chromium dogs on the bonnet, faces behind the triplex screens)
 Behind him the streets run away between the proud glass of shops
 Cubical scent-bottles artificial legs arctic foxes and electric mops

But beyond this center the slumward vista thins like a diagram:
There, unvisited, are Vulcan's forges who doesn't care a tinker's damn.

Splayed outwards through the suburbs houses, houses for rest
Seductively rigged by the builder, half-timbered houses with lips pressed
So tightly and eyes staring at the traffic through bleary haws
•And only a six inch grip of the racing earth in their concrete claws;
In these houses men as in a dream pursue the Platonic Forms
With wireless and cairn terriers and gadgets approximating to the fickle norms
And endeavor to find God and score one over the neighbor
By climbing tentatively upward on jerry-built beauty and sweated labor.

The lunch hour: the shops empty, shopgirls' faces relax
Diaphanous as green glass empty as old almanacs
As incoherent with ticketed gewgaws tiered behind their heads
As the Burne-Jones windows in St. Philip's broken by crawling leads Inspid color, patches of emotion, Saturday thrills—
(This theater is sprayed with "June")—the gutter take our old playbills,
Next week-end it is likely in the heart's funfair we shall pull
Strong enough on the handle! to get back our money; or at any rate it is possible.

On shining lines the trams like vast sarcophagi move
Into the sky, plum after sunset, merging to duck's egg, barred with mauve
Zeppelin clouds, and pentecost-like the cars' headlights bud
Out from sideroads and the traffic signals, crème-de-menthe or bull's blood,
Tell one to stop, the engine gently breathing, or to go on
To where like black pipes of organs in the frayed and fading zone
Of the West the factory chimneys on sullen sentry will all night wait
To call, in the harsh morning, sleep-stupid faces through the daily gate.

W. H. Auden

WYSTAN HUGH AUDEN was born in York, February 21, 1907. He was educated at Gresham's School, Holt, and Christ Church, Oxford. From 1930 to 1935 he taught school at Malvern. He was with the G. P. O. Film Unit from 1935 to 1936. In 1939 he came to America and took out citizenship papers.

By the time Auden was thirty he had already been the center of several controversies; an English magazine had brought out a special Auden number; an entire movement seems to have stemmed from his energy and versatility. At thirty-three he had written and compiled four books of poetry, three plays, a collection of prose fiction, two books of travel, and two anthologies. Poems (1930) and The Orators (1932) were published, together with the supplementary Dance of Death, in a one-volume American edition severely entitled Poems (1934). Printed in this country simultaneously with Stephen Spender, Auden was continually reviewed with Spender, and when it was learned that both poets had in common an Oxford education, poetic influences, and radical political policies, critics coupled them as though they were two parts of one poet, dangerous but distinguished Siamese twins. No understanding reader could have confused or coupled the two. Spender is a romantic and, in spite of a modern vocabulary, traditional poet; Auden is a satirical and restlessly experimental writer. But contrasts are as misleading as comparisons, and Spender's work is considered separately on page 483. Auden has entirely different claims upon the reader.

The outstanding feature of Auden's poetry is its combination of variety and originality. Even when Auden uses the traditional forms, he imposes a new pattern upon them. No contemporary poet has a greater natural command of language; he makes rhetoric out of banal jargon, and summons eloquence without raising his voice. This very eloquence is sometimes his undoing, for, having launched his poem brilliantly, he plunges into a sea of free association, private symbols, mad wit, and incoherent angers until Auden loses first the reader and, finally perhaps, himself. Yet, even in the most difficult longer poems, parts break through which require no key or comment. "Paid on Both Sides" is typical; it is a thirty-page play (its author calls it a "charade") which has a collapsing civilization for its background and which, in its confusion of purpose and effects, baffles intelligences higher than the average. Yet every individual scene is dynamic; the sense of shock is communicated with a touch of horror. Surpassing Spender in his use of shifting rhyme and other devices of sound, Auden is the most daring and successful experimenter since Wilfred Owen. A single reading will barely suggest the skill of Auden's metric and the virtuosity of his idiom, maintained through all the varying forms. He employs suspensions and "analyzed" rhyme with great freedom, mingles assonance with perfect rhyme, and explores the limbo between prose and verse, between music and mathematics.

It has been said with some justice that Auden is a writer of many styles rather than a perfecter of one idiom. He adopts the structure of The Waste Land, the consonantal rhymes of Wilfred Owen, the interior monologue of Joyce. He even imitates Gerard Manley Hopkins' alliterative assonance and his onrushing syllables, imitates them to the point of parody:

Which of you waking early and watching daybreak
Will not hasten in heart, handsome, aware of wonder
At light unleashed, advancing, a leader of movement,
Breaking like surf on turf on road and roof . . .

Self-divided, too, is Auden's philosophy. He is merciless in his mockery of "the old gang"; yet he is not convincingly on the "other side." He speaks for those who are bullied into war and exploited in peace, but he is not really one of them. Even his satire fails, for it is indiscriminate. In burlesquing his enemies Auden sometimes becomes confused and identified with them, so that, as Day Lewis said, "instead of the relation between satirist and victim which alone can give significance to satire we get a series of figures into each of whom the satirist temporarily disappears." There are pages which make a complete and immediate communication, and there are poems which exhibit a total indifference to whether or not they are understood.

In the early poems, Auden manages to fuse the orator, the mocking spy, the satirical clown, "the masked amuser," and the moving romantic poet. In such a poem as "Ode; To My Pupils," with its militant figures and setting of imminent war, such lyrics as "The strings' excitement" and "This lunar beauty," and the choruses in "Paid on Both Sides" with their morose and desperate overtones, there is an energy of statement, a swiftness of suggestion unmatched by any of Auden's contemporaries.

With On This Island (1937) Auden suddenly simplified his effects and clarified his idiom. In what seemed to be a determination to communicate with the common man, Auden often went to both extremes of language. He did not discard eloquence, but he frequently spoke in "plain" terms and easy measures, imitated popular songs, composed ballads reminiscent of folk tunes, and put purposely crude rhymes to "coarse" themes. The lines were more tightly organized, the form was strictly shaped. Auden somehow combined the fastidious scholar and the man-of-the-people. Following Yeats, he became the spokesman of an aristocratic art and a champion of the vulgar. In Another Time (1940) the poetry alternates between nobility and rowdiness; cabaret songs, street ballads, and imitation "blues" occur between poems as brilliant as "Law, say the gardeners, is the sun" and as uplifting as "In Memory of W. B. Yeats." In the midst of intricate experiments, there are love poems of the clearest seriousness and sharpest sensitivity. Auden is perhaps the only modern poet who can really express himself in a villanelle or a sestina—he uses the latter form to remarkable effect in the "Journal of an Airman" and in "Hearing of harvests rotting in the valleys."

The Double Man (1941) makes it more apparent than ever that Auden is the most provocative as well as the most unpredictable poet of his generation. In a poem of some seventeen hundred lines Auden speaks as the poet who has become the multiple man: the bravura performer and the careful craftsman, the lively iconoclast and the studious wit. The Double Man was immediately hailed as a phenomenon, a landmark, a Return to Order. The most experimental of contemporary poets had gone to school to Pope, and the result of his exercise in discipline seemed to be a turning-point for the 1940s, the long-awaited reply to the Wastelanders. Auden's revival of formalism astonished many, but it is not too difficult to understand. "The formalism of the eighteenth century," said David Daiches in Poetry and the Modern World (1940), "appealed to those who wished to return to some comfortable discipline and to escape from a literature becoming daily more confused about its values and more uncertain about its aims."

Auden's sensibility redeems his dichotomy; it is, in fact, all the more affecting because it is the record of ambivalence. Hesitating between tradition and revolution, between a world whose values he distrusts and a world whose designs he cannot discern, he dwells alternately in both. It is this ambivalence, beautifully communicated, which hypnotizes the readers with a sense of estrangement even when Auden celebrates companionship, of universal disorder beneath the conscious order. Not the least of Auden's triumphs is the way he can mingle incongruities and make them seem not only logical but inevitable. His work moves continually, if hesitantly, toward clarity and closer integration:

All I have is a voice
 To undo the folded lie . . .
 Hunger allows no choice . . .
 We must love one another or die.

Versatile enough in his own right, Auden has had to resort to collaborators in order to keep pace with his own energetic progress. With John Garrett he compiled an anthology The Poet's Tongue (1935); with Louis MacNeice he composed Letters from Iceland (1937); with Christopher Isherwood he wrote two plays, The Dog Beneath the Skin (1935), a satire, and On the Frontier (1938), a melo-drama, and Journey to a War (1939) an account of a trip through war-torn China.

The best analysis of Auden's attitude as well as his virtuoso power, appears in Stephen Spender's The Destructive Element (1935) and in David Daiches' Poetry and the Modern World (1940).

CHORUS FROM A PLAY

Doom is dark and deeper than any sea-dingle:
 Upon what man it fall
 In spring, day-wishing flowers appearing,
 Avalanche sliding, white snow from rock-face,
 That he should leave his house;
 No cloud-soft hands can hold him, restraint by women,
 But ever that man goes
 By place-keepers, by forest trees,
 A stranger to strangers over undried sea,
 Houses for fishes, suffocating water;
 Or lonely on fell as chat,
 By pot-holed becks
 A bird stone-haunting, an unquiet bird.

There head falls forward, fatigued at evening,
 And dreams of home:
 Waving from window, spread of welcome,
 Kissing of wife under single sheet;
 But waking sees
 Bird-flocks nameless to him, through doorway voices
 Of new men making another love.

Save him from hostile capture
 From sudden tiger's spring at corner:
 Protect his house,
 His anxious house where days are counted
 From thunderbolt protect,
 From gradual ruin spreading like a stain:
 Converting number from vague to certain
 Bring joy, bring day of his returning,
 Lucky with day approaching, with leaning dawn.

ODE; TO MY PUPILS

Though aware of our rank and alert to obey orders,
 Watching with binoculars the movement of the grass for an ambush,
 The pistol cocked, the code-word committed to memory;

    The youngest drummer
 Knows all the peace-time stories like the oldest soldier,
     Though frontier-conscious,

About the tall white gods who landed from their open boat,
 Skilled in the working of copper, appointing our feast-days,
 Before the islands were submerged, when the weather was calm,

    The maned lion common,
 An open wishing-well in every garden;
     When love came easy.

Perfectly certain, all of us, but not from the records,
 Not from the unshaven agent who returned to the camp;
 The pillar dug from the desert recorded only

    The sack of a city,
 The agent clutching his side collapsed at our feet,
 "Sorry! They got me!"

Yes, they were living here once but do not now,
 Yes, they are living still but do not here;
 Lying awake after Lights Out a recruit may speak up:
 "Who told you all this?"
 The tent-talk pauses a little till a veteran answers
 "Go to sleep, Sonny!"

Turning over he closes his eyes, and then in a moment
 Sees the sun at midnight bright over cornfield and pasture,
 Our hope. . . . Someone jostles him, fumbling for boots,

    Time to change guard:
 Boy, the quarrel was before your time, the aggressor
 No one you know.

Your childish moments of awareness were all of our world,
 At five you sprang, already a tiger in the garden,
 At night your mother taught you to pray for our Daddy
 Far away fighting,
 One morning you fell off a horse and your brother mocked you:
 "Just like a girl!"

You've got their names to live up to and questions won't help,
 You've a very full program, first aid, gunnery, tactics,
 The technique to master of raids and hand-to-hand fighting;
 Are you in training?
 Are you taking care of yourself? are you sure of passing
 The endurance test?

Now we're due to parade on the square in front of the Cathedral,
 When the bishop has blessed us, to file in after the choir-boys,
 To stand with the wine-dark conquerors in the roped-off pews,
 Shout ourselves hoarse:
 "They ran like hares; we have broken them up like fire-wood;
 They fought against God."

While in a great rift in the limestone miles away
 At the same hour they gather, tethering their horse beside them;
 A scarecrow prophet from a boulder foresees our judgment,
 Their oppressors howling;
 And the bitter psalm is caught by the gale from the rocks:
 "How long shall they flourish?"

What have we all been doing to have made from Fear
 That laconic war-bitten captain addressing them now?
 "Heart and head shall be keener, mood the more
 As our might lessens":
 To have caused their shout "We will fight till we lie down beside
 The Lord we have loved."

There's Wrath who has learnt every trick of guerilla war-fare,
 The shamming dead, the night-raid, the feinted retreat;
 Envy their brilliant pamphleteer, to lying
 As husband true,
 Expert Impersonator and linguist, proud of his power
 To hoodwink sentries.

Gluttony living alone, austerer than us,
 Big simple greed, Acedia tamed with them all
 For her stamina, keeping the outposts, and somewhere Lust
 With his sapper's skill,
 Muttering to his fuses in a tunnel "Could I meet here with Love,
 I would hug him to death."

There are faces there for which for a very long time
 We've been on the look-out, though often at home we imagined,
 Catching sight of a back or hearing a voice through a doorway,
 We had found them at last;
 Put our arms round their necks and looked in their eyes and discovered
 We were unlucky.

And some of them, surely, we seem to have seen before:
 Why, that girl who rode off on her bicycle one fine summer evening
 And never returned, she's there; and the banker we'd noticed
 Worried for weeks;
 Till he failed to arrive one morning and his room was empty,
 Gone with a suitcase.

They speak of things done on the frontier we were never told,
 The hidden path to their squat Pictish tower

They will never reveal though kept without sleep, for their code is

"Death to the squealer":

They are brave, yes, though our newspapers mention their bravery
In inverted commas.

But careful; back to our lines; it is unsafe there,
Passports are issued no longer; that area is closed;
There's no fire in the waiting-room now at the climbers' Junction,
And all this year
Work has been stopped on the power-house; the wind whistles under
The half-built culverts.

Do you think that because you have heard that on Christmas Eve
In a quiet sector they walked about on the skyline,
Exchanged cigarettes, both learning the words for "I love you"

In either language:

You can stroll across for a smoke and a chat any evening?
Try it and see.

That rifle-sight you're designing; is it ready yet?
You're holding us up; the office is getting impatient;
The square munition-works out on the old allotments
Needs stricter watching;
If you see any loiterers there you may shoot without warning,
We must stop that leakage.

All leave is cancelled tonight; we must say good-by.
We entrain at once for the North; we shall see in the morning
The headlands we're doomed to attack; snow down to the tide-line:
Though the bunting signals
"Indoors before it's too late; cut peat for your fires,"
We shall lie out there.

THE STRINGS' EXCITEMENT

The strings' excitement, the applauding drum
Are but the initiating ceremony
That out of cloud the ancestral face may come.

And never hear their subaltern mockery,
Graphiti-writers, moss-grown with whimsies,
Loquacious when the watercourse is dry.

It is your face I see, and morning's praise
Of you is ghost's approval of the choice,
Filtered through roots of the effacing grass.

Fear, taking me aside, would give advice
"To conquer her, the visible enemy,
It is enough to turn away the eyes."

Yet there's no peace in this assaulted city
But speeches at the corners, hope for news,
Outside the watchfires of a stronger army.

And all emotions to expression came,
Recovering the archaic imagery:
This longing for assurance takes the form

Of a hawk's vertical stooping from the sky;
These tears, salt for a disobedient dream,
The lunatic agitation of the sea;

While this despair with hardened eyeballs cries
"A Golden Age, a Silver . . . rather this, Massive and taciturn years, the Age of Ice."

THIS LUNAR BEAUTY

This lunar beauty
Has no history
Is complete and early;
If beauty later
Bear any feature
It had a lover
And is another.

This like a dream
Keeps other time
And daytime is
The loss of this;

For time is inches
And the heart's changes
Where ghost has haunted
Lost and wanted.

But this was never
A ghost's endeavor
Nor finished this,
Was ghost at ease;
And till it pass
Love shall not near
The sweetness here
Nor sorrow take
His endless look.

ALWAYS THE FOLLOWING WIND

Voice:

Always the following wind of history
Of others' wisdom makes a buoyant air
Till we come suddenly on pockets where
Is nothing loud but us; where voices seem Abrupt, untrained, competing with no lie
Our fathers shouted once. They taught us war,
To scamper after darlings, to climb hills,
To emigrate from weakness, find ourselves
The easy conquerors of empty bays:
But never told us this, left each to learn,
Hear something of that soon-arriving day
When to gaze longer and delighted on
A face or idea be impossible.
Could I have been some simpleton that lived
Before disaster sent his runners here;
Younger than worms, worms have too much to bear.
Yes, mineral were best: could I but see
These woods, these fields of green, this lively world
Sterile as moon.

Chorus

The Spring unsettles sleeping partnerships,
Foundries improve their casting process, shops
Open a further wing on credit till
The winter. In summer boys grow tall
With running races on the 'froth-wet sand,
War is declared there, here a treaty signed;
Here a scum breaks up like a bomb, there troops
Deploy like birds. But proudest into traps
Have fallen. These gears which ran in oil for week
By week, needing no look, now will not work;
Those manors mortgaged twice to pay for love
Go to another.

O how shall man live
 Whose thought is born, child of one farcical night,
 To find him old? The body warm but not
 By choice, he dreams of folk in dancing bunches,
 Of tart wine spilt on home-made benches,
 Where learns, one drawn apart, a secret will Restore the dead; but comes thence to a wall.
 Outside on frozen soil lie armies killed
 Who seem familiar, but they are cold.
 Now the most solid wish he tries to keep
 His hands show through; he never will look up,
 Say "I am good." On him misfortune falls
 More than enough. Better where no one feels,
 The out-of-sight, buried too deep for shafts.

CHORUS

(from "Paid on Both Sides")

To throw away the key and walk away
 Not abrupt exile, the neighbors asking why,
 But following a line with left and right
 An altered gradient at another rate
 Learns more than maps upon the whitewashed wall
 The hand put up to ask; and makes us well
 Without confession of the ill. All pasts
 Are single old past now, although some posts
 Are forwarded, held looking on a new view;
 The future shall fulfill a surer vow
 Not smiling at queen over the glass rim
 Nor making gunpowder in the top room,
 Not swooping at the surface still like gulls
 But with prolonged drowning shall develop gills.

But there are still to tempt; areas not seen
 Because of blizzards or an erring sign
 Whose guessed-at wonders would be worth alleging,
 And lies about the cost of a night's lodging.
 Travelers may sleep at inns but not attach,
 They sleep one night together, not asked to touch;
 Receive no normal welcome, not the pressed lip,
 Children to lift, not the assuaging lap.
 Crossing the pass descend the growing stream
 Too tired to hear except the pulses' strum,
 Reach villages to ask for a bed in Rock shutting out the sky, the old life done.

BALLAD

O what is that sound which so thrills the ear
 Down in the valley drumming, drumming?

Only the scarlet soldiers, dear,
The soldiers coming.

O what is that light I see flashing so clear
Over the distance brightly, brightly?
Only the sun on their weapons, dear,
As they step lightly.

O what are they doing with all that gear;
What are they doing this morning, this morning?
Only the usual maneuvers, dear,
Or perhaps a warning.

O why have they left the road down there;
Why are they suddenly wheeling, wheeling?
Perhaps a change in the orders, dear;
Why are you kneeling?

O haven't they stopped for the doctor's care;
Haven't they reined their horses, their horses?
Why, they are none of them wounded, dear,
None of these forces.

O is it the parson they want, with white hair;
Is it the parson, is it, is it?
No, they are passing his gateway, dear,
Without a visit.

O it must be the farmer who lives so near,
It must be the farmer, so cunning, cunning;
They have passed the farm already, dear,
And now they are running.

O where are you going? stay with me here
Were the vows you swore me deceiving, deceiving?
No, I promised to love you, my dear,
But I must be leaving.

O it's broken the lock and splintered the door,
O it's the gate where they're turning, turning;
Their feet are heavy on the floor
And their eyes are burning.

VILLANELLE

Time can say nothing but I told you so,
Time only knows the price we have to pay;
If I could tell you, I would let you know.

If we should weep when clowns put on their show,
If we should stumble when musicians play,
Time can say nothing but I told you so.

There are no fortunes to be told, although
Because I love you more than I can say,
If I could tell you, I would let you know.

The winds must come from somewhere when they blow,
There must be reasons why the leaves decay;
Time can say nothing but I told you so.

Perhaps the roses really want to grow,
The vision seriously intends to stay;
If I could tell you, I would let you know.

Suppose the lions all get up and go,
And all the brooks and soldiers run away?
Time can say nothing but I told you so;
If I could tell you, I would let you know.

"LOOK, STRANGER"

Look, stranger, at this island now
The leaping light for your delight discovers,
Stand stable here
And silent be,
That through the channels of the ear
May wander like a river
The swaying sound of the sea.

Here at the small field's ending pause
Where the chalk wall falls to the foam, and its tall ledges.
Oppose the pluck
And knock of the tide,
And the shingle scrambles after the sucking surf, and the gull lodges
A moment on its sheer side.

Far off like floating seeds the ships
Diverge on urgent voluntary errands;
And the full view
Indeed may enter
And move in memory as now these clouds do,
That pass the harbor mirror
And all the summer through the water saunter.

HEARING OF HARVESTS ROTTING IN THE VALLEYS

We honor founders of these starving cities,
Whose honor is the image of our sorrow.

Hearing of harvests rotting in the valleys,
Seeing at end of street the barren mountains,
Round corners coming suddenly on water,
Knowing them shipwrecked who were launched for islands,

Which cannot see its likeness in their sorrow
That brought them desperate to the brink of valleys;
Dreaming of evening walks through learned cities,

They reined their violent horses on the mountains,
Those fields like ships to castaways on islands,
Visions of green to them that craved for water.

They built by rivers and at night the water
Running past windows comforted their sorrow;
Each in his little bed conceived of islands
Where every day was dancing in the valleys,
And all the year trees blossomed on the mountains,
Where love was innocent, being far from cities.

But dawn came back and they were still in cities;
No marvellous creature rose up from the water,
There was still gold and silver in the mountains,
And hunger was a more immediate sorrow;
Although to moping villagers in valleys
Some waving pilgrims were describing islands. .

"The gods," they promised, "visit us from islands,
Are stalking head-up, lovely through the cities,
Now is the time to leave your wretched valleys
And sail with them across the lime-green water;
Sitting at their white sides, forget their sorrow,
The shadow cast across your lives by mountains."

So many, doubtful, perished in the mountains
Climbing up crags to get a view of islands;
So many, fearful, took with them their sorrow
Which stayed them when they reached unhappy cities;
So many, careless, dived and drowned in water;
So many, wretched, would not leave their valleys.

It is the sorrow; shall it melt? Ah, water
Would gush, flush, green these mountains and these valleys
And we rebuild our cities, not dream of islands.

LAW, SAY THE GARDENERS, IS THE SUN

Law, say the gardeners, is the sun,
Law is the one
All gardeners obey
Tomorrow, yesterday, today.

Law is the wisdom of the old
The impotent grandfathers shrilly scold;
The grandchildren put out a treble tongue,
Law is the senses of the young.

Law, says the priest with a priestly look,
Expounding to an unpriestly people,
Law is the words in my priestly book,
Law is my pulpit and my steeple.

Law, says the judge as he looks down his nose,
Speaking clearly and most severely,
Law is as I've told you before,
Law is as you know I suppose,
Law is but let me explain it once more,
Law is The Law.

Yet law-abiding scholars write;
Law is neither wrong nor right,
Law is only crimes
Punished by places and by times,
Law is the clothes men wear
Anytime, anywhere,
Law is Good-morning and Good-night.

Others say, Law is our Fate;
Others say, Law is our State;
Others say, others say
Law is no more,
Law is gone away.

And always the loud angry crowd
Very angry and very loud
Law is We,
And always the soft idiot softly Me.

If we, dear, know we know no more
Than they about the law,

If I no more than you
 Know what we should and should not do
 Except that all agree
 Gladly or miserably
 That the law is
 And that all know this,
 If therefore thinking it absurd
 To identify Law with some other word,
 Unlike so many men
 I cannot say Law is again,
 No more than they can we suppress
 The universal wish to guess
 Or slip out of our own position
 Into an unconcerned condition.

Although I can at least confine
 Your vanity and mine
 To stating timidly
 A timid similarity,
 We shall boast anyway:
 Like love I say.

Like love we dont know where or why
 Like love we cant compel or fly
 Like love we often weep
 Like love we seldom keep.

LAY YOUR SLEEPING HEAD,
 MY LOVE

Lay your sleeping head, my love,
 Human on my faithless arm;
 Time and fevers burn away
 Individual beauty from
 Thoughtful children, and the grave
 Proves the child ephemeral:

But in my arms till break of day
 Let the living creature lie,
 Mortal, guilty, but to me
 The entirely beautiful.

Soul and body have no bounds:
 To lovers as they lie upon
 Her tolerant enchanted slope
 In their ordinary swoon,
 Grave the vision Venus sends
 Of supernatural sympathy,
 Universal love and hope;
 While an abstract insight wakes
 Among the glaciers and the rocks
 The hermit's sensual ecstasy.

Certainty, fidelity
 On the stroke of midnight pass
 Like vibrations of a bell,
 And fashionable madmen raise
 Their pedantic boring cry:
 Every farthing of the cost,
 All the dreaded cards foretell,
 Shall be paid, but from this night
 Not a whisper, not a thought,
 Not a kiss nor look be lost.

Beauty, midnight, vision dies:
 Let the winds of dawn that blow
 Softly round your dreaming head
 Such a day of sweetness show
 Eye and knocking heart may bless,
 Find the mortal world enough;
 Noons of dryness see you fed
 By the involuntary powers,
 Nights of insult let you pass
 Watched by every human love.

IN MEMORY OF W. B. YEATS

I

He disappeared in the dead of winter:
 The brooks were frozen, the airports almost deserted,
 And snow disfigured the public statues;
 The mercury sank in the mouth of the dying day.
 O all the instruments agree
 The day of his death was a dark cold day.

Far from his illness
 The wolves ran on through the evergreen forests,
 The peasant river was untempted by the fashionable quays;

By mourning tongues
The death of the poet was kept from his poems.

But for him it was his last afternoon as himself,
An afternoon of nurses and rumors;
The provinces of his body revolted,
The squares of his mind were empty,
Silence invaded the suburbs,
The current of his feeling failed: he became his admirers.

Now he is scattered among a hundred cities
And wholly given over to unfamiliar affections;
To find his happiness in another kind of wood
And be punished under a foreign code of conscience.
The words of a dead man
Are modified in the guts of the living.

But in the importance and noise of tomorrow
When the brokers are roaring like beasts on the floor of the Bourse,
And the poor have the sufferings to which they are fairly accustomed,
And each in the cell of himself is almost convinced of his freedom;
A few thousand will think of this day
As one thinks of a day when one did something slightly unusual.

O all the instruments agree
The day of his death was a dark cold day.

2

You were silly like us: your gift survived it all;
The parish of rich women, physical decay,
Yourself; mad Ireland hurt you into poetry.
Now Ireland has her madness and her weather still,
For poetry makes nothing happen: it survives
In the valley of its saying where executives
Would never want to tamper; it flows south
From ranches of isolation and the busy griefs,
Raw towns that we believe and die in; it survives,
A way of happening, a mouth.

3

Earth, receive an honored guest;
William Yeats is laid to rest:
Let the Irish vessel lie
Emptied of its poetry.

Time that is intolerant
Of the brave and innocent,
And indifferent in a week
To a beautiful physique,

Worships language and forgives
Everyone by whom it lives;

Pardons cowardice, conceit,
Lays its honors at their feet.

Time that with this strange excuse
Pardon'd Kipling and his views,
And will pardon Paul Claudel,
Pardon's him for writing well.

In the nightmare of the dark
All the dogs of Europe bark,
And the living nations wait,
Each sequestered in its hate;

Intellectual disgrace
Stares from every human face,
And the seas of pity lie
Locked and frozen in each eye.

Follow, poet, follow right
To the bottom of the night,
With your unconstraining voice
Still persuade us to rejoice;

With the farming of a verse
Make a vineyard of the curse,
Sing of human unsucces
In a rapture of distress;

In the deserts of the heart
Let the healing fountain start,
In the prison of his days
Teach the free man how to praise.

Stephen Spender

STEPHEN SPENDER was born near London February 28, 1909, of mixed German, Jewish and English origins; his mother was Violet Schuster, his father was Harold Spender, the well-known journalist. As a child he was especially interested in painting; at seventeen he supported himself by printing chemists' labels on his own press. At nineteen he attended University College, Oxford, but found university training alien to his temperament, and did not then complete his courses. After traveling abroad he returned to Oxford, and went down from University in 1931.

In his eighteenth year Spender himself set up and printed a paper-bound pamphlet of verse, Nine Experiments (1928), which is now un procurable. Immature though much of it is, an individuality already declares itself. Twenty Poems (1930), printed while Spender was still an undergraduate, emphasizes his fecundity; it sounds, tentatively but distinctly, the note of passion so recognizable in the later verse. An imagination, and a fiery one, is at play in such early poems as "A Whim of Time," "Farewell in a Dream," "Winter Landscape," and "Epilogue."

Poems, published in England in 1933, reveals a complete poet. Maturity is suggested and a revolutionary fervor which caused the critics to compare Spender to Shelley. Some of the reviewers demurred at the unconcealed communism throughout, but the lyrical impulse was so great that Spender was hailed as one of the most significant voices of his day. Spender's subject matter is arresting—sometimes too arresting, for it directs too much attention on externals and leads to controversy about that which matters least in poetry. Spender himself is a little too conscious, even too belligerent, about his properties. Riding in a train, watching the world hasten away "like the quick spool of a film," he sees the grass, the cottage by the lake, the familiar symbols, "vivid but unreal."

Real were iron lines, and, smashing the grass
 The cars in which we ride, and real our compelled time:
 Painted on enamel beneath the moving glass
 Unreal were cows, the wave-winged storks, the lime:
 These burned in a clear world from which we pass
 Like rose and love in a forgotten rhyme.

Oftener than not, Spender brings machinery over into poetry, accomplishing a fusion of modern imagery and traditional magic. He does not merely state the superficial aspects of the machine age, he assimilates and re-creates the daily symbols of his environment. As early as 1928, while a remnant of the Georgians were still invoking literary laverocks, lonely lambs, and dependable nightingales, Spender was writing, "Come let us praise the gasworks." A few years later, the same accent expressed itself in simple, transparent delight:

More beautiful and soft than any moth
 With burring furred antennae feeling its huge path
 Through dusk, the air-liner with shut-off engines
 Glides over suburbs and the sleeves set trailing tall
 To point the wind. Gently, broadly, she falls,
 Scarcely disturbing charted currents of air.

Spender is not always as direct as this. Inclined to sentimentality he overcompensates by forcing himself to the other extreme; distrusting the appearance of his simplicities he disguises them in strained metaphors and involved images. The result is a blurring of vision and an ambiguity of communication. Too often the reader has to guess at the meaning of a line which begins clearly enough but ends in a verbal fog. There is, however, no uncertainty about Spender's emotion. The emotion is clear, warm, compelling. It is serious and straightforward, especially in such poems as "The Express," "What I Expected," reaching a powerful climax in "The Prisoners," "The Funeral" and the moving "An Elementary Classroom."

It is not Spender's choice of opinions which makes his work exciting; it is the integrity of his aim accompanied by charged and highly suggestive phrases, the thrust of his vision. The old images have gone down with the bombed buildings, as he tells us in "Not Palaces"; they are part of "beauty's filtered dusts." All our faculties must coöperate to appreciate the new values—the eye, that quickly darting, delicately wandering gazelle; the ear, which “suspends on a chord the spirit drinking timelessness”; touch that intensifies all senses.

Vienna (1935) is Spender's best-intentioned but least successful effort. “Propaganda verse is to be condemned,” wrote C. Day Lewis, “when the didactic is achieved at the expense of the poetic.” Unfortunately Vienna is didactic. The Still Centre (1939) is a return to Spender's power, an exploration of “the human conditions,” personal in method, universal in implication. Spender's major theme is his deepest speculation:

How it was that works, money, interest, building, could ever hide
The palpable and obvious love of man.

“The palpable and obvious love of man” intensifies Spender's sensibility. In spite of occasional weaknesses, Spender animates facts and figures, opens up new territories, turns abstractions into action. In the exalted lines beginning “I think continually of those who were truly great,” he achieves an utterance which is noble and unforgettable.

In addition to his poetry, Spender has been prolific in criticism, fiction, and drama. Trial of a Judge (1938) is a tragedy of the Nazi terror, a telescoping of the real and the incredible. The Burning Cactus (1936) is a volume of short stories, slightly reminiscent of D. H. Lawrence in its hurt sensibility. The Destructive Element (1935) is a critical appraisal of a civilization at once creative and corrupt, a discussion of the social beliefs of Yeats, Eliot, Lawrence and others, an extension of Spender's political-moral views, and a justification of his theory that “Poetry does not state truth; it states the condition within which something felt is true.”

FAREWELL IN A DREAM

Now shout into my dream. These trumpets snored
Less golden by my side, when you were there . . .
It is no reason now to think me coward
That, being insulted by a gamekeeper,
I hung my head, or looked into the air.
Thrusting between the peaks without a word,
Buttressed against the winds, or like a sword,
Then you were undisputed conqueror.

But dragged into this nightmare symphony
Of drum and tempest surging in my head,
Faced by these symbols of reality
You showed as one most pitifully naked.
I hailed your earth. Salute my Hades too.
Since we must part, let's part as heroes do.

STATISTICS

Lady, you think too much of speeds,
 Pulleys and cranes swing in your mind;
 The Woolworth Tower has made you blind
 To Egypt and the pyramids.

Too much impressed by motor-cars
 You have a false historic sense.
 But I, perplexed at God's expense
 Of electricity on stars,

From Brighton pier shall weigh the seas,
 And count the sands along the shore:
 Despise all moderns, thinking more
 Of Shakespeare and Praxiteles.

A WHIM OF TIME

A whim of time, the general arbiter,
 Proclaims the love instead of death of friends.
 Under the domed sky and athletic sun
 The three stand naked, the new, bronzed German,
 The young communist and myself, being English.
 Yet to unwind the traveled sphere ten years
 And two take arms, spring to a ghostly posture:
 Or else roll on the thing a further ten
 And the poor clerk with world-offended eyes
 Builds with red hands his heaven; makes our bones
 A necessary scaffolding to peace.

Now I suppose that the once-envious dead
 Have learnt a strict philosophy of clay
 After these centuries, to haunt us no longer
 In the churchyard, or at the end of the lane,
 Or howling at the edge of the city
 Beyond the last bean-rows, near the new factory.
 Our fathers enemies, yet lives no feud
 Of prompting Hamlet on the kitchen stair,
 There falls no shade across our blank of peace
 Being together struck across the path
 Or taper finger threatening solitude.

Our father's misery, the dead man's mercy,
 The cynic's mystery, weaves a philosophy—
 That history of man traced purely from dust
 Is lipping skulls on the revolving rim
 Or posture of slavery with the granite head bowed:
 These, risen a moment, joined or separate,
 Fall heavily, then are always separate.
 A stratum scarce reckoned by geologists,
 Sod lifted, turned, slapped back again with spade.

EPILOGUE

Time is a thing
 That does not pass through boredom and the wishing,
 But must be fought with, rushed at, over-awed,
 And threatened with a sword:

For that prodigious voyager, the Mind,
 Another self doth find
 At each hour's stage, and riven, hewn and wrought
 Cannot foretell its port.

Let heart be done, shut close the whining eyes,
 And work, or drink, or sleep, till life defies
 Minute, month, hour and day
 Which are harrowed, and beaten, and scared away.

DISCOVERED IN MID-OCEAN

He will watch the hawk with an indifferent eye
     Or pitifully;
 Nor on those eagles that so feared him, now
     Will strain his brow;
 Weapons men use, stone, sling, and strong-thewed bow
     He will not know.

This aristocrat, superb of all instinct,
     With death close linked
 Had paced the enormous cloud, almost had won
     War on the sun;
 Till now like Icarus mid-ocean-drowned,
     Hands, wings, are found. . . .

WHAT I EXPECTED

What I expected was Thunder, fighting,
 Long struggles with men
 And climbing.
 After continual straining
 I should grow strong;
 Then the rocks would shake
 And I should rest long.

What I had not foreseen
 Was the gradual day
 Weakening the will
 Leaking the brightness away,
 The lack of good to touch
 The fading of body and soul
 Like smoke before wind
 Corrupt, unsubstantial.

The wearing of Time,
 And the watching of cripples pass
 With limbs shaped like questions
 In their odd twist,
 The pulverous grief
 Melting the bones with pity,
 The sick falling from earth—
 These, I could not foresee.

For I had expected always
 Some brightness to hold in trust,
 Some final innocence
 To save from dust;
 That, hanging solid,
 Would dangle through all
 Like the created poem
 Or the dazzling crystal.

THE PRISONERS

Far, far the least of all, in want,
 Are these,
 The prisoners
 Turned massive with their vaults and dark with dark.

They raise no hands, which rest upon their knees,
 But lean their solid eyes against the night,
 Dimly they feel
 Only the furniture they use in cells.

Their time is almost Death. The silted flow
 Of years on years
 Is marked by dawns
 As faint as cracks on mud-flats of despair.

My pity moves amongst them like a breeze
 On walls of stone
 Fretting for summer leaves, or like a tunc
 On ears of stone.

Then, when I raise my hands to strike,
 It is too late,
 There are no chains that fall
 Nor visionary liquid door
 Melted with anger.

When have their lives been free from walls and dark
 And airs that choke?
 And where less prisoner to let my anger
 Like a sun strike?

If I could follow them from room to womb
 To plant some hope
 Through the black silk of the big-bellied gown
 There would I win.

No, no, no,
 It is too late for anger,
 Nothing prevails
 But pity for the grief they cannot feel.

WINTER LANDSCAPE

Come home with white gulls waving across gray
 Fields. Evening. A daffodil West.
 Somewhere in clefts of rock the birds hide, breast to breast.

I warm with fire. Curtain shrouds dying day.
 Alone. By the glowing ember
 I shut out the bleak-tombed evenings of November.

And breast to breast, those swans. Sheep huddle and press
 Close. Each to each. Oh,
 Is there no herd of men like beasts where man may go?

Come home at last; come, end of loneliness.
 Sea. Evening. Daffodil West.
 And our thin dying souls against Eternity pressed.

THE FUNERAL

Death is another milestone on their way.
 With laughter on their lips and with winds blowing round them
 They record simply
 How this one excelled all others in making driving-belts.

This is festivity, it is the time of statistics
 When they record what one unit contributed:
 They are glad as they lay him back in the earth
 And thank him for what he gave them.

They walk home remembering the straining red flags,
 And with pennons of song still fluttering through their blood
 They speak of the world-state
 With its towns like brain-centers and its pulsing arteries.

They think how one life hums, revolves and toils,
 One cog in a golden and singing hive:
 Like spark from fire, its task happily achieved,
 It falls away quietly.

No more are they haunted by the individual grief
 Nor the crocodile tears of European genius,
 The decline of a culture
 Mourned by scholars who dream of the ghosts of Greek boys.

THE EXPRESS

After the first powerful plain manifesto
 The black statement of pistons, without more fuss
 But gliding like a queen, she leaves the station.
 Without bowing and with restrained unconcern
 She passes the houses which humbly crowd outside,
 The gasworks and at last the heavy page
 Of death, printed by gravestones in the cemetery.
 Beyond the town there lies the open country
 Where, gathering speed, she acquires mystery,
 The luminous self-possession of ships on ocean.
 It is now she begins to sing—at first quite low
 Then loud, and at last with a jazzy madness—
 The song of her whistle screaming at curves,
 Of deafening tunnels, brakes, innumerable bolts.

And always light, aerial, underneath
 Goes the elate meter of her wheels.
 Steaming through metal landscape on her lines
 She plunges new eras of wild happiness
 Where speed throws up strange shapes, broad curves
 And parallels clean like the steel of guns.
 At last, further than Edinburgh or Rome,
 Beyond the crest of the world, she reaches night
 Where only a low streamline brightness
 Of phosphorus on the tossing hills is white.
 Ah, like a comet through flames she moves entranced
 Wrapt in her music no bird song, no, nor bough
 Breaking with honey buds, shall ever equal.

THE LANDSCAPE NEAR AN AERODROME

More beautiful and soft than any moth
 With burring furred antennae feeling its huge path
 Through dusk, the air-liner with shut-off engines
 Glides over suburbs and the sleeves set trailing tall
 To point the wind. Gently, broadly, she falls,
 Scarcely disturbing charted currents of air.

Lulled by descent, the travelers across sea
 And across feminine land indulging its easy limbs
 In miles of softness, now let their eyes trained by watching
 Penetrate through dusk the outskirts of this town
 Here where industry shows a fraying edge.
 Here they may see what is being done.

Beyond the winking masthead light
 And the landing-ground, they observe the outposts
 Of work: chimneys like lank black fingers
 Or figures frightening and mad: and squat buildings
 With their strange air behind trees, like women's faces
 Shattered by grief. Here where few houses
 Moan with faint light behind their blinds
 They remark the unhomely sense of complaint, like a dog
 Shut out and shivering at the foreign moon.

In the last sweep of love, they pass over fields
 Behind the aerodrome, where boys play all day
 Hacking dead grass: whose cries, like wild birds,
 Settle upon the nearest roofs
 But soon are hid under the loud city.

Then, as they land, they hear the tolling bell
 Reaching across the landscape of hysteria
 To where, larger than all the charcoaled batteries
 And imaged towers against that dying sky,
 Religion stands, the church blocking the sun.

AN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL CLASSROOM IN A SLUM

Far far from gusty waves, these children's faces.
 Like rootless weeds the torn hair round their paleness.
 The tall girl with her weighed-down head. The paper-seeming boy with rat's eyes. The stunted unlucky heir Of twisted bones, reciting a father's gnarled disease, His lesson from his desk. At back of the dim class One unnoted, mild and young: his eyes live in a dream Of squirrels' game, in tree room, other than this.

On sour cream walls, donations. Shakespeare's head Cloudless at dawn, civilized dome riding all cities. Belled, flowery, Tyrolean valley. Open-handed map Awarding the world its world. And yet, for these Children, these windows, not this world, are world, Where all their future's painted with a fog, A narrow street sealed in with a lead sky, Far far from rivers, capes, and stars of words.

Surely Shakespeare is wicked, the map a bad example With ships and sun and love tempting them to steal— For lives that slyly turn in their cramped holes From fog to endless night? On their slag heap, these children Wear skins peeped through by bones, and spectacles of steel With mended glass, like bottle bits in slag. Tyrol is wicked; map's promising a fable: All of their time and space are foggy slum, So blot their maps with slums as big as doom.

Unless, dowager, governor, these pictures, in a room Columned above childishness, like our day's future drift Of smoke concealing war, are voices shouting O that beauty has words and works which break Through colored walls and towers! The children stand As in a climbing mountain train. This lesson illustrates The world green in their many valleys beneath: The total summer heavy with their flowers.

MASK

The face of the landscape is a mask
 Of bone and iron lines where time
 Has plowed its character.
 I look and look to read a sign,
 Through errors of light and eyes of water
 Beneath the land's will, of a fear
 And the memory of a struggle,
 As man behind his mask still wears a child.

NOT PALACES

Not palaces, an era's crown
 Where the mind dreams, intrigues, rests;
 The architectural gold-leaved flower
 From people ordered like a single mind,
 I build. This only what I tell:
 It is too late for rare accumulation,
 For family pride, for beauty's filtered dusts;
 I say, stamping the words with emphasis,
 Drink from here energy and only energy,
 As from the electric charge of a battery,
 To will this time's change.
 Eye, gazelle, delicate wanderer,
 Drinker of horizon's fluid line;
 Ear that suspends on a chord
 The spirit drinking timelessness;
 Touch, love—all senses—
 Leave your gardens, your singing feasts,
 Your dreams of suns circling before our sun,
 Of heaven after our world.
 Instead, watch images of flashing brass
 That strike the outward sense, the polished will,
 Flag of our purpose which the wind engraves.
 No spirit seek here rest. But this: No man
 Shall hunger; Man shall spend equally.
 Our goal which we compel Man shall be man.

The program of the antique Satan
 Bristling with guns on the indented page,
 With battleship towering from hilly waves:
 For what? Drive of a running purpose,
 Destroying all but its age-long exploiters.
 Our program like this, yet opposite:
 Death to the killers, bringing light to life.

I THINK CONTINUALLY OF THOSE

I think continually of those who were truly great.
 Who, from the womb, remembered the soul's history
 Through corridors of light where the hours are suns,
 Endless and singing. Whose lovely ambition
 Was that their lips, still touched with fire,
 Should tell of the spirit clothed from head to foot in song.
 And who hoarded from the spring branches
 The desires falling across their bodies like blossoms.

What is precious is never to forget
 The delight of the blood drawn from ageless springs
 Breaking through rocks in worlds before our earth;

Never to deny its pleasure in the simple morning light,
 Nor its grave evening demand for love;
 Never to allow gradually the traffic to smother
 With noise and fog the flowering of the spirit.

Near the snow, near the sun, in the highest fields
 See how these names are fêted by the waving grass,
 And by the streamers of white cloud,
 And whispers of wind in the listening sky;
 The names of those who in their lives fought for life,
 Who wore at their hearts the fire's center.
 Born of the sun they traveled a short while towards the sun,
 And left the vivid air signed with their honor.

Dylan Thomas

DYLAN THOMAS was born in Wales in 1914 and was educated at the Swansea Grammar School. He was a newspaper reporter for a year; after giving up hack journalism he earned his living at odd jobs. His vivid Portrait of the Artist as a Young Dog (1940) is largely autobiographical.

At the age of twenty Thomas published his first volume, 18 Poems (1934). All the poems in that volume, together with those in 25 Poems (1936) and The Map of Love (1939), and eleven short stories were published in The World I Breathe (1939). At first glance Thomas's poems seem incomplete, if not wholly obscure, lacking correspondence with the world of ordinary experience. But most of them are related to a central equation. They are full of a confused brilliance, nightmare violence, verbal intoxication; they revolve about sexual symbols and images of pain and death. Rhetoric is used so lavishly, allusiveness is employed to such excess, that much of Thomas's verse seems to borrow the technique of surrealism. Actually Thomas has little kinship with the surrealists; he establishes a closer identity with such an image-crowded poet as Hart Crane and such a passion-driven spirit as D. H. Lawrence.

Energetic eloquence is in everything Thomas undertakes. His later prose is direct and, on the whole, simple. His poetry, however, alternates between powerful suggestibility and imagery as determinedly non-rational as:

He in a book of water tallow-eyed
 By lava's light split through the oyster vowels
 And burned sea silence on a wick of words.

But, with a few exceptions where the will drives the fancy, a rich imagination and almost hypnotic magic compel attention. They communicate their force to the reader even when the full meaning of the poem is uncertain.

WHEN ALL MY FIVE AND COUNTRY SENSES SEE

When all my five and country senses see,
 The fingers will forget green thumbs and mark
 How, through the halfmoon's vegetable eye,
 Husk of young stars and handful zodiac,
 Love in the frost is pared and wintered by,
 The whispering ears will watch love drummed away
 Down breeze and shell to a discordant beach,
 And, lashed to syllables, the lynx tongue cry
 That her fond wounds are mended bitterly.
 My nostrils see her breath burn like a bush.

My one and noble heart has witnesses
 In all love's countries, that will grope awake;
 And when blind sleep drops on the spying senses,
 The heart is sensual, though five eyes break.

LIGHT BREAKS WHERE NO SUN SHINES

Light breaks where no sun shines,
 Where no sea runs, the waters of the heart
 Push in their tides;
 And, broken ghosts with glowworms in their heads,
 The things of light
 File through the flesh where no flesh decks the bones.

Dawn breaks behind the eyes,
 From poles of skull and toe the windy blood
 Slides like a sea;
 Nor fenced, nor staked, the gushers of the sky
 Spout to the rod
 Divining in a smile the oil of tears.

Night in the sockets rounds,
 Like some pitch moon, the limit of the globes;
 Day lights the bone;
 Where no cold is, the skinning gales unpin
 The winter's robes;
 The film of spring is hanging from the lids.

Light breaks on secret lots,
 On tips of thought where thoughts smell in the rain;
 When logics die,
 The secret of the soil grows through the eye,
 And blood jumps in the sun;
 Above the waste allotments the dawn halts.

THE HAND THAT SIGNED THE PAPER FELLED A CITY

The hand that signed the paper felled a city;
 Five sovereign fingers taxed the breath,

Doubled the globe of dead and halved a country;
These five kings did a king to death.

The mighty hand leads to a sloping shoulder,
The finger joints are cramped with chalk;
A goose's quill has put an end to murder
That put an end to talk.

The hand that signed the treaty bred a fever,
And famine grew, and locusts came;
Great is the hand that holds dominion over
Man by a scribbled name.

The five kings count the dead but do not soften
The crusted wound nor pat the brow;
A hand rules pity as a hand rules heaven;
Hands have no tears to flow.

THE FORCE THAT THROUGH THE GREEN FUSE DRIVES

The force that through the green fuse drives the flower
Drives my green age; that blasts the roots of trees
Is my destroyer.
And I am dumb to tell the crooked rose
My youth is bent by the same wintry fever.

The force that drives the water through the rocks
Drives my red blood; that dries the mouthing streams
Turns mine to wax.
And I am dumb to mouth unto my veins
How at the mountain spring the same mouth sucks.

The hand that whirls the water in the pool
Stirs the quicksand; that ropes the blowing wind
Mauls my shroud sail.
And I am dumb to tell the hanging man
How of my clay is made the hangman's lime.

The lips of time leech to the fountain head;
Love drips and gathers, but the fallen blood
Shall calm her sores.
And I am dumb to tell a weather's wind
How time has ticked a heaven round the stars.

And I am dumb to tell the lover's tomb
How at my sheet goes the same crooked worm.
